j. Sentence and Judgment. The appellate court will not determine whether a sentence is excessive, in the absence of the evidence or other statements in the record from which its justness may be determined.[5]

8. Matters Not Apparent of Record. Using the term "record" in its broad sense, as including the transcript and the case stated or bill of exceptions, the general rule is that the appellate court cannot consider any question that is not in some manner contained in or raised thereby.[6] Thus evidence dehors the record, whether by affidavit or otherwise, will not be heard in the appellate court.[7] Matters, however, of which the appellate court may take judicial notice need not be incorporated in the record.[8] An appellate court will take notice of its own records when properly suggested,[9] but it has been held that it will not take notice of a prior appeal in the same case,[10] or of the action of the court on a former indictment for the same crime.[11]

E. Assignment of Errors and Briefs — 1. Assignment of Errors[12] — a. Necessity For. In many jurisdictions assignments of errors are indispensable in criminal cases, and where there is no assignment the reviewing court will not consider any error, but the judgment will be affirmed.[13] In other jurisdictions, usually by virtue of an express statutory provision, it is the duty of the appellate court to examine the record and, disregarding technical defects and errors, to render judgment on the merits.[14]

b. Form and Requisites in General. An assignment of errors must conform to statutory requirements,[15] and to reasonable rules of court laid down for the presentation of cases on review.[16] It must correctly state the full names of the parties;[17] when relating to the admission of testimony it must show that an objection was promptly made;[18] and it should refer particularly to the page of the record where the ruling can be found.[19] It should be signed by the appellant or his attorney.[20]

c. Specification of Errors. The assignment of errors must point out definitely and specifically the errors relied upon, and if it is too general or uncertain it will not be considered.[21] In some cases it has been held necessary to state the reasons why the ruling complained of was erroneous,[22] while in others the contrary has been held.[23] As a rule each error relied on must be separately and definitely assigned, and an assignment of error to several rulings without specifying which one is erroneous will not be considered unless all are erroneous.[24] Under the practice in some jurisdictions, however, it is sufficient if the errors specified appear in the record, and no independent specification of errors accompanying a statement on appeal need be made.[25]

d. Filing. In the absence of statute an assignment of error need not be filed in the court below.[26] It must, however, be promptly filed in the appellate court, and if not filed before the submission of the cause it may be disregarded.[27]

rule of court.[29] If a plea or joinder in error is required, the appellant, after he has obtained a writ of certiorari on the suggestion of a diminution of the record, cannot require a plea or joinder until the return of the writ.[30] An appearance and joinder in error are a waiver of a notice of appeal.[31]

f. Scope of Assignment. An assignment of errors to one ruling raises no question as to the correctness of another,[32] but an assignment of errors to the overruling of a motion for a new trial is specific as to each and every ground of the motion.[33] Under such an assignment counsel may urge objections to the rejection or admission of evidence, to instructions given or refused, and to the sufficiency of the evidence.[34] Under an assignment that the verdict is contrary to law and evidence, an objection that the venue was not proved may be considered.[35]

2. Briefs[36] — a. Necessity For. It is almost universally required that the appellant shall furnish the appellate court with a brief on the merits, pointing out to the court and to opposing counsel the errors on which a reversal is sought; and if this requirement is not complied with, the appeal may be dismissed or the judgment affirmed.[37] In some jurisdictions, however, it is the duty of the court to examine the record and render judgment thereon, in the absence of briefs,[38] and in others, while it was not its duty to do so, it has done so with reluctance.[39] In a capital case, the court has felt itself constrained to look into the record, notwithstanding the rule requiring a brief has been disregarded.[40]

b. Form and Contents. By statutes and rules of court briefs are usually required to be either typewritten or printed,[41] and the furnishing of a typewritten brief is not a compliance with a rule requiring a printed one.[42] The brief should specifically point out the errors on account of which a reversal is sought,[43] and should refrain from any scandalous, abusive, or disrespectful language in reference to the trial judge,[44] or the appellate court may on its own motion strike out the brief and affirm the judgment.[45]

F. Dismissal, Hearing, and Rehearing — 1. Dismissal — a. By Defendant. Under the practice of some jurisdictions it seems that an appellant has the right to withdraw his appeal in case of misdemeanor,[46] while in other jurisdictions the withdrawal is not a matter of right but can be had only with the consent of the court or opposite party.[47]

b. By Consent. In criminal as in civil cases an appeal may usually be dismissed or withdrawn with the consent of all parties.[48]

c. By Court Sua Sponte. A petition for a writ of error filed too late may be dismissed by the court of its own motion.[49]

d. On Motion — (1) When and by Whom Made. A motion to dismiss will not be considered until after the appellate court has acquired jurisdiction under the statute prescribing how the appeal or writ of error shall be perfected.[50] Ordinarily where the accused appeals the public prosecuting officer is the proper person to move to dismiss.[51]

(II) Grounds—(A) Lack of Jurisdiction and Defect in Proceedings. The lack of jurisdiction in the appellate court,[52] the fact that no writ of error has been issued,[53] that no judgment has been entered in the lower court,[54] that no appeal at all lies in the case,[55] the omission of facts from the record,[56] and a failure to give appeal-bonds or recognizance[57] are grounds for a dismissal. So on the affirmance of a conviction a prior appeal from a refusal of bail will be dismissed;[58] but an appeal will not be dismissed because the period covered by the sentence has expired,[59] or because the court has neglected to take a recognizance from the accused or to commit him according to the statute.[60]

(B) Pardon of Accused. The fact that the accused has been pardoned does not alone authorize the dismissal of his writ of error, as he may be entitled to a reversal which will remove the infamy of his conviction.[61]

(C) Escape After Conviction—(1) In General. The escape of defendant from custody after conviction deprives him of the benefit of a review, and whether he escapes before or pending his appeal it may be dismissed on motion, unless he surrenders himself before the matter is determined or within a time fixed by the court;[62] and this is the rule by statute in some power of the attorney-general, and that this motion cannot be objected to because made by the latter official.

The rule of the text is not based upon the common-law theory that the personal appearance of the accused in the appellate court is necessary to confer jurisdiction, which is not recognized in the United States, but upon the fact that the determination of the appeal while the accused is at large would be a useless form, for if judgment is affirmed he will not return, while if a new trial is granted he may or may not, as suits his interest. Statutes constitutional.—Statutes authorizing the dismissal of an appeal on the ground of the escape of the accused are constitutional (Loyd v. State, 19 Tex. App. 137; Lunsford v. State, 10 Tex. App. 118; Brown v. State, 5 Tex. App. 126), and do not deprive the accused of a speedy trial or of the confrontation by adverse witnesses (Loyd v. State, 19 Tex. App. 137).

An escape before sentence is not an escape "pending an appeal" under the statute. Walters v. State, 18 Tex. App. 8.

To reinstate the appeal, under the Texas statute, a voluntary surrender of the accused to the sheriff who had him in custody or to his successor or a deputy is required. Hammons v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1895) 29 S. W. 780. His recapture does not give the court jurisdiction. Ex p. Wood, 19 Tex. App. 46; Lunsford v. State, 10 Tex. App. 118. The statute applies to an appeal from a refusal on habeas corpus to admit to bail (Ex p. Wood, 19 Tex. App. 46), where the sheriff had allowed the prisoner to go home on his promise to surrender himself if his appeal was not sustained (Ex p. Cole, 14 Tex. App. 579).

64. If a statute provides that the report of the sheriff shall be sufficient evidence to authorize a dismissal of the appeal, his report must set forth the facts and circumstances of the escape, and a mere statement that defendant escaped is insufficient. Loyd v. State, 19 Tex. App. 137.

ally appeals will not be dismissed because frivolous or taken for delay, but the court will affirm the judgment below.[72]

(F) Waiver of Grounds. Treating an appeal as valid and proceeding without objection to defects and irregularities may be regarded as a waiver of the right to have the appeal dismissed for failure to conform to preliminary requirements.[73]

2. Striking Case From Calendar. Where the accused has escaped pending a writ of error and does not return within the term,[74] or where the record shows no appeal or writ of error,[75] the case will be stricken from the calendar.

3. Hearing — a. In General. The argument and hearing of the appeal is regulated largely by court rules which must be referred to in each particular case.[76]

b. Time For. The appellant may lose his right to have his appeal heard where he has failed to perfect it for many years after sentence;[77] but the fact that an appeal has been prematurely filed does not prevent it from being heard, or if not heard, the hearing may be postponed.[78]

c. Notice of. Notice of the time and place of hearing must be promptly and properly served.[79]

d. Presence of Accused. The hearing of the argument on appeal is not a trial within the constitutional provision entitling the accused to be present.[80]

e. Counsel. The appointment of counsel by the trial court for the trial authorizes the same counsel to prosecute a writ of error.[81] of a writ of error is demanded in fairness to the accused, a hearing may not be postponed, although counsel on both sides consent.[82] In some cases a writ of error or an appeal may be taken up out of its order on notice to the other side.[83]

4. REHEARING. An appellate court has usually inherent power to grant a rehearing at any time before the remittitur has been filed with the clerk of the lower court.[84] The rehearing will not be granted unless it clearly appears that some question decisive of the case and actually submitted has been overlooked, or that the decision is in conflict with an express statute or previous decision to which the attention of the court was not called, or which has been overlooked by it.[85] New points purely technical in their character will not be considered;[86] nor will the court consider ex parte affidavits on a motion for a rehearing alleging errors which do not appear in the record.[87] The fact that the court has not expressly ruled upon errors in its original opinion will not warrant a rehearing where there does not appear to have been any controversy as to them,[88] or where they were necessarily determined by the decision, although not expressly mentioned.[89]

5. REINSTATEMENT.[90] While it is discretionary with the court to reinstate an appeal which has been dismissed or abandoned, it will do so only when good cause has been shown [91] and the merits of the appeal appear.[92]

G. Review — 1. Scope and Extent — a. In General. The power of appellate courts as defined by constitutions and statutes is strictly limited. Unless it has been expressly conferred by statute they have usually no original jurisdiction, and in the exercise of their appellate jurisdiction they are limited to a review of the proceedings of the lower court as evidenced by the record, and can consider no original matters not acted upon below.[93] As has been heretofore stated the court will often in criminal cases examine the whole record for errors,[94] and consequently the accused may in such cases challenge any part of it as error.[95] The ruling of the trial judge may be reviewed, although he assigns no reasons for it.[96] On the other hand the appellate court is not limited to a consideration of the reasons assigned in or by the lower court;[97] nor will it reverse a ruling of the lower court, for which an erroneous reason was assigned, if there were good grounds for the ruling.[98] The constitutionality of a penal statute will not be considered on appeal unless this is necessary to a decision of the case on the merits.[99]

b. Extent of Review as Determined by Mode — (I) Appeal. The questions which an appellant may have considered on his appeal are in almost every instance determined by the statutes conferring the right to appeal, which should in each case be consulted.[1] In the absence of a statute only questions arising on exceptions to rulings taken below can be considered.[2] Where the appeal is brought up under the statute with a bill of exceptions, the court is usually confined to the exceptions stated, and may not review the record for such irregularities as would be considered on certiorari or writ of error.[3]

to consider proceedings arising after the judgment, and which form no part of the record,[5] and the operation of the writ is not extended to matters not in the record proper by a motion in arrest of judgment, since such motion can only be based on a defect in the record.[6]

(III) CERTIORARI. Where the record is brought up by certiorari, the general rule is that the court will examine it only to ascertain whether it is regular and conformable to the law.[7] It has been held that the court will not review the evidence to determine its sufficiency,[8] although it may consider rulings on the admission and exclusion of evidence.[9]

(IV) QUESTIONS RESERVED OR CERTIFIED. Where points are reserved and certified to the appellate court, the latter cannot in the absence of a writ of error review any question not so reserved and certified[10] or pass upon any question not passed upon and determined by the court below.[11]

e. On Appeal From Final Judgment. Although, as is elsewhere pointed out,[12] a writ of error or appeal will not lie from an interlocutory ruling before final judgment, yet in most cases by statute it is the rule that on an appeal from a final judgment interlocutory orders and orders overruling a motion for a new trial may be reviewed.[13]

d. Decision in Separate Proceeding. Where defendant was jointly indicted with another, but subsequently separately informed against, the rulings under the indictment will not be considered on an appeal from a judgment under the information.[14]

In New York the court of appeals, on an appeal from an affirmance by the appellate division of a judgment of conviction, cannot inquire into the sufficiency of the evidence to go to the jury (People v. Helmer, 154 N. Y. 596, 49 N. E. 249 [reversing 13 N. Y. App. Div. 426, 43 N. Y. Suppl. 642, 12 N. Y. Cr. 134]) or into the question of fact involved in the meaning of documents (People v. Most, 171 N. Y. 423, 64 N. E. 175, 58 L. R. A. 509).

raised and decided will be the law of the case for the future.[16] Hence a decision on a prior appeal in the same case that the evidence did not authorize a conviction is the law of the case on a subsequent appeal, where practically the same evidence is involved.[17] So too as a general rule an affirmance of the judgment will preclude a subsequent appeal on any interlocutory ruling which was or might have been determined in the judgment.[18] Where different questions arise on the second appeal, however, or the record presents a different state of facts, the former decision is not controlling.[19]

2. Parties Who May Allege Error — a. In General. An objection made and an exception taken at the trial by one of several co-defendants jointly tried, who was acquitted, cannot be made the basis of a review by an appellant who was convicted but who was not injured by the error.[20] And the prosecution on an appeal cannot allege error committed against defendant.[21]

b. Estoppel to Allege Error. As a general rule an appellant or plaintiff in error will not be permitted to allege error in which he himself acquiesced, or which he invited or induced the trial court to commit,[22] or which was the natural consequence of his own actions.[23] The rule applies for example to error in instructions which were given at appellant's request,[24] or which were founded on a state of facts sworn to by him,[25] or which, although given by the court of its own motion, were substantially like one requested by him;[26] and it applies to error in the admission of testimony which he himself introduced or elicited by cross-examination.[27] So also a party who by words or actions expresses satisfaction with or acquiescence in the judgment may be estopped to question its validity, as where he executes a bond to abide by the judgment,[28] or permits the rendition of judgment by default.[29] Appellant cannot have reviewed exceptions which he deliberately withdrew;[30] and usually, as is elsewhere stated, a failure to object or except to an erroneous ruling of the trial court may be such laches as will prevent a party from having a review of the same.[31]

c. Waiver in Appellate Court. Many cases hold that failure to file the proper papers or to prosecute the case in the appellate court,[32] or to appear by counsel and support the appeal by argument justifies the court in affirming the judgment.[33] Others hold that, although the appellant does not appear or fails to prosecute his appeal, judgment cannot be affirmed as of course, but the record before the court must be examined and, if it is regular, judgment will then be affirmed.[34] As a rule errors assigned but not argued in the brief are taken as waived and will not be reviewed;[35] and it has also been held that a too concise

46. The indorsement of the name of a witness on the copy of the information in the transcript raises the presumption that the original information was indorsed at the proper time. Berneker v. State, 40 Nebr. 810, 59 N. W. 372.

47. Where a demurrer and motion to quash are overruled without findings as to the facts on which they are based, it will be presumed that the court found against the facts alleged in the demurrer and motion (State v. Humason, 5 Wash. 499, 32 Pac. 111); and if the record does not contain the demurrer it will be presumed that it was addressed to the whole indictment, so that overruling it is not error where one of the counts in the indictment is good (Cheatham v. State, 59 Ala. 40).

Where it is doubtful from the record whether a bill of particulars or the indictment was demurred to, it will be presumed to have been the former, where an amended bill of particulars was filed, demurrer to it overruled, and a trial and conviction had, for the reason that it is absurd to suppose that a trial could be had if the indictment had been overruled on demurrer. Jules v. State, 85 Md. 305, 36 Atl. 1027.

49. Where two are indicted and the record shows that only one was tried, it may be presumed that a separate trial was ordered. Hess v. State, 5 Ohio 5, 22 Am. Dec. 767. So too the discretion of the trial court in refusing a severance will be presumed to have been properly exercised. State v. Watkins, 106 La. 380, 31 So. 10.

50. The appointment of a prosecuting attorney pro hac vice will be presumed regular proceedings at some stage subsequent to the arraignment justify a presumption that he was formally arraigned.[51] On the other hand, however, it has been held that an arraignment and plea will not be presumed from recitals in the record that defendant appeared and that a jury was selected, impaneled, and sworn.[52] Where the record shows no action taken on defendant's plea of former jeopardy,[53] or where it shows no verdict on a plea of former acquittal, and the bill of exceptions does not show that defendant asked the court to instruct the jury thereon or that this was refused,[54] it will be presumed that the plea was waived. But where defendant withdrew a plea of guilty properly made, in order to move to dismiss the indictment, which motion was overruled, it will be presumed that the plea was withdrawn solely for the purpose of the motion and that it was reinstated, although the record shows no formal renewal.[55] If the record shows that no counsel appeared for accused, but fails to show that he requested one, it will be presumed that he did not, and that he waived his right to counsel.[56]

(III) Organization and Jurisdiction of Court, Venue, Adjournments, and Continuances. The legality and validity of the organization of the trial court will be presumed,[57] and all presumptions will be made in favor of the jurisdiction of the court over the person of defendant, where the record shows no objection to jurisdiction.[58] If the record is silent as to where the court was held, it will be presumed that it was held at the place designated by the statute,[59] and it will be presumed that it was held for the proper county.[60] Presumptions of

A proper arraignment and plea may be presumed and a conviction sustained from recitals in the record that defendant fraudulently and wilfully stood mute and that thereupon he was tried (Ellenwood v. Com., 10 Metc. (Mass.) 222), that he was "asked by the court whether he [was] guilty or not guilty of the offence charged upon him" (Com. v. Harvey, 103 Mass. 451), or that he "personally appeared in open court and was duly arraigned" (State v. Abrams, 11 Oreg. 169, 8 Pac. 327; State v. Lee Ping Bow, 10 Oreg. 27).

Plea of guilty.— Under a statute requiring the judge on a plea of guilty to be satisfied that the plea was knowingly and fairly made, it will be presumed, where the record shows a private examination of the accused by the judge before sentence, that he was satisfied that the plea was thus made. People v. Ellsworth, 68 Mich. 496, 36 N. W. 236.

The same presumption will be drawn where it appears that the accused was present when the jury was impaneled and the counsel are presumed to have been correct where the record shows that no hearing was had thereon, and that no evidence of their objectionable character was offered,[66] or where it does not appear what the objectionable remark was.[67]

(v) Matters Relating to Petit Jury—(A) In General. The fact that the record shows a trial by jury raises a presumption, in the absence of anything to the contrary, that the jurors were properly drawn and summoned,[68] that the jurors selected were qualified,[69] that the foreman was duly appointed,[70] and that the jury was composed of the requisite number of persons,[71] that the jurors discharged were properly discharged,[72] and generally that the court acted properly and legally in all of its rulings relating to the selection and impaneling of the jurors.[73] If the record does not purport to set out the exact terms of the oath which was administered to the jury, but recites that they were duly sworn, it will be presumed that the proper form of oath was employed,[74] but if the trial was completed in one day (Burney v. State, 32 Fla. 253, 13 So. 406; Padfield v. People, 146 Ill. 660, 35 N. E. 469; Schirmer v. People, 33 Ill. 275; State v. Starr, 52 La. record gives the form employed, and it is not the legal form, the conviction must be reversed.[75]

(B) Waiver of Jury. The rule applicable in civil cases that every presumption will be made against the waiver of a jury trial[76] applies with greater force to criminal trials involving corporal punishment.[77] If the record states that the case was tried, without stating whether by jury or otherwise, it will be presumed that the trial was by jury, where defendant was entitled to one.[78]

(C) Custody and Discharge of Jury. The presence of the jury in court may be presumed from the fact that a jury trial was had, although the record fails to show their presence on certain days;[79] and where the record shows that the jury were placed in charge of an officer, it will be presumed that this was regularly and legally done,[80] and that the officer was properly sworn, where the record states that he was a sworn officer.[81] All presumptions are in favor of the legality of the action of the court in discharging a jury without defendant's consent, for inability to agree or for any other cause,[82] and where the record is silent as to whether defendant consented to a discharge, it has been held that it may be presumed that he did consent.[83]

(VI) Questions Relating to Evidence. It will generally be presumed that the trial court properly exercised its discretion in admitting or excluding evidence,[84] and where the record shows no objection to evidence, it will be presumed that no objectionable evidence was received.[85] It will also be presumed that the court properly exercised its discretion in permitting[86] or refusing to permit[87] introduction of evidence out of its regular order. A witness who testified as an expert is presumed to have been competent only where the record shows that he qualified to the satisfaction of the court;[88] but the presumption is in favor of the competency of youthful witnesses, as it depends upon their conduct and appearance, which are peculiarly within the knowledge of the trial court and cannot appear of record.[89] After verdict, if the evidence or no material part of it is in the bill of exceptions, it will be presumed to have been sufficient as to each and every material and essential fact relevant under the charge and necessary to support the verdict.[90] record, it will be presumed that it warranted the instructions given by the court,[93] and that instructions refused were not applicable to the evidence.[94] Where an instruction is susceptible of two constructions, it will be presumed that the trial court intended it to be construed against the party asking it.[95] It will not be presumed that the jury understood an instruction differently from the way it would be understood by persons not jurors;[96] nor will it be presumed that words in an instruction were used in other than their ordinary sense.[97] It will be presumed that instructions which were refused were not in writing, and that they were refused for that reason, where the record fails to show that they were in writing.[98]

(VIII) VERDICT, JUDGMENT, AND SENTENCE. Every presumption will be made in favor of the regularity and validity of the verdict, where the record is silent as to any objection made;[99] and the recital in the record of a judgment or of the passing of the sentence raises a presumption which is conclusive, if not Illustrations.— It will be presumed that a general verdict of guilty to an indictment charging two distinct offenses either applies to both, or if to one only that sentence was passed accordingly (People v. Shotwell, 27 Cal. 394; State v. Merwin, 34 Conn. 113. App. 19).

clearly rebutted,[1] that the court complied with all the requirements of the statute in passing sentence.[2] Where judgment is rendered on a plea of guilty, it will be presumed that the sentence imposed thereunder was for the crime to which defendant pleaded guilty;[3] and where defendant was tried on two counts and one is bad, it is presumed that a general verdict and sentence is applicable to the good one.[4]

(IX) NEW TRIAL AND ARREST OF JUDGMENT. Where the grounds for granting a new trial are not shown, it may be presumed that sufficient grounds were presented,[5] and it may be presumed that the court acted properly in granting or denying a motion for a new trial or in arrest of judgment.[6] An abandonment of a motion for a new trial will be presumed when the record shows that the court proceeded to pronounce sentence without showing what disposition, if any, was made of such motion.[7]

(X) PROCEEDINGS FOR REVIEW. As a general proposition, it may be said that a compliance with all statutory conditions necessary to the perfecting of an appeal must appear in the record and cannot be supplied by presumption of law based simply on an intention or attempt to appeal.[8] All reasonable inferences, however, from facts admitted or apparent of record will be drawn to support the validity of the appeal.[9]

If the verdict as entered is so uncertain as to be fatally defective and void, a subsequent entry, stating it with certainty, will not be presumed to be an amendment, nor will the incorrect entry be presumed to be a clerical error. The verdict may be set aside, or, if it is found that the error was a clerical one, the record may be sent back for correction. Brannigan v. People, 3 Utah 488, 24 Pac. 767.

9. Thus where the abstract papers contain all the evidence, there is a presumption that the evidence is on the record of the trial

4. Discretion of Lower Court — a. In General. In the absence of a clear abuse of discretion to the prejudice of the appellant, matters purely within the discretion of the trial court are not reviewable.[10]

b. Indictment and Pleas. In applying the rule just stated the action of the trial court in passing upon the sufficiency of a complaint with respect to the description of the offense,[11] in allowing or disallowing amendments to the complaint[12] or to the indictment,[13] in refusing to quash an indictment,[14] in granting or refusing to grant a bill of particulars,[15] in allowing or refusing to allow a request to withdraw a plea of not guilty and file a special plea,[16] and in permitting the withdrawal of a plea of guilty,[17] being matters wholly within the discretion of the court, are not reviewable unless clearly erroneous and prejudicial to defendant.

court (State v. Tucker, 68 Iowa 50, 25 N. jurisdictions, however, the courts have gone to the extent of declaring that it is wholly within the discretion of the judge presiding in the trial court to grant or refuse a continuance, and that his action is not open to exception or revision.[25]

(B) Facts Considered as Guiding the Discretion. According to some authorities the appellate court in determining whether the discretion of the trial court has been properly exercised in refusing a continuance may take into consideration the evidence and proceedings at the trial, and if from the record it appears that defendant suffered no injury it will determine that the discretion was not abused.[26] It has been held, however, that the appellate court is confined strictly to the affidavits offered on the motion for a continuance.[27]

d. Conduct of Trial — (I) In General. Great discretion is vested in the trial court as regards the conduct of the trial and the regulation of matters incident thereto.[28] Accordingly it has been held that the appointment of counsel for defendant[29] or for the prosecution,[30] the appointment of a stenographer,[31] the compelling or refusal to compel the prosecution to elect as between counts,[32] the action of the trial court as to the scope and character of the arguments of counsel,[33] including the time[34] and the order[35] of the arguments and the discharge of the jury because of a failure to agree or for any other valid reason[36] have been held to be matters so far within the discretion of the trial court as not to be subject of review. But it seems that the action of the trial court in putting or keeping defendant in irons is reviewable.[37]

(11) Selecting and Impaneling Jurors. A decision of the trial court as to a question of law involved in the formation of the jury is of course generally reviewable by the appellate court, but its determination of the facts as to the qualification, selection, and impaneling of jurors is within its sound discretion and not reviewable unless manifestly erroneous.[38]

61. Where the statute provides both fine and imprisonment as punishment, it has been held that the trial judge is without dis-

period of imprisonment, or a choice between fine or imprisonment is in the court's discretion within certain limits its exercise of the discretion will not be reviewed if the statutory limits are not exceeded, unless under all the circumstances manifest abuse is apparent.[62] Assigning a new day for the execution of a sentence before imposed is a matter of discretion with the lower court and is not appealable.[63] An appellate court will not interfere with regard to the punishment assessed by a jury unless there has been an evident abuse of power.[64]

that where there is material evidence tending to prove defendant's guilt before the jury, and the trial court refuses to set their verdict aside, an appellate court will not reverse the action of both the trial court and the jury; that it will examine the record to see whether there is evidence proper to go the jury, and upon which a verdict of guilt might reasonably be founded, and, being satisfied on that point, will refuse to interfere, whatever may be its own opinion of the weight or preponderance of the evidence. In Arkansas the appellate court has never adopted the rule of refusing a new trial in all or any cases, where there has been any evidence whatever, however weak, to support the verdict — what is called a scintilla of evidence. Oliver v. State, 34 Ark. 632.

In Iowa the rule seems to be that the appellate court will set aside a conviction which is clearly contrary to the weight of evidence, and that in determining this question greater latitude is permitted in criminal than in civil cases. State v. Tomlinson, 11 Iowa 401. The appellate court will not, however, order a new trial because the evidence supporting the conviction is not strong. State v. Kirkpatrick, 72 Iowa 500, 34 N. W. 301.

In Nebraska, if the finding of a jury is attacked as not sustained by sufficient evidence, it will not be disturbed by the appellate court unless manifestly wrong. Ward v. State, 58 Nebr. 719, 79 N. W. 725; Monroe v. State, 10 Nebr. 448, 17 N. W. 285.

In New York, under Code Cr. Proc. § 528, providing that "when the judgment is of death, the court of appeals may order a new trial if it be satisfied that the verdict was against the weight of evidence or against law, or that justice requires a new trial," etc., it has been decided that it is not the province of the court of appeals to review or determine controverted questions of fact arising upon conflicting evidence, but that the jury is the ultimate tribunal in such a case, and that with its decision the court may not interfere unless it reaches the conclusion that justice has not been done. People v. Decker, 157 N. Y. 186, 51 N. E. 1018; People v. Constantino, 153 N. Y. 24, 47 N. E. 37; People v. Taylor, 138 N. Y. 398, 34 N. E. 275; People v. Cignarale, 110 N. Y. 23, 17 N. E. 135. Under Code Cr. Proc. § 527, giving the appellate division of the supreme court the power to order a new trial for like cause without being limited to capital cases, it has been decided that it is not enough to justify interference with the verdict that the court on the case before it can see that the evidence made the case a conflicting and very doubtful one, demanding the solution of a verdict to settle the doubt or conflict, but it must be quite apparent that the conflict has been settled by a verdict against the substantial and preponderating weight of evidence. People v. McInerney, 5 N. Y. Cr. 47.

In Tennessee it is said that the rule that the appellate court will not grant a new trial upon the facts, unless the jury shall appear to have been guilty of great rashness, does not apply to criminal cases. In such cases the appellate court will grant a new trial if convinced that the verdict was not warranted by the evidence. Stuart v. State, 1 Baxt. 178; Dains v. State, 2 Humphr. 439. In criminal cases the appellate court will criticize and weigh the evidence, and if in their judgment it preponderates against the verdict will grant a new trial. Cochran v. State, 7 Humphr. 544; Copeland v. State, 7 Humphr. 478.

In Texas it seems that the appellate court will examine the evidence to ascertain if it is sufficient to sustain the verdict, always having in mind that the trial court is generally in a much better condition to determine whether defendant ought to have a new trial than the appellate court. McMillan v. State, (Cr. App. 1902) 71 S. W. 279; Penn v. State, (Cr. App. 1902) 68 S. W. 170; Johnson v. State, (Cr. App. 1902) 66 S. W. 552; Chapman v. State, 3 Tex. App. 67.

In Virginia it is the well settled rule of the appellate court in granting new trials, when asked for on the sole ground that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, to grant them very cautiously, and only when the verdict is manifestly wrong, great weight being due to a verdict rendered by a jury and approved by a judge before whom the witnesses gave their evidence. Lewis v. Com., 81 Va. 416.

Verdict produced by improper influences.— In several cases it has been said that the appellate court will not reverse the finding of the jury unless the verdict is so clearly and manifestly against the weight of evidence as to suggest the presumption that it was produced by influences other than a proper consideration of the testimony, such as passion, prejudice, or partiality. State v. Kaplan, 72 Conn. 635, 45 Atl. 1018; Harrison v. State, 39 Fla. 514, 22 So. 747; Doyle v. State, 39 Fla. 155, 22 So. 272, 63 Am. proper inference which is reasonably deducible therefrom,[67] the judgment will be reversed by the appellate court.

(11) Conflicting Evidence. It is not ordinarily the province of the appellate court to determine the credibility of conflicting evidence.[68] The presumption is in favor of the verdict, and the appellate court will not interfere when the evidence is conflicting if there be material evidence tending to support the verdict,[69] although it may differ from the jury as to the preponderance of the evidence.[70] It has been said, however, that in all cases, even those of conflict, an appellate court will direct a new trial when upon inspection of the evidence the verdict is so clearly and palpably against the weight of it as to shock the sense of justice.[71]

(III) Circumstantial and Conflicting Evidence. The fact that the evidence is circumstantial and conflicting does not alone empower the appellate court to weigh it or determine its sufficiency, if it reasonably tends to prove the guilt of the accused and fairly warrants a conviction.[72]

b. Credibility of Witnesses. The credibility of witnesses being exclusively for the jury, the appellate court will affirm where the sole question is, were the witnesses credible, and the evidence is directly conflicting.[73]

c. Particular Elements of Crime. The question whether any particular fact indispensable to the crime charged has been proved is for the jury, and the general rules under which the appellate court acts in examining evidence may be applied to each essential ingredient of the crime. Thus the appellate court will not weigh the evidence, where it is conflicting, to ascertain if the venue,[74] the intent,[75] or the sanity of the accused[76] has been proved. But where on examination of the evidence there is a total lack of proof as to the intent[77] or of some other element of the crime,[78] or it appears that the jury disregarded the defense, which was almost conclusively established by the evidence,[79] judgment will be reversed.

d. Successive Convictions. That there have been two or more verdicts of conviction, showing that several juries have considered the evidence of guilt sufficient, will have much weight with the appellate court in sustaining the judgment.[80]

e. Where Jury Trial Was Waived. Where by consent of the parties a jury is waived and the evidence submitted to the trial judge, his findings are equivalent to the verdict of a jury, and the rules as to review are the same as though there had been a jury.[81]

f. Approval of the Trial Judge. The fact that the trial judge was satisfied with the verdict, and that he refused to set it aside or order a new trial, will be considered by the appellate court.[82]

6. HARMLESS ERROR — a. In General. As a general proposition appellant or plaintiff in error, to obtain a reversal, must show not only that error occurred, but that he was substantially prejudiced thereby.[1] Technical and nominal errors disturb a judgment in a criminal case after a verdict of acquittal, although an erroneous instruction was given by the trial court,[4] or competent evidence for the state improperly rejected.[5]

b. Presumptions as to Prejudice. The fact of error has been held in some cases to raise a presumption that the accused was injured,[6] but this presumption is rebuttable by clear proof to the contrary appearing on the record,[7] and in some cases it does not exist. Where it does not appear that alleged error in preliminary proceedings affected any substantial right of the accused it will not be presumed prejudicial,[8] but a ruling of the court depriving defendant of any fundamental and substantial right during the trial will be presumed to have been prejudicial.[9] In a felony case the absence of the accused during the taking of the testimony,[10] or on the submission of the case to the jury,[11] or at other important steps during the trial raises a presumption of prejudice.[12] A presumption of prejudice also arises from error in the admission of irrelevant or illegal evidence over objection,[13]

Illustration of prejudicial error.— The discharge of a competent juror without the consent of the accused (Phillips v. State, 68 Ala. 469), the furnishing him with an incorrect and imperfect list of jurors (Stewart v. State, 13 Ark. 720), or the neglect of some statutory requirement in impaneling (State v. Holme, 54 Mo. 153) or summoning (Hicks v. State, 5 Tex. App. 488) the jury, being subversive of his substantial rights, may raise a presumption of prejudice sufficient for a reversal.

c. Proceedings Before Trial—(1) In General. Errors committed before the indictment, and errors generally in proceedings preliminary to the trial, especially where defendant cannot be prejudiced thereby on his trial, are harmless and cannot affect his conviction.[18] This rule has been applied to: Defects in the indictment or information;[19] error in allowing amendments which consist in the insertion of unnecessary and immaterial matter in affidavits or in the pleadings;[20] error in overruling a demurrer to a pleading which was withdrawn;[21] error in overruling a motion to quash,[22] or a motion to strike out irrelevant matter from an indictment or information;[23] error in quashing a count in an indictment or information;[24] error in refusing to grant a change of venue,[25] or irregularities in the manner of changing the venue;[26] error in refusing to grant separate trials to joint defendants.[27] This rule as to errors before the trial has also been applied to

27. The refusal of a severance, where several are jointly indicted, is harmless error error in rejecting a defective plea;[28] irregularities in the arraignment;[29] and irregularities in drawing, summoning, or impaneling the grand jury.[30] And while the failure to join issue by plea or demurrer is prejudicial error which will justify a reversal,[31] if there are two defective pleas, and issue is taken on one, a failure to require the state to demur or reply to the other is harmless error.[32]

(11) Refusing Continuance. The refusal of a continuance, although erroneous, is harmless where by circumstances arising during the trial the necessity for the continuance is obviated.[33] So the court's action in refusing to delay the proceedings a short time because of the non-arrival of a witness is harmless error, where the time during which he was expected to arrive expires before the jury was charged and he did not arrive,[34] particularly where no injury is shown because of the refusal of delay.[35] Again an error in denying a continuance is harmless where defendant's guilt is so fully established by the evidence that the

where the court by proper instructions limits the evidence to the defendants to which it is applicable, although the cases of the respective defendants are antagonistic (State v. Finley, 118 N. The refusal of time to permit accused and his counsel to consult is harmless error, where court can see that the jury would not have found differently if the absent witness had been present and testified as claimed.[36]

(III) Drawing and Summoning Jury. Formal errors or irregularities in the proceedings of drawing and summoning the jury are harmless, unless it affirmatively appears from the record that defendant was prejudiced thereby on his trial.[37]

(IV) Impaneling Jury — (A) In General. Formal errors or irregularities in impaneling the jurors, even in a capital case,[38] are harmless, unless it affirmatively appears on the record that defendant was injured thereby,[39] but as defendant has a substantial right to a fair and impartial jury, error in accepting, over under the circumstances of the case he actually had time to consult. Feinberg v. People, 174 Ill. 609, 51 N. E. 798.

In excusing jurors, the court's discretion should be carefully exercised. If, however, its action is not such as to violate the nature and security of the jury trial, or to deprive the accused of any substantial right, any error it may commit is harmless. State v. Ostrander, 18 Iowa 435. Thus error in ruling on defendant's challenges is harmless, where the juror is subsequently peremptorily challenged and does not serve. State v. Winter, 72 Iowa 627, 34 N. W. 475. See also People v. Freeman, 92 Cal. 359, 28 Pac. 261. So error, if any, in refusing defendant's counsel the right to further examine a juror is harmless, where from his answers it is already apparent that he is incompetent. Longley v. Com., 99 Va. 807, 37 S. E. 339.

Where a juror who has been challenged is impaneled and sworn by mistake, it is harmless error for the court to refuse to stand him aside, where it does not appear that he had objection, a juror who confesses to prejudice is not harmless, although upon all the evidence the verdict appears fair and just.[40]

(B) Sustaining Challenge. Erroneously sustaining challenges for the prosecution is harmless where the accused has not exhausted his peremptory challenges before a qualified jury was obtained, and it does not appear that a juror obnoxious to him is in the box.[41]

(C) Overruling Challenge. The overruling of defendant's challenge to a juror for cause is harmless error, if his peremptory challenges were not then or afterward exhausted, although he was thereby forced, over objection, to accept an obnoxious juror.[42] Although error in overruling a good challenge for cause is not cured by a peremptory challenge which exhausts all defendant's peremptory any bias or prejudice or that he had formed an opinion. Munson v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. 498, 31 S. W. 387.

challenges,[43] an error in accepting an incompetent juror is harmless, where defendant has still several peremptory challenges, and either challenges peremptorily or is silent.[44]

d. Conduct of Trial in General. The regulation of the proceedings during the trial being largely in the court's discretion,[45] irregularities occurring therein but not affecting the merits, if erroneous, are generally harmless, unless injury to the accused clearly appears.[46] This rule has been applied under particular circumstances to failure of the court to assign counsel for defendant;[47] to proceedings in the absence of defendant;[48] to omission to swear defendant's wit-

The fact that defendant has exhausted his peremptory challenges, and hence cannot challenge peremptorily, does not alone raise a presumption that an error in overruling a challenge for cause is prejudicial. Villereal v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1901) 61 S. W. 715; Goodson v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1893) 22 S. W. 20.

Whether the order in which peremptory challenges were made, under the direction of the court, was that contemplated by statute, is immaterial, if it appears that defendant accepted the jury before his peremptory challenges were exhausted. Illustrations.— To illustrate and support the rule stated in the text, it may be said that refusal to permit defendant to be present at a consultation between his witness and his counsel (State v. Weems, 96 Iowa 426, 65 N. W. 387), refusal of the judge to retire the jury while taking evidence as to the foundation for the admission of dying declarations (State v. Johnson, 41 La. Ann. 1076, 6 So. 802), permitting a witness to testify whose correct address is not given in the list of witnesses served (Horton v. U. S., 15 App. Cas. (D. C.) 310), permitting evidence to be introduced out of order (Ortiz v. State, 30 Fla. 256, 11 So. 611), conducting the examination as to the admissibility of a confession in the presence of the jury (Anderson v. State, 72 Ga. 98), and receiving, complimenting, and discharging a grand jury during the trial (Phillips v. State, 6 Tex. App. 44) are harmless errors.

An offer by counsel on both sides to furnish food for the jury, while improper, is harmless. Thomas v. State, 61 Miss. 60.

Applause by the audience in the court-room, promptly repressed and rebuked, is usually harmless. Weathersby v. State, 29 Tex. App. 278, 15 S. W. 823. See supra, XIV, J, 4, c; XV, A, 2, l, (IV), (N).

Failure of the court to appoint an interpreter because the language used by some of the witnesses was not understood by the accused is not prejudicial error, where his counsel understood it and the jurors all understood it, and where no request was made for a translator. Rex v. Long, 2 Quebec K. B. 328.

47. The fact that defendant is permitted to try his case without counsel is harmless error, where the record does not show that he requested counsel to be assigned or asked a continuance for absence of counsel. State v. Doyle, 36 La. Ann. 91. Nor will a conviction be reversed solely because he was abandoned by counsel shortly before the trial, and was unable to employ other counsel. Assignment of counsel see supra, XIV, B, 5, c.

48. Although as a general rule the accused is absolutely entitled to be present in the court-room during the trial in all cases of felony, and proceeding in his absence, when there is no valid waiver of his right, is ordinarily reversible error (see supra, XIV, B, 3), some cases have held that his absence during the closing argument (State v. Grate, 68 Mo. 22; State v. Pierce, 123 N. C. 745, 31 S. E. 847), during the taking of a view by the jury (Rutherford v. Com., 78 Ky. 639, 1 Ky. L. Rep. 410), while instructions are being given (Meece v. Com., 78 Ky. 586, 1 Ky. L. St. Rep. 524), or during the argument of a motion for a new trial (Morris nesses;[49] to irregularities and informalities in the oath administered to a witness for the prosecution;[50] to suspension of the trial;[51] to failure to read the indictment to the jury,[52] even where it is required by the statute;[53] to the reading of evidence to the jury by the prosecution before its introduction;[54] to failure of the prosecution to read to the jury written evidence which was admitted without objection;[55] to remarks of the judge;[56] to limitation of the time for argument by defendant's counsel;[57] and to improper remarks by the prosecuting attorney, where the evidence in any event establishes defendant's guilt,[58] or where the remarks relate to immaterial or conceded matters, or nothing necessarily prejudicial appears in witnesses present in court [65] is usually considered as harmless error. So the misconduct of a witness in answering a question after it had been ruled out,[66] in breaking out excitedly in an accusation concerning the crime for which defendant is charged,[67] or in volunteering irrelevant evidence [68] is harmless where the court at once ordered the objectionable matter to be stricken out and instructed the jury to disregard the improper language of the witness. Again the character and limits of cross-examination are almost entirely in the discretion of the court, so that if nothing entirely irrelevant is elicited, a cross-examination relevant to the credibility of the witness is harmless.[69] So far as the cross-examination of the accused brings out only that which is favorable to him,[70] or if on all the evidence it appears that his answers could not have affected the verdict,[71] it is harmless.

(II) Admission of Evidence — (A) In General. The admission of evidence which is not material, over objection, is usually harmless error, unless it appears affirmatively that its admission actually injured defendant.[72] This is particularly

(3) By Further Examination of Witness. An erroneous exclusion of evidence is cured by the subsequent admission of the same testimony by the same witness,[89] or by a statement by the witness that he was not able to testify as expected.[90] The exclusion of proper testimony on the cross-examination of the state's witness is cured where he is subsequently recalled and reëxamined as to the same matters.[91]

(4) By Withdrawal of Objection. Error in excluding a question on objection is cured by the withdrawal of the objection before the close of the testimony,[92] although the party producing the witness does not then examine him.[93]

(5) By Verdict. Error in the exclusion of evidence is cured by a verdict which by its nature shows that it would not have been different if the excluded evidence had been admitted.[94] And generally the imposition of the mini-

the court reduces the punishment to the minimum,[13] or where the jury do not act on the instructions but leave it to the court to fix the punishment, and the court imposes the proper penalty.[14]

(v) Cure of Error—(a) By Subsequent Instructions. An erroneous instruction on a material point is not cured by a subsequent correct instruction on that point if the jury are left in doubt thereby which of the two is correct,[15] but an instruction not fully stating the law may be cured by a subsequent instruction which completes it.[16]

(b) By Verdict. An erroneous instruction is harmless where defendant is acquitted of the crime to which it is applicable.[17] If he is acquitted of a lower degree of crime and convicted of a higher, error in instructing as to the former is harmless,[18] and error in instructions as to a higher degree of the crime is harmless where he is convicted of the lower degree.[19]

An instruction that the jury may assess a greater punishment than is allowed by law is harmless when they assess the minimum. State v. Burr, 81 Mo. 108.

of a lower grade of the offense, refusal of instructions as to the higher grade is harmless.[25]

(VII) Modification of Requested Instructions. The action of the court in modifying a requested instruction so as to make it correctly state the law is harmless, as no error results to the accused thereby.[26]

(VIII) Signing and Filing. A failure to file instructions given,[27] or for the judge to sign them, as required by statute,[28] is harmless, unless it clearly appears that the statute is mandatory.[29]

g. Conduct and Deliberations of Jury. Slight irregularities on the part of jurors or of the court in dealing with them,[30] such as communications of jurors with outsiders,[31] the action of the officer in communicating with the jury and their listening to what he has to say,[32] the separation of the jury, with or without the consent of the court,[33] or the use of intoxicating liquors by the jury during the trial[34] may constitute harmless error only, where it appears from the circumstances that the accused was not in fact prejudiced. But the presence in the jury room and the reading by the jury of documentary evidence unfavorable to the accused is usually prejudicial error, unless by a timely instruction they are told to exclude everything they have read from their consideration.[35]

Where a statute permits the jury to take with them the pleadings and all papers and evidence, permitting them to take the indict-reception[36] or in the language[37] of the verdict may be harmless where it appears that the verdict is justified by the evidence and the instructions.

(II) JUDGMENT. Delay in rendering judgment[38] or the rendition of a judgment upon a verdict which was irregularly rendered[39] is not necessarily reversible error. And while a judgment which imposes an illegal or excessive punishment will be reversed,[40] an exercise of the discretion, either of the court or of the jury in fixing the punishment, is harmless where it does not exceed the statutory limits.[41]

(III) SENTENCE. Slight errors in and departures from the statutory mode of pronouncing sentence are usually harmless if the accused be thereby deprived of no substantial right.[42] So the suspension of sentence being usually made on the application of the accused, and, if erroneous at all, being favorable to him, is harmless.[43]

(IV) ERROR FAVORABLE TO DEFENDANT. An error by the court or in the exercise of discretion by court or jury in fixing the punishment which is favorable to the accused,[44] or by which he receives no greater punishment than if it laws existing at the time of its own decision.[53] Where, pending an appeal, the appellant discovers new evidence, he may, it has been held, apply to the appellate court for leave to move in the trial court for a new trial on the new evidence.[54] So the appellate court may order that judgment be arrested, if it finds that defendant's objections to the sufficiency of the indictment were improperly overruled.[55] The validity of the opinion is not affected by the fact that it and the judgment are filed while the appellate court is not in session.[56]

2. AFFIRMANCE — a. On Questions Certified. Under a statute which authorizes an appellate court to render judgment in accordance with the opinion of the presiding judge, a simple affirmance is sufficient.[57]

b. Appeal Not Sufficiently Presented. As it is not the duty of the appellate court to hunt for errors, as a general rule where the appellant fails by bill of exceptions, assignment of error, or other record, and a proper brief, to properly present the appeal to the court, judgment may be affirmed.[58] If no brief be filed, and the appellate court is unable to discover error in the record, the judgment will be affirmed.[59] The same rule applies where there is no bill of exceptions.[60]

c. Frivolous Appeals or Appeals For Delay. If it is evident that the appeal was taken solely for delay, and particularly if the exceptions are frivolous, judgment will be affirmed.[61]

d. On the Merits. If the evidence appears amply sufficient to justify the conviction, and the instructions apparently state the law correctly, and there is nothing in the record which shows that the accused has been deprived of any substantial right, judgment must be affirmed.[62]

e. Where Reversal Would Prove Useless. Where, because appellant's imprisonment had expired before the appellate court had an opportunity to consider the appeal, a reversal would be of no benefit to him judgment may be affirmed.[63]

f. Affirmance in Part. The appellate court may reverse a judgment of a lower court as to part and affirm as to part, where the legal part is severable from that which is illegal.[64] So a judgment upon a joint indictment and trial may be reversed as to one and affirmed as to the other defendants.[65]

sentence to a term of imprisonment[72] in excess of that permitted by statute; to a fine rendered against defendants jointly;[73] to a sentence on a general verdict of guilty where one of several counts is unsustained by any evidence;[74] and to a premature sentence.[75]

(B) Discretion of Court. Under a statute giving the appellate court power to modify the penalty and reduce the punishment imposed by the court below, the appellate court must have some facts upon which to base its action.[76]

(III) Increasing Punishment. In a few cases it has been held that where by clerical mistake or otherwise the punishment inflicted by the sentence imposed falls short of that which is proper under the verdict and judgment entered, the appellate court may reform the sentence and direct the additional punishment to be imposed.[77]

(IV) Fixing Date of Execution. It seems that the appellate court on affirming the judgment in a capital case may if necessary appoint the day of execution.[78]

The statute allowing certio-

l. Damages on Affirmance. A statute which provides that in criminal actions, where a judgment for a fine is suspended and subsequently is affirmed, damages shall be awarded against defendant is constitutional,[82] and under it the appellant is liable to damages where his appeal is dismissed.[83]

m. Resentence on Affirmance. The appellate court on an affirmance may properly pronounce the same sentence which has been pronounced in the court below.[84]

3. Reversal — a. In General. It may be laid down as a general rule that on a writ of error or appeal by defendant the appellate court will reverse a judgment on a verdict of guilty whenever it is made to appear that there has been an error prejudicial to him,[85] but not otherwise.[86] Judgment may be reversed where the public prosecuting officer or attorney-general admits error,[87] fails to controvert the claim of the appellant,[88] or to file a brief,[89] unless a statute expressly provides that reversal can only be had on an argument satisfying the appellate court that the judgment should be reversed.[90] On a writ of error by the state, however, the default of defendant in error will not entitle the prosecution to a reversal as a matter of course, but the court must decide the case as though he had appeared and argued it.[91] The fact that an agreement has been made whereby the case before the appellate court is to be a test case, and the parties in other cases are to abide the decision in it, does not invalidate the conviction or justify a reversal.[92]

b. Disagreement of Court as to Grounds For Reversal. If a majority of the court do not agree that error is shown judgment must be affirmed, but it is not necessary that they shall agree upon the same ground for reversal. Where the majority agree that the judgment is erroneous upon a point which may be assigned as error it will be reversed, although the majority may not agree as to the particular grounds upon which their decision is based.[93]

c. Sentence in Appellate Court. The common-law rule preventing any action by the appellate court on reversal, except to discharge the prisoner,[94] has been modified in many states by statutes which substantially confer upon appellate courts power to render such judgment on reversal as should have been given in the trial court.[95] Although the appellate court may have no express power to sentence to death, yet its repetition of the former sentence is merely an irregularity which will not vitiate the proceedings.[96]

d. Directing Judgment in Lower Court. By statute in many of the states, although not at common law, the appellate courts have power on reversal to remand the case with directions to the court below to render and enter such judgment as may be just and proper under the circumstances.[97] If the appellate court sees clearly that the facts in evidence are insufficient to constitute the offense charged, it should direct the entry of a nolle prosequi.[98]

(II) Remanding For New Sentence. Where there is no reversible error except that, in sentencing, the lower court has exceeded its power or imposed a sentence which is vague and indefinite, the appellate court on a reversal will not order a new trial, but will remand the case to the trial court for the imposition of a proper judgment and sentence.[7] A statute which requires the appellate court to render judgment and award such sentence as the law requires does not necessarily require it to pass sentence on reversal, but it may remand the case for sentence.[8] Failure to ask the accused before sentence for felony if he had anything to say why sentence should not be pronounced does not justify a new trial, but the case should be remanded for a proper sentence.[9]

thorized by the law or the evidence, by reason of which it is apparent that he has not had a legal and impartial trial, a new trial will be ordered.[10] The appellate court will not remand for a new trial a cause in which the trial court on a motion for a new trial decided that the verdict was not sustained by the evidence and imposed a light sentence, for to do this would infringe upon the province of the lower court which possesses a discretion to determine whether the evidence is legally sufficient to sustain a verdict.[11]

(II) Grounds For New Trial and Request. Whether the appellate court will on a reversal remand the case, with a direction to the court below to render such judgment as may be just and proper, or will order a new trial of the accused, depends upon the character of the error discovered. If the accused has been deprived of some substantial legal right in the trial court, or if he has not had, without his fault, a full, impartial, and legal trial, it is the duty of the appellate court to direct a new trial.[12] Under a statute conferring power on the appellate court to grant a new trial if proper, a new trial may be granted, although not asked for by the appellant.[13]

g. Remanding For Amendment. Where an appeal was needlessly brought after the overruling of a demurrer to an information, the error in which might have been corrected by the prosecuting attorney at once, on the objection being made in the trial court, the appellate court may refuse to consider the case on its merits, but may reverse pro forma and remand in order that the prosecuting attorney may amend the information.[14]

h. Effect of Reversal. The effect of a general and unqualified reversal on the prior proceedings is to nullify them completely and to leave the case as though judgment and sentence had never been rendered.[15] Its effect on the subsequent disposition of the case depends upon the power and authority of the court to determine whether a new trial shall be awarded, whether the case shall be remanded to have a proper sentence rendered according to law, or whether the accused shall be discharged absolutely.[16] It has been held that a reversal ipso facto operates to discharge the accused.[17] But a reversal of a conviction under two or more counts for error committed under one of them is operative only as to the count under which the error was committed and the verdict may stand as to the others.[18]

i. Vacating Stay. A stay of execution granted pending appeal, on a certificate of reasonable doubt, may be vacated on reversal.[19] After the remittitur a stay becomes inoperative and judgment may then be executed.[20] The appellate court has no power after a reversal to grant a further stay on the ground of defendant's ill-health, where the statute provides in substance that sentence shall be executed as soon as possible.[21]

j. Setting Aside Reversal. A reversal will not be set aside merely because the prisoner without the knowledge of the appellate court has escaped pending appeal.[22]

4. Mandate and Proceedings After Remand — a. Mandate or Other Remanding Order. In order to reinvest the lower court with jurisdiction after judgment on appeal, there should be some order from the appellate court directing it to proceed thereon.[23] The remittitur on a reversal need not expressly set aside the verdict and judgment,[24] or in a capital case, on a dismissal of the appeal, assign a new day for the execution.[25] In the absence of statute providing for a delay in issuing the mandate it may be issued immediately on an affirmance.[26] The indictment ought to be remitted to the term of the lower court then in session.[27] An omission to file a mandate or remittitur in the lower court is a mere irregularity that may be waived.[28] An appellant who moves for a stay of the mandate, with leave to move for a new trial because of new evidence, must make out a prima facie case.[29]

b. Pleading Over on Overruling Demurrer. It has been held to be discretionary with the appellate court, after it has affirmed the overruling of a demurrer to an indictment, to permit the respondent to plead over and remand the case to the lower court for trial.[30]

(III) NEW TRIAL. Inasmuch as the judgment on appeal is an adjudication only as to matters actually ruled upon in the appellate court,[34] a defendant convicted of one crime on an indictment for another, on a new trial after reversal, can be tried for the offense charged in the original indictment.[35] The accused may on the new trial plead former jeopardy, although a certiorari intended to secure his release on such ground has been denied him.[36] New evidence may be introduced by either party on a new trial after reversal, whether the reversal was on a question of fact or on a ruling of law or both.[37] On the other hand after the affirmance of a capital sentence and the filing of the remittitur, the trial court has no power to entertain a motion for a new trial on newly discovered evidence, without leave of the appellate court.[38] fix a new day of execution, where the day originally fixed has expired pending the appeal, is unquestioned.[39]

I. Liability on Appeal-Bond or Recognizance, and Deposits For Costs[40]

1. Appeal-Bond or Recognizance — a. Validity. Appeal-bonds and recognizances with respect to their validity and the liability thereon are governed by the principles of law applicable to bonds and recognizances generally.[41] The stay of execution in a criminal case is a sufficient consideration for an appeal-bond.[42] Such insufficiency in an appeal-bond or recognizance as renders it vague and unintelligible, or omission from it of material matters required by statute, will invalidate it.[43] A recognizance in a criminal case binding defendant to appear is sufficient if it states the cause of its taking, names the court before whom he is bound to appear, and the authority of the court taking it.[44] Where, however, the court has no authority to grant an appeal an appeal-bond is invalid.[45]

b. Extent of Liability. The extent of the liability on an appeal-bond depends of course upon the terms of the bond.[46] The parties to a bond for costs, in a prosecution begun before a justice, are liable for costs in both the proceedings before the justice and in a trial de novo on appeal, although the accused is acquitted in the latter.[47] The parties on a bond to pay a fine and costs are not liable where the verdict of guilty did not assess any fine.[48]

c. Condition to Prosecute Appeal. A condition to prosecute an appeal and to pay such fine as shall be adjudged against the accused is broken where he prosecutes his appeal, but fails to pay his fine;[49] and a condition to prosecute an appeal to effect is broken by a failure to prosecute within the year allowed by statute.[50]

d. Discharge of Sureties. An appearance and trial does not satisfy a bond conditioned that defendant shall prosecute his appeal and pay such fine and costs as shall be adjudged against him. His failure to pay his fine renders the sureties liable.[51] The sureties are not liable so long as the principal is ready to pay his fine and costs.[52] If the sureties undertake that the principal shall appear at the term next to be held and abide the judgment thereof, their liability is limited to such judgment as may be rendered at that term and session, and if the term is adjourned without any proceedings in the case they are discharged.[53]

Appellate court ceasing to exist.— Where parties execute a bond conditioned to abide

e. Proceedings to Enforce — (I) In General. At common law the remedy on an appeal-bond is by action[54] and the remedy on a recognizance is by forfeiture.[55] Forfeiture of a recognizance at common law creates an absolute debt of record in the nature of a judgment. On this, both in England and in the United States, in the absence of statute, and often under statutes, before execution can issue a scire facias must be issued or an action of debt may be brought, as upon a judgment.[56] In some of the states, by statute, summary remedies are provided for enforcing the liability on appeal-bonds or recognizances.[57]

(II) Pleading. A complaint or declaration in an action on a recognizance or appeal-bond should properly set forth the legal effect of the obligation, or show that it was and is actually on file, and if it does not it may be demurred to. If it is alleged that it was on file it may be inferred that it was duly returned and entered. The jurisdiction of the court to take the recognizance ought to be alleged.[58] If defendant on a scire facias defends on the ground that the court is without jurisdiction because the record fails to show that the bond was given he must do so by a plea, upon which the state can take issue and offer evidence, and not by a motion to dismiss.[59]

(III) Evidence. The record showing a recognizance ordinarily cannot be contradicted.[60] Where the bond has been lost, parol evidence is received to show the time mentioned in the bond to which an adjournment was taken, as the docket entry of this does not control the recitals in the bond.[61]

(IV) Conclusiveness of Appeal. It has been held that the surety, in an action brought against him on an appeal-bond, may show that the judgment imposing the fine for which he is sued was void.[62]

(V) Review. Either party to an action on a recognizance in a criminal prosecution may have the decision reviewed on exceptions,[63] but it cannot be objected for the first time on appeal that the recognizance was not filed by the clerk of the court.[64]

(VI) Jurisdiction. Where a statute provides that the appellate court may render judgment against the appellant and his sureties in a recognizance given on an appeal, the criminal court to which such appeal is taken may do so, although such court has no civil jurisdiction, and inasmuch as the surety has had his day in court according to the procedure prescribed by statute he cannot complain that he

XVIII. SUCCESSIVE OFFENSES AND HABITUAL CRIMINALS.

A. Power to Punish — 1. IN GENERAL. Statutes under which more severe punishment may be inflicted upon the accused where the crime of which he is convicted is a second or subsequent offense, being highly penal, should not be extended in their application to cases which do not by the strictest construction come under their provisions.[67] Such statutes are not unconstitutional or objectionable upon the ground that they are ex post facto laws,[68] that they inflict a double punishment for the same offense,[69] that they inflict cruel or unusual punishment,[70] that they put the accused twice in jeopardy for the same offense,[71] or that they impose a penalty on crimes committed outside the jurisdiction.[72]

In Massachusetts the statute under certain circumstances imposes an additional punishment on one convicted of a crime punishable by hard labor for a "term of years." The additional punishment will not be inflicted on a third conviction where the offense is punishable only by imprisonment for a year, although defendant was twice before convicted and sentenced for a term of years. Ex p. White, 14 Pick. 90. But see Ex p. Stevens, 14 Pick. 94, where the additional punishment was imposed on a conviction of a second offense punishable by imprisonment "for more than one year."

Punishment on a subsequent conviction cannot be increased because of a prior sen-

vides increased penalties for subsequent offenses specifically named does not require that the second offense shall be a repetition of the identical crime of which the offender was convicted, but refers to any one of those specifically mentioned.[74] An offense is no less a "similar offense" to one previously committed by reason of the fact that the penalties for the two differ.[75]

3. Former Conviction Must Precede Commission of Crime Charged. The statutes increasing the punishment on account of a former conviction do not apply unless the offense for which the defendant is on trial shall have been committed after the conviction as well as after the commission of the first.[76]

4. After Pardon For First Offense. It has been held that the fact that the accused was pardoned does not exempt him from the increased punishment on a subsequent conviction.[77]

5. Invalidity of Prior Conviction. That the prior conviction was erroneous will not prevent the operation of the statute as to a subsequent conviction, unless the court in which the prior conviction was held had no jurisdiction.[78]

B. Prosecutions — 1. Allegation of Former Conviction. Inasmuch as the fact of a former conviction is a part of the offense, to the extent of aggravating it and increasing the punishment, it must be alleged in the information or indictment.[79] The entire record of the former trial and conviction need not be set tence, unless the prior offense was felony in itself, and was not made so in the particular case by an earlier conviction. Stover v. Com., 92 Va. 780, 22 S. E. 874.

forth;[80] and it is only necessary that the facts required shall be alleged with sufficient clearness to enable the court to determine whether or not the statute applies.[81]

2. BURDEN AND SUFFICIENCY OF PROOF. The burden of proof is on the state to prove the prior conviction like any other material fact.[82] The identity of the accused with the person previously convicted must be proved.[83] The evidence of defendant's identity must relate to his identity while in custody under the prior sentence.[84]

3. EVIDENCE ADMISSIBLE. A distinct crime cannot be proven to aggravate the statutory penalty unless charged in the indictment.[85] The certificate of the warden of the penitentiary is proper evidence to show the discharge of the prisoner,[86] and the judgment in the prior proceedings is the best evidence of his conviction.[87]

4. PLEAS AND THEIR EFFECT. A plea of guilty of the crime charged, where the indictment charges a prior conviction, confesses the previous conviction.[88] A plea of not guilty generally puts the fact of prior conviction in issue, where it is alleged in the indictment as well as the commission of the subsequent crime.[89]

5. Order of Trying the Issues. In the United States, by statute[90] or as a rule of practice, it is customary to determine the issue of prior conviction after the general verdict and by a second jury.[91] If, however, the statute expressly provides that the proof of a prior conviction should be made "upon trial," such proof must be made before verdict.[92]

6. Verdict. The jury ought to find specifically on the issue of prior conviction, when submitted to them under a plea of not guilty;[93] and a verdict of "guilty as charged" will be treated as an acquittal of the charge of a prior conviction.[94]

7. Sentence or Judgment. The judgment, if it recite the conviction of the subsequent crime, need not recite the former conviction.[95] The additional punishment must be included in the sentence passed on the accused for the subsequent offense and cannot be awarded against him in separate proceedings, where the indictment charges the former conviction.[96] On sentence the accused should tion of former conviction the court may enter a plea for him. People v. Youngs, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 37.

be informed that the indictment charges him with a prior conviction of crime, and then the usual question, if he has anything to say why judgment should not be pronounced, must be put.[97]

8. MEASURE OF PUNISHMENT. Where the statute provides that on a third conviction of felony the convict may be convicted of being an habitual criminal and be imprisoned for life, the court should sentence him to imprisonment for life where the jury find that he has been previously twice convicted, and convict him of a subsequent felony.[98]

XIX. PUNISHMENT AND PREVENTION OF CRIME.[99]

A. In General — 1. PUNISHMENT DEFINED. Punishment is pain, suffering, loss, confinement, or other penalty inflicted on a person for a crime or offense by the authority to which the offender is subject; a penalty imposed in the enforcement or application of law.[1]

2. CONFORMITY OF PUNISHMENT TO SENTENCE. The punishment actually endured must conform strictly in character and duration to that designated in the sentence. Thus one sentenced to hard labor for the county cannot be punished with imprisonment in jail,[2] and he should be discharged on habeas corpus.[3]

3. FEDERAL PRISONERS IN STATE PENITENTIARY. Under the act of congress which provides that criminals sentenced to a state prison by a federal court shall be subject to the discipline and treatment received by convicts sentenced by a state court, federal prisoners may be subjected to hard labor as part of the imprisonment, where a state statute provides that this shall be part of the punishment of prisoners in the penitentiary.[4]

tion to secure the additional punishment, it must be filed before the term of the convict's imprisonment has expired, and in reckoning the term it is presumed to commence with the day of his commitment.

Y. 38, where it is held that if the character of the subsequent crime is such that on a first conviction the accused might have been, in the discretion of the court, punished by imprisonment for life, the life penalty is not discretionary on a second conviction but imperative under the statute providing for increased punishment on conviction of a second offense.

A judgment is not invalidated by the fact that the punishment imposed is only for the crime charged as a first offense, although the indictment charges a prior conviction and punishment, and a statute permits an additional punishment on these facts being shown. Phillips v. Com., 3 Metc. (Mass.) 588.

Under a statute punishing one on a third conviction as an habitual criminal defendant cannot be sentenced to a longer term of imprisonment than that prescribed by the statute (Shepherd v. Com., 2 Metc. (Mass.) 419); and it is not necessary that an interval of liberty should intervene between the first and second term under a statute punishing one on a third conviction as an habitual criminal (Com. v. Richardson, 175 Mass. 202, 55 N. E. 988).

Punishments and their consequences distinguished.— Punishment per se has been distinguished from the mere effect or consequence of punishment as being only that which the court is authorized to impose in pronouncing its judgment, it being held that constitutional or statutory provisions that persons convicted of certain crimes shall thereafter be disqualified to hold office or shall lose their right of suffrage do not make such deprivations a part of the punishment. B. Constitutional and Statutory Provisions[5] — 1. Uniformity of Penalty. The punishment for the same offense must be uniform for all persons in the same class.[6] Statutes imposing punishments for felony must operate uniformly upon the inhabitants of the state enacting them.[7]

2. Construing Statutes. If a statute creating or increasing a penalty is capable of two constructions, it should be construed so as to operate in favor of life and liberty.[8] And statutes imposing punishment must be construed together.[9] If the statute repeals the common law in so far as the punishment of an offense is concerned, the fact that the indictment does not conclude against the form of the statute does not prevent the statutory punishment being inflicted.[10]

3. Imprisonment For Fine, Forfeiture, or Costs. Imprisonment for non-payment of a fine is elsewhere treated.[11] Since a provision for forfeiture of a specific sum is equivalent to imposition of a fine for that amount, a statutory provision that one convicted shall "forfeit" a specific amount authorizes imposition of a fine and the imprisonment of the accused until it is paid.[12] A statutory provision permitting the imprisonment of a convict at hard labor to satisfy costs incurred by the state does not infringe the constitutional provision which provides that no person shall be imprisoned for debt.[13]

Place of punishment.— A statute which provides that a local criminal court may sentence a prisoner to a house of correction, where elsewhere he must be imprisoned in jail, is not a special or local act relating to the punishment of crime prohibited by the constitution, as it does not change the punishment or degree of any crime, but only provides a place where punishment may be inflicted. Ex p. Williams, 87 Cal. 78, 24 Pac. 602, 25 Pac. 248. Confinement of minors in reform school.— Nor is an act unconstitutional which provides for the detention of minors in a reform school during their minority, by reason of which they may be detained longer than the term of imprisonment provided for their offenses. Ex p. Nichols, 110 Cal. 651, 43 Pac. 9.

Municipal ordinances.— A statute which is general in its provision is not unconstitutional, as violating a provision requiring uniformity of penalties, because in some cities, which by their charter have power to punish the same offense, a lighter penalty is inflicted by a municipal ordinance. Johnson v. People, 6 Colo. App. 163, 40 Pac. 576.

Where a defendant is sentenced for a specified term "and until he shall pay the costs," the payment of the costs is a part of the punishment, and the continued imprisonment after the expiration of the term is of the

4. Punishment Proportioned to Offense. A constitutional provision that all penalties shall be proportioned to the nature of the offense is not violated by a statute which provides for increased penalties upon second and subsequent convictions of certain felonies,[14] nor by a statute requiring minors to be imprisoned for the maximum term, unless sooner released by the managers of a reformatory, although adult offenders may receive in the discretion of the jury a shorter term.[15] A statute which increases the punishment for an assault, where it is accompanied by an intent to do great bodily harm, is not unconstitutional because it does not define an assault of this character.[16]

5. Indefinite Imprisonment. A constitutional provision forbidding indefinite imprisonment is not violated by a sentence to pay a fine, with a provision that the accused remain in the custody of the sheriff until the fine is paid, for the punishment is the fine, and the committing to custody is only a means of its enforcement.[17]

6. Indeterminate Sentences. In some jurisdictions there are statutes providing for indeterminate sentences, by which a maximum and minimum term of imprisonment is fixed, with the proviso that upon certain contingencies the accused may be released before the expiration of the maximum term.[18] Such sentences are not void as being uncertain in their duration,[19] nor are the statutes authorizing such sentences unconstitutional.[20]

7. Repealing Statutes — a. In General. To what offenses applicable.— The Illinois statute which refers to "crimes punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary" is held to embrace not only crimes which must, but also those which may, be so punished, and for which an alternative punishment by way of fine is allowed (People v. Murphy, 185 Ill. 623, 57 N. of criminal statutes by implication are not favored, and where there is a difference only and not an inconsistency between the two statutes, the repealing force of the latter will extend only so far as is absolutely necessary.[22] So where there are repugnant sections in a criminal code the rule is as to a repeal by implication that the sections transcribed in the court from later statutes amend those transcribed from earlier statutes, so far as is necessary to make them consistent.[23] And, where it is expressly provided that a statute prescribing the punishment shall operate to repeal all inconsistent statutes, its effect is not extended more than is necessary.[24]

b. Statutes Existing When Crime Was Committed. As a general rule the punishment of a crime must be assessed according to the statute which is in operation at the date of its commission.[25] And where one has been convicted before the passage of a statute affirming a common-law offense, the common-law punishment may be imposed after the passage of the act.[26] If the punishment is diminished by statute the statute in force at the date of the commission of the crime is to that extent repealed, and punishment must be imposed under the new statute.[27] But it has been held that a statute which increases the punishment and contains no saving clause as to a crime committed before it takes effect does not apply to an offense committed before its enactment, and the accused cannot be punished under either the old or the new statute.[28]

c. Effect of Saving Clause in Repealing Statute. A general saving clause in, or referring to, a repealing statute, continues the earlier statute in force as to crimes committed prior to the repeal, and the accused on conviction may be punished under the statute as it existed at the time of the commission of the crime notwithstanding its repeal.[29] Where a statute provides that no new law shall repeal or in any way affect the former one as to any offense committed against the former law, except that the proceedings thereafter shall conform to the new Construction of statute.— A statute providing that the repeal of any statute shall not have the effect to release or extinguish "any penalty, forfeiture or liability" incurred under such statute, unless the repealing act shall so expressly provide, covers a prosecution under a statute which authorizes imprisonment as well as where the punishment is pecuniary. U. S. v. Mathews, 23 Fed. 74.

Under a statute which provides that a mitigated penalty is to be imposed by a judgment pronounced after the new statute goes statute, the jury on conviction may fix the penalty under the law in force when the crime occurred.[30]

d. Repeal After Sentence and Before Execution. Where, after a prisoner is sentenced to death, the law under which he was convicted and sentenced is repealed and the punishment mitigated, he cannot be resentenced to capital punishment thereafter but must be discharged.[31]

e. Right of Accused to Elect Between Original and Repealing Statutes. In some of the states the accused has a right to elect between the punishment prescribed by the statute in existence at the date of the commission of the crime and a subsequent statute amending or repealing it by changing the punishment.[32] If the prisoner fails to elect it has been held that he may be punished according to the law in force at the date of the crime,[33] although elsewhere it is held that if the subsequent punishment ameliorates the prior punishment, and he fails to exercise his right to elect, he should be punished under the repealing statute.[34]

C. Extent of Punishment[35] — 1. At Common Law. The punishments inflicted for crimes at common law are death, imprisonment, fine, pillory, tumbrel, and the stocks.[36] To these was added the punishment by whipping, which at common law was usually inflicted only on persons of inferior conditions who might be guilty of petit larceny and other small offenses.[37] Punishment by transportation in England was wholly the creature of statutory regulations.[38] Fines were considered the lowest species of punishment, and, although at first they were the only penalties to which the rich were liable, when judges were at most merely collectors of the royal revenue, yet later they were enforced only in cases to which they were particularly appropriate, the court keeping in view the provisions of magna charta and of the bill of rights that excessive fines ought not to be demanded.[39] In the United States criminal offenses, the punishment of which is not provided by statute, are punishable as at common law, usually by fine or imprisonment or both, in the discretion of the court, according to the precedents of the common law.[40]

2. Legislative Power to Prescribe Punishment. Congress and the state legislainto effect, a judgment pronounced before it takes effect cannot be reversed so the mitigated penalty may be applied. Jones v. Com., 104 Ky. 468, 47 S. W. 328, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 651.

The law in force when a trial is begun remains, under such a statute, the law until it is ended, and the punishment is not affected by a new law going into effect during the trial (Myers v. State, 8 Tex. App. 321; Simms v. State, 8 Tex. App. 230), or while an appeal is pending (Walker v. State, 7 Tex. App. 245, 32 Am. Rep. 595).

The court may pass sentence according to the statutes, although the indictment is drawn as at common law, such statutes not being rules of pleading but merely affecting the conduct of the trial and instructions to be tures have in general complete power, subject to constitutional restrictions,[41] to provide punishments for crimes and offenses committed subsequent to the enactment of the statutes defining them.[42] The legislature may increase the punishment applicable to a certain class of offenses,[43] and it may impose more than one penalty for the same offense, providing it does not put the accused twice in jeopardy of life or limb.[44]

3. Obligation of Court to Follow Statute. Where a statute provides a specific punishment for a particular statutory crime, the courts must follow the statute closely, and a departure from the statute assessing punishment in excess of the statutory limitation is illegal.[45] If a statute directs a fine and imprisonment punishment may be by both,[46] but if it directs fine or imprisonment punishment by both is illegal;[47] and where a statute provides for imprisonment and fine, or imprisonment without fine, a fine without imprisonment is illegal.[48] If a statute fixes the maximum and minimum of a fine but leaves it to the discretion of the court to fix the precise sum, the imposition of a fine less than the minimum is not less illegal than one in excess of the maximum.[49]

4. Discretion of Court. The statutes frequently leave the extent of the punishment to the discretion of the court within certain limits, and the exercise of such discretion will not be interfered with unless it is clearly abused.[50] Where the court has a discretion as to the character or amount of punishment, it may be guided in the exercise of its discretion by the fact that the accused has

An objection that the period of imprisonment must be for one or more whole years, where the court has power to imprison "for any number of years," is of no effect where been previously convicted of similar offenses.[51] It may also consider in reducing the term of imprisonment the time that the convict has been in custody awaiting trial.[52] If the evidence was barely sufficient to support the verdict the court is justified in imposing a low degree of punishment.[53]

5. Power to Commit to Particular Prisons. The power to designate the place in which the accused shall suffer imprisonment depends in most cases on constitutional and statutory provisions.[54] If the statute gives the court a discretion to choose between punishment by imprisonment in the penitentiary or the county jail a sentence to the penitentiary is proper.[55] Under a statute authorizing imprisonment for the non-payment of a fine, if the primary punishment includes a term of imprisonment in the state prison, the convict may be required to serve out his fine in the same institution and need not be transferred to a county jail for this purpose,[56] but in other cases imprisonment for the non-payment of fines must be in the county jail.[57]

6. Imprisonment at Hard Labor. Punishment by imprisonment at hard labor is illegal, unless authorized by statute,[58] although it has been held that under a statute providing only for imprisonment, the court may sentence to a prison where hard labor is imposed as a part of the discipline.[59]

7. Employment of Convicts on Public Works. The punishment of a convict by compelling him to labor on public works under county authorities is authorized by the constitutions of some states.[60] Rural and urban highways are public works within the meaning of statutes and constitutions providing for the employment of convicts on public works.[61] One sentenced to labor upon the public works, under contract, may be imprisoned at night to prevent his escape.[62]

8. On Failure of Jury to Assess Punishment. In Missouri it is provided by statute that if the jury assess a punishment below the limit prescribed by law for the offense of which defendant is convicted, the court shall pronounce sentence and render judgment according to the lowest limit which the law prescribes.[63]

9. Imprisonment in Default of Payment of Fine. Imprisonment in default of payment of fine is illegal, unless the court is expressly authorized by the legislature to impose it.[64] Statutes which expressly permit imprisonment for non-payment of a fine usually limit the term of such imprisonment, providing that the imprisonment shall be in proportion to the amount of the fine.[65] Where this is the case defendant may avoid imprisonment for non-payment and secure his discharge by paying the fine or the remainder thereof, deducting the amount for which his imprisonment is an equivalent.[66] If there be no limitation placed upon the duration of the imprisonment to enforce the fine, it seems that the convict may be confined for an unlimited time in default of the payment of the fine.[67]

10. Misdemeanors. Misdemeanors, the punishment of which is not specifically prescribed by statute, are punishable by fine and imprisonment in the county jail within reasonable limits in the discretion of the court[68] or jury.[69] Punishment by imprisonment in the state's prison on a conviction of misdemeanor is generally illegal.[70]

11. Attempts. At common law an attempt to commit a misdemeanor was punishable by fine and imprisonment or both.[71] Where a statute provides for punishment for an attempt to commit a misdemeanor, it is proper to impose the same term of imprisonment as by statute is designated for the complete offense.[72] In many of the states the statutes provide that an attempt to commit a crime

Imprisonment for non-payment of fine is not a part of a term of imprisonment or labor which is given in addition to the fine, and therefore a provision that the convict shall be credited with a certain sum on his fine for each day's imprisonment or labor and that in no event shall he be required to work out his fine for more than a year has no application to a term of imprisonment imposed with his fine. Ex p. Dockery, 38 Tex. may be punished by the imposition of imprisonment for one-half or not to exceed one-half the term for which the perpetrator of the completed crime would be punishable.[73] A statute providing that the punishment for an attempt to commit a crime shall be one-half the penalty for a conviction of the crime is too uncertain and indefinite to be enforced in cases where, for the commission of the crime, imprisonment for life is the only penalty.[74]

12. Accessaries and Accomplices. At common law the punishment of accessaries before the fact was generally the same as that of principals.[75] But the punishment of an accessary after the fact was in most cases less than the punishment of the principal, and in many cases it was trivial.[76] In most cases by statute it is now provided that accessaries and accomplices shall receive the same punishment as the principal.[77]

13. Age as Affecting Punishment. Under a statute which distinguishes the punishment of criminals according to their age, the age at the date of the commission of the crime and not at the date of the conviction is to be considered.[78]

14. Double Punishment. The constitutional principle that no one shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense is broad enough to mean that no one can be twice lawfully punished for the same offense. The one follows from the other, and the constitutional provisions are designed to protect the accused from a double punishment as much as to protect him from two trials.[79] Hence where two judgments are by mistake entered against the accused on one verdict and he serves the full term imposed in one, he cannot be reimprisoned on the other.[80] A judgment for a fine and imprisonment is not void as a double punishment because it provides that the fine and costs may be enforced by a civil judgment;[81] and the imposition of a fine for betting in a criminal prosecution, and a civil action to recover the amount received by the accused on such bet, do not constitute a double punishment for the same offense.[82] The same is true of imprisonment for failure to pay a fine,[83] of a resentence after serving part of a legal

D. Cumulative Punishments — 1. In General. By common law cumulative fines and terms of imprisonment, if definite and certain, are valid where the accused is convicted of separate and distinct crimes in different indictments or in different counts of the same indictment.[86] And where a convict is serving a term of imprisonment under a prior sentence at the time of a second conviction, sentence may be pronounced to begin at the expiration of the term he is serving.[87] In some jurisdictions, however, it is held that cumulative sentences cannot be imposed except where they are expressly authorized by statute.[88] A term of imprisonment to begin in the future, after the determination of a prior term, is not necessarily illegal in itself or invalid because it is vague or uncertain. It may be uncertain when it is imposed, but it will be made certain by the event, for, if the prior imprisonment is shortened by a reversal or a pardon, the sentence of subsequent punishment then takes effect in the same mode as if the prior term had expired by the natural lapse of time.[89]

2. Statutory Provisions. There are now in many jurisdictions statutes expressly allowing cumulative sentences in certain cases.[90] The operation of these statutes as being a double punishment. State v. Schierhoff, 103 Mo. 47, 15 S. W. 151.

84. A reversal and a remand for the purpose of having the proper punishment imposed, after the accused has served a portion of an erroneous punishment, is not the infliction of a double punishment, although by a resentence he is actually confined for a longer period than the term for which he was originally sentenced. Com. v. Murphy, 174 Mass. 369, 54 N. E. 860, 75 Am. St. Rep. 353, 48 L. R. A. 393 [affirmed in Murphy v. Massachusetts, 177 U. S. 155, 20 S. Ct. 639, 44 L. ed. 711]. 3. Punishment of Crime Committed During First Imprisonment. Where a prisoner during an unexpired term of imprisonment commits a crime, he may be punished therefor and sentenced to a term of imprisonment to commence on the expiration of his present term.[92] If he commits a capital offense, he may be executed before the term of imprisonment which he is serving has expired.[93]

E. Cruel and Unusual Punishments and Excessive Fines — 1. Constitutional Provisions. The provision of the federal constitution[94] prohibiting "cruel and unusual punishments" and the levying of excessive fines is confined in its operation to the legislature and the judiciary of the United States,[95] and does not apply to legislation by the state. The constitutions of most states, however, also provide that cruel and unusual punishment shall not be inflicted.[96]

2. What Constitutes Cruel and Unusual Punishment — a. In General. What shall in any particular case constitute a cruel and unusual punishment under the constitutional provisions depends upon the facts and circumstances of the punishment itself, and upon the nature of the act which is to be punished.[97] The prohibition of the constitution would unquestionably apply to punishments which amount to physical torture, or to such as would by their character shock the minds of persons possessed of the ordinary feelings of humanity.[98]

The ancient punishments prevalent in England, such as drawing and quartering, burning at the stake, mutilation of limbs, death by slow starvation in prison, and the like, would probably be regarded as cruel and unusual by every court called upon to decide this question. See State v. Williams, 77 Mo. 310; Wilkerson v. Utah, 99 U. S. 130, 25 L. ed. 345.

b. Particular Sentences — (1) In General. The character of punishments imposed by the statute, which have been held not to infringe constitutional provisions prohibiting cruel and unusual punishment, differs widely in the several states.[19]

The discretion of the legislature will not be interfered with by the court except in extreme cases. McDonald v. Com., 173 Mass. 322, 53 N. E. 874, 73 Am. St. Rep. 293; People v. Huntley, 112 Mich. 569, 71 N. W. 178; State v. Becker, 3 S. D. 29, 51 N. W. 1018; Aldridge v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 447.

99. Not cruel and unusual.— The following punishments have been held not to be cruel and unusual.

California.— Imprisonment in the state prison for two years or a fine of five thousand dollars or both, for assault with a deadly weapon. Ex p. Mitchell, 70 Cal. 1, 11 Pac. 488. An additional term of imprisonment in jail for non-payment of a fine of one thousand dollars, one day for each dollar. In re Collins, (1890) 23 Pac. 374; In re Rosenheim, 83 Cal. 388, 23 Pac. 372. Twenty years for robbery at night in the house of the persons robbed. People v. Clark, 106 Cal. 32, 39 Pac. 53.

Colorado.—A fine not to exceed five hundred dollars, with imprisonment not to exceed eighteen months, or both, for an infraction of the liquor law. Cardillo v. People, 26 Colo. 355, 58 Pac. 678.

Georgia.— Twelve months in the chaingang for breaking in and stealing oats from a barn. Mitchell v. State, 100 Ga. 91, 26 S. E. 501. Ten years in the penitentiary for assault with intent to kill. Fogarty v. State, 80 Ga. 450, 5 S. E. 782.

Indiana.— See Shields v. State, 149 Ind. 395, 49 N. E. 351; Hobbs v. State, 133 Ind. 404, 32 N. E. 1019, 18 L. R. A. 774 ("White-Cap Act"); McLaughlin v. State, 45 Ind. 338 (abatement of a nuisance).

Iowa.— Imprisonment not to exceed five years, or a fine of five hundred dollars and imprisonment for one year, for obstructing the highway. State v. Teeters, 97 Iowa 458, 66 N. W. 754. Five years at hard labor in the penitentiary for receiving a deposit while an officer of an insolvent bank. State v. Boomer, 103 Iowa 106, 72 N. W. 424.

Kansas.— Hard labor for a term not exceeding seven years, for larceny from a railroad company. In re Tutt, 55 Kan. 705, 41 Pac. 957.

Kentucky.— Disfranchisement as punishment for gambling. Harper v. Com., 93 Ky. 290, 19 S. W. 737, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 163.

Massachusetts.— The habitual criminal act providing for a punishment for twenty-five years on a second conviction of felony. Sturtevant v. Com., 158 Mass. 598, 33 N. E. 648.

Michigan.— Five years' imprisonment for receiving stolen property. People v. Smith, 94 Mich. 644, 54 N. W. 487.

Minnesota.— Six years and six months' imprisonment for asking a bribe, while a member of a city council. State v. Durnam, 73 Minn. 150, 75 N. W. 1127. Committing minor to confinement during minority. State v. Phillips, 73 Minn. 77, 75 N. W. 1029.

Missouri.— Two years in the penitentiary for selling a paper devoted mainly to scandals, etc. (State v. Van Wye, 136 Mo. 227, 37 S. W. 938, 58 Am. St. Rep. 627), or for obtaining three dollars by means of a fraudulent device and false pretenses (State v. Williams, 77 Mo. 310 [affirming 12 Mo. App. 415]).

New Jersey.—A fine of one hundred dollars or imprisonment not to exceed five years or both, as a penalty for violating the provisions of a law regulating the cultivation of oysters. State v. Corson, 67 N. J. L. 178, 50 Atl. 780.

New York.— Disfranchisement for dueling. Barker v. People, 20 Johns. 457. The imposition of a penalty under a special act for an offense also punishable under a general act. In re Bayard, 25 Hun 546, 63 How. Pr. 73 [reversing 61 How. Pr. 294].

North Carolina.— Two years in jail, with work on the public roads, for carrying concealed weapons (State v. Hamby, 126 N. C. 1066, 35 S. E. 614), or for an unjustifiable assault and robbery (State v. Apple, 121 N. C. 584, 28 S. E. 469). Providing for the collection of fines by hiring out the convict, where he is a free person of color. State v. Manuel, 20 N. C. 144. Twelve months in jail and three hundred dollars and costs for assault and battery with a deadly weapon. State v. Reid, 106 N. C. 714, 11 S. C. 315.

Ohio.— Imprisonment at hard labor in the penitentiary of any tramp who threatens to injure the person of another. State v. Hogan, 63 Ohio St. 202, 58 N. E. 572, 81 Am. St. Rep. 626, 52 L. R. A. 863.

Oklahoma.— Fifty years' imprisonment for manslaughter in the first degree. Jones v. Territory, 4 Okla. 45, 43 Pac. 1072.

Rhode Island.— Fine of two hundred and fifty dollars with imprisonment for thirty days, for peddling without a state and local license. State v. Foster, 22 R. I. 163, 46 Atl. 833, 50 L. R. A. 339.

Tennessee.— Disqualification to hold office for gambling. State v. Smith, 2 Yerg. 272. Fine and imprisonment for a long term for traveling about in disguise, under the statute designed to repress the "Ku Klux." Ligan v. State, 3 Heisk. 159.

Texas.— Five years for stealing a horse. Lillard v. State, 17 Tex. App. 114.

Vermont.— A fine of three hundred dollars or three years' imprisonment for a second conviction of illegally furnishing intoxicating liquors. State v. Hodgson, 66 Vt. 134, 28 Atl. 1089.

Wisconsin.—A failure to fix the maximum punishment for the wilful conversion of floating logs, which is made larceny, does not make a punishment cruel or unusual. State v. Fackler, 91 Wis. 418, 64 N. W. 1029.

Wyoming.— Imprisonment at the rate of one dollar per day for failure to pay a fine

(II) CAPITAL PUNISHMENT. The power of the legislature to provide capital punishment for crime is not limited by a constitutional provision forbidding cruel and usual punishments;[1] nor does such a provision prevent the legislature from changing the method of capital punishment.[2]

(III) INCREASED PUNISHMENT ON SECOND CONVICTION. A statute imposing a heavier penalty on a person convicted of felony, where he has been before convicted of certain specified crimes, or providing a severer punishment for a subsequent offense than for a first offense, is not unconstitutional as being a cruel and unusual punishment.[3]

(IV) INDETERMINATE SENTENCE. A sentence under the indeterminate sentence law, by which the length of the sentence to a reformatory shall depend upon the action of the board of said reformatory, does not inflict a cruel and unusual punishment under the constitution.[4]

(V) WHIPPING. Whipping has been held not to be a cruel and unusual punishment within the meaning of a state bill of rights[5] or of the provision of the federal constitution.[6]

3. EXCESSIVE FINES — a. In General. What in any instance shall constitute an excessive fine in violation of a constitutional provision depends upon the character of the crime and to a certain extent upon the ability of the defendant to pay;[7]

Crime not formerly capital.— The legislature may impose capital punishment for the commission of a crime which was formerly not capital, for the fact that capital punishment was never inflicted upon a certain class of convicted criminals does not render it cruel and unusual. State v. Stubblefield, 157 Mo. 360, 58 S. W. 337; Territory v. Ketchum, 10 N. M. 718, 65 Pac. 169, 55 L. R. A. 90.

To punish an attempted train robbery by death is not in contravention of the constitutional provision, in view of the methods usually employed. Territory v. Ketchum, 10 N. M. 718, 65 Pac. 169, 55 L. R. A. 90.

Electrocution.— A statute providing that the punishment of death shall be inflicted by causing to pass through the body of the convict a current of electricity of sufficient intensity to cause death does not conflict with the constitutional provision that no cruel or unusual punishment shall be inflicted. Storti v. Com., 178 Mass. 549, 60 N. E. 210, 52 L. R. A. 520; People v. Durston, 119 N. Y. 569, 24 N. E. 6, 7 N. Y. Cr. 457, 16 Am. St. Rep. 859, 7 L. R. A. 715 [affirmed in 136 U. Not excessive.— Connecticut.— One hundred dollars for permitting any substance injurious to fish to flow in any waters of a state, to be recovered for every day that the act is violated. Blydenburgh v. Miles, 39 Conn. 484.

Georgia.— Double the amount of the mortgage, where the mortgagor sells or disposes of the mortgaged property with intent to defraud the mortgagee. Conley v. State, 85 Ga. 348, 11 S. E. 659. See also Hathcock v. State, 88 Ga. 91, 13 S. E. 959.

Illinois.— Two hundred dollars and four months in the county jail, imposed on a receiver who permitted property to be carried away for the purpose of defrauding the estate in his hands, and its creditors. Oster v. People, 94 Ill. App. 288.

Indiana.—Fifteen dollars for each day that the officer of a certain class of corporations fails to make out a financial statement of their condition. State v. Cox, 88 Ind. 254.

Iowa.—Fines of twenty-five, fifty, and one hundred dollars for first, second, and third violations of the liquor law. Martin v. Blattner, 68 Iowa 286, 25 N. W. 131, 27 N. W. 244.

Kentucky.— Five hundred dollars imposed on a railroad company for failing to give certain signals at a highway crossing. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Com., 104 Ky. 35, 46 S. W. 207, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 371. Fifteen hundred dollars for an outrageous battery on a defenseless woman. Chandler v. Com., 1 Bush 41.

Maine.— Five hundred dollars for each lob-and a fine which in one case would constitute a slight punishment because easily paid might in another be excessive because its payment would be ruin to the convict.

b. Imprisonment in Default of Payment. The imposition of a term of imprisonment upon failure to pay a fine is not a cruel and unusual punishment, although by reason of the amount of numerous fines in the aggregate the imprisonment will require several years of work.[8]

c. Maximum Not Fixed by Statute. The failure of a statute to fix a maximum fine does not render it unconstitutional under a provision forbidding excessive fines.[9] The rule was the same in England, although the English bill of rights forbids exces-

ster caught which is less than a certain length, although the fine imposed is greatly in excess of the value of the property. State v. Lubee, 93 Me. 418, 45 Atl. 520. See also State v. Craig, 80 Me. 85, 13 Atl. 129.

Massachusetts.—Ten dollars with costs and imprisonment not to exceed thirty days, for an unlawful sale of liquor. Com. v. Hitchings, 5 Gray 482.

Michigan.— Two hundred dollars and costs, with a maximum imprisonment of six months for the first offense, and five hundred dollars with imprisonment in the state prison for two years for every subsequent offense, in selling liquors unlawfully. People v. Whitney, 105 Mich. 622, 63 N. W. 765. Five hundred dollars and imprisonment for one year for a druggist selling liquor as a beverage. Luton v. Newaygo Cir. Judge, 69 Mich. 610, 37 N. Recovery of penalty in civil action.— A statute which provides that a husband who has fraudulently married a seduced female with intent to avoid civil or criminal liability shall be liable to an action which may be brought by the wife on abandonment or non-support within two years is not open to the objection that it is a cruel and unusual punishment, because it does not limit the maximum which may be recovered. sive fines, and the amount of each fine varied according to the character of the crime, the quality and financial condition of the parties, and many other circumstances.[10]

F. Term and Place of Punishment — 1. Computation of Time — a. When Term Begins — (I) In General. The general rule is that the term of imprisonment for which the convict is sentenced begins with the first day of actual incarceration in the prison to which his sentence has consigned him.[11] The time therefore which a defendant has spent in jail awaiting trial[12] or the time which he spends after conviction and before sentence awaiting a decision on his plea in bar to another indictment,[13] forms no part of the term for which he is sentenced.

(II) Terms Under Cumulative Punishments. Where the accused is sentenced to imprisonment for successive terms, and the first sentence is reversed or is shortened by a pardon, the second term begins to run from the time of the reversal of the first or from the pardon of the convict.[14]

b. Time Served Pending Review. The accused is not of right entitled to be credited on his term of imprisonment with the time during which he was on bail pending an appeal[15] or which he has spent in the penitentiary pending the appeal.[16]

10. 4 Bl. Comm. 379. The English statutes seldom fixed the exact amount of the fine, but left it to the will of the king, which meant the discretion of the judges, guided by constitutional requirements. 1 Chitty Cr. L. 809.

The time spent in jail after sentence and prior to confinement in the prison to which the accused is sentenced cannot therefore be counted as a part of his term of imprisonment. People v. McEwen, 62 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 226. It has also been held, however (Scottsboro v. Johnston, 120 Ala. 397, 25 So. 809; Miller v. State, 15 Fla. 575; Ex p. Meyers, 44 Mo. 279), and in some states is expressly provided by statute (In re Fuller, 34 Nebr. 581, 52 N. W. 577; Sartain v. State, 10 Tex. App. 651, 38 Am. Rep. 649) that the term of imprisonment shall date from the time of the sentence.

A marshal cannot delay the operation of a sentence by failing to deliver the prisoner at the prison to which he is sentenced, and it will also be presumed that the prisoner would have earned the deduction of time allowed for good behavior. In re Jennings, 118 Fed. 479.

Where defendant is sentenced to a county penitentiary, the time after sentence spent in another county jail must be credited as a part of the term (People v. Lincoln, 25 Hun (N. Y.) 306, 62 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 412), but the time spent in a county jail cannot be credited on a sentence to imprisonment in a state prison (People v. State Prison, 66 N. Y. 342).

The term of his imprisonment begins when the judgment is affirmed,[17] when the remittitur is filed in the lower court,[18] or if the appeal is dismissed when the mandate is filed in the appellate court.[19]

c. Time Covered by Conditional Pardon or Parol. A convict is not entitled to be credited on the term for which he is sentenced with the time during which he has been at large because of a void reprieve, particularly where his sentence expressly requires the punishment to begin at his reception in custody.[20]

d. Time During Which Convict Is at Liberty. A prisoner who escapes after conviction but before his term is served may on his recapture be compelled to serve out his term of imprisonment without regard to the time he has been at large.[21] He cannot be credited with the time during which he has been at liberty on the term of imprisonment for which he was sentenced.[22]

e. Term Not to Expire During Winter. In some states it is enacted by statute that a term of imprisonment shall be so limited that it shall not expire during the winter months.[23]

2. When Terms Are Concurrent. In the absence of a statute, if it be not stated in either of two or more sentences imposed at the same time, that the imprisonment under any one of them shall take effect at the expiration of the others, the periods of time named will run concurrently and the punishments be executed simultaneously.[24] The fact that the terms of imprisonment are to be successive must be clearly and expressly stated.[25]

3. DISCHARGE UNDER EXCESSIVE SENTENCE. As a general rule a prisoner erroneously sentenced in excess of the power of the court to impose punishment is not entitled to an absolute discharge, unless he has already served the maximum term for which he could legally be imprisoned.[26]

4. DELAY IN PRONOUNCING OR ENFORCING SENTENCE. If the court improperly delays sentencing the accused without his fault, and he in the meantime remains in imprisonment, he is entitled to his discharge where his imprisonment is equivalent to the term he would have received if he had been promptly sentenced.[27] An unreasonable delay after sentence on the part of the officer having a convict in custody in delivering him at the prison to which he is sentenced entitles the prisoner to be discharged from the custody of such officer and into that provided by the sentence, but not to an absolute discharge,[28] unless the authorities have failed to provide a place of imprisonment in accordance with the terms of the sentence.[29]

5. PLACE OF IMPRISONMENT — a. In General. In England at common law the court of king's bench may commit the convict to any legal jail within the kingdom.[30] In the United States the places to which convicts may be committed to serve out their terms depend largely upon the local statutes.[31] In the absence of a statutory provision designating a particular place where the accused shall be imprisoned a federal district court may designate any place, either jail or penitentiary, within its jurisdiction.[32] Under the statute[33] which provides that under certain circumstances a federal court may sentence to imprisonment in a state penitentiary, it is no objection to the validity of the sentence that the state has not formally authorized the use of its penitentiary for such purpose, if it suffers the convict to be detained by its officers in the state jurisdiction.[34] In the different states the place of imprisonment is generally regulated by statutes.[35] A statute which provides one place of imprisonment for a certain class of crimes does not prevent the legislature from providing another place for the same class of convicts.[36]

b. Reformatory. In some of the states the word "penitentiary" is used interchangeably for state prison;[37] but a state reformatory differs radically from a penitentiary in that its purpose, although involving confinement as a punishment, is the reformation of those who by reason of their immature age may presumably be reformed.[38]

c. On Change of Venue. Where the venue of the trial has been changed, and the accused is convicted, the court in which he is tried may, in the absence of an express statute, sentence him to imprisonment in either the jail of the county in which the crime was committed or in that of the county where he was tried.[39]

d. Outside of County or State. A sentence to a state prison located in another state, when authorized by statute and by a contract[40] between the states concerned, does not deprive the convict of the equal protection of the laws of the state, nor place him beyond the reach of its pardoning power.[41]

One who has served a term in a state reformatory may be resentenced to it on a subsequent conviction, where he is still under age, and not to a penitentiary, although the statute provides that no one shall be sent to a reformatory who has been sentenced to a penitentiary in any state or country. Henderson v. People, 165 Ill. 607, 46 N. E. 711.

A statute authorizing the transfer of incorrigible inmates of a reformatory to a penitentiary, by a resolution of its board of managers, is unconstitutional, in that it attempts to confer judicial power upon the managers and also deprives the convict of his liberty without due process of law, the imprisonment in the penitentiary involving consequences which do not attach by reason of his sentence to the reformatory. In re Dumford, 7 Kan. App. 89, 53 Pac. 92.

United States" within a statute which provides that persons convicted by any "court of the United States" may, where there is no court in the territory, be confined in some convenient state or territory to be designated by the secretary of the interior.[42]

f. Change in Place of Imprisonment. Where, after defendant's imprisonment has begun, the location of the state prison is changed, he may be transferred to a newly located state prison by an order of the court.[43] Again a statute which requires any court on habeas corpus for the release of a prisoner confined under a sentence erroneous as to time and place to sentence him to the proper place of imprisonment or for the correct time confers power to correct a sentence passed previous to its enactment.[44]

3. PLACE OF EXECUTION. The place of execution must be the county in which

If the accused is entitled to a certain number of days in which to appeal from an order fixing the day of execution, it is error to fix the date for execution within that period (People v. Durrant, 119 Cal. 54, 50 Pac. 1070) or to fix the execution within the time allowed for preparing and settling a bill of exceptions in preparation for an application

the accused is tried, and the rule is not changed by the fact that there has been a change of venue from the county where the crime was committed,[49] or that the accused has been confined for safe-keeping in a different county.[50]

4. Mode of Execution. The usual mode of inflicting capital punishment at common law was by hanging.[51] In the case of treason and certain other very atrocious crimes other means of execution, such as beheading, burning, drawing and quartering, were at one time in use.[52] In the United States the mode of execution is generally regulated by statute.[53]

5. Custody Pending Execution. The prisoner awaiting execution is in the custody of the sheriff who is to execute the sentence.[54]

H. Restitution. At common law there could be no restitution of stolen property on an indictment, the only remedy being an appeal of larceny or robbery.[55] By an early statute, however, a writ of restitution was provided for, to be awarded by the justices on a conviction of robbery or larceny.[56] This writ was to be awarded as soon as the conviction was had,[57] but as a matter of practice was rarely if ever employed, the custom being for the judge summarily to order the goods to be brought into court and restored to the owner.[58] Aside from the goods belonging to the prosecutor in the larceny, the justice in England had no power, either at common law or by statute, to dispose of chattels in the possession of a convicted thief.[59] In some of the United States there are statutes providing that upon the conviction of the offender property which has been stolen[60] or fraudulently obtained[61] shall be restored to the owner.[62] In Rhode Island it is provided by

I. DEFINITION.

A crop is some product of the soil gathered during a single year.[1] Crops

1. Goodrich v. Stevens, 5 Lans. (N. Y.) 230, 231. Another definition is: "Every thing produced from the earth by annual planting, which are obtained by the labor and cultivation of man are termed fructus industriales.[2] Those which are produced by the powers of nature alone are denominated fructus naturales.[3]

II. OWNERSHIP.[4]

A. In General. The ownership of realty carries with it as an incident thereto the prima facie presumption of the ownership of both the natural products of the land, such as grass and trees, and the emblements, or annually sown crops.[5] The owner of land, however, may, in parting with the use of it to another, make such conditions and reservations in relation to the land itself or the products growing from it as he chooses instead of parting with the full right.[6] cultivation and labor." Craddock v. Riddlesbarger, 2 Dana (Ky.) 205, 206.

Synonymous with "emblements."— See Sparrow v. Pond, 49 Minn. 412, 52 N. W. 36, 32 Am. St. Rep. 571, 16 L. R. A. 103.

A crop is a "growing crop" from the time the seed is deposited in the ground, for at that time the seed loses the qualities of a chattel and becomes a part of the freehold and passes with a sale of it. Wilkinson v. Ketler, 69 Ala. 435.

An outstanding crop is a crop in the field not gathered or housed, without regard to its state. It is an outstanding crop from the day it commences to grow until it is finally gathered from the ground on which it is planted and taken away. Sullins v. State, 53 Ala. 474.

2. Smock v. Smock, 37 Mo. App. 56. See also Hamilton v. State, 94 Ga. 770, 21 S. E. 995.

Other definitions are: "The products of annual planting." Reed v. Johnson, 14 Ill. 257, 259.

"Those products of the earth which are annual, and are raised by yearly manurance and labor, and essentially owe their annual existence to the cultivation by man." Sparrow v. Pond, 49 Minn. 412, 417, 52 N. W. 36, 32 Am. St. Rep. 571, 16 L. R. A. 103.

B. Crops Raised by Fraudulent Grantee. A fraudulent grantee of a farm has, as against the creditors of his grantor, title to the crops that he raises on the farm while the conveyance is unimpeached, unless it be shown that he manages the farm and raises the crops for the benefit of the grantor.[7]

C. Crops Raised by Trespasser. Where a mere intruder upon land plants crops thereon, such crops, so long as they remain unsevered, are the property of the owner of the land.[8] But one who sows, cultivates, and harvests a crop upon the land of another is entitled to the crop as against the owner of the land, whether he came to the possession of the land lawfully or not, provided he remains in possession till the crop is harvested.[9]

D. Crops Raised Under Parol License. One who enters upon the lands of another and puts in crops under a parol license and a parol agreement that he shall have the crops raised by him is entitled to the crops.[10]

E. Sale or Conveyance of Land — 1. In General. According to the great weight of authority crops so far partake of the nature of realty that in the absence of reservation or exception they pass by a sale or conveyance of the land

however, been held that annual crops do not necessarily pass with the title of the land, and that, although the presumption is that while growing they pass, such presumption may be rebutted,[14] even by parol evidence.[15]

2. Reservation of Crops. In a conveyance of land in fee or for years, growing crops may be considered by the parties as personal property and so separated in contemplation of law by an agreement reserving them as not to pass by the deed or lease.[16]

III. CROPPERS.

A. Definition. A cropper is one who having no interest in the land works it in consideration of receiving a portion of the crop for his labor.[17]

B. Existence of Relation. The intention of the parties as expressed in the language they have used, interpreted in the light of the surrounding circumstances, controls in determining whether or not a given contract constitutes the cultivator a cropper.[18] If the language used imports a present demise of any character by which any interest in the land passes to the occupier, or by which he obtains the right of exclusive possession, the contract becomes one of lease, and Presumption very slight.—In Flynt v. Conrade, 61 N. C. 190, 93 Am. Dec. 588, it was held that a growing crop differs only from a personal chattel in the circumstance of not being severed from the land, and that the presumption that it passes with the land is very slight.

"One who raises a crop upon land of another under a contract to raise the crop for a particular part of it." Burgie v. Davis, 34 Ark. 179.

A cropper's contract is "one in which one agrees to work the land of another for a share of the crop, without obtaining any interest in the land or ownership in the crop before division." Gray v. Robinson, (Ariz. 1893) 33 Pac. 712, 713.

"The difference between a tenant and a cropper is clear. A tenant has an estate in the land for the term, and consequently he has a right of property in the crops. If he pays a share of the crop for rent, it is he that divides off to the landlord his share, and until such division the right of property and the possession in the whole, is his. . . A cropper has no estate in the land; that remains in the landlord. Consequently although he has, in some sense, the possession of the crop, it is only the possession of a servant, and is in law that of the landlord. The landlord must divide off to the cropper his share." Harrison v. Ricks, 71 N. C. 7, 10. And see Appling v. Odom, 46 Ga. 583, 584, where it is said: "There is an obvious distinction between a cropper and a tenant. One has a possession of the premises, exclusive of the landlord; the other has not. The one has a right for a fixed time; the other has only a right to go on the land to plant, work and gather the crop. The possession of the land is with the owner as against the cropper. This is not so of the tenant." See also Denton v. Strickland, 48 N. C. 61; Brazier v. Ansley, 33 N. C. 12, 51 Am. Dec. 408; McNeely v. Hart, 32 N. C. 63, 51 Am. Dec. 377.

the relation of landlord and tenant is created.[19] If on the other hand there be no language in the contract importing a conveyance of any interest in the land, but by the express terms of the contract the general possession of the land is reserved by the owner, the occupant becomes a mere cropper.[20]

C. Rights and Liabilities — 1. In General. A cropper's contract gives the cropper no legal possession of the premises further than as an employee; the legal possession is in the employer,[21] who alone can maintain trespass.[22] Before the division of the crop the whole is the property of the landlord and the cropper has no legal title to any part thereof[23] which can be subjected to the payment of his debts[24] or which he can assign or convey to a third person.[25] When, however, their respective rights in the crop have been adjusted and the cropper's part specifically set aside to him the title thereto is in him,[26] and he may mortgage or dispose of the same as he will.[27]

Sufficient division of grain to render it subject to attachment.— Under a cropping contract by the terms of which the entire crop of grain raised was to belong to the owner of the land until division should be made, and one half of the crop was to be segregated on the ground to be given to the cropper at the conclusion of the threshing and sacking of the crop, where it appeared that all of the crop excepting one stack had been threshed and sacked, and one half thereof delivered by the cropper to the order of the owner of the land, and the remaining half remained in the field, such remaining half of the threshed and sacked crop is to be deemed the property of the cropper, and is subject to attachment by his creditor. 2. Abandonment of Contract by Cropper. If the cropper abandons the contract before completion, he cannot recover for a partial performance, and his interest becomes vested in the landlord, divested of any lien which may have attached to it for agricultural advances while it was the property of the cropper.[28]

IV. Actions For Injuries to Crops.

A. Venue. An action to recover damages against one unlawfully entering upon land and destroying growing crops thereon may be brought in the county in which defendant resides or may be summoned.[29]

B. Parties.[30] The owner of the crop and not the owner of the land is entitled to recover for damages done to such crop.[31] All joint owners of a crop injured are proper parties to an action for damages for such injury.[32]

V. Offenses in Relation to Crops.

A. In General. The statutes of a number of states expressly prohibit, and provide for the punishment of, certain offenses against growing crops, as for instance the removal thereof without satisfying the claims of the lessor or giving notice of such removal;[33] and the severance from the soil and removal of the growing crops of another.[34]

B. Indictment or Information. State v. Walker, 87 N. C. 541. made use of to designate an ornamental badge of regal power worn on the head by sovereign princes.[18]

CROWN CASES. In English law, criminal prosecutions.[19]

CROWN DEBTOR. Any person having money belonging to the Crown.[20]

CROWN DEBTS. Debts which a prerogative entitles the crown to claim priority for before all other creditors.[21]

CROWNER. In old Scotch law, a coroner.[22] (See, generally, CORONERS.)

CROWN LANDS. The demesne lands of the crown, which it is now usual for the sovereign to surrender at the commencement of his reign for its whole duration, in consideration of the CIVIL LIST (q. v.) settled upon him.[23]

CROWN LAW. Criminal law in England is so termed, the crown being always the prosecutor in criminal proceedings.[24]

CROWN OFFICE. A department belonging to the court of queen's bench, commonly called the crown side of the court, which takes cognizance of all criminal causes, from high treason down to the most trivial misdemeanor or breach of the peace.[25]

CROWN OFFICE IN CHANCERY. One of the offices of the high court of chancery now transferred to the high court of justice.[26]

CROWN PAPER. A paper containing the list of criminal cases which await the hearing or decision of the court.[27]

CROWN SIDE. The criminal department of the court of queen's bench; the civil department or branch being called the "plea side."[28]

CROWN SOLICITOR. In England, the solicitor to the treasury acts, in state prosecutions, as solicitor for the crown in preparing the prosecution. In Ireland there are officers called "crown solicitors" attached to each circuit, whose duty it is to get up every case for the crown in criminal prosecutions.[29] (See PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS.)

CROY. Marsh land.[30]

CRUCE SIGNATI. In old English law, signed or marked with the cross.[31]

CRUCIATUS LEGIBUS INVISI. A maxim meaning "Physical tortures are refused or denied in the laws."[32]

31. Pilgrims to the holy land (or crusaders); so called because they wore the sign of the cross upon their garments. Burrill L. Dict. [citing Bracton, fol. 20].

32. Adams Gloss. [citing 2 Best Ev. § 555; Lofft Max.].

33. Distinguished from "instrument" or "tool."—Under a statute providing that any person who shall make or mend or have in his possession any die, stamp, or other instrument or tool for the purpose of forging or counterfeiting shall be punished, etc., the court said: "A crucible is in common use with citizens, as well as artists, and is an article on open sale, and is bought and used by gold and silver smiths, who make beads and spoons, unlike the stamp and other appropriate tools for counterfeiting; which are wholly or mainly for that purpose, and which therefore cannot be readily obtained, and for honest purposes are not wanted, and, when possessed, afford greater evidence of a bad intent. We think, therefore, that if 'instrument' and 'tool' may be considered as generic terms, 'crucible' is not one of their family; that in a statute highly penal, to call it a 'tool' or 'instrument' for counterfeiting would be a construction too latitudinarian." State v. Bowman, 6 Vt. 594, 597.

34. Johnson Folio Dict. [quoted in State v. Bowman, 6 Vt. 594, 596] where it is said: "So called because they were formerly marked with a cross."

35. Johnson Small Dict. [quoted in State v. Bowman, 6 Vt. 594, 596].

CRUCIS JUDICIUM. In old European law, the trial or judgment of the cross; one of the modes of trial by which crimes were formerly attempted to be discovered or purged.[36]

CRUDE. In its natural state; not cooked or prepared by fire or heat; undressed; not altered, refined or prepared for use by any artificial process; raw.[37]

CRUDE TARTAR. Argols.[38] (See CREAM OF TARTAR.)

CRUEL. Disposed to give pain to others in body or mind; willing or pleased to torment, vex, or afflict; inhuman, destitute of pity, compassion, or kindness; fierce; ferocious; savage; barbarous; hardhearted; applied to persons, or their dispositions, exerted in tormenting, vexing, or afflicting.[39]

CRUEL AND UNUSUAL PUNISHMENT. See CRIMINAL LAW.

CRUEL TREATMENT. Any act intended to torment, vex, or afflict, or which actually afflicts or torments without necessity; or any act of inhumanity, wrong, oppression, or injustice.[40] (Cruel Treatment: As Ground For Divorce, see DIVORCE.)

CRUELTY. Every willful act, omission or neglect, whereby unjustifiable physical pain, suffering, or death is caused or permitted;[41] the infliction of great pain or misery without necessity;[42] either actual violence endangering life or limb or health, or conduct creating a reasonable apprehension of such violence.[43] (Cruelty: As Ground of Divorce, see DIVORCE. Death Caused by, see HOMICIDE. To Animal, see ANIMALS. To Apprentice, see APPRENTICES. To Child, see INFANTS; PARENT AND CHILD. To Convict, see CONVICTS.)

CRUISE. A voyage for a given purpose; a cruising voyage, or voyage to make captures jure belli.[44] (See CREW; and, generally, SEAMEN; SHIPPING.)

CRUIVE. A box or enclosure, made with spars, like a hen-crib, generally placed in a dam or dike that runs across a river, for the purpose of confining the fish that enter into it.[45] (See, generally, FISH AND GAME.)

37. Webster Dict. [quoted in Recknagel v. Murphy, 102 U. S. 197, 200, 26 L. ed. 130].

As applied to saw logs, the word means their natural state or condition, after being severed from the remainder of the trunk and other portions of the tree. It means that they have not been polished or dressed, altered, refined, or prepared for use by artificial process. Bucki v. McKinnon, 37 Fla. 391, 395, 20 So. 540, where the court said: "We think it a matter of which we might take judicial knowledge, that all saw logs are round and crude."

38. Recknagel v. Murphy, 102 U. S. 197, 200, 26 L. ed. 130, where the court said: "Argols and crude tartar are synonyms. The phrases are used convertibly by those who deal in the article."

40. Myrick v. Myrick, 67 Ga. 771, 778.

"Cruel treatment does not always consist of actual violence. There are words of false accusation, that inflict deeper anguish than physical injuries to the person — more enduring and lacerating to the wounded spirit of a gentle woman, than actual violence to the person, though severe." Farnham v. Farnham, 73 Ill. 497, 500.

When this is done issue is then said to be joined; for Mr. Justice Blackstone informs us that, 'immediately upon issue joined, it is inquired of the prisoner, by what trial he will make his innocence appear,' which the clerk does by the words 'How wilt thou be tried.'" See also infra, note 95.

86. Culpable neglect.—In Sykes v. Meacham, 103 Mass. 285, 287, it is said: "It is hardly necessary to consider the question whether the phrase 'culpable neglect,' as used in the statute, means anything more than 'gross neglect,' or failure to make 'reasonable inquiry.'"

As he has merely lost a right of action which he might voluntarily relinquish, and has wronged nobody but himself, 'culpable neglect' would seem to convey the idea of neglect for which he was 'to blame'; that is, the neglect which exists where the loss can fairly be ascribed to his own carelessness, improvidence or folly."

95. Abbott L. Dict.

Blackstone believes it an abbreviation of the old forms of arraignment, whereby, on the prisoner's pleading not guilty, the clerk would respond, "culpabilis, prit," i. e., he is guilty and the crown is ready. It was (he says) the viva voce replication, by the clerk, on behalf of the crown, to the prisoner's plea of non culpabilis; prit being a technical word, anciently in use in the formula of joining issue. Black L. Dict. [citing 4 Bl. Comm. 339]. But a more plausible explanation is that given by Donaldson, as follows: The clerk asks the prisoner, "Are you guilty, or not guilty?" Prisoner, "Not guilty." Clerk, "Qu'il paroit, [may it prove so.] How will you be tried?" Prisoner, "By God and my country." These words being hurried over, came to sound, "Culprit, how will you be tried?" The ordinary derivation is from culpa. Wharton L. Lex.

Applied under timber-culture act.— Where a statute in relation to timber-culture required a claimant during the second year to cultivate, to crop, or otherwise the five acres broken the first year, the court said: "'To 'cultivate to crop or otherwise' is not 'to plant in timber, seeds, or cuttings,' but to sow or plant in wheat, corn, clover, potatoes, or other annual crop which may be cultivated and harvested or gathered during the year. The word 'otherwise,' so far as it has any signification, must be construed in connection with the preceding words, 'to cultivate,' so as to limit its application to some act or process which involves, primarily, the improvement or amelioration of the soil." That is not what the law contemplates when it says cultivation." And see American Emigrant Co. v. Rogers Locomotive Mach. Works, 83 Iowa 612, 615, 50 N. Land which can be cultivated, . . . is arable land,— that which is adapted to the raising of crops which require annual planting and tillage, as corn, wheat, oats, rye and barley in this country, and which is susceptible of such cultivation in all ordinary seasons."

The courts have sometimes used expressions seeming to warrant the inference that proof which goes to establish the same issue that the evidence on the first trial was introduced to establish, is cumulative. If the evidence newly discovered, as well as that introduced on the trial, had a direct bearing on the issue, it may be cumulative; but we are not to look at the effect to be produced as furnishing a criterion by which all doubts in relation to this kind of evidence are to be settled; the kind and character of the facts make the distinction. The cupola furnace has an iron notch but no cinder notch, because there is generally so little cinder or slag in pig-iron, as to render such an opening unnecessary."

CUR. AD. VULT. The common abbreviation for CURIA ADVISARI VULT,[43] q. v.

CURATE. In ecclesiastical law, properly, an incumbent who has the cure of souls, but now generally restricted to signify the spiritual assistant of a rector or vicar in his cure; an officiating temporary minister in the English church, who represents the proper incumbent; being regularly employed either to serve in his absence or as his assistant, as the case may be.[44]

CURATIVE. Having the power or tendency to cure.[45] (Curative: Act,[46] see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW;[47] STATUTES.)

CURATOR. A person who has been legally appointed to take care of the interests of one who, on account of his youth, or defect of his understanding, or for some other cause, is unable to attend to them himself;[48] a term applied to the guardian of the estate of the ward as distinguished from the guardian of his person.[49] In Louisiana, a person appointed to take care of the estate of an absentee.[50] In Scotch law, it is used in the general sense of guardian.[51] (Curator: Of Estate of — Decedent, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS; Imbecile, see INSANE PERSONS; Minor, see GUARDIAN AND WARD; Spendthrift, see SPENDTHRIFTS. To Administer Estate of Absentee, see ABSENTEES.)

CURATOR AD HOC. In the civil law, a guardian for this purpose; a special guardian.[52] (See ABSENTEES; CURATOR; and, generally, GUARDIAN AND WARD.)

CURATOR AD LITEM. Literally, guardian for the suit. In English law, the corresponding phrase is "guardian ad litem."[53] (See CURATOR; and, generally, GUARDIAN AND WARD; INFANTS.)

CURATOR BONIS. In the civil law, a guardian or trustee appointed to take care of property in certain cases; as for the benefit of creditors.[54] In Scotch Distinguished from "guardian."—In Larned v. Renshaw, 37 Mo. 458, 460, the court said: "The distinction here taken between guardian and curator, we think, is more artificial than real, when applied to the question involved in this case. Undoubtedly there is a line of demarcation existing between them, and they perform separate functions; they may respectively be committed to different persons, though both are frequently joined in the same individual." And see Easley v. Bone, 39 Mo. App. 388, 391, where it is said: "We attach no importance to the fact that the order of appointment designates the appointee as 'curator' instead of 'guardian,'—the meaning of the two words, when applied to the care of an estate merely, being the same."

"At common law, the king was considered to have the care of all persons unable to care for themselves. This care was exercised by the Court of Chancery through a guardian appointed by it, whose functions were those of the tutor or curator of the civil law, the former of whom had charge of the maintenance and education of the infant, and the latter the care of his estate." Sproule v. Davies, 69 N. Y. App. Div. 502, 503, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 229. And see 1 Bl. Comm. 460, where it is said: "The guardian with us performs the office both of the tutor (a teacher) and curator (a guardian) of the Roman laws; the former of which had the charge of the maintenance and education of the minor, the latter the care of his fortune; or, according to the language of the court of chancery, the tutor was the committee of the person, the curator the committee of the estate. But this office was frequently united in the civil law; as it is always in our law with regard to minors, though as to lunatics and idiots it is commonly kept distinct."

49. Duncan v. Crook, 49 Mo. 116, 117.

"The authority of a guardian bears a near resemblance to that of a father, and is plainly derived out of it; the guardian being only a temporary parent. He usually performs the office of both tutor and curator of the Roman law; the former of which had charge of the maintenance and education of the minor, and the latter the care of his fortune." I. DEFINITION AND NATURE.

Curtesy is the estate[1] to which by common law a man is entitled on the death of his wife, in the lands or tenements of which she was seized in possession in fee

1. It is a freehold estate in the husband for his natural life cast upon him by operation of law immediately upon the happening of the necessary incidents.

simple or in tail during their coverture, provided they had lawful issue born alive which might have been capable of inheriting the estate.[2]

II. ORIGIN AND TERMINOLOGY.

Both the origin[3] of the estate and the meaning of the term "curtesy" as used to designate the estate are somewhat in doubt.[4] Whatever may have been the origin of the estate or reasons for its introduction into English law, it appears evident that an estate alike in nearly every particular was known to the civil law in the time of Constantine,[5] also to the Normans before they conquered England,[6] and that the estate was not known in England before the conquest.[7] Curtesy was introduced into the United States with and as a part of the common law,[8] but in many states it has been abolished[9] or somewhat modified by statute.[10]

III. CURTESY INITIATE.

A. In General. Immediately upon the birth of lawful issue of the marriage, born alive and capable of inheriting the wife's estates, the husband acquires, unless otherwise provided by statute,[11] a permanent interest in all the estates of inheritance of the wife of which she has been or may become seized during coverture.[12]

B. Vested Estate. Curtesy initiate becomes a vested interest as soon as it attaches to the wife's estates,[13] and cannot be modified or abolished by the legislature of a state;[14] but until it attaches it is a mere right and may be modified or

Legislature may exempt curtesy initiate from liability for debts of husband created after passage of act. Hitz v. National Met-destroyed.[15] When vested, curtesy initiate is an estate in the husband for his natural life, separate and distinct from the estate of the wife.[16]

C. Right to as Affected by Married Women's Acts. Curtesy initiate has been much affected by statutory enactments giving to married women greater rights to and control over their property. It has been generally held that the effect of these acts is to abolish curtesy initiate in all property of the wife acquired after their enactment.[17] Curtesy initiate which has become vested cannot be divested by these acts for constitutional reasons.[18]

IV. REQUISITES.

A. In General. At the common law of England and in the United States in the jurisdictions in which the estate by the curtesy is recognized as a common-law estate, except as otherwise provided by statute,[19] and generally in those states in which curtesy is expressly given by statute it is requisite to entitle the husband to curtesy consummate that there be a legal marriage, sufficient seizin of the wife of an estate of inheritance during coverture, birth of issue, born alive capable of inheriting the estate, and death of the wife before that of the husband.[20]

C. Seizin — 1. Of Wife's Legal Estate — a. Necessity of Actual Seizin — (I) The General Rule. It was necessary by the strict rule of the common law that the wife or the husband for the wife be seized in fact during coverture of her legal estates of inheritance,[22] and except where the rule has been abrogated by statute[23] or where it is impossible to acquire actual seizin.[24] The rule, with some limitations to be hereafter adverted to,[25] still obtains in many jurisdictions that the wife or the husband for the wife must have seizin or that which is deemed actual seizin during coverture of her estates upon which entry may be made.[26]

No seizin during coverture.— A woman of full age before marriage by verbal contract sold land and received the purchase-money. The purchaser was put in possession, but no deed made until after she was married and had issue born alive, when a deed in which her husband joined was given the purchaser. It was held that the husband was not tenant by the curtesy. Welch v. Chandler, 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 420.

Seizin as trustee.— The naked seizin of the wife of an estate held as trustee will not suffice to make the husband tenant by the curtesy, although she has the beneficial interest in the reversion. Chew v. Southwark, 5 Rawle (Pa.) 160.

Seizin by decree of court.— A decree of the court settling the right of a husband and his wife in the lands of his wife is equivalent to an actual possession by the husband and is sufficient seizin to entitle the husband to the preceding section the formal strictness of this rule has been somewhat relaxed in England and in many of the United States.[27]

(B) Where There Is No Adverse Possession. Thus in most jurisdictions now it is only necessary that the wife be seized in law during coverture of her legal estates of inheritance not adversely held.[28]

(C) Where Lands Are Wild and Uncultivated. So it is not necessary for the wife to be actually seized of her wild and uncultivated lands not adversely held except in one jurisdiction.[29] Seizin in law or constructive seizin without entry is sufficient.[30]

(D) Other Limitations of Rule. In some states it is sufficient seizin if the wife have a right of entry,[31] and in one state it is held that the rule requiring actual seizin applies only to cases where her title is not complete before entry, as where she takes by descent or devise and not where her title is acquired by virtue of a conveyance which under the statute of uses passes the legal title and seizin without necessity of entry.[32]

b. What Is a Sufficient Actual Seizin — (I) In General. It is generally held sufficient seizin in fact of the wife of her legal estates of inheritance if the seizin is cast upon the wife by law,[33] or if one is in possession whose possession in law is deemed the possession of the wife, she having the legal title,[34] or when the wife

3. Exclusion of Husband by Instrument of Conveyance. The husband will be barred of his right to curtesy in the statutory separate estate of his wife created by an instrument which in express terms excludes him from curtesy, or in which the intention to exclude is so clear as to leave no room for doubt.[51] But he will not be excluded by words of restraint, limitation, proviso, or condition.[52]

B. Wife's Equitable Estate — 1. In General. The husband is tenant by the curtesy of the wife's equitable estates of inheritance as well as of her legal, if the requisites exist which would entitle him to curtesy in the latter, and in some states statutes have been enacted declaratory of this rule.[53] But under a statute providing that the husband shall hold "curtesy in estates of inheritance," it has been held that a surviving husband is not entitled to curtesy in estates of which his wife had a mere equitable estate.[54]

2. Wife's Separate Equitable Estate — a. The General Rule. The general rule applies to the wife's equitable separate estates of inheritance, the rent and profits of which are paid to the wife for her sole and separate use not subject to any control or rights of the husband;[55] but it has been held that a husband is Particular estate released.—Where the tenant of a particular estate surrenders to the owner of a vested remainder in tail who is a married woman, the latter thereby gains such an estate as will entitle her husband to curtesy even against the next remainder-man. Pierce v. Hakes, 23 Pa. St. 231.

The husband is tenant by the curtesy of a reversion of which his wife was seized in law during coverture, although held under a life-estate by the wife's mother. McKee v. Cottle, 6 Mo. App. 416.

Under a statute abolishing curtesy and substituting dower the husband of a wife who died vested of a remainder of which the particular tenant was then seized cannot claim his customary estate therein on the death of the particular tenant. Moore v. Iles, 16 Ohio Cir. Ct. 591.

Use for life.— A testator provided by his will that his widow should live on the homestead farm during her life and have certain rights and privileges. He afterward gave to to the dower of her mother, the husband will not have curtesy in such estate if the mother is living at the death of his wife.[61]

E. Determinable Fees — 1. By Limitation. If the wife's estate of inheritance be upon a limitation by the happening of which the estate of the wife is terminable at common law, the husband will not be tenant by the curtesy in such estate if terminated during the life of the wife.[62]

2. By Springing Use or Executory Devise. If the wife's estate of inheritance is limited over by way of a springing use or executory devise by which her original estate is determined before its natural expiration and a new estate substituted in its place, the seizin and estate which the wife had are sufficient to entitle her husband to curtesy.[63]

3. By Failure of Issue. When the wife's estate is subject to be defeated only in the event of her death leaving no issue, the husband is entitled to curtesy in the estate if issue has been born capable of inheriting the estate.[64]

F. Estate Held by Third Person. Where by will a naked power of sale is given to the executor, the husband of the testator's daughter dying after the testator and before a sale by the executors is entitled to curtesy.[65] Curtesy attaches to the estate of the wife held by her guardian or when conveyed to one each of his two daughters one half of his real estate for the use and benefit of their heirs. It was held that the husband of one of the daughters who died during the lifetime of her mother was entitled to curtesy in one half of the homestead farm. Buchanan v. Duncan, 40 Pa. St. 82.

Where a testator devises land to his daughter in fee tail, directing that in case she shall die without issue his executors shall sell the land and divide the proceeds among other legatees named in the will, and the daughter dies leaving a husband, he is entitled to curtesy, issue having been born. Hay v. Mayer, 8 Watts (Pa.) 203, 34 Am. Dec. 453.

65. Romaine v. Hendrickson, 24 N. J. Eq. 231; Dunscomb v. Dunscomb, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 508, 7 Am. Dec. 504; Rankin's Appeal, (Pa. 1888) 16 Atl. 82. Where a testator directed that his estate remain in the control of his executors for the use of his wife and children, and after the youngest grandchild should arrive at the age of twenty-one years that it be divided, it was held that a daughter of testator who was of age when he died, and who died before the youngest as her guardian.[66] So it is held in some jurisdictions that curtesy attaches to the separate estate of the wife conveyed to a trustee by her husband for her sole and separate use, and to estates conveyed to her by the husband without the intervention of a trustee.[67] In others it is held that the husband has not curtesy in such estates of the wife.[68]

G. Estate of Wife Leaving Issue by Former Marriage. Where the deceased wife leaves issue by a former marriage, but no issue of the present marriage, the surviving husband is not entitled to curtesy unless the estate came to the wife from him or one of his ancestors.[69] A surviving husband has curtesy in the interest of a child adopted by his deceased wife and her former husband.[70] Where a wife dies leaving children by a deceased husband and another husband and children by him surviving her, such surviving husband will take as tenant by the curtesy so much of the estate left by the wife as is inherited by their children.[71]

H. Estates Less Than Estates of Inheritance. A surviving second husband is entitled to curtesy in his deceased wife's dower which has been assigned or to which she was entitled as a consequence of her former marriage.[72] By statute the husband may be entitled to curtesy in the permanent leasehold estates of his deceased wife.[73] The husband is not entitled to curtesy in an estate held by the wife for her life.[74] A mere possessory right in lands is not an estate which will entitle the husband of the occupant to tenancy by the curtesy.[75]

VI. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF TENANT BY THE CURTESY.

A. Rights in General. The tenant by the curtesy is entitled to exercise the same rights in the reasonable enjoyment of his estate as may be exercised by any tenant for life.[76]

B. Right to Possession. A husband is entitled to the possession of the estates in which he has curtesy,[77] and may sue in his own name for the possession grandchild arrived at the age of twenty-one years, never had such an estate as to entitle her surviving husband to curtesy. Burke v. Valentine, 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 412. A testator devised the whole of his estate to his daughter and to "her heirs and assigns forever," but if she should die without issue his whole estate was to be sold by the executors. The daughter married, and had issue which died during her lifetime. It was held that her husband had curtesy. Buchannan v. Sheffer, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 374.

VII. RELEASE, BAR, OR FORFEITURE OF RIGHT TO CURTESY.

A. Devise by Wife. When a married woman, in the exercise of a power given her in the instrument creating her separate estates or acting under a power given by statute, executes a will with the husband's assent disposing of all her estates to which curtesy would attach, the husband is barred of his rights of curtesy.[95] In some jurisdictions the statutes affecting the property of married women have been construed to the effect that the wife cannot devise her realty so as to bar curtesy,[96] while in some others the assent of the husband is not required.[97] It is also held that the assent of the husband or failure to renounce a provision in the wife's will will not bar his right to curtesy,[98] but an agreement to accept the same in lieu thereof will.[99]

her property bar her husband's right of curtesy without his consent.[2] This is true even with respect to secret antenuptial conveyances by the wife, on the eve of her marriage, of property which her intended husband knew her to own.[3] In order that the husband's consent may be effective to bar the right of curtesy, it must be given in the manner and form required by statute.[4] He may, however, by his acts irrespective of want of consent estop himself from claiming curtesy.[5]

C. Release by Husband. The husband may release his curtesy or statutory dower right in his wife's property,[6] and it has been held that he is deemed to have done so where by an antenuptial contract and in contemplation of marriage he agrees to surrender his right in his wife's property,[7] or where he and his wife agree each to release to the other all interest in any real estate which the other possessed at the time of their marriage.[8] So it has been held that he estops himself from claiming dower rights in property of his wife by leasing the same from her heirs before assignment of his dower rights.[9]

B. Limitations.[32] Where a husband has made no relinquishment of his right to curtesy, he cannot be barred during his wife's lifetime by the statute of limitations;[33] but his failure to assert his right of curtesy for the statutory period of limitation after his wife's death will bar a recovery.[34] Where the ancestor of a married woman dies seized of land, and the husband is afterward evicted, the statute of limitations begins to run immediately against him, since he is tenant by the curtesy initiate by virtue of the wife's seizin by descent cast.[35]

C. Parties.[36] In actions respecting the wife's property the husband, if he has an estate by the curtesy initiate only, should be made a party plaintiff or defendant.[37] His curtesy will not be barred if he ought to be made a party defendant and is not.[38]

D. Evidence.[39] In an action to establish the right to curtesy the burden is on the husband to show that each and all the requisites necessary to give him curtesy have existed.[40] In an action by a husband to enforce his right to curtesy the general reputation in the family as to whether issue was born alive, admissions by the husband against his right, admissions by the wife tending to prove desertion not to be wilful and malicious, conduct of the wife at the time of the alleged desertion and the conduct of the husband about the time of the desertion are admissible.[41]

IX. STATUTORY ABOLITION OF CURTESY.

Curtesy has been abolished by statute in some states,[42] but the husband is given in many states in place of curtesy a dower right in his wife's real property,[43] which is of the same quality and character as the dower interest of a wife in the land of her husband.[44]

It is not strictly applicable to the common disposition of enclosures and buildings constituting the homestead of the inhabitants of this country, and particularly of farmers."

A word descriptive of buildings, etc.— "A curtilage seems to connect itself with buildings or messuages, and means the grounds which properly appertain to them, whether they be enclosed within one hundred feet square in a city, or whether they are enclosed within the court, grounds, or park attached to and appertaining to a country seat, whether the contents be two acres, ten acres, or one hundred acres." Formerly surrounded by a fence or stone wall.— "In England, the dwellings and outhouses of all kinds, are usually surounded by a fence or stone wall, enclosing a small piece of land embracing the yards and out-buildings near the house, constituting what is called the court. This wall is so constructed as to add greatly to the security of the property within it; but as such precautionary arrangements have not been considered necessary in this country, they have not been adopted." of a piece of land around a dwelling-house, usually including the buildings occupied in connection therewith.[15] In law, a fence or enclosure of a small piece of land around a dwelling-house, usually including the buildings occupied in connection with the use of the dwelling-house;[16] a piece of ground either inclosed or not, that is commonly used with the dwelling-house.[17] In its most comprehensive and proper legal signification it includes all that space of ground and buildings thereon, which is usually enclosed within the general fence, immediately surrounding a principal messuage, out-buildings and yard, closely adjoining to a dwelling-house, but it may be large enough for cattle to levant and couchant therein.[18] As used in the statute the term includes the yard or space of ground near to the dwelling-house, contained in the same inclosure, and used in connection with it by the household.[19] The word originally signified the land with the castles and out-houses, enclosed often with high stone walls, and where the old barons sometimes held their court in the open air.[20] (Curtilage: Building Subject to — Arson, see ARSON; Burglary, see BURGLARY. "Custody and tuition."— Where a statute provided that "upon the death of either father or mother, the surviving parent, . . . of a child likely to be born or of any living child under the age of twenty-one years and unmarried, may by deed or last will, duly executed, dispose of the custody and tuition of such child during its minority," etc., the court said: "The language 'custody and tuition,' used by the statute, includes guardianship of the estate as well as of the person, and the provisions referred to were unquestionably intended to embrace both." Custody of jury-wheel.— Where a statute provided that "the said jury-wheel, locked as now required by law, shall remain in the custody of the said jury commissioners, and the keys thereof in the custody of the sheriff of said county," the court said: "It is difficult to see what better disposition these commissioners could have made of the wheel than to deposit it in a vault attached to one of the public offices, where it was under the immediate charge of their own sworn officer. I. DEFINITIONS.

A. Custom. A custom is a law established by long usage and differs from prescription in the fact that prescription is the making of a right while custom is the making of a law.[1]

B. Usage. A usage in its most extensive meaning includes both custom and prescription; but in its narrower signification it refers to a general habit, mode, or course of procedure.[2]

C. General and Particular Customs. General customs are such as prevail throughout a country, and become the law of that country; particular customs are such as prevail in some county, city, town, parish, or place.[3]

II. NATURE, REQUISITES, AND VALIDITY.

A. General Customs as Part of Common Law — 1. In General. The general customs of England constitute a part of the common law.[4]

2. Customs of Merchants. While the early customs of the common law relate generally to land, the customs of merchants came later to be recognized by the English courts. By these are meant those rules relative to bills of exchange, partnership, and other commercial transactions which convenience had suggested and experience had adopted and made general. Those customs which were seen to be universally and notoriously prevalent among merchants and which had been found by experience to be of public benefit were soon adopted by the law merchant, and became a part of the general law of England.[5] So far as the usages of merchants have been judicially ascertained and established, so far as they have become the acknowledged law of the land, they have ceased to deserve the name of custom, just as much as any other common-law rule which had its foundation in the customs of the country. It is a part of that common law, and is therefore not within the scope of this article.[6]

B. Particular Customs of England. The particular customs of the English law are of little practical interest to the American lawyer. They are the remains of a multitude of local customs prevailing, some in one part, some in another, over the whole country, while it was divided into separate dominions.[7]

The custom of merchants, so far as the law regards it, is the custom of England; and therefore Lord Coke calls it, very properly, the law-merchant. We should not confound general customs with special local customs." Per Foster, J., in Edie v. East India Co., 2 Burr. 1216, 1 W. Bl. 295, 299.

Instances of these customs are the custom of gavelkind in Kent, by which amongst other things all the sons, and not the eldest only, succeeded to their father's inheritance; the custom of borough English, prevailing in other counties, by which the youngest son inherited the estate in preference to all his elder brothers; the customs of other boroughs, which entitled a widow to all her husband's lands for her dower, instead of the one third to which she was entitled by the general law; and the customs of manors. C. Classes of Customs and Usages. Laying aside the general common-law customs[8] and the general customs of merchants[9] already referred to, customs and usages may be divided into three classes, viz.: (1) Particular customs, or the usages of particular places; (2) usages of trade, or the customs of particular trades or occupations; and (3) customs of particular persons. Although the latter word has strictly a different signification, "usage" and "custom" have come to be used as synonymous and convertible terms, and will be so used in this article.[10]

D. Requisites — 1. Must Be Ancient — a. Common-Law Customs. A common-law custom must have existed so long that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary.[11] If a usage could be shown to have commenced it was void as a custom. Every custom of course must have had a commencement, but if its inception could be discovered, then the individual by whose particular will the custom had its birth would be discovered; and it was a maxim that no one man could be allowed to make a law, but that a custom could only have its origin in the will of the whole. The time "whereof the memory of man runneth not to See 15 Cent. Dig. tit. "Customs and Usages," § 3.

In an English case in 1824 the plaintiff's counsel having inquired of a witness whether it was not the custom to pay veterinary surgeons for attendance as well as for medicines, counsel on the other side objected: "There can be no custom; this is all modern." But Best, C. J., said: "They do not mean a custom whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary; but if there is a general usage applicable to a particular profession, parties employing an individual in that profession are supposed to deal with him according to that usage. You may cross-examine as to the extent of the usage." Sewell v. Corp, 1 C. & P. 392, 393, 12 E. C. L. 232. As early as 1780 in Noble v. Kennoway, Dougl. (3d ed.) 510, 512, Lord Mansfield said: "Every under-writer is presumed to be acquainted with the practice of the trade he insures, and that whether it is recently established, or not. If he does not know it, he ought to inform himself. It is no matter if the usage has only been for a year." And on the construction of a marine policy in the trade to Labrador, which was first opened to English shipping after the peace of Paris, and had been carried on but three years, he held that a custom which had been invariably observed ever since its opening was as binding on those who shipped on Labrador risks as though the trade itself had been of much longer continuance. In Williams v. Gilman, 3 Me. 276, 281, the court refer to a usage of trade in these words: "The counsel for the defendant have treated this usage among printers and booksellers as a custom; such as we find described in our law books; and have contended that to be valid it must have existed for time immemorial, uninterrupted, definite, reasonable, &c. We apprehend that the law of local customs is not applicable in this case. The usage relied on has nothing local in its nature; it relates to a certain class of people spread through the country, and to the peculiar business in which they are employed."

length of time shall be sufficient cannot be stated in the form of a general rule. Each case must depend upon the various relations of the trade to the public, the exigencies of the business, and the frequency of the repetition of the particular usage in the time within which it may be proved to have existed.[15]

2. Must Be Certain and Uniform. A common-law custom was required to be certain and uniform, both as to the persons claiming under it and the things claimed.[16] It is also strictly held that a usage or custom of trade must be certain

A special custom as to the meaning of terms in a particular locality, when used in a contract, cannot be considered in the absence of proof of antiquity. Thomas v. Hooker-Colville Steam Pump Co., 28 Mo. App. 563.

15. Thus three weeks in the city of New York, where a great number of transactions of the same character take place daily, was considered a sufficient length of time to establish a usage in the insurance business restricting the ordinary signification of the word "storehouse" as used in a fire policy. Wall v. East River Ins. Co., 3 Duer (N. Y.) 264. On the other hand five years in an Alabama county, in the year 1852, was thought by the court to be too short a time to establish a usage in the carrying trade contrary to the ordinary rules of law. Cooper v. Berry, 21 Ga. 526, 68 Am. Dec. 468. And see Smith v. Rice, 56 Ala. 417. The same has been held as to a certain banking practice in force in a particular bank only two years (Buford v. Tucker, 44 Ala. 89; Carlisle v. Wallace, 12 Ind. 252, 74 Am. Dec. 207; Adams v. Otterback, 15 How. (U. S.) 539, 14 L. ed. 805), and of the habit of a carrier for a month past to deposit goods in a certain place (Alabama, etc., R. Co. v. Kidd, 35 Ala. 209).

Proof of a special custom or usage at a particular place is not admissible to affect the construction of a contract where the contract was made a year before the trial, and there is nothing to show how long or when such special usage had been established. Illustrations.— From an early day in England a custom that land shall descend to the most worthy of the owner's blood was void, on the ground that the custom gives no certain means for the discovery of merit, while a custom that lands shall descend to the next male of the blood, exclusive of females, was good. In Selby v. Robinson, 2 T. R. 758, 1 Rev. Rep. 615, it was held by the queen's bench, in 1788, that a custom for poor and indigent householders living in A to cut and carry away rotten boughs and branches in a chase in A could not be supported, the description of the persons entitled being too vague. And in another early case it was held that no person had at common law a right to glean in the harvest-field; and that neither have the poor of a parish legally settled as such any such right, on the ground that such a right would be inconsistent with the nature of property, and that no right can exist at common law unless both the subject of it and they who claim it are certain. See Steel v. Houghton, 1 H. Bl. 51, 2 Rev. Rep. 715. So a custom to pay twopence an acre in lieu of tithes is good; but a custom to pay sometimes twopence and sometimes threepence as the occupier of the land chooses is bad on account of its uncertainty. Blewett v. Tregonning, 3 A. & E. 554, 1 Hurl. & W. 431, 4 L. J. K. B. 223, 5 N. & M. 234, 30 E. C. L. 260; Tanistry's Case, Dav. 32. "Yet a custom," as Blackstone puts it [1 Bl. Comm. 61] "to pay a year's improved value for a fine on a copyhold estate is good, though the value be uncertain; for the value may at any time be ascertained, and the maxim of the law is, Id certum est, quod certum redi potest." So a custom for the tenants of collieries to throw earth, stones, coal, etc., in heaps upon land "near" to certain coal-pits was held bad, on the ground that the word "near" was too uncertain. Wilkes v. Broadbent, 1 Wils. C. P. 63. But see Salisbury v. Gladstone, 9 H. L. Cas. 692, 8 Jur. N. S. 625, 34 L. J. C. P. 222, 4 L. T. Rep. N. S. 849, 9 Wkly. Rep. 930. In Wilson v. Willes, 7 East 121, 3 Smith K. B. 107, 8 Rev. Rep. 604, the declaration was trespass for breaking and entering the close of the plaintiff, called Hampstead heath, and digging and carrying away turf covered with grass, etc. Plea: that the locus in quo was parcel of a waste in the manor of Hampstead; that there had been from time immemorial divers customary tenements by copy of court-roll. And it then alleged a custom for tenants of such tenements, "having a garden or gardens parcel of the same," to dig turf for the making or repairing of grass-plots in such gardens every year, at all times of the year, in such quantity as occasion hath required, and justified the taking accordingly. To this plea there was a general demurrer, and judgment was given for the plaintiff. Lord Ellenborough said that "a custom, however ancient, must not be inand uniform in order to be binding.[17] A usage or custom of trade to which no definite and uncertain"; that it was "not defined what sort of improvement the custom extends to"; that "every part of the garden may be converted into grass plots"; that there was "nothing to restrain the tenants from taking the whole of the turbary of the common," and it resolved itself into "the mere will and pleasure of the tenant." Similarly, in Clayton v. Corby, 5 Q. B. 415, Dav. & M. 449, 8 Jur. 212, 14 L. J. Q. B. 364, 48 E. C. L. 415, an action for trespass for breaking plaintiff's close and digging and carrying away clay, the defendant justified as the owner of a brick-kiln, and pleaded that all occupiers thereof for thirty years had enjoyed as of right, etc., a right to dig, take, and carry away from the close so much clay as was at any time required by him and them for making bricks at the brick-kiln, in every year, and at all times of the year. The plea was held bad.

Illustrations.— In the following cases evidence of the usage was rejected because of its want of certainty: A usage of the cloth trade that on the sale of cloth the buyer had three days within which to send word to the seller that he would keep the goods, otherwise the seller could send for them back, some of the witnesses called to support the usage speaking of three days as the time, others a week, and one a month (Wood v. Wood, 1 C. & P. 59, 12 E. C. L. 44); a custom to pay veterinary surgeons for attendance as well as medicines, the witness stating that the general rule was to charge for attendance when there was not much medicine required (Sewell v. Corp, 1 C. & P. 392, 12 E. C. L. 232); a custom among wholesale merchants to allow their salesmen pay for time lost by sickness (Sweet v. Leach, 6 Ill. App. 212); a usage among brokers that the margins put up to cover the advance in the commodity to be purchased must be "reasonable," no rule by which a "reasonable" margin can be determined being shown (Oelricks v. Ford, 23 How. (U. S.) 49, 16 L. ed. 534); a custom among commission merchants, on a sale of grain for cash, to wait two, three, or four days for the money (Catlin v. Smith, 24 Vt. 85; Stewart v. Scudder, 2 Am. L. Reg. 80); a usage among merchants in the city of Baltimore to deliver to purchasers merchandise sold for cash, without demanding the cash, and without the vendor waiving his right to cash payment, the witness called to establish it saying that he delivered the limit is assigned to its extent is bad and will not therefore be given effect by the courts.[18]

3. Must Be Compulsory. A custom must be compulsory, and not left to each one's option to obey it.[19]

4. Must Be Consistent. Customs must be consistent with each other. One custom cannot be set up in opposition to another, for if contradictory they destroy each other.[20]

5. Must Be Continued. A custom must be continued; there must be no interruption or temporary ceasing of the right.[21] The same is required of a usage of trade.[22] A usage which is proved to exist at a period long before the time of the article without the cash only when he considered the purchaser good (Foley v. Mason, 6 Md. 37); a usage that cash sales were not understood as for cash in hand, but that payment might afterward be made (Union R., etc., Co. v. Yeager, 34 Ind. 1); and a custom among commission merchants that flour of a grade not suitable for the market and sale in the city of Indianapolis was in the absence of special instructions forwarded to the city of New York (Wallace v. Morgan, 23 Ind. 399. And see Cincinnati, etc., Mail Line Co. v. Boal, 15 Ind. 345). Again a custom of stenographers to charge twenty cents per folio for copies of their minutes is not established by evidence that "the custom is to pay from fifteen to twenty cents a folio," since such evidence negatives the requirement of uniformity. "Otherwise it loses the imperative character of a law. It is true that agreements which were founded in consent were the origin of customs; it is true that the observances which have become, as it were, acted or pictured laws were at first matters of option; but whenever they are established customs they must have ceased to be matters of choice, and must have an obligatory element — a binding force. Were it in the option of every man whether he would conform to a custom or not, were it a matter which might be referred for decision to his good pleasure, it is evident that it would be invalid upon another ground, viz., uncertainty. A custom, to be binding, must be current. It must be known and understood by those whose conduct is to be affected by its existence, whose transactions are to be influenced by its factual terms; but if its terms were alterable at the will of each man, if it was in the option of each man to be bound to-day and not bound to-morrow by the custom, any one whose conduct might have to conform to such a rule would find it impossible to shape his actions accordingly, and any transactions which might have to be influenced by such a precept would be varying, indefinite, uncertain, and absurd." Browne Usages and Customs 24. See also 1 Blackstone Comm. 61, where it is said: "A custom that all the inhabitants shall be rated towards the maintenance of a bridge will be good; but a custom that every man is to contribute thereto at his own pleasure is idle and absurd, and indeed no custom at all."

If two customs are contradictory, it is evident that they cannot both have been established by mutual consent. Thus the allegation of one custom is not to be met by the allegation of another custom inconsistent with the first, but rather by the denial of the existence of the first as a custom. This rule might well fall within that other one which requires that a custom shall be reasonable; for the absurdity and unreasonableness of two mutually inconsistent customs is evident, and if one custom be admitted to exist, the other, which is inconsistent with it, violates the requisite of reasonableness, and is therefore invalid. Browne Usages and Customs 25.

"If a custom ceased and recommenced, its new beginning would be within the memory of man, and would be due to the will of an individual, which would exclude it from the definition of a custom, and make any usage subject to such a lapse void as a custom. But an interruption which is to prove valid as against a custom must be an actual interruption of the usage, and not simply an interruption of the possession of the right." Browne Usages and Customs 16.

22. Johnson v. Stoddard, 100 Mass. 306; McMasters v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 69 Pa. St. 374, 8 Am. Rep. 264. Thus the custom of a city department in charging interest on sums advanced to contractors was held inadmissible, it appearing that the custom had been one way down to the year 1858, under one controller, and another way from 1858 to 1878, under other controllers. Fellows v. New York, 17 Hun (N. Y.) 249. So transaction which it is introduced to affect, and not since, is inadmissible.[23] Again acts of accommodation or indulgence do not make a usage.[24]

6. Must Be General. A common-law custom if general was a part of the law and hence not admissible in evidence as a custom.[25] But as to particular customs where the knowledge of a witness who was introduced to prove a usage was not later than a year before that time, the usage was held not sufficiently proved. Hale v. Gibbs, 43 Iowa 380.

Illustrations.—A creditor may indulge a debtor in one or two cases without thereby binding himself to do likewise in the future. Brent v. Cook, 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 267. And the common act of courtesy which induces a man to call on his mechanic to rectify what is amiss in his job does not establish a custom to exonerate the trade from responsibility for bad work. Somerby v. Tappan, Wright (Ohio) 570. So however common it may be for persons in receiving payments to waive their strict legal rights and to make use of a paper currency, such a habit would not bind any one who chose to insist upon his legal right to receive gold and silver. Lord v. Burbank, 18 Me. 178. Again because plaintiffs had been constant customers of a bank, which had discounted for them many drafts and immediately sent them on for acceptance when the law did not require it, was no just reason to compel the bank at the risk of being held liable for negligence to pursue a similar course in the future. Citizens' Bank v. Grafflin, 31 Md. 507, 1 Am. Rep. 66. So a usage among mills to give a certificate of honorable discharge to an operative who had worked a certain term and performed certain conditions, which certificate would obtain him employment in other mills, does not render it obligatory to give such a certificate in all cases where the conditions have been complied with; the giving of such a discharge is a matter of discretion in the particular mill. Thornton v. Suffolk Mfg. Co., 10 Cush. (Mass.) 376. And where a contract as to land gives no right to cut the timber, evidence that the owner had permitted others under similar contracts to cut timber without considering them trespassers is irrelevant. Norton v. Heywood, 20 Me. 359. And the mere act of a railroad company in paying for the medical services of an employee injured in its service would hardly establish such a custom for subsequent cases which might arise. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Jay, 61 Ala. 247.

But, although the practice of a particular business may at any time be altered by those engaged in it, yet an arbitrary change cannot be made, to the prejudice of others, without some notice of the change. Perhaps even notice would not be sufficient, if a party was not given sufficient time to adapt his conduct to the new custom. Bankers had taken up certain bills for a customer upon the security of proceeds to be expected from certain consignments, and at the same time allowed him to continue to draw upon his deposit account with them. This practice had existed for some time, when, some goods remaining unsold and the market price having gone down, they refused to pay one of his drafts. In an action by the customer, it was left to the jury to say whether the course of dealing of the parties had been understood as on this footing, or whether it was a mere act of indulgence on the part of the bank; if the former, they were instructed that the bankers could not suddenly, and without notice to him, interfere with this custom. The jury found for the plaintiff. "I am of the opinion," said Pollock, C. B., "that the case was properly left to the jury. No doubt, if a person has been accustomed to accept bills for the accommodation of another, he may refuse to do so any longer; for there is no tenancy of a man's credit which requires any time to put an end to it. But that is not the case where a course of dealing has prevailed, and value has been given for the accommodation. It makes no difference whether the one party is a factor or a banker, if the circumstances are such as to justify the other in drawing though he has not a cash credit, he is entitled to do so until he has notice that the accommodation is discontinued. The question then is, whether there was, between the plaintiff and the Bank, a course of business which could not be put an end to without a reasonable notice. It seems to me that there is no objection to the mode in which the case was left to the jury, and that they have arrived at a proper conclusion." Cumming v. Shand, 5 H. & N. 95, 98, 29 L. J. 25. In Viner Abr. tit. "Custom," it is said: "Information in the Exchequer against a merchant for lading wine in a strong ship, the defendant pleaded licence of the King made to J. S. to do it, which J. S. had granted his authority thereof to the defendant; and that there is a custom among merchants throughout England, that one may assign such licence to another, and that the assignee shall enjoy it, &c., which was demurred in law, and it was agreed for law, that a man cannot prescribe custom throughout England; for if it be throughout England it is a common law and not a custom, contra if the custom had been pleaded to or usages of trade, although it seems a contradiction in terms to say that they must be general and universal in order to be valid, yet it is so laid down in a number of cases.[26] In all cases in which this is stated as a requisite to the validity of a usage, the question at issue has been whether the party to be affected by it has been proved to have been acquainted with it. Knowledge of a usage[27] is necessary in every case in order to bind a person by its terms. Sometimes this notice must be expressly proved, and sometimes, from its generality and notoriety, the law raises the presumption that it was known. It is therefore only as affecting the question of notice that the generality of the usage becomes material; for a practice may exist between two only, and yet bind them in all subsequent dealings unless abrogated by both.[28] And as express notice is

be in such a city, or county. . . . Note the diversity." In Fitch v. Rawling, 2 H. Bl. 393, 398, 3 Rev. Rep. 425, while it was held that a custom for all the inhabitants of a parish to play all kinds of lawful games and pastimes in a close at all seasonable times of the year was good, yet a similar custom for all persons whatever happening to be in the said parish was held bad, Buller, J., saying: "How that which may be claimed by all the inhabitants of England, can be the subject of a custom, I cannot conceive. Customs must in their nature be confined to individuals of a particular description, and what is common to all mankind can never be claimed as a custom." Later, in Tyson v. Smith, 6 A. & E. 745, 6 L. J. K. B. 189, 1 N. & P. 784, 1 P. & D. 307, 310, 33 E. C. L. 392, which was an action of trespass, to which a custom for all victuallers to erect booths on the land in question during certain fair days was set up, it was objected that it was general, as amounting to the common law. But this objection was overruled. "Admitting for the purpose of argument," said Tindal, C. J., "that a custom which would comprehend within it all the liege subjects of the crown, would be bad, on the ground of its amounting to the common law: we think the custom before us is not of that description. For in the present custom there are three restrictions, which necessarily limit its generality. The parties who claim the benefit of it must be victuallers; they must be victuallers coming to keep the fair, and they must come at the precise period of the year at which the fair is fixed. Now under the description of victuallers, mentioned in the custom, we cannot consider that very large body of persons to be comprehended who in ancient times appear to have been classed under that designation by the statutes referred to in the argument; but we think the plea must be taken to speak in the language of the time at which it is pleaded; and as the only term used is that of victualler, it must be understood those only are comprehended who are now so termed, that is, persons authorized by law to keep houses of entertainment for the public. This removes the case at once from the application of the case of Fitch v. Rawling, [2 H. Bl. 393], where the custom comprehended all the liege subjects of the crown being in the parish at any time."

difficult to prove, because in the majority of cases nothing has been said by the parties in their negotiations about the usage, it is obvious that in the greatest number of instances it becomes absolutely necessary to prove such a usage as the law will presume the party intended to be bound by; and consequently in all these cases the generality of the custom becomes vital, and the rule that a usage must be general is applied by the courts with rigor. Therefore before proof of a custom can be received to affect the rights of parties, it must appear to have been so general that the parties will be presumed to have knowledge of it.[29] Evidence of isolated instances of a certain course of trade is not sufficient to establish a usage by which the rights of parties are to be measured and determined.[30] A usage may be "general," as this term is used here, notwithstanding that it is confined to a particular city, town, or village.[31] It may be generally

Banking practice.— Isolated instances of a certain practice in a particular bank, as for instance the payment of a loss in an unusual case (Allen v. Merchants' Bank, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 215), or proof of a few instances of dealings in one or two other banks (Chesapeake Bank v. Swain, 29 Md. 483), do not establish a general usage. A particular banking usage must apply to a place rather than to a particular bank. It must be the rule of all the banks in the place or it cannot be a valid usage. If every bank, it has been said, could establish its own usage, the confusion and uncertainty which would ensue would greatly exceed any local convenience resulting therefrom. Adams v. Otterback, 15 How. (U. S.) 539, 14 L. ed. 805. In Rickford v. Ridge, 2 Campb. 537, 539, Lord Ellenborough said: "I can not hear of any arbitrary distinction between one part of the city and another. It is not competent to bankers to lay down one rule for the eastward of St. Paul's and another for the westward. They might as well fix upon St. Peter's at Rome."

known in that city, town, or village, and be understood by all persons dealing there, and yet may not exist in any place beyond. But the usage of a single house,[32] of one person only,[33] of a single mill,[34] of one city or town,[35] or of one railroad company[36] is insufficient. It has been held that evidence of a custom in the cities of New Orleans, Cincinnati, and Louisville would not be alone sufficient to prove a general custom of merchants upon the Mississippi river and its tributaries.[37] So proof that a certain practice of factors "was very common in the trade, but a few factors in Mobile would not do so" is insufficient to establish a usage.[38] And evidence that it was "very unusual" to do a certain thing would not prove a usage not to do so.[39] A usage of trade may have a greater or less territorial extent, or a more general or restricted one, according to the circumstances which gave rise to it;[40] and so evidence that a certain custom prevailed in three different establishments was considered sufficient to establish it as general.[41] Deviation from a universal custom of a port in particular instances, due to strong competition in trade, does not affect the validity of such custom.[42]

7. Must Be Known — a. In General. Particular usages and customs of trade or business must be known by the party to be affected by them or they will not be binding,[43] unless they are so notorious, universal, and well established that his

Usage of particular class.— No presumption arises that parties contracted with reference to a particular custom, or made it a part of their agreement, when the record shows that the custom related to a particular class of which appellant was not a member. Bernard v. Mott, 89 Mo. App. 403.

35. To establish a usage on the part of municipal corporations, it must be general usage among like towns and cities, and not a usage in a single town or city. Butler v. Charlestown, 7 Gray (Mass.) 12. "In considering this subject of usage," says Shaw, C. J., in Spaulding v. Lowell, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 71, 79, "it is proper to add, that it is not a casual or occasional exercise of a power, by one or a few towns, which will constitute such a usage; but it must be a usage, reasonable in itself, general among all towns of like situation, as to settlement and population, and of long continuance." been known by the latter at the time of entering the service.[60] So a usage of the servants of a corporation not shown to have come to the knowledge of the governing officers of the corporation does not bind it.[61] And in order to bind a person by a custom of merchants to charge interest it is not required that the party sought to be charged should have paid previous demands of interest to raise the presumption that he had notice of the custom in a later case. But it is requisite that some evidence, either of its extensive notoriety or of the party's dealings having brought him into contact with the custom, should be added to the bare proof that such is the custom of the particular dealer or of the trade in general.[62] Again a custom of a particular insurer which is unknown to the insured is not admissible to affect his rights.[63]

(III) USAGES OF STOCK EXCHANGE. It is well settled that those who send goods to a market are presumed to know the customs of the market and to be bound by them.[64] Therefore a person employing a broker on the stock exchange impliedly gives him authority to act in accordance with the rules there established, although the principal himself be ignorant of them.[65]

c. When Knowledge of Custom Is Not Presumed. A custom cannot affect persons between whom there is no privity of contract;[66] nor can a custom of others to do certain acts support a similar act done by a party who was himself ignorant of any such custom, and whose actions therefore could not have influenced his conduct in the least.[67] So likewise a usage cannot bind a party

So where a fire policy on a factory was construed to engage that a watchman should be kept in the building through the hours of every night in the week, a usage of the factory for the watchman to leave at twelve o'clock on Saturday night, and not to return until twelve o'clock on Sunday night, was held not to affect the breach. Illustration.— Defendants (London merchants) employed a broker in Liverpool to purchase some wool. The broker negotiated a sale by the plaintiff to the defendants of certain bales deliverable at Odessa, "the names of the vessels to be declared as soon as the wools were shipped." In this transaction the broker acted for both plaintiff and defendants. By the custom of Liverpool, where a contract contained a stipulation that notice of an event should be given by the vendor to the vendee, it was usual for the vendor to give the notice to the broker, who communicated it to the vendee. It was held, both in the court of exchequer and in that of the exchequer chamber, that the defendants were bound by such usage, and therefore that a notice by the plaintiff to the broker of the names of the vessels on which the wools were shipped was a performance of that stipulation, although the broker omitted to communicate them to the defendants. 67. Kinne v. Ford, 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 194. See also Dorchester, etc., Bank v. New England Bank, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 177, holding that a usage is inadmissible if it can be shown to have been unknown at the time of the contract to the party setting it up and seeking who has no occasion to believe that he will be brought within its operation or does not intend to be.[68] So a custom in one place cannot be presumed to be known to persons living in another place.[69] And although dealers with a "clearing-house" will be bound by its usages they cannot bind persons not parties to the association.[70]

8. Must Be Moral. A custom must not be of doubtful morality.[71]

9. Must Be Peaceable and Acquiesced in. A custom must have been peaceable and acquiesced in and not disputed at law or otherwise; for customs owe their origin to common consent, and this cannot be intended in disputed cases.[72] In like manner a usage of trade must be generally assented to as well as asserted before it can be established; it must be acquiesced in by all persons acting within the scope of its operations.[73]

10. Must Be Reasonable — a. In General. A custom or usage must be reasonable — an unreasonable custom is bad and will not be recognized.[74] In deciding as to what customs are reasonable and what unreasonable, regard must its benefits, for in such a case there would be no presumption that the contract was made with reference to it.

Although a single instance of a certain practice will not prove a usage, yet it is sufficient to bring home notice of such a usage already established to a person sought to be bound by it. Nonotuck Silk Co. v. Fair, 112 Mass. 354. And see Fowler v. Pickering, 119 Mass. 33.

Simon v. Johnson, 101 Ala. 368, 13 So. 491. Likewise a custom among underwriters in New York city to class certain stores as distinct buildings for purposes of insurance, and to insure them severally as separate risks, is not binding on an insurance company domiciled in Alabama, without proof that the latter had knowledge of such custom when a contract was made with another company for reinsurance in that city. be had to the legal decisions which have been made in times past upon cases involving similar questions; for "reasonable," says Coke, "is not always to be understood of every unlearned man's reason, but of the artificial and legal reason warranted by authority of law."[75] Therefore a custom may be good, although the particular reason of it cannot be assigned, for it suffices if no good legal reason can be assigned against it. A custom is not unreasonable merely because it is contrary to a particular rule or maxim of the common law.[76] A custom is not unreasonable simply because it is injurious to private persons or interests if it be for the public good.[77] Nor is a custom unreasonable because it might be inconvenient.[78] But a custom that is contrary to the public good or injurious or prejudicial to the many and beneficial only to some particular person is repugnant to the law of reason and void.[79]

So the custom of a city to make a by-law to oblige a person to take an office, under a penalty. London v. Vanacre, 12 Mod. 269. So too the custom that where a duty was payable on corn imported into a city citizens, being factors, were exempt from it; this in encouragement of trade. Cocksedge v. Fanshaw, Dougl. (3d ed.) 119. Also to dig gravel in the adjacent land to repair a way (1 Dane Abr. c. 26, art. 2, § 1); to have a watering-place in the adjacent land (1 Dane Abr. c. 26, art. 2, § 1); to dig for ballast (1 Dane Abr. c. 26, art. 2, § 1); to dry nets on another's land (1 Dane Abr. c. 26, art. 2, § 1); to cut rushes in the lord's waste for one occupying a house and having common there, as against a stranger (Beau v. Bloom, 3 Wils. C. P. 456); to distrain the goods, etc., of a ship for the port duties (Vinkestine v. Ebden, 12 Mod. 216); for the lord of the manor to have toll for all goods landed at a wharf, in consideration of his keeping it in repair (Colton v. Smith, Cowp. 47, Lofft 463); to take three bushels of barley out of every ship's cargo brought to a certain quay to be exported (Serjeant v. Read, 1 Wils. C. P. 91); and for all the freemen and citizens of a town on a particular day in the year to enter upon a close for the purpose of horse-racing (Mounsey v. Ismay, 3 H. & C. 486, 11 Jur. N. S. 141, 34 L. J. Exch. 52, 12 L. T. Rep. N. S. 27, 13 Wkly. Rep. 521).

78. Thus a custom for all the inhabitants of a parish to play at games in a particular close was good, although if they were all to go there at the same time the object might become impossible. So a custom for fishermen to dry their nets on land adjacent to the sea is good, although if all were to resort there at the same time great inconvenience would follow. So all the subjects of the kingdom have a right to enter a port, even though a small port might be speedily filled. See Tyson v. Smith, 6 A. & E. 745, 6 L. J. K. custom to use and imitate the trade-marks of foreigners with impunity;[80] a custom of publishers of newspapers to insert advertisements sent to them without express directions as to the number of insertions, until their publication is expressly countermanded, even after the object of the advertisement has ceased, and that fact is apparent on its face;[81] a custom to mine coal without leaving pillars or posts to support the surface;[82] a custom on the Connecticut river that when any person clears a place for seine-fishing he holds it against the world during the fishing season;[83] a custom of the owners of mines to dispose of water pumped therefrom, by allowing it to flow into the adjacent natural watercourses, even though it polluted the streams of adjoining proprietors;[84] a custom that the outgoing tenant of a farm shall look exclusively to the incoming tenant when there is one, and not to the landlord, for compensation for seeds, acts of husbandry, tillage, etc.;[85] a custom that a tenant may convert personal property of his landlord, found on the demised premises, without making compensation;[86] a custom that the act of staking ice off by itself on public waters was alone sufficient to constitute a legal appropriation;[87] and a custom in regard to placing a certain brand on all calves when persons do not know to whom they belong.[88]

(II) Vendor and Purchaser. In the relation of vendor and purchaser the following have been held unreasonable: A custom authorizing on a contract for goods of a specified character, the delivery of different goods, or on a sale of the goods of one mill the delivery of the goods of another mill;[89] a usage that sales of a particular class of goods are subject to the approval of a public inspector, but that if there is no such inspector a buyer may rescind his purchase at pleasure;[90] a usage that no title passes upon an ordinary sale and delivery without actual payment of the consideration within a certain number of days;[91] a custom that if a note is given for a gold mine and it proves unproductive or does not turn out according to expectation it is given up;[92] a custom for merchants to sign receipts presented by cartmen with goods, without any inquiry on the part of the receiving clerk or porter as to their ownership or the place from which they were received;[93] a custom of a board of trade, on cash sales of produce or provisions, giving the buyer the privilege of having them inspected at his own expense, but if he accepts them without inspection, he takes them at his own risk as to quality, even if the vendor occupies a position where he may be supposed to know the quality of the goods, and the vendee relies upon this supposition;[94] a custom among dealers in

That a custom is general and established raises a presumption of its reasonableness. Cox v. Charleston F. & M. Ins. Co., 3 Rich. (S. C.) 331, 45 Am. Dec. 771. Courts of law will not enforce unreasonable or absurd usages, however uniform and well known. Parties in framing their contracts have a right to disregard them, and cannot be held to have entered into written stipulations with any reference to them. Seccomb v. Provincial Ins. Co., 10 Allen (Mass.) 305; Macy v. Whaling Ins. Co., 9 Metc. (Mass.) 354. But a usage known to a person, and in accordance to whose burdens and obligations he has contracted, will not be set aside by a court of law simply because it is unreasonable. A man may with his eyes open make an absurd, oppressive, or unreasonable contract, and bind himself to the performance of strict and onerous obligations, yet a court of law will not for this reason interfere. cotton that warehouse receipts to deliver to a person, or order, or bearer, the number of bales therein specified are transferable by delivery without indorsement, and that such transfer passes the cotton without inquiry as to title, unless notice is given that the receipts have been lost or have got into the hands of one not the owner or not entitled to them;[95] a usage that where the vendor of goods receives a note of the consignee without the indorsement of the purchaser the latter is discharged and the maker alone remains liable;[96] a custom among merchants to have their goods sent to their stores by long and circuitous routes, when purchased at the stores of near neighbors;[97] a custom of a shopkeeper to balance his books annually, and to charge interest on the balance of a running account where there has been no settlement;[98] a usage authorizing a dealer in bonds or securities, after an absolute sale and delivery to a customer, to retain a right to represent such customer, and to expend money for him in relation to such securities, without an express contract thereto;[99] and a custom authorizing a buyer of cotton after delivery and payment of the price to throw the cotton back upon the hands of the vendor and rescind the sale, because cotton of a finer quality than the sample had been mixed in the bale in packing.[1]

(III) Banks and Banking. A custom of banks to honor the occasional overdrafts of customers whose standing is good;[2] a custom of banks not to rectify mistakes unless discovered before the person leaves the room;[3] or a usage that a bank having marked a note payable at its office as good by mistake was not entitled to retract its certification, although done before the other party acted thereon[4] is unreasonable.

(IV) Carrier and Customer. Between carrier and customer the following usages and customs have been held unreasonable: A usage for wharfingers to act as agents in accepting in behalf of consignees goods arriving at the wharves;[5] a usage for the consignee of a vessel, who is also the owner of the cargo, to charge a commission on the freight paid by himself to the captain;[6] a custom that an intermediate carrier who received property subject to charges may deduct from the freight earned by the prior carrier the value of any deficiency between the quantity delivered and that stated in the bill of lading, and that the prior carrier shall not be allowed to show that an error occurred in stating the amount in the bill of lading;[7] a usage of a port that in order to constitute a delivery of goods by a carrier by water a receipt must be given to the carrier by the consignee or his agent;[8] a custom that freight paid in advance may not be recovered back, even though not earned;[9] a custom that a notice published in three newspapers in a city of the time and place of landing goods by steamboat is such a notice as places them at the risk of the consignee;[10] a custom among the owners of towboats that the first coming alongside of a ship on a signal for steam has an absolute towing contract;[11] a usage requiring those who are in the legal use of the waters as a highway to yield to others who are using them for an unlawful purpose;[12] a custom among carriers and shippers that a contract made between them to furnish and carry coal to a certain port for sale may be thrown up by either at his convenience, no damage to be claimed from either;[13] a usage of a railroad company requiring losses to be made at the time the goods are delivered[14] or within ten days thereafter;[15] a custom of a railroad company that before a consignee can obtain his wheat from the company's bins he must receipt for the quantity;[16] a custom of a railroad company not to be responsible for the conduct of its agents in regard to the contents of chartered cars of which they hold the keys;[17] a usage of a steamboat company not to allow a passenger to take to his stateroom such baggage as he may require for his personal use;[18] a custom which would justify a steamboat carrier who had goods consigned to a person at a particular landing on the river — where there was a warehouse and a warehouse-keeper, who usually received and took care of goods landed there for the consignee — in putting out such goods on the river bank, without any protection, when the landing had in the meantime been broken up by an inundation, and the washing away of the buildings and the removal of the persons that constituted it a landing;[19] a custom that a carrier of brick must await the convenience of the vendee or subvendee in unloading, and that the master is bound to prevent putting on board inferior brick at the time of loading;[20] a custom of the port of New Orleans by which the cargo of a fruit vessel is commenced to be discharged for one day on the wharf, and then the further discharging is delayed for one day to sell that part discharged, and then if necessary is further delayed another day to remove the same from the wharf, before proceeding to further discharge the cargo;[21] a usage among masters and clerks of steamboats for a master to draw bills of exchange on the clerk and negotiate the same;[22] a usage for masters of whaling vessels to wait for their lays until the owners shall choose to sell the oil;[23] and a custom that an agency to act for a ship in distress is irrevocable.[24]

(v) Insurer and Insured. In the law of insurance these have been held unreasonable, viz.: A usage of marine companies to require a survey of the goods damaged by the port wardens, as a preliminary proof of the loss;[25] a usage of the same class of insurers to pay only two thirds of the gross freight on a total loss;[26] a custom that insurance agents after the termination of their agency may cancel all policies issued through them and transfer the insurance to other companies represented by them;[27] and a custom of the agent who procures insurance entitling him to the insurance scrip.[28]

(vi) Master and Servant. The following customs have also been held unreasonable: A custom that if a female slave hired by the month or the week should be confined and delivered of a child during the term the owner should pay a certain sum to the hirer;[29] a custom among wholesale dealers allowing their salesmen pay for time lost by sickness without regard to the length;[30] a custom for sawyers to ship the lumber intrusted to them, and converted into logs, to lumber factors, to be sold by them;[31] a custom that a person employed to cut staves from another's bolts has a right to take to his own use the clippings, corner-pieces, and culls, without the consent of the owner;[32] a usage of plasterers to charge not only for the space covered, but for one half of the surface occupied by openings;[33] a custom whereby builders contracting to build houses in a workmanlike manner built them so carelessly that the windows were not vertical or at equal heights from the floor, the floors were not level, and the bricks were so put together that holes were left in the walls;[34] a custom requiring that when a person is employed to provide underpinning for a house to prevent its falling into an excavation made on an adjoining lot he must enter into a contract with the digger of the excavation by which they may work together, and his failure so to enter is a breach of contract;[35] a usage that the whole price of stone, sold at a certain price per cubic yard, is to be computed by measuring the stone after it has been laid in a solid wall;[36] a custom in the business of carpet-making, by which the results of the color mixer's skill and labor in the service of his employer are recognized as belonging exclusively to the mixer, and his employer is not regarded as having any title to them;[37] a usage where a contract for laying bricks is silent as to the manner in which the number of bricks is to be determined;[38] a custom of surveyors in making allowances to excavators on their being obliged to excavate below the depth mentioned in the contract to reach a level;[39] and a custom for the rest of the men in the engineer's department on a pleasure yacht to leave if the engineer is discharged.[40]

(VII) PRINCIPAL AND AGENT. The following usages affecting the relation of principal and agent have been declared void for unreasonableness: A custom that a man, without any authority from the owner of lands, and without his consent or knowledge, and without knowing whether he wishes to sell or not, may dispose of them on the ordinary terms, and by so doing bind the owner;[41] a usage among owners of vessels to accept all bills of their masters for supplies furnished abroad;[42] a custom that the master of a vessel as such may purchase a cargo on account of the owners without their authority,[43] or may have the right to sell the vessels without authority from the owners;[44] a usage for a broker employed to purchase stock to buy the stock for himself without his principal's knowledge;[45] a custom that an agent may sell the property of his principal before he is instructed to do so, and on demand of the property back may tender him similar articles in their stead;[46] a usage of agents in collecting drafts for absent parties to surrender them to the drawees at maturity and to take in exchange their checks upon banks;[47] a usage of brokers of tanned skins to insert in the memorandum of sale, unless forbidden by the vendor, and the buyer has an opportunity for examination, a warranty of merchantable quality;[48] a custom that a person employed by a company to devote his time to its business for its exclusive profit should be allowed to engage in a similar business on his own account;[49] a custom for ship-brokers to receive a commission from the seller of a vessel when they introduce the purchaser to him, and are not otherwise employed in the transaction;[50] a custom for an agent to receive compensation from both buyer and seller;[51] a custom under which an insurance agent receives from the company commissions on the renewal premiums on all policies obtained by him for three years after the termination of his engagement;[52] a custom entitling a wharfinger to deliver goods, with credit for the freight, without incurring any responsibility, and entitling him to be regarded as still continuing the forwarder's agent to receive the amount;[53] and a usage between manufacturers of musical instruments and their agents, whereby agencies could be discontinued or terminated at the pleasure of either party unless expressly otherwise agreed.[54]

(VIII) PUBLIC OFFICERS. The following customs have been adjudged unreasonable, viz.: A custom for a flour inspector, who by statute is to receive a specified compensation in money to take to his own use the flour drawn from the barrel in the process of inspection, called the "draught flour," as an additional compensation or perquisite;[55] a usage of government officers to accept bills without consideration, or to pledge the credit of the nation as surety for, or the accommodation of, a contractor;[56] a custom for holders of settlements and preëmptions of land to give one half to another for surveying, obtaining preëmption warrants, and paying all expenses for carrying the claims to a grant;[57] a custom, in making surveys for locations of government land granted to a settler, to include more land than the warranty actually called for;[58] and a custom allowing a sheriff to leave attached goods with defendant in the custody of a watcher, and to charge for the latter's services.[59]

mon-law custom that it was contrary to the common law of the land.[62] And a custom or usage of trade or of a particular place is not inadmissible because it is contrary to the principles of law governing such cases; for it is obvious that if proof of a usage could be rejected because it established something different from the law no custom would ever be proved, because if it were not different it would be a part of the law.[63] Nevertheless usages and customs have been rejected because inconsistent with established rules of law.[64] This apparent contradiction has been explained as follows:[65] The meaning of the rule that a usage or custom must not conflict with the law is clear and the rule itself easy of application. A usage or custom is not invalid simply because it is different in its effect from the general principles of law applicable to the particular circumstances in its absence. But if it conflicts with an established rule of public policy which it is not to the general interest to disturb; if its effect is injurious to the parties themselves in their relation to each other; if in short it is an unjust, oppressive, or impolitic usage, then it will not be recognized in courts of justice, for it will lack one of the requisites of a valid custom, viz., reasonableness.[66]

c. Statutes Governing Public Officers. Where an officer's duties are prescribed by statute, usage will not excuse their discharge in a different manner.[70] So proof of a custom is not permissible to enlarge the powers of officers whose authority is defined by statute.[71] And a custom which gives an officer a right to more than the fees prescribed by law will not be recognized.[72]

Evidence of the universal custom allowing a previous owner of land to redeem it, after the expiration of the redemption period, from the county which bought it in for taxes, may be admitted, not to show that the custom must control over the statute, but to aid the court in deciding whether or not the statute shall be so construed as to allow discretionary redemption after the redemption period has expired. D. In Particular Relations and Callings — 1. Banks and Banking — Negotiable Paper. The usage of banks in respect to the powers and duties of their officers, so far as such usage is known to the business public, enters into and qualifies the contracts made by such banks through their officers.[85] So the custom of a bank and its ordinary methods of transacting business, including the prescribed forms of notes offered for discount, enter into the contract of those giving notes for the purpose of having them discounted at such bank.[86] And these usages have been received in evidence and held binding: A usage that in the absence of the cashier the president signs drafts and checks;[87] or that either teller or cashier may certify checks;[88] the custom of banks in that vicinity to borrow money without special authority of the board of directors;[89] a usage as to the proper person to receive payment for the bank;[90] the usage of a bank as to demand and notice;[91] the usage of depositors in certain banks to deposit checks on the same or the next day after the day on which they were received, and of the bank immediately to return any checks from the "clearing-house"

Rep. 618, 6 E. C. L. 385. A frequent and general but not universal practice in a particular port on the part of ship-owners to allow goods brought on their vessels to be transported to the warehouse of the consignee and there inspected before freight is paid is not such a custom as will displace the right of the carrier to demand freight on the delivery of goods on the wharf. Warehouse charges.— B purchased certain cotton stored in A's warehouse, and assumed the payment of charges thereon. It was a custom of warehousemen to collect charges at the port of delivery for vessels to be unloaded through an elevator, each vessel waiting its turn;[16] and a custom among the railroads in a particular city to deliver consignments billed to a particular person, where the bill of lading does not read "or order," to the consignee, without requiring the production of the bill of lading.[17] So the carrier's reward, if not fixed by agreement, is regulated by custom,[18] and as to who is liable for it.[19] And the following customs have been recognized: A custom of captains to insure steamboats in their custody at large river ports, and to give notes of the owners for the premiums;[20] a custom of dividing fleets of barges in the Ohio and Mississippi rivers and towing part of them up at a time;[21] a usage that the master of a whale-ship should have a lien upon the lays of the seamen for supplies furnished them on the voyage;[22] and a custom among whalers in Massachusetts bay, whereby a whale belongs to the person whose lance is found in its body when it rises.[23] The construction of terms in bills of lading and other similar contracts of a carrier is also affected by custom.[24] Statutory

4. Insurance — a. In General. The courts have in many cases treated the contract of insurance as one particularly to be considered and construed by the usages and customs of the mercantile world.[32]

b. Marine Insurance. In the law of marine insurance, it may be stated as a well-established rule that every usage of a particular trade which is so well settled or so generally known that all persons engaged in it may be fairly considered as contracting with reference to it, is considered to form part of every policy designed to protect risks in such trade, unless the express terms of the policy decisively repel the inference.[33] Thus evidence of usage has been held to determine the commencement and end of the risk;[34] the authority of the master of a vessel to insure without express direction;[35] as to what is to be considered a deviation;[36]

Every underwriter, said Lord Mansfield, in an early case (Noble v. Kennoway, Dougl. (3d ed.) 510) is presumed to be acquainted with the practice of the trade he insures. "The principle upon which evidence of usage is received at all to explain a policy," says Mr. Arnould (Arnould Ins. § 43), "is that the parties to it are supposed to have contracted with reference to such usage. With regard to usages which are either common to all trades, or perfectly well known and settled in the particular course of trade to which the insurance relates, it is obviously a fair presumption that the parties to the policy, as mercantile men, are conversant with such usages and have contracted with reference to them. Such usages, in fact, form part of the law-merchant, and to incorporate them with the policy is merely to admit the addition of known terms not inconsistent with the tenor of the instrument, and well understood by the contracting parties; but with regard to usages which only prevail in a given place, or amongst a particular description of persons, the presumption is the other way, and in such cases, accordingly, it must satisfactorily show that the party sought to be affected by the usage either had or might have had cognizance of it."

as to what goods are subject to general average;[37] as to the stowage of goods;[38] and as to the apportionment of the premium when all the risk is not run.[39] So in a marine insurance case evidence of usage has been admitted to show when the outward-bound risk determined and the homeward-bound risk commenced;[40] to show the length of time allowed to shippers to discharge their cargo after the arrival of the vessel in port;[41] that the owner of goods stored on deck should not receive any contribution by way of general average from the ship-owner in respect of the jettison of goods so stowed;[42] that the underwriters on ships should not be liable to contribute by way of general average in respect to such goods;[43] that the destruction of rigging while stored on the banks of the Canton river was within the policy covering a "voyage";[44] that a policy of insurance on East India ships includes a chance of their being detained in India and the risk of what is known as the country trade there;[45] that a policy from London to Madras and China, with liberty to touch, stay, and trade at any ports, etc., until the vessel shall arrive at her last loading-place in the East Indies or China, covers an intermediate voyage from Madras to Bengal, the vessel arriving at Madras too late to proceed that season to China;[46] and that ships engaged in the Newfoundland trade, after their arrival at Newfoundland, make intermediate voyages from one American port to another before beginning to load a cargo on the homeward voyage.[47] And a party may exempt himself from the consequences of the general law that the insured must provide a pilot,[48] by showing that by the usage of the port he was exempted from providing one.[49] And although in the law of marine insurance a concealment of papers amounts to a breach of warranty, it was held in an early case in the supreme court of the United States that "when the underwriters know, or, by the usage and course of the trade insured, ought to know, that certain papers ought to be on board for the purpose of protection in one event, which, in another, might endanger the property, they tacitly consent that the papers shall be so used as to protect the property."[50] So evidence of usage is competent where the question is whether the risk has been increased by taking on board a deck-load of cotton.[51]

c. Fire Insurance. What has been said as to the effect of usage on contracts of marine insurance[52] is equally applicable to contracts of fire insurance. The parties are presumed to make their agreements in accordance with the customs of their business.[53] And the general rule that one engaged in a particular business

Customary incidents of business insured.— Where a certain trade, business, or occupation is insured, the insurer is to be taken as consenting and agreeing that all its customary incidents shall be allowed, although the policy does not in express words permit it, and may even by implication forbid it. The insurance being upon a printing and book-binding establishment, and the use of camphene being necessary and customary for the conduct of the business, the insurer was held liable for a loss caused by the ignition of camphene, and this although there was a condition in the policy exempting the insurer from any loss occasioned by camphene. Harper v. City Ins. Co., 1 Bosw. (N. Y.) 520. Following the principle of this case, where a policy on a fair building insured property therein "belonging to exhibitors," it was held that the use of fire and steam to exhibit machinery, and the keeping of a restaurant, and a kitchen with ovens therein, did not defeat the insurance, and that the keeping of articles to be exhibited or to be used as means of the exhibition was not a use of the building "for the purpose of keeping or storing" them therein. New York v. Hamilton F. Ins. Co., 10 Bosw. (N. Y.) 537; New York v. Exchange F. Ins. Co., 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 424. Where a policy was issued on a building occupied as a manufactory of hat-bodies, and the conditions, among occupations denominated "extra-hazardous," included "carpenters in their own shops, or in buildings erecting or repairing," the use of a room in the building as a shop for the purpose of repairing the machinery necessary for the business of making hat-bodies was protected by the policy. Lounsbury v. Protection Ins. Co., 8 Conn. 459, 21 Am. Dec. 686. Where the policy was on a stock of flour, grain, and cooperage contained in a stone and brick steam flouring-mill, and prohibited the building from being used for mechanical operations requiring heat, the use of a kiln-drying cornmeal-mill requiring fire did not avoid the policy, if such a mill was a usual appendage of the business of a steam flouring-mill. Washington Mut. Ins. Co. v. Mechanics', etc., Mut. Ins. Co., 5 Ohio St. 450. Where a policy on the material of a photographer prohibited the keeping of kerosene in the building, if the use of a kerosene-oil stove was necessary and ordinary in the photographic business, the insured might use it without avoiding the policy. Hall v. Insurance Co. of North America, 58 N. Y. 292. Where a policy covers "a stock of dry goods and groceries, such as are usually kept in country stores," the language gives a license to keep for sale any article usually kept in country stores of that class, even though it involves the keeping of many articles coming under the head of "hazardous." Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. De Graff, 12 Mich. 124; Archer v. Merchants', etc., Ins. Co., 43 Mo. 434; Rafferty v. New Brunswick F. Ins. Co., 18 N. J. L. 480, 38 Am. Dec. 423; Leggett v. Ætna Ins. Co.. 10 Rich. (S. C.) 202. But where a policy covers a stock of merchandise "hazardous and not hazardous," no such license can be imputed, even though it be shown that the keeping of "extra-hazardous goods" was usual in such stores as that of the insured (Pindar v. Continental Ins. Co., 38 N. Y. 364, 97 Am. Dec. 795); nor where the term is restricted to a "stock of family groceries," even though the insurer knew that the plaintiff kept such goods, and the application called for insurance "upon a stock such as is usually kept in a country store" (Pindar v. Resolute F. Ins. Co., 47 N. Y. 114; People's Ins. Co. v. Kuhn, 12 Heisk. (Tenn.) 515). It being the custom of the grocery trade to keep oil and spirituous liquors in their stores for the purpose of ordinary retailing, this is not a "storing" within a policy of insurance on a grocery store prohibiting "the storing therein of oil and spirituous liquors" (Langdon v. New York Equitable Ins. Co., 1 Hall (N. Y.) 226); or, it being the custom of the dry-goods trade to keep cotton in bales for sale, such a keeping is not a violation of a condition against applying or using the store insured for storing articles of a hazardous character, cotton in bales being denominated in another part of the policy as an "article of a hazardous character" (Moore v. Protection Ins. Co., 29 Me. 97, 48 Am. Dec. 514). It being usual for dealers in fancy goods and toys to keep fireworks, a policy on the stock of a fancy-goods dealer, "with privilege to keep fire-crackers for sale," will embrace "fireworks," even though the policy provides that if the premises shall be used for keeping articles "specially hazardous" it shall be of no effect; and in this class are placed "fireworks." Steinback v. La Fayette F. Ins. Co., 54 N. Y. 90. It being usual in china factories to keep a carpenter constantly employed in and about the building making racks, shelves, etc., necessary for the proper conduct of the business, this will not be considered as within a provision in a policy as to "carpenters in their own shops, or in buildings erecting or repairing." Dylonguemare v. Tradesmen's Ins. Co., 2 Hall (N. Y.) 589. It being customary in country stores to keep a couple of incidents of that business. Thus a fire insurance company insuring a manufacturing establishment must be presumed to be familiar with the usages and practices of that trade and with the use of terms employed in that trade.[54]

d. Life Insurance. It has been held competent to prove a usage that where there has been a verbal agreement for insurance, and the terms agreed upon and entered on the books of the company, the contract of insurance is considered as valid for the insured, although the premium is not paid.[55] A usage on the part of life-insurance companies to allow thirty days grace for non-payment of premiums due, where by its terms the policy is to be forfeited if the premiums are kegs of gunpowder for sale in small quantities, this will not avoid a policy on such a store, one of the conditions of which may be that "the keeping of gunpowder for sale, or on storage upon or in the premises insured, shall render the policy void." Benzine being used in the finishing of rustic window-shades, such a use in a "manufacturing establishment," insured as such, will not avoid the policy, although prohibited in terms therein (Viele v. Germania Ins. Co., 26 Iowa 9, 96 Am. Dec. 83); nor, being used in a wagon-maker's shop, and being customarily used in the manufacture of wagons, will a fire arising from this fluid prevent a recovery on a policy which expressly provides that the company shall not be liable for damage resulting from "the use of camphene, spirit-gas, or burning-fluid" (Archer v. Merchants', etc., Ins. Co., 43 Mo. 434). Benzole being commonly used in the manufacture of patent leather, such a use is not a breach of a condition in a policy on a patent-leather manufactory which allowed the keeping of benzole in no other place than in a shed detached from the building, where the insured in conducting their business carried it as needed into the factory in an open can. Citizens' Ins. Co. v. McLaughlin, 53 Pa. St. 485. In the manufacture of brass clock-works, turpentine is used for cleaning the works, alcohol in making a mixture called lacquer, and saltpeter in making a dipping, and all are employed in the business. A policy therefore on the stock in trade of a manufacturer of brass clocks is not avoided by using and keeping these articles on hand, although they are expressly prohibited. Bryant v. Poughkeepsie Mut. Ins. Co., 17 N. Y. 200. A policy on the stock of a "rope manufacturer" will permit the business of a "rope-maker" in the building insured, although that trade is prohibited in another part of the policy. Increase of risk.— In determining whether or not there has been an increase of risk, it is necessary to ascertain what the parties must be presumed to have contemplated when the insurance was made, and this involves a consideration of the usages and incidents of the risk; because, if the change was one warranted by the usages or usual incidents of the risk, although it in fact increased the risk, it does not come within the prohibition, because it is presumed to have been contemplated by the parties. Usage rejected.— In a Scotch case it was ruled that where the defense to a life policy was that a habit of dram-drinking was concealed in the application, it was incompetent to ask whether the party was reputed a dram-drinker. The proper way was to prove the number of drams he took, and then ask a medical man what effect they would have. Promoter L. Ins. Co. v. Barrie, 5 Murr. 135. A usage of a company to require particular proof of death by the family physician of the insured cannot bind the latter, unless it was known to him when he took the policy. Tay-

5. Landlord and Tenant. Many customs in the relation of landlord and tenant have been recognized[57] by the courts: As for example the obligation to farm according to the custom of the country;[58] as to what is or is not waste;[59] to what extent and in what property rent is collectable;[60] as to the term of a tenancy;[61] as to what are and what are not fixtures;[62] as to the right to the "waygoing" crop;[63] that a tenant may leave his waygoing crop in the barn of the farm after

It has been held that where the application fixed the time for the contract to take effect, a custom on the part of the company that its policies should take effect on a different day was not admissible, because contradicting the application (Winnesheik Ins. Co. v. Holzgrafe, 53 Ill. 516, 5 Am. Rep. 64); and evidence that an agent frequently waived a condition as to payment is not admissible to raise an inference of waiver in a particular case, in the absence of other proof tending to establish it (Wood v. Poughkeepsie Mut. In Cunningham v. Fonblanque, 6 C. & P. 44, 25 E. C. L. 313, a usage was admitted in evidence between the printers and proprietors of newspapers that the latter should give to the former four weeks' notice of taking the work from them or pay them four weeks' wages. In Given v. Charron, 15 Md. 502, which was an action for a wrongful dismissal, evidence of a custom among dry-goods jobbers in Baltimore that when a clerk or salesman begins a season without a special contract he cannot be dismissed till the end of it, and that the seasons are two — one from January 1 to July 1, and the other from July 1 to January 1 — was admitted. In an action for wrongfully dismissing the editor of a newspaper, the declaration stated that he was engaged for a year. There was no direct evidence as to the time for which he was engaged. It was held that he might show that it was customary for editors of newspapers to be engaged for a year unless there was an express stipulation to the contrary. 74. A custom under which journeymen and employees are required to work for their employers a certain number of hours a day and are allowed the privilege of working for themselves at other times is good. Barnes v. Ingalls, 39 Ala. 193. Not so of a custom that a person employed to cut staves from another's bolts has a right to take and appropriate to his own use both the clippings and corner-pieces and the culls, without the consent of the owner. Wadley v. Davis, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 500. A usage on the part of business establishments to furnish each other's clerks with goods and charge them to each other has been recognized. Cameron v. Blackman, 39 Mich. 108. So of a custom whereby books sent by publishers to literary critics for purposes of review become the property of the critics. Ranous v. Hughes, 19 Misc. (N. 7. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT. It is well settled that a mercantile agency must be executed in accordance with the usage of the particular trade or market to which it relates,[80] and the authority of the agent is regulated and controlled by the usage tin v. Hilton, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 371; Reade v. Sweetzer, 6 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 9 note.

For example that a printer contracting to print for a bookseller a certain number of copies of any work is not at liberty to print from the same type, while standing, an extra number for his own disposal (Williams v. Gilman, 3 Me. 276); that the employment of an architect to make plans and designs for a building carries with it an employment to superintend its construction (Wilson v. Bauman, 80 Ill. 493); and that on a contract of hiring a slave to do ordinary and customary labor, the slave may be employed in cleaning out a well (Willis v. Harris, 26 Tex. 136).

11. OFFICE AND OFFICER. Usage may prescribe an officer's duty,[33] his powers,[34] and his compensation.[35] In regard to the filling of offices the usage of the government[36] and the custom of a church society[37] have been recognized. So the long-continued practice of the executive department of the government to sign bills passed by the legislature in a certain mode is noticed by the courts.[38] But where a justice of the peace was indicted for malpractice in office in not returning a warrant and recognizance issued by him to the supreme court, but wilfully and corruptly suppressing it, evidence of a practice of other justices going to excuse defendant's acts was rejected.[39]

13. NEGLIGENCE. What is negligence and what is due care may depend upon the customs and habits of people in the same place and under similar circumstances.[41] So the drivers of horses and carriages on the highways[42] and the masters or pilots of ships and steamboats on the waters[43] must follow the customary mode of passing each other, and a failure to comply with such custom will amount to negligence. And the presentment of a check may be shown by usage to be in time, which without such proof would be deemed to be negligently delayed.[44] Again where the question was whether a guest at a hotel had been guilty of negligence in leaving the key in the door of his room, in which was a

Evidence of a custom among merchants to charge interest on capital invested by the principal in business is incompetent, in a suit by a salesman on an express contract entitling him to a share of the net profits of his principal's business for his services, without providing that interest on the capital should be deducted. Paine v. Howells, 90 N. Y. 660.

Illustrations.— Where goods in the hands of a carrier were injured while he was descending a river with two flat-boats lashed together, the fact that this was a customary mode of navigating the river was held relevant on the question of negligence. Johnson v. Lightsey, 34 Ala. 169, 73 Am. Dec. 450. And a custom of the officers of a boat on the river to notify passengers of their arrival at their place of destination will render the carrier liable for taking a passenger who had failed to land at the proper place through not receiving the proper notice beyond his destination. Carson v. Leathers, 57 Miss. 650. So where a railroad company was sued for an injury to a passenger, received while alighting from the train at the depot, and the negligence charged was the failure of the train to stop a sufficient length of time to enable plaintiff to alight in safety, evidence of the usual and customary period of the train's stopping at the place was admitted. Fuller v. Naugatuck R. Co., 21 Conn. 557. And in an action for an injury to a passenger, one of the questions being whether a passenger is bound to wait in the depot until the arrival of the train, or whether he may go on to and stand upon the platform while it approaches, the usage of other passengers there is relevant. large sum of money, evidence of the usage of guests at the hotel of leaving keys in the doors of their rooms was held to be relevant.[45] But usage and custom will not excuse a carrier for neglect of any duty which he owes to a passenger[46] or to a customer whose goods he is bound to carry safely.[47] And in an action against a town for an injury caused by a defective bridge, the question as to how the particular bridge compared as to safety and repair with other bridges of like character on roads of like amount of travel is irrelevant.[48] So in an action against a railroad company for damages caused by fire from one of its locomotives, the issue being whether defendant had used due caution and diligence in preventing the spread of the fire, evidence that it was not the usual practice among railroads in that section of the country to employ watchmen is inadmissible.[49] And a usage cannot excuse an agent for any wilful neglect in securing the property of his principal.[50]

14. TRESPASS. What is a reasonable and proper use of a public or private way depends much on public usage. The general use and acquiescence of the public is evidence of the right. Many acts, although technically trespasses, are, considering the usages and customs of the community, not so.[51] So where there is a general usage in a neighborhood to let cattle run at large upon the highway and uninclosed lands adjoining, one adopting the usage is taken to have thereby licensed the cattle of others to run at large on his lands so situated.[52] But a cus-

Invalid customs.— Where a person had erected a bay-window to his house, projecting over the land of an adjoining owner, the court said: "If there be a custom in Boston to erect bay-windows, balconies and other structures over the streets, provided they do not interfere with the rights of the public, by proprietors who own the soil of the street, such a custom has no application to the case. If it be the custom to erect them over the land of other people, such a custom is illegal; and the defendant cannot justify himself in occupying his neighbor's property as a part of his dwelling-house on the ground that such trespasses are customary in Boston." Codman v. Evans, 5 Allen (Mass.) 308, 310, 81 Am. Dec. 748. tom to take anything from another's land could not be supported at common law, the rule being that a profit a prendre could not be claimed in alieno solo.[53] So a custom to occupy or take from the land of another is bad.[54] What is a reasonable use of water in a stream is always a question of fact, and is to be determined by the capacity of the stream, the nature and character of the works sought to be propelled thereby, the machinery used, or the reasonable necessities of the mill-owner in view of all the facts, and finally by the custom of the country.[55]

E. Explaining Written Contract — 1. In General — a. Statement of Rule. It is well settled that evidence of custom and usage is admissible to explain the meaning of a written instrument. The admission of evidence of a custom is not dependent on the rule that parol evidence is not admissible to vary a written contract, but on the ground that the law makes the custom a part of the contract.[56]

b. Common Words and Terms. While words in a contract relating to the ordinary transactions of life are to be construed according to their plain, ordinary, and popular meaning, yet if, in reference to the subject-matter of the contract, particular words and expressions have by usage acquired a meaning different from their plain, ordinary, and popular meaning, the parties using those words in such a contract must be taken to have used them in their peculiar sense, and that sense may be fixed by parol evidence.[57] The evidence is not incompetent because the

A colt five weeks old, following its dam, was held not to be running at large, the universal custom of the country being for colts thus to follow the dam. Hillyard v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 8 Ont. 583.

Where plaintiff's colt had been killed by, as was alleged, the negligence of defendant in removing trees on his land, it was held that, it being shown to be the custom of the neighborhood to permit horses and cattle to run at large, defendant could not resist the action on the ground that the colt was trespassing on his land when it was killed. Durham v. Musselman, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 96, 18 Am. Dec. 133. But in an action of trespass for killing a mare with dogs, that it is the custom of the neighborhood to set dogs on horses which broke into fences or inclosures is irrelevant. words are in their ordinary meaning unambiguous, for the principle of admission is that words perfectly unambiguous in their ordinary meaning are used by the parties in a different sense.[58] Thus evidence of usage has been admitted to show that "a thousand" meant twelve hundred;[59] "a week," a week only during a portion of the year;[60] and "a day," only a working-day.[61] So evidence has been admitted to expound the word "currency,"[62] as used in negotiable instruments; and the terms "bond,"[63] "borrowed money,"[64] and "expected,"[65] as used in other contracts.

That parties to a contract had a different understanding concerning the usage governing it does not bring the case within the rule that where the minds of the parties do not meet as to its subject-matter or its essential terms there is no binding contract, for the difference is only as to its legal effect. certain rule, but prescribes that the parties may contract otherwise, a usage will not take the place of a contract.[69] And where a contract is by word of mouth, and the controversy is not as to the meaning of the terms used by the parties, but as to what precise terms had been in fact used, evidence of custom is not admissible.[70]

2. CONTRACTS OF SALE — a. Quality and Description of Goods. The meaning of technical terms, or of words not in themselves technical except when used in a particular trade, has been explained by evidence of usage in cases where the question was one of quality or description.[71] Thus evidence of usage among dealers has been admitted to show the meaning of "season," in a contract to pur-

Illustrations.— Where one contracted to sell "1170 bales of gambier," and the purchaser refused to receive the bales, evidence was held admissible to show that by the usage of the trade a bale of gambier was understood to mean a package of a particular description, and that the contract was not satisfied by a tender of packages of a totally different size and description. Gorrissen v. Perrin, 2 C. B. N. S. 681, 3 Jur. N. S. 867, 27 L. J. C. P. 29, 5 Wkly. Rep. 709, 89 E. C. L. 681. And on a sale of "18 pockets Kent hops, at 100s," evidence may be given that by the usage of the hop trade a contract so worded means one hundred shillings a hundred-weight. Spicer v. Cooper, 1 Q. B. 424, 1 G. & D. 52, 5 Jur. 1036, 10 L. J. Q. B. 241, 41 E. C. L. 608. So in a contract for the sale of "all patterns that are staple and down to date," evidence regarding the standard usually adopted by the trade in selecting and purchasing such patterns is admissible. Hayden v. Frederickson, 55 Nebr. 156, 75 N. W. 530. On a contract for the sale of "prime barley," the quality called for by such terms may be ascertained by mercantile usage. Whitmore v. Coates, 14 Mo. 9. So as to "strictly choice" apples (Long v. J. K. Armsby Co., 43 Mo. App. 253) and "yearlings" in the cattle business (Parks v. O'Connor, 70 Tex. 377, 8 S. W. 104). So evidence is admissible to show the meaning of "product," in an instrument which recited: "Received from teams in our pork house, No. 114 West Harrison street, 280 hogs, weighing 45,545 pounds, the product of which we promise to deliver to the order of Messrs. Stevens & Brother indorsed hereon. G. & J. Stewart." Stewart v. Smith, 28 Ill. 397. And it may be shown that "300 bales S. F. drills, 7¼; 190 cases blue do., 8¾," mean the first quantities at seven and one-quarter, and eight and three-quarter cents a yard (Salmon Falls Mfg. Co. v. Goddard, 14 How. (U. S.) 446, 14 L. ed. 493); that "mess pork of Scott & Co." means mess pork manufactured by Scott & Co. (Powell v. Horton, 2 Bing N. Cas. 668, 2 Hodges 12, 5 L. J. C. P. 204, 3 Scott 110, 29 E. C. L. 710); and that oil is "wet" if it contains any water, however little (Warde v. Stuart, 1 C. B. N. S. 88, 5 Wkly. Rep. 6, 87 E. C. L. 88). And the following terms in written contracts of sale have been explained by parol evidence of usage: "Copper-fastened vessel" (Shepherd v. Kain, 5 B. & Ald. 240, 24 Rev. Rep. 344, 7 E. C. L. 137; Schneider v. Heath, 3 Campb. 506, 14 Rev. Rep. 506); "No. 1 log" (Busch v. Pollock, 41 Mich. 64, 1 N. W. 921. And see Hopkins v. Sanford, 41 Mich. 243, 2 N. W. 39); "good team," in a contract for a mower which should be "capable, with one man and a good team, of cutting and raking off from twelve to twenty acres of grain a day" (Ganson v. Madigan, 15 Wis. 144, 82 Am. Dec. 659); "best E X F F madder" (Dana v. Fiedler, 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 463); "150 tons of soft English lead, of Walker, Parker & Walker brand" (Pollen v. Le Roy, 30 N. Y. 549); and "fresh seed," in a contract for onion seed (Ferris v. Comstock, 33 Conn. 513).

chase and deliver corn "on board our boats the coming season";[72] to show the meaning of "good custom cowhide boots," in an agreement to pay for a number of those articles at a certain price;[73] to show what is called for on a contract to deliver "winter strained lamp oil,"[74] and on a contract to deliver "good merchantable hay";[75] to explain the meaning of "prime logs,"[76] and "merchantable pine lumber";[77] to show that the words "with all faults," in a contract for the sale of hides, mean all that are not inconsistent with the identity of the goods;[78] that under a contract to build a "drawbridge" it is the common understanding among persons skilled in bridge-building that the bridge should be so constructed as to be easily turned in two or three minutes by one man;[79] that "cider" in a contract of sale meant the juice of the apples as soon as pressed;[80] that "gas-fixtures" in a contract did not include meters;[81] and that a certain glass is known in the market as "German cylinder glass."[82]

b. Quantity, Terms, and Price. In like manner and for like reason evidence of usage on the question as to quantity, terms, and price is admissible.[83] Thus where a contract called for "sixty thousand cubic feet square white-oak lumber," a custom in the market to reject fractions of a foot in its measurement was held to be admissible.[84] And where goods were "to be taken by" a certain time, custom is admissible to show that these words meant as the purchaser might from time to time specifically order, and that if all were not ordered within the time specified it was customary to send the purchaser a bill for the balance, and to hold such balance subject to his order for a reasonable time.[85] So usage has defined a cord of wood to mean one hundred and twenty-eight cubic feet.[86] It has also defined the manner of weighing paper in the paper trade.[87] So it is competent to show that ten ounces of silk thread signified between dealers not a full pound but a trade pound.[88] Again it is competent to show by commercial usage that the words "net balance" mean the balance of the proceeds after deducting the expenses incident to the sale;[89] that the words "terms cash" in a bill of goods imply that a discount would be made if it was paid in six months;[90] that where goods are sold to a broker at a certain price "cash" a discount is allowed;[91] that "about" so many tons of hemp has a definite meaning when used in a delivery order;[92] that a contract for the sale of gold "short" means a sale of that which the seller does not at the time have, but which he expects to be able to purchase at a lower price;[93] that the word "honored" means paid, and not accepted, in the phrase in a merchant's letter, "when the bills are duly honored";[94] that upon a note payable in cotton yarn, at "wholesale factory prices," a certain discount is allowed by manufacturers and dealers;[95] and that on a sale "on note with approved security" negotiable notes are meant.[96] And evidence of usage has been admitted to show the meaning of "your wool," in a written offer to buy "your wool, 16*s* per stone, deliverable at Liverpool;"[97] to show the meaning of the words "ex boats Spencer and Galt," in a contract for "two boat loads western mixed corn in B.'s stores, Clinton wharf, ex boats Spencer and Galt";[98] to show the meaning of "season," in a contract for the delivery of grain "the coming season";[99] of "month";[1] of "for shipment in June or July";[2] of "to be paid for in from six to eight weeks";[3] of "on freight";[4] of "bale";[5] and of "six per cent off for cash."[6] So as to "buyer's option"[7] and "immediate delivery."[8] And abbreviations and ambiguous expressions as to the price in a written contract are properly explained by proof as to the customary meaning of such characters or contractions.[9]

3. Contracts For Work and Materials. Contracts for work to be performed and materials to be furnished are the frequent subject of construction by evidence of usage. Thus the number of bricks laid in a pavement under a contract may be computed by allowing a given number to the square yard according to the usage of pavers.[10] And the same has been held of a usage of measuring cellar

In a contract to construct "two boilers and a cylinder for a steam engine," it may be proved that those terms, used as terms of the trade, meant the entire engine. James v. Bostwick, Wright (Ohio) 143.

Where A and B entered into a contract by which A was to cut and fit the stone for walls of a tunnel at a specified price per foot, "the face of the work that shows to be measured, and none else," and A claimed that "the face of the work" included all the cut and dressed surface exposed, both horizontal and perpendicular, while B insisted on an oppowalls.[11] So also a contract requiring "brick to be laid close, and the joints thoroughly flushed with mortar" may be controlled by a custom among bricklayers of the locality which gives meaning to the term "flushed."[12] Where by a building contract plaintiff agreed to make certain alterations and repairs upon defendant's house, for which the latter agreed to pay a certain amount "per day" for each man employed, it was held competent to show a usage among carpenters that ten hours constituted a "day's work, and that they were entitled to charge one day and a quarter for each day during which the men worked twelve hours and a half."[13] So where a contract for the erection of a building specifies the dimensions of the walls, floors, etc., but says nothing about the roof, it may be shown by evidence of the custom of the trade that such a contract did not call for a tin roof, or indeed for any roof.[14] And on a similar principle and for the same reasons evidence of usage has been received to prove the meaning of "hard-pan" in a contract to make excavations,[15] and to explain the terms "business card," "advertising chart," and the word "published," in an agreement to pay another a certain sum "for inserting business card in two hundred copies of his advertising chart, to be paid when the chart is published."[16]

4. Principal and Agent. Where in a written contract of sale signed by brokers the names of the principals did not appear, evidence was held admissible of a usage of trade that when a broker purchased without disclosing the name of his principal he was liable to be looked to as principal.[17] And evidence is admissible to show that the word "agent" in the piano trade includes those who buy and sell pianos on their own account,[18] and as to what share of commission brokers in a transaction arising out of a written authority are entitled to.[19] So a usage which the agents of a railroad company have allowed to grow up in the business and be acted on is binding on such company, although contrary to its established regulations and unknown to its managing officers.[20]

custom would be admissible to show that the words "whaling voyage" include the taking of sea-elephants on the beaches of islands and coasts as well as the catching of whales wherever found;[38] that the word "proceeds" includes the identical goods insured if brought back on the return voyage;[39] and that the term "particular average" does not include expenses which are necessarily incurred in order to save the subject-matter of insurance from a loss for which the insurers would have been liable, and that these are usually allowed under the name of particular charges.[40] So the words "port risk" in a policy may be explained.[41] It has been held that the words "sail from St. Domingo in the month of October" were to be understood, when taken in connection with the usage of the trade, as indicating that the ship would not sail until the twenty-fifth.[42] And the phrase, "warranted to depart with convoy," has been literally construed according to the usage among merchants.[43] If geographical terms are used in a policy, it may be shown that the meaning put upon them by mercantile men is different from their common meaning as given in books.[44]

Where a bill of lading does not define what shall constitute a car-load, a general custom among railroad men and shippers, by which a car-load is made to consist of a certain number of pounds, governs the contract. Goode v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 92 Iowa 371, 60 N. W. 631. And where a bill of lading recited that certain cotton was shipped on a specified steamboat, it was ruled admissible to show that by the custom of the river, when the river was low, barges were carried in tow and freight stored at the option of the carrier on either the boat or the barge. McClure v. Cox, 32 Ala. 617, 70 Am. Dec. 552. And where a railroad company received goods addressed to a point beyond its terminus and gave a bill of lading for the transportation of the goods to its terminus, it was held that parol evidence was admissible to prove that there was a custom in such cases to deliver to a connecting carrier, such evidence not tending to vary or contradict the bill of lading. Hooper v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 27 Wis. 81, 9 Am. Rep. 439. So evidence of usage is admissible to explain a bill of lading, as to the time in which loading is to be done or delivery is to be made. Higgins v. U. S. Mail Steamship Co., 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,469, 3 Blatchf. 282;

tomers, "Please send the marbles not insured," are to be read "according to the understanding of the language between carrier and customers."[47] And evidence of a custom to present bills for wharfage as soon as the vessel arrives is admissible to establish what the intention of the parties was as to the time when such bills were due.[48] Again evidence of usage has been frequently resorted to to explain charter-parties and maritime contracts of like character.[49] So if the charter of a railroad company provides that the company may charge certain rates for the transportation of "heavy articles," and other rates on "articles of measurement," the custom prevailing at the time the charter was granted must decide to which class an article belongs.[50]

9. Deeds. Usage is admissible to explain the language of a deed,[51] when ambiguous or equivocal.[52] The form of deeds is also a matter of usage.[53] A purchaser under a land contract that does not specify what sort of deed he is entitled to may demand a deed with the customary covenants.[54] And usage may prove a dedication.[55] Again where a lease did not contain any provision as to the length of time it was to run, and no agreement as to time, parol evidence of a custom or usage as to the length of time in such cases was held to be admissible.[56] And in enforcing a lessee's covenant to pay all taxes "which may be payable or assessed in respect of the premises or any part thereof during the term," the lessor may prove a usage to apportion the taxes among the different tenants according to the amount of rent paid by each.[57]

10. Wills. Evidence of usage is of value in arriving at the intent of a testator

The words "perils of the seas" having been judicially construed not to cover an injury to a cargo by rats or other vermin, evidence of mercantile usage and understanding at New York and New Orleans is not admissible to show that injury by rats was included in the exception of "perils of the seas" in a bill of lading. Aymar v. Astor, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 266. And a loss by an accidental fire not being within this phrase, a custom to include it therein is subject to the same

And where a bill of lading contained the words, "with shipper's reconsignment option," evidence that by usage the option was exercised by the consignee also was held incompetent.[67] Again on receipt of property with directions to deliver it at the consignee's place of business, the obligation of the carrier is not satisfied by a delivery at a wharf, although such was his custom in all similar cases;[68] and placing a horse in an open car when the owner ordered it to be placed in a closed car will make a railroad company responsible for its loss or injury from such change, although its custom was to carry horses in either kind of car indiscriminately.[69] So too an express contract by the sender of a message with a telegraph company cannot be varied by the usage of a local office.[70]

In an action by a consignor to recover the value of goods delivered to a carrier, which the latter agreed to transport and tender to the consignee at the destination, evidence of a custom dispensing with the requirement of tender of delivery in the case of freight shipments as distinguished from express matter was held to be inadmissible. Diamant v. Long Island R. Co., 30 Misc. (N. Y.) 444, 62 N. Y. Suppl. 519. And where wheat was to be transported by the carrier to New York on account and order of plaintiff, and the bill of lading contained the memorandum, "Notify E. S. Brown, New York," and the carrier delivered the wheat to Brown instead of to plaintiff, it was held not to be admissible to show that by the custom of New York under such bills of lading property was rightly delivered to the person to be notified. Bank of Commerce v. Bissell, 72 N. Y. 615; Farmers', etc., Nat. Bank v. Erie R. Co., 72 N. Y. 188. And see Hayton v. Irwin, 28 Wkly. Rep. 665. So where goods are shipped by a bill of lading running to the order of the shipper, a custom is not admissible to make the consignee liable for deterioration during transit, since it is in violation of the terms of the contract. Charles v. Carter, 96 Tenn. 607, 36 S. W. 396. And where a railroad company agreed to transport a certain quantity of hay, no time being mentioned, for a certain price, a custom of railroads for all special rates to expire at the end of each year was rejected. Martin v. Union Pac. R. Co., 1 Wyo. 143. Again under a bill of lading for the carriage of treasure from San Francisco via the Isthmus to New York, which made the carrier liable as such for its transportation across the isthmus, evidence was held to be inadmissible to prove that it was the custom of shippers of treasure to insure it against risks upon the isthmus, or that there was a custom by which the carrier of gold refused to assume any risk of transportation across the isthmus. Thus where a policy was upon "the body, tackle, apparel, ordnance, munition, boat, and other furniture of the ship called the Thames," evidence of a usage at Lloyd's that boats slung on the ship's quarter were not protected by such policy was rejected. Blackett v. Royal Exch. Assur. Co., 2 Cromp. & J. 244, 1 L. J. Exch. 101, 2 Tyrw. 266. And where oil had been lost by leakage, caused by the violent laboring of the ship in a cross sea, the court refused to admit evidence of a mercantile usage that unless the cargo was shifted or the casks damaged underwriters were not liable for leakage as a "peril of the sea." Gabay v. Lloyd, 3 B. & C. 793, 5 D. & R. 641, 3 L. J. K. B. O. S. 116, 27 Rev. Rep. 486, 10 E. C. L. 359; Crofts v. Marshall, 7 C. & P. 597, 32 E. C. L. 778. And covering a certain class of risks at a stipulated premium a usage to abate a portion of it cannot affect the contract.[72] And so to an action on a policy against a fire company for the amount of the loss insured by it, a custom of the company to contribute and pay on such policy only in proportion to what is paid on the same goods insured in another company is no defense.[73] The words "free from average," having a certain and well-settled meaning, cannot be construed by the public or the officers of insurance companies as denoting something different from their general acceptation.[74] And evidence of commercial usage is not proper to show that a policy executed in blank is equivalent to a policy "for whom it may concern."[75] And where a policy obliges the insurer to pay the value of the net freight, a usage to pay two thirds of the gross freight is bad.[76] The word "advances" in a marine insurance policy does not cover the outfit of the vessel; and evidence that before the policy was executed it was orally agreed that the term should mean something different from its ordinary meaning or that established by usage is not admissible to vary the written agreement.[77] Again evidence of a usage among insurance underwriters to require a written application is incompetent to contradict evidence of the assured tending to prove an oral insurance contract.[78]

4. Landlord and Tenant. The legal right of a landlord under an express contract for a time certain cannot be evaded by a custom.[79] And if a tenant should agree in his lease that the landlord was to have the waygoing crop, the custom of the country giving it to the tenant would not be allowed to prevail against the express contract.[80] So if parties agree to leave a mine "in good working order," a custom among miners to remove the pillars and supports is inadmissible.[81]

5. Master and Servant. Where a contract of hiring is for a term certain, a custom of the trade for the master or the servant to determine it at any time where the policy was on "the Swedish brig Sophia," this was held to be a warranty that the vessel was Swedish, and evidence was rejected which was offered to show that the vessel was in fact an American ship. Lewis v. Thatcher, 15 Mass. 431. Again where the policy read, "To port in Cuba, and at and thence to port of advice and discharge in Europe," evidence of a usage for such vessels to stop at two ports in the island was held incompetent, because repugnant to the language of the contract. Hearne v. New England Mut. Mar. Ins. Co., 20 Wall. (U. S.) 488, 22 L. ed. 395. And see Seccomb v. Provincial Ins. Co., 10 Allen (Mass.) 305. And where a policy stipulated that the risk on the goods was to commence "from and immediately following the loading thereof on board the sail vessel or boat at New Orleans," it was ruled that usage could not render the insurer liable for a loss while on the wharf awaiting transportation or while being carried overland by rail. Smith v. Mobile Nav., etc., Ins. Co., 30 Ala. 167. And see Hall v. Janson, 3 C. L. R. 737, 4 E. & B. 500, 1 Jur. N. S. 571, 24 L. J. Q. B. 97, 3 Wkly. Rep. 213, 82 E. C. L. 500; Hare v. Barstow, 8 Jur. 928. So where a policy insured a wharf-boat "lying at the wharf at the city of Evansville, Indiana," it was not competent to prove a custom prevailing at Evansville of removing property of the character of that insured from that place to a neighboring ice harbor for safety during the season of running ice. Franklin Ins. Co. v. Humphrey, 65 Ind. 549, 32 Am. Rep. 78.

So where the premiums to be paid are expressly stated in the policy, evidence of a usage as to the rate of premiums is inadmissible. Hartshorn v. Shoe, etc., Dealers' Ins. Co., 15 Gray (Mass.) 240. without notice is inadmissible to control the contract.[82] So where a cooper covenanted "to instruct, or cause to be instructed in the trade of a cooper," an apprentice indentured to him, a custom for coopers to send their apprentices on whaling voyages was held to be repugnant to the contract and inadmissible.[83] And evidence of a custom entitling architects, on completion of the plans and specifications, to two per cent of the total estimated cost of the work is not admissible, where the contract expressly provides for a compensation of three per cent on the total cost of the work, with payments to be made on monthly estimates.[84]

6. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT. Evidence of a usage is not admissible where an agent's contract is clear and unambiguous as to his duties or his compensation.[85] So where a commission merchant is directed to sell for cash, a custom among commission merchants to deliver articles under cash sales and wait a week or ten days for payment cannot confer authority on him to give such credit.[86] And where a note authorized the payee, to whom stocks had been given as collateral security, to sell them in a certain contingency, evidence that where stock was deposited with a broker as collateral security it was the general usage of brokers for the latter to hypothecate or dispose of it at pleasure, and on payment or tender of the principal debt to return an equal number of shares of the same kind of stock was rejected.[87]

7. VENDOR AND PURCHASER. And where A sued a baseball club for breach of a written contract of hiring, whereby he contracted with them "to play ball . . . for the season of 1892, for the sum of three thousand ($3,000) dollars," evidence of a custom that all professional baseball clubs had the right on ten days' notice to discharge a player who does not play satisfactorily was held to be inadmissible. Under a written contract to deliver wool "in good order" a custom which would relieve the vendor from the obligation is inadmissible. Polhemus v. Heiman, 50 Cal. 438. A usage that a sale of hides was subject to the approval of the purchaser or of an inspector was held to be repugnant to the following contract in a broker's book, and therefore inadmissible: "Boston, September 9, 1865. IV. ESTABLISHMENT.

A. Pleading[95] — 1. Necessity. A general usage or custom need not be pleaded;[96] but the custom of a particular place[97] and local commercial usages must be pleaded; and so of a custom to excuse the non-performance of a duty prescribed by law.[98] A custom introduced as an affirmative defense or for the purpose of recoupment, it seems, should be specially pleaded.[99]

2. Sufficiency. Where a local usage is set up all the requisites of a valid usage should be averred;[1] but if a custom is set forth generally and it is proved that there are exceptions it is a variance.[2] A usage is not sufficiently pleaded by

B. Evidence[4] — 1. Necessity of Proof.[5] General customs of the country and the general customs of merchants are judicially noticed by the courts;[6] but local and particular usages must be proved like other facts and necessarily by parol evidence.[7]

2. Burden of Proof. The custom must be proved by the party setting it up; the burden is on him.[8]

3. Order of Proof and Proper Questions. The court must know, from a distinct statement by the party making the offer to prove the existence of a usage, what the usage is before evidence of its existence is admissible;[9] and it has been held that a question to a witness as to what was the general custom in regard to certain transactions is not admissible before the existence of such a custom has been established by evidence.[10] When a witness is interrogated as to a custom, the object and pertinency of the proof should first be shown, either by the question itself or independently, in order that the court may understand its relevancy.[11] Either party may give evidence of a custom without accompanying it with direct evidence that it was known to the opposite party, provided he intends, on all the evidence to be produced in the case, to show that knowledge.[12] To ask a wit-

Allegations in an answer that plaintiff sent cotton to factors to sell or otherwise dispose of as they might think proper for and according to the custom of the trade, and that the factors held themselves out as the owners of the cotton with plaintiff's consent, are sufficient to admit evidence that plaintiff had authorized the factors to use and dispose of the cotton as their own. ness how a certain kind of business is done, as for example the usual mode of transferring notes and drafts from one bank to another, is not asking a question of law.[13]

4. Admissibility of Evidence — a. Parol Evidence. The usage of trade may be proved by parol, whether it arises out of a public written law, the edicts or instructions of a foreign government, and whether the trade be allowed or prohibited by such edicts or instructions.[14]

b. Documentary Evidence — (i) In General. Where a party relies upon the reputation of a mining district contained in a book, he must put in evidence the whole book. He cannot offer a single extract or clause alone.[15]

(ii) Published Decisions. The usages of the land-office must be proved by its published decisions.[16] A reported case in which a certain commercial usage was held to be established by testimony is relevant in subsequent cases between other parties, involving a similar usage at the time and place, or at a time and place not far removed.[17] And the decisions of state courts are evidence in the federal courts of local usages.[18]

c. Opinion Evidence — (i) In General. A usage of trade cannot be proved by the opinion of witnesses as to the law or as to what should be the rule. The witness or witnesses must testify to the existence of the usage.[19] The custom must be proved by instances and not by opinion.[20]

(N. Y.) 378, to the effect that the proper order being to prove the usage first and the notice afterward, evidence of the usage may well be excluded when the party offering it does not intimate his intention to follow it by proof of knowledge of some kind, either express or presumptive.

Iron Cliffs Co. v. Buhl, 42 Mich. 86, 3 N. W. 269.

19. The custom of merchants or mercantile usage does not depend upon the private opinions of merchants as to what the law is, or even upon their opinions publicly expressed, but it depends upon their acts. The inquiry is not into the opinions of traders and merchants as to the law upon a mercantile question, but for the evidence of a fact, viz., the usage or practice in the course of mercantile business in the particular case.

(II) As to Construction of Words. The opinions of merchants or other persons engaged in a particular trade or business are admitted by the courts for the purpose of ascertaining the sense in which certain words or mercantile terms are used in contracts.[21] This meaning being ascertained their opinion as to its legal effect is of course irrelevant.[22]

d. Evidence of Customs at Different Places or in Different Trades. The English courts hold that to prove the manner of conducting a particular trade at one place, evidence may be given as to the manner in which it is carried on in another place;[23] but such evidence is generally rejected in the American courts;[24] and where the custom in one place is proved, evidence that it is different in another is inadmissible.[25]

The principal having accepted part of the raisins, and not having accepted the rest, F & D brought an action on the contract against M & W, and sought to make them personally liable by the custom of the trade. tom is not established.[27] The custom must be given in evidence, and may not be left to be found by the jury from their own familiarity with business affairs.[28] In weighing the testimony of witnesses as to trade usage, the jury should consider the extent to which any of the witnesses may have an interest in the result of the litigation which might color their evidence.[29]

b. Quantum of Evidence — (I) In General. It is not necessary in order to prove a valid custom that all the witnesses on both sides of the case should agree concerning it.[30]

(II) Proof by One Witness. The testimony of one witness who has adequate means of knowledge may be sufficient to prove the existence of a usage in a given trade or business;[31] but a usage of a particular business is not sufficiently proved by the testimony of only one witness to support it, where another

But if one set of witnesses prove that they knew of and followed a certain custom in some localities and as to some contracts, and another set show that there was no such custom in other localities and as to other contracts, and none of them state that the custom is notorious, the evidence simply shows a custom local and partial and is insufficient. C. Competency of Witness to Prove Custom.[33] The witness or witnesses called to give evidence of the existence of a usage may do so from their own knowledge and experience or from information derived through the course of trade;[34] all that is necessary is that they should have occupied such a position as to know of its existence as a fact.[35] That a witness knew of a custom existing at one time does not prove that he had a knowledge of its existence at another.[36]

D. Questions of Law and Fact. Proof of a usage or custom involves questions of both law and fact. It is a question of law what is a sufficient usage to bind the parties;[37] for how long a time, at what places, and with what degree of uniformity it must have been observed; whether, in short, a given state of facts establishes a usage is a question for the court.[38] Whether such a state of facts has been proved is a question for the jury,[39] and also whether the parties acted

An erroneous ruling excluding as immaterial evidence of a custom is cured by a charge to the jury recognizing a general custom of the character sought to be proved. Clark v. Cox, 32 Mich. 204.

The mere fact of a conflict in the testimony as to the existence of a usage or custom pleaded does not as a matter of law negative such custom; and if plaintiff has produced evidence which, when fairly and reasonably considered, would prove the alleged custom, with reference to the usage.[40] On the other hand the reasonableness of an alleged custom is a question of law for the court,[41] and it is error to submit it to the jury.[42] Where evidence of usage is given to control the construction of a written instrument the jury are to determine its effect;[43] but when the jury have decided on the meaning of the terms by the assistance of the usage it is still for the court to construe the entire contract or document.[44] the question is for the jury, under proper instructions. Milroy v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 98 Iowa 188, 67 N. W. 276.

I. DEFINITION.

Customs are duties charged upon commodities on their being imported into or exported from a country.[1]

II. IMPOSITION IN GENERAL.

A. Authority For — 1. IN GENERAL — a. Constitutional Limitations. Under our system of government authority to lay and collect duties, imposts, or excises is placed entirely within the hands of congress,[2] and no duty can be lawfully collected unless provision is made therefor.[3]

b. What Constitutes Exports and Imports. The words "exports and imports" as used in the federal constitution[4] refer only to property.[5] The term "export," if properly applied, refers only to goods exported to a foreign country.[6] To con-

Other definitions are: "Taxes levied upon goods and merchandise imported or exported." Bouvier L. Dict. [citing Story Const. § 949].

"The duties, toll, tribute, or tariff, payable upon merchandise exported and imported." 1 Bl. Comm. 313.

["The term 'customs'] seems to be derived from the French word coustum or coutum which signifies toll or tribute, and owes its own etymology to the word coust which signfies price, charge, or, as we have adopted it in English, cost." 1 Bl. Comm. 314, note v.

The most ancient part of this specie of revenue arose, it would seem, only from exports, the consideration therefor being not only the privilege of taking goods from the realm, but also as an aid to the king in the maintenance of ports and havens, and in the protection of merchants from pirates. 1 Bl. Comm. 314. It has been said that the right to make such exactions was an inheritance of the king by common law. 1 Dyer 43*b* (24). The better authority, however, is to the contrary. 1 Bl. Comm. 314 [citing 2 Inst. 58, 59], holding that the king's first claim to them was by grant of parliament 3 Edw. I.

A. 527, where the court say: "In the outset, it will be conceded that revenue statutes are enacted under the general power of the government to impose a tax; that in order to sustain the tax in any given case it must affirmatively appear that the power to impose it comes within the letter and spirit of the law authorizing it."

The purpose of such enactments is not only to supply the government with revenue, but in some instances to protect or stimulate home manufacture as well. See infra, II, B, 1, a, (I).

4. U. S. Const. art. 1, § 10, cl. 2.

5. Therefore free human beings (New York v. Compagnie Generale Transatlantique, 107 U. S. 59, 2 S. Ct. 87, 27 L. ed. 383) or a dead human body (In re Wong Yung Quy, 2 Fed. 624, 6 Sawy. 442), are not within the meaning of the constitution. See also COMMERCE, X, B, 2, a [7 Cyc. 472].

6. Dooley v. U. S., 183 U. S. 151, 22 S. Ct. 62, 46 L. ed. 128, holding that Porto Rico was not a foreign country within the meaning of U. S. Const. art. 1, § 9, declaring that no taxes or duties shall be laid on articles exported from any state, and that the goods sent out under the Foraker Act of April 12, 1900, could not be considered as exported unless they went to a foreign country. See also Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U. S. 244, 21 S. Ct. 770, 45 L. ed. 1088; Dooley v. U. S., 182 U. S. 222, 21 S. Ct. 762, 45 L. ed. 1074; and COMMERCE, X, B, 2, a [7 Cyc. 472].

stitute an importation within the meaning of the customs laws goods must be voluntarily[7] brought from a foreign jurisdiction[8] to a proper port of entry[9] within the jurisdiction of the United States,[10] with an intent to unlade the Transportation from one state into another is not within the meaning of the customs laws. Pittsburgh, etc., Coal Co. v. Louisiana, 156 U. S. 590, 15 S. Ct. 459, 39 L. ed. 544; Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 622, 5 S. Ct. 1091, 29 L. ed. 257; Hinson v. Lott, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 148, 19 L. ed. 387; Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 123, 19 L. ed. 382.

The intended disposition of goods after they have been landed in a foreign country is not material in determining whether or not they are "exported" within the meaning of that term. Indeed it would be almost impossible to administer the customs laws if such an inquiry was pertinent, and a collector could seize goods upon the pretext that the intent of the exporter was to bring them back again, whether they had been in a foreign jurisdiction one month, one year, or twenty years; but from the various definitions given to the term "export" it would seem to be clear that merchandise is exported from this country when it is landed in a foreign country. The moment that goods become "imports" to a foreign country they become "exports" as to this country. Kidd v. Flagler, 54 Fed. 367. Nor would the fact that a cargo, after its removal from a warehouse for importation, had not been landed in some foreign port or place, affect its character as an importation when subsequently brought within the jurisdiction of our revenue laws. McGlinchy v. U. S., 16 Fed. Cas. No. 8,803, 4 Cliff. 312.

7. The Concord, 9 Cranch (U. S.) 387, 3 L. ed. 768 [followed in The Nereid, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 171, 4 L. ed. 63], where it was held that goods brought by superior force, inevitable necessity, or salvors into the United States, are not "imported" in the sense that the right to duties necessarily attaches. If, however, such goods are afterward sold or consumed in the country or incorporated into the general mass of its property, they become retroactively subject to payment of duties.

In the case of salvage the right of the government to duties would not take precedence of the salvage claims. Merritt v. One Package of Merchandise, 30 Fed. 195 [affirmed in 32 Fed. 111]. But see The Waterloo, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,257, 1 Blatchf. & H. 114. See, generally, SALVAGE.

Wrecked goods.—In England wrecked goods were originally exempted from the payment of duties not only on the ground that wrecked property belonged to the king, and that the king was not chargeable with customs, inasmuch as they were in supposition of law paid only to himself, but also upon the ground that goods cast upon the shore as wrecks could not be deemed to be imported as merchandise and to be embraced by the statutes relative to customs. Sheppard v. Gosnold, Vaugh. 159. This was changed, however, by 5 Geo. I, c. 11, and the acts of congress in this country have placed such goods upon the same footing as if imported in the regular course of trade. The Waterloo, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,257, 1 Blatchf. & H. 114.

8. De Lima v. Bidwell, 182 U. S. 1, 21 S. Ct. 743, 45 L. ed. 1041.

Porto Rico, after its cession to the United States by the treaty with Spain, was no longer a "foreign country" within the Dingley Tariff Act providing for duties on articles "imported from foreign countries." De Lima v. Bidwell, 182 U. S. 1, 21 S. Ct. 743, 45 L. ed. 1041 [distinguishing Fleming v. Page, 9 How. (U. S.) 603, 13 L. ed. 276]. Compare Goetze v. U. S., 103 Fed. 72.

The Philippine islands, subsequent to the proclamation of the ratification of the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain, were not a foreign country within the meaning of the Dingley Tariff Act. In re Fourteen Diamond Rings, 183 U. S. 176, 22 S. Ct. 59, 46 L. ed. 138.

Canada is foreign within the meaning of our customs laws. U. S. v. Seventy-Eight Cases of Books, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,258, 2 Bond 271.

Occupation by the military authorities of the United States of a foreign port by order of the president will not make such port a domestic port. Fleming v. Page, 9 How. (U. S.) 603, 13 L. ed. 276.

An intermediate stoppage at a foreign port will not make goods shipped from one domestic port to another "imports" within the meaning of the law. U. S. v. The Forrester, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,132, Newb. Adm. 81.

9. Meredith v. U. S., 13 Pet. (U. S.) 486, 10 L. ed. 258.

An arrival at a port is essential, and a mere arrival within the limits of the United States and of a collection district is insufficient. Arnold v. U. S., 9 Cranch (U. S.) 104, 3 L. ed. 671; U. S. v. Vowell, 5 Cranch (U. S.) 368, 3 L. ed. 128.

10. The conquest and occupation of a portion of the territory of the United States by a public enemy constitutes it a foreign country within the meaning of our revenue laws, and goods imported into such territory are not therefore imported into the United States, and are not liable to its customs duties; nor would a subsequent evacuation by the enemy, and the resumption of authority by the United States, affect the liability for duties on goods so imported. U. S. v. Rice, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 246, 4 L. ed. 562; U. S. v. Hayward, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,336, 2 Gall. 485. But the fact that a port of the United States is under the control of an insurgent body, such as the Confederate states, and that such states have been conceded belligerent rights, does not make it a foreign port within the meaning of our customs laws, and relieve one importing goods to such port same,[11] although the liability to duty attaches at the time of entry to the port, and not at the time the goods are entered at the custom-house.[12]

2. As Affected by Treaty. Although a treaty is under the constitution a law of the land,[13] congress may, so far as it is municipal law, repeal it, and whether a promise in a treaty that the products of one country shall not be subjected to a higher rate of duty than like products of another country is observed in the enactment of a customs law is a matter for congress and not for the judiciary.[14]

3. Infringement of Authority. The constitutional prohibition as to the taxation of exports by the United States,[15] and to the taxation of both exports and imports by a state[16] refers to the imposition of duties on goods by reason or because of their exportation or intended exportation, or while they are in course of exportation.[17] Hence a general tax laid on all property alike, and not because of the exportation of a part of it, or of an intended exportation, is not a constitutional infringement.[18] But a duty on imports is not confined to a duty levied while the article is entering the country, but may extend to a duty levied after it is so entered.[19]

B. Exercise of Authority — 1. In General — a. Construction of Laws — (1) In General. If the general purpose of a tariff act is the protection of the American manufacturer the courts will in construing it keep such purpose in from his liability to the United States. U. S. v. Stark, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,378 [distinguishing U. S. v. Rice, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 246, 4 L. ed. 562; U. S. v. Hayward, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,336, 2 Gall. 485, on the ground that those cases were decided upon the theory that Great Britain had acquired the sovereignty of Castine, and that the inhabitants thereof owed the government of Great Britain allegiance; while with regard to the Confederate states it was clear that sovereignty always rested in the United States].

Articles shipped from one foreign port to another via a port in this country, where it was intended to transfer them without landing to another steamer, bound for its port of destination, and reported to the customs officials of this country as being in transit, are not imported within the meaning of the law, and would not be liable to duty. An exemption from duty of certain goods from a country, in consideration of certain reciprocal concessions, is not an abrogation or repeal of such a treaty, at least until similar concessions are offered by the country with whom the treaty was made. Police regulation.— A law providing that a fee of ten dollars must be paid before a body may be disinterred and removed is a proper exercise of the police power of a state, and is not void as a duty on exports. In re Wong Yung Quy, 2 Fed. 624, 6 Sawy. 442. Likewise the imposition of a penalty upon a person found traveling from place to place within a state for the purpose of selling goods, etc., without having obtained a hawkers' and peddlers' license, is a proper exercise of police power. Morrill v. State, 38 Wis. 428, 20 Am. Rep. 12. See also Commerce, 7 Cyc. 441.

mind.[20] Plain provisions of a law must be observed, however, although they operate in contravention of this general purpose;[21] and as the imposition by the government of burdens or taxes is not to be presumed beyond what the statute expressly or clearly imports, it follows that in case of ambiguity or doubt the construction will be in favor of the importer.[22]

(11) As to Abrogation or Repeal. The rule as to the repeal of a prior statute by implication will not be applied with strictness in the interpretation of customs laws, and unless the repugnancy is such as to leave no doubt as to the intent of congress the latter act will be considered as auxiliary to and in aid of the former, and both will be upheld.[23] But an act imposing different rates of duty "in lieu" of those formerly imposed is a repeal of the former.[24]

Hence a tax by a state on the amount of sales made by an auctioneer is void as a duty on imports, so far as it applies to the sale of goods for the importer, in the original packages. Cook v. Pennsylvania, 97 U. S. 566, 24 L. ed. 1015. See also COMMERCE, 7 Cyc. 429.

Articles which have been subjected to extra or additional process of manufacture may well be considered as intended to be subjected to a higher duty than articles upon which less work has been expended. Where it is evident that the literal meaning of the words used would be inconsistent with or directly opposite to the policy, object, and purpose which the framers of the statute had in view in enacting it, great latitude is allowed in their interpretation, and the intention is to be collected from the context, from the occasion and necessity of the law, from the mischief felt, and the remedy had in view; and the intention is to be taken or presumed according to what is consonant with sound reason and judicial discretion. Repeal by treaty.— The reciprocity treaty between the United States and Great Britain, June 5, 1854, did not operate to repeal the previous laws as to penalties and forfeitures already incurred, but only to suspend the previous statutes after a given time by admitting certain enumerated articles free of duty. In re One Hundred and Thirty-Four Thousand Nine Hundred and One Feet of Pine Lumber, 18 Fed. But the rule that when a later statute is a complete revision of the subject to which the earlier statute related, and the new legislation was manifestly intended as a substitute for the former, the prior act will be repealed

(III) As to Classification of Goods — (A) In General. The imposition of a duty upon an article by a specific name or by a restrictive provision, the language of which will only apply to articles of a special class or kind, will determine its classification, although general terms are elsewhere used in the act which might otherwise have embraced such article.[25] This rule applies, although the effect would be to reduce,[26] or to exempt the article from duty altogether.[27]

(B) Commercial Designation Governs. It is a rule generally recognized that congress in enumerating articles in a customs act refers to them by the name by which they are generally known commercially in our markets at the time of the passage of the act,[28] unless it appears by the act itself that a different meaning applies. U. S. v. Ranlett, 172 U. S. 133, 19 S. Ct. 114, 43 L. ed. 393; Saunders v. U. S., 114 Fed. 42, 51 C. C. A. 668; Kent v. U. S., 73 Fed. 680, 19 C. C. A. 642 [affirming 68 Fed. 536]. And see U. S. v. Schoverling, 146 U. S. 76, 13 S. Ct. 24, 36 L. ed. 893.

Illustrations of rule.— Where there is a provision for goods "made wholly or in part of wool," and in another schedule a provision for goods "made of silk, or of which silk is the component material of chief value," the latter provision will be held to be the more specific enumeration of the two. Hartranft v. Meyer, 135 U. S. 237, 10 S. Ct. 751, 34 L. ed. 110 [affirming 28 Fed. 358]. Likewise where there are operative provisions in a tariff act, one providing a duty for "manufactures composed of mixed materials, in part of cotton, silk, etc.," and in another act a clause provides for a different duty upon "manufactures of which silk is the component part of chief value," the latter clause will be considered the more specific, and the two phrases will be construed as follows: "Goods made of mixed materials, cotton, silk, etc., shall pay a specified duty, . . . but if silk is the component part of chief value, they shall pay a duty of 50 per cent." Solomon v. Arthur, 102 U. S. 208, 26 L. ed. 147.

was intended,[29] or unless the article designated has, by the general usage of the trade to which it appertains, a special or restricted meaning,[30] or has been so altered or so adapted to special purposes as to come under a special commercial designation.[31] It is necessary, however, that the commercial designation be the result of established usage which at the passage of the act was definite, uniform, and general,[32] and hence the commercial designation since the passage of the act must not be considered.[33]

(c) Condition at Time of Importation Material. It is also a rule recognized by the courts that where the use of an article is not intended to be the test by which its classification is to be governed,[34] its dutiable classification must, in order to produce uniformity, be determined by an examination of it in the condition in which it is imported.[35]

S., 91 Fed. 533) resort must then be had to its common designation, or by the name given it in the dictionaries; and the ordinary dictionary meaning of the word must govern if it cannot be shown that it has a commercial meaning (Milne v. U. S., 115 Fed. 410).

An application of this rule is found in U. S. v. Schoverling, 146 U. S. 76, 13 S. Ct. 24, 36 L. ed. 893, where the statute having imposed one rate of duty upon shot-guns, and a different rate upon manufactured articles or wares not provided for and composed in part of iron and steel, the question arose as to whether an importation of finished shot-gun stocks, with locks and mountings, should be assessed as shot-guns or as articles composed in part of iron and steel. It appeared

(D) Determinable by Use. With regard to some articles, however, congress may make the actual use to which they may be put the test by which their classification is to be governed.[36] It may also be said that where the schedule within which an article should fall is uncertain,[37] the chief or predominant use to which the article is applied will determine its classification.[38] So too in analogy to the rules of commerical classification,[39] the classification must be determined by the use at the time the law was passed.[40]

(E) Noscitur a Sociis Applicable. It is a rule of construction frequently and consistently declared that when a general descriptive term or clause is employed in a tariff act in connection with words of a particular description or from the evidence that this importation was ordered from one manufacturing establishment, while the barrels evidently intended for the same were to be obtained from another firm, with the expectation that the two should be put together and sold as shot-guns. It was held that the intent of the importer to put the gun-stocks with the barrels separately imported could not affect the rate of duty on the gun-stocks as a separate importation, and that they were not therefore dutiable as firearms. In accord with this case is Robertson v. Gerdan, 132 U. S. 454, 10 S. Ct. 119, 33 L. ed. 403, where a statute having imposed a duty on musical instruments, but not the same duty on parts of musical instruments, it was held that pieces of ivory for the keys of pianos and organs, to be used exclusively for such musical instruments, and made for such purposes, were not dutiable as musical instruments, but must be classed as manufactures of ivory. The mere fact, however, that gun-stocks are separately packed from the barrels before importation cannot change the dutiable character of the goods, where they are shipped by the same vessel for the same importation and entered at the same custom-house. Under such circumstances the parts would be dutiable as a whole, and must be assessed as firearms. U. S. v. Irwin, 78 Fed. 799, 24 C. C. A. 349. To the same effect see Isaacs v. Jonas, 148 U. S. 648, 13 S. Ct. 677, 37 L. ed. 596, where it was held that cigarette papers in one package, and the book forms therefor in another, were dutiable collectively as smoker's articles. So an article which is invoiced and intended to be sold as a single thing is not resolvable into its constituents for the purpose of ascertaining its liability to duty. Wanamaker v. Cooper, 69 Fed. 465.

36. See infra, II, B, 3, a, (II), (N); II, B, 4, a, (I).

The test of the suitableness of an article for a certain purpose, when use is made the test, is whether it possesses actual, practical fitness for that purpose (White v. U. S., 69 Fed. 93), it being sufficient if its use for the purpose in question is a substantial one (Zucker, etc., Chemical Co. v. Magone, 37 Fed. 776).

This mode of classification was first used in the tariff act of 1846, and is usually applied to articles not known in trade and commerce by any particular appellation. Maillard v. Lawrence, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 8,971, 1 Blatchf. 504. See also Thomson v. Maxwell, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,983, 2 Blatchf. 385. The method is a very philosophical and logical way of classifying articles for duty, but in practice it is at times extremely inconvenient; so much so is this true that unless the language of the act clearly indicates the plain intent on the part of congress that the use of an article should determine its classification the courts are cautious in applying this test. Clay v. Magone, 40 Fed. 230.

37. Smith v. U. S., 93 Fed. 194, 35 C. C. A. 265, holding that the test of predominant use is only resorted to in those cases where it is necessary to find the proper location of a suitable article which falls within two or more classifications, either of which standing alone would adequately describe it, and in those cases in which an article is enumerated by reference to its use. See also Chew Hing Lung v. Wise, 176 U. S. 156, 20 S. Ct. 320, 44 L. ed. 412 [reversing 83 Fed. 162, 27 C. C. A. 494], holding that tapioca flour, used by Chinese laundrymen on the Pacific coast as starch, and by calico-printers and carpet manufacturers to thicken colors, and in the manufacture of a substitute for gum arabic as well as for sizing cotton goods, and as an adulterant in the manufacture of candy and other articles, but commercially known in the United States as tapioca flour, should not be included under the expression "preparations fit for use as starch," but should be included under the class "tapioca, cassava, or cassady."

enumeration, its meaning is to be ascertained by a reference to the words of particular designation, and its otherwise general inclusiveness is restricted by reason of its collocation with such enumeration.[41]

(IV) CONSTRUCTION OF ANALOGOUS ACTS. Where the language of a customs act is substantially the same as a previous act, the construction placed upon the latter by the proper officials, while not controlling upon the courts, will nevertheless be considered by them in construing the former.[42]

No. 44, 3 Sumn. 384; Butterfield v. Arthur, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2,249, 16 Blatchf. 216.

An illustration of the rule is found in Dingelstedt v. U. S., 91 Fed. 112, 33 C. C. A. 395 [affirming 87 Fed. 190], where it was held that the phrase "all articles composed of earthen or mineral substances, . . . not specially provided for in this act," as used in the act of 1894, par. 86, being in schedule B, which relates to earth, earthenware, and glassware, must be construed, by the reason of the collocation of the paragraph, in a restricted sense, as applying only to articles composed of mineral substances similar to those enumerated in that schedule. See also Chapon v. Smythe, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,611, 11 Blatchf. 120, holding that the word "ribbons," when found in a clause in the silk schedule which reads "all dress and piece silks, ribbons, and silk velvets, or velvets of which silk is the component material of chief value," must be understood as including only silk ribbons.

The "not otherwise provided for" clause which is used so often in the tariff acts that it has been designated the "n. o. p. f." clause (U. S. v. Stearns, 79 Fed. 953, 25 C. C. A. 256 [affirming 75 Fed. 833]) is employed out of abundant caution that nothing may escape duty (Smythe v. Fiske, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 374, 23 L. ed. 47). But where an article is of such nature that it might reasonably be included under a dutiable schedule containing this clause, and also in the same act under a free enumeration containing this clause or its equivalent, it is held that their presence in both provisions neutralizes their effect in each, so that each enumeration might be read, so far as the article in question is concerned, as though the clause were omitted; and in such case the article would be classed under that part of the act in which it is the more specifically enumerated. Matheson v. U. S., 71 Fed. 394, 18 C. C. A. 143. And as statutes enacted at different times are to be considered as parts of one composite general system of customs laws, if it is evident in an act that congress did not intend to make a complete enumeration or a complete revision of the tariff law with regard to that particular subject, this clause when used may be held to refer to enumerations in former tariff acts. Saxonville Mills v. Russell, 116 U. S. 13, 6 S. Ct. 237, 29 L. ed. 554. On the other hand if the section in which this clause is used contains a very full enumeration, and is evidently intended to be exhaustive, the phrase "not otherwise provided for" will be held to apply not to preceding acts which may not have been present in the minds of the draftsmen, and to which there was no necessity to refer, but will be construed as intending to refer to the preceding enumeration in the same section where it is found. Smythe v. Fiske, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 374, 23 L. ed. 47. Where, however, congress uses the expression, "not otherwise herein provided for," the word "herein" will exclude any reference to earlier acts, and will be held to refer only to the tariff act in which the expression is found. Miller v. Vietor, 127 U. S. 572, 8 S. Ct. 1225, 32 L. ed. 201; Arthur v. Butterfield, 125 U. S. 70, 8 S. Ct. 714, 31 L. ed. 643; Dieckerhoff v. Miller, 93 Fed. 651, 35 C. C. A. 525. "Similar description" is to be understood in its popular and general meaning, i. e. goods similar in product and adapted to similar uses, and not necessarily produced by similar methods of manufacture. The contemporaneous exposition by the government of a customs act should be given great weight in the subsequent interpretation of the same (Clark v. Peaslee, 5 Fed. Cas. b. Operation and Effect — (i) As Dependent Upon Time of Signing. The legal fiction that the law recognizes no divisions or fractions of a day being one of convenience rather than of justice,[43] the exact time at which a customs bill was signed by the president may be shown; the courts holding that it becomes operative only from the moment of such signing.[44]

(ii) Upon Goods in Transportation or Custody of Government. Goods in course of importation will, in the absence of special provisions to the contrary, be affected by any change in the law during such time, and will be liable to the duties leviable at the time they are entered.[45] With regard to goods in public stores and bonded warehouses, it may be said that congress does not regard their importation as complete while they so remain in the custody of the customs officials, and during such time they are subject to any changes which may be made in the duties.[46] Where the duties are increased it is usually provided, however, that the importer may withdraw the goods within a certain time by paying the former rate of duty;[47] and if the duty is decreased, the importer is usually required to pay the rate leviable at the time of their withdrawal for consumption.[48]

What constitutes government custody. — It is not necessary that the goods be actually placed in the government warehouse to receive the benefit of the statute. If upon their arrival in port they are taken into custody by one of the customs officials they are within the meaning of the act the same as if they had been placed within the warehouse. Hartranft v. Oliver, 125 U. S. 525, 8 S. Ct. 958, 31 L. ed. 813. To the same effect see U. S. v. E. L. Goodsell Co., 84 Fed. 439, 28 C. C. A. 453. But see McAndrew v. Robertson, 29 Fed. 246, where, although the vessel had arrived in port, it did not appear that any customs official had taken charge of her between the time of the arrival and the change of law; and that therefore the duty

2. Nature of Duties Imposed. Congress has not as a rule in the imposition of duties confined itself to any fixed method in the determination of the same, but has had more in mind the convenience of collecting such duties and the end sought to be accomplished. Hence as to some articles the duties are purely specific; as to others purely ad valorem; as to others both specific and ad valorem;[49] while in still other instances a discriminating duty is provided for on articles, the exportation of which is encouraged by the payment of a bounty.[50]

3. Manner of Imposition — a. By Specific Designation or Special Classification — (i) In General. Inasmuch as the scope or meaning of a certain term or expression found in a tariff schedule is directly affected by the inclusion or omission of other terms or expressions in the same act, and as congress in the enactment of such statutes has often apparently had in view the effect of former decisions,[51] it is evident that a judicial determination of the meaning of a word or expression is often one of difficulty and perplexity.[52] However, as congress has followed a general system of schedules since the act of 1883 to the present time,[53] and designated or specially classified articles under this system, it is evident that the judicial construction given certain terms and clauses when thus used is of leviable was that prescribed upon the arrival of the vessel; the facts in the case showing that they could not be considered as in a bonded warehouse.

50. The Dingley Tariff Act provides that whenever any country "shall pay or bestow, directly or indirectly, any bounty or grant upon the exportation of any article of merchandise from such country" which is dutiable under the act "an additional duty equal to such bounty or grant shall be collected thereon" upon its importation into the United States. 30 U. S. St. at L. 205 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1693].

When statute applies.— The laws of Russia which in substance remit the excise tax due upon sugar exported, and issues to the exporter a certificate of exportation which authorizes a sale in the domestic market, of an equal quantity of "free reserve or free surplus" sugar, without the payment of the additional tax otherwise required to be paid thereon, and which certificate is transferable and has a substantial market value, is within the meaning of this statute, and sugar so exported is subject to the additional duty. Downs v. U. S., 113 Fed. 144, 51 C. C. A. 100 [affirmed in 187 U. S. 496, 23 S. Ct. 222, 47 L. ed. 275]. On the other hand where a country gives a bounty for the production of sugar and provides that such bounty shall be deducted from the excise thereon, but that the excise shall be remitted on exportation, the duty is not a bounty on the exportation, either directly or indirectly, but on the production, and is not within the meaning of the statute. Hills v. U. S., 99 Fed. 425. And see as to discriminating duties under prior acts Russell v. Williams, 106 U. S. 623, 1 S. Ct. 409, 27 L. ed. 220; Powers v. Conly, 101 U. S. 789, 25 L. ed. 805; Sturges v. Draper, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 19, 20 L. ed. 255; Hadden v. Barney, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 107, 18 L. ed. 518; Strange v. Barney, 35 Fed. 196; Campbell v. Barney, 4 Fed. 51. Thus it may be assumed that the framers of the tariff act of 1894 had in view the decision of the court in In re Duncan, 57 Fed. 197, which was a construction of the term "wafers unmedicated," as used in the act of 1890, par. 750, when they added to the corresponding clause (par. 667), the words "and not edible." So it may be assumed that the framers of the same act had in view the case of U. S. v. Perry, 146 U. S. 71, 13 S. Ct. 26, 36 L. ed. 890, which was a construction of the act of 1890, par. 677, when they inserted in the corresponding paragraph (par. 686), the phrase "stained or painted window glass, and stained or painted glass windows." Likewise it may be inferred that congress intended to sanction and approve, and possibly render more certain the construction put upon the act of 1890, par. 648, providing for medals of gold, silver, or copper in U. S. v. McSorley, 65 Fed. 492, 13 C. C. A. 15, when they changed the phraseology to that as found in the act of 1894, par. 551.

52. Difficulties of construction. — While neither mere awkwardness of expression nor imperfect punctuation are of much weight in the construction of tariff acts (U. S. v. H. B. Claflin Co., 92 Fed. 914, 35 C. C. A. 80), it may well be expected that in statutes so long, detailed, comprehensive, and intricate as tariff acts, there will be found not only awkward and obscure sentences, but also errors and actual or apparent inconsistencies, contradictions, and duplications (Wiebusch v. U. S., 84 Fed. 451, 28 C. C. A. 154). The fact must also be recognized that as time goes by and new processes become known to trade, and old differences are obliterated or new ones created, congress is supposed to keep informed as to such change, and when it passes a tariff act it will be assumed that it does so with the full understanding of the condition of things at that time. special value in determining the import of the same or similar terms when used in the existing or in future acts.

(II) By Schedule—(A) Chemicals, Oils, and Paints. In the schedule of chemicals, oils, and paints congress has intended to specify a rate of duty for all products of a chemical nature.[54] Under it as used in the more recent acts is found a judicial determination of the scope or meaning of the terms, alcoholic compounds,[55] alumina,[56] chemical compounds generally,[57] coal-tar preparations,[58] collodion or cellnloid,[59] dentifrice,[60] drugs not edible, which are advanced in value or condition, by refining or other process,[61] dyewood extracts,[62] medicinal, or medicinal proprietary, preparations,[63] oils,[64] paints and colors.[65] There is also found

Preparations in which alcohol is used.—The tariff acts usually prescribe different duties for medicinal preparations in which alcohol is a component part, or in the preparation of which alcohol is used, from a medicinal preparation in which alcohol is not the component part. Schering v. U. S., 119 Fed. 472; U. S. v. Shoemaker, 84 Fed. 146. substantial part thereof composed of metal.[8] And no article should be included within it which, upon a fair and reasonable interpretation, may be properly included in a preceding paragraph.[9]

(D) Wood and Manufactures Thereof. Little contention seems to have arisen with regard to the specific designations in the schedule as to wood and the manufactures thereof and the scope of its concluding or catch-all clause, which is held to refer to or include articles made wholly or partly of wood, and wrought into things different from what the wood was before its manufacture.[10]

(E) Sugar and Manufactures Thereof. The later customs laws in providing for duties upon different grades of sugar seem to make the color and not the quality of the sugar the test by which the rate of duty is to be determined.[11]

(F) Tobacco and Manufactures Thereof. If a bale or other separate and concrete quantity of leaf tobacco contains only leaves of such uniformity of character as to be in their collective form of one class, the bale or other separate collection is the unit contemplated in the percentage and weight tests of the tobacco schedule.[12] On the other hand if the bale consists of tobacco of two classes, the unit upon which the percentage is calculated is the ascertained quantity of each class.[13] It has also been said that the act of 1897 intended with but

Fish caught by citizens of Canada, in Lake Ontario, notwithstanding the fact that such citizens may have been employed by a New York corporation, are not within the exemption of the act of July, 1897, par. 555, placing on the free list fish caught in the Great Lakes by citizens of the United States. It is essential, in claiming an exemption upon this ground, that the citizen of the United States meaning or scope of the terms or clauses, articles embroidered by hand or machinery,[53] bagging for cotton,[54] burlaps made of jute,[55] embroidered and hemstitched handkerchiefs,[56] laces,[57] plain woven fabrics,[58] wearing apparel made wholly or in part of lace or imitation thereof,[59] and woven fabrics or articles of flax.[60] This schedule, like the others, also has a concluding paragraph providing for the manufactures of which flax, jute, or hemp is a material or component part.[61]

(K) Wool and Manufactures Thereof. By the provisions of the schedule as to wool and the manufactures thereof it is plain that it was the intention of congress to lay duties not only upon wool, but upon most articles composed of wool or of which wool is a component material.[62] A provision of this nature is made especially applicable to dress goods.[63] Construction has also been rendered as to the scope and meaning of the terms astrakhan trimmings,[64] blankets,[65] carpets and rugs,[66] cloaks,[67] hosiery,[68] knit goods and knit fabrics,[69] manufactures of hair,[70]

[reversing 33 Fed. 826], holding that although an article imported for the manufacture of gill nets is linen thread, and the greater part of the whole importation of thread of like character is used for other purposes, the fact that for many years before the passage of the tariff act this kind of thread was imported under the name of "gilling twine," will bring it within the meaning of that term as used by congress. pile fabrics,[71] wearing apparel,[72] and wool and worsted.[73] With regard to the part of the schedule imposing duties upon unmanufactured wool, it may be said that the clauses imposing increased duties upon wools imported, washed, or scoured refer not so much to the commercial designation of certain material, as to the fact of whether or not it has actually been washed or scoured.[74] To bring wool within the clause providing for an increase of duty when imported in other than its ordinary condition, it has been held that the change from ordinary condition need not be for the purpose of evading the duty.[75] Judicial construction has also been given to the terms goat hair,[76] noils,[77] wools of merino blood, near or remote,[78] and waste.[79]

(L) Silk and Silk Goods. Under the schedule which provides for duties upon silk or manufactures thereof, judicial construction has been placed upon the terms ribbons,[80] silk laces,[81] veilings,[82] and wearing apparel.[83] This schedule concludes with a catch-all clause providing for articles manufactured of silk or of which silk is the component material of chief valne.[84]

(M) Pulp, Papers, and Books. Under the schedule as to pulp, papers, and books judicial explanation has been given of the meaning of the terms or expressions, articles produced either in whole or in part by lithographic process,[85]

89. The distinction made by the customs officials between printed matter and manufactures of paper is one dependent upon the use to be made of the printed matter; that is to say whether or not the matter consists of labels, etc., ready for use without extra work being expended thereon, or to be used as reading matter on the one hand; or whether such matter is partly printed for the purpose of being filled up by writing or other decoration. It has accordingly been held that decalcomanie pictures (Arthur v. Moller, 97 U. S. 365, 24 L. ed. 1046), enameled cards, called "photographic mounts," which have passed through a printing-press and have printed thereon the name and address of the photographer for whom they are intended (Bonte v. Seeberger, 31 Fed. 884), pattern books consisting of sheets of paper stitched and folded together, upon which designs or patterns are printed in colors (Weihenmyer v. Arthur, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,360), and German lottery tickets printed in full when imported, so as to require no additions in writing (U. S. v. Kaub, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,507) would fall within the meaning of this term. But cardboard, on which is imprinted in colors an ornamental design and pattern for the purpose of showing the method of embroidering patterns upon canvas, would not be within the term. b. By General Designation — (i) Coverings. The usual and necessary coverings of goods subject to specific duties are not dutiable unless directly provided for in the tariff acts.[14] Congress has, however, carried a provision through the later tariff acts to the effect that additional duty should be levied and collected upon coverings of imported merchandise when the coverings of such merchandise are of an unusual nature, or are formed and designed for use otherwise than in the bona fide transportation of the merchandise.[15] Otherwise, under the pro-

(II) Comprehensive Clauses — (A) Similitude Clause. While the tariff acts have with more or less careful phraseology specifically exempted[18] or specified[19] the duty on many articles coming to our shores as imports, it is evident that a verbal enumeration of every known article would be impracticable if not in fact impossible. There is therefore found in each of the schedules, aside from the specific enumeration contained therein, general clauses or phrases intended to cover a variety of articles of the kind enumerated.[20] Lest, however, some articles should not fall within the broad enumeration of the schedules, two general catch-all clauses are provided. One of these, commonly known as the similitude clause, is to the effect that a non-enumerated article, similar either in material, quality, or texture, or in the use to which it may be applied, to any enumerated article, shall pay the same rate of duty as the article which it most resembles; and if it resembles two or more articles equally the rate of the article paying the highest duty.[21] This paragraph also provides that on articles not enumerated, manufactured of two or more materials, the duty shall be assessed at

If an article is not found enumerated in the tariff laws, the first inquiry is as to whether it bears a similitude to any enumerated article. Arthur v. Fox, 108 U. S. 125, 2 S. Ct. 371, 27 L. ed. 675; Hahn v. U. S., 100 Fed. 635, 40 C. C. A. 622 [reversing 91 Fed. 755]; Aloe v. Churchill, 44 Fed. 50; Ross v. Peaslee, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 12,077, 2 Curt. 499.

The similitude referred to in the statute must be a substantial similitude, not importing merely an adaptability to sale as a substitute for the article to which it is said to be assimilated, but referring rather to its employment, or to its effect in producing results. Sykes v. Magone, 38 Fed. 494; Weilbacher v. Merritt, 37 Fed. 85. It is not essential, however, that an article, to be within the operation of this clause, should be similar in the four particulars of material, quality, texture, and use. Greenleaf v. Goodrich, 101 U. S. 278, 25 L. ed. 845; Weilbacher v. Merritt, 37 Fed. 85; Boker v. Redfield, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,606*a*. Contra, Lazard v. Magone, 40 Fed. 662. It is also evident that the terms of the clause are satisfied; and an article would be included within its meaning if the use to which it was adapted was similar to the use of an enumerated article, although in other particulars there is no similarity between the two. This similarity of use must be, however, a similarity in the employment of the article and of its effects, and not a

the highest rate at which the same would be chargeable if composed wholly of the component material thereof of chief value.[22]

(B) Non-Enumerated Articles. If a non-enumerated, manufactured article bears no substantial similitude to any enumerated one, or no substantial resemblance to two or more enumerated articles chargeable with duty, and if not provided for either specifically or otherwise in the schedules, it would still be subject to duty under that universal and comprehensive provision in the tariff acts providing for a certain rate of duty on all raw or unmanufactured articles not enumerated or provided for, and a higher rate of duty on such non-enumerated articles manufactured in whole or in part.[23]

4. Exemptions From Duty — a. By Express Designation or Classification — (I) In General. It is evident that the interests of the people as a whole would be best subserved by the admission of certain articles of trade free of duty. There is therefore found not only exemptions by virtue of the more general provisions having this end in view,[24] but also by a specific enumeration known as the "free list." In this enumeration there is a judicial construction placed upon the similarity to another article as a marketable commodity. Murphy v. Arnson, 96 U. S. 131, 24 L. ed. 773. See also Pickhardt v. Merritt, 132 U. S. 258, 10 S. Ct. 80, 33 L. ed. 353; U. S. v. Dana, 99 Fed. 433, 39 C. C. A. 590.

The mere fact of the application of labor to an article, either by hand or by mechanism, does not necessarily make it a "manufactured article" within the meaning of the tariff laws, unless the labor has been carried to such an extent that the article suffers a species of transformation, and is in a sense at least changed into a different article, having a changed or different character or use. Baumgarten v. Magone, 50 Fed. 69 [following Hartranft v. Wiegmann, 121 U. S. 609, 7 S. Ct. 1240, 30 L. ed. 1012; U. S. v. Semmer, 41 Fed. 324]. A change of name and manipulation does not necessarily constitute a manufacture within the meaning of the law; each case must be decided according to its own circumstances. Frazee v. Moffitt, 18 Fed. 584, 20 Blatchf. 267. So natural grass, sunbleached, and used for emblems, is not a manufactured article. U. Likewise material may be subjected to a process of manufacture, and thereby be transformed into an "unmanufactured article" of another name. Davies v. U. S., 115 Fed. 232. See also U. S. v. Wilson, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,736. Where, however, an article has been advanced through one or more processes into a completed commercial article, and known and recognized in trade by a specific and distinctive name other than the name of the material, and is designed and adapted for a particular use, it is to be deemed a manufacture. To the same effect see In re Godwin, 46 Fed. 361, holding that the fact that an Oriental rug purchased with other antique rugs and articles of antique tapestry was not imported in the same vessel with the other articles would not render it subject to duty.

The intention of the importer to sell a part or the whole of the collection after its im-articles of growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States, when returned after having been exported without having been advanced in value, or improved in condition, by manufacture or other means.[44] Proof of identity of such articles, in conformity with the rules of the customs officials, is, however, an indispensable prerequisite to the right of exemption;[45] but the regulations prescribing the time within which such proof must be furnished will not be strictly construed against the importer.[46]

(IV) IMPORTATIONS IN INTEREST OF LEARNING, SCIENCE, AND OCCUPATION. Exemptions from duty have been made by congress in the different tariff acts, having in view the interest of the public, with regard to science, learning, and the advancement of research generally. In accord with this principle are included: Books for the use of a state or public library,[47] or printed exclusively in language other than English,[48] or devoted to original scientific research,[49] periodicals,[50] publications for gratuitous private circulation,[51] philosophical and scientific apparatus, instruments,[52] and preparations[53] imported in good faith, for the use of any society or institution incorporated and established for certain specified purposes;[54] works of art, imported for benevolent purposes,[55] articles imported expressly for the promotion and encouragement of science, art, or industry,[56] professional books, implements, instruments, and tools of trade, occupation, or employment, in the actual possession of persons at the time of arrival,[57] and in some instances articles of occupation or profession for temporary use only.[58]

(v) Wearing Apparel and Household Effects. The provision in the customs laws exempting wearing apparel from duty is not to be considered as meaning only apparel actually worn by the person at the time of entry, but is intended to admit wearing apparel owned by the passenger and intended for his use or wear, suitable for the season of the year immediately approaching the time of his arrival, in a condition to be worn without further manufacture, and in such quantity, quality, or value as he is in the habit of ordinarily providing himself with, and does not include apparel purchased for another or intended to be given to another.[60]

b. Through Non-Applicability of Customs Laws — (i) Property of United States. Property purchased by the United States and imported for its use is not subject to an import duty.[61]

(ii) Ships or Vessels. As ships or vessels are not dutiable eo nomine under the tariff acts, and are not properly included within the meaning of the terms articles or goods, wares, and merchandise, it follows that they are not subject to duty within the meaning of the customs laws.[62] By the same reasoning it is held that a chain cable, purchased bona fide, with the intention of using it as a part of the ship,[63] and the tackle, apparel, and furniture of a foreign vessel wrecked upon our shores, and landed and sold separate from the hull[64] are not not dutiable.

purpose of the statute authorizing such regulations, have the force of law.[66] Such regulations must, however, be reasonable.[67] He has no right to make any regulations the effect of which would be to alter or amend the law,[68] impose a duty not provided by congress,[69] or to change the law as to the competency of evidence.[70]

b. Collector. It being the duty of the collector and those under him to directly collect the duties provided for by the customs laws,[71] it follows that owing to the comprehensiveness and intricacies of the same his powers or duties may in some instances be uncertain or onerous.[72] It may, however, be said that like any other public officer he cannot bind the government by any acts beyond or contrary to his lawful authority,[73] and has no power therefore to waive the requirements of the law, and allow an entry without a compliance therewith;[74] nor can he collect after his removal outstanding duties which had accrued during his incumbency.[75] He may, however, with the sanction of the secretary of the Kennedy v. Magone, 158 U. S. 212, 15 S. Ct. 814, 39 L. ed. 954. Likewise the secretary has an undoubted right, upon seeing the error of former rulings, to change the same. U. So too a regulation forbidding the inspection of custom-house books and papers except on written application to the collector, if intended to provide an orderly mode for the exercise of the right of access by the importer, would be reasonable and fair; but such regulation would be unreasonable and void if construed to deny all access by the importer. His power to order the collectors to disobey the positive requirement of an unrepealed act of congress because later legislation in his opinion has rendered the act unnecessary may well be doubted. The secretary had no right to withhold the certificate on the ground that subsequent legislation had rendered them unnecessary, so far as the claims for drawbacks were concerned.

treasury, appoint,[76] and likewise discharge,[77] necessary deputies or assistants. He may also, with the consent of the secretary of the treasury, appoint necessary inspectors,[78] who are public officers, and not mere servants of the collector.[79] So too it has been held that he may delegate to his deputy the duty of receiving and handling customs moneys without violating a regulation which prohibits customs officers from performing their duties by substitutes.[80]

c. Deputy-Collectors and Inspectors. Generally speaking the deputy-collector, unless restricted, may perform the same functions, powers, and duties as the collector;[81] and, although appointed with the approval of the secretary of the treasury, the tenure of his office is at the will of the collector.[82] So too it is held that the office of inspector and deputy-collector may be held by one person at the same time.[83]

d. Appraisers. By a recent statute[84] it is provided that general appraisers shall be appointed by the president with the advice and consent of the senate.

Removal.— The statute further provides that such appraisers may be removed at any time by the president for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. Under this statute it is held that the method of obtaining knowledge of the existence of one or any of these causes is within the president's discretion, and he need not assign the particular cause for which he removes an appraiser, it being assumed that the charges were such as were prescribed by law, and that the president was guided by the statute prescribing the grounds on which the removal might be made. Shurtleff v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cl. 34.

The merchant appraisers provided for under former acts were selected by the collector either at his own instance or upon the request of the importer. It was required that the person selected be an experienced merchant, familiar with the character of the goods in question. Auffmordt v. Hedden, 137 U. S. 310, 11 S. Ct. 103, 34 L. ed. 674 [affirming 30 Fed. 360]. If the collector refused to appoint a merchant appraiser, the remedy of the importer was an action on the case. Lehmaier v. Maxwell, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,214. And it would seem that the collector, and not an official appraiser, should administer the oath to such merchant appraisers. Vaccari v. Maxwell, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,810, 3 Blatchf. 368.

85. Congress may, by using the appropriate words, manifest an intention that the salary of the collector shall constitute his entire compensation. U. S. v. Lawson, 101 U. S. 164, 25 L. ed. 860. Thus in Saunders v. U. S., 114 Fed. 42, 51 C. C. A. 668 [affirming 98 Fed. 196], it is held that the act of Aug. 28, 1890, fixed the compensation of the collector of the district of Puget sound at a salary of thirty-five hundred dollars annually and repealed the statute allowing the officer

tion for the services required, to which is added certain enumerated fees, commissions, and allowances.[86] He can, however, exact no fees not authorized by statute,[87] and usage in regard to their collection cannot make their exaction legal.[88] Limitations or restrictions as to the amount lawfully collected, which may be claimed for compensation, will not be presumed.[89] In conformity with this idea congress has repeatedly declared such limitations in positive terms;[90] and the courts uniformly hold that in no case shall his compensation exceed the prescribed maximum,[91] unless in pursuance of official request by the treasury or other department he performs extra service, foreign to the legitimate duties of his office as collector, and having no connection therewith,[92] and which the law at that place a certain amount of fees. See also U. S. v. Collier, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,833, 3 Blatchf. 325, where it was held that the limitations and restrictions of the acts of 1822 and 1841 were inapplicable as to the amount of the compensation allowed a collector of the district of upper California.

The fees are due and recoverable at law as soon as the periodical accounts required by the statute are rendered to the treasury department and the collections paid thereto, and the statute of limitations would begin running from that date. Carter v. U. S., 6 Ct. Cl. 31.

Nature of fees allowed.— There is no distinction between the fees received by a collector from the owners of steamers, and from engineers and pilots, and other fees, within the meaning of the law, and therefore such fees may be retained by the collector. U. S. v. Ballard, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 457, 20 L. ed. 845.

Emoluments cease on death or disability.— Under a statute providing that a collector may appoint a deputy to act in his absence, or in case of his death or disability, the collector is entitled to the perquisites and emoluments of his office only when the deputy acts during his necessary absence or sickness; but if he is disabled or dies he thereupon ceases to act through the deputy, and the emoluments of the office do not belong to him or to his estate. Merriam v. Clinch, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,460, 6 Blatchf. 5.

Commissions on outstanding bonds.—It was held to be within the equity of the earlier acts providing that the collector should have a certain percentage on bonds taken by him to allow a collector whose term of office had expired half of the commissions on bonds taken by him, and then outstanding, which were collected by his successor. Bates v. Drury, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 1,100, 4 Mason 118. He could not, however, claim such share of the commissions if he had been removed from office. Doane v. Phillips, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 223. And inasmuch as the law does not intend that he should receive more than a certain salary the burden is upon him to show that the emoluments received by him did not reach such maximum, and a failure so to do will preclude his recovery. has not directly imposed upon another as one of the duties of his employment as an officer of the government.[93]

b. Deputies and Assistants. The collector, being empowered with certain limitations[94] to appoint deputies, it would seem that one so appointed should receive a reasonable compensation, although no amount therefor be fixed;[95] but if the appointment of a custom-house clerk to the position of a deputy expressly provides that it is made without increase of compensation as clerk the appointee cannot recover the usual salary due a deputy.[96] Likewise it is held that an inspector who for several years accepts a regular statutory compensation without claiming extra charges for work done overtime will be considered in the absence of fraud or coercion to have accepted such payments as in full.[97]

3. Liability of Collector — a. In General. While the liability of a collector in his official capacity, to an action, under the present statute, is restricted,[98] he was formerly liable for any excess exacted as duties, or for a retention of or refusal

Cas. No. 14,480, 2 Cliff. 325. Likewise it has been held in the absence of statute or regulations, or orders from the executive department, that the care and custody of the custom-house was incidental to, and formed a part of the duties of the office of collector, and that he was not entitled to extra compensation for the same. Gray v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cl. 323. But compare Andrews v. U. S., 1 Fed. Cas. No. 381, 2 Story 202, where the court took the view that such charges were authorized by statute.

Recovery from collector.— Although the government does not allow the collector's account for money paid for the services of a deputy-collector unless accompanied by a voucher, executed and sworn to by the deputy, to the effect that the money has in fact been paid him, it is not necessary that the deputy to recover from the collector for his services shall first execute such voucher; but it is sufficient if he offers to furnish the voucher when the money is paid him. So too it is held that although it is the custom to pay deputies from the funds collected and charge the same to the government, nevertheless where it appears that it was the understanding of both parties that the collector would be personally responsible the deputy may recover from him. Fuller v. Briggs, 22 Vt. 80. It is also held that the statute authorizing the collector to pay his assistants from revenue collected creates no lien thereon in favor of the assistant, and if he refuses so to do the claim remains valid against the government. to deliver goods,[99] and the fact that the unlawful imposition of duties or detention of goods was made in pursuance of instructions from the secretary of the treasury was no defense.[1] He is also liable for the acts of his deputies in the performance of their official duties under him,[2] but not for their negligence or default unless he had knowledge of their incompetency at the time of their employment, or had failed to discharge them after having received such knowledge; in other words, unless there be some personal negligence of the collector himself shown,[3] and that the loss occurred by reason of such negligence.[4]

b. On Bond.[5] The collector and his sureties are of course liable upon his official bond for neglect or malfeasance as to his official duties,[6] and no change made in the method of conducting or performing the usual duties of the office will operate as a discharge of the sureties;[7] but the failure to properly perform services foreign to the duty of collector will incur no liability upon his surety.[8] And as the obligation of a surety is usually limited to acts performed by the "Probable cause" to which the judge is to certify, under the statute, in order to exempt the collector, does not necessarily mean prima facie evidence, but less evidence than that which would justify a condemnation will justify the issuance of the certificate (U. S. v. Three Bales Cloth, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,495); it imports a seizure under circumstances which warrants suspicion (U. S. v. One Sorrel Horse, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 15,953, 22 Vt. 655; U. S. v. One Hempen Cable, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 15,931*a*); a seizure while acting under the instructions of a former officer, upon a construction of the statute adopted by the secretary of the treasury in conformity with the opinion of the attorney-general (U. S. v. The Recorder, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,130, 2 Blatchf. 119); a report by public appraisers that in their opinion an importation and entry was fraudulently made with intent to evade the payment of the proper duties, and the recommendation of the seizure thereof (U. S. v. Thirty-One Boxes, etc., 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,465*a*); and the fact that the claimant was selling the goods at a low price in an obscure town, declaring them to have been imported, and the fact being that duty had been paid on only a small portion thereof (The Gala Plaid, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 5,183, Brown Adm. 1) have all been held proper grounds for the granting of this certificate.

Time of application for certificate.— If the statute confers upon the collector an absolute right to a certificate in every case where he has acted under the direction of the secretary, it must be considered as implying that the application therefor is to be duly made and at the proper time. Faber v. Barney, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,601, 6 Blatchf. 305. And while such certificate may be granted by a different judge from the one before whom the action for the overcharge was tried (Cox v. Barney, 6 Fed. Cas. No. 3,300, 14 Blatchf. 289), it has been held that where the application was not made until the expiration of nearly two years after the trial, and then made before a judge who took no part in the trial, and upon affidavits, defendant must be deemed to have waived his right to the same, and that the delay under such circumstances was fatal (Faber v. Barney, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,601, 6 Blatchf. 305). It is no objection, however, that the motion for the certificate was made subsequent to the decree (The Gala Plaid, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 5,183, Brown Adm. 1); and it is held that the application for such certificate is not too late after a judgment is obtained against the collector, and execution is issued against his property therefor (Cox v.

provisions for the payment of the duties upon the same;[13] and such entry must be considered as made from the time the importer so presents himself for this purpose.[14]

2. INVOICE. It is necessary that the statute requiring a true invoice be complied with,[15] and no merchandise can be lawfully entered without such document,[16] or a certified statement of the cause of its non-production,[17] in conformity with the statute.[18] Provision is made, however, for the execution of a bond when the duly certified invoice cannot be presented.[19]

3. ADDITIONS TO ENTRY OR INVOICE VALUE. To allow an importer an opportunity to avoid the penalty or forfeiture because of undervaluation[20] a provision has been carried up through the various acts permitting him to make additions in the entry[21] to the invoice price to raise the same to the true market value.[22] An importer cannot, however, qualify or restrict the effect of such addition by stating that it was made to prevent a seizure.[23]

The effect of the certificate is to absolve the collector from responsibility, and practically to convert the suit against the officer into a claim against the United States. Cox v. Barney, 6 Fed. Cas. No. 3,300, 14 Blatchf. 289.

13. Sampson v. Peaslee, 20 How. (U. S.) 571, 15 L. ed. 1022; Harris v. Dennie, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 292, 7 L. ed. 683.

For penalties or forfeitures for failure to make entry see infra, V, C, 2 et seq.

Effect.— Where an entry has been made it is conclusive upon the importer as to the contents and declared value of the invoice; and for all of those consequences which the law may impose upon the examination and appraisement of it, and for any deficiency or non-compliance with the revenue laws, and for any violation or substantial departure from the rules governing the entry of goods. Sampson v. Peaslee, 20 How. (U. S.) 571, 15 L. ed. 1022.

The term "entry," in the acts of congress, is used in two senses. It may refer to the bill of entry, that is, the paper or declaration which the merchant or importer in the first instance hands to the entry clerk; or it may be so used as to denote not a document but a transaction, that is, a series of acts which are necessary to the end to be accomplished, viz, entry of the goods. Knowledge of other invoices.— The fact that at the time the person entered merchandise at the custom-house there were in existence to his knowledge several copies of the bills of lading and invoices presented by him does not make his sworn statement that he does not know of or believe in the existence of any invoices or bills of lading other than those produced by him a false oath. Harriman v. Maxwell, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,105, 3 Blatchf. 421. Where, however, the importer, immediately upon discovering the error in the invoice, obtains a true one as soon as possible, the collector has no right to impose the statutory penalties or forfeitures. Carnes v. Maxwell, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,417, 3

4. Consignee of Importation as Owner. For the purpose of preventing frauds upon the government arising from collusive transfers[24] and to save the government the trouble and inconvenience of hunting up the ultimate consignee,[25] it has from the earliest acts been provided that an importation shall for the purposes of the tariff acts[26] be deemed and held to be the property of the consignee.[27] This provision confers, however, no right upon a mere consignee to make a declaration as "owner."[28]

C. Appraisement—1. In General—a. Purpose. If the collector is not satisfied that the value as given in the invoice is the true one, or if an appraisal is necessary to determine the dutiable value of the goods,[29] it is his duty to direct an appraisement of the same.[30]

b. Proceedings on—(1) In General. In some instances the manner of appraisement of certain articles is governed by special provisions of the statute,[31] and regulations consistent with the statute providing a mode of procedure may be made by the treasury department.[32] It is incumbent upon the importer not to increase the difficulties of this work by indiscriminately commingling free and dutiable goods,[33] and the value given to similar goods upon a prior appraisal is not binding.[34] The appraisers may not, however, extend their inquiries

The framers of the revenue laws of the United States have encountered two difficulties which have given them much embarrassment and trouble. The first was to devise a mode by which the true cost or value of imported goods which were subject to pay a duty according to their value could be ascertained. The second was to detect and punish frauds. The objects are distinct, and the means provided to accomplish them are equally so. U. S. v. Twenty-Five Cases of Cloths, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,563, Crabbe 356.

S.) 327, 11 L. ed. 996; Harding v. Whitney, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,052, 4 Cliff. 96, holding that a preliminary appraisement, in order to ascertain whether merchandise was subject to duty at all, or entitled to free entry, was not necessary, before its appraisal as required by law to ascertain its dutiable value.

The authority and feasibility of directing an appraisement is regulated by the collector's own suspicions that the invoice is untrue, and does not state the actual cost of the goods as required by law. This suspicion may be aroused from his own knowledge, or from the information he gets from others, of the market price of the goods. Whether such suspicions are well or ill founded must be determined by an inquiry before the appraisers. But the collector cannot be called upon to avow or show grounds upon which his suspicions rest. Summary character of proceedings.—Proceedings for appraisal are and must necessarily be to some extent of a summary character. In one sense it is a system of corrective justice as well as of taxation. Auffmordt v. Hedden, 137 U. S. 310, 11 S. Ct. 103, 34 L. ed. 674 [citing Cheatham v. Norvekl, 92 U. beyond what is necessary to enable them to make the appraisal as required by law.[35]

(II) EXAMINATION — (A) Necessity of Personal Inspection. The appraisers who are said to be quasi-judges or legislative referees[36] must act in person, and upon their own inspection, in each case;[37] and an appraisal made on the inspection and certificate of a deputy is void.[38]

(B) Sufficiency. It has uniformly been held that inasmuch as the powers of appraisers are derived expressly from the statute, it is incumbent upon them in making an appraisal to observe the restrictions and directions contained therein, and to make such personal examination, either in fact or substance, as is therein directed, with sufficient thoroughness to insure the accuracy intended.[39] The later cases, however, seem to regard the statute providing the mode of examination as intended for the benefit of the government, and not as mandatory, and that therefore an appraisement will not be necessarily invalidated for want of a strict compliance therewith.[40]

(III) DETERMINATION OF VALUE — (A) Of Goods — (1) IN GENERAL. During the first half century of tariff legislation the value of an importation subject to an ad valorem duty,[41] if appraised, was determined by its true value or actual cost,[42] at the time and place of its purchase or procurement.[43] The ing, yet the appraisers were not bound thereby.

Examination by samples.— Where an examination of certain articles is made under the provision of the act of congress authorizing an appraisal by samples, it is a sufficient compliance therewith that the samples were fairly selected from one in ten of the packages, and it is of no importance whether they were drawn from the packages by the appraisers themselves, or by the official sampler of the appraisers' department. 42. The term "true value" was used in the same sense as the term "actual cost" (U. S. v. Tappan, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 419, 6 L. ed. 509), and meant the cost at the place of exportation with the addition of all dutiable charges. The fact that the goods could have been manufactured for the invoiced price was immaterial (U. S. v. Eighty-Two Packages of Glass, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,038). The collector could not substitute for the actual market value a fictitious value expressed in a spurious currency. Loewenstein v. Maxwell, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 8,462, 2 Blatchf. 401. previous laws have been changed,[44] and have been carried with slight variations down to the present time, in that the valuation is to be determined by the actual market value and wholesale price[45] at the period of exportation[46] in the principal

No. 17,816, 2 Blatchf. 514. And an accepted order for goods to be manufactured, although a purchase in the usage of trade as between parties, was not a purchase within the meaning of these acts. Pierson v. Lawrence, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,158, 2 Blatchf. 495.

Place of purchase.— In the absence of any evidence to the contrary, a customs official was justified in assuming that the place of the shipment of an importation was the place of its purchase, within the meaning of these acts. Focke v. Lawrence, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 4,894, 2 Blatchf. 508.

Time of purchase.— The date of an invoice was prima facie evidence as to the time of the purchase of the goods. Pierson v. Lawrence, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,158, 2 Blatchf. 495; Pierson v. Maxwell, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,159, 2 Blatchf. 507. It was only prima facie evidence, however, and an importer had the right to show that the time of purchase was not the date of the invoice or bill of sale. Greely v. Thompson, 10 How. (U. S.) 225, 13 L. ed. 397; Maxwell v. Griswold, 10 How. (U. S.) 242, 13 L. ed. 405. And a collector was justified in taking the time of the shipment as the time of the purchase unless informed otherwise. Crowley v. Maxwell, 6 Fed. Cas. No. 3,449, 3 Blatchf. 401; Focke v. Lawrence, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 4,894, 2 Blatchf. 508. Therefore, where orders for goods were accepted by foreign vendors at the ruling market price, which price, however, was greater before the goods were delivered for shipment and the invoice made out, the purchase was to be considered as made at the date of the invoice and not at the date the orders were accepted. Wilson v. Lawrence, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 17,816, 2 Blatchf. 514.

44. The act of 1851 was the first act changing the rule as to the time the valuation must be made, and under that act the goods were to be appraised at the period of exportation rather than the time of their purchase. Stairs v. Peaslee, 18 How. (U. S.) 521, 15 L. ed. 474; Forman v. Peaslee, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 4,941; Morris v. Maxwell, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,834, 3 Blatchf. 143. The statute was, however, confined to that change only (Ballard v. Thomas, 19 How. (U. S.) 382, 15 L. ed. 690; Barnard v. Morton, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 1,005, 1 Curt. 404), and did not affect the question of the imposition of extra duties because of undervaluation (Morris v. Maxwell, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,834, 3 Blatchf. 143).

45. The market value may be defined as the price at which the owner, producer, or manufacturer of goods holds them for sale; the price at which they are freely offered in the markets to all the world; such prices as dealers are willing to receive, and purchasers are made to pay in the ordinary course of trade. Muser v. Magone, 155 U. S. 240, 15 S. Ct. 77, 39 L. ed. 135; Cliquot v. U. S., 3 Wall. (U. S.) 114, 18 L. ed. 116; In re Six Cases of Silk Ribbons, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 12,914, 3 Ben. 536; In re Three Thousand One Hundred and Nine Cases Champagne, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 14,012, 1 Ben. 241; U. S. v. Sixteen Cases of Silk Ribbons, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,301.

In the determination of this value it has been held that inasmuch as the so-called "bonification of tax," under the German laws, accrues when a manufacturer sells, his wholesale price would include it. Therefore such tax should be included in determining the market value and wholesale price of goods in Germany. U. S. v. Passavant, 169 U. S. 16, 18 S. Ct. 219, 42 L. ed. 644. On the other hand it is held that inasmuch as the royalty fees paid by a purchaser in this country for the use of machinery subject to letters patent in the United States and Great Britain form no part of the price paid in England for the machinery, it could not be considered as part of the wholesale price or market value. U. S. v. Leigh, 39 Fed. 764.

Evidence of market value.— Inasmuch as the law requires that the appraised value shall be that of the foreign country, any evidence not tending to show the value of the goods in that country is inadmissible. U. S. v. Doherty, 27 Fed. 730; In re Three Thousand One Hundred and Nine Cases of Champagne, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 14,012, 1 Ben. 241. So the appraisement of goods for the purpose of bonding them is not admissible as evidence of their market value. In re Three Thousand One Hundred and Nine Cases of Champagne, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 14,012, 1 Ben. 241. But a series of sales or a single sale, or offers to sell in the usual course of trade, constitute the best evidence of the market value of an article. In re Six Cases of Silk Ribbons, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 12,914, 3 Ben. 536. See also Comacho v. U. S., 115 Fed. 191. If, however, this evidence cannot be had, the cost of production or of the raw material with the addition of the manufacturer's profit is admissible as tending to show the market value. In re Six Cases of Silk Ribbons, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 12,914, 3 Ben. 536. See also In re Twelve Hundred and Nine Quarter Casks, etc., of Wine, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,279, 2 Ben. 249. But it is only when the evidence of sales cannot be had that it is proper to resort to this inferior evidence, and even then such cost is not to be received as a substitute for market value, but only as evidence tending to show market value. U. S. v. Sixteen Cases of Silk Ribbons, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,301.

46. The period of exportation means the day when the vessel sails, and not the one on which the bill of lading is given. Sampson v. Peaslee, 20 How. (U. S.) 571, 15 L. ed. 1022. See also Irvine v. Redfield, 23 How. (U. S.)

markets[47] of the country,[48] and in the condition in which such merchandise is bought and sold for exportation.[49]

(2) Commissions, Costs, and Charges. While not of uniform phraseology, and subject to occasional exceptions, the early tariff acts as a rule provided that the cost of transportation,[50] of shipment, the value of the sacks, boxes, or coverings,[51] commissions,[52] brokerage, and all other actual or usual charges,[53] except insurance, incidental to preparing the goods for transportation, should be included by the appraisers in determining the dutiable value.[54] But in 1883 these provisions were repealed, and such charges can no longer be included,[55] although if they become a part of the entered value by being included without objection as a part of the market value it would seem that the collector has no right to make any reduction.[56] By the act of 1890 previous acts providing for certain fees were

47. See Goddard v. Maxwell, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,492, 3 Blatchf. 131, where it was held that Liverpool being the principal market of the iron-producing country of England, the appraisal of the value of iron in that market was proper, although it had been produced or purchased in Wales and shipped from Liverpool.

48. The word "country" as used in this sense is construed to embrace all the possessions of a foreign state, however widely separated, which are subject to the same supreme, executive, and legislative control. Stairs v. Peaslee, 18 How. (U. S.) 521, 15 L. ed. 474.

abrogated.[57] The customs officials have the right, however, to inquire into the nature and origin of the disbursements claimed by the importer to be paid as charges and commissions, and if they prove to be in fact a part of the wholesale price they will be included in the dutiable value.[58]

(3) As Affected by Invoiced Valuation — (a) In General. Inasmuch as the tariff statutes have from the beginning provided that duties shall not under any circumstances be assessed upon an amount less than the invoice or entry value, the appraisers have no authority to make an appraisement for less than that amount.[59] Nor can the appraisal be for a less sum than the increased invoice which the importer may make to avoid a penalty or forfeiture.[60]

(b) Allowance For Deficiencies and Damages. Duties are not to be estimated upon goods which never arrived in port, merely because they are included in the invoice.[61] Any regulation of the treasury department to the contrary is void.[62] Provision for allowances for deficiencies and damages incurred during the voyage has also been carried up since the inception of tariff legislation.[63] The many claims for damages so presented, and the continuous efforts made for the abatement of duties, induced, however, a radical change, and in lieu of such allowances

(B) Of Foreign Coin. From the origin of tariff legislation the value of foreign coins for the purpose of liquidating duties has been based upon their pure metal or intrinsic value as expressed in the money of account of the United States.[65] The method of estimating such value has varied at different times,[66] but under any of them it has been uniformly held that the value when lawfully determined was conclusive.[67] The valuation must, however, be made of the standard or legal currency of the country of exportation,[68] and that at the time of exportation will govern.[69]

c. Reappraisal and Reliquidation — (1) Right to. If the collector deems the value placed upon the merchandise by the appraisers too low, or if the importer, owner, or consignee is dissatisfied with such appraisement, it is provided[70] that the collector may, upon his own motion, or shall, upon proper notice of such dissatisfaction by the importer or owner, direct a reappraisement by one of the general appraisers. Should this appraisement be unsatisfactory to either of the parties, provision is made for an appraisement by a board of three general appraisers.[71]

(II) Limitation of Right. The statute[72] limiting the time within which duties may be reliquidated to one year from the date of entry in the absence of fraud or protest by the owner or importer does not operate to prevent the liquidation of duties on an article at any time after its entry in bond upon or after its withdrawal for consumption when there had been no previous liquidation.[73]

2. Effect — a. Conclusiveness as to Value. Inasmuch as to allow a jury to review or revise the valuation of goods when made by customs officials would produce great uncertainty or inequality in the collection of duties,[74] the policy of the customs laws is to make the appraisement conclusive as to the dutiable value of the goods, provided the appraisers are selected in conformity to statute, and do not proceed fraudulently, or upon principles contrary to law, or transcend the powers conferred upon them by the statute.[75]

b. Liability For Additional Duties. If an importation is of such nature that the duties thereon must be regulated by the value thereof,[76] and the importer Presence of goods.— The general rule that the packages of goods must themselves be present upon a reëxamination and reliquidation does not apply where the importation is all of the same character and kind, and there is no question as to their value; it appearing that a single specimen is a perfect representation of the whole importation. A. 557, holding that where the importation is of such a nature that the question whether or not it is subject to specific or ad valorem duties depends upon whether or not it exceeds a certain value, an appraisement is essential; and if the appraisement discloses the fact that the goods have been undervalued more than the per cent allowed by statute they are subject to the penalty of an increased duty, although the excess of such per cent on the invoice value would not be sufficient to re-refuses to make any addition to his entry,[77] or if after such addition the appraised value exceeds the invoice value, a provision has been carried through all the acts to the effect that there should be exacted an additional duty in the nature of a penalty[78] for such undervaluation.[79] Although to incur a liability for additional duties the undervaluation need not be fraudulently made,[80] it is clear that the valuation referred to is that of the cost or market value of the merchandise.[81] The fact, however, that a proceeding has been instituted by the government for the forfeiture of the goods[82] does not, under the present statute, relieve an importer from his liability for such additional duties.[83]

3. Appeal — a. To Board of General Appraisers — (1) Powers and Jurisdiction. The board of general appraisers which in a sense is an essential part of the custom-house machinery[84] has in some respects the same powers as a court regarding the admission of evidence.[85] Their jurisdiction extends only to merchandise lawfully entered and regularly invoiced and appraised.[86] Any alleged inclusion of unlawful charges by the collector or appraiser is clearly subject to their review;[87] likewise they may correct a clerical error in the invoice value.[88] They have, however, no jurisdiction to review the action of the collector in adoptquire an ad valorem instead of a specific duty. And see U. S. v. Nuckolls, 118 Fed. 1005, 55 C. C. A. 499.

When goods are entered at a port with the intent of being transported to another port, the entry should be completed at the former port, and the collector of that port, if the goods be assessed too low, must levy the additional duty. Nor does their jurisdiction accrue where the question is whether or not an article was brought from a foreign country.[92]

(II) PROTEST—(A) In General. Although as we have seen it is essential that the appraised value of merchandise be considered as conclusive upon the importer,[93] he may nevertheless feel himself injured by the classification of his merchandise,[94] or of the rate of duty imposed thereon under such classification, in which case it is incumbent upon him to file a proper protest as a prerequisite to his right to appeal.[95] The provisions of the statute requiring such protest and designating the time[96] within which it must be filed are peremptory, and the collector has no authority to waive the same,[97] or to accept it either before[98] or after the specified time.[99]

S. v. Newhall, 91 Fed. 525, 532, where it is said: "The Klingenberg Case [see supra, note 89] is not an authority upon the proposition that where the collector declines to accept the proclaimed value of a foreign standard coin, and adopts another standard, thereby increasing the amount of duties upon imported merchandise, his action is not the subject of review, under the act of 1890."

Formal notice to the board of dissatisfaction by either the importer or collector is not necessary under this statute to give the board of general appraisers jurisdiction. U. S. v. Loeb, 107 Fed. 692, 46 C. C. A. 562 [reversing 99 Fed. 723]. Likewise it is held that under a regulation of the treasury department providing that, after an appraisement has been completed, and the return thereof received and accepted by the importer, the appraisement cannot be recalled, even for the correction of a clerical error, if the effect of such correction is to change the appraisal. It is also held that if such action is attempted the importer has the right to protest against the second valuation on the ground that it amounts to a new appraisement, and in such instances it is unnecessary that he give the notice of dissatisfaction as provided in this section. U. S. v. Morewood, 94 Fed. 639.

93. See supra, III, C, 2, a.

94. It is sometimes difficult to tell just whether or not the grievance of the importer arises from the imposition of an unsatisfactory dutiable value, or whether the question is one of classification rather than of value; and if his protest fails to show whether the objection is to the valuation or to the classification it will be presumed that it exists as to the former, and that his remedy is by appeal for reappraisement rather than by protest. Cottier v. U. S., 101 Fed. 423. See also Wanamaker v. Cooper, 69 Fed. 329. On the other hand it has been held that where upon an importation of ginger ale in bottles a collector adds the value of the bottles to that of the ale, the question of the propriety of such action is one of classification rather than of valuation, and therefore remedial by protest. Dickson v. U. S., 68 Fed. 534. To the same effect see Oberteuffer v. Robertson, 116 U. S. 499, 6 S. Ct. 462, 29 L. ed. 706.

96. Notice of a protest left by the importer in the proper place after business hours on the last day but one for giving notice, the last day being a holiday, on which the custom-house is closed by special order but not by law, is a lawful compliance with regard to time, and such protest cannot be disregarded (Frankenburg v. U. S., 77 Fed. 606); altbough it would be otherwise if the custom-house was closed by law on the last day, as for instance where the last day falls on Sunday; in which case a protest served on the following Monday would be insufficient (Shefer v. Magone, 47 Fed. 872).

97. U. S. v. Schefer, 71 Fed. 959. See also Abegg v. U. S., 71 Fed. 960, where the board of general appraisers refused to assume jurisdiction, where it did not appear that the protest offered was filed by one having a right so to do under the statute.

98. In re Bailey, 112 Fed. 413, where it is said that the reason why the act of 1890 provided that the protest should be filed after, and not before, the ascertainment and liquidation of duties was to avoid the effect of the decision of Davies v. Miller, 130 U. S. 284, 9 S. Ct. 960, 32 L. ed. 932, decided in 1888.

99. In re Guggenheim Smelting Co., 112 Fed. 517, 50 C. C. A. 374.

And therefore a protest cannot after the expiration of ten days be amended, if the effect thereof would be to make it a new protest. In re Sherman, 49 Fed. 224.

The payment of duties within the ten days is not, however, a condition precedent to the right of a review by the board of general

(B) Sufficiency.[1] Although there is a lack of uniformity found in the expressions of the courts with regard to the sufficiency of this protest, it is agreed that no technical precision in form or statement is required,[2] and the general concensus of the decisions is to the effect that it will be held sufficient if it so distinctly informs the collector of the position taken by the importer that no one is misled thereby.[3]

b. To Circuit Court — (I) JURISDICTION. The jurisdiction of the circuit court is not limited to a review of the decisions of the board with regard to the classification of merchandise and the rate of duty imposed thereon, but extends to a review of the decisions of the board upon all questions and matters properly appealable to them.[4]

(II) FILING STATUTORY APPLICATION. The provision of the statute providing for the filing with the clerk of a statement of the errors of law and fact

Necessity of protest pointing out proper classification.— It cannot be said that the decisions are uniform upon the question as to whether or not the protest under this act must point out the classification contended for by the importer. In the very recent case of U. S. v. Salambier, 170 U. S. 621, 18 S. Ct. 771, 42 L. ed. 1167, a protest which did not refer to any paragraph of the tariff act but briefly stated "that the said goods under existing laws are dutiable at two cents per pound, and the exaction of a higher rate is unjust and illegal," was held sufficient, although there were two paragraphs relating to the class of goods in question, under either of which the duty was two cents per pound. This case is approved in In re Claflin, 113 Fed. 944; U. S. v. Pilditch, 99 Fed. 938; and a similar conclusion was reached in In re Houdlette, 48 Fed. 545, although this exact point was not in issue in that case. Compare In re Guggenheim Smelting Co., 112 Fed. 517, 50 C. C. A. 374; Battle, etc., Chemists' Corp. v. U. S., 108 Fed. 216. And where the only question between the importer and collector is as to whether the goods in question were dutiable under the act of 1894 or that of 1897, a protest by the importer claiming that they should have been assessed under the former act is sufficient, without specifying the classification, as this latter question is not in issue. In re Hagop Bogigian Co., 104 Fed. 75. There is, however, a line of cases to the effect that where the importer claims in his protest that the merchandise is dutiable under a specific paragraph he cannot recover under a different paragraph, although perhaps the classification of the collector was not correct. Tuska v. U. S., 84 Fed. 442; In re Herter Bros., 53 Fed. 913, 4 C. C. A. 107 [reversing 50 Fed. 72]; In re Sherman, 49 Fed. 224; In re Austin, 47 Fed. 873. But this cannot be said to be settled law, as the very recent decision of U. S. v. Shea, 114 Fed. 38, 41, 51 C. C. A. 664, refuses to acquiesce in this holding, the court observing that "it is no part of the purpose of the law as it now stands to exact such nice precision that the importer may not indicate his impressions as to what paragraph governs except at his peril." See also In re Crowley, 55 Fed. 283, 5 C. C. A. 109.

A protest alternative in form seems, however, to have always been unobjectionable, under this statute, where the proper classification is doubtful, and an importer is in no way estopped by such alternative protest. Koechl v. U. S., 91 Fed. 110, 33 C. C. A. 363; Blumenthal v. U. S., 72 Fed. 48. And under an earlier statute it was held that the voluntary refunding to an importer, whose protest was in this form, of the excess of duties collected according to one of his claims, did not, in the absence of a release or evidence of an accord and satisfaction, preclude him from maintaining another suit to recover the remaining excess according to his other claim. Robertson v. Edelhoff, 91 Fed. 642, 34 C. C. A. 34.

S. v. Newhall, 91 Fed. 525. Compare Ex p. Fasset, 142 U. S. 479, 12 S. Ct. 295, 35 L. ed. 1087; Foster v. Vocke, 60 Fed. 745.

The circuit court for the district in which the port is situated where the merchandise is entered and the duties are liquidated is the court contemplated by the statute to review the decision of the board of appraisers, and not the court of the district where the board of appraisers meets. In re Wyman, 45 Fed. 469.

Commission to take testimony.— The circuit court has no power to issue a commisof which appellant complains, and a service of a copy thereof upon the appellee,[5] must be observed, and an appellee cannot obtain the benefits of an appeal without filing such statement, merely because the other party has appealed.[6]

(III) Proceedings on Review — (A) Return of Board. The statute provides[7] that the board upon order of the court shall make a return of the record and evidence taken by them, together with the certified statement of the facts involved in the case, and their decision thereon.[8] While such evidence is competent before the court either party may controvert the same.[9]

(B) Recognition of Findings of Board. The rule that a presumption should be indulged in favor of the legality and regularity of the proceedings of the board will be recognized and respected,[10] and their finding with regard to questions of fact will not be disturbed unless wholly without evidence to support it, or clearly contrary to the weight thereof.[11] But this rule has little if any application where the additional testimony taken by the court is of an important character, and the decisive question is as much one of law as of fact.[12]

(C) Judgment — Costs. Upon a finding in favor of the importer the court may enter judgment against the United States;[13] but in the absence of a more specific authorization than is found in the statute it would seem that costs cannot be awarded against the United States in an action of this character when the decision is adverse to it.[14]

8. Nature and sufficiency of return. — The return should be considered substantially as the report of a master in an equity cause would be considered by the circuit court, or as the record, including the opinion of the court in an equity or admiralty cause in the district or circuit court, would be considered by the circuit court of appeals upon an appeal from the decree. In re Van Blankensteyn, 56 Fed. 474, 5 C. C. A. 579. It is essential that it embody all the evidence which was considered by the board in reaching the decision. In re Van Blankensteyn, 56 Fed. 474, 5 C. C. A. 579. vision is made for the execution of a bond by him to the collector, whereby he may retain the same.[15]

2. Effect of. While the execution of such bond transfers the custody of the goods from the government to the importer,[16] it does not operate as an extinguishment of the debt due the government, but merely as a security for its payment;[17] and it has been held that the United States need not resort to the surety on such bond in the first instance, but may proceed against the sureties upon the probate bond of an executor who had executed such security;[18] but if this security be lawfully executed by the consignee, no recourse can be had against the real owner.[19]

3. Liability on — a. Extent of. The amount recoverable for the breach of a custom-house bond taken under section 2899 of the Revised Statutes by the refusal of the principal obligor to return packages on demand of the collector is double the estimated value of the particular packages so withheld, as liquidated damages.[20]

b. Enforcement of. While under the earlier acts it was provided that in a suit on such a bond for the recovery of duties due the United States, judgment thereon should be granted at the return-term, upon motion,[21] such provision was merely intended as an interdict to any contrivance for delay, and did not preclude a party from setting up a good defense to the merits.[22]

c. Rights of Surety. Under the earlier acts the surety on such a bond, upon the payment of the same, was expressly accorded the same priority as the United States against the estate of his principal in the hands of an assignee.[23]

15. U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 2899 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1921].

By whom given.—Under the present act the bond may be given by the owner, importer, consignee, or agent. Under the act of 1799, it was held that a purchaser after importation could not lawfully furnish such bond, and the collector would have no authority to receive the same from such party. U. S. v. Lyman, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,647, 1 Mason 482. But it seems that an executor, as such, should be allowed to furnish such bond, and to bind the estate of his testator thereby. U. S. v. Aborn, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,418, 3 Mason 126.

Condition of bond.— See U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 2899 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1921]. Under an earlier act, although the law made no provision for such a bond where the duties amounted to less than two hundred dollars, yet it was held that a bond for a less amount was valid. U. S. v. Linn, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,605, Crabbe 307.

For form of bond to secure duties see U. S. v. Dieckerhoff, 103 Fed. 789.

It is not incumbent on a collector to take a bond for duties, and to issue a permit to land a cargo where he can show that a previous bond for duties given by the real owner of the cargo was due and unpaid, and that such real owner had fraudulently transferred the cargo to another, thereby expecting to procure a greater credit by the execution of such bond. Olney v. Arnold, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 308, 1 L. ed. 614.

Teas.— Distinction for the securing of duties was also made in the earlier acts between merchandise commonly imported and teas, the duties on the latter being secured not only by the bond of the importer, but by the deposit of the teas as well. That the bond was given by the obligors without knowledge of the existence of an alleged defense, arising from delay in demanding payment, is not, however, a good defense. U. S. v. McKewan, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,692, 4 Blatchf. 383.

4. PAYMENT OR DISCHARGE. Nothing short of an actual payment will operate as a discharge of such bond, and therefore payment by a check will not constitute a liquidation until the check is paid.[24]

E. Provisions For Warehousing — 1. NATURE AND PURPOSE OF. In view of certain emergencies which may render it necessary to warehouse importations provisions have been enacted providing for the warehousing of such importations, under the direction and supervision of the government.[25] And as not only convenience in the transaction of public business but also the best interest of the government requires the prompt payment of duties within a prescribed time, provisions have been carried up providing for the abandonment,[26]

A bond with a disjunctive condition to either pay a specific sum or the amount of duties to be ascertained to be due, being authorized by the earlier tariff acts, the general rule that obligations in the disjunctive can be discharged by a performance of either of the conditions at the election of the obligor was held to apply. U. S. v. Thompson, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,486, 1 Gall. 388 [followed in U. S. v. Carlton, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,725, 1 Gall. 400].

Debenture certificates as set-off.— Where a bond is given for duties and the goods are subsequently exported and the bond is not paid, whereupon suit is brought thereon, the debenture certificate should be applied in part payment at the time the bond became due, and interest should not be charged upon any greater sum than the balance remaining after the value of such certificate has been deducted. Morton v. Ludlow, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 519 [affirming 1 Edw. 639]; Jones v. Moore, 1 Edw. (N. Y.) 632.

Right of collector to accept check.— Under the earlier customs acts, although it was the common practice at the custom-house to receive the check of the importer in payment of duty, the statute nowhere recognizes the right of the collector to receive anything but money of the United States or foreign gold or silver coin; and therefore the acceptance of a check by the collector, and the cancellation of the bond or a receipt acknowledging payment, if the payment be in fact made by check, is open to explanation, and does not bar a suit on the bond by the government. Johnson v. U. S., 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7,419, 5 Mason 425; U. S. v. Williams, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,724, 1 Ware 173.

26. The word "abandonment" as used in U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 2971 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1950] is not to be construed as an absolute abandonment of the goods so as to vest the title thereof in the government; but the word is used in the sense of vesting absolute authority and power in the government when the goods have remained in the warehouse for a period of more than three years, to sell and dispose of the same for the purpose of collecting the duties, charges, and expenses thereon. Anglo-California Bank v. Secretary of Treasury, 76 Fed. 742, 22 C. C. A. 527.

Imposition of additional duties on non-payment.— The statute formerly provided for the imposition of additional duty if the merchandise was not withdrawn within a certain time after its original importation. U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 2970 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1950], which provided for an extra duty of ten per cent on goods remaining in a bonded warehouse longer than one year. Under this provision it was held that this additional duty should be imposed upon goods never withdrawn, but sold to satisfy duties. U. S. v. Unger, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,595. For further construction of this provision see Merritt v. Cameron, 137 U. S. 542, 11 S. Ct. 174, 34 L. ed. 772. This provision was repealed by the customs act of 1890, which extended the time for withdrawal to three years from the date of the importation, and dispensed altogether with a duty additional per se; and it was held that the additional duty could not be levied on goods which had been in bond more than a year before the pas-

after a specific time, of the goods to the government, and for the sale thereof.[27] But as such regulations are obviously for the benefit of the importer,[28] the general trend of the regulations has always been that the expense and risk must be borne by him.[29]

2. EFFECT OF WAREHOUSING. The effect of warehousing goods under these provisions is to place them in possession of the sovereign, and no lien thereon can be obtained by an execution creditor.[30]

3. WAREHOUSE BONDS[31] — a. Purpose of. In providing the importer the convenience of the warehouse system, the government does not purpose, however, to assume any risk of loss which may attend the holding of the goods, or their mis-sage of this latter act, but not withdrawn until after its passage. Schmid v. U. S., 66 Fed. 744 [affirming 54 Fed. 145].

The date of original importation within the meaning of this statute was held to be the date at which the goods first arrived at a port of the United States, and it was therefore held that when goods arriving at an exterior port have been transported to a port in the interior of the country, the date of original importation must be reckoned from the time of their arrival at the exterior port. Seeberger v. Schweyer, 153 U. S. 609, 14 S. Ct. 881, 38 L. ed. 839. Contra, Farwell v. Spalding, 24 Fed. 18.

The general purpose of these statutes is best discussed in U. S. v. De Visser, 10 Fed. 642. See also Anglo-California Bank v. Secretary of Treasury, 76 Fed. 742, 749, 22 C. C. A. 527. where it is said: "Throughout the entire legislation of this country upon the subject, the intent of congress to limit the right of the importer to withdraw his goods within a certain time, and to impose condition for his failure so to do, is made manifest."

Time within which goods must be withdrawn.— Under the present statute, the government does not as a rule take charge of the goods until they have been in storage for a period of three years. U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 2971 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1950]. See also modification of the same as provided by section 2973. The act of 1846, which may be said to be the foundation of the warehouse system, allowed but one year for the payment of duties, or for reëxportation without payment. Like the present statute, however, it provided for the payment to the owner, importer, or consignee, of the residue after all the charges and expenses of the government had been paid; but during the period of our late Civil war it would seem that a provision was in force providing for the forfeiture of the surplus to the government. See U. S. v. De Visser, 10 Fed. 642, where these enactments are reviewed.

The rights and liabilities of the parties become fixed at the expiration of the three years, and the government is entitled to retain from the proceeds of the sale or to collect upon the bond the amount of duties according to the law existing at the time of the appraisal, although a different rate of duty has gone into effect before the sale is consummated. Buxbaum v. U. S., 80 Fed. 885, 26 C. C. A. 216.

Sale of perishable goods.— See Gould v. Hammond, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,638, McAll. 235. See also Rubens v. Robertson, 38 Fed. 86, holding that the collector may delegate to the appraiser the duty of examining merchandise, to see whether or not it is deteriorating in value, within the meaning of the statute providing for the sale of merchandise when found to be in such condition.

St. (1901) pp. 1903, 1947], and holding that where unclaimed goods with no invoice are sent to a general warehouse, and subsequently, upon application of the assignees of the bill of lading for entry of the same, are sent to the public store for examination and appraisement, the charges for cartage to the store and for the storage and labor may be exacted from the importer, although the goods are of less value than one hundred dollars. To the same effect see Hempstead v. Cadwalader, 42 Fed. 529. And for construction of an earlier act see Corkle v. Maxwell, 6 Fed. Cas. No. 3,231, 3 Blatchf. 413. See also U. But it has been held that a note by the importer on the entry of goods "vessel, as warehouse," does not constitute a warehouse entry or authorize a collector to charge for half storage. An instrument satisfying the requirements of a statute which provided for the execution of a transportation bond, although not in the form of a bond, and being so conditioned that it did not prejudice the liability carriage to, or warehousing at, another port in retransportation, or to look to them alone as security for the payment of duties, but requires also the security of a bond,[32] to which it may also look should the goods be released or unlawfully parted with without the payment of the duties due thereon.[33]

b. Liability on — (I) In General — (A) Of Principal. The rule is well settled that the importer, as principal, is liable either on the bond or otherwise,[34] for any deficiency in the amount of lawful duties payable, irrespective of any extension of time which may be granted upon the bond, or of the wrongful release of the goods without payment of duties.[35]

(B) Of Surety. But the situation of the surety is different; his liabilities being of course limited to the bond itself;[36] and while the sureties on warehouse bonds have the same liabilities as ordinary sureties, except as modified by the laws and regulations,[37] it is held that the provisions of the statute tending to determine the duration of his risk must be considered as part of his contract of suretyship, and not merely directory to the government officials;[38] and that therefore any attempt to prolong this liability without his consent cannot be upheld.[39]

(II) For Stipulated Penalty. If the purpose of the bond given by an importer on putting goods in a warehouse is purely to prevent fraud upon the revenue rather than to secure the payment of duties leviable on the goods, it is of the obligors, was held sufficient under an earlier statute providing for the execution of transportation bonds. U. S. v. Pingree, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,050, 1 Sprague 339, holding also that under the provisions of that statute the bond properly included the original duty as well as the additional duty provided for should the goods not be duly re-warehoused, and that such additional duty should be reckoned on the original duty, and not on the invoice value.

Pleading. — It is essential in an action on a bond of this nature to allege that there were duties on the goods, the amount of such duties, and to what amount they remained unpaid; since if no duties remained unpaid there would be no breach of the bond. U. S. v. Duys, 112 Fed. 875.

36. Dumont v. U. S., 98 U. S. 142, 25 L. ed. 65, also holding that as the bond was conditioned in the alternative, the performance by the surety of one of the conditions would therefore operate to discharge him. See also U. S. v. Campbell, 10 Fed. 816.

S. v. De Visser, 10 Fed. 642, where a sale of goods which had remained in bond for three years, having been directed according to the regulations of the treasury department, the secretary of the treasury, at the request of the purchaser of the goods, but without consulting the surety, intervened and directed a postponement of the sale, it was held that such a favor could not be granted at the expense of the surety, by thus prolonging his risk, without his consent, and that as such an order necessarily prolonged his risk and suspended his right to proceed for his indemnity, it should be held to operate as his discharge.

held that the liability upon a breach thereof should be the full amount of the penalty stipulated therein.[40]

F. Drawback Provisions — 1. Purpose and Nature of. For the purpose of enabling a manufacturer to compete in foreign markets, thereby building up an export trade, as well as to encourage manufacturing in this country, provisions are made for a rebate of duties, known as drawbacks,[41] upon certain imported materials which are after manufacture reëxported;[42] and in the construction of such provisions these objects should be kept in mind,[43] but should not induce the court to make an illogical interpretation of the statute.[44] Such statutes are prospective, rather than retroactive, in their effect,[45] and follow the general rule of designating articles by their commercial signification.[46]

2. Construction and Application of. The statutes, which in substance provide that a drawback shall be allowed upon imported materials when used in the manufacture of articles manufactured or produced in the United States and subsequently exported, mean that the "imported material" must enter into and form one of the ingredients of the manufactured article;[47] they also contemplate that at least a considerable part of the cost of the production of the completed article shall be expended in the United States,[48] and that they be bona fide exported.[49] It is also essential when the imported article is made in part from

S. v. Cutajar, 59 Fed. 1000, which was a bond to produce an authenticated invoice within a prescribed time, in that in that case the bond was only incidentally, if at all, for the purpose of preventing fraud on the revenue], construing U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 2979 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1953], and holding that although the treasury regulations provided that in case of withdrawal for export, the importer should give bond in a penal sum equal to double the amount of the estimated duties, yet, if he gave a bond for a lump sum without containing reference to the amount of estimated duties, the liability must be for the whole sum, and not for double the amount of duties as subsequently estimated.

41. A drawback is a device resorted to for enabling a commodity affected by taxes to be exported and sold in the foreign markets on the same terms as if it had not been taxed at all. U. S. v. Passavant, 169 U. S. 16, 18 S. Ct. 219, 42 L. ed. 646.

47. And therefore a drawback of duties upon imported bottles and corks used in the manufacture of bottled beer cannot be permitted; and the mere fact that the beer after bottling is steamed for the purpose of killing the yeast germs therein does not convert the bottles from an encasement to an ingredient of the beer itself. Joseph Schlitz Brewing Co. v. U. S., 181 U. S. 584, 21 S. Ct. 740, 45 L. ed. 1013; Beadleston v. U. S., 104 Fed. 295; Wheeler v. U. S., 75 Fed. 654. So too a raw material like coal, in the production of which no materials are used which enter into and form a part of the exported product, would not be within the statute. U. S. v. Allen, 163 U. S. 499, 16 S. Ct. 1071, 41 L. ed. 242 [reversing 58 Fed. 864, 7 C. C. A. 547].

Cl. 90], holding that where, in the building of boxes from boards imported from Canada, the cost of the labor expended in the United States represented only one tenth in value of the boxes, it was altogether improbable that congress intended to permit a drawback upon nine tenths of the value represented by foreign manufactures for the benefit of the one tenth of the labor represented as put upon the boxes in this country.

Oil cake is a manufactured article within the meaning of this statute and not waste. Campbell v. U. S., 107 U. S. 407, 2 S. Ct. 759, 27 L. ed. 592; U. S. v. Dean Linseed-Oil Co., 87 Fed. 453, 31 C. C. A. 51.

49. And hence when bags made of imported material are leased to steamers for foreign voyages, with the understanding that they are to be brought back to the United States, no right of drawback arises. Kennedy v. U. S., 95 Fed. 127, 37 C. C. A. 25 [affirming 79 Fed. 893].

domestic material that the imported materials, or the parts of the articles made from such materials, shall so appear in the completed articles that the quantity or measure thereof may be ascertained.[50]

3. BOND. For the purpose of preventing a furtive relanding[51] of the goods after they have been exported and a drawback claimed, a bond is required that the same[52] shall not be relanded in any port within the limits of the United States;[53] and the surety on such a bond is estopped from denying that the quantity of the goods specified therein had not in fact been laden on the vessel.[54]

4. DETERMINATION AND APPORTIONMENT. Where the statute is silent as to the amount of drawback or the method of proportioning the same,[55] the court will adopt the construction of the statute or the method of division which seems to it the most reasonable and just.[56]

5. COLLECTION — a. Jurisdiction — Court of Claims. While the jurisdiction of the court of claims in all matters relating to the recovery of duties was at one time denied,[57] the later cases hold that the statutes providing drawbacks raise an implied contract that the government will refund to the importer this amount when he has brought himself within the terms of the statute, and that therefore that court has jurisdiction as well as the courts particularly provided by the revenue laws.[58]

b. Compliance With Statutory Conditions. An allowance of drawback being an exemption from the operation of the general statutes applicable to the imposition of customs, a party claiming such benefit or gratuity must bring himself clearly within the intent[59] and operation of such provisions,[60] and show that he

Foreign destination.— The shipment of an article, upon a foreign-going vessel, for use and consumption upon the voyage, is not "exportation" within the extent of the statute. In all drawback statutes foreign destination is intended. Swan, etc., Co. v. U. S., 37 Ct. Cl. 101 [affirmed in 190 U. S. 143, 23 S. Ct. 702, 47 L. ed. 984].

50. This means that the completed article itself shall furnish the standard for measuring the amount of the imported material used in the manufacture thereof, and does not contemplate that the government shall have a bookkeeper and inspector in every exporter's manufacturing establishment. Anglo-American Provision Co. v. U. S., 116 Fed. 248, 53 C. C. A. 28.

51. A transaction in which certain sugars after being laden on a vessel are fraudulently relanded on the dock, and the marks obliterated and others substituted in their stead, and then replaced on the vessel so as to show on the return a larger quantity of sugar than was actually put on board, is a "relanding" within the meaning of the bond, and would constitute a breach of the same. U. S. v. Heckscher, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,338.

52. But goods which have passed through a foreign custom-house and become mingled with the common merchandise of the country are no longer the same goods within the meaning of the bond, and may be again reimported. U. S. v. Whidden, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,670, 3 Ware 269.

53. U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 3043 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1999].

The whole object of the bond is to prevent goods thus reëxported from being brought back and going into the consumption of the country. U. S. v. Whidden, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,670, 3 Ware 269.

56. U. S. v. Dean Linseed-Oil Co., 87 Fed. 453, 31 C. C. A. 51 [reversing 78 Fed. 467], where the court followed the practice of the treasury department in such cases, by distributing the duty paid between the manufactured articles in proportion to their value, whether the original duties were specific or ad valorem; this system appearing to the court to be reasonable and equitable as well to the importer as to the government.

57. Nicholl v. U. S., 7 Wall. (U. S.) 122, 19 L. ed. 125, where, however, the action was to recover for an excess of duties paid, and the decision went adversely to the claimant, not only on the ground that the court of claims had no jurisdiction, but also that a protest was an absolute prerequisite to the right of action regardless of the forum in which the action was brought.

58. Durant v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cl. 356; Kennedy v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cl. 363; Campbell v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cl. 470 [affirmed in 107 U. S. 407, 2 S. Ct. 759, 27 L. ed. 592]. And see, generally, COURTS.

For jurisdiction of the commercial court of New Orleans over actions for drawbacks see Gove v. Breedlove, 5 Roh. (La.) 78.

59. Such provisions have always been understood to establish relations between the regular and honest importer and the government, and do not include in their purview any return of the forfeitures or amercements resulting from illegal or fraudulent dealings on the part of the importer or his agents. Bartlett v. Kane, 16 How. (U. S.) 263, 14 L. ed. 931.

60. A claim for drawbacks is within the general principle that exemptions must be has performed all the preliminary steps and acts prescribed by law.[61] Failure so to do is fatal to an allowance.

G. Actions For Collection — 1. In General. The right of the government to enforce payment of duties does not depend upon the enforcement of its lien upon the goods,[62] or to its recourse upon any bond it may have required.[63] Such duties constitute a personal debt from the importer,[64] which may be enforced against him in an appropriate action[65] regardless of the existence of any lien or bond, or of the fact that the goods may have been smuggled, or through mistake or fraud delivered up by the customs officials, without the payment of the duties;[66] nor, if the action be for the amount due upon a final liquidation, can the importer set up as a defense any irregularities in the appraisement, unless he has complied strictly construed, and that doubt must be resolved against the one asserting the exemption. U. S. v. Allen, 163 U. S. 499, 16 S. Ct. 1071, 41 L. ed. 242 [reversing 58 Fed. 864, 7 C. C. A. 547].

61. Hence it must appear, as prescribed by the treasury regulations, that the collector's certificate and the manufacturer's affidavit had been filed with the superintendent of exports within sixty days after the clearing of the vessel. And the very fact that a time is limited within which the affidavit must be filed shows that its filing within the prescribed time is material, and constitutes a condition precedent which must be fulfilled before the right to the gratuity can be fixed. Davis v. U. S., 17 Ct. Cl. 292.

The six years' limitation within which time suits against the United States for drawbacks must be brought, as provided by the act of March 3, 1887, begins to run from the date of exportation, and not from the date of the decision of the treasury department passing upon the claim. Kennedy v. U. S., 95 Fed. 127, 37 C. C. A. 25 [affirming 79 Fed. 893].

The statute relating to assignment of claims against the United States does not, however, apply to a claim for drawbacks, since the treasury regulations provide that the person producing the bill of lading, properly indorsed, shall be deemed the exporter for the purpose of making entry, and receiving the drawback or refund. Kennedy v. U. S., 95 Fed. 127, 37 C. C. A. 25 [affirming 79 Fed. 893].

62. See infra, III, G, 2.

63. See supra, III, D.

64. But one cannot be made the consignee of goods against his will; and if he chooses to renounce that character, and refuses to have anything to do with the goods, the government acquires no right against him as virtual importer. Du Peirat v. Wolfe, 29 N. Y. 436. So too it is held that a purchaser of goods, after they have passed the custom-house, without the payment of duties, would not be liable for the duty, in the absence of a showing of connivance with the importer. U. S. v. Koblitz, 15 Fed. 900.

65. A complaint by the United States, alleging that defendant made a withdrawal entry, and withdrew from a bonded warehouse for consumption imported goods which were dutiable, and upon subsequent liquidation of the duties thereon paid the greater portion of such duties without protest, states a cause of action for the recovery of the remainder, although it shows that defendant was not the importer, the presumption being from the facts alleged that it bore such relation to the goods as to be chargeable with the duties. Abner Doble Co. v. U. S., 119 Fed. 152, 56 C. C. A. 40.

Burden of proof.— In an action of this nature the burden of proof is on the government to show the quantity of merchandise imported by the defendant, and that he imported the same without paying the required duties. U. S. v. Koblitz, 15 Fed. 900. But on the other hand it is held that where the classification of an article has been changed, the collector, in bringing an action to recover the increased duties, is entitled to a presumption that the change was rightfully made, and that therefore the burden of proof was on the defendant to show that the change of classification should not have been made. U. S. v. Midgley, 42 Fed. 668.

Evidence.— In an action of indebitatus assumpsit to enforce the payment of duties the collector's books, in the handwriting of a deceased clerk, are admissible in evidence on behalf of the United States. U. S. v. Howland, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,406, 2 Cranch C. C. 508.

The defendant has a right, in the preparation of his defense, to the invoices, entries, warehouse bonds, and official weigher's returns, in an action against him to recover for duties claimed of him, and if the collector refuses him the right to such instruments, mandamus will issue to compel their production. with the statutory provisions providing for appeals from such appraisals.[67] And the fact that certain duties were refunded upon a reclassification does not preclude the government from recovering under a second reliquidation, if the action be brought within the time prescribed by statute.[68]

2. By Enforcement of Lien.[69] The lien of the government for duties is restricted to the goods on which the duties in question accrued, and does not exist as to duties due by the importer on previous importations,[70] although if a part of a single consignment is fraudulently withdrawn without payment of the duties thereon, the remainder can be held until the duties on the entire importation are paid.[71] Such lien ceases upon the taking of a bond and security for the goods and the delivery of them to the consignee,[72] or upon the tender of the legal duties or proper security therefor,[73] although it seems that an unsuccessful proceeding by the United States for an alleged violation of the revenue laws would not deprive it of such a lien.[74]

IV. Recovery of Duties Paid.

A. Subsequent to Act of 1890. Since the enactment of the customs administrative act of 1890, it is held that the remedy therein provided the importer is exclusive, and that no action lies against the collector to recover duties paid,[75] provided the point at issue is one within the purview of the customs law;[76] but if the case, although arising under the revenue laws, is not within such pur-

That possession is not adverse to the title of the importer; and, indeed, it may be properly deemed not so much an exclusive as a concurrent and mixed possession, for the joint benefit of the importer and of the United States. It leaves the importer's right to the immediate possession perfect the moment the lien for the duties is discharged; and if he tenders the duties, or the proper security therefor, and the collector or other officer refuses the delivery of the goods, it is a tortious conversion of the property, for which an action of trespass or trover will lie."

view, an action may still be maintained,[77] unless the payment was made voluntarily.[78]

B. Previous to Act of 1890 — 1. Nature of Action. In the earlier stages of tariff legislation, an action at common law would lie to recover duties not voluntarily[79] paid.[80] The effect of the later statutes was to convert the prior common-law action into one based wholly on statutory liability.[81]

2. By Whom Brought. Under the statutes superseded by the act of 1890,[82] it was held that a mere assignee of the claim of the importer could not maintain this action;[83] nor under the earlier acts was it essential that the suit be brought in the name of the consignee; but such action could be maintained by the actual owner of the goods.[84]

Form of remedy.— In De Lima v. Bidwell, 182 U. S. 1, 21 S. Ct. 743, 45 L. ed. 1041, the court hold that in a case not within the meaning of the Customs Administrative Act the common law must still be held to prevail, and that therefore an action at common law would lie. While this case was expressly approved in Dooley v. U. S., 182 U. S. 222, 21 S. Ct. 762, 45 L. ed. 1074, it was held that the common-law remedy was not exclusive, but that the importer might also, under the present statutes, avail himself of his right of action in the circuit court as a court of claims. Or an action may be maintained in the circuit court as such. Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U. S. 244, 21 S. Ct. 770, 45 L. ed. 1088.

80. Review of statutory enactments.—Previous to the act of 1839, the court uniformly held that if the payment was made under protest or with the understanding that the importer would sue to recover it back, that an action of indebitatus assumpsit could be maintained against the collector, and under this procedure the collector in such instance usually retained the amount in dispute and did not pay the same to the treasury department until the claim had been adjudicated; but if he did pay such moneys to the treasury department with knowledge that the claim was to be assessed, assumpsit would nevertheless lie against him. See Gantzler v. Gordon, 6 La. 258; Cary v. Curtis, 3 How. (U. S.) 236, 11 L. ed. 576; Bend v. Hoyt, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 263, 10 L. ed. 154; Elliott v. Swartwout, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 137, 9 L. ed. 373. The embarrassments which ensued in consequence of the large amount of duties withheld from the public treasury by the collector induced the passage of the act of 1839, which required the collector, upon the collection of moneys, to pay the same into the treasury department, without awaiting the result of any litigation in relation thereto. Under this statute it was held that assumpsit would no longer lie. See Barney v. Watson, 92 U. S. 449, 23 L. ed. 730; Curtis v. Fiedler, 2 Black (U. S.) 461, 72 L. ed. 763; Cary v. Curtis, 3 How. (U. S.) 236, 11 L. ed. 576; Knoedler v. Schell, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,889, 4 Blatchf. 484, 20 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 216; Richardson v. Curtis, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,781, 3 Blatchf. 385. This statute did not, however, leave the importer without his remedy, inasmuch as it also provided that whenever it was shown to the satisfaction of the secretary of the treasury that more money had been paid than the law required, it was made his duty to draw his warrant upon the treasury to refund the overpayment. Barney v. Watson, 92 U. S. 449, 23 L. ed. 730; Curtis v. Fiedler, 2 Black (U. S.) 461, 17 L. ed. 273; Sturges v. U. S., Ct. Cl. (Dev.) § 207; Sturges v. U. S., Ct. Cl. (Dev.) § 203. By the act of 1845, however, congress modified this act by providing that an action at law could be maintained against the collector to recover the amount of duties when paid under a sufficient protest, etc., which enactment was in substance carried down until repealed by the act of 1890.

3. Prerequisites to Right of — a. Compliance With Statutory Provisions. Inasmuch as the action for the last half century was one purely statutory,[85] it was incumbent upon the importer to show, not only that the statute prescribing the time within which the action could be brought had been observed,[86] but that all other statutory conditions had been complied with as well.[87]

b. Payment Must Be Involuntary. It was of course essential to the importer's right of recovery that the payment of duties by him should not be made voluntarily;[88] but a payment in order to get possession of one's goods was not considered as voluntarily made.[89]

c. Protest — (i) Form and Necessity of. It will thus be seen that a protest in some form[90] to the collector of customs was a prerequisite to the right of the

86. The statute (U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 2930), provided that the action must be brought within ninety days from the decision of the secretary, and that if such decision was delayed more than ninety days from the date of appeal, or if the case arose west of the Rocky mountains more than five months after the date of appeal, the delay might be considered as an adverse decision, and the action then brought if the importer so desired. This remedy was held to be exclusive. Arnson v. Murphy, 109 U. S. 238, 3 S. Ct. 184, 27 L. ed. 920. Nor was an importer entitled to notice of the decision of the secretary of the treasury, and the fact that the collector by his silence may have led the importer to suppose that the appeal had not been acted upon, would not obviate the necessity of bringing the action within the ninety days prescribed. Shillito Co. v. McClung, 45 Fed. 778. See also Chung Yune v. Shurtleff, 10 Fed. 239, 7 Sawy. 448. Likewise it was held that a decision by the secretary that he would not entertain an appeal from the decision of the collector because of an insufficient filing of the protest was a decision "on the appeal" within the meaning of this statute. Shillito Co. v. McClung, 51 Fed. 868, 2 C. C. A. 528. But this statute was held not to prohibit the institution of a suit before the decision. Moller v. Merritt, 29 Fed. 678.

An appeal to the secretary of the treasury must be shown to have been made in compliance with statutory provisions. Reimer v. Schell, 20 Fed. Cas. Although under this provision as used in the act of 1857 it was held that an appeal to the secretary of the treasury was not a condition precedent, where the question was only as to the rate or amount of duty and not to an exemption therefrom. No. 5,837, 1 Blatchf. 599.

90. Form of protest. — Previous to the act of 1845, no particular form of protest was required; it was simply incumbent upon the importer to in some manner notify the collector of his objections to the assessment of the duties in question in such manner that the collector would understand the reasons for his objections; but it was not necessary for him to give written notice thereof. Swartwout v. Gihon, 3 How. (U. S.) 110, 11 L. ed. 517. The act of 1845, however, provided that the protest must be made in writing and set forth distinctly and specifically importer to maintain his action against the collector for the recovery of duties[91] paid.[92]

(II) Time of Filing. Under the earlier statutes it was necessary that the protest be filed at or before the time of payment of the duties in dispute.[93] Subsequently the time of filing was extended to ten days after the ascertainment and liquidation of duties;[94] and under this provision, while it was held to be in every case necessary that the protest be made within the prescribed time,[95] it was held that if made within such time it need not necessarily be made before payment.[96]

(III) Sufficiency. It was necessary that the protest should point out distinctly and specifically the omission or irregularity complained of; general expressions which might include specific objections being insufficient;[97] although the grounds of the objection to the payment of the duties. Curtis v. Fiedler, 2 Black (U. S.) 461, 17 L. ed. 273. This statute continued in force until the passage of the act of June 30, 1864 (Barney v. Watson, 92 U. S. 449, 23 L. ed. 730), and the language of this latter act was embodied in U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 2931 (Arnson v. Murphy, 115 U. S. 579, 29 L. ed. 491); and this is substantially the same language as is used in the act of 1890, which is the present law regarding the form of protest.

Protest made by an agent will of course in law be considered as made by his principal, and will therefore be sufficient (Gray v. Lawrence, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,722, 3 Blatchf. 117), although it must appear that the party making the protest was in fact the agent (Grandmange v. Schell, 32 Fed. 655).

91. For the statutes applied only to duties and not to other illegal exactions, such as for instance fees for permits to land the baggage of passengers. Ogden v. Maxwell, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,458, 3 Blatchf. 319.

And as the action against the collector is substantially one against the United States, it is held that no action can be maintained in a court of claims against the United States unless such protest be made. Schlesinger v. U. S., 1 Ct. Cl. 16 [followed in Ogden v. U. S., 1 Ct. Cl. 96; Nicoll v. U. S., 1 Ct. Cl. 70].

93. This was the provision of the act of 1845, and was in force up to the passage of the act of 1864. See Barney v. Rickard, 157 U. S. 352, 15 S. Ct. 642, 39 L. ed. 730; Barney v. Watson, 92 U. S. 449, 23 L. ed. 730; Crocker v. Redfield, 6 Fed. Cas. No. 3,400, 4 Blatchf. 378, 18 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 85. And see Marriott v. Brune, 9 How. (U. S.) 619, 13 L. ed. 282 [followed in Lillie v. Redfield, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,351, 4 Blatchf. 41], which, although sometimes cited to the contrary, affirms this proposition in the main, but under the facts in that case held that inasmuch as the importer did not know the final amount of duties required at the time he made his payment, and that as the moneys still remained in the hands of the collector, the protest was sufficient, although not made until after the payment.

94. This amendment was made by the act of 1864, which was substantially reënacted by U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 2931 (Barney v. Rickard, 157 U. S. 352, 15 S. Ct. 642, 39 L. ed. 730) and is substantially reënacted in the act of 1890.

95. This statute fixed the limit beyond which a protest should not be given, and did not fix the final ascertainment and liquidation of duties as the time at which the protest must be first given, and therefore notice might be given after the collectors' estimation of the rate and amount of duties, although before final ascertainment and liquidation. Davies v. Miller, 130 U. S. 284, 9 S. Ct. 560, 32 L. ed. 932. And if made within the prescribed time its validity is not affected by a subsequent revision of the liquidation. Keyser v. Arthur, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,749.

The ten days must be reckoned from the time of the decision of the collector at the entry of the goods for warehousing, and not within the ten days from the final withdrawal of the goods for consumption; and the fact that the treasury department had for several years construed the statute to mean otherwise will not be controlling upon the courts. under some of the earlier statutes a separate protest for each specific importation was not absolutely essential.[98] The purpose required of it did not, however, demand that it possess the technical precision of a legal document.[99]

98. Prospective or continuous protest.— Thus under the acts of 1845 and 1857 it was held that a protest might be prospective or continuous. Schell v. Fauche, 138 U. S. 562, 11 S. Ct. 376, 34 L. ed. 1040 [affirming 33 Fed. 336]; Marriott v. Brune, 9 How. (U. S.) 619, 13 L. ed. 282 [affirming 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2,052, Taney 132]; Benkard v. Schell, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 13,344, 3 Blatchf. 365; Wetter v. Schell, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,470, 11 Blatchf. 193. But under these statutes it was held that a prospective protest by a firm as to importations made by it was not valid as to similar importations made by a firm succeeding it in business. Sorchan v. Schell, 33 Fed. 580. Although where an importer took a partner in his business, and added "& Co." to his name, it was held that his previous protest was nevertheless sufficient to cover subsequent importations. Herman v. Schell, 18 Fed. 891, 21 Blatchf. 560. So too an addition at the end of a protest of a clause intended to thereby constitute it a prospective protest was held to be insufficient as an aid to an invalid protest subsequently made. Baxter v. Maxwell, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 1,126, 4 Blatchf. 32. But under the statute as amended by the act of 1864 it was held that such protests were not valid. Ullman v. Murphy, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,325, 11 Blatchf. 354.

Omission of the date from a protest in proper form and attached to the invoice of the merchandise mentioned therein is immaterial. Schell v. Fauche, 138 U. S. 562, 11 S. Ct. 376, 34 L. ed. 1040 [affirming 33 Fed. 336]. So too if the protest is written on the entry, the description of the goods as given in such entry need not be repeated in the protest. Thomson v. Maxwell, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,983, 2 Blatchf. 385.

Signature of protest.— While it has been held that a statutory requirement of the claimants' signature to the protest could not be dispensed with (Florio v. Peaslee, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 4,890, 2 Curt. 452. And see also Grandmange v. Schell, 32 Fed. 655), it has also been held that a signature by the importer to one only of two papers, pasted together, and attached to the entry by a wafer, was a sufficient compliance with the statute, especially where it appears that the custom-house officials regarded the two papers as one protest (Schell v. Fauche, 138 U. S. 562, 11 S. Ct. 376, 34 L. ed. 1040 [affirming 33 Fed. 336]).

Statement that a reappraisement had been requested should of course generally be included in such protest (Fielden v. Lawrence, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 4,774, 3 Blatchf. 120), although if the importer is told by the customs officials that he must enter his goods at the value expressed in the invoice, and in no other way, a request for a reappraisement would be unnecessary as a prerequisite to the right to recover for the excess paid (Robertson v. Bradbury, 132 U. S. 491, 10 S. Ct. 158, 33 L. ed. 405).

Protest as distinguished from that under the act of 1890.—The provision of the statute requiring the protest to set forth distinctly and specifically the grounds of the objections

4. Pleadings. While the pleadings in this action expressly required by statute could not be dispensed with,[1] it was also provided that the mode of procedure should be analogous to that of the state courts wherein the action was held.[2] Hence many questions as to the sufficiency of the pleadings, and whether or not they contained conclusions of law rather than of fact, were dependent upon the procedure and code provisions existing in such courts.[3]

5. Evidence — a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof. In actions to recover duties paid, the presumption was in favor of the regularity and correctness of the acts of the customs officials,[4] hence the burden was upon one contesting the validity of the result obtained.[5] But if a collector refused to accept the performance made by the importer has been carried up substantially unchanged since 1845, and the question naturally arises whether or not a protest need be less specific under this latter act than under the former ones. In passing upon the sufficiency of the protest under the act of 1890, the courts very properly rely upon the cases decided under these former statutes, and in some respects there can at present be said to be no difference in the essentials of a protest under the present act than under the former act. Thus under the former act it is held that although the classification made by the collector is not the proper one, yet, if the importer also improperly classifies them he cannot recover. Davies v. Arthur, 96 U. S. 148, 24 L. ed. 758 [affirming 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,611, 13 Blatchf. 34]. And while it has been held that the protest did not necessarily need to specify under what provision the goods were dutiable (Heinze v. Miller, 144 U. S. 28, 12 S. Ct. 604, 36 L. ed. 333), yet in the recent case of Herrman v. Robertson, 152 U. S. 521, 14 S. Ct. 686, 38 L. ed. 538, a protest was held insufficient which failed to point out or suggest in any way the provision under which the goods should have been classified, and in effect raised only the question as to under which of two clauses the classification should be made. There is a tendency, however, to depart from this under the latter act, and the cause thereof is perhaps hinted at rather strongly in the very recent case of U. S. v. Shea, 114 Fed. 38, 51 C. C. A. 664, where the distinction is made that under the former acts if the importer was successful in the courts he could recover from the treasury the excess paid, together with the cost of the suit. While by the procedure under the act of 1890 the whole affair must be settled by the board of general appraisers, on appeal to which no cost is incurred.

The United States statutes are complied with when the complaint states that the payment was made under protest, and a bill of particulars is served within the time prescribed by statute showing that the protest and appeal were properly made within the prescribed time. A replication was held to be inconsistent where it relied upon the promise made by the secretary of the treasury, the collector being considered merely as nominal defendant; former replications in the same action having been filed in which the promises made by the collector were relied upon. In an action tried many years after the time of importation, the production of the protests from the proper repository raises the presumption that they were properly served, and therefore they are admissible as specified proof as to the party on whom or the time when they were served. of a certain act on the part of the importer it was presumed that he would have declined to be governed by the act if it had been performed.[6]

b. Admissibility. Evidence that the importer seasonably protested was competent.[7] So too records kept in conformity to treasury regulations[8] or the original protest[9] were admissible. And as the commercial designation of an importation when properly established would govern,[10] evidence tending to show such designation was admissible;[11] and likewise evidence tending to show that the examination and appraisal were not conducted in compliance with the statute was competent.[12]

6. TRIAL — a. Confined to Scope of Protest. As the object of the protest was also to confine the importer on the trial to the objections contemplated by him at the time of making it,[13] no objections could be taken, or matters offered in defense on the trial which were not stated therein.[14]

6. See Craig v. Maxwell, 6 Fed. Cas. No. 3,334, 2 Blatchf. 545, holding that it being the duty of a collector to take a bond of the importer to produce a consular certificate if the importer so desired, it must be presumed that the collector refused to be governed by said certificate if exhibited, and the parties must be considered as standing in the same relation as if it in fact had been so presented. See also Reynolds v. Maxwell, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,731, 2 Blatchf. 555, where the consular certificate with regard to the first of two importations entered within a short interval of time, having been rejected by the collector, it was held that it might be presumed that the collector acted as to the second entry with full knowledge of that certificate, and that the importer might avail himself of it to obtain a deduction of duties in the second case, it having been shown that the collector was in error in rejecting the certificate as to the first entry.

Ct. 376, 34 L. ed. 1040 [affirming 33 Fed. 336], and holding that the failure of the custom-house officials to make a record of such protest did not destroy the competency of the original as evidence, the object of the copy being merely to supply secondary evidence if the original should be lost.

Expert testimony as to whether the goods were known in commerce as goods of similar description to other specified goods would not be admissible, inasmuch as its effect would be to put the opinion of such experts in the place of that of the jury upon a question which was as well understood by the community at large as by merchants and importers. Samples would not be admissible in evidence upon a trial many years after the date of importation, unless they consisted of a part of the importation itself, or unless there was very strong evidence of a substantial identity between the importation and the sample; testimony tending to show that there was somewhat of a resemblance is not sufficient to render such samples admissible. b. Province of Court and Jury. Under the rule ably and succinctly stated by the supreme court[15] questions as to whether or not an article was included within the commercial or trade meaning of a word or clause,[16] the similarity of an article to another article,[17] whether the chief or preponderant use of an article was such as to bring it within the purview of a term or expression,[18] or whether the proceedings on appraisement substantially complied with the statute,[19] were questions of fact for the jury; while the interpretation of words of common speech was within judicial knowledge and was a matter of law.[20]

dict might be so rendered that it would be conclusive upon the parties as to the sufficiency of the protest.[22]

b. Amount of Recovery — Interest — Costs. The courts seem to be at variance in regard to whether or not interest should be allowed upon a recovery by the claimant; in one case it was held that it should not,[23] while in others the legality of such allowance did not seem to be questioned;[24] although if the plaintiff was guilty of laches in the prosecution of his claim the rule was otherwise.[25]

V. LIABILITY FOR EVASION OR VIOLATION OF CUSTOMS LAWS.

A. Purpose and Nature of Liability Created. As a protection to the revenue system as well as to honest importers,[26] provisions having in view the prevention of an illegal or illicit traffic[27] have been enacted providing for a criminal prosecution for the commission of certain acts;[28] in other instances for a forfeiture of the goods imported;[29] while in still others a liability to a penalty is imposed for certain acts or omissions.[30]

B. Judicial Construction of Provisions. While of course some of the provisions of these statutes are clearly penal,[31] those sections imposing forfeitures or penalties are sometimes spoken of and construed by the courts as being of a highly penal nature;[32] in other cases they are spoken of as more of a remedial character;[33] but in either case the courts are agreed that they should be so construed as most effectually to accomplish the intention of the legislature in passing them;[34]

22. Tomes v. Redfield, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,085, 7 Blatchf. 139; Greenleaf v. Schell, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,782, 6 Blatchf. 225, where it was said: "It frequently happens, that, in a verdict in a suit to recover back duties paid under protest, the verdict is expressly made, on its face, subject to the opinion of the court as to the sufficiency of the protest, or that the verdict provides, that, if it shall appear, on the adjustment of the referee or otherwise, that the question of the timeliness of the protest, or the question of a prospective protest, is involved, the verdict shall be opened. But there is no such reservation in the verdict now in question. That being so, the parties cannot, on the hearing before the referee, or by exception to his report, go back of the verdict, or go at all into any questions in regard to the protest."

The general rule that judgment will not be set aside when the party asking the same has been clearly guilty of laches applies to this the same as to other actions. Bronson v. Schulten, 104 U. S. 410, 26 L. ed. 997.

The right of the plaintiff to recover costs in such action is of course wholly dependent upon the provisions of the statute providing for such allowance at the time of the institution of the suit. The maliciously breaking into a bonded freight car containing merchandise while being transported through the United States is not punishable under U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 2998 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1977], if the car is merely in transit between two places in the British provinces, as this section is applicable only to an importation en route between certain ports of entry and other places within the United States. U. S. v. Durwood, 49 Fed. 446.

39. Customs Administrative Act (1890), § 6. Under the statute the offense is not complete until the false declaration therein referred to is filed or offered to be filed with the collector when making or attempting to make an entry of the goods, and the presentment of a false declaration to the collector for the purpose of making an entry of the goods is necessary to the completion of the offense; and while section 9 of the same act covers offenses of a very analogous nature, yet, inasmuch as such section provides a lighter punishment than section 6, it cannot be deemed to include the specified cases covered by section 6. Inasmuch, however, as the object of the section is to secure truthful declarations of the entry of the merchandise according to the actual facts, the object or intent of the accused to defraud the United States in making the false statement is not material; it being sufficient to show that it was knowingly false. U. S. v. Fawcett, 86 Fed. 900.

40. U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 3082 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 2014]. This offense does not include frauds or illegalities concerning invoices of goods, or the payment of duties thereon which are of such nature that they can only occur after the importation is accomplished and the merchandise brought within the cognizance of the customs officials. U. S. v. Kee Ho, 33 Fed. 333, 13 Sawy. 143. And it also seems that there must be a secrecy or concealment, or some intent to defraud the revenue. U. S. v. Thomas, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,473, 2 Abb. 114, 4 Ben. 370. For further construction of this provision see U. S. v. Ortega, 66 Fed. 713, holding that it applied to an importation of cigars in quantities of less than three thousand, notwithstanding the provisions of U. S. Rev. St. §§ 3081, 2652 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) pp. 2014, 1821].

Sufficiency of evidence to sustain conviction. — Under U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 3082 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 2014], which provides that whenever on trial for a violation thereof, the defendant is shown to have or to have had possession of such goods, such possession shall be deemed evidence sufficient to authorize conviction unless he can explain his possession to the satisfaction of the jury, it has been held that such provision did not relieve the prosecution from the ordinary rules of evidence, but the fact that the goods were smuggled must be first proved, and when such proof had been made then the fact of possession would authorize the conviction of the defendant. U. S. v. Lot of Jewelry, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,626, 13 Blatchf. 60. See also U. S. v. Fraser, 42 Fed. 140.

The offense of receiving goods under this section is not a felony so as to secure to the defendant the right to peremptory challenges as provided by U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 819 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 629], although it is punishable by a fine and imprisonment, the latter of which may be in a state penitentiary. This arises from the fact that the or clandestine introduction,[41] with intent to defraud the revenue of the United States, of goods lawfully dutiable, or attempting to pass through the custom-house any false, forged, or fraudulent invoice;[42] the knowingly effecting or aiding in effecting any entering of merchandise at less than its true weight, or upon a false classification as to its quality or value;[43] or the making or attempting to make an entry by means of any false or fraudulent invoice, affidavit, statement, etc., or of any false or fraudulent appliance whatsoever.[44] offense itself is subordinate to that of smuggling, which is expressly declared by section 2865 of the statute to be a misdemeanor, although the penalty is substantially the same as for the receiving of such goods. Reagan v. U. S., 157 U. S. 301, 15 S. Ct. 610, 39 L. ed. 709.

41. Meaning of "smuggled or clandestinely introduced."— In Keck v. U. S., 172 U. S. 434, 19 S. Ct. 254, 43 L. ed. 505, it was argued that inasmuch as the concealment of goods at the time of entering the waters of the United States tended to render possible subsequent smuggling, such acts should be considered and treated as smuggling; but the court commenting upon the distinctions of this offense as laid down in 1 Russell Crimes (6th ed.) 277; Bacon Abr. tit. "Smuggling and Customs"; 4 Bl. Comm. 154, said: "A review of the principal statutes enacted in this country regulating the collection of customs duties establishes that so far as they embrace legislation designed to prevent the evasion of duties they proceeded upon the theory of the English law on the same subject, that is, that they forbade all the acts which were deemed by the law maker means to the end of smuggling or clandestinely introducing dutiable goods into the country in violation of law, and which were likewise considered as efficient to enable the offender to reap the expected benefits of his wrongful acts. Therefore, they forbade and prescribed penalties for everything which could precede smuggling or follow it, without specifically making a distinct and separate offense designated smuggling or clandestine introduction . . . it was not until 1842 that a specified penalty for smuggling or clandestine introduction eo nomine was enacted. When the significance of the word 'smuggling' as understood at common law is borne in mind, and the history of the English legislation is considered, and the development of our own is brought into view, it becomes manifest that the statute of 1842 was not intended to make smuggling embrace each and all of the acts heretofore prohibited which could precede or which might follow smuggling. . . . The inference that the common law meaning of the word 'smuggling' is to be implied is cogently augmented by the fact that the statute also uses in connection with it words generally known in the law of England as a paraphrase for smuggling (i. e. clandestinely introduced); in reason this is tantamount to an express adoption of the common law signification." Fuller, C. J., Brown, Harlan, and Brewer, JJ., dissented upon the ground that the smuggling or clandestine introduction was complete within the meaning of the statute, when the goods were voluntarily brought within a port of entry with the intent to unlade them.

42. U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 2865 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1905].

The intent to smuggle is not the offense contemplated by the statute; hence it was held that a party would not be liable thereunder who had concealed merchandise on board an incoming vessel with the intent and for the purpose of clandestinely introducing the same into the United States, without the payment of the lawful duties thereon; and even although the concealment continued until after the vessel had entered the waters of a port of the United States, if at such time the goods were delivered up. Keck v. U. S., 172 U. S. 434, 19 S. Ct. 254, 43 L. ed. 505. Compare dictum in U. S. v. Thomas, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,473, 2 Abb. 114, 4 Ben. 370. See also U. S. v. Nolton, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 15,897, 5 Blatchf. 427 (decided in 1867), holding that importations from Canada into the United States were governed by the act of March 2, 1821, and that an indictment would not lie under the general statute for smuggling.

Aider or abetter in smuggling.— One who goes abroad with money furnished him by another party for the purpose of buying goods to be smuggled home, and causes the same to be delivered to a carrier, who actually accomplishes this purpose, would be an aider or abetter, within the meaning of this statute, although his services be rendered gratuitously. U. S. v. Martin, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,729, 1 Hask. 166.

43. U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 5445 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3678].

The means by which the entry was effected is not an element of the offense; the only point material to the offense being whether or not the party effecting or aiding in effecting an entry, in violation of the provisions in some one or more of the specific ways, and whether he knew that his acts were in violation of the law. U. S. v. Ballard, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,506.

Where a purchaser of goods is fully informed by the seller that false invoices have been made out and forwarded to him, and he acquiesces therein, and avails himself of such invoices, he is estopped from saying that he did not himself perpetrate the unlawful act. U. S. v. Merriam, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,759.

44. Customs Administrative Act (1890), § 9. Under this statute loss of lawful duties would not be a necessary element of the offense. U. S. v. Cutajar, 60 Fed. 744. Nor,

(II) INDICTMENT[45]— (A) Time of Finding. The indictment for crimes arising under our revenue laws is sufficient in time if found within five years next after the commission of the offense.[46]

(B) Sufficiency. While in determining the sufficiency of indictments for a violation of the above provisions, the rule that it is usually sufficient to describe such offenses in the language of the statute is often adverted to,[47] the equally well established qualification of this rule that unless the statute so distinguishes or individuates the offense that the defendant may know with certainty the offense for which he is really to be tried, such description is insufficient, applies;[48] hence in a count based upon a provision referring to an importation "contrary to law,"[49] it would be necessary to state in what the illegality of the importation consisted or the specific provision violated.[50] But if the indictment be for fraudulently effecting an entry of goods subject to duties,[51] it is held that the specified acts by which the entry was effected need not be set forth.[52] So too a count for buying or receiving goods imported contrary to law need not describe the offense committed in the original importation with the same particularity as an indictment against such original offender.[53]

b. Resistance of Customs Officials — (I) IN GENERAL. The statute also provides for a criminal prosecution for the resistance of officers of the customs[54] or their assistants in the execution of their duties.[55] Under the statute it has been

it would seem, is its application limited to the entry of goods at the custom-house only, but would include such attempts wherever made. U. S. v. Boyd, 24 Fed. 692.

The indictment is not open to the charge of duplicity when founded on Customs Administrative Act (1890), § 9, because it charges in a single count a false entry, by a false and fraudulent affidavit, a false and fraudulent paper, and a false and fraudulent written statement, as the making of these instruments are all acts connected with the same transaction. Averment of scienter.— It is not necessary to specifically aver that defendant knew that the duty had not been paid on the article imported, where it is averred that the introduction of the article was made wilfully, unlawfully, knowingly, and with intent to defraud the revenue of the United States. Dunbar v. U. S., 156 U. S. 185, 15 S. Ct. 325, 39 L. ed. 390 [affirming 60 Fed. 75].

Description of articles imported.— It would seem, under these statutes, that the description of the article alleged to be unlawfully imported or entered is sufficient if it is clear to the common understanding what articles are intended to be implicated in the violation of the law. Keck v. U. S., 172 U. S. 434, 19 S. Ct. 254, 43 L. ed. 505; Dunbar v. U. S., 156 U. S. 185, 15 S. Ct. 325, 39 L. ed. 390; U. S. v. Gardner, 42 Fed. 832; U. S. v. Claflin, 25 Fed. Cas. 54. Under the earlier statute of this nature, it was held that an inspector was an officer, the obstruction of whom was an offense, within the meaning of the statute. U. S. v. Sears, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,247, 1 Gall. 215.

55. U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 5447 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3678].

It is sufficient to support an indictment for the obstruction of an inspector in the performance of his duties to show that he was commissioned and sworn, and in the actual execution of the duties of his office, with the knowledge of the treasury department, and it is unnecessary to produce the commission of the collector who appointed him. U. S. v. Sears, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,247, 1 Gall. 215.

In discharge of duty.— If the official duties of an inspector require him to be at a par-held that if the officer was attempting a seizure without probable cause,[56] or if the term for which he had been appointed had expired,[57] the indictment would not lie. But the fact that the object of the resistance is to avenge a private wrong will not constitute an exoneration of the offender.[58]

(II) INDICTMENT.[59] The indictment is sufficient if it substantially sets forth the offense, although not in the exact words of the statute, and the particular act and circumstances of obstruction or resistance need not be averred;[60] but an indictment which improperly describes the office of the party against whom the resistance was made is insufficient.[61]

2. By Forfeiture — a. Grounds of Forfeiture — (I) Of Goods — (A) In General. Aside from the provisions for the enforcement of the customs laws, which are more properly treated under separate provisions,[62] enactments should be noticed providing for the forfeiture of wines and liquors when the statutory regulations concerning the marks and certificates of the same are disregarded;[63] of any articles subject to duty, found in the baggage of any person arriving in the United States, which are not, at the time of making the entry for such baggage, mentioned to the collector by the passenger;[64] or of merchandise because of the unauthorized removal of the custom-house seal from the cars in which it is ticular dock to await the arrival of a vessel, that he may superintend the discharge of her cargo, he would while waiting for her arrival be in the discharge of his duties, within the meaning of the statute, and an assault upon him under such circumstances would clearly fall within the meaning and intent of the law. Such provisions do not comprehend wrecked goods, or goods found in a vessel deserted by her crew, and where it was necessary for the preservation of the goods to take them to the nearest accessible part of the coast. Under such circumstances, if a revenue officer should not be present to take charge of them, the single circumstance of their being found unmarked and unaccompanied with certificates would not of itself be sufficient to forfeit them. But a forfeiture can be claimed only when an attempt to make an entry has been made in the manner prescribed. U. S. v. Ninety-Five Boxes, etc., 27 Fed. Cas. No. 15,891.

Sufficient mention of article to avoid forfeiture.— It would seem that if at any time while the entry is being made, but before it is completed, there is a disclosure by the passenger which is sufficient to put the officer upon inquiry as to the dutiable character of any of the contents of the packages, that such articles must be considered as "mentioned" within the meaning of the statute, notwithstanding they were not mentioned in the documents. U. S. v. One Pearl Necklace, 111 Fed. 164, 49 C. C. A. 287, 56 L. R. A. 130.

That the form of declaration prepared by the treasury department for the convenience of passengers, and to facilitate the making of a sufficient entry of their baggage, is misleading and unintelligible in form, and, on account of its imperspicuity has a tendency to befog the understanding of a passenger, does not relieve the passenger from the necesbeing transported.[65] Likewise prohibited goods are ipso facto forfeited by the act of importation.[66]

(B) Concealment of Goods. Provisions have also from the beginning of our tariff acts been enacted, providing that the concealment of dutiable goods should be punished by a forfeiture of the same.[67]

(C) False Invoice or Statement. As any detected undervaluation or suspected undervaluation of goods by an importer imposes upon the government the trouble and necessity of an appraisal,[68] statutes have been enacted providing for the forfeiture of goods attempted to be entered at other than their true value,[69] by a false or fraudulent invoice, affidavit, or other false statement or practice.[70]

sity of making the disclosures provided by statute; and the simple fact that the customs officer, in assisting her in what she was legally bound to do, did not exercise the proper care to correct the printed forms presented to her does not relieve her of the consequences of such omission. U. S. v. One Pearl Necklace, 111 Fed. 164, 49 C. C. A. 287, 56 L. R. A. 130.

If the goods have been successfully passed through the custom-house without discovery, it would seem that this particular section of the statute (U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 2802 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1873]) would have no application, but such goods would clearly be forfeitable under the provisions of section 3082 which in a well-considered case is held to also apply to goods imported in the baggage of a passenger. 65. U. S. v. Three Railroad Cars, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,513, 1 Abb. 196, where the court after a full construction of this statute concluded that a proceeding for the forfeiture on this ground cannot be maintained by virtue of this statute unless the facts in the case are such that a criminal prosecution would lie against the party who broke the seals, as provided for in the first part of the provisions of this section; and that therefore where the breaking was not done "wilfully," within the meaning of the statute, a proceeding for the forfeiture could not be maintained.

67. U. S. Rev. St. (1878) §§ 3066, 3082 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) pp. 2008, 2014].

Under section 3066 it is held that the concealment, within the meaning of the act, must be a concealment from the officers of the customs, the mere fact of being omitted from the manifest being of itself insufficient (U. S. v. Twenty-Six Diamond Rings, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,572, 1 Sprague 294), and is in fact a withdrawal of the goods from public view on account of their being subject to duties or from some fraudulent motive (U. S. v. Three Hundred and Fifty Chests of Tea, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 486, 6 L. ed. 702), although the concealment need not be made by the owner or consignee, or by his procurement, or with his concurrence. Nor would the forfeiture be saved by an offer on the part of the owner to enter the goods as soon as he is aware of the arrival of the same. U. S. v. Certain Hogsheads of Molasses, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,766, 1 Curt. 276; U. S. v. Fifty-Eight Thousand Eight Hundred and Fifty Cigars, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,092. For further construction of this provision see U. S. v. Two Trunks, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,591, 6 Ben. 218.

With regard to section 3082 it is held that the mere act of resisting the officer of the customs, and of throwing packages from the window of a building, whereby they are entirely removed from the custody and control of the officer, would not in itself constitute a concealment within the meaning of this act. But to incur the forfeiture it is necessary that the invoice be produced for the purposes of an entry;[71] likewise the invoice must be one required by the statute, and a fraudulent valuation in a paper not so demanded, and of no avail at the custom-house, would not subject the goods to forfeiture.[72]

(D) Omission From Manifest. The statutes have also provided for the forfeiture of all goods belonging to or consigned to the master, officer, or crew of a ship, which are intentionally omitted from the manifest,[73] or for a forfeiture of

By whom made.— Under the present statute it would seem that the fraudulent entry, to incur forfeiture, must be made by the owner or someone in privy with him or for whose acts he is responsible, and although such entry, if made by a mere trespasser, would, under the statute, subject such person to a criminal prosecution, yet the goods themselves could not be forfeited. U. S. v. One Thousand One Hundred and Fifty and One-Half Pounds of Celluloid, 82 Fed. 627, 27 C. C. A. 231; U. S. v. Seventy-Eight Casks of White Wine, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,259.

The payment of duties and delivery of the goods to the importer (Clifton v. U. S., 4 How. (U. S.) 242, 11 L. ed. 957; Wood v. U. S., 16 Pet. (U. S.) 342, 10 L. ed. 987; In re Cloth Cases, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,902, Crabbe 335), or the giving of a warehousing bond (U. S. v. One Thousand Two Hundred and Ninety-One Bales of Tobacco, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 15,965, 2 Lowell 107) will not prevent a forfeiture if the valuation be in fact fraudulent, as to do so would allow a party to avail himself of his own fraud to defeat the purposes of justice. See also U. S. v. Eighty-Two Packages of Glass, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,038.

What constitutes fraudulent invoice.— Under a recent construction of the present statute it would seem that a fraudulent invoice sufficient to warrant a forfeiture of the importation would consist in a statement substantially false which, when used upon the entry of the goods, would naturally tend to defeat the rights of the United States in regard to the amount of the duties which it should receive and which misstatement would inure to the benefit of the owner. U. S. v. Nineteen Bales of Tobacco, 112 Fed. 779.

71. And therefore, although the government may be able to prove that a false invoice has in fact been made up with intent to evade the revenue laws, and is in possession of the claimants, yet, if such invoice has not been produced by them, the government must proceed according to the directions of the revenue laws when no invoice is produced or entry made and cannot claim a forfeiture. U. S. v. Twenty-Eight Packages of Pins, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,561, Gilp. 306. But if the proceeding for forfeiture be on the ground of a false affidavit made with intent to defraud the revenue the fraudulent entry need not be fully consummated to incur the forfeiture. U. S. v. Six Hundred and Sixty-One Bales of Tobacco, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,297.

The forfeiture is incurred because of the falsity of the entry, and not because of the result which such entry may in a specific instance produce on the revenue. U. S. v. Five Casks of Files, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,112. It is immaterial that if the entry had been truly made the duty would not have been greater. U. S. v. One Hundred Twenty-five Baskets of Champagne, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 560, 18 L. ed. 78.

73. U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 2809 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1876]. For the construction or application of this statute see The Coquitlam, 77 Fed. 744, 23 C. C. A. 438 [reversing 57 Fed. 706] (holding that merchandise not so consigned was not forfeitable thereunder); The Ariel, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 527, 1 Hask. 65; U. S. v. Hutchinson, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,431, 1 Hask. 146; U. S. v. Ten Thousand Cigars, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,450, 2 Curt. 436 (holding that for the purposes of this act the master of a vessel who receives goods on board without any bill of lading or invoice, with the intention either to smuggle them or to duly enter them as he may see fit to elect, must be deemed the consignee).

Under a statute forfeiting merchandise when imported from territory adjacent to the United States, if the master of the vessel does not upon his arrival present a true manifest, such forfeiture is incurred if either a false manifest or if no manifest at all be presented. In re One Hundred and Thirty-Four Thousand Nine Hundred and One Feet of Pine Lumber, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,523, 4 Blatchf. 182. But under this statute it is also held that a horse, brought within the limits of the United States as a mere instrument of conveyance, in the prosecution of a

any part of an importation which disagrees with the entry made therefor, unless the difference arises from accident or mistake.[74]

(E) Unlading Without Permit. As another safeguard to the revenue system statutes have been passed providing for the forfeiture of merchandise,[75] the unlading or delivery of which has been effected without first having obtained a permit as provided for by the statute,[76] unless such unlading be from unavoidable accident, necessity, or distress of weather,[77] in which case, although it is the master's duty to give due notice of the contingency making the unlading necessary, it would seem that a failure so to do would not incur a forfeiture.[78]

(II) Of Vessel. A forfeiture of the vessel may also be claimed where the value of the merchandise unladed without compliance with the statute relating to permits exceeds a certain amount;[79] where a vessel, without proper authorization, temporary journey or a visit, would not be considered as merchandise, within the purview of the statute. U. S. v. One Sorrel Horse, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 15,953, 22 Vt. 655.

74. U. S. v. Six Packages of Goods, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 520, 5 L. ed. 321, holding that the forfeiture could be claimed if there was an unexplained variance between the importation and the first entry, made in relation thereto, although a second entry had been made before the seizure of the articles.

Threatened pillage by the enemies' soldiers is a sufficient excuse for a mistake in the entry; it being clearly shown that it was necessarily made hurriedly, and in the absence of the owner. U. S. v. Nine Packages of Linen, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 15,884, 1 Paine 129.

75. For if the articles are appurtenances or equipments of a ship, and not included within the term "goods, wares, or merchandise," no permit is necessary. U. S. v. Chain Cable, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,776, 2 Sumn. 362.

76. Harford v. U. S., 8 Cranch (U. S.) 109, 3 L. ed. 504 (holding that the statute applied to goods the importation of which was prohibited by law); U. S. v. Three Cases, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,498, 6 Ben. 558.

A permit obtained by fraud or by collusion will not be sufficient to prevent a forfeiture under these statutes. U. S. v. The Sarah B. Harris, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,223, 4 Cliff. 147 [affirming 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,344, 1 Hask. 52]. See also Bottomley v. U. S., 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,688, 1 Story 135; In re Ten Cases of Opium, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,828, Deady 62.

Goods exempt from duty are also included within the purview of the statutes, and a permit for their unlading and delivery is just as essential as when the importation is subject to duty. U. S. v. The Sarah B. Harris, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,223, 4 Cliff. 147 [affirming 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,344, 1 Hask. 52]; U. S. v. Twenty Cases of Matches, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,559, 2 Biss. 47.

Place of unlading.— It will be observed that these statutes embrace all cases of the unlading of goods without a permit, and it is immaterial whether the unlading is at an intermediate port or at the port of destination so long as it be within the United States, the object of the statutes being to prevent frauds upon the revenue. The public mischief would be equally great whether the unlading is at a port or elsewhere. U. S. v. Twenty Cases of Matches, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,559, 2 Biss. 47.

What constitutes unlading.— It would seem that the term "unlading," as used in this statute, contemplates some separation of the goods from the vessel and from her immediate charge and control. U. S. v. The Express, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,066. It has, however, been held that the wharf could not be treated as constructively a part of the vessel, and that therefore a removal of the goods to the wharf, although perhaps made for the purpose of a more convenient examination, would nevertheless be an unlading within the meaning of this law. U. S. v. Nine Trunks, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 15,885. See also Seitz v. U. S., 97 U. S. 404, 24 L. ed. 1031. Compare U. S. v. Ninety-Five Boxes, etc., 27 Fed. Cas. No. 15,891. Likewise it has been held that where goods had been entered for exportation, their discharge into a lighter would constitute a landing within the meaning of a statute providing for a forfeiture for an unlading under such circumstances, although it was claimed that the relanding was simply to correct a mistake in the entry. In re Two Thousand Tin Cans, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,303, 7 Ben. 34.

receives a cargo or a part thereof from another vessel which has arrived within a collection district;[80] where a vessel entering the waters of the United States from a foreign territory adjacent to our northern frontier fails to report at the office of the nearest collector, and to obtain a permit either to unload or take in cargo;[81] or when an importation, subject to certain exceptions,[82] is attempted in any other manner than by sea, or in any vessel of less than thirty tons' burden.[83]

b. Necessity of Fraudulent Intent. While a mere intention to defraud or evade a customs revenue law is not of itself sufficient ground of forfeiture,[84] and while it may be said that forfeitures are incurred only in those cases in which the means that are prescribed for the prevention of the same may be employed[85] and [approved in U. S. v. Twenty Cases of Matches, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,559], holding that the prohibition of the statute applied, although the port was not that originally intended as the port of discharge. But compare U. S. v. The Hunter, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,428, Pet. C. C. 10.

An unlading and delivery, within the meaning of this statute, arises where a cargo is transferred from one vessel to another, while lying at a wharf in port. The Fame, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,633, Brown Adm. 42. But see U. S. v. The Express, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,066.

Application to wrecked vessel.— The statute has no application to a case where the vessel is wrecked and the goods are landed therefrom without a permit. The Gertrude, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,370, 3 Story 68. See also Peisch v. Ware, 4 Cranch (U. S.) 347, 2 L. ed. 643, where, although this section of the statute was not necessarily in question, the court found it convenient if not necessary to construe the same in its application of another section.

80. U. S. Rev. St. (1878) §§ 2867, 2868 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1908]. The most recent application of these statutes holds them not to be violated by an unlading and transfer of a cargo after the vessel has casually arrived within the limits of a collection district, if it is not bound to the United States, and has no cargo destined to be unladen in the United States. The Coquitlam, 77 Fed. 744, 23 C. C. A. 438 [reversing 57 Fed. 706]; The Cargo ex Lady Essex, 39 Fed. 765. For earlier applications of the act see The Betsy, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,365, 1 Mason 354; The Ploughboy, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,229, Brown Adm. 48, holding that the existence or non-existence of a fraudulent intent upon the part of the receiving vessel was immaterial.

For forfeiture of vessels under the earlier state laws see Phile v. The Anna, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 197, 1 L. ed. 98; Douglass v. Roan, 4 Call (Va.) 353; Bentley v. Roan, 4 Call (Va.) 153.

81. The Coquitlam, 77 Fed. 744, 23 C. C. A. 438 [reversing 57 Fed. 706], holding that the arrival of the vessel referred to in this section is an arrival for the purpose of discharging or receiving cargo, and with the intent to proceed further inland, and that the forfeiture would be incurred only in case the vessel proceeded for the purpose either of unlading or taking on cargo without a special permit.

82. The exceptions being confined to districts adjoining the Dominion of Canada or from districts adjacent to Mexico. U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 3095 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 2025].

83. U. S. v. The Theophile, 11 Fed. 696, 697, where the court say: "The object of congress in providing that all foreign trade should be carried on by vessels of 30 tons burden and upwards, it is evident, was to prevent the landing of foreign goods in the United States except at regular ports of entry, where the custom-house officers could secure the duties due the government without difficulty, and to prevent smuggling by small sloops that could run into rivers and small streams where no custom-houses are established, and to avoid patrolling the entire coast against smugglers."

84. U. S. v. Riddle, 5 Cranch (U. S.) 311, 3 L. ed. 110. Although when the question arises whether or not an act authorizing a forfeiture has been committed, such intention will justify the court in not interpreting the conduct of the party as favorable as under other circumstances it might be disposed to do. 90. Application of provision as to false or fraudulent invoice or valuation.— Statutes imposing a forfeiture for this offense (see supra, V, C, 2, a, (I), (C)) have usually been construed to require an intent to defraud upon the part of the importer. Under the present provision the courts are at a variance; by the latest construction (U. S. v. Nineteen Bales of Tobacco, 112 Fed. 779, decided in 1898), it is held that a false invoice, under the wording of the statute, would incur a forfeiture, regardless of intent to defraud. Forfeiture for concealment of dutiable goods in one's baggage is not dependent upon the existence of fraudulent intent upon the part

c. Manner of Forfeiture — (i) Amount of Importation Liable. The general tenor of the statutes authorizing forfeitures is to the effect that the condemnation of goods is not restricted to the particular articles undervalued or unlawfully imported, providing the jury find that the invoice as a whole has been made with intent to defraud the revenue,[92] although if no fraud is intended as to the whole package or invoice the rule may be otherwise.[93]

(ii) Acquisition of Custody — (a) Seizure — (1) Right of. It is the duty of a revenue officer to cause a seizure of goods whenever he has probable cause for believing that the same are forfeitable;[94] nor is the right to make such seizure confined to his own district.[95] So too goods would be forfeitable if it were Necessity and sufficiency of search warrant. — If there is cause to suspect the concealment of merchandise in any particular dwelling-house, store, building, or other place, the customs officer is entitled, upon proper application on oath to the justice of the peace, district judge, or other proper official, to a warrant to enter such house, store, or other place, to search for the goods which he suspects to be unlawfully imported. U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 3066 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 2008]. Under this statute the United States constitution requiring warrants to particularly describe the property to be seized must be observed; and while it would from the very nature of the case be difficult to specifically describe goods which are alleged to be smuggled, the warrants ought nevertheless to mention the kind of goods to be searched for, or at least describe them as having been taken out of some certain vessel. Sanford v. Nichols, 13 Mass. 286, 7 Am. Dec. 151. See Steel v. Fisk, Brayt. (Vt.) 230, where a description in the warrant "several bales of dry goods, calicoes, chintzes, &c." was held sufficiently particular. The words "other place" as used in this act mean places where the occupants have an exclusive right of possession and privacy analogous to their rights in a dwelling-house, store, or building; and under this statute a stage-coach (Jones v. Gibson, 1 N. H. 266), or a sleigh standing in an open shed (Sailly v. Smith, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 500) would not be an "other place" within the meaning of the statute.

subsequently shown that a proper cause for the seizure existed at the time the same was made, although made through mistake.[96]

(2) CUSTODY. Under earlier tariff provisions the custody of goods seized by a customs official was transferred to a marshal, there to remain to await the orders of the court.[97] This rule was changed,[98] and such goods now remain in the custody of the collector or other principal officer of the customs of the district in which the seizure was made until its disposition is determined by law,[99] whereupon his custody is terminated.[1]

(3) BOND FOR CUSTODY. The custody of vessels or goods seized for a violation of the customs laws may, however, be obtained by the claimant upon his giving proper and sufficient bond for payment of the value of the articles seized, and a certificate that the duties thereon are paid or properly secured.[2] Under the earlier construction of this provision it would seem that the court did not consider it as mandatory, but that whether or not an importer would be allowed to avail himself of its provisions rested in the sound discretion of the court;[3] but under the present phraseology of this provision, and from the language used by the courts in reference to the same, it seems that such is not now the law.[4] If the property is seized in a warehouse the bond given by a claimant thereof should be for the full value of the goods including the duty;[5] likewise no deduction

By the common law any person might at his peril seize property as forfeited to the government, and if the government adopted his seizure and instituted proceedings to enforce the forfeiture and the property was condemned, such person was completely justified. It was therefore wholly immaterial who made the seizure, or whether it was irregularly made or not, or whether the cause assigned originally for the seizure was that for which the condemnation took place, provided the adjudication was for a sufficient cause. (B) Action For Wrongful Seizure. An action of trespass for a seizure for a supposed forfeiture will not lie until a final decree[7] is pronounced upon the proceeding in rem to enforce such forfeiture;[8] and the pendency of such proceedings may be pleaded in abatement.[9] If such action is instituted after a decree of condemnation or after an acquittal, with a certificate of justification, the decree may be pleaded in bar;[10] and it is only after an acquittal without justification that the seizure may be deemed tortious.[11]

Effect of abuse of authority after seizure.—Where an officer of the customs, to whom is granted a certificate of probable cause, upon the relinquishment of a seizure by the court, is shown to have abused the authority vested in him by allowing another party to use the vessel seized during its detention, it would seem that while his certificate would protect him from being proceeded against as a trespasser ab initio, yet he would doubtless be liable in a special action on the case for the actual damage sustained to the vessel by such usage. (b) INFORMATION — aa. Averments Generally. As a general rule it may be said that the information for forfeiture will be sufficient if the averments follow the language of the statute,[18] and if by necessary implication it contains the requisite statements it need not be scientifically drawn;[19] but this does not mean that it will be sufficient if the language of the statute is such that to follow it verbatim would lead to uncertainty and ambiguity.[20] And while an intent to defraud, if an element of the offense, should of course be averred,[21] yet if the statute expressly enjoins the submission to the jury of the existence of such intent no such averment is necessary.[22] If the place where the alleged illegal act was done is a material element in the offense charged such place must be averred.[23] If the information alleges an unlading of goods without a permit it is not necessary to state the time and place of importation,[24] although if the unlading was within some port or other place within a collection district such fact should be alleged.[25] If it sets forth a proper cause of forfeiture within the main provisions of the statute, it need not allege that the case is not within a proviso thereof.[26]

23. Thus in a proceeding against a vessel for receiving goods without a permit from another vessel more than four leagues from the coast, the information must state the place of the offense; and a defect therein would not be cured by a verdict. U. S. v. The Virgin, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,625, Pet. C. C. 7.

The court judicially know that Oregon is a part of the territory of the United States and within the limits thereof, and an allegation that the goods were unladen from a vessel within that collection district is equivalent to an allegation that they were unladen within the United States. The Active, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 33, Deady 165.

24. Locke v. U. S., 7 Cranch (U. S.) 339, 3 L. ed. 364, holding also that it was not necessary that the name of the vessel be alleged, but an allegation that such information was unknown to the attorney would be sufficient. See also The Active, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 33, Deady 165; The Betsy, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,365, 1 Mason 354, holding that an allegation that the goods unladen were of foreign growth or manufacture was unnecessary.

25. This arises from the fact that if the unlading took place before the vessel had arrived within the port it would fall within another section of the statute; it is not, however, necessary to specify the port or district by its legal name, but it would be sufficient to state that the name thereof was unknown to the attorney of the United States; although if the information should specify the particular port such specification would be binding. bb. Amendment of. An information for forfeiture may usually be amended to conform to the facts,[27] and if not objected to before the trial it will not thereafter be judged with the strictness applicable to an indictment.[28]

(c) EVIDENCE — aa. Burden of Proof. When the prosecution produces sufficient evidence to satisfy the court that there was probable cause for the proceedings, the burden of proof is shifted upon the claimant;[29] and if in such case the claimant fails to explain the suspicious or irregular circumstances of his case by the introduction of rebutting evidence in his possession or under his control, condemnation must follow.[30]

bb. Presumptions. Whenever a material undervaluation is shown,[31] a false affidavit of damages is offered by the importer,[32] or where he knows that his method of importation is contrary to law,[33] the presumption arises that the illegal act was done to defraud the revenue. Likewise where it is within the power of a claimant to produce good and satisfactory evidence tending to repel suspicious circumstances concerning an importation, and he omits to do so and contents him-sion from the manifest the particular omission must be averred. The Thomas and Henry v. U. S., 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,919, 1 Brock. 367.

Averment of seizure.— Where the information is against the vessel, it must be averred that she has been seized for the offense, and that the seizure still subsists, and objection to the omission of such averment may be taken at any station of the cause. Justification of statute.— While of course it is the province of the court rather to interpret than to justify the enactment of any statute nevertheless, in construing this provision, its general propriety has often been adverted to. This arises from the fact that a violation of the customs law is generally premeditated and is perpetrated under all the precautions and in all secrecy which ingenuity can suggest; and the means of proving innocence, at least to a reasonable extent, are in the possession of the accused. It is therefore no vicious violation of principle that he should be required to prove his innocence. See The Thomas and Henry v. U. S., 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,919, 1 Brock. 367; U. self with weaker evidence, it will be presumed that the better evidence of the reality of the transaction would not be favorable to him.[34]

cc. Admissibility. Where the question of frandulent entry or undervaluation is involved the court must necessarily pursue a liberal course in the admission of evidence;[35] hence evidence of other acts or doings of the importer or his privies of a kindred nature is admissible,[36] although only for the purpose of establishing the intent with which the act was committed, and not as proving the body of the offense.[37] Nor would the assent of a consul[38] or a revenue officer to an undervaluation be binding upon the government;[39] and as the goods themselves are regarded as the defendant, evidence of communications made to the revenue officer would not be objectionable on the ground that they were made in the absence of the claimant.[40]

dd. Weight and Sufficiency. It is of course incumbent upon the defendant to 35. But this does not dispense with the rule that the evidence must be relevant and relate to a matter material to the question or point in issue. U. S. v. Four Cases Printed Merinoes, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,146, 2 Paine 200.

Invoices of other goods imported by the party are therefore admissible. Buckley v. U. S., 4 How. (U. S.) 251, 11 L. ed. 961; U. S. v. One Hundred and Forty-Six Thousand Six Hundred and Fifty Clapboards, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 15,935, 4 Cliff. 301. See also U. S. v. Three Cases, etc., 28 Fed. Cas. That the claimant or his agent sold goods at prices which yielded them a profit which other persons engaged in the same trade averred could not be fairly made under the state of the market at that time is admissible. Buckley v. U. S., 4 How. (U. S.) 251, 11 L. ed. 961, holding also that evidence of appraisement of the goods, duly made by the appraisers, was admissible, and would not be excluded on the ground that it had not been made in the presence of the jury.

Admissibility to explain or vary terms of the manifest.— While a manifest, duly filed in the custom-house, is competent evidence as to the entry of certain goods thereon (U. S. v. The Missouri, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,785, 9 Blatchf. 433) if it has been fraudulently destroyed secondary evidence as to its contents is admissible (The Ariel, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 527, 1 Hask. 65). Likewise where the destination of a vessel is expressed on the face of the manifest parol evidence cannot be given to show that she was consigned to another port. The Fame, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,633, 1 Brown Adm. 42.

Res gestæ.— Declarations of a third person having custody of goods which were seized, made while the official was making the examination of such goods and while they were in his possession, are admissible against the claimant as part of the res gestæ. Likewise it is held that the fact that an intended illegal importation was previously known to the revenue officers, and that they acted thereon in making the seizure, may properly be regarded as so connected with the legal act itself as to constitute a part of the res gestæ. U. S. v. Nine Trunks, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 15,886.

Letters written in the ordinary course of business and contemporaneously with the transaction which is the subject of the litigation, offering to sell certain merchandise at a certain price, are admissible for the purpose of showing the market value of such articles at that place, although it appears that neither the writer nor the recipients of the letters were in any way connected with the subject of the suit; the rule of res inter alios acta being held inapplicable to such state of fact. Fennerstein v. U. S., 3 Wall. (U. S.) 145, 18 L. ed. 121.

introduce evidence sufficient to overcome the burden upon him,[41] but this does not mean that he need prove his defense in other than the ordinary way.[42] Where the proceeding is on the ground of an alleged fraudulent invoice, the invoice itself would be insufficient on his behalf;[43] but a mere misdescription which might be made in the best of faith of an article would not of itself be sufficient evidence of fraud;[44] nor would the fact that the appraisers had materially raised the invoiced value of an importation be conclusive upon the importer in a proceeding for its forfeiture.[45] But the court may sustain a verdict if supported by evidence of a cogent character, although it may be of the opinion that the weight of evidence was with the claimant.[46]

(d) VARIANCE. The allegations as to the amount or value of the goods libeled,[47] as to the nature of the same or for the purpose for which they are used,[48] or of the section of the statute under which the offense is conceived to fall,[49] are binding upon the government; but under a count averring the landing of goods without a permit, a forfeiture may be enforced for an unlading under a collusive permit.[50]

Sufficiency to sustain forfeiture of vessel for smuggling.—In The Cleopatra, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,886, 5 Ben. 290, a forfeiture of the vessel for smuggling was upheld on the evidence of the seamen who were arrested while committing the act, but who upon the promise of immunity testified against the vessel, although the owners or officers of the vessel were not engaged therein, or knew nothing of such illegal acts. The court was, however, governed by the language of the statute rather than the equities of the case, and requested that the fact be submitted to the attorney-general before a decree be signed, as it was clearly a case of forfeiting an innocent vessel because of the rascality of the crew.

whereby the burden is cast upon the claimant,[54] is for the court;[55] but all questions as to the weight of evidence,[56] or the intent of the importer, when such intent is material to the issue,[57] are for the jury.

(f) NEW TRIAL.[58] Where the proceeding is against a large quantity of goods, on the ground of fraudulent importation of the entire lot, the mere fact that a particular package thereof was appraised below its invoiced value will not warrant the setting aside of the verdict;[59] nor will a new trial be granted for mere technical or formal errors, especially when they are occasioned by the complaining party.[60]

(g) JUDGMENT.[61] This action is a civil proceeding in rem, within the meaning of section 954 of the United States Revised Statutes providing the manner and reasons for which a judgment in such cases may be arrested or reversed.[62]

(2) FOR RECOVERY OF VALUE OF GOODS. When the statute is conditioned in the alternative,[63] the government may, instead of a proceeding in rem, maintain an action at law [64] against the importer for the value of the illegal importation, the recovery in which would be the value of the goods,[65] and not the amount defendant may have received on sale of the same.[66]

For illustration of vague or indefinite judgment see U. S. v. One Case of Stereoscopic Slides, 27 Fed. Cas. 65. U. S. v. Baker, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,500, 5 Ben. 251.

66. This arises from the fact that the right to recover the value does not depend on any principle of subrogation, but on the statute, which in effect says that in any event the goods or their value shall be forfeited by the owner. So soon as the goods passed from the hands of the owner into those of the bona fide owner, the right of a proceeding in rem is gone, and the government is driven to its suit against the wrong-doer, but not for what he has received in the place of the goods, but for their value. The basis of recovery is not changed by the sale, and the only effect thereof is to take away all right of pro-

(IV) BY SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS.[67] Under the earlier tariff acts it was incumbent upon a customs official making any seizure to at once institute proceedings in rem for their forfeiture, in which all parties interested could intervene and have their claims adjudicated by the court;[68] but for the purpose of saving the government the expense of proceeding by a judicial condemnation when the seizure was of inconsiderable value,[69] more summary provisions have been enacted providing for a sale of the property upon advertisement[70] of the same should its appraised value be less than a certain amount;[71] and a sale upon compliance with these provisions is equivalent to a sale under a judicial condemnation.[72]

(V) AS AFFECTED BY RIGHTS OF THIRD PARTIES. If by the terms of the statute an illegal act creates a forfeiture without any alternative, the property right in the importation will be held to vest in the government immediately upon the commission of such act,[73] and the rights of a third party subsequently obtained therein cannot be respected, no matter how innocently acquired;[74] but if, under the statute, it is optional with the government either to proceed for forfeiture or sue for the value of the property, a right innocently acquired after the commission

69. McGuire v. Winslow, 26 Fed. 304, 23 Blatchf. 425.

70. These statutes, with their changes, are embodied in U. S. Rev. St. (1878) §§ 3074–3080 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) pp. 2011–2013].

71. Under the present statute this proceeding is applicable only when the appraised value is less than five hundred dollars (U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 3075 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 2011]), and under the initial statute of this nature (act of 1844), such summary proceedings could be invoked only when the appraised value was less than one hundred dollars. McGuire v. Winslow, 26 Fed. 304, 23 Blatchf. 425.

72. McGuire v. Winslow, 26 Fed. 304, 307, 23 Blatchf. 425, where it is said: "These provisions of law were adopted originally as a substitute for the ordinary judicial proceeding in a specific class of seizures. They contemplate a form and mode of proceeding having the ordinary characteristics of a judicial proceeding in rem. . . They afford a reasonable notice of publication of the commencement of the proceeding, and of the cause of seizure, and preserve to the persons interested in the property a reasonable opportunity to assert their claim, and have their rights judicially determined. The provisions which authorize an application to the secretary of the treasury also evince the legislative intent that a sale made pursuant to these sections shall conclude the rights of persons interested in the property as effectually as they would be concluded under a judicial decree. . . . The concluding provision, directing the secretary of the treasury to distribute the proceeds of the sale 'in the same manner as if the property had been condemned and sold in pursuance of a decree of a competent court,' also indicates the legislative intent that the sale is to be treated in all its incidents as a sale under a judicial decree."

Proceedings against perishable property.— While it is evident that the scheme adopted for the sale of property without resort to the courts is in a sense summary, it is also evident that provisions for the condemnation of property which is likely to speedily deteriorate in value should be even more summary; and the statutes have recognized this difference and made provisions accordingly. See U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 3080 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 2013]. Under the former statute, of which the present would seem to be a re-enactment, it is held that the collector might publicly advertise the property for sale at once upon seizure, and after procuring the proper certificates by the appraisers, of its value and character, he might sell the same upon one week's notice. Conway v. Stannard, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 398, 21 L. ed. 649.

73. A seller of goods, which were delivered to the purchaser, although having the right, as against the purchaser, to rescind the sale and recover the goods, because they were obtained by means of fraudulent representations and with the intention on the part of the purchaser not to pay for the same, cannot assert such right against the right of the United States to forfeit the goods, where they were seized when the purchaser, while thus clothed with ownership and possession, was attempting to smuggle them into the country in violation of its customs laws. 581 Diamonds v. U. of the unlawful act, but before the government had elected its remedy, should be protected.[75]

3. By Penalties[76] — a. Grounds of Imposition. As a further facility for the maintenance of regularity and uniformity in this branch of the revenue system penalties have been imposed for various offenses,[77] the more important of which are: A failure to produce a true and proper manifest;[78] the obstruction or hindrance by the master of any officer in lawfully boarding his vessel for the purpose of carrying into effect any of the revenue laws of the United States;[79] unlading goods without a permit;[80] selling, alienating, or removing any empty casks which

Ct. 1182, 30 L. ed. 1182 [affirming 19 Fed. 893] (holding that an absolute forfeiture of an importation provided for by a subsequent statute was inconsistent with the alternative forfeiture of the merchandise or its value, as provided by an existing statute, and that therefore the latter would necessarily repeal the former); Caldwell v. U. And see In re Six Hundred Tons of Iron Ore, 9 Fed. 595, 599, where it is said: "Where it (the statute) makes the forfeiture absolute, . . . the forfeiture is incurred at the time of the commission of the act which works the condemnation, and the title vests in the United States from that date. No matter how long afterwards proceedings are taken to enforce the forfeiture, the right of the government runs back, by relation, to the time of the commission of the wrongful acts, and cuts out all intervening claimants, however innocent. But when a statute gives an alternative to the United States, either to forfeit the offending thing or its value by suit against the offending person, . . . the government acquires no title to the property until its proper officers make an election whether they will proceed against the res or against the offender for its value, and in the mean time, pending the election, all bona fide encumbrances are protected."

76. See, generally, Penalties.

77. Penalty for receiving unlawful fee, compensation, or reward.— The section of the statute (U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 2636 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1815]) imposing a penalty of two hundred dollars upon an officer of the customs who demands or receives any other or greater fee, compensation, or reward than is allowed by law, for performing any duty or service required from him by law, is construed to authorize an action against an officer for such penalty, only when he has exacted fees under circumstances which would not, under the previous statutes, have entitled him to a certificate of probable cause, or, after the person aggrieved had taken appeal to the secretary of the treasury under such former provisions. Hedden v. Iselin, 31 Fed. 266, 24 Blatchf. 455 [reversing 28 Fed. 416], the court observing that since the original passage of this statute, the revenue system had been so completely remodeled that this provision in question had long been practically obsolete; in fact so much so that no decision could be found in the reports in which this particular section had been resorted to as the foundation of an action.

78. Steinham v. U. S., 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13,355, 2 Paine 168 (holding that it was not necessary that a party, to be liable to the penalty, should be actually on board of the vessel at the time she entered the waters of the United States); U. S. v. Cave, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,760; U. S. v. Teffry, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,443. But it was held that as foreign vessels which came within our jurisdiction could not be expected to know that a particular document was required by our laws the provisions for this penalty did not apply to such foreign vessels. U. S. v. Twenty-Six Diamond Rings, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,572, 1 Sprague 294. Nor is it necessary that goods not dutiable be included within the manifest. The S. Oteri, 67 Fed. 146, 14 C. C. A. 344.

The excuse for the penalty for a disagreement of the cargo with the manifest, as provided for in this statute, must not only satisfy the court that no part of the cargo had been landed after it was taken on board, but also that the disagreement between the manifest and the actual importation was by mistake or accident. U. S. v. Fairclough, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,068, 4 Wash. 398.

80. U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 2873 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1910].

Unlading must be of merchandise.— The penalty which is imposed upon the master of a vessel for being concerned in landing any merchandise without a permit uses the word "merchandise" in the sense usually employed in customs acts, and therefore the unlawful landing of an article not within the meaning of that term would not subject the master to this liability. U. S. v. Fry, 48 Fed. 713 [following U. S. v. Chain Cable, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,776, 2 Sumn. 362].

Who liable.— The penalty for such unlading should, it is held, be imposed on the master of the vessel if he is in command at the time of the unlawful unlading; and if he is not in command at that time, then on the party who is in command; the purpose of the infliction of such penalty upon the one or the other of them being because of their presumed negligence in not preventing the act. U. S. v. Curtis, 16 Fed. 184.

For construction of the earlier provision see have contained foreign distilled spirits before the marks thereon have been defaced;[81] permitting the breaking of locks or fastenings put by an inspector upon a vessel;[82] and failing to make a report[83] of arrival or entry before voluntarily[84] leaving a collection district, unless it be to proceed to some interior district to which the vessel is bound.[85] From the purposes of these statutes they would seem to refer only to vessels actually bound for our ports,[86] although when actually bound for the United States it has been held that the report and entry must be made, although the vessel from necessity arrives at a port other than the one intended.[87]

b. Materiality of Intent. While in some instances the intention to evade or to act in derogation of the customs law is from the very nature of the statute essential to a liability for the penalty prescribed,[88] in other cases, such as the importing of goods without a proper manifest,[89] or for the unlading or delivery of goods without a permit,[90] the intent of the party is immaterial.

c. Manner of Enforcement — (1) In General. Where the statute, without particularly designating the mode of procedure, merely imposes a penalty of a fixed amount or of an amount which may be determined with certainty, it seems that a civil action of debt or a proceeding by information on the part of the government will lie to recover the same;[91] in any event an action for such

81. The statute was held not to apply to the removal of such cask by a person who had received it after a purchase, such purchaser not having knowledge that the marks thereon had not been defaced in compliance with the law. U. S. v. Halberstadt, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,276, Gilp. 262.

83. To whom made.— It is usually necessary that the report be made by the master of the vessel at the office of the chief officer of customs, and a report to an inspector on board of the vessel, and in a shop on shore, has been held to be an insufficient compliance with the statute. U. S. v. Galacar, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,181, 1 Sprague 545. See, however, U. S. v. Rendell, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,147, 1 Curt. 369.

85. The expression "more interior district" is to be understood as used in its common meaning, and would therefore mean further within the indentations or inlets of the contiguous and adjacent country. U. S. v. Bearse, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,552, 4 Mason 192, holding that New York was not "a more interior district" with reference to Barnstable, with regard to a vessel bound from Nova Scotia to New York.

These cases are at variance with U. S. v. Claflin, 97 U. S. 546, 553 note, 24 L. ed. 1082, 1085 [affirming 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,799, 14 Blatchf. 55]; In re Landsberg, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 8,041, in that these latter cases hold that the statute under which the former cases were decided was repealed by the act of 1866. As U. S. v. Claflin, supra, is from our highest tribunal, and as Stockwell v. U. S., 13 Wall. (U. S.) 531, 20 L. ed. 491, is expressly departed from, it may be said to be settled that so far as the particular provisions of the statute under discussion in these cases are concerned, only a proceeding for forfeiture of the goods or a criminal prosecution will now lie.

recovery would be a suit at common law, and hence triable by jury at the instance of the accused.[92]

(II) By Proceedings Against Vessel. As a further provision for the enforcement of these penalties it is provided that when the owner or master of a vessel has become subject to such penalty the vessel may be held therefor.[93] Under this provision it is held that a libel may be filed and enforced against the vessel, although no action has been instituted or judgment obtained against the owner or master;[94] but if the vessel be used as a common carrier, it must be shown that the master or owner was a consenting party or privy to the illegal act for which the penalty was incurred.[95]

(III) Defenses.[96] The full, unconditional pardon of a person who has been convicted and imprisoned for smuggling is a good defense to a subsequent action against him for a penalty incurred by the same unlawful importation.[97]

D. Disposition of Proceeds. To stimulate a faithful and strict performance of the customs laws, provisions were early enacted,[98] providing for a disposition of a part of the proceeds of fines, penalties, and forfeitures incurred under laws relating to customs, between the informers and customs officials of the district wherein the offense occurred;[99] but this scheme, having several unsatisfac-

Pleading — Variance.— If the action be for a penalty for a failure to deliver a manifest upon arrival from a foreign territory, it is necessary that the sovereign power of such territory be averred. Steinham v. U. S., 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13,355, 2 Paine 168. But it is held that a declaration alleging that goods not included in the manifest belonged to the master would not be supported by evidence that they belonged to and were smuggled on board by one of the crew of the vessel, and that the variance would be fatal. Joinder.—If the action against the vessel and her master for the penalty (see infra, V, C, 3, c, (II)) is joint, and an attempt is made to try them both as a civil cause under admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, the information will be dismissed upon the objection to such joinder by the master, but a decree may be entered against the vessel. tory and objectionable features, was dispensed with, and provisions were enacted in its stead providing for the payment of all such moneys into the treasury of the United States, and for a payment by the secretary of the treasury of suitable compensation to such persons in certain cases.[1]

VI. REMISSION OF FORFEITURES AND PENALTIES.

From the fact that a system of customs laws must necessarily contain many and minute provisions, necessarily enforced by a corresponding number of penalties and forfeitures, it may readily be seen that frequently a most upright and wary merchant would be subjected to hardships.[2] The injustice and harshness of the system being early recognized by congress,[3] its severity was tempered by the passage and reënactment of provisions conferring upon the secretary of the treasury the power to exercise his discretion in the remission of forfeitures and penalties incurred without wilful negligence or intentional fraud;[4] which discretion

The termination of the customs official's term of office before sentence of condemnation was passed did not terminate his right, under these statutes, to his share in the proceeds; the seizure gave him an inchoate right, which became absolute upon condemnation. Buel v. Van Ness, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 312, 5 L. ed. 624; Van Ness v. Buel, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 74, 4 L. ed. 516 [affirming Brayt. (Vt.) 59]; Jones v. Shore, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 462, 4 L. ed. 136. See also U. S. v. Jones, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,492, 1 Brock. 285.

1. Act of June 2, 1874, commonly known as the Anti-Moiety Act. 18 U. S. St. at L. 186 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 2018].

Application of act.— Section 4 of the act designates the person who shall receive such compensation, and under section 6 of the act, it is held that a judge's certificate of the value of services of an inspector "furnishing information" as to smuggled goods is not required in the case of an officer seeking recovery for actual discovery and seizure. Eager v. U. S., 32 Ct. Cl. 571.

Effect of act upon allowance of costs.—Notwithstanding the fact that the statute repealed all prior provisions of law under which moieties of fines, penalties, or forfeitures were to be paid to officers of the United States, it was held that the district attorney of the United States was entitled, in a suit brought to enforce forfeitures, to tax as costs, two per cent on the amount of proceeds realized under execution, in accordance with the act of 1863, and the clerk would be entitled to tax one per cent on such proceeds as provided by prior statutes. U. S. v. One Horse, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 15,932, 7 Ben. 405.

3. For it was by the act of March 3, 1797, that the first permanent act providing for the remission of penalties and forfeitures was passed (U. S. v. Hutchinson, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,431, 1 Hask. 146); and while before this time similar acts of a temporary nature had been passed from time to time, yet it would seem that there was a period of about two years before the passage of the permanent statute, during which no provisions of this nature existed (U. S. v. Morris, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 246, 6 L. ed. 314).

No. 11,431 (holding that a proceeding for the remission of a forfeiture could not be maintained until the forfeiture suit had proceeded to judgment, and that the collector, although he had not control of a prosecution for the forfeiture, might nevertheless show cause against its remission); U. Nature and importance of power of remission.— It is said that the power to remit penalties and forfeitures is one of the most important and extensive which can be exercised under the government, inasmuch as it virtually affects the rights, revenues, and prerogatives of the United States. Since such prerogatives ought not to be waived or extinguished except by the clear provisions of the law, it would seem to be necessary that a party who sets up a treasury pardon as a purge to a forfeiture, should show that the pardon was within the purview of the powers confided to that department. And while it would not be necessary to show that the proceedings had been carried out with the precision and accuracy of special pleading, yet a substantial compliance with the requisites of the law should be shown. The Margaretta, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 9,072, 2 Gall. 515.

Analogy to English statute.— The power of the secretary of the treasury in the remission of forfeitures and penalties has been supposed analogous to those of the commissioners of the customs in England, under Geo. III, c. 32, § 15, but upon reference to that statute it would be seen that the powers of such commissioners were of a more limited

CUSTOMS OF LONDON. Particular customs within the city of London, with regard to trade, apprentices, widows, orphans and a variety of other matters.[1]

CUSTOS CORPORIS CUJUSQUE INFANTIS EST IN ESTO AD QUEM HÆREDITAS NEQUEAT PERVENIRE. A maxim meaning "Let him be the guardian of the body of the infant to whom the inheritance can not come."[2]

CUSTOS MAGNI SIGILLI. Keeper of the great seal.[3]

CUSTOS MARIS. In old English law, warden of the sea.[4] (See ADMIRAL.)

CUSTOS MORUM. The guardian of morals.[5]

CUSTOS PRIVATI SIGILLI. Keeper of the privy seal.[6]

CUSTOS ROTULORUM. Keeper or master of the rolls.[7]

CUSTOS STATUM HÆREDIS IN CUSTODIA EXISTENTIS MELIOREM NON DETERIOREM FACERE POTEST. A maxim meaning "A guardian can make the estate of an heir living under his guardianship better, not worse."[8]

CUT.[9] As a noun, the term is used to designate a wound made with a sharp nature than are those of our secretary of the treasury. These powers were, however, afterward, by 51 Geo. III, c. 96, to some extent extended, and by 54 Geo. III, c. 171, the power was transferred to the commissioners of the treasury; and under this latter act the powers of such commissioners are very analogous to those given to our secretary of the treasury; and the phraseology employed is nearly the same in both acts. U. S. v. Morris, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 246, 6 L. ed. 314.

5. Macheca v. U. S., 26 Fed. 845.

6. Jungbluth v. Redfield, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,583, 4 Blatchf. 219.

Effect of a remission, when obtained pursuant to statute, is a release of the cause of forfeiture, and no exactions nor charges can be legally made which are based thereon. Murray v. Arthur, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,956, 13 Blatchf. 429.

Effect of remission upon interest of collector.— The right of the collector to a moiety of the proceeds of a forfeiture may be displaced by a remission by the secretary, as his authority to remit is limited only by the payment of the money to the collector for distribution. U. S. v. Morris, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 246, 6 L. ed. 314. To the same effect see McLane v. U. S., 6 Pet. (U. S.) 404, 8 L. ed. 443. But the government would have no authority to release the collector's share, as such, and still retain to itself the other part of the forfeiture. McLane v. U. S., 6 Pet. (U. S.) 404, 8 L. ed. 443; The Margaretta, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 9,072, 2 Gall. 515.

Requisites under special statutes.— If the secretary relies upon a special statute as authority for the remission of a penalty or forfeiture, it would seem that if the facts in the case were such that the special statute would have no application the remission could not be supported under the general statute providing for a remission. The Margaretta, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 9,072, 2 Gall. 515.

Right of district attorney to petition for remission.— In In re Princess of Orange, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,431, it was held that if the United States through its district attorney was soliciting a remission of a forfeiture or penalty, there would necessarily be an insuperable defect of parties; yet a district attorney if performing no function appertaining to his office might in his private capacity as attorney present a petition for the remission of a forfeiture or penalty. And where it is clear that he acts in his individual capacity his official appellation may be disregarded in the petition as a descriptio personæ merely.

62. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 109, § 4.

63. Colwell v. May's Landing Water Power Co., 19 N. J. Eq. 245, 248; Hutchinson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 37 Wis. 582, 604 [cited in Natoma Water, etc., Co. v. Hancock, 101 Cal. 42, 67, 31 Pac. 112, 35 Pac. 334], where it is said: "In common speech, a reservoir often signifies the water kept, not the structure in which it is kept; and a dam signifies the pond, and not the obstruction by which the pond is held. So we sometimes hear of fishing or bathing in a dam; and often of the water in the dam, meaning in the pond. So a pond is made to include the dam, even in judicial phrase." And see Jackson v. Vermilyea, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 677. See also Natoma Water, etc., Co. v. Hancock, 101 Cal. 42, 64, 31 Pac. 112, 35 Pac. 334, where McFarland, J., said: "In this instrument the word 'dam' is evidently used, not in the strict sense of a structure across a watercourse, but in the sense frequently given the word, which includes the pool or pond created by the structure."

64. The term is derived from demo, to take away, and therefore it is not derived from punio, to punish. Fay v. Parker, 53 N. H. 342, 343, 16 Am. Rep. 270.

The word is to be distinguished from its plural, "damages," which means a compensation in money for a loss or damage. Black L. Dict. [cited in Wainscott v. Occidental Bldg., etc., Assoc., 98 Cal. 253, 255, 33 Pac. 88].

"Damage" and "claim" are words of well-defined meaning. See 7 Cyc. 180 note 16.

65. Fay v. Parker, 53 N. H. 342, 354, 16 Am. Rep. 270 (where it is said: "By damage, we understand every loss or diminution of what is a man's own, occasioned by the fault of another. . . . The definition of damage extends the notion of it beyond a man's goods. His life, his limbs, his liberty, an exemption from pain, his character or reputation, are all of them his own, in a strict and proper sense; so that the loss or diminution of any of them gives him a right to demand reparation from those by whose fault they have been lost or diminished"); Black L. Dict. [quoted in Wainscott v. Occidental Bldg., etc., Assoc., 98 Cal. 253, 255, 33 Pac. 88]. And see Chippewa Lumber Co. v. The Phenix Ins. Co., 80 Mich. 116, 123, 44 N. W. 1055, where the court in speaking of an insurance policy said: "The terms 'loss' and 'damage,' as used in the policy, are synonymous, and substantially the same thing."

Compared with "loss."— "A synonym of damage (when applied to a person sustaining an injury) is loss. Loss is the generic term. Damage is a species of loss. Loss signifies the act of losing, or the thing lost. Damage — in French, dommage; Latin, damnum, from demo, to take away — signifies the act,[66] injury, or deterioration, caused by the negligence, design, or accident of one person to another, in respect to the latter's person or property.[67] In a popular sense, the word frequently means depreciation in value, whether such depreciation is caused by a wrongful or lawful act; but in statutes or other legal instruments giving compensation for "damages" the word always refers to some actionable wrong — some loss, injury, or harm which results from the unlawful act, omission, or negligence of another.[68] (Damage: As Ground of Action, see ACTIONS. Caused by Collision, see COLLISION. Pecuniary Recompense For, see DAMAGES.)

DAMAGED GOODS. Goods, subject to duties, which have received some injury either in the voyage home or while bonded in warehouse.[69] (See, generally, CUSTOMS DUTIES.)

DAMAGE FEASANT.[70] Doing damage, or trespassing upon land; doing a person hurt or damage, by treading down his grass or the like.[71] (See, generally, ANIMALS.)

thing taken away,— the lost thing, which a party is entitled to have restored to him so that he may be made whole again." Fay v. Parker, 53 N. H. 342, 16 Am. Rep. 270.

Not restored by vindictive punishment.— "Loss or damage sustained — the thing taken away — may be supplied by compensation; but the loss, damage, or thing taken away cannot be supplied or restored by the vindictive punishment of him who has occasioned the loss or damage." Fay v. Parker, 53 N. H. 342, 343, 16 Am. Rep. 270.

66. Gadsden v. Georgetown Bank, 5 Rich. (S. C.) 336, 345.

Distinguished from "injury."— In West Virginia Transp. Co. v. Standard Oil Co., 50 W. Va. 611, 615, 40 S. E. 591, 56 L. R. A. 804, the court said: "We must nicely distinguish between damnum and injuria. We commonly use the words 'injury' and 'damage' indiscriminately. . . . 'Damnum' means only harm, hurt, loss, damage; while injuria comes from in, against, and jus, right, and means something done against the right of the party, producing damage, and has no reference to the fact or amount of damage."

67. Black L. Dict. [quoted in Wainscott v. Occidental Bldg., etc., Assoc., 98 Cal. 253, 255, 33 Pac. 88, where it is said: "The plural of the word 'damages' signifies a compensation in money for a loss or damage. This action is not one to recover damages, a money compensation. Doubtless, if plaintiff has a cause of action, he could have affirmed the contract and sued for damages. He has, however, elected to seek a cancellation for the injury, the damage, sustained"].

May be applicable to damage to a person as well as to property.— In The Theta, [1894] P. 280, 283, 7 Aspin. 480, 63 L. J. Adm. 160, 71 L. T. Rep. N. S. 25, 6 Reports 712, 43 Wkly. Rep. 160, Bruce, J., said: "I see no reason to doubt that the word 'damage' is as applicable to damage done to a person as to damage done to property. It would be doing great violence to the ordinary meaning of the word to limit it to damage to property. Many instances might be quoted from classical English writers where the word 'damage' is used as applicable to mischief done to the person. . . . In the 27th chapter of the Acts, at the 10th verse, the speech of St. Paul is rendered thus: 'Sirs, I perceive that this voyage will be with hurt and much damage, not only of the lading and ship, but also of our lives.' Not only does the word 'damage' in its ordinary meaning apply to mischief to persons, but I think that it is established by authority that the word is used in that sense in the statute now under consideration." In The Vera Cruz, 9 P. D. 96, 99, 5 Aspin. 270, 53 L. J. P. 33, 51 L. T. Rep. N. S. 104, 32 Wkly. Rep. 783 [quoted in The Theta, [1894] P. 280, 283, 7 Aspin. 480, 63 L. J. Adm. 160, 71 L. T. Rep. N. S. 25, 6 Reports 712, 43 Wkly. Rep. 160], the Master of the Rolls said: "I do not say that damage need not be confined to damage to property, it may be damage to person."

68. Austin v. Augusta Terminal R. Co., 108 Ga. 671, 674, 34 S. E. 852, 47 L. R. A. 755, where it is said: "In this sense, and as a well-defined law term, it was used in the constitution to give the owner of private property compensation for the actionable wrong whereby his property had been damnified."

69. Black L. Dict.

Damaged goods, duty of the carrier in respect to the same, see 6 Cyc. 510.

Loss of damaged goods after fire, duty of carrier as to the same, see 6 Cyc. 527 note 60.

70. This phrase seems to have been introduced in the reign of Edward III., in place of the older expression "en son damage," (in damno suo). Black L. Dict. [citing Crabb Eng. L. 292]. And see Rockwell v. Nearing, 35 N. Y. 302, 308, where it is said: "The right to distrain property damage feasant was one which existed at common law."

71. 3 Bl. Comm. 6, 7 [cited in Dudley v. McKenzie, 54 Vt. 685, 686]. In Vaspor v. Edwards, 12 Mod. 658, 661 [quoted in Dudley v. McKenzie, 54 Vt. 685, 686], Lord Holt says that "damage feasant is the strictest distress that is, for the thing distrained must be taken in the very act." And see Boden v. Roscoe, [1894] 1 Q. B. 608, 610, 58 J. P. 368, 63 L. J. Q. B. 767, 70 L. T. Rep. N. S. 450, 42 Wkly. Rep. 445.
