Action for personal injuries.— Where husband and wife bring separate and successive actions against the same defendant, for damages for personal injuries sustained by the wife, the judgment in one action is not evidence in the other. Neumeister v. Dubuque, 47 Iowa 465; Groth v. Washburn, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 324; Neeson v. Troy, 29 Hun (N. Y.) 173; Berg v. Third Ave. R. Co., 89 N. Y. Suppl. 433. But judgment in a joint action by husband and wife for personal injuries to the wife is res judicata, on every issue determined therein, in an action by the husband for injuries accruing to him from the same injuries. Brown v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 96 Mo. App. 164, 70 S. W. 527. And see Harkness v. Louisiana, etc., R. Co., 110 La. 822, 34 So. 791.

Recovery of wife's property or earnings.— It is a good defense to an action by husband and wife to recover her earnings that the same services by her were pleaded by the husband and allowed as a set-off in a former action against the husband. Cranor v. Winters, 75 Ind. 301. And a judgment for defendant, in a suit prosecuted in the name of the wife alone to recover property belonging to her, is a bar to a second suit, brought in the name of husband and wife, for the same subject-matter. Hawkins v. Lambert, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 99. But where a wife sued for services rendered and board furnished to a decedent, a judgment by which she recovered for the services, but which denied a recovery for the board, on the ground that it would be presumed to have been furnished by her husband, does not bar an action by the husband for the board. Stamp v. Franklin, 75 Hun (N. Y.) 373, 27 N. Y. Suppl. 84 [affirmed in 144 N. Y. 607, 39 N. E. 634].

An adjudication awarding the custody of a minor to the respondent in a habeas corpus proceeding sued out by a married man is not binding on his wife, and does not estop her from prosecuting a like proceeding against the same respondent. Taylor v. Neither, 108 Ga. 765, 33 S. E. 420.

A judgment against a husband as to exemption of personal property is conclusive against his wife. Whitselle v. Jones, (Civ. App. 1897) 39 S. W. 405. But where a husband, after paying for his homestead, takes a deed reserving a vendor's lien, a judgment foreclosing such lien in a suit to which his wife is not a party is not binding on her. Seay v. Fennell, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 261, 39 S. W. 181.

action by the husband and wife against plaintiff therein, involving the same questions, although the land is community property.[11]

k. Parent and Child. Children are not bound by judgments for or against their parents, where they have separate rights or interests;[12] but only where they claim from, through, or under their parents.[13]

l. Guardian and Ward. A ward is concluded by the judgment in any action concerning his interests in which he was legally represented by his guardian;[14] but not where the judgment is against the guardian alone, on an obligation which binds only the guardian and not the ward's estate.[15]

See 30 Cent. Dig. tit. "Judgment," § 1216.

Separate rights as widow and heir.— A judgment rendered by default on the foreclosure of a mortgage executed by a husband alone concludes his widow only as to her rights as his heir, and not as to rights vesting in her as his widow. Unfried v. Heberer, 63 Ind. 67.

Dower.— Where a judgment against a husband determines his interest in land to be that of a mortgagee, notwithstanding that the legal title is in him, it may be set up in bar of his wife's action for dower in the land, although she was not a party to the prior suit. Children as remainder-men.— Where a deed, will, or settlement vests in children an estate in remainder, their father or mother being the life-tenant, a judgment for or against the latter, in respect to the property, does not bind the children unless they are made parties. Nevitt v. Woodburn, 82 Ill. App. 649; Brewer v. Hardy, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 376, 33 Am. Dec. 747; Hall v. Want, 61 N. C. 502; Katzenberger v. Weaver, 110 Tenn. 620, 75 S. Action for personal injuries.— Where a father and a minor son maintain separate and successive actions against the same defendant, for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by the minor while in the defendant's employ and through the latter's negligence, a judgment rendered in the one action cannot be used to prove the fact of negligence or the circumstances of the accident in the other action. Suit between successive guardians.— A judgment regularly rendered between the new tutor and the former tutor of a minor will sustain the plea of res judicata in an action brought by the minor, after attaining his majority, against his former tutor. Porche v. Ledoux, 12 La. Ann. 350.

Sureties on guardian's bond.— A judgment that a guardian's bond is invalid for want of jurisdiction of the court to appoint him is, although rendered in a proceeding to which the ward was not a party, available to the sureties in the ward's separate suit against them. Crum v. Wilson, 61 Miss. 233.

m. Principal and Agent. Although there is in general no privity of estate between a principal and an agent,[16] yet a judgment against the principal is conclusive on the agent as to rights which he can claim only under his principal;[17] and where an agent as defendant in a suit sets up his principal's title, and judgment goes for plaintiff, the principal is concluded, at least if he had notice of the action and an opportunity to defend it.[18] So where plaintiff sues the agent and is defeated, and then sues the principal, the latter may take advantage of the estoppel against plaintiff.[19] But a judgment against a principal for damages caused by the negligence of his agent, while it is evidence to show the quantum of damages in an action by the former against the latter to recover for the damages sustained by the principal, is not admissible to show that the alleged damages were attributable to the agent's negligence.[20] A recovery by the agent in replevin is generally admissible as evidence in favor of his principal.[21] A person who, after ascertaining all the material facts of the agency of another with whom he has contracted recovers a judgment against the agent on such contract is barred from suing the principal thereon; the taking of judgment is conclusive evidence of an election to resort to the agent to whom the credit was originally given.[22] An action by an agent for a conversion, in which the jury found the title to be in the principal and therefore gave the agent nominal damages, is no bar to an action by the principal.[23]

n. Master and Servant. Where a master defends an action against his servant, or has an opportunity to assume the defense, and is under an obligation to do so, because the acts complained of were done under his orders, he is bound by the judgment.[24] And an unsuccessful action of trespass against the master may be shown in bar of a subsequent action against the servant for the same acts of trespass.[25] But there is no privity between master and servant where the subject of the litigation does not concern the employment, or the relation of employer and employee is not a feature of the case.[26]

o. Bailor and Bailee. Where the owner of property brings an action for injury to it or conversion of it, and there is a judgment against him, it is a bar to a suit by the bailee of the property founded on the same facts;[27] and conversely a recovery and satisfaction by either the bailor or bailee may be pleaded in bar of an action by the other for the same injury.[28] And the bailor may be concluded by the result of an action by a stranger against the bailee, concerning the title to the property or the possession of it, at least if he had notice of the suit and could have defended it.[29]

p. Parties to Bills and Notes. There is in general no such privity between the maker, indorser, accepter, and holder of a bill or note that a judgment in one action upon the instrument will bar another, or raise an estoppel against a particular allegation or defense in the subsequent suit.[30] But where the indorsee or holder of a note is defeated in an action on the note against the maker, and thereupon sues his indorser or assignor, the latter is bound by the judgment if he had notice of the prior suit and an opportunity to participate in it,[31] although he is not concluded in the absence of such notice.[32] It is also generally held that a judgment on the merits in favor of the maker of a note, in an action against him by the holder of the note, whether payee or indorsee, will be conclusive in his favor in a subsequent suit against him by another plaintiff, whether indorsee or payee.[33]

q. Partners, Surviving Partners, and Representatives of Deceased. A partner cannot attack a judgment against the firm on grounds which might have been set up in the action against the firm,[34] except where the judgment against the firm

Judgment fixing character of liability.— When a judgment has been rendered against a person on the verdict of a jury, finding him to be an original promisor of the note in that suit, instead of an indorser, as he alleged himself to be in his defense, he is estopped to deny that relation in any litigation with any other party to the note. Sturtevant v. Randall, 53 Me. 149.

A judgment on a note lost after maturity is a complete bar to another action brought by any person who should receive it after maturity. Elliott v. Woodward, 18 Ind. 183.

was taken on service on his copartner alone.[35] But a partnership is not bound by a judgment against a member of the firm in a suit to which it was not a party.[36] A judgment against a surviving partner for a partnership debt is not evidence against the representatives of a deceased partner in a suit to charge his estate, unless they were made parties to the action,[37] although it is admissible to prove the simple fact of a recovery against such surviving partner.[38]

r. Corporation and Stock-Holders. A judgment recovered against a corporation is generally held to be conclusive evidence in a subsequent suit against a stock-holder to collect the balance due on his subscription for stock, or to enforce his personal liability for the debts of the corporation,[39] although there are certain defenses still open to him not inconsistent with the judgment.[40] But there are Pledgees of the stock of a corporation to secure a debt of the stock-holder are stockholders and not creditors of the corporation, and are therefore bound by a judgment against the corporation. Farmers' Bank v. Ohio River Line Steamboat Co., 108 Ky. 447, 56 S. W. 719, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 132.

40. Hudson v. Carman, 41 Me. 84, holding that the organization and existence of the

some cases holding that judgment against the corporation is only prima facie evidence against the stock-holder,[41] and in a few states it is not admissible in evidence at all.[42] In respect to rights arising out of contracts other than subscriptions for stock, a shareholder is not bound by a judgment against the corporation in any proceeding to which he was not a party.[43]

s. Corporation and Bondholders. There is no such privity between a corporation and the holders of its bonds as to make a judgment against the former conclusive on the latter,[44] although a bondholder who intervenes in litigation against the corporation and so makes himself a party is bound by the result;[45] and where the bonds are secured by a mortgage or deed of trust, the holders are represented by the trustee in any suit involving the validity of the mortgage or its foreclosure, and will be concluded by the decree, although not formally made parties.[46] corporation must be proved as an independent fact in a suit against a stock-holder; that matter not being conclusively established by the first judgment.

Fraud and collusion in procuring the judgment against the corporation may be shown by the stock-holder, to escape the personal liability sought to be fixed upon him for the debt. Schertz v. Chester First Nat. Bank, 47 Ill. App. 124; Ball v. Reese, 58 Kan. 614, 50 Pac. 875, 62 Am. t. Municipal Corporation and Citizens or Taxpayers. A judgment for or against a municipal corporation, in a suit concerning a matter which is of general interest to all the citizens or taxpayers thereof, as the levy and collection of taxes, or public contracts or other obligations,[47] or public property, its title, character or boundaries,[48] is binding, not only on the municipality and its officers, but also upon such citizens or taxpayers, in so far as concerns their rights or interests as members of the general public, although not in respect to rights which they hold as individuals, peculiar to themselves and not shared with the public. And subject to similar limitations, a judgment between certain residents or taxpayers and the municipality may be conclusive on all other citizens similarly situated,[49] and where an action between individuals concerns public interests or rights, and the municipality is represented in the litigation by its proper officers and takes part in the prosecution or defense of the action, it is estopped by the result.[50] Again a judgment against one officer of a municipality will be conclusive in an action by the same plaintiff against another officer of the same municipality, the issues being

Location of county-seat.— In mandamus on the relation of a county attorney to compel the county officers to hold their offices at a certain place as the permanent county-seat, a judgment in a suit by electors and taxpayers that such place was not the county-the same.[51] One county is not generally bound by a judgment against another county relating to the same subject-matter.[52]

u. Municipal Corporation and Officers. A judgment for or against a public officer, in an action brought against him in his official capacity, is conclusive on the municipal corporation which he represents and under which he serves, it being the real party in interest.[53] But this rule does not apply where the officer, although performing functions in behalf of the municipality, is officially independent of it,[54] nor where he is sued in his individual capacity or for acts done in his individual character.[55]

v. Officers and Deputies or Successors. An officer and his deputy are not in such legal privity that a judgment for or against one will be conclusive in an action by or against the other.[56] But an incumbent of an office is in privity with his predecessor in the same office, so as to be concluded by a judgment for or against his predecessor in any suit touching the powers, privileges, or duties of the office.[57]

6. Persons Responsible Over — a. In General. See 30 Cent. Dig. tit. "Judgment," §§ 1223, 1224.

Surety.— Where the liability of a surety is contingent and to be ascertained by an assessment of damages, a judgment against him, with proof of payment of the amount recovered, is competent, at least prima facie, evidence in a suit by him against the principal to recover the money so paid, even though the principal was not joined in the suit or notified of it. Where the assignor of a mortgage covenants with the assignee that the property covered will produce a given sum over and above the cost of foreclosing, and that if it does not he will pay the deficiency, the proceedings in the suit to foreclose will be conclusive evidence against the assignor, in an action on the covenant, to show the amount of the deficiency. of judgment on a paramount title, such judgment is evidence in his subsequent suit against his vendor on the latter's covenants and for title; but the vendor is not precluded by the judgment against his vendee from showing that the recovery was on a title derived from the vendee himself, or in consequence of some fact occurring after the date of the covenant, or that his covenant was special or did not run with the land, or that he made no covenant,[63] or that he has already responded to a suit on the covenant brought by a proper party.[64]

(III) Requisites of Notice to Warrantor. In order to bind the warrantor, it is necessary that notice of the pending action should have been given to him;[65] but the notice need not have been in writing,[66] or in any particular form of words, it being sufficient if it is unequivocal, certain, and explicit,[67] and calls upon the warrantor to defend the title which he conveyed.[68]

(IV) Opportunity to Defend. In order that the warrantor should be bound by the judgment, it is essential that he should have a fair and full opportunity to defend his title and to avail himself of every legal means of avoiding an adverse judgment.[69]

(V) Warrantors of Personal Property. Where chattels are sold with an express or implied warranty of title, and are taken from the vendee by a judgment in a suit against him by a third person, of which action the vendor was duly notified and was requested to defend, the latter is conclusively bound by such judgment.[70] It has been held that this rule does not apply where the action against the vendor is on a warranty of soundness of the chattel sold;[71] but that it applies where a note or other obligation is assigned with a warranty that it is valid and genuine,[72] or that it is free from set-off.[73] If the vendor is not notified of the action against his vendee, the judgment recovered in such action is not evidence against him.[74]

c. Indemnitors.[75] An obligation to indemnify another against liability at the suit of third persons implies an obligation to defend such suit when brought, and the judgment will bind the indemnitor when he was notified of the action and called upon to defend it.[76] This rule applies to actions on indemnifying bonds given to sheriffs and other officers by their deputies[77] or by attachment or execution creditors or claimants of goods under levy.[78]

d. Judgment Against City as Evidence Against Person Liable Over. Heirs and legatees.— A judgment rendered real estate to pay such a judgment as a debt of the estate,[91] or on a bill by the judgment creditor against the heirs or devisees to subject the land to his judgment,[92] except where the statutes regarding the powers and duties of personal representatives have changed the law so as to establish a contrary rule,[93] and save also in a few well defined and exceptional cases.[94] Under ordinary circumstances therefore the heirs or devisees may set up any meritorious defense against the judgment when it is sought to be enforced against their interests.[95] And con-in an action had between the administrator and the heirs is not binding or conclusive on the legatees. Valsain v. Cloutier, 3 La. 170, 22 Am. Dec. 179.

As to descendible realty.— In a proceeding by a representative of a deceased partner for a settlement of the affairs of the partnership, the court may determine whether or not there is any real property which could descend to the heirs, and its decision as to such matter is conclusive on the heirs, although they were not parties. Darrow v. Calkins, 6 N. Y. App. Div. 28, 39 N. Y. Suppl. 527.

Foreclosure of liens.— A judgment against an executor or administrator for the foreclosure of a mortgage or vendor's lien created by the decedent is binding on the heirs. Harsh v. Griffin, 72 Iowa 608, 34 N. W. 441; Moody v. Peyton, 135 Mo. 482, 36 S. W. 621, 58 Am. St. Rep. 604.

A decree of insolvency merely ascertains, as between the personal representative and the creditors, the status of the estate; as to the heirs at law or legatees, it is not evidence of any fact ascertained by it. Randle v. Carter, 62 Ala. 95.

95. Buntyn v. Holmes, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 319, holding that the heir's right of defending against the judgment does not extend to mere technical defects or irregularities or objections, not going to the question of the liability of the ancestor for the debt, sufficiency of assets, or other meritorious defenses.

The statute of limitations is a meritorious versely a judgment rendered in an action to which the heirs only were parties is not binding on the administrator.[96]

d. Executor and Legatee. A legatee is concluded by a judgment against the executor,[97] except in so far as the legacy is charged on and payable out of realty,[98] and except in cases of fraud or collusion on the part of the executor,[99] or where the suit is commenced or revived after the executor's accounts have been settled and the property distributed.[1]

e. Successive Personal Representatives. As there is no technical privity between an executor or an administrator in chief and a succeeding administrator de bonis non, a judgment rendered against the former is not conclusive against the latter;[2] and conversely a judgment against the administrator de bonis non of a debtor is not evidence of the debt as against the representative of the administrator in chief.[3]

f. Principal and Ancillary Administrators. Where administration is granted in different states to different persons, they are so far independent of each other that a judgment against one is no evidence against the other to affect assets in his hands to be administered.[4]

g. Coheirs or Distributees. As the several heirs or distributees of an estate do not claim through or under one another, there is no such privity between them that one will be bound by a judgment rendered in an action prosecuted or defended by another, in which he was not made a party or represented,[5] although all may be bound by a judgment affecting their common source of title, that is, the rights of the ancestor or the will under which they all claim.[6]

8. Principal and Surety[7] — a. In General. Whether or not a surety is concluded by a judgment against his principal is fully discussed elsewhere.[8]

b. Sureties on Bonds Given in Legal Proceedings. The surety on a bond given in the course of legal proceedings submits himself to the acts of the principal, and to the judgment, as itself a legal consequence, falling within the suretyship, and therefore is conclusively bound by a judgment against the principal, to the exclusion of all defenses which were or might have been set up by the latter.[9]

9. Garnishees. A garnishment proceeding is a suit inter partes, and not in rem, and therefore can affect only the parties thereto and those in privity with them.[10]

10. General and State Governments and Municipal Corporations. The United States, in the character of a plaintiff or when sued by its permission in one of its own courts, is bound by the estoppel of the judgment like any private suitor;[11] but it is not estopped by judgments against its officers, agents, or tenants.[12] In Canada it has been held that the government of the dominion is bound by the judgment of a court of justice in a suit to which the attorney-general, as representing the government, was a party defendant, equally as any individual would be, if the relief prayed by the information is sought in the same interest and upon the same grounds as were adjudicated upon by the judgment in the former suit.[13] So also a state, when invoking or consenting to the jurisdiction of the courts, or when made a defendant by compulsory process, in the rare instances where that is lawful, is conclusively bound by the judgment which may be rendered;[14] and a state may also be bound by the judgment rendered in an action by or against one of its municipal corporations,[15] but not by a judgment between private parties,[16] although a question affecting the public interests or public domain was litigated therein.[17] The record of a previous action to which the state was not a party is not available against it as res judicata, unless it appears that the state by statute expressly authorized the action to be brought or defended, and that the officer having the action in charge acted within the scope of the authority given by the statute.[18] A municipal corporation is in no sense sovereign, and the doctrine of res judicata applies to it as to any private party;[19] but it is not estopped by a judgment for or against another municipal corporation of the same state, although the same question is at issue.[20]

11. Co-Plaintiffs or Co-Defendants. Although a judgment is conclusive upon all the parties to the action, so that no one can allege anything contrary to it merely because his co-plaintiff or co-defendant is not joined with him in the second suit,[21] yet the estoppel is raised only between those who were adverse parties in the former suit, so that the judgment therein settles nothing as to the relative rights or liabilities of the co-plaintiffs or co-defendants inter sese,[22] unless their conflicting or hostile claims were brought into issue by cross petitions or separate and adversary answers, and were thereupon actually litigated and adjudicated.[23]

12. STRANGERS — a. Not Concluded by Judgment. A judgment is not pleadable in bar nor admissible in evidence against strangers to the litigation in which it was rendered, that is, those who were neither parties nor interveners in that suit, nor represented by parties therein, nor in privity with the parties or any of them.[24] Participation in the trial by right of an interest in the subject-matter

Bastardy and seduction.— An order quashing a bastardy order in affiliation proceedings, on the ground that defendant was not the father of the child, is not a bar to an action for seduction by the parent or employer of the woman who had obtained the bastardy order. b. Principle of Stare Decisis. This principle, or the doctrine of adherence to precedents, is not properly a branch of the rule of res judicata; it relates only to questions of law, not of fact; although there are decisions to the effect that a title previously passed upon, although in a suit between different parties, will not be again examined and adjudicated, in a case proceeding upon the same state of facts, and presenting the same question, in the absence of a showing that the former decision was manifestly erroneous.[27]

c. Judgment as Evidence of Its Own Existence. Although a judgment is not admissible against strangers to prove the facts on which it is based, it is always admissible to prove the fact or time of its own rendition and its necessary legal consequences, so far as they affect the rights of others than the immediate parties.[28]

W. 362, holding that the fact that a stranger to a suit has been induced to locate certain land by reason of a decision of the supreme court which declared that the title of a party to the suit was void will not estop such party from asserting his title to the property in a subsequent action brought by such stranger to try title.

See 30 Cent. Dig. tit. "Judgment," § 1231.

Date and course of litigation.— The record of a judgment is admissible in evidence, as between strangers, to show the time of the commencement of the action in which it was rendered (Tappan v. Beardsley, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 427, 19 L. ed. 974), or that such a proceeding was pending at a given time (Bayne v. Suit, 1 Md. 80), or that the action has been terminated, and at what time (Walsh v. Agnew, 12 Mo. 520; Chamberlain v. Carlisle, 26 N. H. 540; Baker v. Deliesseline, 4 McCord (S. C.) 372).

Right to sue.— A judgment may be given in evidence, even against strangers, in support of plaintiff's right or title to sue. Hardwick v. Hook, 8 Ga. 354. Thus when the action is by a receiver he may give in evidence the decree by which he was appointed. Hardwick v. Hook, supra; Goodhue v. Daniels, 54 Iowa 19, 6 N. W. 129.

Knowledge of plaintiff's rights.— In an action for wrongful obstruction of a right of way, for the purpose of showing that defendant acted with full knowledge of plaintiff's rights, the record of a former recovery by him against defendant for the obstruction of the right of way is admissible. Dexter v. Whitbeck, 46 Conn. 224.

Payment of money.— The record of a judgment is admissible to show the fact of a recovery, and its satisfaction, where the rights of either party depend on the fact of payment having been forced under legal proceedings. Love v. Gibson, 2 Fla. 598; Koontz v. Kaufman, 31 Mo. App. 397; Davis v. Louisiana Tow-Boat Co., 9 La. 575; Walsh v. Ostrander, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 178.

Priority of liens.— As against strangers, a judgment is admissible in evidence as showing the fact and time of its rendition, when those facts become material in establishing the lien of the judgment on property or fixing its rank in competition with other liens. Naylor v. Mettler, (N. J. Ch. 1888) 11 Atl. 859; Southern R. Co. v. Bouknight, 70 Fed. 442, 17 C. C. A. 181, 30 L. R. A. 823. Compare Hartman v. Weiland, 36 Minn. 223, 30 N. W. 815.

For this purpose it is not necessary to put in evidence the entire record; a transcript of so much of the record as will show the existence of the judgment and the time of its rendition will be sufficient.[29]

d. Judgment as Evidence of Indebtedness. It is generally held that, where no fraud or collusion has been shown in the recovery of a judgment, it is conclusive of the fact and the amount of the indebtedness of the judgment debtor, and cannot be collaterally impeached by third persons in a subsequent suit where such indebtedness is called in question.[30] In an action by a judgment creditor against his debtor and the latter's grantee of land, to set aside the conveyance as fraudulent, the judgment is conclusive evidence against the grantor that he owed the amount of the debt when the suit was brought, and it is at least prima facie evidence of Partition.— Where plaintiff in ejectment claims through the heir of a decedent, the record of a partition suit between the heirs of such person which shows that there had been a final decree of the court for the partition of the land is admissible in evidence. Shanks v. Lancaster, 5 Gratt. (Va.) 110, 50 Am. Dec. 108.

Eviction.— A judgment recovered against the vendee of land by a stranger, in ejectment, is evidence against the vendor of the vendee's eviction under an adverse title. Chiles v. Bridges, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 420.

Existence of encumbrance.— In an action by a vendee against his vendor for fraudulently representing that the land was not subject to a mortgage, when in fact it was, the judgment on the mortgage obtained by the mortgagee against the vendee is admissible to show the validity and amount of the mortgage. Haight v. Hayt, 19 N. Y. 464.

Right of claimant to fund.— A judgment that a certain person is entitled to a fund in controversy is an adjudication that other claimants were not entitled to an injunction which they had obtained to prevent him from suing for the fund. the same fact against the grantee.[31] So a judgment obtained without fraud or collusion is conclusive evidence, in suits between creditors in relation to the property of the debtor, of the fact and amount of the indebtedness.[32] Where a person has been compelled by a judgment to pay over moneys in his hands, the record of the judgment may be given in evidence by him, in a subsequent suit against him for the recovery of the same money, by one who was not a party to the former proceeding, for the purpose of proving that he has paid over such money by order of a competent tribunal.[33]

e. Judgment as Evidence of Facts Provable by General Reputation. Even against strangers, a judgment is admissible in evidence as prima facie, although not conclusive, proof of any fact which from its nature is provable by evidence of general reputation,[34] such as the death of a person at or before a given time,[35] or a question of pedigree,[36] or color,[37] or of freedom or slavery,[38] or a right of ferry,[39] or of free warren.[40]

f. Judgment as Link in Chain of Title. against a stranger, where it is offered as a link in a chain of title, or as a document connected with the title in issue.[42]

g. Judgment as an Admission. A record may be admissible in behalf of a stranger, on the ground of admissions contained in the pleadings of a party therein,[43] or because, the judgment being by default, it may be taken as an admission of the material facts well pleaded by plaintiff; but in neither case will it be conclusive or possess any greater weight than any other species of admission.[44]

What judgments admissible.— The rule that a judgment is admissible against all the world as a link in a party's chain of title applies more particularly to judgments in partition, probate decrees, foreclosures of mortgages, and judgments which operate to transfer title, or to render valid a link which without such judgment would be invalid. The rule does not apply to judgments in ordinary actions to determine adverse claims which are not of the character stated. Minnesota Debenture Co. v. Johnson, 94 Minn. 150, 102 N. W. 381.

and determines questions of fact as distinguished from abstract propositions of law.[50]

(II) Limitation of Estoppel to Essential Facts. The estoppel of a judgment cannot be extended beyond the particular facts on which it was based; it determines only such points or questions as are sufficient to sustain the legal conclusion that judgment must be given for one or other of the parties in the particular form and amount in which it was rendered, not additional matters, unnecessary to the decision of the case, although they may come within the scope of the pleadings, unless they were actually litigated and passed upon.[51]

(III) New or Changed Facts. The estoppel of a judgment extends only to the facts in issue as they existed at the time the judgment was rendered, and does not prevent a reëxamination of the same questions between the same parties where in the interval the facts have changed or new facts have occurred which may alter the legal rights or relations of the litigants.[52]

(iv) Additional Arguments or Evidence. But if a point or question was in issue and adjudicated in a former suit, a party bound by the judgment cannot escape the estoppel by producing at a second trial new arguments or additional or different evidence in support of the proposition which was decided adversely to him.[53]

(v) Additional Property Involved in First Suit. The fact that in the former suit additional property, rights, or interests were involved does not affect the conclusiveness of the judgment as to that portion involved in the suit in which the estoppel is set up.[54] controversy,[55] except where it determines the title or right under which the party claims, in which case it is decisive as to any other property or right claimed under the same title.[56]

(VII) Determining Scope of Estoppel. The extent of an estoppel by judgment depends upon the principles of law applied to the facts of the case; it is not determined by the court rendering the judgment, which has no power to say how far its judgment shall or shall not be conclusive;[57] and if the judgment itself does not show what matters were litigated and decided, the fact may be shown from other parts of the record or by competent evidence,[58] although the estoppel cannot be extended to matters which the judgment expressly declares not to have been in issue in the action in which it was rendered or to have been omitted from consideration therein.[59]

(VIII) Party Estopped by Judgment in His Favor. A judgment is an estoppel upon a party not only in so far as it decides a question adversely to his claim or contention in the suit in which it is rendered but where it recognizes or sustains his theory or claim it estops him from afterward taking a different position in litigation with the same opponent.[60]

b. Recitals of Judgment.[61] The recitals of a judgment are conclusive evidence in regard to the form of action, the time of bringing the suit, the various proceedings taken in it, and the disposition finally made of it;[62] but not in regard to facts affecting the substantial rights of the parties, except in so far as they were at issue and adjudicated.[63]

c. Judgment as Evidence of Jurisdiction. Where the jurisdiction of the court is challenged, and the question contested and decided, a judgment on that issue, unless reversed or set aside, is as conclusive as on any other, and a ruling of the court that jurisdiction duly attached is generally held conclusive on the Suit to recover money paid under judgment.— Where money has been paid under a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, it can never be recovered back by another action; the judgment rendered being, so long as it remains in full force, conclusive to all intents and purposes, of the rights of the parties. a proceeding by mandamus to enforce the judgment;[68] a creditor's suit to avoid a fraudulent conveyance and obtain satisfaction out of the property;[69] or an action on an administrator's bond,[70] a replevin bond,[71] or an appeal-bond,[72] or against a sheriff for failure to collect the judgment.[73]

e. Judgment Conclusive of Fraud or Validity of Contract. A decision adjudging a conveyance, contract, or other instrument to be fraudulent or invalid is conclusive of that fact in all further litigation between the same parties;[74] and on the other hand, a judgment giving effect to a deed, mortgage, judgment, or contract is conclusive evidence that it is free from fraud or illegality,[75] even though that issue was not raised in the action, since in that case the judgment necessarily implies a finding that the cause of action was valid and enforceable,[76] except where the party objecting was ignorant of the fraud or illegality before the judgment, or was prevented from pleading it.[77]

f. Actions on Instalments or Successive Causes.[78] Where a series of actions are brought for instalments due under a contract, or successive actions on a continuing or recurring cause, an adjudication in the first action on the fundamental state of facts on which they all rest will be conclusive in the rest, precluding inquiry into such ultimate facts or grounds of recovery.[79]

g. Matters Which Might Have Been Litigated.[80] The rule is often stated in general terms that a judgment is conclusive not only upon the question actually contested and determined, but upon all matters which might have been litigated and decided in that suit;[81] and this is undoubtedly true of all matters properly belonging to the subject of the controversy and within the scope of the issues, so that each party must make the most of his case or defense, bringing forward all

In Louisiana the doctrine of the common law that the estoppel of a judgment applies not only to everything pleaded in a case, but his facts, grounds, reasons, or evidence in support of it, on pain of being barred from showing such omitted matters in a subsequent suit;[82] and it is also true that, where the second suit is upon the same cause of action, all matters which might have been litigated are conclusively settled by the judgment;[83] and that generally the estoppel applies where matters which should have been urged as a defense in the first suit are attempted to be made the basis of a second action,[84] or, according even that which might have been pleaded, does not obtain. Woodcock v. Baldwin, 110 La. 270, 34 So. 440.

Every question of fact involved in the issues and adjudicated in a suit is res judicata in a subsequent suit between the same parties or their privies, whether such adjudication is contained in the final judgment or not. Strong v. Hooe, 41 Wis. 659.

to some of the authorities, where defenses which were available against an adverse claim in the first suit, but not then set up, are sought to be used in a second action, either by way of defense or as the foundation of a claim for relief.[85] But the weight of authority is that, where the second action, although between the same parties, is on a different cause of action, the judgment is not conclusive on all matters which might have been litigated in the former action, but only as to such points or questions as were actually in issue and adjudicated therein.[86]

h. Inferences From Judgment. The estoppel of a judgment does not extend to matters not expressly adjudicated and which can only be inferred by argument or construction from the judgment,[87] except where they are necessary and inevitable inferences, in the sense that the judgment could not have been rendered as it was without deciding such points.[88]

Statement of rule.— In Cromwell v. Sac County, 94 U. S. 351, 354, 24 L. ed. 195, it is said: "Where the second action between the same parties is upon a different claim or demand, the judgment in the prior action operates as an estoppel only as to those matters in issue or points controverted, upon the determination of which the finding or verdict was rendered. In all cases, therefore, where it is sought to apply the estoppel of a judgment rendered upon one cause of action to matters arising in a suit upon a different cause of action, the inquiry must always be as to the point or question actually litigated and determined in the original action, not what might have been thus litigated and determined. Only upon such matters is the judgment conclusive in another action." This is a leading case.

2. IDENTITY OF SUBJECT-MATTER.[89] Identity of the subject-matter is not the true test to determine whether a judgment in one action is conclusive in another, although some of the cases have stated this as a general rule.[90] It is undoubtedly true that a judgment is evidence, in a second action between the same parties or their privies concerning the same subject-matter, as to all questions litigated and decided;[91] that a former judgment cannot operate as a bar to a second suit unless it concerns the same subject-matter and is upon the same cause of action,[92] and that the estoppel of a judgment, whatever may be its extent as between the parties, is confined, as to their privies, to the particular subject of the litigation.[93] But still it is a well settled rule that the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction on a question directly involved in the suit is conclusive in a second suit between the same parties, where the same question comes again in issue, although the second action relates to a different subject-matter.[94] Thus the former judg-

Exceptions to rule.— Where plaintiff sought to enjoin defendants from using a corporate name consisting of his name with the addition of the word "company," and especially from using his autograph signature as a part thereof, a judgment enjoining defendants from using the script facsimile of the autograph signature of plaintiff was in effect a determination that defendants had the right to use the corporate name in Roman letters, and therefore their right to use the corporate name in that way is res judicata. Geo. T. Stagg Co. v. Taylor, 68 S. W. 862, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 495. In another case it was held that where the fundamental inquiry in a suit in equity was whether plaintiff or defendant owned certain bonds and the bill was dismissed, but the decree did not show the grounds of dismissal, it will be presumed that the issue was disposed of on its merits, and the question of ownership is therefore res judicata. Martin v. Evans, 85 Md. 8, 36 Atl. 258, 60 Am. St. Rep. 292, 36 L. R. A. 218. So again a decree in an action against a railroad company to establish title to land, and to have all clouds removed therefrom, which cancels "all interest, claim, or privilege" of the company in the land, is conclusive that it has no right of way over such land. The decision in an action becomes a rule of property as to the subject-matter thereof and passes with it to all persons subsequently claiming under such parties, but does not attach to any other property, the limit of its effect as to privies being the limit of the particular property, right, subject, or thing involved in the litigation. positively appear, either from the record itself or by the aid of competent extrinsic evidence,[3] that the precise point or question in issue in the second suit was involved and decided in the first.[4]

b. Effect of Diversity of Parties.[5] Generally there cannot be said to be an identity of issues in two suits, within the meaning of this rule, when the parties are not really and substantially the same, although their separate claims or rights may grow out of the same subject-matter or be founded on the same facts.[6] Thus, where one creditor has been defeated in a suit against the common debtor, this does not estop another creditor from suing him on a similar or identical state of facts.[7] But the presence in the one suit of additional parties not included in the other does not prevent the estoppel of the judgment from binding those who were parties to it and are also parties to the suit in which it is set up.[8]

4. Matters in Issue[9]— a. General Rule. The general rule is that a judgment is conclusive, for the purposes of a second action between the same parties or their privies, of all facts, questions, or claims which were directly in issue and adjudicated, whether the second suit be upon the same or a different cause of action.[10]

b. What Constitutes Matter in Issue[11]— (i) In General. A point or question is "in issue" in a suit, in such sense that it will be concluded by the judgment therein, when an issue concerning it is directly tendered and accepted by the pleadings in the case;[12] or when it is fairly within the scope of the pleadings,[13] unless the judgment went off on a preliminary question,[14] or the particular point was excluded from the consideration of the jury or was not actually decided because not brought to the attention of the court;[15] and if the matter was "in issue" in this sense, it is not essential to the conclusiveness of the judgment that it should have been actually contested at the trial, if it was included in and settled by the decision in the case;[16] and some cases hold that the estoppel of the judgment applies to any point raised by the pleadings, argued by counsel, and deliberately passed on by the court, although it was unnecessary to the decision of the case.[17]

15. Brothers v. Beck, 75 Miss. 482, 22 So. 944 (the record of a chancery suit is not admissible to show that a certain issue was res judicata, if such matter was set up only in an amendment therein, which was stricken out on motion of the adverse party); Boston, etc., R. Hord v. Bradbury, 156 Ind. 20, 59 N. E. 27. But compare Freeman v. Barnum, 131 Cal. 386, 63 Pac. 691, 82 Am. St. Rep. 355, where an action was brought by a public officer against a county for his salary for a certain month, and the court conceded that the question of the constitutionality of the statute under which he was appointed was necessarily involved in the case and must have been determined, and yet held that as it had not been actually litigated the judgment was not conclusive of the question in a subsequent suit for salary for another month.

the fact determined must have been in issue on the face of the pleadings,[18] and some others maintain that the "matter in issue" includes only that upon which plaintiff proceeds in his action and which defendant controverts by his pleadings, and not facts offered in evidence to establish the matters in issue, although they may be the only points controverted.[19]

(III) Questions Actually Litigated and Decided. The great preponderance of authority sustains the rule that the estoppel of the judgment covers all points which were actually litigated and which actually determined the verdict or finding, whether or not they were technically in issue on the face of the pleadings.[20] But a matter is not in issue in the suit which was neither pleaded nor

Rule differently stated.— Another statement of the same rule, found in some of the cases, is that the matter in issue or point in controversy, which is concluded by a former judgment, is that ultimate fact or state of facts on which the verdict was based. Oglesby v. Attrill, 20 Fed. 570; Smith v. Ontario, 4 Fed. 386, 18 Blatchf. 454.

The point decided, not the reasons given for a finding, is what is fixed by the judgment. Burke v. Table Mountain Water Co., 12 Cal. 403. Nor does a remark made obiter or arguendo by the court operate as an estoppel upon the point adverted to. Union, etc., Bank v. Allen, 77 Miss. 442, 27 So. 631.

Point ill pleaded.— A plea of res judicata cannot be avoided by plaintiff on the ground that the facts relied on by him for a recovery were not sufficiently pleaded in the former action, and hence were inadmissible in defense thereof, it appearing that the issue was raised therein and decided in favor of the admission of the evidence and that it was admitted. Chouteau v. Gibson, 76 Mo. 38.

Judgment on demurrer.— Where a special demurrer to a petition, raising the question of jurisdiction, is overruled, and a general demurrer to the merits is sustained, a defendant cannot, after a reversal of the decision on the general demurrer, again raise the question of jurisdiction by answer. See 30 Cent. Dig. tit. "Judgment," § 1251.

As to the conclusiveness of a judgment upon matters which might have been litigated see supra, XIV, C, 1, g.

Two grounds for judgment.— The fact that the judgment of a court might have been based on a ground other than that on which it actually was based does not prevent the determination that such ground existed from being conclusive in a subsequent suit, if its existence was in issue in the former suit, and properly formed the basis of the judgment

c. Numerous Issues in Same Case. If the questions involved in a suit are tried and decided, no matter how numerous they may be, the estoppel of the judgment will apply to each point so settled, in the same degree as if it were the sole issue in the case;[22] and some decisions maintain that a general verdict or finding is conclusive upon all the matters at issue in the suit,[23] although the majority hold that where the pleadings present two or more distinct propositions, and the verdict may be referred to either, both, or all, it is not conclusive but only prima facie evidence on any one of the questions involved, until proper evidence is introduced to show that the particular point was tried and adjudicated.[24]

5. Matters Essential to Adjudication[25] — a. Necessary Conditions to Adjudication. Matters which follow by necessary and inevitable inference from the judgment — findings or determinations of the court in relation to the subject-matter of the suit which are necessarily implied from its final decision, as being determinations which it must have made in order to justify the judgment as rendered — are equally covered by the estoppel as if they were specifically found in so many words;[26] or, in other words, it is allowable to reason back from the

Several defenses.— A judgment or decree dismissing a bill generally, or expressed to be in favor of defendant in general terms, does not necessarily establish the truth of all the defenses which he may have pleaded. Leathe v. Thomas, 109 Ill. App. 434; De Sollar v. Hanscome, 158 U. S. 216, 15 S. Ct. 816, 39 L. ed. 956; Belleville, etc., R. Co. v. Leathe, 84 Fed. 103, 28 C. C. A. 279. But where a local statute authorizes defendant to set up in the same answer as many defenses as he has, a judgment entered generally in his favor amounts to a special finding in his favor of all the issues raised by the answer, and if the judgment contains no provision that it shall be without prejudice, or any other limitation or restriction, the estoppel raised by it will extend to every matter of fact in issue, which was actually found by the court in favor of defendant. Four Hundred & Twenty Min. Co. v. Bullion Min. Co., 9 Fed. Cas. No. 4,989, 3 Sawy. 634. And where an appellate court finds distinctly on a given issue, the estoppel arising from its judgment cannot be escaped by contending that the determination of such question was unnecessary, since, defendant being authorized to interpose as many defenses as he has, the court may determine them all, although the decision of any one may be sufficient to determine the whole cause. Clark v. Knox, 32 Colo. 342, 76 Pac. 372.

Alternative defenses.— In an action against the maker of a note, the answer set up that the note was originally void, and also that, if originally valid, it was afterward discharged by agreement of the parties, and judgment was given for defendant. It was held that such judgment was not evidence in a subsequent suit that the note was originally void, as it did not appear on which ground of defense the judgment was based. See 30 Cent. Dig. tit. "Judgment," §§ 1254–1256.

Jurisdiction.— The judgment necessarily implies a finding or assumption that the premises, the premises are equally res judicata with the conclusion itself.[27] As an application of this rule a judgment authorizing a recovery on a written instrument necessarily involves an adjudication of its validity and due execution.[28] And so of a judgment foreclosing a mortgage.[29] Again, where a judgment which awards some portion of the relief demanded, or grants it as against some of the parties, silently dismisses or ignores the demand for other relief, it is a conclusive adjudication that such demand is not well founded.[30]

b. Points Necessary to Sustain the Judgment. In the absence of proof that a particular issue actually was tried and determined in arriving at a former judg-court had jurisdiction. Com. v. Comrey, 174 Pa. St. 355, 34 Atl. 581.

Authority of attorney.— A judgment confessed by an attorney is conclusive evidence of his authority. Cyphert v. McClune, 22 Pa. St. 195.

Evidence that party was alive at a given date.— A recital in a decree of a probate court for the distribution of property that one of the heirs was present in court is evidence in a suit between other parties that such heir was then alive, but it is not conclusive. Sawyer v. Boyle, 21 Tex. 28.

Validity of assignment.— Where a decree was entered in an action between the assignor and assignee of a mortgage, adjudging that the former owed the latter, as the holder of the mortgage, the validity of the assignment is res judicata. Smith v. Lusk, 119 Ala. 394, 24 So. 256.

Joinder of parties.— An order of a federal court dismissing a bill against the members of a partnership, on the ground that some of the partners are citizens of the same state with the complainant, necessarily determines that such defendants are necessary parties. Raphael v. Trask, 118 Fed. 678.

Compensation implied.— Judgment for A in an action against B for storage of wood put by the latter on the land of the former, by his permission, is conclusive, in an action by B against A for conversion of the wood, that the storage was not to be gratuitous. Merritt v. Peirano, 10 N. Y. App. Div. 563, 42 N. Y. Suppl. 97.

Ultra vires.— In a judgment against a corporation on a contract, the court necessarily determines whether the corporation had power to make the contract. Lake County v. Platt, 79 Fed. 567, 25 C. C. A. 87.

Landlord and tenant.— A judgment by which a tenant is dispossessed is conclusive as to the existence and validity of the lease, the occupation by defendant, and that the rent was due. Jacob v. Thompson, 73 N. Y. App. Div. 224, 76 N. Y. Suppl. 802.

Navigability of waters.— Where plaintiff recovered a verdict in an action for damages for maintaining a causeway over the waters of a cove, so as to obstruct access to plaintiff's land, the jury must have found that the waters of such cove were navigable waters and their verdict renders that fact res judicata. Sherman v. Sherman, 18 R. I. 504, 30 Atl. 459.

Contract for sale of land.— An adjudication which conclusively determines the legal obligation of a vendee of lands to pay therefor also conclusively establishes his right to a specific performance of the contract. Young v. Griffith, 84 N. C. 715.

A judgment on habeas corpus is res judicata as to all points which were necessarily involved in the general question of the legality or illegality of the arrest and detention, whether all of them were actually presented or not. Perry v. McLendon, 62 Ga. 598.

Rights of defendants inter sese.— A decree in favor of complainant against several defendants does not render the relative rights and liabilities of defendants among themselves res judicata, when such rights are not necessarily involved in the determination of the original cause. Jackson v. Lemler, 83 Miss. 37, 35 So. 306. And see supra, XIV, B, 11.

ment, it is conclusive by way of estoppel only as to those facts without the existence and proof or admission of which it could not have been rendered;[31] in other words it is conclusive evidence of whatever it was necessary for the court or jury to have found in order to warrant the decision or verdict in the former action, and no further,[32] so that a finding or judgment upon a point or issue that was immaterial to the decision of the case does not make it res judicata.[33] But in some jurisdictions it is held that if a question of title was decided in a former suit, although it was not strictly necessary for the court to pass on the question, yet if the issue was raised by the pleadings, fully argued, and actually considered by the court, it is res judicata.[34]

c. Incidental and Collateral Matters. The estoppel of a judgment extends only to the points directly involved in the action and decided, and not to any matter which was only incidentally cognizable or which came collaterally in question, although it may have arisen in the case and have been judicially passed on.[35]

v. Young, 160 U. S. 624, 16 S. Ct. 420, 40 L. ed. 560. Thus in a suit to restrain any interference with an irrigation ditch the record of a former suit for the same purpose by plaintiff's grantors against some of the defendants, where interference with the ditch was enjoined during certain months of the year, is admissible to show that defendants were entitled to use the ditch during other months. 6. Matters in Issue But Not Decided. Numerous cases, particularly among the earlier decisions, have held that a judgment is conclusive as to all questions within the issues raised in the case, whether or not they were formally contested or argued or specifically included in the decision.[39] But the later decisions generally hold that no question or contention is finally settled by a judgment, although it may have been fairly within the issues, as raised by the pleadings, if it was not actually litigated, that is, supported or attacked by evidence, made the subject of the trial, submitted to the jury, or pressed upon the consideration of the court.[40]

See 30 Cent. Dig. tit. "Judgment," § 1263.

Defenses common to two actions.— Where two or more notes are given in one and the same transaction, and, in an action on the first, the defense pleaded did not extend to the whole subject-matter of the controversy, so as to litigate and determine defendant's liability in respect to the whole transaction, the judgment in the first action is a finality only as to so much of the claim and defenses as was actually litigated therein. Worth v. Carmichael, 114 Ga. 699, 40 S. E. 797; Baltes Land, etc., Co. v. Sutton, 30 Ind. App. 648, 66 N. E. 916; Adams v. Adams, 25 Minn. 72.

Actions on bonds and coupons.— A decision establishing the validity of coupons does not estop a party from setting up the invalidity of the bond itself in a subsequent action on it. Shell v. Carter County, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1896) 42 S. W. 78; Nesbit v. Riverside Independent School Dist., 25 Fed. 635.

Legality of consideration.— A judgment against a municipal corporation is not conclusive as to the legality of the debt on which it was rendered, where it does not appear that that question was put in issue by the pleadings. Wilder v. Rio Grande County, 41 Fed. 512. And see Elmwood Cemetery Co. v. People, 204 Ill. 468, 68 N. E. 500.

Constitutionality of statute.— The fact that a statute or ordinance has been construed and enforced, without question as to its validity, does not make its constitutionality res judicata in subsequent actions. Pebnam v. Chitty, 131 N. C. 657, 43 S. E. 3; Philadelphia v. Ridge Ave. R. Co., 142 Pa. St. 484, 21 Atl. 982; Gribble v. Wilson, 101 Tenn. 612, 49 S. W. 736. And although the validity of the statute has been sustained as against particular objections, it seems this will not estop a party in interest from assailing its validity in a subsequent suit for reasons not advanced or considered in the prior suit. Mercer County Traction Co. v. United New Jersey R., etc., Co., 64 N. J. Eq. 588, 54 Atl. 819. And see State v. Kaufman, 45 Mo. App. 656.

Statutory construction.— The doctrine of res judicata cannot be applied to judgments or decrees which merely interpret general statutes, and the obligations of citizens under them, except in so far as they involve findings of fact to which such interpretation has been applied. A decree enjoining the collection of taxes levied in one year cannot be given effect as an adjudication of the nonliability of the complainant for similar taxes levied on the same property for a subsequent year, although there has been no change in the laws, since the complainant cannot, by such decree, acquire a vested and permanent right to have such laws interpreted in the same way as applied to him, although they may be enforced as to others in accordance with a later and different interpretation. Mercantile Nat. Bank v. Lander, 109 Fed. 21.

Actions of tort.— In actions of trespass or for torts generally nothing is conclusively settled by the verdict and judgment, except the points put directly in issue. Standish v. Parker, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 20, 13 Am. Dec. 393.

Divorce.— Where in proceedings for divorce the question of the rights of the parties to the common property does not come before the court, and the decree granted is for divorce simply, neither party will be concluded thereby in respect to his claims otherwise existing to such property. De Godey v. Godey, 39 Cal. 157.

Sufficiency of pleadings.— Where the sufficiency of a complaint has not been tested by demurrer, the judgment in the action will not be conclusive, in a subsequent action founded on an identical complaint, as to its sufficiency. Phenix Ins. Co. v. Rogers, 11 Ind. App. 72, 38 N. E. 865.

Conditions in note.— Where a note is given for borrowed money, although the purpose for which the money was borrowed is expressed in the note, a judgment on the note as such is no adjudication on any right of the lender growing out of that part of the instrument. Darke v. Bush, 57 Ga. 180.

Patent infringement suits.— Where, in a patent infringement suit, defendants did not deny the validity of the patent, but claimed it was rendered;[46] nor does its conclusive effect extend to references made by a party in his pleadings to matter not involved in the controversy, such references being made merely for the purpose of elucidating the points really at issue.[47]

b. Title or Right to Property. On this principle, where the title or right to property was not directly put in issue in a suit, the judgment concludes nothing in regard to it, although the property formed the subject-matter of the suit, and although certain titles or rights of the parties were alleged in the pleadings or tacitly assumed as the basis of the judgment.[48] a license under it to sell the patented articles, and the existence of such license was the only issue litigated, it was held that a decision in favor of complainant did not estop defendants in a subsequent suit from questioning the validity of the patent. Lublin v. Stewart, etc., Co., 75 Fed. 294. And see Thompson v. N. T. Bushnell Co., 80 Fed. 332.

Facts offered in evidence at a trial to establish the issue presented by the pleadings are not themselves in issue, and the judgment is no evidence in regard to them. Belden v. State, 103 N. Y. 1, 8 N. E. 363.

See 30 Cent. Dig. tit. "Judgment," § 1264.

c. Matters Which Could Not Have Been Adjudicated. A judgment is not conclusive on any point or question which from the nature of the case, the form of action, or the character of the pleadings could not have been adjudicated in the suit in which it was rendered;[49] nor, the action having been at law, of a claim or defense which would be cognizable only in equity;[50] nor as to any matter which must necessarily have been excluded from consideration in the case as being beyond the jurisdiction of the particular court.[51]

Partition.— A decree in partition is not res judicata as to the title and interest of the parties to it in the land partitioned where the pleadings are not so framed as to raise and settle the question of title. Sauer v. Schenck, 159 Ind. 373, 64 N. E. 84; Stephenson v. Boody, 139 Ind. 60, 38 N. E. 331; Jerauld v. Dodge, 127 Ind. 600, 25 N. E. 186; Habig v. Dodge, 127 Ind. 31, 25 N. E. 182. And see infra, XIV, D, 2, e.

Ejectment.— A judgment in ejectment is not conclusive, except as against defenses actually made, or legal defenses which might have been made, on the trial. Mann v. Rogers, 35 Cal. 316.

Foreclosure.— In foreclosure the mortgagor's title cannot be put in issue, and hence the judgment is not res judicata against a party claiming independently of the mortgagor. Walraven v. Farmers', etc., Nat. Bank, (Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 53 S. W. 1028.

Attachment.— A decree foreclosing an attachment lien does not conclude the debtor's homestead rights, if they were not put in issue nor adjudicated in the attachment proceedings. Seligson v. Collins, 64 Tex. 314; Willis v. Matthews, 46 Tex. 478.

A suit construing certain deeds and the rights of the parties thereunder will not be considered res judicata in an action of ejectment founded on an alleged breach of the conditions in the deeds. King v. Norfolk, etc., R. Co., 99 Va. 625, 39 S. E. 701.

Property claimed under different title.— A final judgment setting aside an intervention to a seizure of the dividends of bank shares founded upon an allegation that such dividends formed part of a substitution is not res judicata as to the dividends of other shares claimed under a different title. Muir v. Carter, 11 Can. Sup. Ct. 473.

d. Judgment on Matters Not in Issue. Since a judgment is not valid which is rendered without jurisdiction of the question or issue decided,[52] and since a void judgment creates no estoppel,[53] it follows that if the court assumes to pass judgment upon a point or question not submitted to its decision by the parties in their pleadings, nor drawn into controversy by the course of the evidence, the judgment to that extent is not conclusive in a subsequent proceeding.[54]

e. Facts Conceded or Assumed. A judgment is conclusive as to facts admitted by the pleadings or assumed by the decision, where they were essential to the judgment, and such that it could not legally have been rendered without them;[55] but not where they were only incidentally or collaterally in question in the suit, or were not necessary to its determination.[56]

Applications of rule.— In an action to restrain defendant's use of a name which plaintiff claims as his trade-mark, where the judgment is that defendant be restrained as prayed, and that he account to plaintiff for all the contracts procured by him under the name in question, a finding of fact that defendant had been employed to sell plaintiff's goods at a certain compensation is irrelevant, and is not res judicata on the rate of commissions in a subsequent action by defendant for such commissions. Springer v. Bien, 128 N. Y. 99, 27 N. E. 1076. So a judgment obtained in an action to have a deed declared to be merely a mortgage, which declares it to be a deed, and not a mortgage, although it also declares that the grantor is tenant of the grantee, is not evidence on this latter question, which was not in issue in that suit, the fact being wholly immaterial to support the judgment. People v. Johnson, 14 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 416. So again the fact that an appellate court has once passed on the legality of a local option law and declared it to be valid will not control the court as to a question not raised and decided therein. Form of action immaterial.— A judgment for defendant in an action on a note, tried on the issue whether a deed to a tract of land had been given by the principal to pay the note, is res judicata; and, in an action between the same parties to recover the possession of the land, the same matter cannot again be litigated. Water-rights.— Decrees determining the priorities and the amount of the appropriations of the several ditches in an irrigation district are not intended to designate the person or persons entitled to the use of the water thus appropriated; and such decrees are not res judicata as to the parties entitled to the control of a ditch, or to the use of the water conveyed through the same, but only as to the priority and amount of appropriation of the ditch. Oppenlander v. Left Hand Ditch Co., 18 Colo. 142, 31 Pac. 854. And see Lillis v. Emigrant Ditch Co., 95 Cal. 553, 30 Pac. 1108. But where one to whom a decree awards the right to appropriate a certain quantity of water in excess of what he is entitled to from a natural stream for irrigation, after decree continuously asserts that right by user, the decree is, as to the parties to it, res judicata in a subsequent action between them for the same quantity. effectual as a release or confirmation by one party to the other; its estoppel constitutes a part of the title, and runs with the land, extending to all who are privies in estate to either of the parties.[64] Moreover a decision on a question of title to lands is conclusive in a subsequent suit between the same parties in respect to other lands, when the lands in both suits have a common source of title, and the title depends upon the existence or non-existence of a fact directly adjudicated in the former case.[65]

b. Personal Property. Similar rules obtain in the case of personal property. A judgment in an action in which the title to a chattel was directly in issue and adjudicated is conclusive on that point between the parties and their privies, without regard to the form or purpose of the action;[66] but not as between other parties, or where the question of title was only incidentally or collaterally in issue, or where its determination was unnecessary to the suit.[67]

the suit and were adjudicated by the court;[69] but the judgment is not conclusive as to questions arising under the contract which were not in issue, or were only incidentally or collaterally considered.[70]

b. Validity. When the validity of a contract is adjudicated in an action upon it, either in the sense of being necessarily determined by a judgment enforcing the contract,[71] or by being put in issue and tried, the question is conclusively settled by the judgment, for the purposes of all further litigation between the parties,[72] as in actions for further instalments due under the contract;[73] and conversely if the contract is once adjudged invalid it cannot be sustained in a second action between the same parties.[74]

c. Consideration. Similarly a judgment enforcing a note or contract settles all questions as to the validity and amount of its consideration.[75]

Rescission of contract.— In an action on a contract to recover royalties on patented articles, it appeared that in a prior action in the federal court brought by defendants against plaintiff to enjoin infringement on their patents, the judgment of that court turned mainly on the question whether such contract was in force or had been previously rescinded. It was held that such question was res judicata. Topliff v. Topliff, 8 Ohio Cir. Ct. 55, 4 Ohio Cir. Dec. 312.

Deduction from contract price.— A bought goods from B and gave eleven notes therefor, each for one hundred dollars. In a suit on one note, A claimed a deduction of twenty per cent on the price of said goods, and the verdict was for seventy-eight dollars and seventy-two cents. It was held that in that suit the whole damage and consequent deduction from the price of the goods was passed on, and therefore defendant must pay the other notes without deduction. 2. ACTIONS CONCERNING REAL PROPERTY — a. In General. At common law, where there were many forms of actions concerning real property, some involving the mere possession, others the right of possession, and others the right of property, it was a general rule that a judgment in an action of inferior grade, while conclusive on the matters actually involved, was no bar to an action of a superior grade.[85] But under modern systems the question of the title to land may be conclusively settled, like any other question, by its actual trial and adjudication, without regard to the form or nature of the action in which it arises,[86] provided only that it is actually and fairly at issue in the suit,[87] and that the adjudication

Title established.— A judgment in an action by writ of entry does not establish title to any other land than that described in the writ. In re Butrick, 185 Mass. 107, 69 N. E. 1044.

Extent of land recovered.— Judgment in a writ of entry is not conclusive as to the extent of the land recovered, unless the land is described in the writ or judgment with great certainty. Melvin v. Proprietors Merrimac River Locks, etc., 5 Metc. (Mass.) 15, 38 Am. Dec. 384.

Equitable title.— A judgment on a writ of entry, putting in issue the legal title only, does not bar a suit to obtain a deed of the property, in which only the equitable title is in issue. Ryder v. Loomis, 161 Mass. 161, 36 N. E. 836.

Trespass by real owner.— Judgment on a writ of entry for a mortgagee in fee of a tenant at will is not a bar to trespass by the owner, who was not a party to the mortgagee's action. Little v. Palister, 4 Me. 209.

Easement.— A tenant in a writ of entry, claiming a fee unsuccessfully under the general issue, is not estopped to claim an easement in the premises. Tyler v. Hammond, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 193.

(II) Ejectment on an Equitable Title. In some states a judgment in an action of ejectment brought to compel the payment of money or the specific performance of a contract of sale, or generally on an equitable title, or in which an equitable defense is set up, is as conclusive as any other judgment.[96]

(III) In Action For Mesne Profits. A recovery in ejectment is conclusive evidence, in a subsequent action of trespass for the mesne profits, as to plaintiff's right to such profits accruing after the date of the demise laid in the declaration in ejectment sets up an equitable defense, and the cause is tried, and plaintiff has judgment, such equitable defense is res judicata, and defendant cannot thereafter recover by a proceeding to establish his equitable title so passed on in the former suit. Preston v. Rickets, 91 Mo. 320, 2 S. W. 793. And a finding for plaintiff in ejectment is conclusive against defendant as to the possession. Clarkson v. Stanchfield, 57 Mo. 573. So in proceedings under the statute for improvements made in good faith by one against whom judgment in ejectment has been rendered, such judgment is a merger of all injuries resulting from the adverse occupancy and accruing rents and profits down to the time of obtaining possession. Where a defendant in ejectment pleaded a general denial merely, supposing that the deed which plaintiff claimed conveyed only an undivided one half of the land and that a subsequent deed to defendant conveyed the other half, and the former deed was construed as conveying the whole, it has been decided that defendant may on the second trial set up an equitable counter-claim asking for a reformation of the deed to plaintiff to effectuate the intention of the parties apparent on the face. ration in ejectment.[97] But it is not evidence of the length of time defendant has been in possession.[98] In an action of trespass for mesne profits, a judgment recovered in ejectment for part of the premises is an estoppel against defendant's denial of plaintiff's interest in such portion.[99]

(IV) Confession of Judgment in Ejectment. In some states it is considered that the fact that a judgment in ejectment was rendered on the confession of defendant adds nothing to its conclusiveness;[1] but in Pennsylvania this circumstance alters the general rule, and makes the judgment as conclusive as one rendered in any other form of action,[2] and elsewhere a similar effect has been attributed to defendant's disclaimer of title.[3]

(V) Statutory Provisions. In several states statutes have been enacted providing that two concurrent verdicts and judgments for the same party in ejectment shall end the litigation and be conclusive of the title,[4] or that two successive

(VI) MODERN ACTIONS FOR RECOVERY OF REAL PROPERTY. In many states the statutes have freed the action of ejectment from the fictions and artificialities of the common law which rendered the judgment inconclusive, and in others codes of practice have abolished the separate forms of action and provided a single remedy, which applies to the recovery of land as well as to any other cause of action. In either case the judgment is conclusive of all points and questions litigated and determined — of titles put in issue and tried, as well as the right of possession — and will bar any subsequent action between the same parties or their privies for the same land.[9] And the fact that by reason of lapse of time execution will not affect its force as an estoppel against the unsuccessful party.[10]

(VII) AFTER-ACQUIRED TITLE. A judgment in ejectment against a party does not deprive him of the right, on acquiring a new and distinct title, to bring or defend another action for the same land on his new title, without prejudice from the former suit.[11] Thus a party against whom such a judgment is rendered, he having then only an equitable title to the land, is not estopped thereby if he afterward acquires the legal title.[12] But a title acquired pending the action will be barred by the judgment if it was not set up in the action;[13] and where a party, before the judgment, had done everything necessary to entitle him to a patent of the land, the mere fact that the patent issues to him after the suit does not create a new title in him, within the meaning of this rule, being nothing more than a confirmation of his previous title.[14]

e. Partition— (I) CONCLUSIVENESS OF JUDGMENT IN GENERAL. At common law, partition was a mere possessory action, not involving the title to the property, and therefore could not bar a subsequent action of a higher grade or dignity, such as a writ of right.[15] But still it was conclusive of all matters actually and necessarily involved in the suit, and hence if the title of the property came in issue, it was bound by the judgment.[16] And now in most of the states partition has ceased to be regarded as a mere possessory action, and the judgment is generally held to be conclusive upon every right or title which either of the parties presented, or might have put in issue, in the litigation.[17] It therefore establishes the title of the parties to the land partitioned, and is conclusive as to any adverse

Compare, however, Grice v. Randall, 23 Vt. 239, holding that a decree partitioning real estate among heirs or devisees is only conclusive as to the matter of division among them of whatever estate exists which they have a right to have thus divided, and has no effect on the question as to the title of the land.

Only severs unity of possession.— While the judgment is conclusive as to the title under which the parties hold in common, it does not invest them with any new title, or have the effect of changing their title, its only legal effect being to sever the unity of possession. Christy v. Spring Valley Water-Works, 68 Cal. 73, 8 Pac. 849; Fleenor v. Driskill, 97 Ind. 27. Hence a judgment in partition, assigning a share in the land to one for life, who is really seized of the share in fee simple, gives the share in fee, having the effect merely to part the land, without otherwise affecting the title, unless an issue had been made and directly decided as to the title. Kenney v. Phillipy, 91 Ind. 511.

Equitable titles.— In some states it is held that a judgment in partition is not conclusive as to an equitable claim or title of one of the parties, unless it was actually set up and litigated, and under some systems this cannot be done, the action being concerned only with legal titles. Louvalle v. Menard, 6 Ill. 39, 41 Am. Dec. 161; Esterbrook v. Savage, 21 Hun (N. Y.) 145.

As to tenancy in common.— A judgment of partition is conclusive on the parties and their privies that they were tenants in common of land set off to the petitioner as well as of a spring situated on the same. Edson v. Munsell, 12 Allen (Mass.) 600.

Homestead.— In an action for partition by a divorced wife against the husband, the question as to whether the land is the homestead of defendant and his family, and therefore not subject to partition, is within the issues, and a decree for plaintiff is conclusive against defendant on this point. Rice v. Aiken, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 143, 22 S. W. 101.

Rights of purchaser at partition sale.— A purchaser of land from one deriving title under a partition sale is not bound to look behind the decree to ascertain whether the commissioners' report that the land was not susceptible of division was procured by fraud, or whether the land was sold for an adequate price; he may rely on the decree as conclusive until it is set aside or reversed. (III) Parties Bound by Partition. A judgment in partition is conclusive upon all persons having any interest who were made parties to the proceeding,[22] including persons summoned by publication only,[23] persons only cited as "unknown owners,"[24] infants and married women,[25] and those having contingent or expectant interests or possibilities, even though not in esse, if represented on the record by the person entitled to the first estate of inheritance.[26]

f. Trespass — (I) In General. A judgment in trespass does not necessarily settle anything beyond the particular facts of the trespass sued for. It is conclusive of whatever was actually litigated and determined;[27] but so far as concerns the land itself, this generally includes nothing more than the right of possession,[28] so that the judgment is not conclusive upon the title to the premises,[29] unless the title of one or both of the parties was actually put in issue and tried and adjudicated.[30] According to some of the decisions the title, to make the judgment conclusive upon it, must have been put in issue by a plea of liberum tenementum or some other equivalent plea,[31] but others hold it sufficient if the title was actually tried and determined, although it may have arisen upon the general issue.[32] It is also a rule in the action of trespass that plaintiff must recover in one action all the damages, present and prospective, to which he may be entitled, so that one judgment in his favor in such action will bar any further suit for claims or items of damage which might have been set up and made the basis of a recovery in the first suit.[33]

In Massachusetts it is held that where the trial of an action of trespass turns upon the

the same parties, or a bar to its maintenance, if the question of title was actually in issue and adjudicated in the action of trespass,[35] but not otherwise.[36]

g. Trespass to Try Title. This statutory form of action is intended to afford the means for a complete determination of disputed questions of title to realty, and therefore the judgment is generally held to be final and conclusive on the losing party,[37] and also on the successful party, in so far as that he is entitled to recover rents or mesne profits, if any, and if he neglects to claim them, he will be barred from suing for them afterward.[38] But in those jurisdictions in which this action is merely an allowable substitute for ejectment, the judgment has no greater force than one rendered in an action in the latter form.[39]

h. Action to Quiet Title. In this form of action all matters affecting the title of the parties to the action may be litigated and determined, and the judgment is final and conclusive,[40] and cuts off all claims or defenses of the losing party, going

After-acquired title.—Judgment in trespass to try title is conclusive only on the particular title put in issue and adjudicated, and therefore does not bar a new action on an after-acquired title. State Bank v. Bridges, 11 Rich. (S. C.) 87.

Title not adjudicated.— Where the action is trespass to try title and for partition, and defendant does not dispute the title, but defends only against the trespass and partition, a judgment in his favor does not bar plaintiff from again asserting title, because it shows on its face that the title was not adjudicated. Brown v. Reed, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 74, 48 S. W. 537. So where the record shows a judgment in favor of plaintiff because defendant in possession was plaintiff's tenant, and therefore estopped to deny his title, such judgment is no bar to a subsequent action by the other defendants against plaintiff to recover the same land. premises,[45] and will bar a second action of the same kind between the same parties, provided it be shown that the cause of action is the same.[46]

j. Recovery of Possession Against Tenant. Judgment in a summary proceeding by a landlord to evict the tenant and recover possession is conclusive of the relation of landlord and tenant, including questions as to the existence and validity of the lease, its alleged cancellation or renewal, the amount of rent in arrear, and the landlord's right to regain possession.[47] But it is not conclusive on any questions concerning the title to the premises.[48] A judgment recovered in the action for "use and occupation" is admissible in evidence against defendant, on the trial of a writ of entry brought against him by plaintiff in the former action to recover possession of the same land, although probably not conclusive.[49]

k. Suit to Enforce Lien. A judgment rendered in an action to enforce a lien against land, such as a vendor's lien or a mechanic's lien, may be conclusive on questions concerning the title to the premises, if such questions were brought into issue and determined,[50] but not otherwise.[51] It does not bar an after acquired title,[52] nor is it conclusive on other claimants, as to the priority of the lien foreclosed, or the amount due thereon, unless they were made parties to the action.[53]

l. Mortgage Foreclosure. The judgment in a foreclosure suit is conclusive of all questions actually tried and determined or necessarily involved in the adjudication,[54] including questions concerning the title to the premises if they were

In the action of formedon in the descender, a judgment that the tenant recover his costs is a bar to an action of entry sur disseizin, for the same lands, against the heir of such tenant. Kent v. Kent, 2 Mass. 338.

In an action on notes given for rent, a finding that previous summary proceedings brought by the lessor against the tenant, and the judgment therein, were for the recovery of possession of the property and damages for the detention thereof, will not support a conclusion that the notes were merged in such judgment. Representation.— If all the persons having vested estates in the mortgaged premises and some of those having contingent remainders are parties to the foreclosure suit, the decree binds a person born pending the action, whose only interest is a contingent remainder of the same class with those held by parties to the action, since he is before the court by virtual representation. General creditors cannot question the construction placed on a mortgage of their debtor's property, in a suit to foreclose, to which all persons having an interest in the mortgaged property are made parties. Omaha, etc., R. Co. v. O'Neill, 81 Iowa 463, 46 N. W. 1100. But a judgment foreclosing a mortgage in a suit in which the question whether or not the mortgage was executed to defraud the mortgagor's creditors is not in issue does not preclude a creditor who was not a party to the foreclosure suit from attacking the mortgage on that ground. Brooks v. Wilson, 125 N. Y. 256, 26 N. E.

the judgment is conclusive of all questions litigated or necessarily involved in the judgment,[59] including the title and seizin of the decedent,[60] and the claimant's right to be endowed in the lands in question.[61]

n. Location of Boundaries. An adjudication in a proceeding to ascertain or settle disputed boundaries is final and conclusive as to the points at issue and determined, including the location of the boundary;[62] but does not generally settle anything as to the titles of the parties.[63]

3. Actions Concerning Personal Property — a. In General. Where the ownership of personal property becomes an issue in a case, it is settled by the judgment therein;[64] and generally a decision adverse to the claimant of property will bar him from afterward suing either for the specific property or for damages for its conversion or detention,[65] while a recovery of the value of the property will bar a suit for damages growing out of the circumstances of its taking or detention.[66]

b. Trespass. A recovery in trespass for the wrongful taking of property, where damages are given for the taking only, will not bar an action to recover

Boundary between towns.— A judgment under a statute empowering a court to establish a disputed boundary line between adjoining towns is an adjudication not only of where the line is, but where it always has been since it was established by the incorporation of the towns, and therefore is conclusive on the parties, in a suit against one of the towns pending when the judgment was rendered, in which is involved an inquiry into the location of the boundary. A judgment for defendant in an action of claim and delivery, entered on the ground that, from the complaint and reply, it appeared affirmatively that plaintiff had no cause of action, but nothing appearing to show why this was the case, is no bar to a recovery in an action of trover between the same parties and involving the same subject-matter. Woodcock v. Carlson, 49 Minn. 536, 52 N. W. 142.

Estoppel of vendor.— A judgment by which it was decided, in an action between the same parties, that defendant had not purchased the property in question from plaintiff, does not preclude defendant from the defense that plaintiff, having allowed, without objection, a third person to sell the property as his own to defendant, was therefore estopped to claim it. Rider v. Union India Rubber Co., 4 Bosw. (N. Y.) 169.

In a suit by an administratrix on unindorsed notes executed to her intestate it is not necessarily implied that the estate has the beneficial interest in such notes, so that her recovery will afterward prevent her from claiming the proceeds of the notes under a gift from the intestate to herself. Gibson v. Willis, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1895) 36 S. W. 154.

Distress.— Where a party obtains a judgment in distress proceedings, and no appeal is taken, the right to distrain becomes res judicata, and cannot be questioned in a subsequent action of trespass by defendant for the removal of the goods. Monteith v. Gehrig, 43 Ill. App. 465.

Attachment.— A judgment and accompanying order to sell attached property does not bar an action of replevin for the property exempt from seizure. Wilson v. Stripe, 4 Greene (Iowa) 551, 61 Am. Dec. 138.

65. Kreuchi v. Dehler, 50 Ill. 176. But see Claton v. Ganey, 63 Ga. 331, holding that a judgment for defendant in a search warrant is no bar to a possessory warrant sued out against him for the same property.

the value of the goods;[67] but where the recovery in the first instance is for the value of the chattels, this will bar a subsequent suit for damages for the taking or conversion,[68] and a judgment for defendant in this action will preclude the plaintiff from afterward maintaining an action to recover the value of the same goods.[69] In general a judgment in trespass will not be conclusive upon the question of ownership, unless it appears that that was the issue actually litigated and passed upon.[70] But judgment and satisfaction, either in trespass or trover for personal property, against the wrong-doer, will confirm the latter's title to the property.[71]

c. Trover. A judgment in the action of trover concludes all questions tried and determined,[72] and plaintiff's recovery in this action will bar any further action on his part for the same goods, whether in trespass, detinue, or assumpsit,[73] while a judgment in favor of defendant is conclusive on plaintiff in a subsequent attempt to recover the same goods or their value.[74]

d. Replevin. Although a judgment in replevin is conclusive on the facts in issue or necessary to sustain the adjudication,[75] and as to any special matter set up to defeat the claim,[76] it ordinarily determines nothing more than the right of the successful party to the immediate possession of the property in question,[77] and does not settle anything as to the title or ownership,[78] unless that particular matter is the issue on which the decision actually turns.[79] In any event the issues tried and determined in the replevin suit cannot be presented for reëxamination in an action on the replevin bond.[80] The replevin judgment is binding on all the original parties and on any others who came in for the defense of interests of their own.[81] If it goes in favor of defendant, it will not bar a second replevin for the same property if the judgment was merely one of nonsuit;[82] but if it was tried and decided on the merits, the judgment will bar, not only a second action of replevin, but also one of trespass or trover for the same goods.[83] On the other hand the rule against splitting causes of action requires plaintiff in replevin to join in the one action his claims and demands concerning all the property which

Title to property.—If the question of ownership was tried and decided in plaintiff's favor in the replevin suit, the judgment will estop defendant and his sureties from asserting to the contrary in an action on the replevin bond. McFadden v. Fritz, 110 Ind. 1, 10 N. E. 120; Sconce v. Long Bell Lumber Co., 54 Mo. App. 509; Brady v. Beadleston, 62 Hun (N. Y.) 548, 17 N. Y. Suppl. 42. And see Wolf River Lumber Co. v. Brown, 88 Wis. 638, 60 N. W. 996. But if the judgment merely decides that plaintiff is entitled to the possession of the property, evidence showing that he is not the owner is competent for defendant, on the question of damages. Hawley v. Warner, 12 Iowa 42; Buck v. Rhodes, 11 Iowa 348. And a finding of title in plaintiff is not conclusive, in a subsequent action on the bond, as to the fact of the ownership of the goods at a date prior to that on which the suit was brought. Henry v. Ferguson, 55 Mich. 399, 21 N. W. 381.

81. Witter v. Fisher, 27 Iowa 9, holding that an intervening claimant is as much bound by the judgment in replevin as either of the primary parties.

The plea of property in a third person in an action of replevin does not involve the question of such third person's title, in such sense that he may take advantage of the judgment in a subsequent action in which he is plaintiff. Warfield v. Walter, 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 80.

An attaching plaintiff is bound by the result of an action of replevin brought against the officer who took the goods under his attachment. Carlton v. Davis, 8 Allen (Mass.) 94. And see McDowell v. Gibson, 58 Kan. 607, 50 Pac. 870.

Carrier and consignee.— A judgment in replevin against the carrier of goods, replevied while in transit, does not estop the consignee, who in no wise participated therein, from setting up his claim to the goods. Frank v. Jenkins, 22 Ohio St. 597.

82. Daggett v. Robins, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 415, 21 Am. Dec. 752.

83. Hardin v. Palmerlee, 28 Minn. 450, 10 N. W. 773; Ewald v. Waterhout, 37 Mo. 602.

Where a person claims the whole of a stock of goods by virtue of a chattel mortgage, and different portions of it are taken by separate attaching creditors of the mortgagor, and the mortgagee brings separate actions of replevin against them, which actions are all defended by the officer who levied the attachments, in his official right and without join-

can properly be brought under the one cause of action.[84] And a judgment in replevin for the return of the goods will bar a further action for damages arising out of their illegal taking or detention,[85] and a recovery of damages for the wrongful detention will bar a subsequent action for damage on account of depreciation or injury to the property,[86] although it seems that where the owner recovers judgment merely for the value of the property and not for its return, such judgment, while unsatisfied, will not bar another action to recover the identical property from a vendee of the judgment debtor.[87]

e. Detinue.[88] Judgment for plaintiff in this action is conclusive that the right of property, either absolute or special, was in him at the institution of the suit, but shows nothing as to the ownership of the property at an antecedent date.[89] It bars any further action of the same kind for the same property,[90] but not, while it remains unsatisfied, an action of trover.[91]

f. Chattel Mortgage Foreclosure.[92] A judgment for the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage affirms the validity of the mortgage and plaintiff's right to satisfaction out of the specific property covered by it;[93] but it is not conclusive as to any incidental or collateral questions, unless they were actually put in issue and adjudicated.[94]

g. Judgment in Action For Land as Bar to Action For Personalty. Where claims for the recovery of chattels or for injury to them or for waste are joined without objection in a real action, the judgment will be conclusive as to such per-ing the creditors, a final judgment on the merits against the mortgagee in the action first tried will be a bar to his prosecution of the others. McDowell v. Gibson, 58 Kan. 607, 50 Pac. 870.

Exceptions.— This rule does not require the joinder of a claim for the conversion of money or other irrepleviable property taken at the same time (Lovell v. Hammond Co., 66 Conn. 500, 34 Atl. 511), or for goods, part of the general lot, which were not in defendant's possession when the writ issued (Reid v. Ferris, 112 Mich. 693, 71 N. W. 484, 67 Am. St. Rep. 437). And if judgment went for defendant as to part of the property on the ground that he had a lien on it this will not prevent a second action of replevin for such part brought after tender of the amount of the lien. Wheelock v. Svensgaard, 63 Minn. 486, 65 N. W. 937. So replevin for grass wrongfully taken is not barred by the fact that plaintiff might have recovered the value of the grass in an action of trespass previously brought for the cutting and carrying away. Burley v. Pike, 62 N. H. 495. And judgment for plaintiff in replevin for the recovery of hotel furniture, claimed by him as head of a family, is not a bar to an action for the value of the use of similar furniture in the hotel, as to which defendant had wrongfully deprived him of the use. Mathews v. Herron, 102 Iowa 45, 67 N. W. 226, 70 N. W. 736.

Separate claim for tortious taking.—Where the property which is sought to be recovered in an action of replevin was taken from the owner's possession by an act of trespass and with violence, the judgment in replevin for the return of the property will not bar an action of damages for the tort. Briggs v. Milburn, 40 Mich. 512. And see Robinson v. Kruse, 29 Ark. 575.

Lien for boarding.— A judgment for the lienholder in replevin, brought to recover possession of goods held as a lien for board, will not bar an action by him on the board bill. Rosenow v. Gardner, 99 Wis. 358, 74 N. W. 982.

sonalty and a bar to a subsequent separate action concerning it.[95] But ordinarily questions concerning the right to chattels are not in issue in an action for realty, such as ejectment,[96] or an action for the foreclosure of a mortgage on land.[97]

4. CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS[98] — a. In General. In a proceeding for the condemnation of property under the power of eminent domain, the judgment is conclusive between the parties as to all facts and matters in issue or necessarily implied in the decision,[99] including the validity of the law under which the action is taken,[1] the fact of compliance with the various steps required to be taken in the proceedings,[2] the necessity of the purpose for which the appropriation is made and the appropriator's right to proceed with it,[3] the liability of the appropriator for damages or compensation as fixed by the court,[4] the extent and manner of the appropriation,[5] the value of the property or extent of the injury to it,[6] and the ownership and condition of the title.[7] Further the award and payment of compensation for the taking of the property, or injury to it, will bar an action for damages for trespass upon the land, or injury to it, or unlawful occupation of it, by the appropriating company, in connection with the purposes of the appropriation, but before the formal institution of the proceedings.[8]

b. Amount of Damages. Where land is taken for public use, the owner must recover in the one proceeding all the damages which are necessary to compensate him fully; no subsequent action can be maintained for elements of damages omitted from the first suit.[9] Similarly, where part of plaintiff's land is taken, and compensation is to be made for injury to the remainder by the public work in question, or where no land is appropriated, but injury to plaintiff's property is to be assessed, the award must include every item and element of damage, present as well as prospective, and including such injuries as inconvenience, difficulty of access, or increased danger, which may result from the construction of the work in question according to the plans submitted and in a prudent and proper manner, and from its proper maintenance and careful operation in the future; and no subsequent action will lie for damages from any of these causes which might have been claimed and included in the original award.[10] But plaintiff may sue afterward for injuries resulting from the construction of the work in question in a manner different from that originally contemplated,[11] from its improper, defective, or negligent construction,[12] from the neglect or failure to keep it in good repair,[13] or from its negligent or unskilful operation.[14]

5. Tax Proceedings — a. In General. A judgment in an action to enforce the collection of delinquent taxes is conclusive as to all matters actually litigated, and also as to all questions and objections which might have been raised against its rendition, including the fact of non-payment, the liability of the land to taxation, and the regularity of the assessment and subsequent proceedings.[15] And a judgment for plaintiff in an action for the foreclosure of a tax deed concludes all persons bound thereby from afterward questioning the validity of the deed.[16] In some states tax proceedings are considered as proceedings in rem, so that the judgment binds all parties in interest, whether they have actual notice or are only constructively served.[17] But in others they do not possess this character, and the judgment is conclusive only upon parties brought in by actual notice and those in privity with them.[18]

Neither the vendee of the county nor the purchaser at the tax-sale will take, under such circumstances, more than a right to a deed. Jasper County v. Mickey, (Mo. 1887) 4 S. W. 424.

A judgment in favor of a tax-sale purchaser, enforcing by mandamus against the

of a municipal corporation sues for mandamus to compel the municipal officers to levy and collect a tax for the purpose of paying his judgment, the action cannot be defended on any grounds going to the validity of the debt on which the judgment was founded, or which would have defeated a recovery in the original action, all such matters being res judicata.[19]

c. Exemption. A judgment for taxes, rendered against a claim of exemption, is not conclusive as to the liability of the same property for the taxes of a subsequent year, as against a similar claim,[20] unless it appears that the facts on which the decision of the claim of exemption must rest are identical with those which were in issue in the former suit, and were then tried and adjudicated.[21]

6. Actions For Penalties. Judgment for a statutory penalty will not generally preclude a separate action for special damages suffered by plaintiff in connection with the illegal act.[22] But in a penal action which any person has a right to prosecute, a recovery of judgment by one person may be pleaded in bar to a prosecution by another person for the same offense.[23] A judgment dismissing an action for a penalty on the ground that the statute under which it was brought was invalid will conclude plaintiff in a subsequent action under the same statute for a second violation thereof.[24]

7. Criminal Prosecutions — a. Application of Doctrine of Res Judicata. A judgment or sentence in a criminal proceeding is receivable as evidence of a relevant fact in another criminal proceeding against the same person.[25] But such a sheriff his right to a deed, is not a judgment in rem, and is not admissible in evidence against one who was neither a party nor privy to the proceeding. Waters v. Spofford, 58 Tex. 115.

Sustaining exemption.— A judgment sustaining a claim to exemption from taxation as to certain property is conclusive as to its non-taxable character in all subsequent suits, although involving taxes levied for a different year or under a different statute, where the claim to exemption still rests on the same grounds. Where a statute prohibits clandestine marriages, under a stated penalty for each offense, only one penalty can be recovered against a magistrate for uniting two persons in marriage, contrary to the act, and not a penalty for each of the two persons. Hill v. Williams, 14 Serg. & R (Pa.) 287.

25. Lambert v. People, 43 Ill. App. 223; Com. v. Ellis, 160 Mass. 165, 35 N. E. 773.

Application of text.— On the trial of an indictment for an assault on a police officer, committed while defendant was under arrest for drunkenness, the record of a conviction and sentence of defendant for drunkenness at the time of his arrest is conclusive evidence of that fact. Com. v. Feldman, 131 Mass. 588. So a judgment acquitting defendant of an offense is a bar to a prosecution against him for perjury, based upon his testimony given on the trial for that offense, to the effect that he had not committed the acts judgment or sentence is not admissible in a subsequent criminal proceeding against another person.[26]

b. Concurrent Liability to Civil and Criminal Proceedings. Where the same act may constitute a criminal offense, and also a civil injury, in the nature of a tort or under a statute, the two actions are so distinct that a judgment in the one will not bar the prosecution of the other.[27]

c. Criminal Sentences as Evidence in Civil Issues. A judgment or sentence in a criminal prosecution is not admissible in evidence in a subsequent civil suit, although the facts in controversy may be the same, or although the rights of the parties may depend upon the same circumstances,[28] except where the mere fact of a conviction or acquittal becomes a relevant circumstance in the civil suit,[29] and charged. Petit v. Com., 57 S. W. 14, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 262.

Sanity of defendant.— The fact that after conviction and sentence a motion for a new trial was made on the ground that the accused was insane at the time of the alleged crime and at the time of his trial, and that the judge overruled this motion after a hearing on the same, which judgment was affirmed, does not operate as a bar to a proceeding afterward instituted on behalf of the convict for a trial before a jury on the question of his sanity. Sears v. State, 112 Ga. 382, 37 S. E. 443.

Motion for discharge.— Where, on a mistrial of a criminal prosecution, defendant moves for his discharge, which motion is refused, and he is required to give bail for his appearance at the next term, the judge presiding at such next term has no right to entertain the same motion and discharge defendant, the matter being res judicata. State v. Evans, 74 N. C. 324.

Contra.— See Anderson v. Anderson, 4 Me. 100, 16 Am. Dec. 237, holding that in a libel for divorce on the ground of adultery the record of the conviction of the respondent for the offense is sufficient evidence of the offense and also of the marriage.

Applications of text.— The record of a conviction, showing that defendant was present in court when the judgment was rendered, is conclusive evidence of that fact. Holcomb v. Cornish, 8 Conn. 375. So, where a town offers a reward for the detection and conviction of an incendiary, the record of a conviction is competent evidence of the identity of the offender, in an action to recover the reward. York v. Forscht, 23 Pa. St. 391. And on the trial of an indictment for manslaughter, the record of a conviction of de-

with the further exception that a criminal sentence or acquittal will be admissible in evidence in a subsequent suit, civil in form but penal in character, to enforce a penalty or forfeiture of property against the same defendant, on the same state of facts;[30] and the judgment in the criminal proceedings may be admissible as a species of admission, particularly when entered on a plea of "guilty."[31] Conversely a judgment in a civil action is not ordinarily admissible as evidence in a subsequent criminal prosecution.[32]

d. Acquittal as Bar to Civil Action. Where the same acts or transactions constitute a crime and also give to a private individual a right of action for damages or for a penalty, the acquittal of defendant, when tried for the criminal offense, fendant for the assault which caused the death is conclusive evidence that the assault was unjustifiable. Com. v. Evans, 101 Mass. 25.

Action for malicious prosecution.— In an action of tort for malicious prosecution, the record of the criminal proceedings had against plaintiff and the judgment of acquittal in which those proceedings resulted are admissible in evidence to show what became of the prosecution and the fact of plaintiff's acquittal. Basebé v. Matthews, L. R. 2 C. P. 684, 36 L. J. M. C. 93, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 417, 15 Wkly. Rep. 839; Legatt v. Tollervey, 14 East 302, 12 Rev. Rep. 518; Taddy v. Barlow, 6 L. J. M. C. O. But the record would not be admissible to prove plaintiff's innocence of the crime charged; not only on the general principle that criminal sentences are not evidence in civil suits, but also because in the latter action the issue is not so much the party's guilt or innocence, but whether or not the prosecutor had probable cause for believing him guilty. Skidmore v. Bricker, 77 Ill. 164. And see Wilson v. Manhattan R. Co., 2 Misc. (N. Y.) 127, 20 N. Y. Suppl. 852. Compare Maybee v. Avery, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 352. And even though defendant in the criminal proceeding was found guilty, he may still bring his action for malicious prosecution and therein prove his innocence if he can. That is, a judgment of conviction in a criminal court of one who was innocent of the crime charged does not bar a civil action against the person who maliciously procured the conviction. Where defendant was acquitted in a criminal prosecution for causing to be transported certain casks containing bottled beer falsely marked as containing bottled soda water, such acquittal was a bar to the subsequent maintenance of an action by the United States to forfeit the property and recover a penalty for the same act imposed by U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 3449 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 2277]. U. S. v. Seattle Brewing, etc., Co., 135 Fed. 597. is no bar to the prosecution of the civil action against him, nor is it evidence of his innocence in such action.[33]

8. Proceeding to Try Title to Office. XV. LIEN OF JUDGMENTS.

A. Nature and Creation of Lien — 1. Nature of Lien in General. The lien of a judgment does not constitute or create an estate, interest, or right of property in the lands which may be bound for its satisfaction; it only gives a right to levy on such lands to the exclusion of adverse interests subsequent to the judgment.[1] Nor is it ordinarily a specific lien upon any specific real estate of the

See 30 Cent. Dig. tit. "Judgment," § 1311.

"A judgment lien in any case is nothing more or less than an auxiliary in the collection of the amount due upon the judgment, by execution in the hands of a proper officer. It simply causes the force of the execution to relate back to the date of the judgment." Haeussler v. Scheitlin, 9 Mo. App. 303, 308.

As distinct from attachment lien.— A lien authorized by a statute providing that a judgment creditor may place a lien for his judgment upon the real estate of the debtor, by causing a certificate to be recorded, is not regarded as mere continuance of the attach-judgment debtor, but it is a general lien upon all his real property.[2] And the lien being merely an incident of the judgment, its loss does not necessarily impair the validity of the judgment as a personal security.[3] Further, as the lien of a judgment is a creature of the law, the kind or extent of the lien which shall result from a given judgment, or the nature or identity of the property to which the judgment shall attach, cannot ordinarily be prescribed or regulated by the court pronouncing or rendering the judgment,[4] Nor, for the same reason, can the ment when placed upon land attached in the suit in which the judgment was rendered, and is not dissolved by proceedings in insolvency on the part of the debtor, although an attachment made within sixty days next preceding is. Beardsley v. Beecher, 47 Conn. 408.

The legal title or seizin may be conveyed by defendant to a third person, notwithstanding the judgment. Doe v. McKnight, 2 N. Brunsw. 376.

Judgment creditor not a purchaser.— A judgment creditor is not considered a "purchaser" of the lands bound by the lien of his judgment, in such sense as to have any advantage or superior claim or equity which the judgment debtor had not. Reed's Appeal, 13 Pa. St. 476; Rodgers v. Gibson, 4 Yeates (Pa.) 111. And the lien of a judgment is not a "conveyance" within the meaning of the recording acts (Wilcoxson v. Miller, 49 Cal. 193), although it is an "encumbrance," within the meaning of an injunction against encumbrances on the property pending litigation (Willsie v. Rapid Valley Horse-Ranch Co., 7 S. D. 114, 63 N. W. 546).

Subrogation to contract of purchase.— If A makes a verbal contract with B to sell him a tract of land and puts him in possession, judgment creditors of B do not thereby, by virtue of the liens of their judgments or the levy of execution, acquire such an interest in the land as to entitle them to be subrogated to the rights of B, and to compel A to make a conveyance to them upon paying him the purchase-price which B was to pay. Logan v. Hale, 42 Cal. 645.

Removing of cloud from title.— A judgment creditor has the right to proceed by ancillary proceedings, in any court of competent jurisdiction, to remove clouds from titles to any property which he deems to be subject to the lien of his judgment. Scottish-American Mortg. Co. v. Follansbee, 14 Fed. 125, 9 Biss. 482. See, generally, QUIETING TITLE.

Lis pendens.— A judgment for a sum of money, which may be satisfied by a sale of real estate if not otherwise satisfied, is not lis pendens in regard to the title to the real estate of the defendant in the judgment; either it is a lien or the real estate is not affected by it. St. Joseph Mfg. Co. v. Daggett, 84 Ill. 556. See, generally, LIS PENDENS.

Right to personalty.— Since a judgment lien constitutes no property in the land itself, the judgment debtor has the right, previous to levy, to cut timber and firewood, which, if not removed, are his personal property and do not pass by execution sale. West Point Independent School Dist. v. Werner, 43 Iowa 643. And so, although machinery sold under an agreement that title shall remain in the seller till full payment becomes attached to realty, so as to be subject to the lien of a judgment against the owner of the land, the lien gives the creditor no right of possession of the machinery. Exceptions.— Where mortgaged premises have been sold under a judgment junior to the mortgage, and the time for redemption has not expired, the general lien of the judgment is turned into a specific lien upon the premises, to the extent of the amount of the bid at the sheriff's sale and the interest thereon. Snyder v. Stafford, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 71. So in a scire facias against the heir and a terre-tenant, on a judgment against the ancestor, a judgment entered generally, without specifying the lands which it is to affect, binds only the lands of the ancestor in the hands of such heir or terre-tenant. Coyle v. Reynolds, 7 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 328. And see Hill v. Sutton, 47 Ind. 592. And if a judgment against executors, for a legacy charged on land, is entered against the land of certain only of the devisees, and the land of another devisee is sold on execution issued on such judgment, it will not pass by such sale. Lapsley v. Lapsley, 9 Pa. St. 130.

Purchase-money note.— A judgment on an ordinary note, although given for the purchase-money of real estate, should not contain provisions declaring that the debt is a lien on such real estate, and ordering that the same be sold to satisfy it, even if the real estate is occupied as a homestead. It should be an ordinary personal judgment against defendant, authorizing an ordinary execution to be issued against the property in general of the judgment debtor subject to execution. Greeno v. Barnard, 18 Kan. 518.

3. Esterly's Appeal, 109 Pa. St. 222.

4. Hadwin v. Fisk, 1 La. Ann. 43; Castro v. Illies, 13 Tex. 229. Where a judgment is a legal lien upon real estate, such lien is enforceable by sale of the property, and does not require the aid of a court of equity to nature or extent of the lien or the property which shall be subject thereto be regulated or prescribed by the agreement of the parties.[5]

2. CREATION AND EXISTENCE OF LIEN. At common law the lands of a debtor were not liable to the satisfaction of a judgment against him, and consequently no lien thereon was acquired by a judgment.[6] But as early as the year 1285, a British statute, by providing the writ of elegit, created for judgment creditors a rudimentary form of lien on lands, out of which the modern judgment lien has been evolved.[7]

3. STATUTORY PROVISIONS. Judgment liens are the creatures of statute; and in the absence of express legislative enactment judgments do not attach as liens upon real property in the modern sense of the term.[8] Further their character and extent, the steps necessary to secure them, and the means of their enforcement are very largely under the control of the legislature, although statutes affecting such liens are not usually to be construed retroactively.[9]

7. By the statute of Westminster II, 13 Edw. I, c. 18 (1285), the judgment creditor was given his election to sue out a writ of fieri facias against the goods and chattels of the defendant, or else a writ commanding the sheriff to deliver to him all the chattels of the defendant, except oxen and beasts of the plow, and a moiety of his lands until the debt should be levied by a reasonable price or extent. When the creditor chose the latter alternative, his election was entered on the roll, and hence the writ was denominated an "elegit" and the interest which the creditor acquired in the lands by virtue of the judgment and writ was known as an estate by elegit. 4. Recording and Docketing Judgment — a. In General. In many states it is provided by statute that judgments shall be duly recorded or docketed before they can become liens on the debtor's realty, and unless this requirement is complied with the judgment will not attach as a lien,[10] at least as against subse-

v. Phillips, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,974, Baldw. 246.

See 30 Cent. Dig. tit. "Judgment," § 1312.

Compare Lowenstein v. Young, 8 Okla. 216, 57 Pac. 164; Baltimore Annual Conference v. Schell, 17 Wis. 308.

Legislative control of judgment liens.— A law requiring a judgment to be docketed in each county where it is sought to bind real estate of defendant, although previously it was a lien throughout the state without this, is valid and constitutional (Tarpley v. Hamer, 9 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 310; Spencer v. Rippe, 7 Okla. 608, 56 Pac. 1070. Compare Rock Island Nat. Bank v. Thompson, 74 Ill. App. 54), and so is a statute changing the mode of acquiring a lien under an existing judgment upon the property of the debtor, for example, by substituting the lien of a docketed judgment for that formerly created by a fieri facias (Whitehead v. Latham, 83 N. C. 232), or a statute, operating retroactively as well as prospectively, which provides that a judgment shall lose its lien unless execution is taken out and levied before the expiration of a year from the rendition of the judgment (Ray v. Thompson, 43 Ala. 434, 94 Am. Dec. 696; McCormick v. Alexander, 2 Ohio 65; U. S. Bank v. Longworth, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 923, 1 McLean 35. And see Gimbel v. Stolte, 59 Ind. 446). But the statute giving the right to a judgment lien is to be regarded as a part of the contract on which the judgment is based; and hence it is now held that a law which absolutely destroys the lien of a judgment, or provides that it shall cease and determine at the end of a limited period after the date of the judgment, is unconstitutional, so far as it relates to judgments rendered prior to its passage, as impairing the obligation of contracts and invading vested rights. Merchants' Bank v. Ballou, 98 Va. 112, 32 S. E. 481, 81 Am. St. Rep. 715, 44 L. R. A. 306; Raught v. Lewis, 24 Wash. 47, 63 Pac. 1104; Palmer v. Laheree, 23 Wash. 409, 63 Pac. 216. A statute denying to final judgments thereafter rendered the incident of a lien on real property does not impair the obligation of contracts made before its enactment. Moore v. Holland, 16 S. C. 15. And see In re Kennedy, 2 S. C. 216. And conversely it is competent for the legislature to invest existing judgments, as well as future judgments, with the incidents of a lien, by retrospective laws. What judgments.— This rule does not apply to any judgments which, although capable of creating a lien on land, are for any reason not of the sort which are entitled under the statutes to be recorded or docketed. Branley v. Dambly, 69 Minn. 282, 71 N. W. 1026; Barry v. Niessen, 114 Wis. 256, 90 N. W. 166.

On affirmance of the judgment on appeal, it remains a lien upon the real estate to which its lien may have attached, without redocketing; but to constitute it a lien for quent purchasers or encumbrancers in good faith and without actual notice,[11] although it may be otherwise as between the original parties.[12] Under this rule it is the duty of the judgment creditor to see to it that his judgment is rightly and properly recorded or docketed, under penalty of losing his lien.[13]

b. Sufficiency to Create Lien. The record or docket of a judgment for the purposes of a lien should be sufficiently full, accurate, and explicit to inform intending purchasers or mortgagees of the facts which it is essential for them to know, and such that a reasonably careful search in the proper quarters will not fail to disclose the judgment.[14] To this end the judgment should be entered in the proper book,[15] and in the proper county or district,[16] and the record should show the court in which the judgment was rendered,[17] its date,[18] the name of the judgment creditor or owner of the judgment,[19] and that of the debtor[20] and whether the judgment is against him personally or in a representative capacity.[21]

5. Transcript or Abstract — a. In General. In many states the statutes authorize a transcript of a judgment recovered in one county to be recorded or docketed in another, for the purpose of binding lands of the judgment debtor situated in the latter county;[22] for as a general rule unless this is done the lien of a judgment the amount of damages and costs awarded on appeal, it must be redocketed. Daniels v. Winslow, 4 Minn. 318.

Actual notice to a subsequent purchaser or encumbrancer will supply the place of a record or docketing of the judgment, so as to make its lien attach to the lands, as against him. Creditors.— In Virginia it is held that an undocketed judgment is good against a subsequent creditor, with or without notice, even though such creditor may have trusted the debtor on the faith of his ownership of the estate, and believing it to be unencumbered. Gordon v. Rixey, 76 Va. 694.

Transfer of judgment by transcript from one county to another generally see supra, VII, L, 1.

Where an attachment issued by the court in one county was levied on real estate in another, it was not essential to the establishment of a lien to file a transcript of the falls only on the lands within the territorial jurisdiction of the court which rendered it.[23] Such a transfer does not destroy the lien of the judgment in the original county;[24] and on the other hand the lien remains good in the second county for the length of time prescribed by the statute, although meanwhile it may have expired by limitation in the first county.[25] And the judgment may be transferred in like manner to a third or other county.[26] In some states also the lien of a judgment does not attach to any lands until an abstract of the judgment or certificate has been recorded in the proper office.[27]

b. From Inferior Court. Judgments rendered by justices of the peace and other inferior courts do not generally create liens on realty; but it is commonly provided that they may be transferred by transcript to a superior court, and such judgment in such other county. A. M. Holter Hardware Co. v. Ontario Min. Co., 24 Mont. 184, 61 Pac. 3.

Sufficiency of transcript.— To create a lien on lands in the county in which it is filed, the transcript should contain all the essential particulars of the judgment, so as to give reasonably certain and definite information to subsequent purchasers or lienors. See State Ins. Co. v. Prestage, 116 Iowa 466, 90 N. W. 62; Hubbard v. Jones, 61 Kan. 722, 60 Pac. 743; Hastings School-Dist. v. Caldwell, 16 Nebr. 68, 19 N. Land in two counties.— To affect purchasers, a decree for the partition of land lying partly in one county and partly in another must be recorded in the county in which the land purchased lies. Nelson v. Moon, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 10,111, 3 McLean 319.

Unorganized county.— In order to operate as a lien on land situated in an unorganized county, attached to another county for judicial purposes only, the judgment must be recorded in the county to which the unorganized county is attached, since the recording of a judgment is for judicial purposes. Folts v. Ferguson, 77 Tex. 301, 13 S. W. 1037.

Land in subsequently incorporated city.— Where real estate in a county, affected by the lien of a judgment, is included in the corporate limits of a city afterward incorporated, the judgment must be docketed in the clerk's office of the proper court of the city. Wicks v. Scull, 102 Va. 290, 46 S. E. 297.

Judgment not a lien in original county.— Where a judgment failed to become a lien on lands in the county where it was rendered, because of a failure to state the time when it was docketed in the lien docket, the filing of a transcript in another county will not be effectual to create a lien on lands therein. Territorial extent of lien see infra, XV, D, 1.

Purchaser acknowledging lien.— Where a judgment debtor sells lands, both he and the purchaser supposing them to be bound by the lien of the judgment, and the purchaser undertaking to pay the judgment as a part of the consideration, the latter cannot afterward refuse to pay the judgment on discovering that it was never recorded in the county where the lands lie. 25. Donner v. Palmer, 23 Cal. 40. But compare Bradfield v. Newby, 130 Ind. 59, 28 N. E. 619. And see Brandt's Appeal, 16 Pa. St. 343, holding that, where the original judgment is set aside for irregularity, the judgment on the transcript falls with it; and if thereafter plaintiff obtains a new judgment in the case, he must transfer it by a new transcript to the other county, or it will have no lien there.

26. In Pennsylvania, if it is desired to bind lands in a third county, a transcript must be taken directly from the first; it cannot be done by filing in such third county a transcript of the transcript which was filed in the second county. Mellon v. Guthrie, 51 Pa. St. 116. But in Nebraska, where a judgment is rendered in a county court, and a transcript filed in the district court, and a transcript of this transcript is filed in the district court of another county, it creates a valid lien on lands in the latter county. b. Certainty Required in Docket and Index—(i) As to Names. To make the lien of a judgment effective as against third persons, it is necessary that the index should disclose the names of the parties, and designate them with such a degree of accuracy as will furnish reasonably certain information to interested searchers.[32] A party may be designated by the name by which he is commonly known, if that corresponds with the name in the judgment;[33] but regularly the entry should set forth the correct names of both parties, plaintiff as well as defendant,[34] and the names of all the parties if there are several plaintiffs or defendants;[35] and this involves setting forth correctly both the christian name[36] and the sur-

Joint defendants.— A judgment rendered and entered against two or more defendants jointly, but indexed as to only one of them, creates a lien on that defendant's property. Whitacre v. Martin, 51 Minn. 421, 53 N. W. 806; Blum v. Keyser, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 675, 28 S. W. 561.

Effect of new index.— Where the original index of a judgment was insufficient to create a lien, a new index, made on the transfer of the records of judgments to a new book, will not, as an original index, render the judgment a lien as of the date of the transfer. Glasscock v. Stringer, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 32 S. W. 920.

Two indexes.— Where two indexes of abstracts of judgments are kept by the clerk of the court, as is sometimes the case, it is necessary that each abstract should be entered in each index. Central Coal, etc., Co. v. Southern Nat. Bank, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 334, 34 S. W. 383.

Noting fact of index.— When the index entry is properly made, the lien is not affected by the failure of the clerk to note on the face of the record the fact that he has indexed it. Gullett Gin Co. v. Oliver, 78 Tex. 182, 14 S. W. 451.

32. See Day v. Worland, 92 Ind. 75; Metz v. Brownville State Bank, 7 Nebr. 165; Schneider v. Dorsey, (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 72 S. W. 1029; Noble v. Barner, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 357, 55 S. W. 382; Central Coal, etc., Co. v. Southern Nat. Bank, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 334, 34 S. W. 383. The entry of the judgment must show on its face that the party to be affected by the lien is one of defendants; it is not sufficient that by reference to the records of the court the names of defendants may be ascertained; the names themselves must be set forth. Ford v. Tilden, 7 La. Ann. 533. It is not sufficient to create a lien if it fails to contain the name of the owner of the judgment. Travis v. Rhodes, (Ala. 1904) 37 So. 804. But see contra, Street v. Smith, 85 Miss. 359, 37 So. 837, holding that the failure of the record to show an assignment of the judgment or the name of the assignee did not affect the lien.

Ditto marks.—Where two judgments against the same defendant are entered successively in the index, it is a sufficient indexing of the second if the word "same" is written, or ditto marks are placed, under his name in the first. New England L. & T. Co. v. Avery, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 41 S. W. 673; Fulkerson v. Taylor, 102 Va. 314, 46 S. E. 309.

Fictitious name.— Where a judgment recovered against a person by a fictitious name is docketed in such name, although at the trial the true name was shown, a person who, without knowledge of the judgment, purchases the premises from defendant by his true name, after the judgment was docketed, may sue plaintiff in such judgment to have it declared no lien on the premises and to enjoin a sale on execution. W. 861, holding that the index is sufficient to fix a lien on defendant's property if his name is correctly stated under the proper letter, although plaintiff's name is placed under a wrong letter.

Character of parties.— It is not necessary to specify the character in which the parties sued or defended; and the law is sufficiently complied with by placing defendant's name in its proper alphabetical position, followed by plaintiff's name, although neither party is designated as "defendant" or "plaintiff," and although neither the word "versus" nor "against" or any abbreviation is placed after either name. Willis v. Smith, 66 Tex. 31, 17 S. W. 247; Von Stein v. Trexler, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 299, 23 S. W. 1047.

Nominal parties.— If there are several defendants, but some of them are merely formal or nominal parties, it is sufficient if the index contains the names of those only against whom a personal judgment, or judgment for money, is rendered. Fuller v. Hull, 19 Wash. 400, 53 Pac. 666.

name, and the entry must be placed under the letter which begins defendant's surname, and not under the initial of his first name.[37] An uncertainty or misspelling in the index in this particular may be aided by the principle of idem sonans,[38] but only where the names would be pronounced alike in the English language.[39] Further the erroneous omission or introduction of a middle initial in defendant's name, or a mistake in such middle initial, will prevent the judgment from having effect as a lien;[40] and a judgment against a firm recorded or indexed without setting out the names of the individual partners has no effect as a lien.[41]

(II) As to Amount of Judgment. The lien of a judgment is not effective unless the docket entry shows the amount of the judgment with such certainty that the precise sum due can be ascertained by mere inspection, or at most by a simple calculation;[42] and such showing must include, not only the

But compare Hibberd v. Smith, 50 Cal. 511, where it is said that, although the clerk in docketing a judgment omits the christian name of defendant, or omits to write the names in alphabetical order, this does not prevent the judgment from becoming a lien on the real estate of the judgment debtor.

Use of initials.— Although the christian name of defendant is abbreviated to a mere initial, this may be sufficient to put a subsequent purchaser or encumbrancer upon inquiry and so to charge him with notice. Married woman's christian name.— If defendant is a married woman, the judgment must be indexed in such manner as to show her own christian name; it is not sufficient to give constructive notice if it is indexed under the chrstian name of her husband. principal sum, but also interest[43] and costs,[44] and any part payments or credits on the judgment.[45]

7. Issuance of Execution. In several states it is necessary to the effectiveness of a judgment lien on land that an execution shall have been issued within a limited time after the rendition of the judgment;[46] but ordinarily the judgment attaches as a lien without the use of any process,[47] except as to property which is not commonly subject to the lien of a judgment, but can be made so by the levy of an execution, as trust property or personalty,[48] or where the lien is to be extended to the property of a person other than the principal defendant, such as a surety.[49]

B. What Judgments Create Liens — 1. Requisites in General. It is essential to the creation of a judgment lien that there shall be a judgment[50] which is final and not merely interlocutory,[51] capable of collection by execution against it is sufficient if the columns of figures are separated by a vertical red line, marking off the cents from the dollars, in the usual manner of bookkeeping, although the dollar mark is omitted.

4. Judgments Against Personal Representatives. A judgment against an executor or administrator, in his representative character, has, in the absence of statute, no operation as a lien on realty belonging to the decedent's estate,[63] nor has a judgment sustaining an opposition to an administrator's account, where no personal judgment is entered against the administrator;[64] but if such a representative is sued in his individual capacity, a judgment recovered against him in that character is a lien on his own property.[65]

(11) Territorial Extent of Lien. In the absence of restrictive legislation by congress, the lien of a judgment rendered by a federal court was held to extend to all chargeable property of the debtor throughout the federal judicial district,[70] or according to some authorities throughout the state,[71] and was not affected by state statutes requiring judgments to be recorded, for the purposes of a lien, in the county in which the land to be affected lay.[72] But in 1888 congress enacted a law restricting the lien of such judgments primarily to the county where rendered, and authorizing their transfer for purposes of lien to other counties of the district, where the state laws, authorizing this to be done in regard to judgments of the state courts, include the judgments of the federal courts, or make a similar provision for them, although leaving the territorial extent of the lien of federal judgments the same as before in the absence of such state statutes.[73]

73. Act Cong. Aug. 1, 1888 (25 U. S. St. at L. 357 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 701]). The purport of this statute appears to be as follows: (1) The judgment of a federal court will become a lien upon real property situated in the county where the court was sitting at the time of its rendition, at all events and without any reference to docketing, etc., under state laws. (2) If the laws of the particular state, while restricting the lien of judgments of its own courts, in the first instance, to property in the county where rendered, provide for the transfer of such judgments, for the purposes of lien, to other counties of the state, these provisions will also apply to judgments of the federal courts, provided such laws expressly include judgments of the United States courts, or if there is a separate statute in the state assimilating federal judgments in this respect to the judgments of the state courts. (3) But where the laws of the state restrict judgment

C. Commencement of Lien — 1. Common-Law Rule. By the rule of the common law the judgments of a court of record all relate back to the first day of the term and are considered as rendered on that day, so that their lien will attach to the debtor's realty from the beginning of the term, and will override a conveyance or mortgage made on the second or any succeeding day, although actually prior to the rendition of the judgment.[74]

2. Present Statutory Rules. In several states the common-law rule is still in force, and judgment liens relate back to the first day of the term at which they are rendered.[75] In others judgments rendered at the same term are all of equal date and have no priority as against each other.[76] In a few a judgment is liens to the county of rendition, and provide for their extension to other counties by filing transcripts or otherwise, but do not include the judgments of the federal courts or make no provision for them in this respect, then the act of congress of 1888 does not apply at all, and the lien of a federal judgment in such state will extend throughout the federal judicial district. See Dartmouth Sav. Bank v. Bates, 44 Fed. 546.

In several of the states since 1888 statutes have been enacted to meet and carry into effect the provisions of the above act of congress. They authorize judgments and decrees of the federal courts to be docketed, or transcripts to be filed, in the clerks' offices in the different counties of the state, in the same manner as judgments of the domestic courts, so as to attach as liens upon realty in the several counties where they are so recorded. A judgment in favor of the United States, recovered in one of the federal courts outside of a given state, is not a lien upon lands within that state from the docketing of the judgment, although by the laws of the United States an execution on such judgment may be issued against defendant's property in any state of the Union. regarded as having been entered on the last day of the term, unless it appears by the record to have been rendered on a different day.[77] But in a majority of the states the lien of a judgment commences either from the date of its actual rendition,[78] or from the day on which it is entered, recorded, docketed, or registered, the phraseology of the statutes varying in this respect, but all having substantially the same meaning.[79]

of a judgment to relate back to the first day of the term, exceptions are made in case the judgment could not have been given on that day, either because the case was not then ripe for it,[80] or because the court was not in session,[81] and also in the case of judgments by confession,[82] and generally, where it is necessary to protect the rights of an intervening purchaser in good faith.[83] On the other hand there are a few instances in which the lien of a judgment may relate back to a time anterior to its actual rendition, as in the case of a judgment enforcing a specific lien on property,[84] or of a judgment rendered on a bond payable to the state,[85] or on a forfeited writ of error bond,[86] or on a scire facias to revive an original judgment.[87] But generally, and except under the most exceptional circumstances, the lien cannot be considered as relating back to the time of the accrual of the cause of action.[88]

4. JUDGMENT OR AMENDMENT NUNC PRO TUNC. A judgment entered nunc pro tunc does not relate back, for the purpose of a lien, to the day as of which it is entered, but takes effect only from the time of its actual entry;[89] and a judgment by confession, invalid for want of a sufficient statement or for other defects, cannot be amended nunc pro tunc so as to make it effective from its original date, as against intervening purchasers or encumbrancers.[90]

Judgment by default.— An interlocutory judgment does not raise a lien until it becomes final, and then does not relate back. Citizens' Loan Assoc. v. Martin, 1 Marv. (Del.) 213, 40 Atl. 1108; Davidson v. Myers, 24 Md. 538; Phillips v. Hellings, 5 Watts & S. (Pa.) 44.

A judgment upon a special verdict, or upon a verdict subject to the opinion of the court upon a case stated, does not relate back to the date of the verdict, rendered at a preceding term, so as to overreach an intermediate judgment against the same defendant in another cause. Metropolis Bank v. Walker, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 904, 2 Cranch C. C. 361.

Affirmance on appeal.— Where a judgment is reversed on appeal, but is then carried to a still higher court, and there affirmed, its lien does not relate back to the time of the original rendition, so as to cut out a mortgage given in good faith while the judgment stood reversed. 5. Effect of Stay of Execution. Upon the theory that the issuance of an execution is essential to the creation of a judgment lien,[91] it has been held that where a judgment is entered with a stay of execution, it does not become a lien until the stay of execution expires;[92] but where the time at which the lien attaches is not dependent upon the issuance of an execution or other act of the judgment creditor, the attachment of the lien is not postponed,[93] nor is the lien of a judgment destroyed by a stay of execution.[94]

6. Revived Judgments. The period during which the lien of a revived judgment exists is, it is usually held, to be computed from the date of the judgment or order of revivor, and not from the date of the writ instituting the proceedings for its revival.[95]

D. Property or Interests Affected by Lien — 1. Location of Property. Under the statutes now generally in force, the lien of a judgment is confined to the limits of the particular county in which it was rendered and docketed, and does not affect lands of the judgment debtor lying in another county,[96] unless it is transferred to such other county by filing a transcript of the judgment there.[97] But where a judgment lien attaches upon lands in a certain county, and afterward a new county is set off, within which these lands or part of them fall, the lien does not cease by reason of such new organization, but on the contrary it holds during the full statutory period without any further record.[98] A judgment

Before the enactment of statutes providing for the transfer of judgment liens from one county to another by filing transcripts, it was held in several of the states that the lien of a judgment would extend to all lands of the debtor throughout the state. Campbell v. Spence, 4 Ala. 543, 39 Am. Dec. 301; Commercial, etc., Bank v. Helderburn, 6 How. (Miss.) 536; Dawkins v. Smith, 1 Hill Eq. (S. C.) 369; Hickman v. Murfree, Mart. & Y. (Tenn.) 26. rendered in one state or country does not operate extraterritorially so as to constitute lien on lands in another state or country.[99]

2. Nature of Property Bound. As a general rule the lien of a judgment attaches only to the lands, tenements, and hereditaments of the judgment debtor,[1] and does not, in advance of the issue and levy of an execution, bind his personal property or choses in action.[2] Nor does it bind the rents, issues, and profits of Property not subject to lien.— The following species of property have been held to be personalty and therefore not subject to the lien of a judgment: The right of a licensee under an oil lease (Meridian Nat. Bank v. McConica, 8 Ohio Cir. Ct. 442, 4 Ohio Cir. Dec. 106), a parol license to mine (Blindert v. Kreiser, 81 Wis. 174, 51 N. W. 324), a judgment (Gray v. McCallister, 50 Iowa 497), franchises of a corporation (Martin v. Pittsburgh Southern R. Co., 28 Pittsb. Leg. J. (Pa.) 156), a railroad (Scogin v. Perry, 32 Tex. 21), tolls received on a railroad after the judgment (Leedom v. Plymouth R. Co., 5 Watts & S. (Pa.) 265), a turnpike road (Beam's Appeal, 19 Pa. St. 453), growing crops (Gaston v. Marengo Imp. Co., 139 Ala. 465, 36 So. 738; Planters' Bank v. Walker, 3 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 409), and timber cut from debtor's land after the judgment (Lanning v. Carpenter, 48 N. Y. 408). A mortgage of realty is personal property, so that a judgment against the mortgagee will not create any lien on the mortgaged premises. Scott v. Mewhirter, 49 Iowa 487; Butman v. James, 34 Minn. 547, 27 N. W. 66.

On the other hand permanent improvements on the land partaking of the character of realty are bound by the lien. Lessert v. Sieberling, 59 Nebr. 309, 80 N. W. 900. And the lien of a judgment against a corporation whose assets consist partly of real estate is an encumbrance on such real estate. Willsie v. Rapid Valley Horse-Ranch Co., 7 S. D. 114, 63 N. W. 546. If the laws of the state are so framed as to give the character of fixtures to the rolling-stock of a railroad, then such stock will be subject to the lien of a judgment. Milwaukee, etc., R. Co. v. James, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 750, 18 L. ed. 854.

Machinery.— Machinery which has not the character of a fixture is personalty, although attached to real property, and is not subject to the lien of a judgment which binds the land. Young v. Baxter, 55 Ind. 188. But if it is permanently attached to the realty, it may become subject to the lien of the judgment. Raymond v. Schoonover, 181 Pa. St. 352, 37 Atl. 524. But see Hutchman's Appeal, 27 Pa. St. 209, holding that a judgment creditor whose lien has attached may prevent the severance of machinery which is realty, but has no lien upon the fund raised by its sale as personal property.

Funds in court.— As a general rule a judgment is no lien on funds in court arising from a judicial sale of the debtor's property under other liens or claims. Ballard v. Burrowes, 2 Rob. (N. Y.) 206; Utley v. Jones, 92 N. C. 261; Henderson v. Henderson, 133 Pa. St. 399, 19 Atl. 424, 19 Am. St. Rep. 650; Potter's Estate, 6 Pa. Super. Ct. 633. But a judgment lien existing at the time an executor sells real estate is transferred from the land to the fund arising from the sale. Barkman v. Hain, 5 Ohio S. & C. Pl. 474, 5 Ohio N. P. 508. And where land has been appropriated in eminent domain proceedings, a prior judgment creditor of the owner of the land has a lien on the money awarded supe-land.[3] Nor does the lien of the judgment attach to property which is exempt from execution,[4] nor upon homestead property, except as to the surplus value of the estate, if any, over the amount limited as a homestead exemption.[5]

3. Title or Interest of Judgment Debtor — a. In General. The lien of a judgment attaches to the precise interest or estate which the judgment debtor has actually and effectively in the land; and the lien cannot be made effectual to bind or to convey any greater or other estate than the debtor himself, in the exercise of his rights, could voluntarily have transferred or alienated.[6]

But where, on the filing of a bill to remove an encumbrance on land, so that it may be sold under plaintiff's judgment, a receiver is appointed of the rents and profits of the land, they are in equity subject to the lien and claim of the judgment, the same as the land itself. b. Inchoate Title of Purchaser at Judicial Sale. The inchoate or inceptive title of a purchaser at a judicial sale, in advance of its confirmation by the court, or before the issuance of a deed, may be bound by the lien of a judgment against him.[7]

c. Life-Estates. A judgment lien attaches upon a vested estate for life,[8] but binds only the tenant's actual interest, and therefore is liable to be extinguished by the breach of a condition subsequent which divests the life-estate,[9] or by the exercise of a power to sell.[10]

d. Estates by Curtesy. A judgment against a husband is a lien on his life-interest in the wife's lands, although execution is suspended until her death.[11]

e. Remainders and Reversions. Estates in reversion or remainder, if vested, are legal estates subject to the lien of judgments against the reversioner or remainder-man;[12] and in some states the same is true of contingent remainders,[13] although elsewhere this is denied.[14]

f. Leasehold Interests. At common law a leasehold interest or estate in land for years was regarded as only a chattel interest, and therefore not subject to the lien of a judgment; and this view is still held in some of the states.[15] But in others leasehold interests are regarded and treated as real estate, and hence are bound by judgment liens.[16]

Possession.— A judgment is not a lien upon land unless there is a legal or equitable seizin of the judgment debtor; but if he is in the actual possession, that is sufficient, for actual possession is prima facie evidence of title. Jackson v. Town, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 599, 15 Am. Dec. 405. But on the other hand, although the legal title to land is in one, yet if another has actual possession, a judgment against the former is a lien only upon his interest, whatever that may be, for the possession of the other is notice to all the world of his claims. is held in many states that the lien of a judgment does not attach to or bind an equitable title or interest in real estate held by the judgment debtor.[17] But in several this rule has been changed by statute, or by the decisions of the courts assimilating legal and equitable remedies, so that an equitable estate will be subject to the lien of a judgment;[18] and it has always been held by the courts of chancery that for their purposes such an estate was just as much bound by the judgment as any legal estate, and could be subjected to its satisfaction through the process of equity.[19]

The equity of redemption remaining in the owner of property after he has executed a mortgage upon it is an interest which is subject to the lien of a judgment recovered against him; and this, whether the encumbrance is created by a mortgage in the ordinary form,[20] by a transaction lacking the essentials of a mortgage at law, but treated in equity as a mortgage,[21] by a deed of trust to secure the payment of a debt,[22] or it seems by a deed absolute in form, but intended by the parties merely as a security.[23] A judgment lien will likewise attach to the debtor's right of redemption from a sale of the land for unpaid taxes,[24] or from a sale under a prior judgment.[25]

Remedy in equity.— In those jurisdictions where the lien of a judgment does not attach to the reversionary or equitable interest of the grantor in such a deed of trust, the judgment creditor may have his remedy in equity; for, by filing a bill for that purpose, he may secure a quasi-lien, which will give him an interest in any surplus which may remain from the estate after discharging the trusts and which would result to the grantor's benefit, paramount to that of the latter. Surplus proceeds.— After a sale by the trustee under the deed of trust, the debtor's right to redeem is removed from the land and is represented by the surplus in the hands of the trustee, against which the judgment lien is continued and may be enforced in equity. But if the judgment creditor suffers a sale to be made, without getting out execution on his judgment or otherwise giving the trustee actual notice of his claim, and the latter pays over the surplus in his hands, after satisfying the objects of the trust, to the grantor, the creditor cannot recover in an action against the trustee, for the latter is not bound to search the records for possible liens upon the fund. Land held under a power.— If land is held by one under a power of appointment which he might exercise for his own benefit, it is generally held that he has such an interest in the estate as will be bound by the lien of a judgment against him. Tallmadge v. Sill, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 34; Brandies v. Cochrane, 112 U. S. 344, 5 S. Ct. 194, 28 L. ed. 760.

Confession of judgment by trustee.— A trustee cannot bind land held under the trust by a confession of judgment; the lien resulting from such judgment will attach to nothing but the personal interest, if any, which the trustee may have in the estate. Huntt v. Townshend, 31 Md. 336, 100 Am. Dec. 63.

Land purchased in part with trust funds.— Where a trustee, without the knowledge of his cestui que trust, purchased real estate, taking the title in his own name, and paying part of the consideration with trust funds in his hands, and gave his own note and mortgage for the remainder, it was held that even if there was a resulting trust it did not extend to the trustee's interest in the land, and the trustee had an interest therein upon which a judgment against him would attach as a lien. Martin v. Baldwin, 30 Minn. 537, 16 N. W. 449.

Subsequent title held in trust for vendee.— If one sells and conveys land to which he has no title, or an imperfect title, and afterward acquires a perfect title, the same then inures to the benefit of the grantee; and if, between the date of the conveyance and the acquisition of the good title, a judgment is recovered against the grantor, the title of the grantee is prior to the lien of the judgment. Watkins v. Wassell, 15 Ark. 73.

Property conveyed to an insolvent purchaser as trustee for his wife, the consideration being paid by the husband, becomes subject to the lien of a judgment against him, which is not divested by a return and cancellation of the deed, the same not having been recorded. Kline v. Triplett, (Va. 1896) 25 S. E. 886.

Property held by administrator.— The assets of an estate in the hands of an administrator cannot be sold on execution to pay his debts. Montgomery Branch Bank v. Wade, 13 Ala. 427; Halpin v. Barringer, 26 La. Ann. 170; Satterwhite v. Carson, 25 N. C. 549.

After cancellation of a deed the property which has once passed under it by transfer of possession does not revest; but in equity a judgment lien against the grantee subsequent other person, and the judgment debtor has no substantial interest in the estate.[28] So where one conveys land to another by a deed absolute in form, but intended merely as a security, or subject to a parol agreement to reconvey, the grantee has no such interest in the property as will be subject to the lien of a judgment against him.[29]

d. Judgments Against Cestui Que Trust. The equitable estate or interest of a cestui que trust may be subject to the lien of a judgment against him where the trust is merely a dry or passive one;[30] but this is not the case where the property is held under an active trust,[31] although the creditor may obtain relief in equity, on a bill to subject the beneficiary's interest to the satisfaction of his judgment.[32]

5. Interests of Parties to Executory Contract of Sale — a. Vendor's Legal Title. A judgment recovered against a vendor of land, after the execution of a contract for its sale, but before the making and delivery of a deed, is a lien upon the legal title remaining in him and binds the land to the extent of the unpaid purchase-money.[33] But the equitable right of the vendee to require a conveyance on fulfilling his part of the contract is not cut out or set aside by the attach-to the cancellation will not be enforced against the premises, where the cancellation was made in good faith. Blaney v. Hanks, 14 Iowa 400.

Termination of trust.— Where a trust provides for the collection of income up to a certain time, and then for the division of the property among the beneficiaries, the trustee having no power to sell the trust property, judgments which have been recovered against the beneficiaries will become liens on their interests in the property upon the arrival of the time of division. In determining the sum necessary to be paid by the vendee to the execution purchaser, in order to obtain a conveyance of the land, the vendee cannot be credited with a payment made to the vendor after the execution sale but before the delivery of the sheriff's deed. Moyer v. Hinman, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 137 [modified in 13 N. Y. 180]. But the mere docketing of the judgment is not notice of the lien to the purchaser in possession, and payments subsequently made by him to the judgment debtor, pursuant to the contract, without actual notice of the judgment are valid as against its lien on the land. Moyer v. Hinman, 13 N. Y. 180; Parks v.

ing of the judgment lien.[34] And if the whole of the purchase-money has been paid before the docketing of the judgment, there remains nothing but a naked legal title in the vendor, to which the lien does not attach.[35] On the other hand, although none of the purchase-money has been paid, the contract of sale will give the vendee an equitable interest in the estate which is not to be displaced by a subsequent judgment lien against the vendor.[36] In some states, however, a contract for the sale of lands will not prevail against a subsequent judgment lien unless recorded,[37] although actual possession of the land, on the part of the vendee under a valid contract, will be sufficient to secure his equitable rights as against the lien of the judgment.[38]

b. Vendee's Equitable Title. In pursuance of the common-law rule that equitable estates are not subject to the lien of judgments,[39] it is held in several states that the lien of a judgment cannot attach to an interest in land held by the debtor under a contract for its purchase, where no deed has been made, although part of the purchase-money may have been paid, but the only remedy of the judgment creditor is in equity.[40] In others, however, the land will be bound by

Some of the earlier cases held that the lien of the judgment would attach upon the vendor's title, in this condition of affairs, although it could convey no beneficial interest to an execution purchaser, as he would be obliged to convey the legal title to the vendee on demand or at the stipulated time. But if the note given for such balance of the price is transferred before maturity to a bona fide holder for value without notice, and is duly paid in his hands, no injunction preventing either of these acts being done, then the vendor no longer has any interest in the property and the lien is gone. Confession of judgment by part of firm.— While a judgment against a firm may be entered on service on and confession by one partner only, yet it will be a lien only on the joint property of defendants and the individual property of defendant served. Matter of Lowenstein, 7 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 100; Kidd v. Brown, 2 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 20. The owner of a senior judgment confessed by two members of a firm of three is entitled to two thirds of a surplus after a sale of mortgaged property owned by the firm, while the owner of a junior judgment against all the members of the firm is entitled to one third thereof. Where a judgment against a firm does not show the names of the individual partners, it cannot be charged as a lien upon the land of a decedent who is alleged to have been a member of the firm. Fox's Appeal, 8 Pa. Cas. 393, 11 Atl. 228.

Competition with individual creditors.— Individual creditors of a partner are not entitled to priority of payment out of proceeds of his individual real estate, as against a judgment creditor of the firm who, by docketing his judgment, has acquired a prior lien

the firm's real estate, to the extent of his interest therein, although subordinate to the prior equities of firm creditors.[49]

7. Property Previously Transferred. A judgment does not attach as a lien upon land which before its rendition had been sold or aliened by the owner in good faith,[50] or given away by him under a valid donation,[51] or sold at judicial sale,[52] or which had passed under an assignment for the benefit of his creditors.[53]

8. Property Fraudulently Conveyed. In those jurisdictions where a conveyance in fraud of creditors is regarded as void, an after-acquired judgment against the vendor is usually held to attach as a lien upon the property conveyed. In those jurisdictions where the conveyance is merely voidable a contrary rule prevails.[54]

9. After-Acquired Property. It is generally held that the lien of a judgment attaches, not only to real estate owned by the debtor at the time of the rendition of the judgment, but also to all that he may subsequently acquire, so long as the judgment remains active and unsatisfied,[55] although in a few states it is held that

E. Priorities — 1. In General — a. Lien Subject to Prior Rights and Equities. The attaching of a judgment lien upon land does not disturb existing equities, interests, or liens; it takes rank subordinate and inferior to conveyances, mortgages, and other liens, whether legal or equitable, previously made or procured without fraud.[57] Where the lien of a judgment attaches to land, and the owner afterward marries, the lien is not thereby divested or postponed to the wife's inchoate right of dower;[58] aliter if the lien attaches subsequent to the marriage.[59]

b. Priority of Government Claims. The statutory priority in favor of claims of the United States in cases of bankruptcy or insolvency[60] does not cause such claims to override judgment liens attaching to the debtor's property before the insolvency or before the institution of bankruptcy proceedings.[61] And ordinary debts due to a state government have no priority over judgment liens previously attaching,[62] although it is otherwise as to the liens of unpaid taxes, which may be made paramount to all other liens and charges of every sort, and which in that case will cut out the lien of a judgment recovered before the levy or assessment of the taxes.[63]

2. Between Judgments — a. In General. In the absence of countervailing equities or the establishment of a different rule by statute, the liens of different judgments affecting the same land take rank and priority according to the dates when they were respectively entered or docketed, the elder being first entitled to satisfaction.[64] And in fixing this priority the relative position of the judgments

In Illinois, where the statute provides that "there shall be no priority of the lien of one judgment over that of another rendered at the same term of court or on the same day in vacation," it is held that executions on judgments confessed on different days in vacation are entitled to priorities. Coe v. Hallam, 173 Ill. 461, 50 N. E. 1072.

A judgment which has become dormant will be postponed to a junior judgment which is not dormant. Colson v. Kennedy, 88 Ga. 174, 14 S. E. 119.

As between a judgment at law and a decree in equity, where the law requires both to be docketed or enrolled, the same rule of

on the docket, although raising a presumption as to their seniority, is not controlling.[65] The lien of a judgment being dependent upon the condition of the record at the time of its entry, it cannot be affected by a subsequent revival of an earlier judgment, giving the holder thereof rights which did not exist at the time of the entry of the junior judgment.[66]

b. Judgments Entered on Same Day. Where two or more judgments are entered against the same debtor on the same day, it is held in some states that inquiry may be made into the fractional parts of the day, so as to give priority to the judgment first actually entered,[67] and in others that the creditor who first takes out execution will have a preference;[68] but generally the doctrine is that there can be no priority between judgments in this condition, but all must share pro rata in the proceeds of the property affected.[69]

c. Judgment For Purchase-Money. A judgment recovered or confessed for the purchase-money of land has no priority over older judgments which attached as liens on the same land at the time of its transfer to the debtor,[70] unless the execution and delivery of the deed for the land and the giving of a judgment for the purchase-money were inseparably connected as parts of the same continuous transaction.[71] priority obtains. McKee v. Gayle, 46 Miss. 676; Briggs v. Planters' Bank, Freem. (Miss.) 574.

Partnership and individual debts.— A judgment for a firm debt has no priority over a judgment previously obtained against the several members of the firm on their individual liabilities. Davis v. Delaware, etc., Canal Co., 109 N. Y. 47, 15 N. E. 873, 4 Am. St. Rep. 418. And conversely the lien of a judgment for an individual debt is not superior to the lien of a prior judgment against the debtor on a partnership debt. As against decree for alimony.— The lien of a judgment rendered pending a petition for divorce, and before the rendition of a decree for alimony, is superior to that of the decree, where the petition does not allege a claim to any specific land, or pray for alimony by way of annuity upon the husband's real estate generally. 71. Snyder's Appeal, 91 Pa. St. 477.

d. Judgment For Future Advances. Advances made on the faith of an antecedent judgment will have priority over creditors whose liens attached thereafter;[72] and some decisions hold that the lien of a judgment given to secure advances to be made will be good against intervening liens attaching after the judgment but before the advances.[73] But the generally accepted doctrine is that such a judgment will be postponed to a subsequent bona fide lien, except for such advances as had been made before the attaching of the junior lien,[74] at least where it was optional with the creditor to make the advances or not, and he was not absolutely bound to do so.[75]

e. Priority by Superior Diligence. Where several judgments are of equal rank or date, a priority is gained by that creditor who exercises superior activity and diligence, as where one is the first to discover and avoid a fraudulent conveyance of property by the common debtor,[76] or to levy an attachment on the property.[77]

f. Priority by Prior Levy. As between senior and junior judgments binding the same land, it is usually immaterial in what order executions may be issued, no priority accruing to the junior judgment merely because an execution thereon is first issued.[78] But priority for a junior judgment may thus be gained where the land affected was not subject to the lien of either judgment,[79] or where the statutes are so framed that if a judgment creditor allows more than a year to elapse without taking out execution on his judgment its lien will become inferior to the liens of other judgments which have been kept alive,[80] or where the two judgments entered the same day have no priority but only equality of lien, until execution issues on one of them.[81]

g. Order of Priority on After-Acquired Lands. If several judgments are entered against the same debtor at different times, and he afterward acquires the legal title to real estate, the liens of the several judgments attach together upon the property at the same instant; all stand upon the same footing, and the oldest judgment has no priority.[82]

3. Between Judgments and Other Liens or Claims — a. In General. The lien of a judgment, having once attached to specific property, is superior to all claims against it or liens upon it which accrued or were created after the rendition or docketing of the judgment,[83] unless the judgment lien is allowed to expire by lapse of time without enforcement, in which case subsequent liens or encumbrances will succeed, in their order, to its priority, and will take precedence of the judgment lien afterward renewed or revived.[84] On the other hand the judgment is subordinate to all valid liens and claims existing on the property at the time of its rendition, of which the judgment creditor has notice, actual or constructive.[85]

b. Equitable Liens. The lien of a judgment is subject to all the equities which were held against the land in the hands of the judgment debtor at the time the judgment was rendered, and these will be protected by courts of equity as against the judgment lien, so that the latter may be confined to the interest remaining in the debtor after due recognition of the outstanding equities in their proper order.[86] And it is even held that judgment creditors are not protected against trusts of which they have no notice, or allowed in equity to hold against the cestui que trust.[87]

docketed, filed, registered, or otherwise made a matter of public record, as the local statute may provide.[93]

b. Judgment For Purchase-Money. A judgment given or confessed for the purchase-money of land will have priority of lien on the land over mortgages or other encumbrances where the giving of the judgment and the execution and delivery of the deed for the land were simultaneous or parts of the same continuous transaction, but not otherwise.[94]

c. Contemporaneous Judgment and Conveyance. Where a conveyance and a judgment against the grantor are entered on the same day, some of the cases hold that the lien of the judgment will begin from the earliest hour of that day, and so override the conveyance;[95] but the generally accepted doctrine is that fractions of the day may be inquired into, and priority of right will be determined by actual priority in time.[96] The latter rule is also generally applied as between a judgment and a mortgage entered on the same day,[97] although in a few cases they are held to have equality of lien and to be entitled to share pro rata in the proceeds of the property.[98]

What is sufficient notice.— Whatever is sufficient to charge a purchaser with notice is sufficient to charge a judgment creditor. H. C. Tack Co. v. Ayers, 56 N. J. Eq. 56, 38 Atl. 194. But not the mere fact that the land was inclosed and signs were posted stating that it was for sale and telling where to inquire. Clark v. Greene, 73 Minn. 467, 76 N. W. 263. And the mere statement of a debtor to his creditor, who is inquiring after the debtor's property with a view to compelling payment of his debt out of it, that his property or any particular part of it is mortgaged for all it is worth, is not notice of the existence of any particular mortgage, so as to give an unrecorded mortgage precedence over a judgment subsequently obtained. Condit v. Wilson, 36 N. J. Eq. 370. And the recording of a deed in one town, conveying land in such town, is of itself no notice of the conveyance, by the same deed, of lands lying in another town, in which such deed is not recorded. Intervening mortgage.— While a mortgage imperfectly recorded is ineffective as a lien against subsequent judgment creditors, yet if there be a second mortgage, between the first and the judgments in point of time, to which the proceeds of the mortgaged premises when sold would be paid, and this mortgagee has actual notice of the first mortgage when he takes his own, the first mortgage is good as to him, and therefore is entitled to have the money appropriated to it. attaches, and his rights are not affected by the fact that he acquires knowledge of the prior deed or mortgage at the time he sells under an execution.[8]

g. Defects in Conveyance or Record. A subsequent judgment lien will take precedence of a prior deed or mortgage which was so fatally defective as to be inoperative as a conveyance,[9] or where the grantee or mortgagee had no knowledge of the instrument or its delivery until after the judgment, although he may then have assented to it.[10] Notice to a subsequent judgment creditor is not imparted by an illegal, unsuccessful, or incomplete attempt to record a prior deed or mortgage.[11]

5. Postponement of Lien — a. In General. Mere failure of the holder of a senior judgment to take active measures for enforcing his security within the time allowed him for that purpose will not cause a postponement of his lien to that of a junior judgment;[12] but such postponement will result from anything which invalidates or destroys his judgment,[13] or amounts to a satisfaction of it,[14] or from conduct on his part which amounts to fraud upon the rights or interests of junior lienors,[15] or from his voluntary release of his lien or agreement to postpone

An injunction awarded at the instance of a stranger to prevent the collection of a judgment by sale of the property levied on does not impair the lien of the judgment; upon dissolution of the injunction the judgment will be entitled to priority as against judgments whose liens attached during the injunction. Bartlett v. Doe, 6 Ala. 305, 41 Am. Dec. 52.

Where a mortgage given to secure valid notes is set aside because of invalidity in the mortgage, this will not invalidate or affect the priority of judgments taken on the notes secured. Lippincott v. Shaw Carriage Co., 25 Fed. 577.

14. See Trapnall v. Richardson, 13 Ark. 543, 58 Am. Dec. 338; Moseby's Appeal, 3 Pa. Cas. 108, 8 Atl. 165.

What constitutes a satisfaction see infra, XIX.

Where a sale on an execution is set aside for irregularity, and the land is ordered to be resold for the benefit of the purchaser, the lien of the original judgment continues in force as against the lien of any intervening judgment. McHany v. Schenck, 88 Ill. 357.

Merger by recovery of judgment on a judgment.— It has been held that a judgment creditor who prosecutes to judgment a suit on his judgment loses his lien under such prior judgment, and is postponed to all intervening encumbrances; but as to this there is a conflict of opinion. See infra, XIX, D, 1, b.

15. See Green v. Ingram, 16 Ga. 164. Where a judgment note was filed of record and a confession of judgment entered thereon, and subsequently the parties to the note in the presence of the prothonotary changed the terms thereof on the record, it was held that although this was an improper tampering with the record it would not, in the ab-

it.[16] Further, in those states where a judgment in order that its lien may continue must be periodically revived, the lien of a judgment not revived within the statutory time will be superseded by the lien of younger judgments in full original life or which have been duly revived.[17]

b. Stay of Execution. An extension of time for payment, or a stay of execution on a judgment, whether by agreement of parties, order of court, or injunction, for any time short of the statutory period of limitations, will not have the effect of postponing the lien of the judgment to other and junior judgment liens.[18] But it is said that a mortgage for a valuable consideration, made pending a stay of execution by order of plaintiff, will take precedence of the judgment.[19]

c. Effect of Appeal. An appeal from a judgment does not discharge its lien, although it may stay its enforcement; hence it does not postpone the judgment to mortgages, judgments, or other liens attaching while the appeal is pending.[20]

Intervening mortgage.— Where there is a judgment not levied within the year, a junior judgment levied within the year, thus acquiring a priority as against the senior judgment, and an intervening mortgage executed and recorded prior to the rendition of the second judgment, the senior judgment should be first paid, next the mortgage, and the junior judgment postponed to both. Fitch v. Mendenhall, 17 Ohio 578; Holliday v. Franklin Bank, 16 Ohio 533; Brazee v. Lancaster Bank, 14 Ohio 318.

Rule in New Jersey.— The statutes provides that judgments shall take precedence in the order in which executions shall be taken out and levied. Hence, although a judgment obtained before a mortgage is given is a prior lien, although no levy is made, yet where levy and sale have been made on a judgment subsequent to the mortgage the lien of the prior judgment is destroyed. Lambertville Nat. Bank v. Boss, (Ch. 1888) 13 Atl. 18; Clement v. Kaighn, 15 N. J. Eq. 47. And where a senior judgment creditor issues execution, but directs the sheriff to return it without levy, in order to found supplemental proceedings on it to reach assets not leviable, his judgment becomes junior not only to subsequent judgments under which executions are levied, but also to an intervening mortgage. d. Erroneous Satisfaction or Vacation of Judgment. A judgment creditor who enters satisfaction of his judgment, or permits it to be done, although without actual satisfaction, authorizes others to consider the property as unencumbered, and will be postponed to their rights or liens.[21] And if he afterward procures the cancellation of the entry of satisfaction, although this will restore his judgment to full activity, it will not restore its priority of lien as against purchasers or encumbrancers whose rights attached after the entry of satisfaction and before its cancellation,[22] although it seems that the priority of the senior judgment may thus be regained as against junior judgment creditors whose judgments were recovered prior to the entry of satisfaction, and who were not in any way misled by such entry.[23]

e. Effect of Modification of Judgment. A modification of a judgment which leaves it in full force and only makes some change in its terms or conditions does not generally impair its rank or priority as a lien.[24]

6. Proceedings For Determination of Priority. Conflicting claims to priority as between judgments, mortgages, and other liens may be determined on a bill in equity for the purpose,[25] or an action by one claimant against another to fix their relative rights,[26] or a suit to quiet title as against an adverse claimant,[27] or a rule to show cause why the alleged conflicting lien should not be stricken off,[28] or an issue framed between judgment creditors to test the validity and rank of their respective judgments,[29] or in proceedings to distribute the funds raised by execution sale of the property affected.[30] So a judgment creditor, if made defendant to a mort-

See Bronner v. Loomis, 17 Hun 439. Where such an order has been made, and is afterward vacated by an order which purports to restore the lien nunc pro tunc, this does not restore it as against a creditor whose judgment was docketed in the interval between the two orders, and who was not a party to the original action, or to the proceeding vacating the order. F. Transfer of Property Subject to Lien — 1. In General. Where the lien of a judgment has once attached to land, it cannot be divested by any voluntary alienation of the property by the owner; but a purchaser from the judgment debtor who has actual or constructive notice of the judgment lien will take the estate charged therewith,[33] to the extent of the amount of the judgment as a purchaser at a sheriff's sale, strike off a judgment, so as to make a mortgage otherwise divested a fixed lien; for if the judgment was no lien, the mortgage was not affected, and if the judgment was only voidable, it could not be attacked collaterally. Land fraudulently conveyed.— Where a creditor, in fraud of whom property has been conveyed, subsequently obtains judgment, issues execution, and sells the property so conveyed, only the title of the fraudulent grantee is sold, and, liens prior to such conveyance not being affected by it, the holders thereof can follow the land into whosesoever hands it may come. In Georgia a statute (Civ. Code, § 5355) provides that when any person has purchased real property, in good faith and for a valuable consideration, and has been in possession of the same for four years, it shall be discharged from the lien of any judgment against his grantor. See Hale v. Robertson, 100 Ga. 168, 27 S. E. 937; Blalock v. Denham, 85 Ga. 646, 11 S. E. 1038.

recorded at the time of his purchase,[34] and subject to any other judgment liens then existing on it,[35] unless the judgment creditor will waive or release his lien;[36] and the rule is the same in case of an alienation by way of mortgage,[37] or by a deed absolute in form but intended as a security,[38] although where a sale of the debtor's property is effected by order of court it is competent to direct that it shall be sold free of encumbrances, the liens being then transferred to the fund.[39] Conversely, it is not in the power of the judgment debtor to defeat or displace the judgment lien by conveying or mortgaging the land, or repudiating the title or attorning to a third person.[40]

2. SUBJECTION OF VENDOR'S REMAINING PROPERTY. Where part of the lands subject to the lien of a judgment have been sold, equity will require the judgment creditor seeking to enforce his lien to proceed first against that portion remaining unsold,[41] provided this can be done without injustice to him and without involving

Purchaser's means of redress.— Most of the cases hold that the purchaser, in the case stated in the text, must work out his rights through a court of equity; but in one case it was held that if a judgment creditor knew of the sale of the land to such purchaser before he levied his execution on it he would be bound to compensate the purchaser in damages. Clowes v. Dickenson, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 403.

After-acquired lands.— Where a judgment is a lien both on land conveyed by the judgment debtor after its rendition to a third person, and also on land acquired by the debtor after the judgment, the execution

3. ESTATES SUCCESSIVELY CONVEYED. Where lands subject to the lien of a judgment have been sold or encumbered by the owner at different times to different purchasers, there is no contribution among the successive purchasers, but the various tracts are liable to the satisfaction of the judgment in the inverse order of their alienation or encumbrance, the land last sold being first chargeable,[45] unless the judgment creditor breaks the order of liability by a voluntary release of one or more of the tracts.[46]

Day of commencement of lien.— The statute of limitations begins to run on a judgment by default from the entry of the judgment, and not from the entry of the default. Edwards v. Hellings, 103 Cal. 204, 37 Pac. 218.

Day of expiration of lien.— Where the statute limits the lien of judgments to ten years, a sale may be made under the judgment on the lien of judgments of the federal courts sitting within the state,[48] but not to a decree establishing a specific lien on particular property or ordering its sale,[49] or to a judgment or decree for the foreclosure of a mortgage,[50] or, it seems, to a judgment in favor of the state, the lien of which is never lost by lapse of time.[51] A statute abridging the time for the duration of judgment liens may constitutionally apply to existing judgments, if a reasonable time is accorded to the holders of such judgments in which to enforce their liens;[52] but not where the whole of the new period of limitation would have run, as to an existing judgment, before the passage of the act, so that its lien would instantly be cut off.[53]

b. As Against Judgment Debtor. Although the lien of a judgment may have expired, as against subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers, by the lapse of the statutory period, it will still continue, the judgment remaining unsatisfied, against the judgment debtor himself.[54]

c. As Against Junior Judgments. Where the period of limitations has run against the lien of a judgment, without its revival, it gives way to junior judgments, which thereupon succeed, in their order, to its priority.[55]

d. As Against Bona Fide Purchasers. Under the same circumstances the judgment ceases to be a lien on land which has been transferred to a purchaser in good faith and for value, or on which subsequent encumbrances have been the tenth anniversary of the day on which it was rendered, and, if the ten years expire on a Sunday, then on the following day. Spencer v. Haug, 45 Minn. 231, 47 N. W. 794. But see Alderman v. Phelps, 15 Mass. 225, holding that the lien of the judgment will not in the case supposed be extended to the following Monday. But the issue and levy of an execution within the ten years will not be effectual to continue the lien of the judgment, if the sale does not take place until the ten years have expired. See infra, XV, G, 4. And where the statute makes the judgment lien continue for ten years, and provides for an action to enforce the lien on real estate, if the action is begun within the ten years, but not reached for trial until after their expiration, the lien is lost. Where real estate sold on execution under a judgment which is in full force realizes enough to pay that judgment in full and leave a surplus, the balance should be paid to the owner of a judgment which, as against the debtor, remains unsatisfied, although its lien has expired by lapse of time, rather than returned to the debtor. created;[56] and if the judgment was a lien on the land at the time of its alienation or encumbrance, but is not enforced or revived in due time, the running of the period of limitation will inure to the benefit of the purchaser or encumbrancer.[57] It is immaterial that the purchase was made or the encumbrance accepted with full knowledge that the judgment remained unpaid.[58] But this rule is not for the benefit of a grantee who gave no valuable consideration,[59] or who colluded with the debtor to deprive the judgment creditor of his lien, or took with a fraudulent intention as toward such creditor.[60]

2. LIEN OF TRANSFERRED JUDGMENT. Where a judgment is transferred from an inferior to a superior court for purposes of lien, or a transcript of it filed in another county, it is the rule in some states that the statute of limitations begins to run against the lien of the judgment from the date of such transfer or filing,[61] but in others from the date of its original rendition, nothing being added to its duration by the transfer.[62]

4. NECESSITY AND EFFECT OF ISSUE AND LEVY OF EXECUTION. In New York the statutes give to docketed judgments a lien on land for ten years, and provide that a judgment lien, if existing at the death of the judgment debtor, shall "continue for three years and six months thereafter, notwithstanding the previous expiration of ten years from the filing of the judgment roll." This is not an abridgment of the life of the lien, and it will not be limited to three years and a half from the debtor's death, if the original ten years would not expire within that time. Matter of Holmes, 59 Hun 369, 13 N. Y. Suppl. 100 [affirmed in 131 N. Y. 80, 29 N. E. 1003]. But when the time has fully run, the judgment ceases to be a lien or charge on the real estate, although it may still be enforced against the heirs or devisees. Platt v. Platt, 105 N. Y. 488, 12 N. In Pennsylvania the act of June 18, 1895 (Pamphl. Laws 197), provides that judgments shall continue to bind the realty of a decedent for five years after his death, and shall then cease to be a lien as against a bona fide purchaser, mortgagee, or other judgment creditor of such decedent or of his heirs or devisees, unless duly revived. But this does not limit the lien of the judgment as to the heirs and devisees of the decedent, but on the contrary the lien continues, as against them, without revivals, until presumption of payment arises from lapse of time, that is, for twenty years. A decree in equity which merely prescribes the performance of a duty is not within either the letter or the spirit of these statutes. Butler v. James, 33 Ga. 148.

An officer's indorsement on the writ that he had received directions from plaintiff's attorney to collect it is not sufficient to keep the judgment alive. Hanks v. Pearce, 96 Ga. 159, 22 S. E. 676. Nor can that object be accomplished by making upon the execution a nunc pro tunc entry of a levy alleged to have been made before the judgment became dormant. Lewis v. Smith, 99 Ga. 603, 27 S. E. 162.

Levy ineffectual.— The purpose of the statute is met by the issue and levy of an execution, although it proves ineffectual for want of bidders at the sale. Lamprey v. Davidson, 16 Minn. 480.

Levy on personalty.— The levy of an execution on personalty, with a sale thereunder, and the application pro tanto of the proceeds in payment of the judgment, will suffice to preserve its lien on realty as to the unpaid balance. Davidson v. Gaston, 16 Minn. 230. But compare Montgomery Branch Bank v. Curry, 13 Ala. 304.

Partial levy.— It is not necessary, in order

tion but also its enforcement, the lien is not preserved by a levy of execution within the limited time, where the sale does not take place until after its expiration.[69] These laws are not merely statutes of limitation; hence a judgment lien is not saved by the mere fact that partial payments are made and receipted for within the limited time,[70] nor by the payment of the costs of the action to the clerk.[71] On the other hand the creditor may take all the time allowed him, and the lien of a judgment which has not become dormant is not lost or impaired by laches in issuing execution.[72] And if the statute requires no more than the issue of an execution, it is satisfied by that act, although the sole purpose of taking out the writ was to preserve the lien, and there was no expectation of collecting the money.[73] Where a judgment has become dormant by the laws of the state where it was rendered, and has not been revived or renewed, it cannot be fastened as a lien upon lands of the judgment debtor in another state.[74]

5. Continuance by Revival of Judgment. In several states while the lien of a judgment is limited to a certain number of years, there are additional provisions for the revival or renewal of the judgment for a like period by appropriate proceedings for that purpose.[75] Where such action is taken before the expiration of the statutory period, the lien of the judgment is continuous from the date of its rendition or entry, and its priority, relative to other liens, is preserved;[76] but a to preserve the lien of the judgment by a levy, that the levy should have been for the full amount due; execution levied for a part may suffice. Lamprey v. Davidson, 16 Minn. 480; Davidson v. Gaston, 16 Minn. 230.

Execution lost.— If an execution is shown to have been issued and actually delivered to the sheriff in due time, the lien of the judgment is preserved, although the execution was lost or destroyed, and so never returned. Breed v. Gorham, 108 Ill. 81; Renick v. Ludington, 20 W. Va. 511.

Where a scire facias issues to revive a judgment within five years from the entry thereof, the lien continues for five years from the issue of the scire facias, and plaintiff has five years in which to obtain his judgment of revival. Lichty v. Hochstetler, 91 Pa. St. 444; Silverthorn v. Townsend, 37 Pa. St. 263. But an amicable scire facias will not avail to continue the lien as against a terre-tenant whose deed is on record and who is not made a party. Suter v. Findlay, 19 Pa. Co. Ct. 10. A substantial variance between the original judgment and the scire facias to revive will break the continuity of the lien. Zeiders' Appeal, 137 Pa. St. 457, 20 Atl. 805. But a judgment need not be revived to maintain its lien on money in the hands of the sheriff. Com. v. Gleim, 3 Penr. & W. 417.

revival of the judgment after it has once become dormant, or after its lien has expired by lapse of time, will not relate back, but the lien will then date only from the judgment or order of revival, and will be subordinated to intervening purchases or encumbrances.[77]

6. Extension of Lien by Action or Suit. In some states the commencement of a suit at law or in equity to enforce the judgment within the statutory period will extend or continue its lien;[78] but generally, if the statute fixes a definite limitation to the lien of a judgment, it is not saved or extended by the bringing of a creditor's bill or other suit, which remains undetermined when the statutory period expires.[79]

7. Extension of Lien by Agreement of Parties. In a few cases it has been held that the lien of a judgment might be extended beyond the statutory period by a mutual agreement between the parties,[80] or by partial payments or a written acknowledgment of the judgment debt as a subsisting obligation.[81] And it is said that, as between the parties to it, a judgment may be kept alive, although once paid, for the purpose of securing another loan, although no such arrangement could be permitted in prejudice of the rights of subsequent encumbrancers.[82]

H. Suspension of Lien — 1. In General. The lien of a judgment may under certain circumstances be permanently suspended, or entirely lost, by the negligence or delay of the creditor in seeking to enforce it,[83] or by orders of the court for the sale of the property affected, to be free from encumbrances,[84] or it may be temporarily suspended, in such sense as to bar the running of the statute against it, by circumstances preventing its enforcement in the ordinary way, and not within the control of the creditor.[85]

2. Effect of Appeal. It is generally held that the taking of an appeal from a judgment does not discharge its lien, but merely suspends it, so that the statute does not begin to run against it until final action in the appellate court;[86] but in some states the lien is not extended beyond the statutory period, although execution may be prevented during a part or even the whole of the time by an appeal.[87] If the judgment is vacated or reversed on appeal, this destroys the lien previously acquired;[88] and it has been held that if a new judgment is rendered, it merges the original judgment, and the lien dates only from such new judgment;[89] but a simple judgment of affirmance does not disturb the lien of the judgment from the time of its entry below,[90] and if a judgment is reversed in part and affirmed

Negligence of assignee for creditors.— Liens subsisting on real estate assigned for the benefit of creditors are not lost by the delay of the assignee in making sale, although not revived within five years after their entry, but are entitled as they stood at the time of the assignment. Attempt to defraud other creditors.— A judgment creditor who advises the debtor to make a fraudulent conveyance in order to cheat another creditor does not thereby lose the lien of his judgment. Fidler v. John, 178 Pa. St. 112, 35 Atl. 976.

as to the residue, the partial reversal will not affect the lien of so much of the judgment as remains unreversed.[91]

3. Injunction Against Judgment. A perpetual injunction against the collection of a judgment will destroy its lien,[92] but a temporary injunction merely suspends the lien until its dissolution.[93] Whether the time covered by such an injunction is to be excluded from the period limited by law for the duration of judgment liens depends on the local statutes. In some states it is excepted from such period,[94] but in others the lien is lost if the statutory time expires while the injunction is in force.[95]

4. Stay of Execution. It is generally held that a stay of execution or of further proceedings on a judgment suspends the running of the statutes of limitations against it, whether the stay is by agreement of the parties or by order of court.[96]

5. Receivership. The lien of a judgment is not lost or affected by the appointment of a receiver for the judgment debtor and his taking possession of the property affected, the creditor being still at liberty to issue and levy his execution and sell thereunder, provided he first obtains leave of the court appointing the receiver.[97] Nor does the fact of the receivership continue the lien of the judgment beyond the statutory period, and if that period expires during the receivership, without any application by the creditor for leave to levy his execution, he loses his lien by his own neglect.[98]

I. Release or Discharge of Lien[99] — 1. In General. There are various ways in which the lien of a judgment on land may be discharged. It may be discharged by the voluntary act of the creditor in executing a release thereof,[1] or even by a parol release,[2] by the operation of a statute divesting the lien or limiting its continuance,[3] by the termination of the estate subject to the lien, as in the case of an estate for life or a leasehold interest,[4] by a sale of the property free of encumbrances under orders of the court,[5] by a foreclosure of the lien in statutory proceedings for that purpose,[6] or generally, by anything which operates as a satisfaction of the debt or judgment or a renunciation of the privileges secured by the lien.[7] But the lien is not destroyed by the execution of a forthcoming bond, or a bond to try the right of property,[8] or by the withdrawal from the records of the certificate of the judgment upon which the lien was founded,[9] or by any transfer of the property other than a sale under order of the court.[10]

2. WAIVER AND ESTOPPEL. A judgment creditor may waive or lose the benefit of his lien by failing to claim it when it is incumbent on him to do so,[11] by failing to comply with the conditions of the judgment,[12] or by such conduct or representations to purchasers or subsequent encumbrancers as induce the belief that he has no claim upon the land, or has abandoned his claim, so as to make it inequitable that he should thereafter set up his lien in prejudice of their rights.[13] But this result does not follow from an unsuccessful attempt to obtain payment from another fund,[14] or from the fact that the creditor brings suit in equity to avoid a fraudulent transfer of the debtor's lands,[15] or causes his judgment to be docketed in another county.[16]

3. RELEASE OF OTHER PROPERTY. As between the debtor and creditor a release by the latter of part of the lands bound by the judgment will not prevent its enforcement against the rest.[17] But where portions of the land have been sold to different purchasers, or encumbered with subsequent mortgages, the creditor cannot release his lien upon the lands primarily liable, or release or surrender other securities primarily liable, without releasing at the same time the lands in the hands of such purchasers or encumbrancers, at least in proportion to the value of the portion first liable.[18] So also where he levies on sufficient personal property, but abandons the levy, fails to make the money, or applies it to other debts, it will release the judgment lien as to junior lienors or purchasers.[19]

4. PAYMENT OR SATISFACTION OF JUDGMENT. The lien of a judgment is discharged by payment of the amount due under it,[20] or by an entry of satisfaction on the record,[21] although not by a mere unaccepted tender;[22] and once paid, the judgment lien cannot be restored or continued by any mere agreement of the parties,[23] although equity may keep it alive for the benefit of a surety who has made the payment.[24]

5. Arrest on Capias. The arrest of a judgment debtor on capias ad satisfaciendum precludes the creditor from pursuing any other remedies against his lands or good , and therefore suspends the lien of the judgment on lands.[25] But it does not absolutely extinguish it; for if this process fails to produce satisfaction, under circumstances which permit the creditor to resort to other remedies, the lien of the judgment on lands may then be enforced, as against the judgment debtor himself,[26] although not as against the intervening rights of third persons.[27]

6. Judicial Sale of Property — a. In General. A sale of land under execution extinguishes the lien of the judgment on which the execution issued;[28] and a judicial sale under a senior judgment cancels the lien of a junior judgment, which is thereafter transferred to the surplus proceeds of sale,[29] or if there be no surplus, the junior judgment creditor must save his debt by redeeming from the sale.[30] So also a sale ordered in partition proceedings will generally clear the land from the liens of judgments previously attaching to the undivided interests of the tenants in common.[31]

b. Under Junior Judgment. The effect of a sale under a junior judgment upon the lien of a senior judgment is fully discussed elsewhere in this work.[32]

c. Acquisition of Title by Judgment Creditor. Since a judgment is a general lien upon all the debtor's real estate, it does not merge when the judgment creditor acquires title to a particular portion of such lands, but may in ordinary cases be enforced against the remaining lands.[33]

7. Opening, Canceling, or Vacating Judgment. Opening a default judgment merely to let defendant in to a defense does not destroy its lien,[34] and where it is set aside for irregularity or error the court may order the lien retained for such amount as plaintiff may ultimately recover, or order the judgment to stand as security.[35] But the lien is extinguished where the judgment is vacated abso-

8. Remedies of Creditor After Termination of Lien. After the lien of a judgment has expired at law, it cannot be enforced in equity,[39] or made the basis of a creditor's bill or a bill to subject property;[40] nor can the lien be revived or continued by the mere act of issuing an execution.[41] But the judgment continues a valid claim against the debtor,[42] and although it has no lien, it may be filed as a claim against his estate after his death,[43] or collected by means of an execution against property the title to which remains in the judgment debtor;[44] and it will entitle the creditor to redeem from a sale under a junior judgment,[45] or even according to one authority to take the money from the junior judgment creditor.[46]

It is binding only upon the parties appearing to be such by the record and those claiming by them. A judgment in rem is founded on a proceeding instituted, not against the person, as such, but against or upon the thing or subject matter itself, whose state, or condition, is to be determined. It is a proceeding to determine the state, or condition, of the thing itself; and the judgment is a solemn declaration upon the status of the thing, and it ipso facto renders it what it declares it to be." And see a substantially similar definition in Lord v. Chadbourne, 42 Me. 429, 66 Am. Dec. 290. In Mankin v. Chandler, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 9,030, 2 Brock. 125, 127, it was said by Chief Justice Marshall: "Where the process is to be served on the thing itself, and where the mere possession of the thing itself, by the service of the process and making proclamation, authorizes the court to decide upon it without notice to any individual whatever, it is a proceeding in rem, to which all the world are parties." Judgments held not to be in rem.—The following forms of judgments, although possessing some of the characteristics of judgments in rem, or appearing at first sight to be within the definitions of such judgments, are held nevertheless to be judgments in personam: a judgment determining the title to land lying in another state. Dull v. Blackman, 169 U. S. 243, 18 S. Ct. 333, 42 L. ed. 733. A judgment setting aside a deed or other conveyance, e. g. on the ground of its being fraudulent as to creditors. Collins v. Hydorn, 135 N. Y. 320, 32 N. E. 69; Allred v. Smith, 135 N. C. 443, 47 S. E. 597, 65 L. R. A. 924. A decree declaring a certain strip of land to have been dedicated to the public. Lownsdale v. Portland, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,578, Deady 1, 1 Oreg. 381. A judgment enforcing by mandamus against a public officer the right of a purchaser of land at a tax-sale to receive a deed. Waters v. Spofford, 58 Tex. 115. A decree declaring plaintiff to be the owner of goods stated by it to be in the hands of one not a party to the suit. Jenkins v. Wilkerson, 76 Miss. 368, 24 So. 700. And see Newlin v. McAfee, 64 Ala. 357. A decree reforming a marriage settlement. Montgomery Branch Bank v. Hodges, 12 Ala. 118. A judgment in an action by a widow for the recovery of dower. Bartero v. Real Estate Sav. Bank, 10 Mo. App. 76. An order to wind up a company. In re Bowling, [1895] 1 Ch. 663, 64 L. J. Ch. 427, 72 L. T. Rep. N. S. 411, 43 Wkly. Rep. 417. A judgment quashing a bastardy order in affiliation proceedings on the ground that defendant is not the father of the child. Anderson v. Collinson, [1901] 2 K. B. 107, 70 L. J. K. B. 620, 84 L. T. Rep. N. S. 465, 49 Wkly. Rep. 623. Where a judgment is rendered in rem, and the property attached is exhausted, a service of summons to renew the execution, and an order of the court granting a renewal, do not make the judgment one in personam. Stanley v. Stanley, 35 S. C. 94, 14 S. E. 675.

A suit brought in equity against a married woman to recover a debt, although it does not seek a personal decree against her, but only to sell certain personal property, her separate estate, is just as much a suit inter partes, and not a proceeding in rem, as any other chancery suit brought by a plaintiff against a defendant in which plaintiff seeks no personal decree against defendant, but only to establish some claim to property, or interest in it, or to subject it to sale to pay some claim or lien. Bruff v. Thompson, 31 W. Va. 16, 6 S. E. 352.

A judgment on certiorari quashing a search warrant for intoxicating liquors issued under the Canada Temperance Act is not a judg- in rem in respect to the liquors seized, and is not res judicata as to the constable who executed the warrant if he was not a party to the certiorari proceedings and had no no-

the status in controversy, and it is not essential that there should be personal service of process or notice to any individual,[49] although there must be such published or constructive notice or proclamation as the law requires in the particular case, by which persons having interests to be affected are supposed to be informed of the proceeding.[50] Hence exclusive jurisdiction for the purposes of the particular suit is acquired by the court which first takes possession of the res.[51] But where the proceeding is not strictly and purely in rem, no valid judgment can be rendered against the rights of third persons unless they are served with process or appear and have an opportunity to be heard.[52]

C. Conclusiveness and Effect. A judgment in rem is conclusive and binding "upon all the world," that is, upon all persons who may have or claim any right or interest in the subject-matter of the litigation.[53] Like other judgments of competent courts it is not open to collateral impeachment;[54] it may be pleaded in bar of another action upon the same subject-matter if its effect is to merge a tice of them. Sleeth v. Hurlbert, 25 Can. Sup. Ct. 620, 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 197.

D. Judgments in Particular Classes of Proceedings — 1. Decrees in Admiralty. A decree rendered by a court of admiralty having jurisdiction of the res is conclusive upon all persons having interests to be affected, whether formally joined as parties or not,[58] but only as to matters actually in issue and adjudicated;[59] and a suit to enforce a maritime lien, being a proceeding in rem, is not barred by a personal judgment previously recovered for the same debt.[60]

2. Judgments in Prize Cases. A decree of a lawful prize court, having jurisdiction, condemning a vessel or other property as prize is binding and conclusive, as to the legality of the seizure and the grounds of condemnation, upon all persons whatsoever.[61]

3. Judgments in Collision Cases. Decrees in admiralty rendered in cases of collisions between vessels, ascertaining where the fault lay and awarding damages, stand upon the same footing with prize sentences in respect to their conclusiveness.[62]

4. Proceedings For Forfeiture Under Excise or Revenue Laws. A judgment rendered by a competent court, declaring the condemnation or forfeiture of goods seized for a breach of the excise or revenue laws, is in rem, and is binding and conclusive on all persons, so that the legality of the seizure or the ground of the action cannot be again contested in any proceeding.[63] And a sentence of acquittal is likewise conclusive on all persons as to the matters or points adjudged.[64]

E. Judgments Quasi In Rem — 1. Nature and Characteristics. Judgments dealing with the status, ownership, or liability of particular property, but which are intended to operate on these questions only as between the particular parties to the proceeding, and not to ascertain or cut off the rights or interests of all possible claimants, are so far in rem that jurisdiction may be acquired by the seizure or control of the court over the res, together with reasonable constructive notice to parties defendant, but, unlike judgments strictly in rem, they are binding only upon the parties joined in the action and thus notified, and have no effect upon the rights or liabilities of strangers.[65]

2. Judgments in Particular Classes of Proceedings. Judgments in the following classes of actions or proceedings are held to be quasi in rem, in so far as that jurisdiction may be acquired by constructive service of process, and that they are binding on all persons who were made parties to the proceeding, although not personally served, viz., actions founded on the attachment of real or personal property,[66] inquisitions of lunacy, the res being the status of the person under sured, in a proceeding in rem in the admiralty court for damage done to the other vessel by the collision, are sufficient evidence against the insurers, both of the collision and of the negligence of the master and crew of the vessel insured. Street v. Augusta Ins., etc., Co., 12 Rich. (S. C.) 13, 75 Am. Dec. 714. See Bailey v. Sundberg, 49 Fed. 583, 1 C. C. A. 387. But a default decree against a tug for damages caused to her tow by stranding is not conclusive of negligence on the part of the pilot in charge of the tug, so as to preclude him, after obtaining a decree against the tug for his wages, from denying such negligence in a contest between himself and the owner of the tow as to whose decree should be first paid out of the proceeds of the tug. Confiscation acts.— It has been held that proceedings under the confiscation acts of congress, while in the nature of proceedings in rem, operated only to divest the title of the party alleged to be the owner of the property seized, and judgment of confiscation and forfeiture did not divest or affect the title of third persons originating prior to the seizure or of the real owner not proceeded against. XVII. ASSIGNMENT OF JUDGMENTS.[82]

A. Requisites and Validity — 1. ASSIGNABILITY IN GENERAL. At common law a judgment is not assignable so as to vest the legal title in the assignee;[83] but such an assignment operates to vest an equitable interest in the assignee which the law will protect.[84] By statute in some jurisdictions a judgment may be assigned so as to pass the legal title.[85]

2. JUDGMENTS ASSIGNABLE — a. In General. In reference to the assignability of a judgment, the cause of action on which it was founded is not generally material. Thus a judgment recovered for a tort is assignable to the same extent as one based on a contract.[86] A decree in equity, although not assignable at law, may be transferred for a valuable consideration, and the transfer will then be supported by a court of chancery.[87] But a judgment once fully paid off and satisfied is not thereafter capable of assignment.[88]

Breach of promise.— A judgment recovered in a breach of promise suit can be as-

b. Future Judgments. In the case of actions ex contractu, a valid assignment may be made before the rendition of the judgment which will become operative as soon as the judgment is perfected.[89] But it is otherwise where the cause of action is in tort; there can be no assignment until the claim has been merged in an actual judgment;[90] and it makes no difference that a verdict has been given for plaintiff.[91]

3. Parties to Assignment. To effect a valid assignment of a judgment, the assignor must have a real and substantial interest in it.[92] But subject to this limitation any person who is the actual owner of the judgment, or has the right to enforce and collect it, may make an assignment of it.[93] So also any person, natural or artificial, may become the assignee of a judgment.[94] And while ordinarily the payment of a judgment by one primarily liable on it is an absolute satisfaction, Successor in interest.— Where a partnership, after recovering a judgment, becomes incorporated, an assignment of the judgment made in the name of the corporation is valid. Miller v. Cousins, (Iowa 1902) 90 N. W. 814.

Fraudulent creditor.— One who procures from a firm judgment notes in fraud of their creditors has no assignable interest in the judgments entered thereon. Taylor's Appeal, 45 Pa. St. 71.

94. A corporation may take an assignment of a judgment and sue thereon. Capital Lumbering Co. v. Learned, 36 Oreg. 544, 59 Pac. 454, 78 Am. St. Rep. 792. So also may a constable, where no execution on the judgment comes to his hands. Spaugh v. Huffer, 14 Ind. 305. And so may an attorney at law

although the judgment is assigned to him,[95] yet a surety on the debt for which the judgment was recovered may hold the judgment under an assignment, after paying its amount, if his intention not to satisfy the judgment was clear.[96]

4. Consideration. The rights of an assignee of a judgment are not governed by the price he paid for it, and are not affected by the fact that the consideration was less than the face of the judgment.[97]

5. Mode and Sufficiency of Assignment — a. In General. In the absence of statutory directions as to the mode of assigning a judgment, this may be accomplished by an indorsement upon the record,[98] or by a separate written instrument.[99] The instrument need not be under seal[1] and ordinarily it is not required to be recorded, the mere filing it among the papers in the case being sufficient.[2] It practising in the court where the judgment was rendered. Wilson v. Lemonde, 2 Quebec Pr. 156. And when one of several joint judgment defendants paid his aliquot part in cash, gave his note for the remainder, indorsed by a third person, not bound by the judgment, and procured the judgment to be assigned to a trustee for the benefit of such third person without his knowledge, it was held that such third person might affirm and enforce the assignment. The presumption in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is that the judgment was transferred for the full amount appearing to be due upon its face. Hawks v. Hinchcliff, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 492.

"Without recourse." — Making an assignment of a judgment without recourse does not imply any want of consideration or of good faith. Harper v. Keys, 54 Ind. 510.

In California, by force of statutes, an assignment of a judgment vests in the assignee all the assignor's title, regardless of whether any consideration is paid for the assignment or not, and the assignor has nothing which he can subsequently assign, unless there be left in him some equitable interest by reason of a trust existing in his favor. Substituting lost assignment.— An assignment by S to R of a judgment, under an agreement between them and L, made for the purpose of transferring the interest which L had in the judgment under a written assignment to him by S, which was lost, is effectual. Not a judicial proceeding.— An assignment of a judgment recovered in a United States court is not a "judicial proceeding" within the meaning of a statute giving full faith and credit to the judicial proceedings of the federal courts, when authenticated by the clerk and certified by the judge, and hence is not admissible in evidence without proper may be executed under a power of attorney.[3] But in all such cases there must be a delivery of the instrument of assignment to the assignee or some one authorized by him to accept it.[4] A judgment may even be assigned by mere parol,[5] provided the intention to assign and the terms are clearly shown.[6] But a mere executory contract to assign a judgment does not vest any title in the assignee,[7] nor is a mere authority to collect the judgment, or an order for its payment, equivalent to an assignment.[8] A written assignment will not be vitiated by mistakes in the description of the judgment or in other particulars if it is capable of being made certain,[9] and if an entry of record is so ambiguous as not to show whether an assignment or a satisfaction was intended, it may be explained by parol.[10] But whatever mode of assignment is adopted, the assignment must be definitive and absolute.[11] An assignment of a judgment made in conformity to the laws of the state where the judgment was rendered is valid everywhere.[12]

b. Statutory Requirements. Where the statute provides a mode of assigning judgments, its requirements must be followed in order to pass the legal title and secure to the assignee any rights which depend solely on the statute;[13] but such a statute is not regarded as exclusive, and does not prevent the party from making an assignment, good at least in equity, in any other lawful way.[14]

c. Equitable Assignment. Equity will give effect to an attempted assignment of a judgment, made in good faith, and failing of its legal effect through some irregularity or informality, and will give the assignee the remedies to which he would have been entitled under a proper legal assignment.[15] And even where there has been no attempt to effect an assignment, equity will sometimes give effect to the transaction as an assignment in order to protect the rights of the assignee.[16]

6. Effect of Fraud.[17] As between the parties to it an assignment of a judgment may be vitiated by fraud or bad faith,[18] but the judgment debtor cannot impeach the assignment for fraud unless he can show that he was injured by the fraud.[19]

B. Operation and Effect — 1. In General. The effect of a valid assignment of a judgment is to divest the assignor of all interest in it and all control over it,[20] and to transfer to the assignee the ownership of the judgment debt and all remedies and means of enforcing and collecting it.[21] And however often a

Entry on wrong record.— Where a judgment creditor sells his judgment and attempts to assign it upon the record to the purchaser, but by mistake the assignment is made upon the wrong record, it will operate as an equitable assignment. Frybarger v. Andre, 106 Ind. 337, 7 N. E. 5.

16. See cases cited infra, this note.

Applications and limitations of rule.— Thus where A recovered judgment for possession in an action for real property against B, and afterward sold the property to C, without assigning the judgment on the record, it was held that C by the purchase of the property became the real party in interest, and was entitled to revive the judgment by scire facias. Wright v. Parks, 10 Iowa 342. So when a person having a future interest in property on which there is a judgment lien pays the debt of the judgment debtor for the purpose of protecting such interest he thereby becomes an equitable assignee of the judgment, and may keep alive and enforce the lien so far as may be necessary in equity for his own benefit. Sutton v. Sutton, 26 S. C. 33, 1 S. E. 19. But a refusal by a judgment creditor of a tender from a stranger to the judgment of his debt, interest, and costs, will not work an equitable assignment. The fact that the assignment is a fraud on creditors does not render the assignment any the less binding on the assignor, and he has no interest thereafter in the judgment which can be assigned. Ford v. Rosenthal, 74 Tex. 28, 11 S. W. 28.

Judgment on note.— The mere assignment of a judgment obtained by an indorsee against the maker of a promissory note does not transfer to the assignee of such judgment the cause of action theretofore existing against the indorsers (Cole v. Matchett, 78 Ind. 601; Kelsey v. McLaughlin, 76 Ind. 379; Ward v. Haggard. 75 Ind. 381); and after the holder of a note has assigned all his interest in the judgment recovered thereon against the maker he cannot sue the indorser (Moorman v. Wood, 117 Ind. 144, 19 N. E. 739).

judgment may be thus transferred, it does not become functus officio, where the intention of the parties to the transfers is evidently to keep it alive;[22] nor do such transactions furnish any reason why the judgment should not be enforced against the judgment debtor.[23]

2. PARTIAL ASSIGNMENT. Assignments of different portions of a judgment to different persons have no effect as against the judgment debtor unless made with his consent,[24] or unless ratified by him,[25] although in some states it is thought that such partial assignments may be enforced in equity.[26] The same principle applies where the judgment is in favor of joint plaintiffs or against joint defendants.[27] As against the assignor a partial assignment of a judgment is valid and binding, even when made without the debtor's consent.[28] As between successive assignees of portions of a judgment, their rights will depend upon priority of assignment, subject to their compliance with the directions of the statute as to making the assignment effectual.[29]

3. ASSIGNMENT AS SECURITY OR FOR COLLECTION. A third person taking an assignment of a judgment as collateral security for a debt acquires the right to control and enforce the judgment,[30] and to satisfy his claims out of the pro-

27. Where one joint owner of a decree executes an instrument transferring to a third person a part of his interest therein, the legal title and right to control the decree are not thereby changed, nor does the assignee become a partner in the decree. Hanks v. Harris, 29 Ark. 323. And where separate judgments are rendered against two joint defendants, an assignment of the judgment against one defendant gives the assignee no power to release the other defendant. Whittemore v. Judd Linseed, etc., Oil Co., 124 N. Y. 565, 27 N. E. 244, 21 Am. St. Rep. 708.

Successive part purchases.— One who purchased part of a judgment from another, and the balance from the latter's sole heir, took good title thereto, no creditors objecting, without administration on the decedent's estate. Barker's Estate, 1 Lanc. L. Rev. (Pa.) 313.

Partial assignment with control of judgment.— Where a debtor assigned to a creditor so much of a judgment against a third person as would pay his debt, and placed the judgment under the creditor's control, it was held that the assignment was valid as against the debtor's administrator. Wood v. Wallace, 24 Ind. 226.

29. Thus if the assignee of a part of the judgment does not have his interest marked on the record, or on the bond on which the judgment was based, he will be postponed to a subsequent assignee of the whole judgment, taking without notice of the prior assignment, and who marks his assignment on the record. Fisher v. Knox, 13 Pa. St. 622, 53 Am. Dec. 503. But in Moore's Appeal, 92 Pa. St. 309, it is held that where parts of the same judgment debt are successively assigned to different persons, and a sale on execution does not produce enough to pay them all, they will share pro rata in the fund, and not be paid in full in the order of the assignments. So an assignment of a judgment which excepts therefrom a specific portion thereof, previously assigned to another as security for a debt, is not equivalent to an assignment subject to the interest of the first assignee. Cahn v. Carpless Co., 61 Nebr. 512, 85 N. W. 538.

30. Beale v. Mechanics' Bank, 5 Watts (Pa.) 529. But see Bast v. Bank, 1 Leg. Rec. (Pa.) 161, holding that the assignee of a judgment, holding it as collateral security, has no power to issue execution without the assignor's consent.

ceeds;[31] but he obtains no better rights than his assignor had, and takes the judgment subject to any equities or disabilities effective against it in the latter's hands;[32] and if he in turn sells or assigns the judgment, his assignee must hold it subject to the right of the original owner to redeem it on paying the amount for which it was pledged as security.[33] On the payment or release of the debt for which the judgment was pledged the assignee's rights determine by operation of law, and the judgment reverts to the original owner without a reassignment.[34] But one taking an assignment of a judgment merely under an authority or as a power to collect it for the assignor has no vested right in it other than as the assignor's agent.[35]

4. Priority of Assignments. Where a judgment is regularly assigned for value, the rights of the assignee are paramount to those of a subsequent attachment or execution creditor of the assignor.[36] But the assignee of a judgment takes no title if his assignor had previously assigned the same judgment to another party, whether or not he had notice of such previous assignment,[37] and the rightful assignee of a judgment may enjoin the collection of the same by one who claims the same judgment by a simulated assignment.[38]

Bonner v. Illinois Land, etc., Co., 96 Ill. 546.

Where an attorney at law has taken an assignment of an interest in a judgment in payment for professional services in connection with the recovery of the judgment, and has been discharged by his client, his interest in the judgment will not be forfeited because he in good faith opposed a settlement between the parties to the judgment, which he deemed prejudicial to his interest. New York.— As against the assignee, the ment, or the proceeds of an execution, the assignee is entitled to receive the same from him, on notifying the sheriff of his rights in the premises.[48] Further as against the judgment debtor the assignee is entitled to claim and receive the entire amount of the judgment no matter how little he may have paid for it.[49] But it is said that one who at the request of the judgment debtor purchases the judgment cannot recover more than the amount paid for it, although he took an assignment.[50]

e. Enforcement of Judgment. At common law, since the assignment of a judgment did not pass the legal title, the assignee could not sue on it, or take out scire facias for its revival, in his own name and behalf, but must proceed in the name of the assignor.[51] But this rule has been changed by statute in most of the states, and it is now the general rule that the assignee may sue on the judgment, or proceed for its revival, in his own name.[52] judgment is not discharged by payment to a third person who in equity was entitled to require the judgment creditor to account to him as agent for whatever should be realized on the judgment, although the assignee knew this when he took the assignment. Seymour v. Smith, 17 Abb. N. Cas. 387.

North Carolina.— Bartlett v. Yates, 52 N. C. 615. By the assignment of a judgment at law, the assignor becomes a bare trustee, and as between him and the assignee has no right to receive satisfaction of the judgment. Hewett v. Outland, 37 N. C. 438.

See 30 Cent. Dig. tit. "Judgment," § 1459.

Reservation of right to collect.— Where part of the consideration for the assignment of a judgment was a promissory note, and to secure its payment it was agreed that the assignor should have a lien on the judgment as fully and perfectly as though it had not been assigned, it was held that the assignee had no authority to collect the money and discharge the judgment. Hudson Mfg. Co. v. Elmendorf, 9 N. J. Eq. 478. So an assignment of his judgment by a judgment creditor to his attorney for reasons of convenience and for his own benefit cannot prevail against a subsequent settlement by him with his judgment debtor. Baker v. Secor, 4 Silv. Sup. (N. Y.) 516, 7 N. Y. Suppl. 803.

On failure of title to part of the judgment the assignee may recover such a proportion of the whole amount to which he is entitled upon an entire failure of title, as the value of the part to which the title has failed bears to the value of the whole. Weir v. Pennington, 11 Ark. 745.

St. Rep. 571), or for neglect in not collecting an execution (McGregor v. Walden, 14 Vt. 450); but not the right to proceed against the sheriff for neglect of duty in serving executions issued before the assignment (Com. v. Fuqua, 3 Litt. (Ky.) 41).

Action against clerk of court.— The mere assignment of a judgment does not carry with it a right of action which has accrued to the judgment creditor against the clerk of the court for his failure properly to index the judgment, so as to render it a lien on lands. Redmond v. Staton, 116 N. C. 140, 21 S. E. 186.

Collateral rights of action.— The assignment of a judgment recovered for the price of goods carries the right to maintain an action against the judgment debtor jointly with others, based on a conspiracy to obtain the goods from the judgment creditor by fraud. Pratt v. Wertheimer, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 463. So of the right to sue for a fraud intended to depreciate the assets of the judgment debtor and thereby defeat collection of the judgment. Sweet v. Converse, 88 Mich. 1, 49 N. W. 899.

Interest in property.— A purchaser at judicial sale, to whom is conveyed a judgment decreeing the nullity of a tax-sale, acquires no right, title, or interest in the property by virtue of such assignment. Cucullu v. Bilgery, 48 La. Ann. 1245, 20 So. 662.

takes it free from latent equities of third persons, not parties to the judgment, of which he has no notice at the time of the assignment.[58] But some decisions repudiate this doctrine altogether, holding that the assignee can by no means occupy a better position in this respect than his assignor,[59] and applying to his purchase the doctrine of caveat emptor.[60] At all events the assignee is chargeable with any equities of third parties of which he has actual notice[61] or such constructive notice as may be obtained from an inspection of the record of the judgment.[62] And to protect himself against such equities he must also show that he is a purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration,[63] and that he paid the purchase-money before the adverse equity was asserted.[64]

4. Vacation or Reversal of Judgment in Assignee's Hands. The assignee of a judgment stands in no better position than the original plaintiff, and the judgment may be reversed, vacated, set aside, or enjoined in the assignee's hands for the same reasons which would justify such action if it remained in the hands of the original plaintiff,[65] and his interests are liable to be defeated thereby.[66] And when proceedings are instituted for any of these purposes, the assignor is not a proper or necessary party, as he has no longer an interest in the judgment.[67]

5. Notice of Assignment. Notice of the assignment must be given to the judgment debtor; for he will be protected, as against the assignee, in respect to any payments he may make to plaintiff in the judgment, or in respect to any release or satisfaction he may procure from him, before receiving such notice.[68] On the other hand, after notice to the debtor of a bona fide transfer of the judgment, the rights of the assignee will be protected from any and all acts of the original parties.[69] This notice need not be in any particular form, but is sufficient

Garnishment of judgment debtor.— In some states it is held that where the judgment debtor, being summoned as garnishee in an action against the judgment creditor, has paid to the sheriff the amount due on the judgment, without notice of its previous assignment, he is not protected from the claims of the assignee of the judgment. Brown v. Ayres, 33 Cal. 525, 91 Am. Dec. 655; Richardson v. Ainsworth, 20 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 521; Robinson v. Weeks, 6 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 161. But a different rule obtains in other states. if it advises the debtor that the person who recovered the judgment is no longer the owner of it or entitled to collect it.[70] It may be served on the debtor like ordinary civil process,[71] or it is sufficient if the information is given under circumstances and in terms calculated to arrest the attention of the debtor.[72] Even direct notice of the assignment is held unnecessary if the assignee can bring home to the debtor knowledge of such facts as should have put him upon inquiry.[73] But the entry of the assignment on the judgment record or appearance docket, or filing it among the papers in the case, is not constructive notice to the debtor, as he is under no obligation to search the records.[74]

6. REMEDIES OF ASSIGNEE AGAINST ASSIGNOR. The assignor of a judgment is held to an implied warranty that there is such a judgment, that he is the owner of it, that it is a valid and subsisting obligation, and that no payments have been made on it other than such as he discloses at the time,[75] even where the assignment is

Refusal of judgment creditor to give information.— But where the debtor hears rumors of an assignment of the judgment, not understanding who was the assignee, and applies to the judgment creditor for information on that point, who declines to tell him, there is no such notice to him as the rule contemplates. Exceptions to rule.— A general warranty on a sale of a judgment, whether express or implied, does not extend to a defect known to the purchaser. Furniss v. Ferguson, 34 N. Y. 485. Neither will an implied warranty of non-payment be available when the judgment is transferred to a person who has had charge of its collection, under such circumstances as would raise a presumption that he was privy to payments actually made. Furniss v. Ferguson, 15 N. Y. 437.

Limited warranty.— A declaration, in the assignment of a judgment, that the assignor warrants his title and power to convey only to the extent of the consideration paid, is to be taken as a limitation, not upon the extent of the title impliedly warranted, but of the liability of the assignor in case of failure. Furniss v. Ferguson, 34 N. Y. 485.

Judgment invalid.— The implied warranty that the judgment assigned is valid is broken by the transfer of a voidable judgment; and hence, where the judgment is afterward reversed, vacated, or set aside, the purchaser may recover back his money. Emerson v. Knapp, 75 Mo. App. 92; Arnold v. Hickman, 6 Munf. (Va.) 15. Compare Lillibridge v. Tregent, 30 Mich. 105.

Measure of damages.— The measure of damages recoverable by the assignee against the assignor, upon the loss or annulment of the judgment, is the restitution of the price paid, together with costs paid by the assignee in defending the judgment. Corcoran v. Riddell, 7 La. Ann. 268. But where a judgment against several defendants was sold with a warranty that the full amount was due, whereas the assignor had secretly released one of the defendants, who was solvent, and the judgment could not be collected from the other defendants, they being insolvent, it was held that the measure of the assignee's damages was the difference in the value of the judgment as it was when transferred and its value as it would have been if the release had not been given. Bennett v. Buchan, 61 N. Y. 222.

expressed to be "without recourse,"[76] unless in the latter case it purports to transfer only the "right, title, and interest" of the assignor, without recourse to him.[77] But the assignment does not imply any warranty of the solvency of the judgment debtor or the collectability of the judgment from his assets,[78] although the assignor will be liable in damages to the assignee if he afterward receives payment of the judgment or enters satisfaction of it.[79]

D. Setting Aside Assignment. An action will lie to cancel or set aside an assignment of a judgment,[80] when it was made by a person having no right or authority to sell the judgment,[81] or was procured by false and fraudulent representations in regard to the validity of the judgment, the amount due upon it, or the property available for its satisfaction, made by either party to the other.[82]

XVIII. SUSPENSION, ENFORCEMENT, AND REVIVAL.

A. Suspension or Stay of Proceedings.[83] Although a judgment creditor is ordinarily entitled to take immediate steps for the collection of his judgment,[84] its enforcement may be suspended or stayed by the operation of subsequent proceedings taken in the case,[85] by an agreement of the creditor obtained fairly and in good faith,[86] or by an order of the court, under statutory authority or in the exercise of its discretionary power, when justified by the circumstances of the particular case and necessary to do justice between the parties,[87] and in the latter case the order of stay or suspension may be made conditional or upon terms,[88] or, if necessary, may be made final and perpetual, as where the judgment debt has been paid in full.[89]

B. Dormant Judgments[90] — 1. Definition. A judgment not satisfied, or barred by lapse of time, but temporarily inoperative so far as the right to issue execution is concerned, is usually called a dormant judgment.[91]

2. Statutory Provisions and Judgments to Which They Are Applicable. In many of the states the statutes provide that judgments shall become "dormant" that is, incapable of execution by the ordinary process, if a certain length of time is allowed to elapse without the issuance, levy, or return of an execution upon them.[92]

After the term.— While a court may vacate or modify its judgments or orders, as provided by statute, after the close of the term of court at which they were rendered, it has no power, in the absence of proceedings under the statute, to suspend the operation of such judgments or orders after the close of such term, except in so far as that power was expressly reserved in the entry of the judgment. Separate judgments.— Where a decree is rendered for plaintiff in a mortgage foreclosure suit, and a junior judgment also rendered against the mortgagor on a cross bill filed by a co-defendant, the judgments are separate, and the decree in favor of the mortgagee may be stayed, and the other enforced. Indulgence to co-defendant.— The indulgence of a creditor to one of two defendants in a judgment, if they are not principal and surety as to each other, does not entitle the other defendant to a perpetual stay of proceedings on the judgment against him, although he has paid half the debt, and, but for the indulgence of plaintiff, the other half would have been collected from the other defendant. These acts generally apply only to judgments for the payment of money,[93] and do not impose a limitation upon the enforcement of judgments or decrees not within this description,[94] such for example as a decree for the foreclosure of a mortgage.[95] They apply, however, as well to foreign as to domestic judgments,[96] although they do not run against a judgment during any time when it was impossible to enforce it by final process,[97] nor under any circumstances against the state as judgment creditor.[98] But when a judgment has once become dormant, it cannot be enforced until it has been duly revived, as provided by the statute.[99]

3. ISSUE OF EXECUTION. In several states, to save a judgment from dormancy, it is necessary that an execution thereon should be issued, and in some that it should also be levied within a limited number of years after the rendition of the judgment or after the right to execution accrues.[1] Issuing the execution includes

Kansas.— Watson v. Keystone Ironworks Co., (1903) 74 Pac. 269. A judgment or decree for the sale of specific real property becomes dormant after five years, if execution is not sued out within that time. Killen v. Nebraska L. & T. Co., 70 Kan. 83, 78 Pac. 159.

A decree in a suit to foreclose a mortgage is a "judgment," within the meaning of the Kansas statute, and an order of sale or special execution will prevent a money judgment in favor of one defendant against another from becoming dormant, if the judgment and the amount are referred to in the order of sale. Watson v. Keystone Iron-Works Co., 70 Kan. 61, 78 Pac. 156. On the other hand a proceeding in the probate court in aid of execution on a judgment in the district court does not extend the time within which such judgment becomes dormant. But when suit is brought to subject property fraudulently conveyed to the payment of a judgment while it is still alive, it will not become dormant by failure to issue execution thereon pending the suit. Cole v. Terrell, 71 Tex. 549, 9 S. W. 668. The statute in this state provides that where execution has not issued within twelve months after the rendition of a judgment, it may be the delivery of it to the sheriff or other proper officer;[2] but this is sufficient to arrest the running of the statute, although the writ is afterward quashed,[3] or although it is returned without a levy[4] or levied on property not then owned by defendant,[5] or on his homestead,[6] or although the levy is dismissed by the court.[7]

4. Return or Entry on Execution. In Georgia, by statute, the issue of an execution will not suffice to keep a judgment alive; but it becomes dormant if seven years elapse from the time of the last entry on the execution by an authorized officer and the recording of such entry on the docket.[8] This requires the entry and recording of a sufficient indorsement on the execution at least as often as once in every seven years,[9] unless where the statute has been arrested by the active conduct of proceedings to vacate or enjoin the judgment.[10] The "entry" which will avail to keep the judgment in force may be a written and signed statement of the officer that the writ is placed in his hands with orders to collect the money, or a return or other proper indorsement, of a character to show that the creditor is still endeavoring to enforce it;[11] but it must in all cases be made by an officer authorized to levy and return the execution.[12]

revived within ten years after its date, but not afterward; but this does not mean that execution must issue every year to keep the judgment alive; if the first execution is issued within a year after its rendition, it will not become dormant until ten years thereafter. Mandamus.— Since the usual method of enforcing the payment of a judgment against a municipal corporation is by the writ of mandamus, issued to enforce the levy and collection of taxes for that purpose, this writ is to be considered as equivalent to a writ of execution, within the meaning and purpose of the dormancy statutes, when the question concerns a judgment against a municipality. 5. Effect of Acknowledgment or Agreement Between Parties.[13] The running of the dormancy statute against a judgment will be arrested by an acknowledgment of the judgment and promise to pay it, or by an agreement of the parties as to the issue of execution,[14] although not by the mere fact of a partial payment.[15] And after the statute has fully run against the judgment, it cannot be revived by a mere parol promise to pay it.[16] But it may be revived by a written agreement of the parties entered upon the record.[17]

C. Proceedings to Enforce Judgment[18] — 1. In General. Proceedings for the enforcement of a judgment are governed by the law in force at the time of the rendition of the judgment,[19] and by the law of the state or country where it was given.[20] Where the judgment is for the payment of money, the usual process of execution will ordinarily be the appropriate method of collecting it,[21] unless the right to issue this process has been limited or deferred by an agreement of the parties,[22] and subject to the condition that the amount, if uncertain, must be ascertained in a proper proceeding before the writ can issue.[23] If the judgment is rendered in pursuance of an agreement of the parties which directs a particular mode of satisfying it, it cannot be enforced in any way inconsistent with the agreement;[24] and where a judgment requires of a party the performance of any other act than payment of money or delivery of property, it is not to be enforced by motion for an order to compel performance; the judgment itself should embrace such an order, but plaintiff should proceed by serving on defendant personally a copy of the judgment requiring such act, after which, if he refuses to perform it, he may be punished for contempt.[25]

2. ENFORCEMENT IN EQUITY — a. In General. It is generally presumed that the court which renders a judgment is competent to enforce it, and equity will not entertain a bill to obtain satisfaction of the judgment,[26] unless under special circumstances, as where the judgment debtor is dead and recourse cannot be had against his estate without the aid of chancery,[27] or where the object is to reach equitable interests in land, not subject to execution,[28] or other property of defendant which cannot be made available in the ordinary way.[29] And in any case it must first be shown that the complainant has no adequate remedy at law,[30] or that his legal remedy has been lost without any fault or laches on his part,[31] or has been exhausted without avail.[32] On such a proceeding the regularity of the judgment will not be inquired into,[33] although the nature of the original cause of action may be investigated if its character would have any influence on the action of a court of equity in the premises.[34] The complainant must of course show himself equitably entitled to the relief which he asks,[35] and his petition will be defeated by anything showing that it would be unjust or unfair to grant it.[36]

b. Jurisdiction and Limitations. To sustain a bill in equity for the enforcement of a judgment at law, it is necessary that defendant should be subject to the jurisdiction of the court, or, if he is a non-resident, that the particular property sought to be subjected to the judgment should be found within the state;[37] and equity will not entertain such a bill after the statute of limitations has run against the judgment at law.[38]

c. Parties. In such a proceeding all persons having interests in the particular property sought to be subjected should be joined as parties.[39]

d. Pleading and Evidence. The bill must set forth fully the judgment on which it is based[40] and the assignment of it, if any, to the complainant,[41] and must show the liability of the respondent to satisfy it,[42] and negative the existence of an adequate remedy at law,[43] and the evidence must clearly establish the complainant's right to the relief prayed.[44]

e. Decree. If the proceeding is merely to enforce the lien of the judgment, a personal decree for the payment of its amount will not be proper;[45] but otherwise the decree may be for the aggregate amount of the original judgment with interest and costs,[46] although this relief cannot be given against defendants who are joined merely as claiming under alleged fraudulent conveyances from the

Rents and profits.— A party coming into a court of equity to enforce a judgment lien is not entitled to a decree for the rents and judgment defendant.[47] The decree should generally give the debtor time to redeem from the sale ordered, although this is not indispensable;[48] but it should not undertake to adjust equities or settle partnership accounts between defendants.[49]

3. SCIRE FACIAS TO ENFORCE.[50] Although a scire facias on a judgment is not ordinarily a prerequisite to the right to issue execution,[51] it may be employed as a process for obtaining the enforcement of the judgment when authorized by statute, or in special cases,[52] as where the judgment includes instalments of a debt subsequently to accrue,[53] or where it embodies an express condition or is to be released on performance of an act in pais.[54] As it is a judicial and not an original writ, it should issue from and be returned to the court which rendered judgment and has possession of the record.[55]

4. SCIRE FACIAS TO HAVE NEW EXECUTION. Where execution on a judgment has been levied and returned under circumstances which apparently satisfy the judgment, but there is no actual satisfaction by reason of a mistake in the levy or for other causes, scire facias will lie to obtain a new execution.[56]

5. PROCEEDINGS TO MAKE PARTIES — a. In General. Where judgment has been recovered against one or more of several persons jointly indebted on a contract, the others not having been served, it is provided in several states that the judgment may be made effective against those defendants not originally served, by summoning them afterward to show cause why they should not be bound by the judgment.[57]

b. Scire Facias. Joint debtors not originally summoned may also be made liable to the judgment in those states where the common-law practice prevails by means of a scire facias requiring them to show cause why they should not be so bound.[58] This writ is also an appropriate common-law process for making a person a party defendant to the judgment who since its rendition has become chargeable to an execution thereon, or in some way accountable for the assets of the original defendant, as in the case of subsequent purchasers, heirs, and devisees.[59]

6. Scire Facias on Justice's Transcript — a. In General. Where a transcript of a justice's judgment is entered in a court of record for purposes of lien and execution, a scire facias either to revive it or to obtain an execution against lands must issue from the superior court and the new judgment be there granted.[60] In such a proceeding the merits and the validity of the justice's judgment cannot be inquired into, want of jurisdiction not being apparent.[61]

b. Requisites and Validity of Writ. The writ should be correctly entitled in the names of the parties to the original judgment,[62] and should show the rendition of a valid judgment by the justice,[63] and the amount due upon it,[64] and also the issue and return of execution upon it, if any,[65] and that the transcript was duly certified by the justice[66] and filed or recorded in the superior court.[67] If the scire facias appears on its face to be valid, a motion to quash it will be overruled.[68]

D. Revival of Judgments[74]— 1. Necessity For Revival[75]—a. Dormant Judgments. Generally speaking the necessity for reviving a judgment arises only in connection with the extension of its lien on real property or the right to issue execution upon it.[76] The fact that it has not been revived in due time, and so has become dormant, does not prevent the maintenance of an action upon it, where plaintiff does not seek to maintain a lien growing out of it,[77] and is no obstacle to a writ of inquiry,[78] or to an amendment of the judgment nunc pro tunc.[79]

b. Right to Execution. By statutes in many of the states no execution or other final process for the enforcement of a judgment can issue upon it if a certain prescribed length of time from its rendition has been allowed to elapse without proceedings to revive the judgment.[80] Still it is held that an execution issued after Laws 132), provides that execution may issue upon any judgment of record in any of the courts of the commonwealth, notwithstanding the judgment may have lost its lien upon real estate, the time without revival of the judgment is not void, but only voidable at the option of the judgment debtor, and may be levied and the property sold under it, if he does not take advantage of the irregularity.[81]

e. Effect of Execution or Revival. Dormancy of the judgment under the rule just stated may be avoided by the timely issue of an execution; that is, if such a writ has been issued within the limited time, successive executions may be issued at any time thereafter, during the life of the judgment, without the necessity of a revival.[82]

d. Filing Transcript in Another Court. A judgment recovered before a justice of the peace or other inferior court, and become dormant, is not revived by merely filing a transcript of it in a superior court; it must be duly revived by regular proceedings for that purpose before execution can issue on it.[83] without a previous writ of scire facias to revive the same. This refers only to judgments originally obtained in courts of record, or which by regular proceedings according to the course of law before inferior courts have by transcript been given the force of judgments obtained in the common pleas, and was not intended to apply to a transcript of a judgment from an alderman's docket, filed more than five years after the judgment was rendered, without its revival by scire facias. What judgments affected.— This statutory rule does not apply to a judgment recovered in a criminal court for a fine (Com. v. Snyder, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. 261), or to a conditional judgment, to be released on performance of a certain act, since execution could not issue upon it immediately, and a reasonable time must be allowed for performance (Miller v. Milford, 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 35), or, in Missouri, to a judgment of a county court, as it is not a court of common-law jurisdiction (Caldwell v. Lockridge, 9 Mo. 362).

What process intended.— The rule applies not only to the ordinary writ of execution or fieri facias, but also to an attachment (Boyd v. Talbott, 7 Md. 404), and to an attachment execution or garnishment (Wheelen v. Phillips, 140 Pa. St. 33, 21 Atl. 239. But compare Bohan v. Reap, 11 York Leg. Rec. e. Suspension or Stay of Proceedings. Where the right to issue execution is stayed, suspended, or enjoined, the statutory period of limitation begins to run from the removal of the impediment, and revival of the judgment is not necessary to authorize an execution within the limited time thereafter, although more than that time has elapsed since the rendition of the judgment.[84]

f. Death of Party[85] — (I) DEFENDANT. If an execution issues and is dated after the death of defendant, it is irregular and void, and cannot be enforced against either the real or personal property of defendant; but the judgment must first be revived against the heirs or devisees in the one case, or the personal representatives in the other.[86] But it will be observed that the lien of the judgment may continue, although the right to issue execution is suspended by the death of judgment,[95] originally capable of enforcement by execution.[96] These conditions being met, scire facias or other appropriate proceedings may be maintained for the revival of any judgment or decree for the payment of money.[97]

b. Grounds For Revival. It is sufficient ground for proceedings to revive a judgment that there has been a change of parties,[98] that the lien of the judgment on realty has expired or is about to expire,[99] that an execution issued and levied under the judgment failed to produce satisfaction because the property seized did not belong to the judgment debtor, or was not subject to execution, or because the execution purchaser failed to get possession,[1] or that the judgment debtor has wrongfully caused the execution to be returned satisfied.[2]

c. Persons Who May Revive[3] — (i) In General. Proceedings to revive a judgment should ordinarily be brought in the name of plaintiff in the original judgment,[4] although they may also be maintained by sureties, or a joint defendant, Public officers.— Where a judgment has been rendered in favor of an officer of a municipal corporation, it cannot be revived in the name of the municipality. Calais v. Bradford, 51 Me. 414.

An attorney who by special agreement with his client is entitled to a certain commission on the amount recovered, which amount is on paying the judgment debt,[5] by the administrator of a deceased judgment creditor,[6] or by his trustee in bankruptcy.[7]

(II) ASSIGNEES. Proceedings to revive a judgment which has been assigned must be brought in the name of the original plaintiff, not of the assignee,[8] except where the statute authorizes such actions to be maintained in the name of the real party in interest.[9]

d. Persons Against Whom Revival May Be Had[10] — (I) IN GENERAL. All the parties to the original judgment must be parties to a proceeding to revive it,[11] and in particular the original judgment debtor if living must be made a defendant;[12] if he is dead the proceedings should be taken against his personal representatives,[13] or devisees or heirs taking realty.[14] Terre-tenants may and should also be joined as defendants.[15] Unless judgment absolute be entered on the lien docket, it cannot be continued by scire facias as against subsequent judgment creditors, without actual notice.[16] A judgment debtor who has paid a judgment cannot revive it against a mortgagee or judgment creditor who had a lien at the time of payment, or prior to the act by which it is sought to affect the lien.[17]

(II) JOINT DEFENDANTS. Where the judgment was recovered against two or more defendants jointly, proceedings for its revival must be against them all, if evidenced by and embraced in the judgment, has a sufficient interest in the judgment to sue for its full revival. Martinez v. Vives, 32 La. Ann. 305.

which defendant may deny the existence of the original judgment or show its invalidity, and payment, including release, satisfaction, or discharge of the original judgment.[23] And a general denial of each and every allegation of the writ not admitted in the answer is not a form of defense permitted in a proceeding to revive a judgment.[24] It is not permissible to show in defense want or invalidity of consideration,[25] coverture or other disability of defendant,[26] usury,[27] pendency of an action of debt on the judgment,[28] recovery of another judgment on the same debt,[29] pending appeal by plaintiff from judgment in his favor,[30] or adverse possession.[31] But defendant may show that his position with reference to the judgment is that of a surety only,[32] and the statute of limitations is a good defense,[33] as is also the defense that the proceedings are prematurely brought.[34] And persons made defendants to a scire facias, founded on a judgment against a corporation, on the allegation that they are stock-holders and personally liable for its debts, may show that they are not stock-holders, or that the debt on which the judgment was recovered was not of the kind for which stock-holders are liable.[35]

b. Payment, Release, or Satisfaction. In defense to a proceeding to revive a judgment, defendant may plead that it has been paid[36] wholly or in part,[37] or he may plead the presumption of payment arising from lapse of time,[38] or both payment and presumption of payment,[39] or a voluntary release of the judgment without full payment,[40] or accord and satisfaction,[41] but not set-off or counterclaim.[42]

c. Invalidity of Judgment. It is a good defense to a proceeding to revive a judgment that is absolutely void, as for want of jurisdiction,[43] but not that it is irregular or erroneous.[44]

d. Collateral Agreements. Under the plea of payment defendant may show a prior agreement as to the mode of discharging the judgment,[45] or an agreement to cancel it upon an event which has since occurred,[46] or to restrict its lien;[47] but not a mere voluntary promise on the part of plaintiff to forbear enforcing the judgment.[48]

e. Defenses by Heirs, Executors, or Terre-Tenants. These persons may plead any defenses which would have been open to the original defendant,[49] and a defendant joined as heir or administrator may deny the character in which he is sued,[50] and plead want of assets or "nothing by descent,"[51] and a terre-tenant may plead that the judgment was never a lien on his land, or that the land has been discharged from it.[52]

b. Death of Party. In some states the death of a judgment defendant starts the running of a new period of limitations, and proceedings to revive the judgment must be brought within a limited time after that event;[58] but in others the statute is not interrupted thereby, but the revival proceedings must be instituted within the period originally limited after the rendition of the judgment.[59]

c. Computation of Period of Limitation. The limitation of the time of bringing proceedings for the revival of a judgment begins to run from the rendition of the judgment,[60] excluding the day of the entry of the judgment,[61] and unless the statute is interrupted by some sufficient cause,[62] the right to institute the pro-

Evading process.— A period of time during which defendant, a municipal corporation, had no qualified officers on whom process could be served, and purposely refrained from qualifying them, to avoid a judgment, should be omitted from the period of limitation for reviving the judgment, the creditor having exercised due diligence. ceeding will expire on the last day of the statutory period, or, if that day is dies non, on the next succeeding business day.[63] But the statute is saved by beginning the proceedings within the limited time, although the judgment of revivor does not follow until after its expiration.[64]

d. Motions to Revive. The statute of limitations applicable to an action or writ of scire facias to revive a judgment will also bar a motion for the same purpose,[65] unless where there is a special statute applicable to such motions.[66]

6. Mode of Revival[67] — a. In General. The revival of a judgment is a judicial act, in the sense that it cannot generally be accomplished by the mere act or agreement of the parties;[68] but requires the action of the court in some form of proceeding involving notice to the adverse party and an opportunity to contest the application,[69] although given these conditions it may be brought about in a collateral action.[70] An action of debt on the judgment is always a proper form of proceeding; and where the statute provides a special remedy for the revival of judgments, as a writ of scire facias or a motion for that purpose, it is not exclusive of the common-law right of action on the judgment, but cumulative thereto,

C. 38, 48 S. E. 38. But the bringing of a suit by defendant in a foreclosure case to quiet his title against a deed, void because the judgment was not revived on the death of plaintiff, before execution was issued thereon, is not in any sense a revivor of the judgment. Havens v. Pope, 10 Kan. App. 299, 62 Pac. 538.

so that the creditor may pursue either remedy.[71] But it is held in some states that if revival is sought against the heirs of a deceased judgment debtor, plenary proceedings must be brought, and it is not permissible to proceed by motion or rule.[72] In some jurisdictions it is necessary for the personal representatives of a deceased judgment creditor to revive it, in order to be able to enforce it as against the judgment debtor; and whether this should be done by a formal action, or may be effected merely on motion, will depend upon the local statute.[73]

b. Scire Facias. In many states the provisions of the English statute giving a scire facias to revive a judgment in a personal action[74] have been adopted as a part of their common law, or incorporated in their statutes, so that the proper method of obtaining such a revival is by a proceeding begun by the issue of a scire facias requiring defendant to show cause why the judgment should not be revived and its lien continued.[75] This proceeding is not a new suit but a continuation of the original action,[76] and therefore it is not a substitute for an action of debt on the judgment, but may be maintained concurrently with such action and without regard to its pendency.[77] But each successive writ of scire facias must be founded on the judgment which immediately preceded it, for a recovery on this writ is a bar to any subsequent recovery on the original judgment.[78]

c. Action to Revive. In several states the proper method of reviving a judgment which has become dormant is by a formal suit or action brought for that purpose and having all the characteristics of a plenary proceeding.[79]

Ann. 352, it is said that the necessity of resorting to a separate action to enforce a judgment exists in two cases: (1) When the judgment was rendered in a foreign state; and (2) when it is a domestic judgment but the judgment debtor is dead and his estate is under administration. In case the judgment debtor is a non-resident, the court may appoint a curator ad hoc, upon whom service may be made, and contradictorily with whom a judgment may be rendered, a suit to revive a judgment being one quasi in rem, and not an action in personam. Bertron v. Stuart, 43 La. Ann. 1171, 10 So. 295.

d. Motion to Revive. In some states the revival of a judgment may be ordered on motion.[80] But it is necessary that the judgment debtor, or person against whom the revival is sought, should have due and sufficient notice of such a motion and an opportunity to contest it.[81]

e. Summons to Show Cause. Another form of proceeding to revive a judgment, used generally in some of the states, and allowed in special cases in others, partakes both of the nature of a formal action and of a scire facias, since it is begun by a summons, but requires defendant to show cause why the judgment should not be revived or enforced as the case may be.[82]

7. Revival by Scire Facias[83] — a. In General. A proceeding by scire facias to revive a judgment is not regarded as a new suit; in contemplation of law it is

Suit on judgment distinguished.— An action to recover the amount of a judgment, with interest, in which a summons is issued and served as on a money demand, and in which a judgment for money alone is prayed for, is an action on the judgment, and not a proceeding to revive it. Mawhinney v. Doane, 40 Kan. 681, 20 Pac. 488; Lawton v. Perry, 40 S. C. 255, 18 S. E. 861.

Parties.— An action to revive a judgment, brought in the name of the judgment creditor after his death, is a nullity. Goreth v. Shipherd, 92 N. Y. App. Div. 611, 86 N. Y. Suppl. 849. If the judgment debtor is dead, all the heirs are necessary parties. Joyce v. Kearney, McGloin (La.) 243. But it seems that the heir at law of the judgment debtor and the administrator of his estate cannot be joined as defendants. Strong v. Lee, 2 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 441. Where a judgment against joint debtors is sought to be revived, all those jointly liable should be made parties; but where all are made parties and summons is issued against all, the fact that one or more cannot be found will not abate the action against those served. Clark v. Commercial Nat. Bank, (Nebr. 1903) 94 N. W. 958.

Burden of proof.— Plaintiff must establish the existence of the judgment and his ownership thereof. Drogre v. Moreau, 21 La. Ann. 639. Against executors.— The statute in New York provides that in case of the death of a judgment debtor after judgment his executors may be summoned to show cause why the judgment should not be enforced against the estate of the deceased in their hands. See Mills v. Thursby, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 385.

Prayer for relief.— Although a summons in proceedings to revive a judgment is in terms limited to the renewal of the execution, there is no error in reviving the judgment as well as granting leave to renew the execution, where all the defenses were denials of the existence of the judgment. Leitner v. Metz, 32 S. C. 383, 10 S. E. 1082; Adams v. Richardson, 32 S. C. 139, 10 S. E. 931.

Hearing.—In a proceeding to revive a judgment, where the judgment debtor, on an order to show cause why the judgment should not be revived, for such cause shows, by affidavit, that the judgment has been paid and satisfied, it is error to render final order of revivor without hearing testimony as to the fact of such payment. merely a continuation of the original action.[84] It is a remedy which plaintiff may pursue notwithstanding the fact that he has a present and immediate right to issue execution on the judgment,[85] or although an execution has already been issued, provided it has not resulted in full satisfaction of the judgment,[86] and which is not rendered unavailable by the existence of other remedies or means of making the judgment effective, but may be pursued concurrently with them.[87] Its purpose and effect is to continue the vitality of the judgment for a new term, and extend its lien, which otherwise would be lifted from the lands of the debtor by mere efflux of time.[88]

b. Application and Affidavits. In some states scire facias cannot issue to revive a judgment which is above a certain age, as ten years, except upon leave of court first obtained, and the filing of an affidavit that it remains unsatisfied.[89] But this

Applications of rule.— Scire facias to revive may be maintained concurrently with an action of debt on the judgment (Lafayette County v. Wonderly, 92 Fed. 313, 34 C. C. A. 360), or with a foreign attachment on the judgment (Hugg v. Brown, 6 Whart. (Pa.) 468). So a judgment creditor of a deceased person may present the claim for allowance in the probate court and at the same time maintain scire facias to revive the judgment against the administrator. Brearly v. Peay, 23 Ark. 172. And scire facias to revive a judgment against a city may be joined with an application for a mandamus to enforce its collection. Houston v. Emery, 76 Tex. 282, 13 S. W. 264. Again a scire facias to revive a judgment for costs may issue pending a motion to retax the costs. Garner v. Hays, 3 Mo. 436.

88. Consolidation of judgments.— In a proceeding by scire facias several judgments may be consolidated, all of which are for the use of plaintiff, although some of them were obtained in the names of other persons. Effect of opening judgment.— While the opening of a judgment to let defendant in to a defense does not destroy its lien, yet if plaintiff desires to extend it longer than five years he must issue his scire facias to revive. Cope's Appeal, 96 Pa. St. 294.

Property not owned by debtor.— A scire facias against the heirs and terre-tenants of the judgment debtor will not reach property never owned by the latter, but inherited by his children after his death from a third person. Adams v. Stake, 67 Md. 447, 10 Atl. 444.

requirement is not usual, and generally the writ may issue without any application to the court.[90]

c. Requisites and Validity of Writ — (I) In General. The writ of scire facias should show the legal title of plaintiff to have execution of the judgment,[91] and correctly describe the parties to be charged,[92] the court from which it issues and to which it is returnable,[93] and the judgment on which it is founded.[94] The writ must also state the purpose for which it is issued, or the demand against which defendant is required to show cause.[95] It issues from the court rendering the judgment, but may run into any county in the state where defendant may be found.[96] Informalities in the writ or irregularities not going to the jurisdiction may be cured by the statute of jeofails, or will be deemed waived if not seasonably objected to.[97]

(II) Averments and Allegations. The scire facias must contain such allegations as will show a good and sufficient cause of action,[98] both in respect to plaintiff's legal title to have execution or to have the judgment revived,[99] and as

Sufficiency of affidavit.— Where the affidavit alleges the existence of the judgment, the fact that it has become dormant and that it remains unpaid is sufficient to justify the making of a conditional order of revival, and on proper service and default to sustain an order making the revivor absolute. Amendments of clerical errors.— Where a scire facias was issued and attested by the clerk of the circuit court, and recited a judgment of that court, but commanded defendant to appear before the "probate" court and show cause, it was held that the error was merely clerical and amendable. Anthony v. Humphries, 9 Ark. 176.

Joint and several judgments.—A joint scire facias upon several judgments is bad. Davidson v. State, 20 Tex. 649. And conversely if the judgment is joint the scire facias must also be joint. Carson v. Moore, 23 Tex. 450.

Form of demand.— A scire facias on a judgment requires defendant to show cause either (1) why the judgment should not be revived and its lien continued, or (2) why plaintiff should not have execution. But it is said that, when used for the purpose of keeping the judgment alive, the writ need not be issued expressly and in terms for that object in order to have the effect of revival. Cornelius v. Junior, 5 Phila. (Pa.) 171. On the other hand a judgment against a decedent will not be revived against the heirs upon a scire facias summoning them to appear and show cause why the judgment should not be revived against them instead of requiring them to show cause why execution should not be issued against the real estate of the decedent descended to them. Frierson v. Harris, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 146, 94 Am. Dec. 220.

Joining motion to amend.—A judgment may be rendered nunc pro tunc, and revived by scire facias at the same term; and there is no impropriety in uniting a notice of the motion to amend in the scire facias to revive. Glass v. Glass, 24 Ala. 468.

Judgment in ejectment.— On scire facias to revive a judgment in ejectment, where the

to the existence or occurrence of the facts which constitute the ground for issuing the writ and are relied on as justifying the relief demanded,[1] and as against the particular parties sought to be charged with the judgment.[2] Further in the case of heirs or terre-tenants the writ should specifically describe the lands sought to be charged.[3]

(III) RECITAL OF JUDGMENT. It is also necessary that the scire facias shall correctly set forth and describe the original judgment on which it is founded.[4] It must be described in respect to the amount of the recovery,[5] the date of the original judgment does not show the nature or extent of plaintiff's estate in the land, it is necessary for the scire facias to allege and the evidence to prove that his title has not expired since the judgment. Smith v. Stevens, 133 Ill. 183, 24 N. E. 511. But this is not necessary where the judgment contained a finding that plaintiff had title to the land in fee simple. But it is not necessary to aver that execution was not issued within a year and a day. Albin v. People, 46 Ill. 372; Weaver v. Reese, 6 Ohio 418.

Judgment unsatisfied.— The scire facias must clearly allege that the judgment remains unsatisfied, or that "execution remains to be done." Brown v. Harley, 2 Fla. 159; Albin v. People, 46 Ill. 372; Davidson v. Alvord, 3 Ind. 1. But see Carson v. Richardson, 3 Hayw. (Tenn.) 231, holding that a scire facias to revive a decree need not state the sum paid and balance due. If the statement accompanying the scire facias shows on its face that the judgment is more than twenty years old, and avers merely that no part of the debt has been paid, it does not rebut the presumption of payment of the judgment. Hummel v. Lilly, 188 Pa. St. 463, 41 Atl. 613, 68 Am. St. Rep. 879. Compare National Sav. Bank v. Welcker, 21 D. C. 324.

Judgment with stay of execution.— Where the judgment sought to be revived was rendered by agreement, with a stay of execution until a certain event should happen, the scire facias must allege that the event has happened. Waller v. Huff, 9 Tex. 530.

Arrest of defendant.— A scire facias which states the recovery of a judgment, the issuing of a capias thereon, and the arrest and commitment of defendant, but without showing how he was discharged, if discharged at all, shows no cause of action. Dozier v. Gore, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 163.

2. See cases cited infra, this note.

Joint defendants.— A scire facias against one of the three defendants in a judgment, which does not aver the death of the others and the survivorship of the one pursued, is bad on demurrer. Graham v. Smith, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 414.

Executor.— A scire facias against an executor to revive a judgment recovered against his testator must suggest the death of the judgment debtor and show defendant's appointment as executor. Walker v. Hood, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 266.

Heirs.— Scire facias to charge an heir with a judgment recovered against his ancestor must show that he is in possession of lands of which his ancestor died seized. Whiting v. Pritchard, 1 Rich. (S. C.) 304. But it need not allege proceedings taken ineffectually against the personal representatives. Rogers v. Denham, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 200. Where the heirs are only liable jointly with the personal representative, unless the ancestor has been dead a year, and there is no such representative, a scire facias against the heirs must show those facts. Huey v. Redden, 3 Dana (Ky.) 488.

Terre-tenants.— Where the object is to revive the judgment as against a terre-tenant, the writ must show when his title to the land vested. Warfield v. Brewer, 4 Gill (Md.) 265.

Trustee.— A scire facias to enforce a judgment rendered against a trustee is insufficient if it is only alleged therein that plaintiff recovered a judgment against defendant as trustee; it should appear for what the trustee was made chargeable. Gibson v. Davis, 22 Vt. 374.

Degree of certainty required.— It is sufficient for a scire facias to contain such recitals as will point to the judgment intended to be revived with such certainty that defendant must know what judgment is meant. Ward v. Prather, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 4; Davidson v. Hunter, 22 Utah 117, 61 Pac. 556. In other words irregularities in the recital of the original judgment will not avoid the scire facias if they are not misleading. Landon v. Brown, 160 Pa. St. 538, 28 Atl. 921.

judgment,[6] the parties plaintiff and defendant,[7] and the court in which it was entered;[8] and a substantial variance between the recitals in the writ and the judgment to be revived will break the continuity of the lien, although it is otherwise if the objection is merely formal or technical.[9]

d. Amendment of Writ. A scire facias is amendable in respect to informalities or irregularities, or to make it conform to the record of the judgment,[10] but not as against parties not served with the writ;[11] nor can an amendment of the original judgment be effected on a plea of nul tiel record to the scire facias.[12]

e. Alias and Pluries Writs. An alias or pluries scire facias may issue where service of the first writ was not effected,[13] where it was served on some of the joint defendants and returned not served as to the others,[14] or where plaintiff desires to make an additional party,[15] as where the original scire facias was served on the judgment defendant and the alias is used to bring in terre-tenants.[16] An alias or pluries scire facias may also issue where plaintiff is nonsuited on the first scire facias.[17] But a recovery upon a scire facias is a bar to a recovery subsequently upon the original judgment, so that each successive scire facias to revive must be founded on that immediately preceding it.[18] So also it has been

In Arkansas it is said that there is no statute authorizing separate writs of scire facias to revive a judgment, where defendants reside in different counties. They must all be included in the same writ, and a return of non est as to any one of the defendants will authorize service of notice by publication as to him. State Bank v. Terry, 13 Ark. 389.

15. A scire facias against an executor of defendant before final judgment is merely to make the executor a party to the record; and although the judgment be against the executor, it is not a judgment fixing him with assets, but a second scire facias is necessary for that purpose, to which the executor may plead a want of assets, or make any other defense which he might have made if sued on a judgment against his testator. held that on a second writ no defenses can be heard which might have been pleaded to the first.[19]

f. Service and Return. There can be no valid judgment upon a scire facias to revive a judgment, unless the writ was served upon defendants,[20] and it is held that the service must be personal, if defendant is within the jurisdiction,[21] and after the manner of serving a writ of summons;[22] and moreover, it must be served upon heirs, terre-tenants, or other persons sought to be bound.[23] If defendant is a non-resident, the service may be constructive.[24] The officer's return should set forth correctly the facts of the service,[25] but may be aided by reasonable intendments,[26] and may be corrected or amended.[27]

g. Parties Defendant[28] — (i) In General. All the parties to the original judgment must be parties to a proceeding to revive it.[29] In case of the death of the judgment defendant, it is the doctrine in some states that the heirs and terre-tenants must be made defendants, but that it is not necessary to join the executor or administrator.[30] In others the scire facias is properly brought against the per-

Joint defendants.— Where the judgment to be revived is against two defendants jointly, the scire facias must be served on both; if served on only one of the joint debtors, it cannot afterward be amended to include both, so as to save the bar of the statute. Lyon v. Ford, 20 D. C. 530.

Sufficiency of process.— A scire facias properly entitled in the case, containing the matters required to be contained in a notice of an application of revivor, signed by the clerk of the court and attested by the seal of the court, and containing a command to the sheriff to serve the same upon defendants therein named, is a sufficient notice and is sufficiently signed. (II) JOINT DEFENDANTS. A scire facias to revive a judgment against two or more defendants must go against them all, if living, or against the heirs or representatives of any deceased defendant jointly with the survivors.[34] If plaintiff desires to revive a judgment against one or more defendants without joining all, his remedy is by an action of debt on the judgment, not a scire facias.[35]

Ct. 163; Com. v. Rogers, 4 Pa. L. J. Rep. 252. In this state it was held that the issuing of a scire facias within five years after the judgment was rendered continued the lien on lands that had been conveyed by defendant, although no service of the writ was actually made on the terre-tenant. Meinweiser v. Hains, 110 Pa. St. 468, 2 Atl. 431; Porter v. Hitchcock, 98 Pa. St. 625; Geiger v. Hill, 1 Pa. St. 509; Duncan v. Flynn, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. 321. But an act of June 1, 1887, provides that no proceeding shall be available to continue the lien of a judgment against a terre-tenant whose deed for the land bound by such judgment has been recorded, unless the terre-tenant is named as such in the original scire facias. admitted.[37] Within the meaning of the rule a terre-tenant is one who has an estate in the land, coupled with the actual possession, which he derived mediately or immediately from the judgment debtor while the land was bound by the lien.[38]

h. Pleadings — (i) In General. A scire facias performs the double function of a summons and a pleading, and therefore it is not necessary for plaintiff to file with it a declaration or petition or rule defendant to plead.[39] But a good plea or answer on the part of defendant must be met by a replication.[40]

Super. Ct. 163. A revival by agreement with the judgment debtor alone does not continue the lien as against the terre-tenant after the expiration of the statutory period. Nyman's Appeal, 71 Pa. St. 447; Armstrong's Appeal, 5 Watts & S. 352; Baum v. Custer, 10 Pa. Cas. 199, 13 Atl. 771. But on the other hand an amicable revival of the judgment by the terre-tenant by an agreement to which defendant is not a party will continue the lien of the judgment on the land. Landon v. Brown, 160 Pa. St. 538, 28 Atl. 921; Sames' Appeal, 26 Pa. St. 184. And if the writ is served upon the terre-tenant, it matters not that the judgment is not formally entered against him on the scire facias. Duncan v. Flynn, 9 Pa. Co. Effect on surety.— The failure of a judgment creditor to preserve his lien by neglecting to give the terre-tenant notice of a scire facias to revive will not discharge the liability of a surety on the bond upon which the judgment was entered. Kindt's Appeal, 102 Pa. St. 441.

Assignee of a ground-rent is a terre-tenant. Davis v. Ehrman, 4 Pa. L. J. Rep. 523.

Adverse or paramount title.— A person not deriving title from the judgment debtor, but claiming the property under a title adverse and paramount to his, as under a tax-sale, is not a terre-tenant of the land, and should not be joined in a scire facias to revive the judgment. Polk v. Pendleton, 31 Md. 118; Jarrett v. Tomlinson, 3 Watts & S. (Pa.) 114.

Unrecorded deed.— In Pennsylvania the terre-tenant is not entitled to notice of the revival of the judgment as between the original parties unless he has at the time of such revival recorded his deed or taken such possession of the land as amounts to constructive notice to the judgment creditor, or unless the latter has actual notice that the land has been sold. (II) Plea or Answer. A scire facias to revive a judgment is an action to which defendant may plead.[41] But nil debet is not a good plea.[42] The only proper forms of the general issue are: (1) Nul tiel record,[43] under which defendant may take advantage of a failure to describe the judgment properly, or of a wrong statement as to the court in which it was rendered,[44] and also may show it to be void for want of jurisdiction, where this is manifest from an inspection of the record;[45] and (2) payment,[46] which includes any form of satisfaction or release of the judgment,[47] as well as an accord and satisfaction.[48] But it is permissible to plead specially the incapacity of plaintiff to maintain the proceeding,[49] or the statute of limitations.[50] And an executor or administrator made defendant may plead want of assets or plene administravit,[51] or invalidity of his appointment.[52] But to a scire facias to revive a judgment against a testator executors cannot plead that they have not accounted to the surrogate.[53] An heir or devisee may plead riens per discent.[54] In some states also an affidavit of defense is required in a proceeding of this character.[55]

(III) Issues, Proof, and Variance. The plea of nul tiel record raises but one question — whether there is such a record as that set out in the writ — and this is to be determined by the court upon inspection and examination of the record;[56] and there is a fatal variance unless the judgment produced corresponds

43. The destruction of the record book in which judgments are written does not destroy the judgment debts, and although the judgments are wrongfully restored by the court without notice to the debtors, yet, when the judgments are revived by scire facias with notice to the debtors, they should make their objection by plea of nul tiel record. in all essential particulars with that described;[57] nor can mere errors or irregularities be taken advantage of under this plea, although an entire want of jurisdiction may be shown.[58] So under the plea of payment the evidence must be confined to matters going in satisfaction, release, or discharge of the judgment.[59]

i. Evidence. On a scire facias there must be proof of the original judgment;[60] but this appearing, the revival will be ordered unless good cause to the contrary is shown.[61] The judgment will be sustained, in respect to its regularity and validity, by the ordinary presumptions.[62] Payment or release may be shown by any competent evidence,[63] and to disprove a plea of payment a sheriff's return on an execution showing satisfaction in full may be contradicted.[64] But as against heirs it is error to render judgment without proof that they inherited assets.[65] And to establish the liability of a party as a terre-tenant requires proof of facts outside of the record,[66] such as his acquisition of title to the land after the rendition of the judgment and while the judgment was a lien upon it,[67] while such a party may show a release or restriction of the lien of the judgment.[68]

j. Trial.[69] Although a scire facias to revive is in one sense but a continuation of the original suit, yet it is so far an independent proceeding that a motion to amend the original judgment cannot be entertained,[70] and that plaintiff may discontinue as to parties not served.[71] The plea of nul tiel record is triable by an inspection of the record;[72] but the plea of payment raises a question of fact which must be submitted to the jury,[73] whose verdict, however, may be set aside in a proper case.[74]

k. Judgment on Scire Facias — (i) Form and Contents. In a majority of the states the proper entry on a scire facias to revive is that plaintiff have execution of the judgment described in the writ, and it is error to render a new judgment for the recovery of a specific amount.[75] But in a few states the practice is to Revival by part owner of judgment.— Where a verdict is rendered on a scire facias sued out for the use of one having a limited interest in the judgment, it is error to enter judgment thereon for the whole amount of the original judgment; it should be for the amount found by the jury to be the interest of the equitable plaintiff therein; for, as against other parties, defendant may have a good defense. Docket entry.— A revival of judgment by amicable scire facias must be noted on the docket entry of the original judgment, and must also be placed on the docket itself. Failing this, it does not continue the lien of the original judgment as against subsequent purchasers or lienors. It is not sufficient if it is simply filed among the papers of the original judgment. Worman's Appeal, 110 Pa. St. 25, 20 Atl. 415; McCleary's Appeal, 1 Watts & S. (Pa.) 299.

And scire facias against heirs and terre-tenants need not name them, but the judgment must be entered against them by name, and the execution must follow the judgment in this respect. Roberson v. Woollard, 28 N. C. 90.

Judgment assigned in portions.— Where a judgment is assigned to third persons in unequal portions, and a scire facias to revive it recites the names of the legal plaintiff and notice to him;[83] and in case of joint defendants, some of whom are not served, it is error to render judgment against all or against those served.[84] The effect of the judgment on scire facias is not to change the legal consequences of the original judgment, but only to continue it in force,[85] and generally, if the original judgment is reversed, the judgment on scire facias will fall with it,[86] although in those states where a new judgment is entered on the scire facias it may be valid and enforceable even though the original judgment was void.[87] The judgment of revival is conclusive of the question of the right to revive, as against any objection based on facts existing prior to its rendition and which could then have been raised, and such matters are res judicata on application for a subsequent revival.[88]

(III) Judgment by Confession or Default. In a proceeding by scire facias to revive, judgment may be entered against defendant upon his confession,[89] or default,[90] although a judgment of the latter kind may be opened for cause shown to let in a defense.[91] At common law the rule is that two returns of nihil to a writ of scire facias are equivalent to a return of scire feci; that is, the court thereupon acquires jurisdiction of defendant, and may proceed to give judgment by default.[92] But in this case defendant may afterward present his defense by audita defendant and the number, term, date, and amount of the judgment, separate judgments of revival entered thereon have priority over a subsequent judgment against the debtor, although the writ also recites the names of the use plaintiffs, and such judgments of revival are entered at different times for the sums respectively due to such use plaintiffs. In re Ernst, 164 Pa. Application of rule. — A judgment rendered on scire facias in one state, without service or appearance, has no binding force as against a defendant who resides in another state. Owens v. McCloskey, 161 U. S. 642, 16 S. Ct. 693, 40 L. ed. 837.

Non-resident heirs. — A judgment on scire facias against non-resident heirs is invalid, unless it appears from the record that they have lands by descent situate within the jurisdiction of the court. It is in the nature of a judgment in rem, and is not binding on them as a judgment in personam; and it will only bind them to the extent of the lands descended to them. For want of affidavit of defense. — Where a scire facias was issued to revive a judgment, and no affidavit of defense was filed before the third term, and plaintiff did not sign judgment on that account, but put the cause down for trial at several terms, and afterward signed judgment for want of the affidavit, it was held that he had waived his right to such a judgment. querela, or on motion to the court, and may have the full benefit thereof, and is not concluded by the judgment as he would be in case of actual service.[93] And a revival on two returns of nihil merely operates to keep in force the local lien, and does not stop the running of the statute of limitations in another state, where defendant resides, or support a new action against him in another state.[94]

l. Execution and Enforcement. Scire facias being a mere continuation of the original proceeding, an execution issued after the revival is grounded on and supported by the original judgment;[95] and a waiver of inquisition given on the original confession of judgment will be available on execution after the revival.[96] The execution may be levied on the same property bound originally by the judgment,[97] except where the revival is had against the administrator of a deceased defendant, in which case it is leviable on the assets in his hands.[98]

m. Appeal and Certiorari. On review in an appellate court of a judgment of revival on scire facias, the regularity of the proceedings below will be supported by the ordinary presumptions;[99] and in respect of matters of practice not governed by any statute or rule of court, there will be no reversal except for a manifest abuse of discretion;[1] nor will the court on such review consider the validity of the original judgment.[2]

n. Quashing or Vacating. The writ of scire facias may be quashed on motion for failure to state a legal cause of action,[3] for want of the supporting affidavit of non-payment of the judgment, when that is required by law,[4] or for disability or defect of parties;[5] and if a scire facias has been improperly issued and a judgment rendered thereon, it is still competent for the court to review both on motion.[6]

o. Amicable Scire Facias. Under the practice in Pennsylvania an amicable scire facias to revive a judgment is a written agreement, signed by the judgment debtor or person to be bound by the revival,[7] in the nature of a writ of scire facias with a confession of judgment thereon, which must be duly docketed,[8] but which requires no judicial action on the part of the court, and which, when duly made and entered, has all the force and effect of a judgment rendered upon an adverse or contested writ of scire facias,[9] although it may be opened, for cause shown, to let defendant in to a defense.[10] Several judgments against the same person, owned by the same creditor, may be consolidated and revived in one amicable action of scire facias.[11]

8. Operation and Effect of Revival[12] — a. In General. The revival of a judgment by regular proceeedings reinvests it with all the effect and conditions which originally belonged to it, and which have been wholly or partly suspended by lapse of time, change of parties, or other cause,[13] and in particular it continues the lien of the judgment on real property beyond the period when, by statute, without such revival, it would expire.[14] But the revival adds nothing whatever

7. It is not necessary for plaintiff to sign an agreement for an amicable revival of a judgment. Campbell's Estate, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 432. And it is sufficient to continue the lien of the judgment upon given realty, the record title and possession of which remains in defendant, if signed by him alone, although he has made a secret conveyance of it to his wife. Lyon v. Cleveland, 170 Pa. St. 611, 33 Atl. 143, 50 Am. St. Rep. 782, 30 L. R. A. 400.

Joint defendants.— The lien of a judgment against two persons may be continued against one by an amicable scire facias. Edwards' Appeal, 66 Pa. St. 89.

Executor or administrator.— The court may, with the consent of the personal representative of a decedent, permit an amicable scire facias to be filed nunc pro tunc to cure an irregular sale of land under a judgment obtained against the decedent in his lifetime. Diese v. Fackler, 58 Pa. St. 109.

Terre-tenants.— If it is desired to continue the lien of a judgment against lands in the possession of a terre-tenant by amicable scire facias, he must execute the agreement; it is not sufficient that he merely witnesses it. Nyman's Appeal, 71 Pa. St. 447. But on the other hand the judgment lien may be amicably revived by the terre-tenant without defendant's joining in such revival. Landon v. Brown, 160 Pa. Property bound.— Where a dormant judgment is revived, it operates as a lien only on the real estate which the judgment debtor owns at the time of the revival. Halmes v. Dovey, 64 Nebr. 122, 89 N. W. 631.

Lien originally restricted.— Where the lien of a judgment is restricted to certain specified real estate by an agreement accompanying its confession, but it is afterward revived generally, the restriction of the lien is thereby to the validity or effect of the judgment, and cannot be invoked as curing any fault or defect which is of such a nature as to render it void,[15] although it cuts off defenses which might have been made to the original judgment before the revival.[16] The judgment on the scire facias to revive being of this character, it is no bar to an action of debt on the original judgment,[17] and a judgment for defendant on an insufficient and defective scire facias is no bar to another for the same cause.[18]

b. Defenses to Judgment of Revival. In an action on a judgment of revival, or any other proceeding to enforce it, such judgment is conclusive of all matters which were or might have been pleaded in the revival proceedings, and it is not permissible to set up defenses founded on any such matters.[19]

XIX. PAYMENT, RELEASE, AND SATISFACTION.

A. Satisfaction by Payment — 1. Persons to Whom Payment May Be Made — a. In General. As a general rule payment of a judgment must be made to the plaintiff of record[20] or to his attorney[21] or duly authorized agent,[22] unless the judg-removed. Dean's Appeal, 35 Pa. St. 405. But compare Carson v. Ford, 6 Pa. Super. Ct. 17.

Decisions to the contrary.— In Pennsylvania it is said that a judgment regularly revived by scire facias is not void even if the original judgment was void, the scire facias being there a substitute for an action of debt on the judgment, and the judgment given on the scire facias not being a mere award of execution, but a judgment quod recuperet. Duff v. Wynkoop, 74 Pa. A parol assignment of a judgment constitutes the assignee an agent for plaintiff, and payment to such agent discharges the judgment. Bartlett v. Yates, 52 N. C. 615.

Bank as agent.— Where a party against whom a bank had obtained a judgment subsequently deposited money with a branch of the bank, which was lost by the insolvency of the bank, and the judgment passed by assignment to plaintiff, it was held that the deposits did not extinguish the judgment. Spillman v. Payne, 84 Va. 435, 4 S. E. 749.

Ascertaining authority of agent.— The judgment debtor must make sure that the agent really has authority to collect the judgment was taken in the name of one who was merely a nominal party, in which case the settlement may be made with the real and beneficial owner of the judgment,[23] or unless it has been assigned to a third person, in which case the debtor, after notice of the assignment, must pay to the assignee.[24] Payment of the amount of the judgment to a creditor of the judgment plaintiff, under process of garnishment, will discharge it pro tanto.[25] In case there are several plaintiffs in the judgment, payment may be made to either, with the effect of discharging the whole obligation.[26]

b. Clerk of Court or Other Officer. The clerk of the court in which a judgment has been rendered has no right to receive money from defendant, in satisfaction of the judgment, without special authority.[27] Payment may of course be made to ment. Payment of the judgment to one who, although authorized to loan money and take security for its payment, had not in his possession the securities or other evidence of authority to collect the money, will not discharge the debt, where as a fact no authority to collect existed. Crowden v. Bechlar, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. 8. And so where a stranger represents by a forged memorandum that he is plaintiff's agent and thus employs an attorney to satisfy the judgment, who thereupon satisfies it, and the stranger embezzles the money, if plaintiff is not in any fault, defendant must bear the loss. Defendant acts at his own risk.— The recovery of a money judgment is conclusive against defendant that the money is legally due to plaintiff; and if defendant assumes to pay it to a third person as beneficially entitled to receive it, he acts at his own peril. Mervine v. Parker, 18 Ala. 241.

Fictitious plaintiff.— In the absence of all evidence save such as the record furnishes, defendant must look upon the person for whose use the judgment was recovered as the true owner; and if he be a fictitious person, then the debtor may treat the nominal plaintiff as the real owner, and settle the demand with him. the sheriff holding an execution or other process for its enforcement, and the judgment will be discharged thereby, although the creditor never receives the money;[28] but an effectual payment cannot be made to the sheriff when he has no writ in his hands.[29]

2. Mode and Sufficiency of Payment. The owner of a judgment may receive property, securities, or any other thing of value in satisfaction of the same, if he so chooses, and when he has once accepted any substitute for money, his acceptance becomes irrevocable.[30] Also the judgment may be discharged by defendant's paying other claims or obligations on behalf of plaintiff to an equal or greater amount.[31] But in either case there must be a positive and express agreement to accept the substitute for direct payment of the judgment;[32] and no satisfaction of the judgment arises from the acceptance of collateral security for its payment,[33]

Payment before judgment.— The clerk of the court has no authority to accept payment of plaintiff's debt until judgment is rendered; but if he receives the money from defendant and retains it until after judgment, and by some plain and unequivocal act shows an intention to hold the money in his official capacity, and appropriate it to the payment of the judgment, the judgment is discharged. Deputy sheriff.— Payment of a judgment to a deputy sheriff who holds the judgment and assumes the right to receive payment does not release the debtor from liability, unless the deputy is authorized by a judicial mandate to proceed to collect and to acquit the debtor, or the collection is made by the deputy as agent of plaintiff, irrespective of office. or from a note designed merely to fix the time of payment,[34] or the giving of a consideration for postponing the enforcement of the judgment,[35] or, where a judgment has been given to secure the payment of an accommodation note, from the renewal of the note at maturity.[36] The right to accept anything else as a substitute for money in satisfaction of the judgment is confined to the owner of it himself and does not belong to his attorney,[37] or to a sheriff or other officer holding process for its collection.[38] An application of payments to a judgment cannot be changed when it will affect the rights and interests of third persons.[39] A judgment plaintiff in lawful possession of lands on which his judgment is a lien has not the right to apply the rents and profits therefrom to the satisfaction of his judgment, as against the owner, who is not a judgment defendant.[40]

3. TENDER. An unaccepted tender of the amount due on a judgment is not of itself a satisfaction of the judgment or a discharge of its lien; but it gives the debtor, on paying the money into court, a right to apply to the court to restrain execution and enter satisfaction of the judgment.[41]

4. EVIDENCE OF PAYMENT — a. In General. The payment of a judgment may be proved by parol evidence,[42] by a written receipt or other paper passing between the parties.[43] Its payment may also be proved by a receipt upon the records of the court.[44] The return and receipts on the execution are also competent evidence of payment.[45] Where payment of the judgment is set up affirmatively in defense, defendant must assume the burden of proving it.[46]

b. Weight and Sufficiency. Payment or satisfaction of a judgment may be proved by presumptions as well as by positive evidence, and the sufficiency of the proofs must depend on the circumstances of each case,[47] a fair preponderance of the evidence or of corroborating circumstances being enough to establish the defense, or to disprove it, as the case may be,[48] and the court, in case of a conflict of testimony on this point on a rule or motion, being entitled to submit the issue of payment to a jury.[49]

B. Presumption of Payment From Lapse of Time — 1. In General. At common law, when twenty years have elapsed since the rendition of a judgment, without any payment or process upon it, or any acknowledgment of it or attempt to enforce it, there is a presumption of law that it has been paid;[50] and a similar rule has been enacted by statute in several of the states.[51] These rules naturally apply only to judgments for the payment of money.[52] Except under the statutes mentioned, the lapse of any number of years less than twenty will not usually raise a presumption of law that the judgment has been paid;[53] but the running of a shorter period of time, when accompanied by corroborative or persuasive circumstances, may be submitted to a jury as a ground for a presumption of fact.[54]

2. SUSPENSION OF STATUTE AND COMPUTATION OF TIME. A statute declaring that a judgment shall be presumed to be paid after the lapse of a certain time is a statute of limitations,[55] and begins to run from the time the judgment is entered up.[56] In this view the running of the statute, or of the common-law period of twenty years, may be interrupted by a stay of execution,[57] by an injunction restraining the collection of the judgment,[58] by the disability of the party from infancy,[59] or by the institution of special or collateral proceedings to collect the judgment or uncover property subject to it.[60]

52. The presumption of payment from lapse of time does not arise with reference to a decree in equity declaring a vendor's lien on land, and ordering its sale, but not adjudging any personal liability against defendant (Moore v. Williams, 129 Ala. 329, 29 So. 795); or, probably, with reference to the allowance of a claim by an assignee (Elsea v. Pryor, 87 Mo. App. 157); or to an order of court, made in proceedings to sell land of a habitual drunkard, which finds that he is indebted to a certain person in a named sum (Sheldon v. Mirick, 144 N. Y. 498, 39 N. E. 647); or to a judgment for the possession of land (Van Rensselaer v. Wright, 56 Hun (N. Y.) 39, 8 N. Y. Suppl. 885). But a judgment of foreclosure is within the statutory rule. 3. EVIDENCE TO REBUT PRESUMPTION. The presumption of payment of a judgment from the lapse of twenty years is not conclusive, but may be rebutted by any competent and satisfactory evidence.[61] Thus the issue and return of an execution unsatisfied within the limited time may be shown,[62] or the revival of the judgment by scire facias or other process,[63] or the impossibility of proceeding for its collection by reason of the closing of the courts.[64] The presumption may also be rebutted by proof of partial payments on the judgment within the twenty years,[65] or by a distinct acknowledgment of the judgment as an existing debt, such as to import a promise to pay it or a recognition of its enforceability.[66] Proof that the judgment debtor could not have paid the judgment will also suffice to rebut the presumption; but evidence merely of his poverty, or of his failure in business, will not suffice for this purpose;[67] there must be proof of his continued insolvency.[68]

As against state.— The presumption that a judgment more than twenty years old has been paid cannot be rebutted in favor of a state merely on the ground that nullum tempus occurrit regi. Tennessee v. Virgin, 36 Ga. 388.

62. Black v. Carpenter, 3 Baxt. (Tenn.) 350.

Evidence that plaintiff indorsed on the record as a credit on the judgment a sum which he owed to defendant will not rebut the presumption unless it further appears that the parties had a settlement of their dealings, after the recovery of the judgment, and agreed that said sum should be credited on the judgment. Acknowledgment without promise.— In Missouri it is held that a mere written acknowledgment that the judgment is unpaid, although not accompanied by any promise to pay it, is sufficient to rebut the presumption, as the statute is not one of limitations, but merely prescribes a rule of evidence. Chiles v. Buckner School Dist., 103 Mo. App. 240, 77 S. W. 82. But elsewhere it is held that there must be at least a distinct admission of the subsisting legal obligation of the debt, unaccompanied by any expressions or conduct indicative of an unwillingness to pay. In Pennsylvania it is said that the question whether declarations of the judgment debtor tending to show that the judgment has not been paid are sufficient to overcome the presumption of payment from lapse of time is for the jury. C. Payment by Joint Party or Third Person — 1. Payment by Joint Debtor — a. Effect in General. Payment of a judgment by one of two joint defendants operates as a satisfaction and extinguishment of the judgment as to all.[69] This rule applies to judgments against parties to negotiable paper.[70]

b. Assignment of Judgment. Under this rule it is not competent for one of the joint defendants on paying the judgment to take an assignment of it so as to wield it against his co-defendant, and it is none the less extinguished by the payment, although such an assignment be made.[71]

c. Rights of Party Paying. Defendant paying the judgment will generally be entitled to contribution from his co-defendants,[72] or according to some of the authorities to be subrogated to the rights of the judgment plaintiff to the extent to which the payment was for the benefit or on behalf of his co-defendant;[73] but

Campbell v. Pope, 96 Mo. 468, 10 S. W. 187.

Right of indorser to keep judgment alive.— There are cases holding that where a judgment is recovered by the holder of negotiable paper against the maker and the first and second indorsers, and the first indorser purchases and takes an assignment of the judgment from the holder, the transaction does not operate as an extinguishment of the judgment as against the maker. 2. Payment by Surety. Where judgment is rendered against two defendants, one of whom is surety for the other, a payment of the judgment by the surety will extinguish it,[75] unless the surety means to keep the judgment alive, for the purpose of forcing reimbursement from his principal, which may be done by causing an assignment of it to be made to a third person, or by seeking subrogation in equity.[76]

Payment returned to surety.— A judgment is not discharged, although paid by a surety on an appeal-bond, where it appears that the money was afterward returned to the surety on the judgment being vacated as to him. Rush v. Halcyon Steamboat Co., 84 N. C. 702.

Stipulation as to payment.— A deposit of money, made by a guarantor of notes on which a judgment has been taken, intended as security for the ultimate payment of the debt, and which it was stipulated should not operate as a payment of the debt, cannot be regarded as a payment of the judgment. Steffins v. Gurney, 61 Kan. 292, 59 Pac. 725.

Presumption as to suretyship.— Where a judgment is joint against two defendants both are regarded as principals, unless by proof aliunde one is shown to be a surety; and where one of them pays the whole amount of the judgment, he is not therefore entitled to an execution, for use against his co-defendant, unless he himself has been judicially determined to be only a surety. Laval v. Rowley, 17 Ind. 36.

Separate judgments.— Where individual judgments are entered against the principals of two promissory notes in which each appears as surety for the other, and one pays the judgment against himself, it will be presumed that the judgments are for separate debts, and the payment on the one judgment cannot be applied in satisfaction of the other. Caldwell v. Martin, 29 S. C. 22, 6 S. E. 857. And so where, in an action against a principal and surety in a title bond, upon which they are severally as well as jointly liable, separate judgments against them are obtained, but in different amounts, the judgment creditor may insist upon satisfaction of either, but if he accepts the amount of the smaller judgment, against the surety, and enters it satisfied in full, the debt itself is thereby extinguished, and all recourse on the larger judgment against the principal debtor is gone. 3. PAYMENT BY STRANGER — a. Effect in General. Although a judgment creditor is not bound to accept payment from a stranger,[77] yet if he does the judgment will be extinguished or not, according to the intention of the party paying; if such is the intention and agreement, the judgment may be kept alive for the latter's benefit, and he will succeed to the rights of the judgment creditor and be entitled to enforce it against the debtor,[78] except perhaps in cases where the money was furnished by the judgment debtor himself.[79] If the debtor joins with a stranger in paying off the judgment, taking an assignment to his attorney, the assignment will be valid as to the stranger, although void as to the debtor.[80]

Agreement of parties.— Where, before becoming surety on a note given for money borrowed to pay a judgment against the principal, a party stipulated with the principal that the judgment should remain open against the latter in order to indemnify the surety, the payment of the judgment by the principal with money raised on a note on which the surety was indorser did not extinguish the same. Patterson v. Clark, 96 Ga. 494, 23 S. E. 496.

Where the administrator of a surety became the assignee of a judgment against his intestate and the latter's principal, although he had assets in his hands sufficient to pay the judgment, it was held that the judgment was not satisfied by the assignment, but that he could enforce it against the principal. Part payment.— The payment of part of a judgment by a person other than the debtor is a sufficient consideration for an agreement by the creditor to cancel the judgment. Smith v. Gould, 84 Hun (N. Y.) 325, 32 N. Y. Suppl. 373.

Taking other security.— Where a third person advances the amount due on a judgment, taking at the same time a mortgage from defendant as security for such advance, it must be presumed that he intended to extinguish the judgment and rely exclusively on the mortgage. Phillips v. Behn, 19 Ga. 298.

Agreement for reimbursement.— Where defendant's attorney paid a judgment against his client, agreeing with plaintiff's attorney that if defendant refused to reimburse him the payment was to be refunded, and the satisfaction of the judgment returned, and plaintiff supposed that his judgment had been satisfied, but did not know by whom it was done, and defendant's attorney took no assignment of the judgment to protect himself, it was held that the judgment was satisfied. Trustee.— Payment of a judgment by a trustee out of the trust fund is as complete as if the debtor himself paid it. Keller v. Leib, 1 Penr. & W. (Pa.) 220.

Grantee of mortgaged premises.— Where a grantee assumes a mortgage, and on foreclosure pays the deficiency judgment, he cannot enforce the same as against the mortgagor. Matter of Browne, 35 Misc. (N. Y.) 362, 71 N. Y. Suppl. 1034. See, generally, MORTGAGES.

80. Harbeck v. Vanderbilt, 20 N. Y. 395.

b. Rights of Payer. A stranger paying the judgment will not be subrogated to the rights of the creditor as a matter of course, but only in pursuance of a specific agreement or understanding;[81] but it is not necessary that this should be evidenced by a formal and valid assignment of the judgment.[82]

4. Payment by Officer. Where the amount of a judgment is paid by a sheriff or other officer without any demand or request upon the part of defendant, the judgment is extinguished, and such officer cannot keep it alive for his own reimbursement,[83] unless he takes an assignment of the judgment in his own name, or to a third person in trust for himself.[84] But it has been held that the judgment is not extinguished, where the sheriff or other officer is compelled to pay it by legal proceedings,[85] nor where he pays a judgment recovered against himself, for his failure to enforce the first judgment.[86]

D. Merger, Assignment, and Release — 1. Merger of Judgments — a. In General. Where a judgment debtor buys in the title acquired on an execution sale under the judgment, the judgment is discharged, and a junior judgment will succeed to its priority of lien.[87] On the other hand a judgment being a general lien on all the debtor's real estate, it does not merge when the creditor acquires title to a particular portion of such lands, but may ordinarily be enforced against the remaining lands,[88] although as to the particular parcel the lien of the judgment is generally merged in the title.[89] The proposition last stated, however, does not apply where it is to the interest of the creditor to keep the lien alive, but in such case his intention to prevent a merger may be presumed.[90] There is ordinarily no merger of a judgment when additional security for the same debt is given, such as a mortgage.[91]

b. Cumulative Judgments.[92] According to the weight of authority, where an existing judgment is sued on as a cause of action, and a new judgment recovered on it, there is no merger of the first judgment, nor is it extinguished without satisfaction of the second;[93] and the rule is the same where the second judgment is auxiliary or collateral to the first.[94] But it is otherwise where two judgments are recovered upon the same cause of action; although the second be for a less amount than the first, its payment will extinguish both.[95]

E. 861, holding that where, in an action on a judgment which constituted the only lien on the whole estate of the debtor at the time of his death, a new judgment is obtained against his heirs, the first judgment is not merged in the second, so as to let in subsequent judgment creditors to rank equally with plaintiff as creditors of the estate. But where a person brings an action on a judgment which never was a lien on the land of the judgment debtor against his heirs, instead of suing to revive it, and obtains a new judgment, the old judgment is merged in the new, and he is entitled to rank only as a creditor of the estate holding a debt of record.

Virginia.— Kelly v. Hamblen, 98 Va. 383, 36 S. E. 491, holding that while a judgment may not be divided into different causes of action, yet a suit brought to enforce the lien thereof, prosecuted in good faith, although ineffectually, is not a bar to a subsequent suit by the same complainant against the same defendant to enforce satisfaction of the same judgment, although courts of equity, by their decrees for costs, will prevent the capricious or oppressive exercise of the right, and protect litigants against unnecessary and vexatious litigation.

Judgment against administrator.— Where plaintiff recovers a personal judgment against an administrator, and then recovers on such judgment a judgment on his bond, the judgments are not merged; they are separate securities for the same debt, and satisfaction of one discharges both. Townsend v. Whitney, 75 N. Y. 425; McLean v. McLean, 90 N. C. 530. c. Forfeited Forthcoming or Delivery Bond. In several states, where by statute the forfeiture of a forthcoming bond, or bond for the delivery of property under levy, creates per se a new judgment on the bond, it is held that the original judgment is merged in such statutory judgment and thereby satisfied.[96] But elsewhere the forfeiture of such a bond gives a right to take or enter a new judgment, but does not of itself amount to a judgment, and therefore there will be no merger of the original judgment upon the mere forfeiture of the bond, but only upon the entry of the new judgment.[97]

2. Assignment To or For Judgment Debtor. The assignment of a judgment to defendant therein satisfies and extinguishes it;[98] not so, however, where the assignee, although liable for the debt evidenced by the judgment, is not a party to the judgment,[99] or where he occupies the position of a surety only.[1]

full,"[12] although it is otherwise if the agreement is evidenced by a sealed instrument acknowledging satisfaction,[13] it is now generally held that compromise and part payment of a judgment on a verbal agreement that the same shall discharge it in full will operate, especially under equitable circumstances, as a discharge of the judgment.[14] This is clearly the case where the partial payment is accompanied by an additional consideration, either in the shape of a thing of value or of some act burdensome or inconvenient to the debtor and possibly beneficial to the creditor,[15] or where the consideration is furnished by a third person.[16]

c. Joint Debtors. At common law a release given to one of several joint judgment debtors on his paying his proportionate share of the judgment or on other consideration releases the judgment as to all,[17] unless the creditor expressly reserves the right to enforce the judgment as to the others.[18] This also results where one of the debtors is released by operation of law, as in the case of a surety relieved from liability by an unauthorized extension of time to his principal.[19]

But in many states, either by force of statute or of the settled rulings of the courts, it is now held competent for the creditor to hold the other defendants liable on the judgment after having released one.[20]

d. Agreement to Release or Satisfy. Upon a sufficient consideration[21] a judgment creditor may make a valid and binding agreement, either at the time the judgment is entered,[22] or subsequently, to release and satisfy it on other terms than receiving payment of its amount, as where he agrees to accept real or personal property, services, the transfer of another debt, or an exchange of securities.[23] If the consideration is already vested, the agreement itself operates in law as a satisfaction of the judgment;[24] but if the contract is executory, there is no release of the judgment until it is performed,[25] and while the creditor cannot rescind it without good cause,[26] the debtor is bound to perform its conditions punctually and fully, in default of which the creditor is remitted to his original rights under the judgment.[27]

c. Judgments Between Different Parties. In order that one judgment may properly be set off against another, it is necessary that there should be mutuality of parties,[49] and a difference of parties in the two judgments will prevent their set-off, unless there are peculiar circumstances making it equitable.[50] If there are joint plaintiffs or defendants in one of the judgments, it cannot ordinarily be set off against a judgment in which only one of them is concerned,[51] although some of the authorities permit it where each of the joint defendants is liable for the whole amount of the judgment,[52] and the set-off is proper where one of them is liable only in the character of a surety,[53] or is a nominal or formal party,[54] or where the owner of the other judgment is insolvent.[55]

the assignor was insolvent at the time of the assignment;[73] but the rule does not apply where the assignment was fraudulently made for the very purpose of preventing a set-off.[74]

(III) Effect of Notice or Knowledge. Where the assignee has notice of a judgment against his assignor, such as may be set off against the assigned judgment, he takes subject to the right of set-off;[75] and where the person seeking the set-off has no notice or knowledge of a prior assignment of the judgment against himself, the set-off will be allowed;[76] but one who brings suit against his judgment creditor, or recovers judgment therein, after notice of an assignment of the judgment against him, cannot set off the judgment which he recovers.[77]

4. Proceedings to Compel Set-Off. One seeking a set-off of judgment against judgment must apply to the court in which the judgment against himself was recovered, that being the court which has control over that judgment, while he himself always has power to credit or satisfy the judgment in his favor.[78] Such application may ordinarily be made by motion,[79] on which no formal pleadings are necessary;[80] although a formal action or a bill in equity is proper where the rights of the parties are complicated or not definitely fixed, or where there are intervening equities,[81] and in such a case the court may meanwhile protect the rights of the parties by enjoining the collection of one or both of the judgments or otherwise.[82]

5. Operation and Effect of Set-Off. The allowance of a set-off of judgment against judgment extinguishes them both if they are equal in amount, or satisfies the smaller judgment in full and the larger proportionately.[83] But if the set-off is refused, it leaves the rights of the parties as before, and does not prejudice the right of one of them to require the sheriff to set off executions in his hands on the two judgments.[84]

6. Set-Off of Judgment Against Claim — a. In General. A judgment may ordinarily be pleaded as a set-off in an action between the same parties on a different claim or demand,[85] provided it appears to be in force and unsatisfied,[86] although some decisions refuse to allow this where the judgment was not recovered until after the commencement of the action in which it is pleaded.[87] Where a judgment is so pleaded, a recovery by plaintiff will either extinguish the judgment or satisfy it pro tanto according to its amount in relation to plaintiff's claim.[88]

b. Judgment Between Different Parties. The set-off of a judgment against a claim cannot be allowed unless there is a substantial identity of the parties;[89] but a judgment against two parties, each of whom is separately liable for it, may be set off against the individual claim of one of them.[90]

c. Assigned Judgments and Claims. The assignee of a judgment may use it by way of set-off in an action brought against him by the debtor in the judgment,[91] provided he acquired the judgment before the commencement of such

Proc. 60, where it is said that, while a judgment may be the subject of a counter-claim, it is but a contract debt of record, and is governed by the general rule that a joint debt cannot be set off against a separate debt, or a separate debt against a joint debt.

action.[92] But on the other hand this right of set-off cannot be exercised to the prejudice of an assignee without notice.[93]

7. Set-Off of Claim Against Judgment — a. In General. In an action or other proceeding to collect a judgment, the debtor may set off any legal demands against plaintiff which he owned at the time of bringing the suit, and upon which he could have brought a suit in his own name;[94] but this is not allowed where the claim proposed to be set off is unliquidated or disputed,[95] nor where it is a matter which could have been pleaded in defense to the action in which the judgment was rendered,[96] nor where the claim is joint and the judgment several or vice versa.[97] In some jurisdictions it is held, however, contrary to the general rule that the claim cannot be set off unless reduced to judgment.[98]

b. Assigned Judgments. It is generally held that the assignee of a judgment takes it subject to the right of defendant to set off against it any valid claims which he has against the assignor, and which would be good as a set-off against the judgment in such assignor's hands.[99] But according to some of the cases the judgment debtor can set off only such claims or demands as accrued to him or were acquired by him before receiving notice of the assignment of the judgment,[1] not those accruing or acquired with knowledge of the assignment.[2]

F. Satisfaction by Proceedings on Final Process — 1. Levy of Execution — a. In General. The levy of an execution upon sufficient personal property of the judgment debtor to pay the judgment amounts prima facie and so long as the levy continues in force to a satisfaction of the judgment, as between the parties thereto.[3] And if the judgment creditor denies the actual satisfaction of the judgment, the burden is on him to prove that the execution and levy for some sufficient reason failed to result in payment of the judgment.[4]

b. Levy Unproductive or Insufficient. The presumption of satisfaction of a judgment from levy on personal property is rebutted by proof that defendant was not in fact deprived of his property as the result of the levy,[5] that he tortiously

Limited lien.— A judgment limited to be a lien only upon certain real estate is not satisfied by a sheriff's sale of the property to which its lien is restricted. McMurray v. Hopper, 43 Pa. St. 468.

20. McDevitt's Appeal, 70 Pa. St. 373. The judgment is discharged where the sheriff has received the proceeds of the sale, although the money is tied up in his hands by an injunction procured by another creditor. Daboval v. Escurix, 8 La. 96. So where the money was paid into court but lost by the failure of a bank in which by agreement of parties it was deposited. Cake v. Bird, (Pa. 1888) 15 Atl. 774. But the possession of money by the sheriff, arising from the sale of lands, sufficient to satisfy a judgment earlier than that under which the sale was made, is not per se a satisfaction of the earlier judgment. State Bank v. Winger, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 295, 18 Am. Dec. 633. And conversely the redemption by a junior judgment creditor of lands sold on execution is not a satisfaction of his judgment either at law or in equity, although the premises to which he acquires title by such redemption are worth more than the money paid to redeem. Van Horne v. McLaren, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 285, 35 Am. Dec. 685.

becomes the purchaser at the sale, the judgment is satisfied in full if he bids the whole amount due him, otherwise pro tanto.[21]

b. Void or Irregular Sale. If a sale on execution is set aside or held to be invalid by reason of any defects or irregularities, the judgment is not discharged, and if satisfaction has been entered it will be vacated.[22] But if the sale was invalid because the debtor had no title to the property levied on, it is generally held that the judgment is nevertheless satisfied, especially if the judgment creditor himself was the purchaser,[23] although this is denied in some jurisdictions,[24] and it appears that a court of equity may relieve him from the consequences of his ineffectual purchase.[25]

3. Payment of Execution. A judgment is satisfied by a payment made to the sheriff or other officer holding an execution on the judgment,[26] and having authority thereunder to receive the payment,[27] of a sufficient amount in lawful money;[28]

27. The judgment is not satisfied by payment to the officer where the execution in his hands has lost its vitality (Chapman v. Cowles, 41 Ala. 103, 91 Am. Dec. 508; Harris v. Ellis, 30 Tex. 4, 94 Am. Dec. 296. But see Byrne v. Taylor, 2 Rob. and this is true whether the payment is made by the debtor himself or the money is loaned or advanced to him.[29]

4. RETURN OF EXECUTION. The return of an execution "satisfied" is presumptive,[30] or according to some of the cases conclusive,[31] evidence of the satisfaction of the judgment; but not where it recites an irregular or unauthorized act on the part of the officer.[32] On the other hand no satisfaction is shown from the mere fact that an execution was issued and never returned.[33] But if the officer actually received satisfaction of the execution, the judgment is discharged, although he makes no return on the execution or makes a false return.[34]

5. PERSONS JOINTLY LIABLE. A joint judgment against two defendants is prima facie satisfied by levy of execution on the property of one of them;[35] but there is no absolute satisfaction if the levy proves unproductive or the property is released or restored to the debtor,[36] except in the case where the other defendant occupies the position of a mere surety.[37]

6. ARREST OF DEFENDANT ON CAPIAS OR EXECUTION — a. Effect in General. The arrest and imprisonment of a judgment debtor on an execution or a capias ad satisfaciendum is a satisfaction of the judgment in such sense that while the imprisonment lasts no proceedings can be taken against his property;[38] but it does not work an absolute discharge or extinguishment of the judgment.[39]

b. Release or Escape of Debtor. At common law the discharge of defendant from custody under a capias, by the voluntary act of plaintiff, operated as an absolute satisfaction of the judgment.[40] But the more modern rulings repudiate this doctrine,[41] and it is held also that further proceedings on the judgment are not precluded if defendant regains his liberty by an escape,[42] by the act of the law,[43] by a discharge under the insolvency laws,[44] or by reason of plaintiff's refusing to pay the prison fees.[45]

c. Persons Jointly Liable. It was also the rule of the common law that the arrest of one of two joint defendants on capias suspended the right to take any proceedings on the judgment against the other,[46] and that the release or escape of defendant who was imprisoned discharged the judgment as to all defendants.[47] But the more recent decisions hold that neither the arrest of the one defendant nor his escape will operate as a satisfaction of the judgment as to the other.[48]

G. Satisfaction of One of Several Judgments on Same Cause of Action — 1. In General. Where two judgments are recovered upon the same cause of action against the same defendant, as where there are different judgments in different states, or where judgment is recovered on a security given for the payment of the original judgment, there can be but one satisfaction, and therefore the payment or discharge of either judgment satisfies the other.[49] This rule,

2. Persons Jointly Liable. Where several judgments have been rendered against parties jointly and severally liable on the same obligation, and one of the judgments is paid, such payment operates as a satisfaction of all the judgments, except as to costs,[51] and except where the judgments are unequal in amount, in which case the payment of the smaller satisfies the larger only pro tanto.[52] So also in actions of tort, where plaintiff recovers separate judgments against the joint tort-feasors, the satisfaction of any one of the judgments will release the other defendants from liability,[53] saving plaintiff's right to elect de melioribus damnis, of which he cannot be deprived by the payment into court of the amount of the smaller judgment.[54]

H. Operation and Effect of Satisfaction — 1. In General. The payment and satisfaction of a judgment operates to extinguish it and to put an end to its vitality for all purposes whatsoever,[55] and also to extinguish the original debt or claim,[56] except where the satisfaction was obtained wrongfully or fraudulently, in which case, on its being revoked or vacated, the judgment will again be in force.[57] It is also generally held that a judgment once fully paid and satisfied cannot be kept alive by the agreement of the parties to stand as security for other debts or liabilities, whether to the same or another plaintiff,[58] although in some states this is allowed.[59] But there can be no complete satisfaction of a judgment by payment unless the payment covers interest, if any,[60] and the costs chargeable against defendant.[61]

2. Recovery of Payments. Money collected on execution or paid in satisfaction of a judgment may be recovered back on the ground that the judgment has subsequently been reversed or vacated,[62] and as well against an assignee as against the original plaintiff,[63] or where it appears that by mistake the judgment has been paid twice;[64] but not on the ground that the execution was irregularly issued, both

I. Entry of Satisfaction and Vacation Thereof — 1. Entry of Satisfaction of Record — a. In General. According to the usual practice, when a judgment is satisfied, an entry acknowledging or certifying that fact should be made on the record or judgment docket[67] by the holder of the judgment in person or his attorney of record,[68] although in some jurisdictions it is to be made by the clerk of the court on direction of the plaintiff or the owner of the judgment.[69]

b. Execution of Satisfaction Piece. A satisfaction piece is a written memorandum made by the holder of a judgment on receiving satisfaction of it,[70] duly executed by him,[71] and witnessed or otherwise proved,[72] acknowledging satisfaction of the judgment,[73] delivered to the judgment debtor,[74] and thereupon filed and entered on the judgment-roll.[75]

c. Entry of Credits on Partial Satisfaction. Partial payments on a judgment

An entry on the docket of the filing of a receipt of part of the sum due on a judgment against two, in full of the whole judgment against one, is not a legal entry of satisfaction or a release of the judgment. Campbell v. Booth, 8 Md. 107.

Indexing satisfaction.— Although it is a common practice in Pennsylvania to note the satisfaction of a judgment on the index, it is optional with the protbonotary to do so, as the judgment is the proper place to look for an entry of satisfaction. McIntire v. Irwin, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 457.

A receipt in full given by plaintiff to a former sheriff upon an execution issued to his successor is not an acknowledgment of record to the satisfaction of the judgment. Spruill v. Bateman, 20 N. C. 627.

A quitclaim deed, purporting to release a judgment lien, but so recorded as to omit the particular tract of land on which the lien rests, does not satisfy the judgment. Huff v. Morton, 83 Mo. 399.

In Pennsylvania the proper method of entering satisfaction of a judgment obtained under the act of Feb. 24, 1806 (Purdon Dig. p. 825, pl. 32), on a judgment bond, recovered without the agency of an attorney or declaration filed, where the amount is not collected by execution, is that it shall be entered upon the record by the holder, personally or by attorney, such satisfaction to be attested by the prothonotary, who cannot be required upon plaintiff's order to enter such satisfaction. Duty to prepare.— A judgment debtor demanding a satisfaction-piece is bound to offer the instrument to be executed to the creditor, and to offer to pay the expense of its execution. Pettengill v. Mather, 16 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 399; Carr v. Coulter, 2 Ont. Pr. 226.

Execution by corporation.— A satisfaction-piece of a judgment in favor of a corporation, which shows on its face that it was executed by its president in his official capacity, is binding upon the corporation, although not executed in its name or under its seal. Booth v. Farmers', etc., Nat. Bank, 50 N. Y. 396.

Execution by attorney.— Plaintiff's signature to the satisfaction-piece will be dispensed with, and his attorney in the cause be authorized to acknowledge satisfaction, upon its being shown that the attorney is authorized by plaintiff to arrange the claim, and that the delay in obtaining plaintiff's signature will be prejudicial (Rudall v. Hurd, 3 Can. L. J. 14; Pawson v. Wightman, 2 Can. L. J. 184), or where the amount of the judgment is small and plaintiff resides without the jurisdiction (Montreal Bank v. Cronk, 3 Can. L. J. 32), or where plaintiff resides abroad and has given a written authority to an attorney to acknowledge satisfaction for him (Darling v. Wright, 3 Can. L. J. 50).

should be credited of record,[76] and it will be so ordered by the court on proper proceedings for that purpose,[77] and on the demand of a person entitled to such relief;[78] and conversely, a false or mistaken entry of a credit may be ordered corrected or vacated.[79]

d. Effect of Entry of Satisfaction. A satisfaction of a judgment, entered of record by the act of the parties, is prima facie evidence that the creditor has received payment of the amount of the judgment or its equivalent,[80] and operates as an extinguishment of the debt;[81] but as it is only in the nature of a receipt, it may be explained, qualified, or even contradicted by parol evidence.[82] But an order of court, made on due application and hearing, requiring satisfaction to be entered, is a judicial act, and entitled to all the respect due to a record,[83] although it may be impeached for fraud or collusion.[84]

2. Proceedings to Compel Satisfaction — a. Grounds For Relief. Where a judgment creditor has received actual payment of the judgment or any equivalent therefor, or the obligation of the judgment is otherwise discharged, but he refuses to acknowledge or enter satisfaction, the court having control of the judgment may compel him to satisfy it, or may order satisfaction to be entered officially.[85] But such action can only be based on matter arising subsequent to the

76. Wolford v. Bowen, 57 Minn. 267, 59 N. W. 195. Where a judgment debtor has been compelled by garnishment to pay a debt of his judgment creditor, the amount so paid should be allowed as a credit on the judgment. Brandenburgh v. Beach, 32 S. W. 168, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 560.

An entry of credit on a judgment by order of court, after the court has adjourned, has not the same effect as a remittitur. Rowan v. People, 18 Ill. 159.

Evidence.— The burden of proof is on the party asserting that payments have been made on a judgment and should be credited of record (Fuhrman v. Fuhrman, 13 Lanc. Bar (Pa.) 123), and the evidence should be clear and satisfactory (Bishop v. Goodhart, 135 Pa. St. 374, 19 Atl. 1026).

judgment, not for causes accruing prior to its rendition or which might have been set up in defense to the action,[86] or which were litigated and decided on a previous motion or other proceeding.[87]

b. Proceedings. An application to the court to compel satisfaction of a judgment which has been paid should be in the form of a motion, entitled as of the original action,[88] or a rule to show cause why it should not be satisfied of record.[89] If the facts relied on are seriously disputed and controverted, the court should not undertake to decide the question in a summary manner, but should direct an issue to be tried by a jury,[90] or order a reference,[91] or dismiss the motion and remit the parties to a regular action.[92] On granting such an application the satisfaction of the judgment should be entered of record; it is not proper to cancel or strike off the judgment.[93] An order dismissing the motion is appealable.[94]

Judgment on judgment.— Where an action is brought on a judgment of a federal circuit court, and a judgment recovered thereon in another court, if plaintiff is entitled to continue in force his judgment in the latter court, and enforce payment thereon, against the future-acquired property of defendant, satisfaction of the judgment of the federal court, which is the foundation of the second judgment, will not be entered of record. Griswold v. Hill, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 5,836, 2 Paine 492.

Rule in Pennsylvania.— A statute empowers the court itself to enter satisfaction of a judgment on due proof that it has been fully paid. But this, being in derogation of the common law, must be restricted to the very case of actual payment in full. Not everything which could be given in evidence under a plea of payment in a pending adversary proceeding before judgment may be treated as actual payment after verdict and judgment. Where execution was issued on a judgment, and defendant tendered the debt, interest, and costs to plaintiff, and then obtained a rule why he should not be allowed to pay the same to the sheriff in full satisfaction of the judgment, and the rule was made absolute and the sheriff returned the execution "stayed by order of court," it was held that this amounted to no more than an inferential satisfaction of the judgment, as it would not be clear and sufficient notice to one searching the title that the lien of the judgment was discharged. Allen v. Conrad, 51 Pa. St. 487.

94. Ives v. Phelps, 16 Minn. 451.

c. Parties and Process. The court will not order satisfaction of a judgment to be entered unless all the parties interested therein are brought before it and have an opportunity to be heard,[95] and an order made without notice to a party in interest will be void.[96] But if the proceeding is by motion or rule, it must be solely between the original parties to the judgment, and no stranger can be brought in or intervene.[97]

d. Pleading and Evidence. In an action to have a judgment declared satisfied, the petition or complaint must clearly allege the fact of payment or the other circumstances relied on as discharging the judgment.[98] On a motion or rule for the same purpose the affidavits of the parties as to the alleged payment are admissible,[99] although not in contradiction of the record,[1] and an uncontradicted affidavit of payment will generally be sufficient to justify the relief asked,[2] unless it only shows grounds existing before the entry of the judgment;[3] but in case of controversy as to the facts the court will not grant the motion unless the evidence in support of it is entirely clear and satisfactory.[4] The burden of proving any ground relied on affirmatively in opposition to the motion falls on the judgment creditor.[5]

e. Actions and Penalties For Failure to Satisfy. In several of the states, by statute, penalties are provided against a judgment creditor who neglects or refuses to satisfy a judgment of record when the same has been paid, within a certain period after being requested to do so.[6] To sustain an action on such a statute

5. This rule applies where the amount of the judgment has been paid, but the creditor alleges an express agreement of the parties permitting him to keep the judgment alive (Wood v. Currey, 49 Cal. 359), or where he gave a written acknowledgment of satisfaction of the judgment, but alleges that it was void for want of consideration or otherwise (Cavender v. Grove, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,530, 4 Biss. 269). So there is a legal presumption that the person in whose favor the judgment was obtained is the owner thereof, and if he is not, it is a matter of defense. Kittles v. Williams, 64 S. C. 229, 41 S. E. 975.

6. See Henry v. Sims, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 187 (holding that a judgment in scire facias on a mortgage is such a judgment as comes within the statute); Marston v. Tryon, 108 Pa. St. 270 (holding that to sustain an action on the statute it must be shown that the creditor was personally requested to enter satisfaction, and that a request made to the attorney who conducted the suit for him is not sufficient).

An assignee of the judgment is subject to the statutory penalty for failure to credit partial payments on the record. But the judgment debtor cannot complain of such failure when the record of the judgment was so defective that it was insufficient to create the refusal must be wilful, and not based on an honest contention that the judgment has not been paid,[7] and the failure to enter satisfaction must be due to the creditor's own fault or neglect, not to that of an officer over whom he has no control.[8] If the statute awards damages instead of a fixed penalty, the jury are at liberty to consider all the circumstances by which the debtor suffered vexation and inconvenience.[9] The remedy thus provided is exclusive;[10] but in the absence of such a statute, an action of trespass on the case will lie for the same purpose.[11]

3. VACATING ENTRY OF SATISFACTION — a. Grounds in General. An entry of satisfaction of a judgment may be vacated or stricken off in pursuance of an agreement of the parties to that effect,[12] or when it appears to have been irregularly or improperly entered,[13] when it operates to the disadvantage of a third person having a lien on the judgment or entitled to be protected or secured by it,[14] when the satisfaction was obtained without consideration or on a consideration which has failed,[15] or by duress or extortion,[16] or when there has been a failure to perform the conditions of a settlement between the parties on which the satisfaction was based,[17] but not on account of any matters antedating the judgment or affecting the original transaction.[18]

b. Mistaken or Fraudulent Entry. If an entry of satisfaction of a judgment on the record is made by mistake, fraud, or by falsely personating plaintiff, the court, on notice to the parties and proof of the facts, may order it vacated or stricken off.[19] So a creditor whose judgment is entered satisfied by an attorney who had no authority to make the entry may maintain an action or application to have the entry canceled.[20] And the same rule applies where the entry of satisfaction is made by one of two joint judgment creditors without the authority of the other and without receiving the whole amount due.[21]

c. Void or Irregular Sale. Where property is sold under execution on a judgment and bought in by the judgment creditor, or the proceeds collected from the purchaser, and satisfaction entered, but the sale proves to be invalid or is afterward vacated, the entry of satisfaction will be stricken off on the application of the creditor.[22]

d. Proceedings. An application to vacate an entry of satisfaction of a judgment must be made in the court which rendered it, a court of another county having no authority in the premises,[23] and it must be seasonably made, plaintiff clearing himself of any imputation of laches.[24] Ordinarily such application may be summary, in the form of a motion or scire facias;[25] but where there is conflicting evidence upon material questions of fact, the parties should be remitted to a regular action.[26] In either case all parties affected by the judgment or claim-

hand, notwithstanding the time for issuing execution has expired;[34] and it is not necessary to allege or show any other cause for suing on the judgment than the fact that it remains unpaid.[35] In some states, although not in others, it is held that the validity of a judgment is not exhausted by one action thereon, but the creditor is entitled to pursue successive actions until satisfaction is obtained.[36] But where the judgment has been entered for an entire sum payable at one time, an assignee of a part of it cannot maintain an action on his interest.[37]

2. Judgments on Which Action May Be Brought[38] — a. In General. To be available as a cause of action the judgment must be a definitive and personal judgment for the payment of money,[39] final in its character and not merely interlocutory,[40] remaining unsatisfied,[41] and capable of immediate enforcement.[42]

The pendency of an appeal, writ of error, or petition for review will not deprive plaintiff of his right to sue on the judgment, unless there has been a stay of proceedings.[43] A judgment which is void will not sustain an action,[44] but it it not material in this connection that it may be erroneous.[45] Although a judgment rendered by an inferior court is not a debt of record, yet it is a legal obligation on which an action will lie.[46] Causes of action on several judgments cannot be united in one suit, unless all the debtors in the judgments are the same and are made defendants to the action.[47]

c. Orders in Special Proceedings. An action may be brought on a final order in a special proceeding establishing of record the fact of an indebtedness.[51]

3. Form of Action. Debt is the proper form of action on a judgment,[52] although in some states it appears that assumpsit will lie.[53] It is an entirely new action and not a continuation of the former one.[54] It should be brought in a court of law; a court of equity cannot be called upon to carry into effect a judgment rendered at law,[55] unless there is some special ground of equity jurisdiction.[56]

4. Conditions and Limitations on Right to Sue — a. In General. It is not a condition precedent to the right to sue on a judgment that the creditor shall have exhausted his remedies by execution,[57] that an execution issued on the judgment shall have been returned,[58] or that there shall have been a demand and refusal of payment.[59] But in some states the courts, to avoid unnecessary and vexatious litigation, refuse to allow the maintenance of an action on a judgment without the showing of some special and adequate cause therefor, or else certain conditions and limitations are prescribed by statute.[60]

Louisiana.— In this state it is said that the necessity of bringing a separate action to enforce a judgment exists in two cases: (1) Where it is a foreign judgment; and (2) where, in the case of a domestic judgment, the debtor is dead and his estate is under administration. New York.— Code Civ. b. Leave of Court to Sue. In several states it is provided by statute that an action at law upon a domestic judgment cannot be prosecuted without leave of the court first obtained, and generally upon a showing of good cause and after notice to the adverse party.[61] In some states it is held that the granting of such leave is a jurisdictional requisite which must precede the institution of the suit, so that if it is omitted a motion for leave to sue cannot be granted nunc pro tunc, and a judgment in the action is invalid;[62] but elsewhere it is considered that such leave may be granted retrospectively after suit brought, if defendant loses no substantial right thereby, and the order would have been made if regularly applied for.[63] The leave to sue must be obtained from the court which rendered the judgment,[64] and the fact of its having been granted must be set forth in the declaration or complaint.[65] These statutes generally apply only to actions between the original parties to the judgment, and therefore do not require an assignee of the judgment to obtain leave of court before suing on it.[66]

B. Jurisdiction and Venue.[67] An action on a judgment may be brought in the court which rendered it,[68] or in any other court having jurisdiction.[69] It was formerly thought that such an action was a local one, and must be brought in the county where the record remained;[70] but it is now held that the action may be brought in any county in which jurisdiction of the defendant's person can be obtained.[71]

C. Parties — 1. Plaintiffs. An action on a judgment must be prosecuted by the real and beneficial owner of it,[72] whose title to it must appear of record or by some formal transfer,[73] and the suit cannot be maintained by a third person not answering these conditions, although the judgment may in some way define his rights or inure to his benefit or protection.[74] In case of joint judgment creditors, all must join in a suit on the judgment.[75]

2. Defendants — a. In General. The action should be brought against the defendant of record in the judgment or his successor in interest,[76] although it is not necessary to join a merely nominal or formal party,[77] or a surety or indorser of the original contract or claim.[78] If the judgment was rendered against defendant by a wrong name, he may be sued on it in his right name with a proper allegation.[79] Where plaintiff sues in the character of an equitable assignee of the judgment, his assignor must be joined as a defendant,[80] but not where the assignment was legal, unconditional, and absolute.[81]

b. Joint Defendants. At common law, where an action is brought on a judgment rendered against joint defendants, they must all be made parties,[82] unless one of them is dead since the judgment;[83] but in several states, by force of statutes, such a judgment is a joint and several obligation, and therefore one or more of the debtors may be sued alone.[84] Also parties who were named as defendants in the original action, but who were not included in the judgment because not served with process, should not be made defendants to an action on the judgment.[85]

D. Time to Sue and Limitations[86] — 1. In General. A judgment is not a "specialty" or "contract, agreement, or promise in writing," within the meaning of those terms as used in statutes of limitations;[87] but actions on judgments are commonly limited by statutes specially applicable to them, either proscribing such actions after the lapse of a certain number of years from the rendition of the judgment,[88] after the issuance of the last execution upon it, or after a motion or other proceeding to revive it.[89] A new statute of limitations may be made retrospectively applicable to existing judgments, without being unconstitutional for that reason, since it affects the remedy only;[90] and a state statute limiting the time within which actions may be brought in its courts on judgments of the federal courts does not deny to them the credit and efficacy which is due to them under the constitution.[91]

2. What Judgments Are Within Statute. If the statute of limitations is applicable to "judgments" generally, it includes domestic as well as foreign judgments.[92] But such statutes are ordinarily limited to judgments rendered by courts of record,[93] including the probate courts,[94] and to such as are final[95] and capable of enforcement by execution or in the nature of money judgments.[96] The statute as usually expressed will apply to judgments by confession,[97] to awards of damages in condemnation proceedings,[98] and to judgments in partition awarding owelty,[99] but not to judgments in tax cases.[1]

3. Accrual of Cause of Action. The statute of limitations begins to run against a judgment from the date of its rendition or of its entry,[2] provided it is then final and suable,[3] and is not stayed or superseded for any cause,[4] and in computing the period of limitations the day on which the judgment was entered is to be excluded.[5] But where an action on a judgment is expressly prohibited or would not be entertained by the courts until after the lapse of a certain time or the occurring of a particular event the statute does not begin to run until the accrual of a cause of action upon it.[6] The statute does not run against a judgment in favor of the state; but if such a judgment is assigned it begins to run against the assignee from the date of the assignment.[7] When a judgment is rendered, payable in instalments, the statute of limitations begins to run against it from the time fixed for the payment of each instalment for the part then payable.[8]

4. CIRCUMSTANCES TOLLING THE STATUTE. As a general rule nothing is allowed to interrupt the running of the statute of limitations against a judgment save some exception found in the statute itself;[9] and for this reason it is commonly held that the statute is not tolled by an acknowledgment or new promise of payment,[10] and not upon its rendition. Herrlich v. McDonald, 104 Cal. 551, 38 Pac. 360; Edwards v. Hellings, 103 Cal. 204, 37 Pac. 218; Trenouth v. Farrington, 54 Cal. 273.

Entry nunc pro tunc.— Where a judgment is rendered nunc pro tunc, the statute begins to run from the date of the order therefor, not from the date as of which it is entered. Borer v. Chapman, 119 U. S. 587, 7 S. Ct. 342, 30 L. ed. 532.

Right to issue execution.— The time within which an execution may issue is not to be excluded from the computation of the period of limitation against an action on the judgment. 3. See the cases infra, this note.

Time for appeal.— In California, under a statutory provision that an action is pending from the time of its commencement until the time for an appeal has passed, a right of action on a judgment does not accrue, and the statute of limitations does not begin to run from the entry of the judgment, but from the time of its finality, one year after entry, if no appeal is taken. Feeney v. Hinckley, 134 Cal. 467, 66 Pac. 580, 86 Am. St. Rep. 290. In Illinois, where a judgment is rendered in the circuit court, and an appeal is prayed but not perfected until after the adjournment of the court for the term, the statute of limitations begins to run from the last day of the term. Peoria County v. Gordon, 82 Ill. 435.

Judgment against non-resident.— Where seven years are allowed in which to reverse a judgment against an absent defendant, plaintiff is not meanwhile precluded from bringing debt on the judgment. Williams v. Preston, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 600, 20 Am. Dec. 179.

Unliquidated amount.— Where judgment is confessed for a sum "to be ascertained by the prothonotary," the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the amount has been so ascertained. Wills v. Gibson, 7 Pa. St. 154.

6. In Iowa, it is provided by statute (Miller Code Iowa, § 2521) that no action shall be brought on any judgment within fifteen years after its rendition, except on leave of court for good cause shown, unless the record thereof is lost or destroyed; and in a case where there is no loss or destruction of the record, and no cause exists for suing on the judgment within the fifteen years, the statute of limitations does not begin to run against it until the expiration of the fifteen years. Weiser v. McDowell, 93 Iowa 772, 61 N. W. 1904. In Louisiana the statute begins to run from the death of the judgment debtor, as until then there is no necessity for bringing a suit on the judgment. Beckham's Succession, 16 La. Ann. 352.

nor by the debtor's absence from the state.[11] But in some jurisdictions the statutes are so framed as to exclude from the period of limitations any time during which the right to execution is stayed or suspended by legal process;[12] and in others the statute begins to run from the date or return of the last execution issued on the judgment, so that it may be interrupted by taking out an execution,[13] or in some states by proceedings for the revival of the judgment by scire facias or otherwise.[14]

5. TRANSFERRED JUDGMENT OF JUSTICE'S COURT. Where a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace or other inferior court is transferred to a superior court by filing a transcript, it is held in some states that the statute of limitations begins to run from the time of filing the transcript;[15] but elsewhere it runs from the date of the rendition of the judgment in the inferior court.[16]

Infancy.— In an action on a judgment defendant cannot plead that he was an infant at the time the judgment was rendered.

tion allowed in some states, he was prevented from making his defense in the original action, without any negligence or fault on his own part.[19] But this rule does not apply to a defense which did not exist at the time of the original action,[20] or to a counter-claim which defendant was not obliged to interpose, and did not interpose, in that suit, although he might have done so,[21] or where the action on the judgment is not between the original parties.[22]

2. WANT OF JURISDICTION. It is a good defense to an action on a judgment that the court which rendered it had no jurisdiction, either of the subject-matter of the action or of the person of the defendant,[23] and according to the majority of the decisions this may be shown even in contradiction of the record,[24] although some refuse to allow the plea except where the want of jurisdiction is apparent on the face of the record.[25] Where want of jurisdiction is thus set up, it is not necessary that the answer should also state a defense to the cause of action on which the judgment was founded.[26]

3. FRAUD.[27] Fraud in procuring a judgment is now generally admitted as a good defense to an action upon the judgment;[28] but not fraud in the original

Estoppel.— The fact that a judgment was successfully set up by the judgment creditor in bar of an action against him by the debtor, on the ground that the action was based on the same facts which were adjudicated in the action in which the judgment was rendered, is no bar to an action on such judgment. Henry v. Allen, 82 Tex. 35, 17 S. W. 515.

that it is no defense to such a suit that an execution issued on the judgment is in full life and in the officer's hands, if there is no plea or proof of payment.[38]

6. EQUITABLE DEFENSES. Under statutes permitting equitable defenses to be set up in actions at law, a suit on a judgment may be defeated by proof of any facts showing that it would be against conscience to allow a recovery on the judgment, provided defendant could not have availed himself of such facts in the original action, or shows a good and sufficient excuse for his failure to do so.[39] In the federal courts equitable defenses cannot be interposed in actions at law, such as an action on a judgment.[40]

F. Pleading — 1. DECLARATION OR COMPLAINT[41] — a. Requisites in General. In suing on a judgment it is not necessary to set out the judgment in hæc verba, but it is sufficient to set it forth according to its legal effect.[42] A complaint in such an action is sufficient if it describes the court in which the alleged judgment was rendered, the place where it was held, the names of the parties, the date at which it was entered, and the amount of the judgment.[43] The plaintiff, if not plaintiff in the original action, but claiming as assignee or otherwise, must allege facts showing his ownership of the judgment;[44] and if the defendant is not the same as in the original action, the nature and cause of his liability on the judgment must be set forth.[45] It is not necessary to allege that the judgment has not been appealed from,[46] but the declaration must show that it remains in full force and unpaid.[47] It is of course not necessary to plead the contract or claim on which the judgment was rendered;[48] but on the contrary, care should be taken to declare on the judgment itself and not on the original demand.[49] In declaring on the judgment of an inferior court, it is not necessary to allege all the proceedings in full; but after setting out the jurisdictional facts, a general averment may cover the other steps up to the recovery.[50] A complaint on a judgment must be verified.[51]

was given of a partial payment under such a plea, without objection, and the jury allowed it, and the court of appeals refused to interfere with the verdict.

b. Averments of Jurisdiction. In suing on a judgment rendered by a superior court of general jurisdiction, it is not necessary to set out the facts conferring jurisdiction;[52] but if the judgment was given by an inferior or limited court, all the facts necessary to establish its jurisdiction must be specifically set forth, unless dispensed with by statute, and a general averment of jurisdiction is not sufficient.[53] As to jurisdiction of the subject-matter, it is sufficiently averred if the facts pleaded as to the amount and nature of the claim bring it within the statutes conferring jurisdiction.[54]

c. Statutes Regulating Jurisdictional Averments. In many states statutes have been enacted prescribing that, in suing on a judgment, or on a judgment of a court of limited or inferior jurisdiction, it shall not be necessary to state the facts conferring jurisdiction, but merely that the judgment "was duly given or made."[55] This allegation is equivalent to and a substitute for the averment of jurisdictional facts required at common law,[56] and either the words of the statute or words of exactly equivalent import must be employed.[57] Such a statute applies to judgments of inferior courts of a sister state,[58] but not to judgments of courts in a foreign country,[59] and as a rule not to the judgments of superior domestic courts, whose jurisdiction is presumed and need not be pleaded.[60]

d. Setting Forth or Annexing Transcript.[61] A judgment is a "written instrument" within the meaning of statutes requiring that, when suit is brought on such an instrument, a copy thereof shall be annexed to the petition or filed with it,[62] and although the petition does not correctly describe the judgment, it is immaterial, where the error is corrected by the exemplification of the judgment filed with it.[63] Setting forth or annexing the judgment in this way does not make it a part of the record so as to enable defendant to demur for defects in the judgment.[64] At common law profert of the record in an action on a judgment is not necessary.[65]

2. Plea or Answer[66] — a. Requisites in General. Defendant may plead specially, or in abatement, in an action on a judgment, but the plea or answer must set forth with certainty and precision the facts relied on to defeat the action.[67]

b. Proper Form of General Issue. In an action on a domestic judgment, the only proper form of the general issue is nul tiel record,[68] or a general denial, its equivalent under the code system of pleading;[69] and this plea should conclude with a verification to the court only, not to the country, except in the case of a judgment of an inferior court not of record.[70] Nil debet is not an admissible plea.[71]

66. Sister state judgments see infra, XXII, B, 4, e, (III).

Pleading payment or satisfaction see supra, XX, E, 5.

67. Plea in abatement.— The pendency of a writ of error may be pleaded in abatement, but the plea must allege that such writ was brought before the commencement of the action and that it operates as a supersedeas. Jenkins v. Pepoon, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 312. So the pendency of a former action on the same judgment may be pleaded (Lincoln v. Thrall, 34 Vt. 110), or the reversal of the judgment on appeal (McNulty v. Batty, 2 Pinn. (Wis.) 53).

Denying plaintiff's title to judgment.— A plea that plaintiff is not the owner of the judgment sued on, but that another person is, giving his name, is good without stating the particulars of the assignment. Holcombe v. Tracy, 2 Minn. 241. See Cottle v. Cole, 20 Iowa 481.

Failure to obtain leave to sue on the judgment, as required by statute, may be pleaded in defense to an action upon it. Lyon v. Manly, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 51.

Defendant not a party.— In an action on a judgment, defendant may plead that he was not a party to the action in which such judgment was rendered, but the plea must be explicit. Stevenson v. Flournoy, 89 Ky. 561, 13 S. W. 210, 11 Ky. L. Rep 745.

Payment.— Under this plea defendant may show satisfaction of the judgment otherwise than by its direct payment to the judgment creditor or on execution; as, where the plaintiff has received, or become chargeable with, the amount of collaterals placed in his hands. Wolcott v. Ensign, 53 Ind. 70. But in such cases the facts relied on as constituting satisfaction must be set forth in the plea or answer. Black v. Everett, 5 Stew. & P. 3. SUBSEQUENT PLEADINGS AND DEMURRER. A plea setting up new matter affirmatively should be met by a replication,[72] unless it fails to traverse any material allegation of the complaint, in which case judgment may be given for plaintiff on his motion.[73] If the plea consists only of matter of record, the replication should reassert the record and pray that it may be inspected by the court.[74] The defect of concluding a plea of nul tiel record with a verification to the country,[75] or of misjoining another plea with it,[76] may be taken advantage of by special demurrer. But the failure to file a copy of the judgment with the petition is ground for a motion to dismiss, but not for demurrer.[77]

4. ISSUES, PROOF, AND VARIANCE.[78] Where the action is by an assignee of the judgment, an averment of the assignment is necessary, and its denial raises a material issue.[79] But an issue as to plaintiff's ownership of the judgment is not raised by a plea of nul tiel record,[80] nor can an issue as to the payment or satisfaction of the judgment be raised under this plea,[81] which in fact puts in issue nothing but the existence of the record declared on.[82] But under a plea of nul tiel record, the record proved must correspond fully with the judgment described in the declaration or complaint, and any material variance will be fatal.[83] This

Foreign attachment.— In an action on a judgment founded on a proceeding on a foreign attachment, a plea of nil debet is good on demurrer, as such proceedings are not of a common-law nature, but are special remedies given by statute to creditors against the rights, credits, and effects of their debtors in their absence. Curtis v. Martin, 2 N. J. L. 399.

Waiver of objection to plea.— Where plaintiff goes to trial in an action of debt on a judgment, on a plea of nil debet, he admits the validity of the plea as a general issue, and cannot have the verdict set aside because the court admitted special matter, to be given in evidence under a notice annexed to such plea. Satisfaction by levy.— In an action of debt on a judgment, defendant pleaded that plaintiff had caused the amount ot the judgment to be levied and fully satisfied of the lands and estate of defendant, and this plea was traversed and issue joined. It was held that the issue did not involve any inquiry as to the validity of the levy which appeared to have been made, but only whether the execution appeared to be satisfied by a levy regular on its face. And see Cobb v. Doggett, 142 Cal. 142, 75 Pac. 785, as to variance held immaterial. When a plaintiff declared on a judgment generally to which defendant pleaded nul tiel record, it was held no variance that the judgment was alleged, in the record produced, to have been by default in consequence of defendant not having paid the debt by instalments, as directed by a judge's order obtained by consent. Hopkins v. Francis, 2 D. & L. 664, 7 Jur. 250, 14 L. J. Exch. 207, 13 M. & W. 668.

Character of judgment.— A judgment rendered upon constructive service only is not competent evidence in support of a counterclaim pleaded by answer alleging the recovery of a personal judgment against plaintiff.

rule is enforced strictly in regard to the amount of the judgment,[84] the names or descriptions of the parties,[85] and the time or date of rendition of the judgment.[86]

Court where rendered.— Where a declaration on a judgment rendered in the United States circuit court for the district of Mississippi described it as rendered in a suit brought in that court, and it appeared that the suit originated in the district court for the same district, it was held that the variance was not fatal. Dudley v. Lindsey, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 486, 50 Am. Dec. 522. Blank as to costs.— Where the declaration alleges the recovery of a sum certain for costs in the original action, but the judgment produced leaves the amount of costs blank, it is a fatal variance. Summers v. Mantz, Ga. Dec. 73; Noyes v. Newmarch, 1 Allen (Mass.) 51.

Medium of payment.— In an action on a judgment reciting that it is payable in gold, but based on a contract silent as to the medium of payment, a declaration omitting the clause in regard to payment in gold does not render the judgment record inadmissible on the ground of variance, since such clause may be rejected as surplusage. Belford v. Woodward, 158 Ill. 122, 41 N. E. 1097, 29 L. R. A. 593. And so, where the declaration was on a general judgment, and the judgment introduced was made payable out of certain public funds, the limitation in the manner of payment was held to be surplusage, and so there was no variance. Misnomer.— A misnomer of either of the parties is a fatal variance (Ducommun v. Hysinger, 14 Ill. 249; Farrar v. Fairbanks, 53 Me. 143; Boyden v. Hastings, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 200), unless the declaration contains proper averments to identify the parties, as named in it, with those appearing in the record of the judgment sued on (Barry v. Carothers, 6 Rich. (S. C.) 331), or unless the difference in the names consists only in the addition of words of description in the judgment whch are not found in the declaration (Whitney v. Dolloff, 74 Me. 235).

Identifying plaintiff.— A corporation called "The United States National Bank of New York," suing on a judgment in favor of "The United States National Bank," is sufficiently identified as the judgment creditor where the judgment-roll shows that plaintiff was carrying on business as a national bank in New York city, and evidence is produced that plaintiff is the only bank of that name doing business in that city. U. S. National Bank v. Venner, 172 Mass. 449, 52 N. E. 543.

Discrepancy as to number of defendants.— Where the declaration alleges a judgment against a single defendant, and the judgment produced is against two or more jointly, there is a fatal variance, as also in the converse case. Schertz v. Chester First Nat. Bank, 47 Ill. App. 124; Newburg v. Munshower, 29 Ohio St. 617, 23 Am. Rep. 769; Clarion First Nat. Bank v. Hamor, 47 Fed. 36. But it is not a variance from the petition which alleges a judgment against "defendant" that the judgment offered in evidence was in an action against that defendant and another, as to whom the case was not disposed of, when the judgment itself was rendered against the named defendant alone, and there does not appear to have been any other action between the parties in the same court. Cole v. Terrell, 71 Tex. 549, 9 S. W. 668. And where, in an action against husband and wife, the declaration alleged that plaintiff recovered judgment against the wife, by the name of E R, on promises made by her dum sola; to which defendants pleaded nul tiel record, and on the record being produced, the judgment appeared to have been recovered against her and others it was held no variance. 5. Evidence Admissible Under Pleadings.[87] On the issue raised by a plea of nul tiel record, the evidence must be confined to the existence and terms of the judgment declared on,[88] and so under a general denial;[89] but the plea of payment admits any relevant evidence to show the satisfaction or discharge of the judgment.[90] A misnomer of the defendant in the judgment may be corrected by evidence produced under a proper allegation.[91] But an order or decree enjoining the collection of the judgment cannot be proved unless specially pleaded.[92]

G. Evidence — 1. Presumptions and Burden of Proof.[93] In an action on a judgment, where the general issue is pleaded or a general denial, the burden is on plaintiff to prove the record sued on;[94] and in this he will not be aided by presumptions as to the identity of the parties, where the names do not appear to be the same;[95] but he is not obliged to prove that an outstanding execution had become dormant as that is a matter of defense.[96]

2. Admissibility[97] — a. In General. In an action on a domestic judgment, the existence and terms of the judgment should be proved by the production of a transcript or exemplification of it, attested in accordance with the local law,[98] which must be sufficiently complete to exhibit the judgment as a complete cause of action,[99] and cannot be aided in this respect by parol evidence or by papers or documents filed in the case but not incorporated in the record,[1] although such riance as to the date between the record produced and that stated in the declaration, the court allowed the latter to be amended. Noble v. Chapman, 14 C. B. 400, 18 Jur. 44, 23 L. J. C. P. 56, 2 Wkly. Rep. 154, 78 E. C. L. 400.

evidence may be resorted to in order to supplement or explain the judgment when defective or ambiguous.[2] Nor can the record or its recitals be contradicted by parol,[3] although extraneous evidence is admissible to show an agreement of the parties as to the effect of the judgment or the use to be made of it,[4] or in support of an affirmative defense, such as payment.[5] If plaintiff claims under a written assignment, its execution must be duly proved.[6]

b. Lost or Destroyed Record. Some decisions hold that no action can be maintained on a judgment of which the record has been lost or destroyed until it has been restored by proper proceedings in the court where the judgment was rendered.[7] But the preponderance of authority is in favor of the rule that in such a case secondary evidence is admissible to establish the fact of the existence of such a judgment and its contents.[8]

3. Weight and Sufficiency.[9] To prove a cause of action on a judgment, it is necessary to produce in evidence the whole record,[10] or at least so much thereof as will identify the parties in the action with the parties to the judgment,[11] show that the court which rendered it had jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter of the suit,[12] and disclose the nature and terms of the judgment and the amount of the recovery.[13] Also if the judgment is more than twenty years old

A promise to pay a judgment is no evidence, in an action on the judgment, of service of process in the original suit. Baldwin v. Kimmel, 16 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 353.

Affidavits upon which a substituted service of summons is ordered are not conclusive in a suit to enforce a judgment obtained on such service. Buswell v. Lincks, 8 Daly (N. Y.) 518.

Evidence disproving service.— In an action on a judgment regular on its face and rendered several years previous, the evidence to establish the defense that the summons was not served on defendant must be clear and practically conclusive. Vaule v. Miller, 69 Minn. 440, 72 N. W. 452.

13. In an action on a judgment, to which nul tiel record is pleaded, the introduction of the record of the judgment sued on, which plaintiff must present evidence to rebut the presumption of payment.[14] But distinct admissions on the part of defendant will obviate the necessity of proving any of these particulars.[15]

H. Trial and Judgment — 1. TRIAL OR HEARING.[16] A plea of nul tiel record puts in issue only the existence of the judgment declared on, and is triable by the court upon an inspection of the record;[17] the record should go to the jury only when matter of fact as well as of law is properly put in issue, as upon a plea of payment, fraud, or the statute of limitations.[18] In some states when equitable defenses are set up to defeat a recovery on a judgment, the cause must be transferred to the equity docket.[19]

2. JUDGMENT.[20] The successful plaintiff in an action on a judgment will ordinarily recover the amount of the original judgment and in the medium, if any, therein provided,[21] together with the costs of the original suit,[22] and also of the action on the judgment,[23] and interest on the original judgment if allowed by statute;[24] but his means of enforcing the new judgment may be restricted in a proper case so that execution shall not issue against defendant's person.[25] The judgment recovered in an action on a judgment is not open to collateral impeachment on account of fraud or defects in the original judgment.[26]

shows that the court had jurisdiction of the parties, and that it awarded damages in plaintiff's favor, is sufficient to establish plaintiff's case, although the record does not disclose the nature of the action, or whether the case was decided on default or after issue joined, or whether any plea was filed; the presumption being that a court of general jurisdiction has jurisdiction to award the judgment shown to have been rendered by its record. Statute of limitations.— Where the prescription of ten years is urged against a judgment, and the plea is tried in the court below on the face of the record, a judgment sustaining the plea may be annulled, and the case remanded, in order that, in a trial on the merits, plaintiff may have an opportunity to show an interruption of the prescription. XXI. PROCEDURE WITH RESPECT TO JUDGMENT AS ESTOPPEL.

A. Pleading in General — 1. NECESSITY OF PLEADING FORMER ADJUDICATION — a. In General. There are quite a number of decisions holding that a former judgment between the same parties, if relied on as a bar to a second suit upon the same cause of action, must be pleaded; if not, the benefit of the estoppel is lost, either because the judgment will not be admissible in evidence, or, if admitted, will not be conclusive;[27] but as will be seen hereafter there are many cases in which a former adjudication may be given in evidence under a plea of the general issue.[28] And the failure to plead a former adjudication may be waived by the parties by stipulation, or by their treating the case as if it were in issue.[29] Nor does the rule apply where the judgment, instead of being relied on in bar of the action, is set up merely as conclusive of some particular fact or question formerly in issue and adjudicated; in this instance it need not be pleaded in order to make it competent and conclusive evidence.[30] But even in this case the party may lose the benefit of the estoppel unless he so frames his pleadings as to bring it within the issues.[31] The defense of res judicata should be interposed in the proceedings claimed to be barred, and cannot be relied on by way of a bill in the nature of a bill of review.[32]

b. Where No Opportunity to Plead. If there was no opportunity to plead a former judgment as an estoppel — because special pleas were not admissible in the particular action, or because the judgment was not rendered until after a plea of the general issue — it may be given in evidence with the same conclusive effect as if pleaded.[33]

Former recovery as ground for special plea in assumpsit see ASSUMPSIT, ACTION OF, 4 Cyc. 350.

Form of plea.— The pendency of another suit must be pleaded in abatement, but the plea of a judgment recovered is not matter in abatement; it does not go to the form of the date or time of the rendition of the prior decision,[39] or at least that it was given before the institution of the suit at bar,[40] the amount of the recovery or relief granted by the judgment,[41] and that the judgment was a final adjudication,[42] although it is not necessary to allege that the judgment is valid, that it remains in full force, or that it has not been reversed, vacated, or appealed from, as these things are presumed.[43] The plea should be verified.[44]

b. Filing Transcript. According to the practice in some states, when a former judgment is pleaded as an estoppel, a transcript or copy of the record must be annexed to or filed with the plea.[45]

c. Setting Out Record of Judgment. Some decisions hold it necessary, in support of a plea of former adjudication, to incorporate in or annex to the plea the whole record of the former suit;[46] but others, and particularly among the later cases, rule that it is sufficient if the plea contains enough to show clearly the scope of the former adjudication and the relation of the parties to it.[47]

Duplicity.— A plea setting up, as former adjudications, judgments in two separate suits or proceedings, is bad for duplicity. But it is not double where the adjudication pleaded is comprised in the judgments of the court of original jurisdiction and of successive appellate courts to which the suit was carried. d. Jurisdiction and Regularity of Proceedings. In pleading a former judgment as a bar, it is necessary to allege that it was rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction; and in the case of a court of general jurisdiction, this will be sufficient without setting out the facts conferring jurisdiction or the steps taken to acquire it.[48] But where the judgment emanates from a court of inferior or special and limited jurisdiction, it is necessary to plead all the facts conferring jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action and of the parties,[49] except where the statutes provide that an allegation that the judgment of an inferior court was "duly given or made" shall be sufficient without setting out the jurisdictional facts.[50]

e. Identity or Privity of Parties. A plea of former adjudication must aver that the parties are the same in the two suits, or allege facts which show that the relation of the pleader to the former action was such as to make the judgment conclusive in his favor, or that the party against whom the estoppel is alleged, if not directly a party to the former suit, was so connected with it in interest as to be bound by the result.[51]

f. Identity of Cause of Action. In pleading a former judgment in bar, it is necessary to show clearly and distinctly that the cause of action in the former suit is identical with that on which the present suit is based;[52] and if the prior judgment is pleaded as a conclusive adjudication upon some point or question in issue, the plea must make it clearly appear that the same point or question was actually litigated and decided in the former suit, or that it might have been litigated and determined under the issues in that suit.[53]

g. Decision on the Merits. Since a former judgment between the same parties does not bar a second suit upon the same cause of action unless it was rendered on the merits,[54] a plea of former adjudication must distinctly show that such former judgment was on the merits, and, if necessary to make this clear, specific facts must be alleged to show the consideration and determination of the merits.[55]

h. Denials and Defenses. When the party against whom a former judgment is pleaded as a bar or estoppel wishes to deny or avoid its effect, it is not proper to plead nul tiel record;[56] but he should plead specially and particularly whatever grounds he has for opposing its alleged effect, as that it was obtained by fraud,[57] that it was not a decision on the merits,[58] that the court was without jurisdiction, for want of notice to defendant,[59] that the judgment has been set aside, reversed, or vacated,[60] or that the cause of action was not the same, or the issues tried and determined were not identical with those now in suit.[61] Failure to reply to a plea of res judicata prevents plaintiff from attacking the judgment relied on for fraud.[62]

5. Issues, Proof, and Variance — a. Evidence Admissible, and Variance. Where issue has been properly taken upon a plea of res judicata or former recovery, the plea may and should be supported by the introduction in evidence of the record of the former judgment;[63] and for this purpose a mere entry of a rule for judgment is not sufficient.[64] The judgment produced in evidence must correspond in all essential particulars with that pleaded; any material variance will prevent its admission.[65]

b. Admissibility of Judgment Under General Issue — (i) In General. It is generally held that a former adjudication may be given in evidence under a plea of the general issue in all those cases where other matters in discharge of the action can be proved under that issue, as in assumpsit, ejectment, and actions on the case,[66] although not in the action of trespass, where all matters which admit the original wrong must be specially pleaded.[67]

(ii) Under Code Practice. Under the code system of pleading, requiring new matter or matter in avoidance to be specially pleaded, a former adjudication is not admissible in evidence under a general denial of the allegations of the complaint.[68]

c. Conclusiveness of Judgment When Not Pleaded. Although there are numerous cases holding that a former adjudication, if not specially pleaded but given in evidence under the general issue, is not conclusive but only persuasive evidence,[69] yet the decided preponderance of authority is to the effect that such a judgment, if admissible at all under the pleadings, is just as conclusive when so presented as if it had been specially set up by a plea in bar,[70] or according to another line of decisions, when the judgment is relied on, not as a bar to the present action, but as a judicial determination of given facts, issues, or controversies, it is not necessary to plead it specially, but it is conclusive when given in evidence.[71]

B. Admissibility of Judgment in Evidence Generally. Aside from the question of its conclusiveness as a bar or estoppel, a judgment is admissible and competent evidence to prove the fact of its rendition and its terms,[72] a proper foundation for such evidence having been laid,[73] or where it is relied on as a link in a chain of title,[74] or as persuasive although not conclusive evidence of the facts which it adjudges or determines,[75] even as against strangers.[76]

C. Evidence as to Judgment and Its Effect — 1. In General — a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof. The party relying on a judgment or decree as constituting a bar or estoppel in another suit must assume the burden of proving the existence and character of the judgment or decree, as well as its legal effect in relation to the matters alleged to be concluded by it.[77] But when its existence, Degree of proof required.— Pleas like res judicata, precluding an examination of the merits, cannot be aided by inference, but must be established beyond all question. The legal presumption attaching to such an estoppel is of too grave a character to be recognized as resulting from any litigation in which its essential characteristics are not free from all doubt. Fink v. Martin, 5 La. Ann. 103; Clay v. His Creditors, 9 Mart. (La.) 519.

Not aided by presumptions.— In an action on a guaranty of rent, it will not be presumed that defenses which could have been set up under the pleadings in a former action for another instalment of rent were actually made and passed on, but the burden is on plaintiff to show it. Bond v. Markstrum, 102 Mich. 11, 60 N. W. 282.

Presumption of conformity to law.— On a showing of time and opportunity to do so, the presumption obtains that a district court has entered such judgment as required by the terms of a mandate from the supreme court. Abbott v. Lane, 4 Nebr. (Unoff.) 629, 95 N. W. 599.

Presumption that judgment remains in force.— It is not necessary to prove that a judgment exemplified has not been reversed; the burden is on the party interested to counteract its effect by showing its reversal. Schoonmaker v. Lloyd, 9 Rich. (S. C.) 173.

Ancient judgment.— Where the execution under which a sheriff sold land recited that a judgment had been recovered, it was held character, and legal effect are shown, the correctness of the judgment as an adjudication will be presumed.[78]

b. Admissibility in General. The existence of a judgment relied on as a bar or estoppel, including the time and place of its rendition and also including the parties affected by the judgment which is relied on as a bar, is to be proved by the production and inspection of the record,[79] and in these particulars extraneous evidence in contradiction of the record is not admissible.[80] But it is otherwise as to the legal consequences of the judgment as a merger, bar, or estoppel; its apparent effect in this particular may be explained or limited by extrinsic evidence,[81] that after forty years the existence of the judgment would be presumed. Dunham v. Townshend, 118 N. Y. 281, 23 N. E. 367 [affirming 43 Hun 580].

Judgment of justice's court.— A transcript of a county clerk's docket of a judgment rendered in a justice's court, and a certified copy of the justice's transcript, are only presumptive evidence of such judgment. The docket and testimony of the justice are competent evidence to show that no such judgment was ever rendered. Stephens v. Santee, 49 N. Y. 35.

Lost records.— Where all the judicial records of two counties bearing on a certain litigation have been burned, except the minutes of the court in the one county, and an index of a judgment in the other, parol evidence is competent to show that the action was begun in one county and removed by change of venue to the other, where the judgment was rendered. Judgment by confession.—Where it appears by the record that a confession of judgment was entered by attorney, but not whether it was by an attorney in fact or an attorney at law, evidence aliunde is admissible to show that it was an attorney in fact. Calwell v. Shields, 2 Rob. (Va.) 305.

Jurisdiction.— Where defendant, against whom a judgment is pleaded, attacks the jurisdiction of the court rendering it, and introduces evidence to show service of process on a person not authorized to receive it, plaintiff may prove facts outside the record, not required to be part of the judgment-roll, to show that the court did have jurisdiction. and particularly in the case of a judgment entered by agreement or consent or on a compromise.[82]

c. Parol Evidence. Parol evidence is not admissible either to create or to annul the estoppel arising from a judgment;[83] but where the record is indefinite or ambiguous, such testimony may be received for the purpose of explaining and applying it.[84]

d. Weight and Sufficiency. Where the existence of a judgment becomes a material issue, it must be proved by the production of the original record of the judgment, or a duly authenticated copy or transcript of it, as the case may be;[85] and this point cannot be established by any collateral or extrinsic evidence.[86] Further it is not sufficient to produce the judgment entry alone, but it must be accompanied by the entire record,[87] unless, as may be the case with decrees in chancery, the judgment of the court contains such recitals as will exhibit fully not only the fact of the judgment, but also the whole scope and extent of the estoppel created by it.[88] of proving, if the fact does not appear from the record, that the subject-matter or cause of action in the former suit was identical with that now in suit.[89]

b. Admissibility and Effect. If it does not appear from the record that the cause of action in the former suit was identical with that in the action in which it is pleaded in bar, this fact may be proved by evidence aliunde;[90] and similar evidence is admissible for the party against whom the estoppel is pleaded to show that the causes of action in the two suits are not the same;[91] but in either case the proof should be clear and satisfactory.[92]

c. Parol Evidence. Where a judgment pleaded as res judicata does not clearly show, on account of its generality or ambiguity, whether or not the cause of action on which it was rendered was identical with that set up in the suit in which it is so pleaded, parol evidence is admissible to establish the identity of the causes of action, or to rebut the allegation that they are identical.[93]

Identity of land in suit.— In an action on purchase-money notes given for land, where defendant alleges breach of warranty of title, and introduces in evidence a judgment against him in ejectment, the testimony of a surveyor is competent to show that the land described in the judgment was part of the tract described in the deed to defendant. 3. EVIDENCE TO SHOW CONSIDERATION OF MERITS. If a judgment or decree purports on its face to adjudicate the entire merits of the controversy, it cannot be contradicted in this respect by extrinsic evidence.[94] If it is doubtful whether the merits were considered, the fact may be shown by a comparison of the judgment with the pleadings or other parts of the record.[95] But if nothing can be discovered from the record, it will be presumed that the judgment was rendered on the merits;[96] but this presumption is not conclusive, and the party against whom the judgment is pleaded may show, by parol evidence if necessary, that there was no consideration of the merits,[97] being bound, however, to establish this fact by clear and satisfactory proof.[98]

4. EVIDENCE TO IDENTIFY ISSUES OR MATTERS DECIDED — a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof. When a former judgment is pleaded as an estoppel, which does not show on its face that the same issues were litigated as in the suit in which it is pleaded, the fact cannot be presumed, but evidence aliunde is required to establish the identity of the issues or matters in controversy.[99] And if it appears from the record of the former suit that several distinct matters may have been litigated, upon one or more of which the judgment was rendered, the whole subject-matter of the action will be at large and open to a new contention, unless the uncertainty be removed by extrinsic evidence showing the precise point involved and determined.[1] In all such cases therefore the party setting up the former judgment as an estoppel must assume the burden of proving that the particular point or question as to which he claims the estoppel was in issue and determined in the former suit.[2] Several cases, however, hold that, if it appears that the point or question presently in issue might have been determined in the former suit, it will be presumed that it was so determined, and the burden is upon the party seeking to avoid the estoppel to show that the matter is not res judicata.[3]

b. Admissibility in General. Certain early cases held that, where a former judgment was pleaded as an estoppel, it must appear from the record itself that the same subject-matter had been adjudicated in the former suit.[4] But this doctrine has been generally repudiated, and it is now held that extrinsic evidence, not inconsistent with the record and not impugning its verity, is admissible for the purpose of identifying the points or questions litigated and decided in the former action.[5]

also decisions holding that evidence aliunde cannot be introduced to show that issues clearly made by the pleadings were not decided.[26] And if the judgment recites that all the matters at issue were considered and decided by the court this statement cannot be contradicted.[27]

h. Weight and Sufficiency of Evidence. Where the record of a former action shows on its face what questions or issues were litigated and decided, it is itself the sole and conclusive evidence on that point.[28] But if, by reason of its being doubtful or ambiguous on this matter, extrinsic evidence is heard, the question is to be decided by the aid of such evidence, and not by an inspection of the record alone.[29] Such outside evidence, however, is required to be very clear and satisfactory.[30]

5. Evidence to Identify Parties. D. Trial[35] — 1. Question For Court or Jury. When a former judgment is set up as a bar or estoppel, the question whether there is such an identity of the parties and of the subject-matter or cause of action as will support the plea of res judicata is a question of law for the court when it is determinable from an inspection of the record alone;[36] but if extrinsic evidence is required to effect the necessary identification, it becomes a question of fact and must go to the jury.[37] In either case, when this point is established, or if it is not disputed, it is for the court to decide and declare the effect which shall be given to the former judgment as evidence in the pending action or as a bar to its maintenance.[38]

2. Instructions. Although it may be left to the jury to find whether a former judgment set up as an estoppel was between the same parties and involved a determination of the same point or question presently in issue, when extrinsic evidence on this question has been heard, the court should at the same time

XXII. FOREIGN JUDGMENTS.[40]

A. Definition. Foreign judgments are judgments rendered by the courts of a country or state politically and judicially distinct from that in which the judgment or its effect is brought in question[41] — a judgment of a foreign tribunal.[42] In the United States judgments of the courts of one state or territory are in a sense foreign judgments in every other state or territory, and are often spoken of and to some extent treated as such;[43] but they are not so in the same sense as the judgments of a foreign country, since by the constitution of the United States and act of congress passed in pursuance thereof, it is required that they be given full faith and credit in every other state.[44] Federal courts in the state in which they are held, while they may be considered foreign courts in the limited sense that they derive their existence and jurisdiction from the constitution and laws of the United States, are domestic courts in the exercise of their jurisdiction in the administration of justice;[45] and federal courts of other states are foreign only in the same sense as the state courts of such other states.[46]

B. Judgments of Courts of Sister States — 1. Operation and Effect — a. In General. Under the constitution and laws of the United States, each state is bound to give full faith and credit to the judgments of the courts of other states of the Union.[47] This prevents such judgments from being treated as foreign judgments in the strict sense and obliges the courts to give them equal recognition and effect, as a matter of pleading and evidence, with that accorded to similar judgments of the domestic courts;[48] and this, without inquiring whether the domestic courts would or could have rendered such a judgment on such a cause of action, whether such a judgment would have been valid under the local laws,[49] whether the court rendering the judgment was right or wrong in the interpretation and application of the laws of its own state,[50] or even in its reading and application of the laws of the state where the judgment is brought in question.[51] Also the constitutional and statutory provisions referred to protect a judgment of a court of a sister state against collateral impeachment.[52] But they do not make it in all respects and for all purposes the equivalent of a domestic judgment, being limited to its effect as evidence or as a bar to further litigation,[53] and not purporting to give to such a judgment any extraterritorial force as a judgment.[54] Further these provisions have nothing to do with the recognition of foreign judgments as precedents; they come into effect only in connection with the doctrine of res judicata, not with that of stare decisis.[55]

Garnishment of laborer's wages.— In some states, where wages of labor are exempt from garnishment, it is held that it is no bar to an action to recover such wages that a judgment therefor has been rendered against defendant, as garnishee, in an action brought in another state, where wages are not exempt. Sufficiency of judgment.— If it is proved by the law, practice, and usage of the state from whence a transcript of a foreign judgment comes that it is entitled to the faith and credit of a judgment, this court will give it the same force and effect, although it is insufficient to constitute a judgment under our laws and practice. finality than would be accorded to it in the state where rendered; and hence if it would there be inconclusive, impeachable, or reëxaminable, it will receive no greater consideration or measure of finality in other states.[57] The validity and effect of a judgment must therefore be determined by reference to the laws of the state where it was rendered; and for this purpose it is held in some of the states that the courts of one state may take judicial notice of the laws of another state.[58]

Applications of rule.— If a judgment operates in the state where it was rendered only in rem, it will not elsewhere be enforced in personam; and if it has not the effect of binding personally defendant in the suit in which it was rendered, no greater effect will be given to it in any other state where it is sought to be enforced. Wood v. Watkinson, 17 Conn. 500, 44 Am. Dec. 562. So a judgment which is no bar to another suit in the state where it was rendered will not be a bar in another state. Matoon v. Clapp, 8 Ohio 248. And where a judgment against a corporation, by the laws of the state where it is rendered, is not conclusive against a stockholder who was not a party to the action, if it was obtained through fraud or collusion, no greater effect will be given to it in an action against a stock-holder in a court of another state. Ball v. Warrington, 108 Fed. 472, 47 C. C. A. 447. So where a judgment of another state consists of an entry to the effect that the cause having been settled it is discontinued by consent, without costs to either party, it may be shown that the discontinuance was not intended as a satisfaction of the cause of action, but was the result of a promissory agreement never complied with; and this is not denying "full faith and credit" to the judgment. Jacobs v. Marks, 182 U. S. 583, 21 S. Ct. 865, 45 L. ed. 1241.

Where a judgment has become dormant in the state where it was rendered and has not been revived or renewed, it will be treated as a dormant judgment in another state when it is sought to enforce it there. Chapman v. Chapman, 48 Kan. 636, 29 Pac. 1071.

But this doctrine is not generally accepted. On the contrary, it is held that laws of a foreign state must be proved as facts, and if there is no evidence in regard to the laws of the state where the judgment was rendered, the court where it is sought to be enforced will presume that those laws are the same as the laws of its own state, and will give effect to the judgment accordingly.[59]

c. Extraterritorial Effect on Real Estate. Real property, being governed only by the law of its situs, and being subject only to the jurisdiction of the courts of the state where it is situated, cannot be directly affected by the judgment or decree of a court of any other state; nor do the provisions of the federal constitution and the act of congress require that a judgment of a state court should be accorded any extraterritorial force or effect as regards real estate.[60]

Ground of this rule.— This rule, originally adopted in Pennsylvania and Rhode Island, as appears from the cases above cited, was based on the theory that the supreme court of the United States, in reviewing the judgment of the highest court of a state, on writ of error, would take notice of the laws of another state, for the purpose of determining whether "full faith and credit" had been given to the judgment of such other state, and therefore it was thought the court of first instance should do likewise. But this was shown to have been a mistake, the supreme court of the United States explaining that while it would take judicial notice of the laws of any and every state when proceeding in the exercise of its original jurisdiction, or of its appellate jurisdiction over the inferior courts of the United States, this was not so when it was reviewing the decision of a state supreme court on a writ of error. A decree setting aside a deed or other conveyance, or declaring it void or inoperative, cannot affect lands situated in another state. Blackman v. Wright, 96 Iowa 541, 65 N. W. 843; Carpenter v. Strange, 141 U. S. 87, 11 S. Ct. 960, 35 L. ed. 640.

But although incapable of acting directly on real estate beyond its jurisdiction, a court of equity in one state, having acquired jurisdiction of the litigants, may make orders and decrees affecting their dealing with such property, in such manner as to bind them personally, and such orders or decrees may be pleaded as a cause of action, a bar, or a defense in the state where the land lies.[61]

d. Rank and Priority. A judgment of one state, when sought to be enforced in another, is not entitled to any right of priority, privilege, or lien which it may enjoy in the state where rendered, but only that which the lex fori may give to it in the character of a foreign judgment.[62] Consequently if the laws of a state permit the judgments of its own courts to take rank as preferred claims in the distribution of decedents' estates, no such privilege will attach to judgments from another state unless they are expressly included in the statute.[63]

Brown v. Todd, 29 S. W. 621, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 697. City Ins. Co. v. Commercial Bank, 68 Ill. 348. See, generally, RECEIVERS.

Construction of will.— A decision in one state construing a will is not conclusive as to the title to land situated in another state, which title depends on the construction of the will. A decree of a court of equity in one state, directing a conveyance of land situate in another, may be pleaded as a cause of action or as a ground of defense in the courts of the state where the land lies, although no conveyance has been executed, and, unless impeached for fraud, is entitled, in the court where so pleaded, to the force and effect of record evidence of the equities therein determined. Burnley v. Stevenson, 24 Ohio St. 474, 15 Am. Rep. 621. So a court of equity having jurisdiction of the parties has power to compel defendant to release and discharge an apparent cloud upon the title to land situated in another state. Under a statute in New York (Code Civ. Proc. § 552) which provides that a recovery of judgment in a foreign state for the price or value of property obtained by fraud or deceit does not affect plaintiff's right to arrest defendant, an action may be maintained in New York on the original cause of action, although a judgment has been recovered thereon in another state. Pitt v. Freed, 28 N. Y. Suppl. 863.

Judgment on judgment.— It has been held that where a judgment has been recovered in a court of competent jurisdiction in one state, on a judgment previously recovered in another state, the latter judgment is merged in the former, so that it cannot thereafter constitute a cause of action, and its liens or other privileges in the state of its rendition are abandoned. Gould v. Hayden, 63 Ind. 443. Other cases, however, are to the contrary. Wells v. Schuster-Hax Nat. Bank, 23 Colo. 534, 48 Pac. 809; Weeks v. Pearson, 5 N. H. 324. Where a judgment is recovered in a foreign state, on a judgment rendered in New York, plaintiff may sue in New York on the foreign judgment, the cause of action being the foreign judgment, and not the same cause of action that was litigated in the original action in New York. 66. Cackley v. Smith, 47 Kan. 642, 28 Pac. 617, 27 Am. St. Rep. 311 (case of a decision merely finding the amount due to plaintiff as one of a body of creditors, but not giving him a personal judgment against defendant); Harryman v. Roberts, 52 Md. 64 (motion to set the judgment aside); Sloo v. Lea, 18 Ohio 279 (judgment against joint debtors reversed ss to one); McCadden v. Slauson, 96 Tenn. 586, 36 S. W. 378 (judgment declared void).

Sufficiency of judgment.— A report of a commissioner of insolvency in one state, in favor of an administrator there, accepted and recorded by the probate court to which it is returned, and acquiesced in by the parties, is such a judgment that the same person as administrator in another state may plead it in bar to a suit by the same claimant upon the same cause of action. Partial satisfaction.— A judgment recovered in another state, without jurisdiction of the person of defendant, if partially satisfied, will bar a recovery upon the original demand and obtains a valid judgment against him, that judgment will constitute a bar to the further prosecution of the action first begun.[69]

(II) Causes of Action Barred.[70] Generally a judgment recovered in another state bars an action on any claims or items which might and should have been included in the first suit,[71] and cuts off all defenses which might and should have been made;[72] but this does not apply to a set-off or counter-claim which by the laws of that state defendant was not bound to set up.[73]

(III) Persons Who May Take Advantage of Bar.[74] A judgment against joint defendants, where only one was served, does not merge the original demand, and consequently an action in another state should be brought, not on the judgment, but on the original cause of action;[75] and where joint debtors reside in different states, they may be sued separately, each in the state having jurisdiction of his person or property, and a judgment against one in one state is no bar to a recovery against the other in another state.[76] If a plaintiff is defeated in a trial on the merits in an action in one state, he cannot afterward maintain a suit on the same cause of action against the same defendant in any other state, but the former judgment may be pleaded in defense.[77]

Assets in different states.— A judgment recovered in one state, and dealing only with property or assets situated within that state, is not a bar to a subsequent action between the same parties, to apply the same principle of recovery or ground of liability to assets or property in another state. Jones v. Gerock, 59 N. C. 190; Beall v. Taylor, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 532, 44 Am. Dec. 398.

Mortgage foreclosure.— A judgment foreclosing a mortgage on lands within the state, but not including any personal judgment against the mortgagor, on account of his being a non-resident and not served with process, will not bar an action against him in another state, to recover on the bond secured by the mortgage or for the deficiency. Partners.— A valid judgment recovered in another state against one of two partners, on a promissory note signed with their partnership name, is a merger of the note and an extinguishment of the joint liability, of which either partner may avail himself in a subsequent suit brought on the note against both. (IV) PLEADING AND EVIDENCE.[78] As a rule when a judgment recovered in another state is to be relied on as a bar or defense, it should be pleaded, if there is opportunity to do so.[79] But if there is no such opportunity, it is admissible under the general issue and is as conclusive as if pleaded.[80] It is not necessary to set out the facts or laws conferring jurisdiction,[81] which will be presumed, and can be controverted only by clear and full proof,[82] except where the judgment comes from an inferior court.[83] To determine what effect the judgment has in the state of its rendition, as a merger of the cause of action or a bar to further suits, the whole record in the case, and also the applicable statutes of that state, may be produced;[84] and to identify the cause of action adjudicated in the former action with that now in suit, the record of the former action is first to be looked to,[85] and if it is not sufficiently clear the point may be shown by parol.[86] Ambiguities in the judgment or unfamiliar features in its form or in the proceedings leading up to it may be explained by the record or by the laws of the state from which it comes.[87]

2. CONCLUSIVENESS[88] — a. Constitutional and Statutory Provisions. If it were not for the provisions of the federal constitution requiring "full faith and credit" to be given in each state to the judgments of other states,[89] and the supplementary legislation of congress,[90] judgments rendered in another state of the Union would

79. Sheldon v. Patterson, 55 Ill. 507; Universal L. Ins. Co. v. Bachus, 51 Md. 28; Rogers v. Odell, 39 N. H. 452.

But in Pennsylvania it is said that it is not necessary to plead a judgment of a court of a sister state in order to make it admissible or conclusive between the same parties on the same subject-matter in a different form. Marsh v. Pier, 4 Rawle 273, 26 Am. Dec. 131.

But any statute or rule of court of another state authorizing its courts to proceed without notice or on publication must be affirmatively shown, or the proceeding will be held void for want of jurisdiction. 83. But under a statute making it sufficient to allege generally that a judgment of an inferior court was "duly given or made," it is not necessary, in pleading a judgment of a justice of the peace of another state, rendered in garnishment proceedings, to set out the statute conferring jurisdiction on the justice. Presumption as to effect of judgment.— Where there is no evidence of any statutory modification, in the state from which the judgment comes, of the common-law rule as to the conclusiveness of a judgment on the merits and of the extinguishment of the original cause of action by its being merged in the judgment recovered thereon, it will be assumed that such is the legal effect of the judgment in that state. 89. "Full Faith and Credit shall be given in each State to the public Acts, Records, and judicial Proceedings of every other State. And the Congress may by general Laws prescribe the Manner in which such Acts, Records and Proceedings shall be proved, and the Effect thereof." U. S. Const. art. 4, § 1.

90. "The records and judicial proceedings of the courts of any State . . . shall be proved or admitted in any other court within the United States, by the attestation of the clerk, and the seal of the court annexed, if there be a seal, together with a certificate of the judge, chief justice, or presiding magistrate, that the said attestation is in due form. And the said records and judicial proceedings, so authenticated, shall have such faith and credit given to them in every court within the United States as they have by law or usage in the courts of the State from which they are taken." Act Cong. May 26, 1790 (U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 905 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 677]). A subsequent statute be regarded and treated, as they were before the constitution, as strictly foreign judgments, their effect being left to be determined by the principles of international law or the inclination of judicial opinion in the particular state;[91] and indeed many of the early cases decided soon after the adoption of the constitutional provision, thought that its requirement was complied with by according to a judgment from a sister state a prima facie, and not a conclusive, effect as evidence.[92]

b. Judgment Conclusive on the Merits. It is now held by all the state courts, following the lead of the federal decisions,[93] that a judgment rendered by a competent court, having jurisdiction, in one state, is conclusive on the merits in the courts of every other state, when made the basis of an action or defense, and the merits cannot be reinvestigated.[94] extended the provisions of this act to the "territories of the United States and the countries subject to the jurisdiction of the United States." Act Cong. March 27, 1804 (U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 906 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 677]).

The articles of confederation contained a similar provision, and under it a court in one of the states refused to inquire into the merits of a judgment rendered in another state, both because it was a sentence in a prize case, and because it was adjudged to be conclusive under the provision mentioned. Jenkins v. Putnam, 1 Bay (S. C.) 8, 1 Am. Dec. 594.

Any state statute conflicting with these provisions of the constitution and of the act of congress, by denying to judgments of other states the full measure of conclusiveness to which they are entitled, is unconstitutional and void. which resulted in the judgment in another state does not estop him from denying its validity in the state of the forum.[7]

e. Matters Concluded.[8] A judgment rendered in another state by a court having jurisdiction is conclusive of all points or questions which were actually in issue and decided in that suit,[9] and of all facts necessarily implied in, or to be inferred from, the judgment, in the sense that the judgment could not have been rendered without the finding or determination of such facts;[10] but it is not conclusive as to matters arising incidentally or which were not within the scope of the issues or not actually tried and adjudicated.[11]

In Texas, previous to the annexation to necessary before suing on a domestic judgment,[19] and although plaintiff may have an available remedy in the state where the judgment was rendered.[20] The action may be maintained in his own behalf by the judgment creditor,[21] by an assignee of the judgment,[22] or by a trustee in insolvency authorized and directed by the foreign court to collect the judgment.[23] The suit should be brought against defendant in the judgment,[24] or, if he is dead, against his personal representative;[25] and in case of joint defendants, the action will lie against one alone, if the judgment is joint and several.[26]

(II) FORM OF ACTION. Assumpsit is not a proper form of action on a judgment recovered in another state; the declaration must be in debt, counting on the judgment as a record.[27] And in the absence of any peculiar grounds of the United States, and subsequent to the act of the congress of the republic of Texas of 1841, an action could not be maintained on a judgment from a foreign state. Harper v. Nichol, 13 Tex. 151; Wilson v. Tunstall, 6 Tex. 221; Lambeth v. Turner, 1 Tex. 364.

Action to revive foreign judgment.— It has been held that where a judgment may by statute be revived by action in the state in which it was rendered, such an action can be brought in another state, if jurisdiction of the person of defendant is there obtained. Smith v. Kander, 58 Mo. App. 61.

In New York a statute prohibits the maintenance of an action by one foreign corporation against another, except where the cause of action arose within the state. Code Civ. Proc. § 1780. Separate judgments against defendants.— Where it appears that an action was brought in one state against two defendants jointly, and a judgment was rendered against each of the defendants at different times but for the same amount and for the breach of a joint promise, an action may be maintained against the two defendants in another state, on the record from the first state showing the separate judgments. (III) Requisites of Judgment as Cause of Action—(A) In General. In order that an action may be maintained in one state upon a judgment recovered in another state, it is necessary that the judgment should be a valid[29] and final adjudication,[30] remaining in full force and virtue in the state of its rendition,[31] and capable of being there enforced by final process,[32] and that it should be of a Stay of execution.— A judgment on which execution is stayed in the state of its rendition cannot be sued on in another state. Tipton v. Mayfield, 10 La. 189; Nazro v. McCalmont Oil Co., 36 Hun (N. Y.) 296. But a statutory provision in the state where the judgment was rendered, to the effect that, where judgment is recovered against a principal and surety, the creditor cannot have execution against the surety until an affidavit is filed that the principal has no available property, is a remedial statute without extraterritorial effect, and will not stand in the way of a suit on the judgment in another state. Briggs v. Campbell, 19 La. 524.

Judgment enjoined.— A judgment creditor cannot sue on the judgment in another state when a court of the state where it was rendered has granted an injunction forbidding him to take further proceedings on the judgment. Palmer v. Palmer, 2 Miles (Pa.) 373; nature to create a definite and absolute indebtedness against the judgment defendant,[33] and must have been rendered by a court having jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter;[34] and when a judgment recovered in a lower court of another state has been appealed and passed upon by the appellate court, the action should be brought upon the record of the latter court, that being the final judgment in the case.[35]

(B) Judgments by Confession. A judgment rendered by confession of the defendant, whether in open court or on a warrant of attorney, will support an action in another state, if it is valid by the laws of the state where entered, and even though no such form of judgment is recognized or permitted by the laws of the state where it is put in suit.[36]

(C) Decrees in Equity. An action of debt will lie in the courts of one state on a decree in equity rendered in another, if it is for the payment of money only.[37]

Statute imposing liability on officers of corporations.— Where a state statute provides that if any certificate or notice given by the officers of certain corporations shall be false in any material representation, all the officers who have signed the same shall be jointly and severally liable for all the debts of the corporation contracted while they are officers, this is not a penal statute, in the sense of international law, so that a judgment recovered thereunder cannot be enforced in another state. Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 13 S. Ct. 224, 36 L. ed. 1123 [reversing 70 Md. 191, 16 Atl. 651, 14 Am. St. Rep. 344, 2 L. R. A. 779]. See CORPORATIONS, 10 Cyc. 854.

Forfeited recognizance.— The objection that one state will not enforce the penal laws of another is not well taken where the action is upon a judgment rendered in such other state upon a forfeited recognizance taken for a violation of its penal laws. Lands out of the state.— A judgment in an administration suit in Virginia does not estop the same parties from pleading the Alabama statute of non-claim, in a suit to enforce satisfaction of the claim out of lands in Alabama. Jones v. Drewry, 72 Ala. 311.

Defects in the record.— In an action on a foreign judgment, questions in reference to alleged errors in the record of the judgment cannot be considered. Witbeck v. Marshall-Wells Hardware Co., 188 Ill. 154, 58 N. E. 929. On the same principle the insertion in a transcript of a foreign record of matters which do not properly belong there is no ground for rejecting the entire transcript; nor will it be rejected on the ground that a material part appears to have been fraudulently suppressed, where there is nothing in the record to show that the omitted part was attainable by the clerk. It will be presumed that the omitted papers had been lost or destroyed, rather than that they were fraudulently withheld. Gunn v. Howell, 35 Ala. 144, 73 Am. Dec. 484.

Counter-claim for damages.— Where, in an action on a foreign judgment, nothing appears that would affect its validity in the state where rendered, defendant cannot claim damages for its rendition. Miller v. Lovell, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 40 S. W. 835.

40. Eaton v. Hasty, 6 Nebr. 419, 29 Am. Rep. 365; Vaught v. Meador, 99 Va. 569, 39 S. E. 225, 86 Am. St. Rep. 908; Buford v. Buford, 4 Munf. (Va.) 241, 6 Am. Dec. 511.

Garnishment of judgment.— Where defendant's indebtedness under the judgment has been attached or garnished in the state where the judgment was rendered, this will not prevent the rendition of a judgment on the judgment in another state; but all process for the enforcement of the judgment last rendered must be stayed until the determination of the garnishment proceedings. Magnolia Metal Co. v. Sterlingworth R. Supply Co., 6 North. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 358.

Payment of the original debt, before the rendition of the judgment, in the foreign state, cannot be pleaded, the judgment being conclusive against this defense. Drake v. Granger, 22 Fla. 348; Snyder v. Critchfield, 44 Nebr. 66, 62 N. W. 306; Lance v. Dugan, 10 Pa. Cas. 276, 13 Atl. 942. See supra, XIII, E, 2, f. or, where equitable defenses are allowed, any matters which would justify the grant of an injunction to restrain the enforcement of the judgment against him;[41] but he cannot set up any defenses to the original cause of action which might and should have been interposed in the suit in which the judgment was rendered.[42]

(II) Defense Cannot Be Taken on the Merits. The judgment of a competent court in another state being final and conclusive on the merits,[43] no defense can be heard, in an action upon it, which goes to the merits of the original controversy, and no defense can be set up which might, with proper diligence, have been interposed in the original action.[44]

a sister state defendant can show payments made during the pendency of the suit in which the judgment was recovered.

Discharge in bankruptcy.— Where defendant fails to plead a discharge in bankruptcy which would have constituted a good defense, and judgment is rendered against him, he is concluded from pleading the discharge in an action on the judgment in another state. Dimock v. Revere Copper Co., 117 U. S. 559, 6 S. Ct. 855, 29 L. ed. 994. So if he pleaded the bankruptcy proceedings in the original action but afterward withdrew the plea and confessed judgment. Anderson v. Clark, 70 Ga. 362. But several cases hold that if, by the law of the state where the judgment was rendered, a discharge in bankruptcy is a good defense to a judgment recovered after such discharge was obtained, but founded on a claim which existed before the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings, the discharge will be a good defense to an action on the judgment in another state. Haggerty v. Amory, 7 Allen (Mass.) 458. And see Anderson v. Anderson, 65 Ga. 518, 38 Am. Rep. 797; Bradford v. Rice, 102 Mass. 472, 3 Am. Rep. 483.

Personal disability.— That defendant was an infant, or a married woman, or under other personal disability, at the time when the judgment was rendered, is not a defense pleadable in an action on the judgment in another state, as it should have been urged in defense to the original action. Sharman v. Morton, 31 Ga. 34; Hanna v. Read, 102 Ill. 596, 40 Am. Rep. 608; Milne v. Van Buskirk, 9 Iowa 558; Gilfry v. Saarbach, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 476.

Judgment in favor of foreign corporation not entitled to do business.— But it has been held that in an action on a judgment obtained by a foreign corporation in another state, defendant may show, in bar of recovery, and notwithstanding the provisions of the federal constitution and act of congress declaring that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the records and judicial proceedings of every other state, that the cause of action merged in the judgment arose from a transaction entered into by the corporation in the state of the forum, without having had a permit to do business in that state. St. Louis Expanded Metal Fireproofing Co. v. Beilharz, (Tex. Civ. App. 1905) 88 S. W. 512.

Statute of limitations.— The statute, although available as a defense against the judgment (see infra, XXII, B, 4, d), is not so against the original cause of action. That is, in an action on a judgment rendered in another state, it is not a good defense that the cause of action was already barred by limitations at the time it was put in suit, as that is a defense which must be pleaded in the original suit; nor is it a defense that the cause of action would have been barred by the statute of limitations of the state where the judgment is sued on, for prescription against the original cause of action would be governed by the limitation law of the state where the cause of action arose. (III) WANT OF JURISDICTION. It is a good defense to an action on a judgment recovered in another state that the court rendering the judgment had no jurisdiction of the person of the defendant or of the subject-matter of the action.[45]

(IV) PENDENCY OF APPEAL. If, by the law of the state in which a judgment is obtained, an appeal does not operate as a supersedeas or stay proceedings on the judgment in that state, the pendency of such appeal is no bar to an action on the judgment in another state;[46] and in order to ascertain the effect of an appeal in the state where the judgment was rendered, the court in which the action is brought will examine the laws and practice of that state.[47] But it will be proper to withhold final judgment, or to stay execution on the judgment, until the appeal shall have been determined, defendant giving bonds to satisfy the judgment in case he loses the appeal.[48]

c. Jurisdiction. The courts of record, possessing general original jurisdiction in civil matters, may take cognizance of an action on a judgment recovered in another state;[49] but such an action does not lie before a justice of the peace or other inferior court.[50] applies to actions on judgments of the federal courts.[52] But which clause of the statute is to be applied to an action on a foreign judgment must be determined by the wording of the statute and the applicability of its terms to judgments.[53]

(II) What Law Governs. The statute of limitations to be applied is as a rule the statute of the state where suit is brought on the judgment not that of the state where the judgment was rendered;[54] and even where the judgment would be barred by limitations in the state where rendered, yet an action may be maintained upon it in the courts of another state, if the statute of the latter state, affording a longer time, has not yet run against it.[55] But this last rule is changed by law in several of the states which do not allow an action to be maintained upon a judgment which is already barred in the state where rendered;[56] and on the other hand, in one state, a judgment obtained in another state is not barred, if not barred in the state where rendered.[57]

(III) Constitutionality of Statutes. The constitutional provision requiring "full faith and credit" to be given to the judgments of other states is not violated by a statute imposing a reasonable period of limitation upon the bringing of suits on such judgments,[58] although the statute would be unconstitutional if it should, by retroaction or otherwise, entirely cut off the remedy by suit on a judgment of another state, and so entirely prevent its enforcement.[59]

(IV) Computation of Period of Limitation. The period of limitation against an action on a foreign judgment begins to run from the date of rendition of the judgment,[60] or from the time an execution could issue on it.[61] The revival

Since, under the laws of Maryland, an action on a judgment is barred in twelve years from its date, an action by a foreign corporation cannot be maintained in New York on a Maryland judgment on a cause of action which did not originally accrue in favor of a resident of New York, but accrued against a person who was at the time of its accrual and thereafter a resident of Maryland, after the time limited by the laws of Maryland, under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 390*a*, providing that, where a cause of action arises outside of the state, an action cannot be brought in the state to enforce it after the expiration of the time limited by the laws of the state where the cause of action arose, except where it originally accrued in favor of a resident of the state. which the suit was brought,[65] nor the whole of the record in the foreign suit, if enough is included to show the essential facts in regard to the court, its jurisdiction, and the judgment actually rendered.[66]

(B) Averring Jurisdiction. In suing on a judgment from another state, if the declaration shows that the court rendering it was a court of record, or a court of general jurisdiction, it is not necessary to aver in terms that the court had jurisdiction of the parties or the subject-matter, or to set out the facts conferring jurisdiction, as this will be presumed until disproved.[67] But the rule is otherwise where the record shows that the judgment was against a non-resident defendant,[68] or where the court was one of limited, inferior, or special statutory jurisdiction,[69] although in the latter case statutes in some of the states have dispensed with the necessity of pleading the jurisdictional facts.[70]

(II) Transcript or Record of Judgment—(A) Pleading or Exhibiting. In an action on a judgment of another state, if the declaration sufficiently sets forth or describes the judgment as a cause of action, it is not necessary to incorporate the whole record in the declaration or attach it,[71] or to file it with the declaration or petition,[72] or to make profert of the record.[73]

(B) Authentication of Record. The method of authenticating a record of a judgment from another state prescribed by the act of congress[74] is not exclusive, it being in the power of the states to authorize any other method of authentication deemed sufficient,[75] although no state could add to the requirements of the act of congress, or refuse recognition to a record authenticated as that act directs.[76] The act of congress does not apply to judgments of justices of the peace in other states, and therefore they must be authenticated as at common law, by the deposition of the justice or other sufficient evidence.[77]

Statutes as to process against foreign corporations.— In an action on foreign judgments against a non-resident insurance company, it was not essential to the validity of such judgments that the statutes of the state prescribing the manner in which process should be served should be either incorporated in or referred to in the judgment-roll. Johnston v. Mutual Reserve L. Ins. Co., 104 N. Y. App. Div. 550, 93 N. Y. Suppl. 1052 [affirming 45 Misc. 316, 90 N. Y. Suppl. 539 (affirming 43 Misc. 251, 87 N. Y. Suppl. 438)].

cate to the transcript should be made by the clerk in person,[84] and is not sufficient if made by a deputy clerk.[85] The seal of the court is self-proving and need not be certified as such;[86] but if the court does not possess a seal, the fact must be stated by either the clerk or the judge in the certificate.[87]

(E) Certificate of Judge. The judge's certificate must be in the form prescribed by the act of congress, and state that the attestation is in due form,[88] and must sufficiently show that the person signing it is the judge of the court, or one of its several judges having authority to make such certificates.[89]

(III) Plea or Answer—(A) In General. The plea or answer in an action on a judgment of another state may deny the existence of the judgment alleged,[90] or plaintiff's right to sue on it,[91] or the jurisdiction of the court which rendered it,[92] or may allege its payment or satisfaction.[93] Such an action also comes within the provisions of a statute which authorizes judgment to be entered up by way of default if no affidavit of defense is filed.[94]

(B) Proper Form of General Issue. In an action on a judgment of a court of record in another state, nil debet is not a good plea, the judgment being entitled to the full dignity of a record, and the merits not being open to reëxamination; the only proper form of the general issue is nul tiel record;[95] or, under that the court did not have jurisdiction of defendant, that being a mere conclusion of law,[1] or to state facts which only show error in the exercise of jurisdiction rather than a want of jurisdiction;[2] nor is it enough to negative the residence of defendant within the state and the service of process upon him, as this does not exclude the hypothesis that he may have voluntarily appeared;[3] nor can a plea be sustained which alleges that if any attorney appeared for defendant, he had no knowledge of it; for it must specifically deny the authority of the attorney.[4] Further an objection to the jurisdiction of the court rendering the judgment cannot be taken by demurrer,[5] except where the want of jurisdiction appears on the face of the record.[6]

(iv) Replication and Other Pleadings. A plea denying the jurisdiction of the court rendering the judgment may be met by a replication, but this must set out specifically the facts relied on as giving jurisdiction.[7] And if the record is relied on as an estoppel to a plea of want of notice, it must be pleaded.[8]

(v) Issues, Proof, and Variance. The inquiry in an action on a judgment from another state will be strictly confined to the issues raised by the pleadings;[9] and if the judgment alone is pleaded as a cause of action, and it shows that there cannot be a recovery upon it, neither can there be a recovery on the note or other

Service on corporation.— In a suit on a judgment obtained in another state against a domestic corporation, it is not a good plea to allege that process was not served on any one authorized to act for it in the suit, for it may have had an office and transacted business in such foreign state and made the contract there, and the process may have been served on its president or other officer while in such state. Moulin v. Trenton Mut. L., etc., Ins. Co., 24 N. J. L. 222.

Form of plea held good.— The following is a good plea: "That the defendant was not served with process in the suit in which the said judgment was obtained; that he did not appear to the suit in person or by attorney; and that he was not resident nor present within the jurisdiction of the court in which the said judgment was rendered, at any time pending the suit or when judgment was rendered," and if attorneys did enter an appearance for him, "that A. & B. appeared in said suit for the defendant, but that neither they nor any other person or persons, were ever authorized by the defendant to do so." evidence of debt which was the original cause of action.[10] The record of the judgment will not be admissible if there is a material variance between its terms or recitals and the declaration or petition, in respect to the names of the parties,[11] the court in which the judgment was rendered,[12] the amount of recovery,[13] or other particulars.[14]

(VI) Evidence Admissible Under Pleadings. A plea of nul tiel record, or the equivalent plea of a general denial, generally puts in issue nothing but the existence of the record, and consequently a want of jurisdiction in the court rendering the judgment cannot be shown under this plea, but must be specially pleaded.[15] So also it has been held that payment or satisfaction cannot be shown under the general issue, but must be specially pleaded;[16] and the same is true of fraud or misrepresentation in obtaining the judgment,[17] or an injunction granted in the foreign state restraining its enforcement,[18] although the defendant may give evidence of anything which would be sufficient cause for setting the judgment aside in the state where rendered.[19] No defense on the merits can be taken under the general issue or any other plea.[20]

f. Evidence — (I) Presumptions and Burden of Proof. The presumption is in favor of the jurisdiction of the court rendering the judgment and the validity of the judgment, and the burden is on defendant, if he denies this,[21] as also where he sets up payment or satisfaction, or any other affirmative defense.[22] But if the judgment was rendered in a manner unknown to the jurisprudence of the state where the action is brought, the existence of laws which render the judgment valid in the state where it was rendered must be both alleged and proved.[23] The identity of the person sued with the one against whom the judgment was recovered may be presumed if the names given in full are the same.[24]

(II) ADMISSIBILITY. A plea of the general issue must be met by the production in evidence of a transcript or exemplification of the record sued on, authenticated in due form;[25] and this is the only proper evidence on any issue as to the status or terms of the judgment,[26] except in so far as it may be aided by the confessions or admissions of defendant.[27] But plaintiff's ownership of the judgment, by assignment or otherwise, and his right to sue thereon may be shown by parol.[28]

A final judgment is sufficiently shown by a transcript reciting: "Now, April 16, 1901, on motion of . . . [counsel] the court directs judgment for want of an appearance. . . . Whereupon judgment is entered against defendant in favor of plaintiff for the sum of one thousand two hundred and fifty dollars, with interest from November 14, 1898." Old Wayne Mut. defining the jurisdiction of such magistrates and regulating their procedure must be shown.[32]

g. Trial. Questions as to the sufficiency or legal effect of the record presented in support of plaintiff's case are triable by the court alone,[33] including the measure of his recovery, if that depends upon the foreign judgment only, as will be the case in the absence of any plea of payment or set-off;[34] but questions of fact, such as the authorization of an attorney to appear for the defendant, or the circumstances alleged as conferring jurisdiction of his person, when disputed, must be submitted to a jury.[35]

h. Judgment. Where the record of the foreign judgment is in due form, and there is no countervailing evidence, a recovery thereon will be authorized,[36] and the judgment rendered should correspond in character, terms, and amount with the judgment sued on.[37] The recovery may include the costs of the foreign action if they constitute a part of the judgment,[38] and interest on the judgment from the date of its rendition, if the statutes allow it.[39] Judgment having been rendered on the foreign record, execution thereon may be stayed, pending an appeal from the judgment in the foreign state, or pending a new trial ordered there.[40]

i. Appeal. On appeal from a judgment rendered on a judgment from another state, the objection that the court rendering it had no jurisdiction is not avail-

Restriction to particular property.— Where a foreign judgment against a married woman limits its execution to her separate estate, the judgment rendered thereon should not be a general personal judgment, but should contain a like restriction. Sanguinnetti v. Roche, 15 N. Y. Suppl. 185.

Enforcing lien.— Where judgment is obtained in one state on a note made and payable there, but secured by a mortgage on land in another state, the court, in a suit in the latter state on such judgment, may enforce the mortgage lien. Brown v. Todd, 29 S. W. 621, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 697.

Shickle v. Watts, 94 Mo. 410, 7 S. W. 274. able,[41] nor the defense that plaintiff, an assignee of the judgment, had not shown his title to it.[42] Nor will the judgment ordinarily be disturbed in a case of conflicting evidence on a disputed question of fact.[43]

5. Jurisdictional Inquiries — a. Effect of Want of Jurisdiction. If the court which rendered a judgment or decree had no jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, the judgment, being therefore void, is not entitled to recognition or enforcement in another state, and cannot be made the basis of an action there.[44] And the same is true where the court was without jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action,[45] and where, although jurisdiction originally attached, it was definitely lost before the rendition of the judgment and not restored.[46]

What law governs.— The validity of a judgment of a sister state, when questioned on the ground of a want of jurisdiction over the subject-matter in the court rendering it, must be determined by the law of the state where it was rendered. Stark v. Ratcliff, 111 Ill. 75.

46. Risley v. Indianapolis, etc., R. Co., Wils. (Ind.) 572.

Suspension of jurisdiction distinguished.— It is necessary to distinguish cases where the jurisdiction of the court is merely suspended instead of being lost. In such a case the court may resume its jurisdiction when the impediment is removed; and if the record of the foreign judgment does not show that any notice was given to the party affected, on thus resuming jurisdiction, it will be presumed that such notice was held unnecessary, or that if necessary it was in fact given. Sanford v. Sanford, 28 Conn. 6.

Appeal.— Where judgment is rendered against a party who is fully within the jurisdiction of the court, and an appeal is taken after he has removed from the state, the appellate court has jurisdiction to proceed with the case, although there can be no per-

b. Want of Jurisdiction Apparent on the Record. It follows that in an action on a judgment from another state there can be no recovery, nor any recognition of the judgment as evidence, if the record shows on its face that the court rendering the judgment had no jurisdiction.[47]

c. Presumption in Favor of Jurisdiction. In an action on a judgment recovered in another state, the record of which is duly authenticated and produced in evidence, it will be presumed that the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties, in the absence of proof to the contrary, and although the record may be incomplete or ambiguous on this point;[48] and the presumption of regu-sonal service of the process or notice of appeal. Cone v. Hooper, 18 Minn. 531; Nations v. Johnson, 24 How. (U. S.) 195, 16 L. ed. 628. Compare Meyer v. Hartman, 14 Mo. App. 130.

Scire facias to revive.— In cases where a scire facias is to be regarded as a continuation of the original action and not a new suit, a judgment on the scire facias against a non-resident who was not served with notice of that proceeding and did not appear will be held good in the courts of another state, provided the court had jurisdiction over him in the original suit. Adams v. Rowe, 11 Me. 89, 25 Am. Dec. 266. And see Delano v. Jopling, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 117; Poorman v. Crane, Wright (Ohio) 347. But compare Holt v. Alloway, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 108; Robinson v. Ward, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 86, 5 Am. Dec. 327. So again a judgment founded on a recognizance entered in the courts of a state on the return of two successive writs of scire facias nihil habet will be regarded as valid and conclusive in the courts of another state. larity will also support a finding by the court which rendered the judgment on the subject of its own jurisdiction.[49] But this rule does not apply where the defendant was a non-resident of the state where the judgment was rendered, or is shown to have been absent from that state at the commencement of the action;[50] where the judgment was given by a justice of the peace or other inferior court not of record;[51] or where the jurisdiction was wholly dependent upon statute or the form of the proceeding unknown to the common law.[52]

d. Jurisdiction May Be Disproved. When a judgment recovered in one state is pleaded or presented in the courts of another state, whether as a cause of action or a defense or as evidence, the party sought to be bound or affected by it may always impeach its validity and escape its effect by showing that the court which rendered it had no jurisdiction over the parties or the subject-matter of the action.[53] So also a judgment of a state court although it is entitled to full faith

Waiver and appearance.— But if a defendant waives a want of service, and appears, pleads, and goes to trial, he cannot allege want of jurisdiction, in an action on the judgment in another state. Smith v. Whittier, 9 N. H. 464.

And one who prosecutes an appeal from a judgment of a nisi prius court of a sister state to the supreme court of that state, and who submits himself to the jurisdiction of the appellate tribunal, cannot impeach its judgment, in an action brought thereon in this state, on the ground that the nisi prius court never obtained jurisdiction of his person, as the judgment of the supreme court merges that of the lower court. Roach v. Privett, 90 Ala. 391, 7 So. 808, 24 Am. St. Rep. 819.

Question of jurisdiction involved in "merits" of action.— Where a suit was brought in New York upon a judgment rendered by a court in Massachusetts, in an action in which the defendant had appeared after being person-of jurisdiction of the parties or the subject-matter, when brought in question in a federal court, even when sitting in the same state.[54]

e. Extrinsic Evidence to Show Jurisdiction. If the jurisdiction of the court rendering the judgment is thus attacked, the party offering the judgment is not obliged to stand upon the record alone, but may present extraneous evidence to show that jurisdiction in fact attached.[55]

f. Contradicting Recitals of Record. Although many of the cases, particularly the earlier ones, refuse to permit a defendant, denying the jurisdiction of a court in another state which rendered the judgment in question, to present evidence contradictory of the recitals in the record on the subject of jurisdiction,[56] yet the preponderance of authority, following the lead of the United States supreme court,[57] is now in favor of the doctrine that the record in such a case is not conclusive on this point, but may be directly controverted by extraneous evidence.[58] Such evidence, however, cannot be introduced under the general issue, ally served with process, and it appeared that the judgment sued on was itself rendered upon an earlier judgment against the same defendant in another court of Massachusetts; and he offered to prove that he never had notice of the original action, was not a resident of Massachusetts, and was not served with process in that suit, the court in New York refused to admit such evidence, for the reason that the merits of the judgment now in suit could not be inquired into again, and that, although the courts of New York might have held the original judgment void, yet as the Massachusetts court had not done so, but had rendered a new judgment upon it, that new judgment must be considered as conclusive of the question. Rocco v. Hackett, 2 Bosw. (N. Y.) 579.

Death of party.— To defeat an action on a foreign judgment, it is competent to show that the defendant was dead at the time of its rendition. Gerault v. Anderson, Walk. (Miss.) 30, 12 Am. Dec. 521.

g. Sufficiency of Process or Service[60] — (i) In General. Except in certain cases where constructive service of process is sufficient to give jurisdiction,[61] a judgment recovered in another state will not be accorded recognition as a valid and binding adjudication unless there was actual personal service on defendant,[62] effected in some regular and proper manner,[63] of which the officer's return, being regular on its face, will be prima facie evidence,[64] or a voluntary appearance by defendant, at the commencement of the action, or by taking part in some subsequent proceeding;[65] and mere knowledge of the pendency of the suit is not sufficient.[66]

(ii) Appearance by Attorney. Where the record of a judgment of another state recites that defendant appeared by attorney, this furnishes prima facie evidence that the appearance was authorized, and will support the jurisdic-

Sufficiency of process.— Where the statutes of a foreign state do not in terms require that the summons shall state the time and place to answer, and the summons in question did not furnish such information, a judgment rendered on default of defendant's appearance presupposes that such summons was sufficient under the laws of such state, and the judgment will not be deemed void for want of jurisdiction. tion unless controverted.[67] But it is not conclusive evidence that the attorney was authorized so to appear, and defendant may prove that the appearance was unauthorized or fraudulent, and consequently that there was no jurisdiction over him.[68] On the same principle, where a judgment is against plaintiff for costs, and he is sued upon it in another state, he may defend by showing that he gave no authority to institute the suit and had no knowledge thereof before judgment was rendered.[69]

(III) JURISDICTION BY ATTACHMENT OF PROPERTY. If jurisdiction in an action against a non-resident defendant is obtained by attachment of his property only, without personal service of process, the judgment rendered may bind the property attached and justify its disposition under execution;[70] but it can have no

Garnishment.— The jurisdiction of a state includes the power to appropriate debts, due by its citizens to non-residents, to the payment of debts due by such non-residents to extraterritorial force or validity whatsoever as a personal judgment against defendant.[71] No action can be maintained in another state on a judgment so rendered,[72] nor will it constitute a merger of the original demand or a bar to an action in another state to recover the balance of such demand remaining unsatisfied after the sale of the property attached.[73]

(IV) EXTRATERRITORIAL SERVICE OF PROCESS. Personal service of process outside the boundaries of the state from whence it issues gives no jurisdiction of the person; hence such service, effected in another state, although authorized by the laws of the forum, gives no authority to render a personal judgment which will have any force or vitality beyond the state where the action is brought.[74]

A personal judgment for costs may not be rendered against defendant, on default, in an action of trespass to try title to real estate, if citation was served on him by publication, as a non-resident, and not personally, and if such a judgment be entered, it cannot be enforced against other property of defendant even within the jurisdiction of the court. (v) Constructive Service of Process—(a) On Non-Residents. A judgment rendered in one state against a resident of another state who was not served with process and did not appear in the action either personally or by an authorized attorney is not valid or binding out of the state where rendered, although the attempt to acquire jurisdiction may have been in a mode, as, for example, by publication of summons in a newspaper, recognized as sufficient by the laws of that state; but such a judgment will be treated in the courts of other states as void for want of jurisdiction.[75]

(b) On Residents. If process is served upon a defendant according to the laws of the state of which he is a resident, and in which the action is brought, although it falls short of actual personal service, a judgment rendered against him is entitled to recognition as valid and binding in the courts of another state.[76]

But the judgment is liable to be impeached in the courts of another state by proof that defendant was not actually domiciled in the state where it was rendered, or subject to its laws.[77]

(VI) VOLUNTARY APPEARANCE OF NON-RESIDENT. No matter what may be the form or manner of service on a non-resident defendant, if he voluntarily enters an appearance in the action, the court acquires complete jurisdiction of him, so that a judgment based thereon must be accounted valid and binding in all other states.[78]

(VII) DEFENDANT DECOYED INTO ANOTHER STATE. It has been held that in an action on a judgment rendered in another state, it is a complete defense to show that defendant, by means of plaintiff's fraud and false representations, was decoyed into the jurisdiction of the court which rendered the judgment, and by such means was served with process.[79] But some of the cases hold that defendant in such a case should first exhaust his remedies against the judgment in the state where it was rendered, and if he fails to do this he cannot defend against it on such grounds.[80]

(VIII) NON-RESIDENT CORPORATIONS. Jurisdiction of a foreign corporation, in an action against it, must be acquired by proper and sufficient service within

Pennsylvania.— An affidavit of defense, in a suit on a foreign judgment, which alleges that defendant was fraudulently enticed into the state where the judgment was rendered for the purpose of getting service on him is not sufficient unless it also shows a defense on the merits. Luckenbach v. Anderson, 47 Pa. St. 123.

Compare, however, Jaster v. Currie, 198 U. S. 144, 25 S. Ct. 614, 49 L. ed. 988 [reversing (Nebr. 1903) 94 N. W. 995], holding that the refusal of the Nebraska courts to permit an action to be maintained on an Ohio judgment denies the full faith and credit guaranteed by U. S. Const. art. 4, § 1, when based on the alleged fraud in acquiring jurisdiction of the defendant in the Ohio suit, in that the service of process therein was only made possible by giving defendant notice in Nebraska that plaintiff's deposition would be taken in Ohio for use in an action for the same cause then pending in Nebraska, in the hope that defendant would attend, and would delay his return to Nebraska after the deposition was taken long enough to permit service.

A mere request to defendant to go to the other state and defend a suit actually pending there is not a fraudulent device or trick such as will invalidate a judgment recovered against him after service of process in the state. Duringer v. Moschino, 93 Ind. 495.

80. Thus it is held in several states that defendant should first apply to the court which rendered the judgment to set it aside, on the ground of an abuse of process, or apply to a proper court for an injunction against it. the state to entitle the judgment to recognition abroad;[81] but such service may be made upon a duly authorized resident agent or officer of the company,[82] or upon the secretary of state, commissioner of insurance, or other officer, as provided by statute,[83] and the judgment will then be valid, provided the record shows on its face that the corporation was doing business within that state.[84] A judgment against a foreign corporation after its dissolution according to law in the state which created it is a nullity.[85]

(IX) NON-RESIDENT STOCK-HOLDERS OF DOMESTIC CORPORATION. A judgment against a corporation which by the laws of the state in which it is rendered is binding on the stock-holders must be given by a court of another state the same conclusive effect against a stock-holder who is sued therein, as upon his unpaid subscription or upon an assessment to pay debts; and the only defenses which he can make against it are those which he could make in the courts of the state where it was rendered;[86] and the rule is the same in regard to a decree or order levying an assessment upon the premium notes of members of a mutual insurance company.[87] But an order of court merely making an assessment or call upon stock-holders for unpaid subscriptions is not to be taken as a judgment against any individual stock-holder, so as to be conclusive against him in the courts of another state.[88]

(X) IRREGULARITIES IN PROCESS OR SERVICE. If defendant was personally served within the jurisdiction of the court, no mere irregularity in the service or in the process, unless so radical as to deprive it of all citatory effect, can be set up against the judgment when brought in question in another state.[89]

in one state and sued on in another, the transcript or record must show that defendant was summoned to appear, or that he did appear, in the court which rendered the judgment.[90] If the record shows neither service of process nor notice to or appearance by defendant, it will be treated as a nullity.[91] But if it recites or shows an actual appearance by him, it is immaterial whether or not it shows proper service of process upon him.[92]

i. Judgment Against Joint Defendants. In an action against several defendants, some of whom are not served with process, or are only constructively summoned, a judgment rendered jointly against all is not enforceable in another state against defendants jointly or against those not served;[93] and the same rule applies to a judgment against a partnership, where some of the partners are not served with process.[94] So far as concerns defendant who was served, the judgment may be valid in the state of its rendition, and if this is the case it must be accorded an equal measure of validity in all other states.[95] But some cases hold that the presumption is against its validity, even as to defendant legally before the court; and if it is valid as to him by the law of the state where it was rendered, this fact must be established by affirmative proof of the laws of that state; otherwise it will be held void.[96]

in an action are not served, judgment may be rendered against all, but so that execution shall only issue against their joint property and the separate property of defendant served.[97] And a judgment so rendered must be accorded the same force and effect in another state, when made the basis of an action, as it receives at home; so that defendant who was served cannot contest the validity of the judgment as to him nor the merits of the case.[98] But defendant not served is not bound by the judgment, and it will constitute no bar to a suit against him in another state on the original cause of action.[99] Nor in such an action is the judgment conclusive evidence, unless merely as to the amount of the indebtedness.[1]

6. FRAUD OR ERROR AS GROUND OF IMPEACHMENT — a. Judgment Not Reviewable For Error. Where jurisdiction of an action sufficiently appears or is satisfactorily shown, the judgment rendered therein cannot be impeached or avoided in another state on account of any alleged errors or mistakes committed by the court which rendered it.[2] Thus a court in another state will not listen to a contention that the judgment is contrary to the facts or not warranted by the evidence.[3] But it is otherwise where the alleged error is so radical as to amount to a want of jurisdiction over a necessary party.[4]

b. Irregularities. Irregularities which do not amount to jurisdictional defects, or which do not render a judgment absolutely void, cannot be pleaded in defense to an action on a judgment recovered in another state; but on the contrary every reasonable presumption will be indulged in support of the judgment.[5] It is, how-

Justice's judgment.— But the record of a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace in another state, on which action is brought, must show on its face all the requisites of validity. Perry v. Northern Ins. Co., 5 Phila. (Pa.) 188.

Time of entry.— Where a record from another state shows a judgment entered in vacation, it will be presumed, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that such a judgment was authorized by the laws of that state. Dodge v. Coffin, 15 Kan. 277.

more correct rule, as shown by the decisions of the United States supreme court,[10] is that such a plea is admissible only where fraud in the judgment could be set up against it in the courts of the state where it was rendered, the effect being to give the judgment just the degree of conclusiveness which it has at home and no more;[11] and some of the decisions refuse to admit the plea of fraud even in these circumstances, holding that the party defrauded must seek his remedy in the court which rendered the judgment.[12]

(II) False Evidence and Conspiracy. That a judgment recovered in another state was obtained by means of the false and fraudulent testimony of the prevailing party or other witnesses is no ground of defense to an action upon it, or for enjoining its enforcement.[13] But conspiracy to obtain a judgment against defendant without his knowledge, as by false personation, procuring a false return of service, or other fraudulent means, may be shown in defense to an action upon it in another state, since it strikes at the root of jurisdiction.[14]

(III) Fraud Anterior to Judgment. A plea of fraud in an action on a judgment from another state must show fraud practised in the very act of obtaining the judgment, not anterior to it; a defense founded on the fraudulent character of the cause of action or subject-matter of the original suit is not admissible.[15]

7. Judgments In Rem[16] — a. In General. A judgment in rem, rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction in one state, cannot be collaterally assailed in another.[17] But if jurisdiction was based on the seizure or control of the res, without legal service of process on interested parties, while the judgment will be conclusive as to the status or disposition of such res, as in the case of a decree of divorce, where the res in controversy is the marital status of the petitioner,[18] yet it will not be a bar to an action in another state to enforce a personal liability on the original cause of action,[19] nor will it be evidence except as to the matters actually in issue and adjudicated.[20]

b. Probate Adjudications. A judgment or decree of a competent court in another state admitting a will to probate, or revoking probate already granted, is a "judicial proceeding" to the record of which full faith and credit is to be given when authenticated conformably to the act of congress.[21] So of a probate decree determining the question of the validity of a will,[22] or enforcing its provisions,[23] or allowing or rejecting a claim against the estate,[24] or settling the final accounts of executors or administrators,[25] or distributing the estate, at least so far as regards persons who were parties to that proceeding.[26] A judgment recovered by or against a personal representative in the state of his appointment may be made the basis of an action in another state and is conclusive;[27] but there is no privity between a principal executor or administrator, appointed in the state of the decedent's domicile, and an ancillary administrator, appointed in another state, and therefore a judgment for or against the former will not be binding on the latter nor on assets in his hands or within his jurisdiction.[28] And no judgment or proceeding in a probate court can affect the title of parties to lands lying in another state, or charge such lands with any liability.[29]

c. Judgments in Attachment or Garnishment. A judgment duly and regularly rendered against a garnishee, in a court having jurisdiction, is binding and conclusive in all other states, and constitutes a complete defense to the garnishee when sued for the same debt by his original creditor.[30] And it makes no difference that the debt garnished would be exempt from such process in the state where the judgment is sought to be enforced.[31] But it is competent to show that the judgment against the principal defendant on which the garnishment proceeding was based, or the judgment rendered against the garnishee, was void for want of jurisdiction.[32]

8. Judgments of Inferior Courts — a. Conclusiveness and Effect. Although many of the earlier cases held that a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace or other inferior court in another state was not conclusive on the merits, but was at most only prima facie evidence of debt,[33] it is now generally settled that such a judgment, when properly proved and when jurisdiction is shown to have existed, is entitled to "full faith and credit" in other states, and is as conclusive as the judgment of a court of record.[34]

b. Jurisdictional Inquiries. No presumption of validity can be indulged to support the judgment of an inferior court of another state; all the facts essential to jurisdiction must appear on the face of the record or be shown by competent evidence, before it can be accepted as a binding and conclusive adjudication.[35]

Pleading the judgment. — Where a state statute provides that "in pleading a judgment or other determination of a court or officer of special jurisdiction, it shall not be necessary to state the facts conferring jurisdiction, but such judgment or determination may be stated to have been duly given or made," this provision applies to the judgments of inferior courts of other states as well as to judgments of domestic courts of that character. Terre Haute, etc., R. Co. v. Baker, 122 Ind. 433, 24 N. E. 83; Archer v. Romaine, 14 Wis. 375.

Plea denying jurisdiction. — In an action on a judgment of an inferior court of another state, the plea of nul tiel record is not good, as it is no denial of the indebtedness, and cannot put in issue the existence of a record which if exhibited must be held to be no of a prior suit in a state court, although it be between the same parties and upon the identical cause of action, will not prevent a federal court from taking jurisdiction or be effective as a plea in bar or in abatement and vice versa.[36] But where suits upon the same cause of action are pending simultaneously in a state court and in a federal court, a final judgment entered in either court will be binding and conclusive in the other, without any regard to the question which suit was first commenced.[37]

2. STATE JUDGMENTS IN FEDERAL COURTS — a. Operation and Effect in General. A judgment duly rendered by a state court of competent jurisdiction is entitled to receive in all courts of the United States, the "full faith and credit" which the courts of another state would be bound to accord to it; that is, it will be given the same credit, force, and effect which it would receive in the courts of the state where it was rendered, no more and no less.[38] Such a judgment will not indeed

Federal courts.— Although a defendant in a suit brought in a federal court cannot demand as a matter of course that the action shall abate upon his showing the pendency of a similar suit in a state court, yet it is always competent for the federal court to refuse to entertain a suit between the same parties when the issues and interests involved in the two suits are the same. Conclusiveness in state where rendered.— Although a given judgment of a state court would render a question res judicata in a subsequent suit between the same parties, under the rules of the federal courts, yet a federal court will not give it such effect where it would not be an estoppel under the rule of the highest court of the state. Bailey v. Willeford, 136 Fed. 382, 69 C. C. A. 226 [affirming 126 Fed. 803].

Matters not in issue.— A decree of a state court is not a bar to a suit in a federal court on a question which, although it might possibly have been litigated in the state court if properly pleaded, was in fact neither pleaded nor litigated. De Chambrun v. Schermerhorn, 59 Fed. 504.

as a merger and extinguishment of the original claim or demand,[44] provided the judgment was upon the merits.[45]

b. Conclusiveness on the Merits. A judgment rendered by a state court of competent jurisdiction is binding and conclusive upon the parties when made the basis of a claim or defense in any court of the United States, and cannot be collaterally impeached or reviewed or reëxamined as touching the merits of the original controversy.[46] Nor will a plea of fraud be admissible in defense to an

Land in two states.— On foreclosing a mortgage on a railroad situated partly in two states, a court of one state cannot merge into its judgment the lien on the property in the other state, and its judgment is therefore not a bar to a suit in a federal court for the other state, between the same parties to foreclose the same mortgage. Lynde v. Columbus, etc., R. Co., 57 Fed. 993.

Conflict of jurisdiction.— The fact that county officers have been enjoined by a state court from assessing a tax to pay a judgment rendered by a federal court is no defense to an application to the federal court for mandamus to compel the assessment of the tax for that purpose. Clews v. Lee County, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,892, 2 Woods 474. And see U. S. v. King, 74 Fed. 493; Hill v. Scotland County Ct., 32 Fed. 716.

Suits in admiralty.— The recovery of a personal judgment in a state court for a debt or claim is no bar to a subsequent proceeding in admiralty in a federal court to enforce the same demand as a maritime lien against a vessel. Tabor v. The Cerro Gordo, 54 Fed. 391; The Brothers Apap, 34 Fed. 352; Rogers v. The Reliance, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 12,019, 1 Woods 274.

Rule of following state decisions distinguished.— The rule of res judicata as between federal and state courts is entirely separate and distinct from the rule which requires the United States courts to adopt and follow the decisions of the state courts on questions involving the construction of state statutes and the like, but exempts them from following such decisions on questions of general commercial law, general equity jurisprudence, and some other subjects. A final decision by a state court bars a subsequent suit in a federal court on the same cause of action, when the issues involve questions of the latter class, just as effectually as when they involve questions of the former description. Following a precedent is one thing; giving effect to a judgment as a bar to a second suit is an altogether different thing. Fuller v. Hamilton County, 53 Fed. 411. action on such a judgment, unless in cases where it could have been set up in the courts of the state where the judgment was rendered.[47]

c. Want of Jurisdiction[48] — (I) Admissible as Defense. When a judgment recovered in a state court is offered as a cause of action or as a defense in a federal court, the latter court may inquire into the jurisdiction of the former; and the effect of the judgment will be avoided if it is shown that the court rendering it lacked jurisdiction of the parties or of the subject-matter.[49] The federal courts do not regard as valid a judgment in personam rendered by a state court for the recovery of a debt or demand, unless defendant either entered a voluntary appearance, or he or someone authorized to receive service of process for him was personally cited, within the jurisdiction of the court, to appear in the action.[50] Hence a judgment of a state court rendered against a non-resident, who was cited by publication only, as directed by the local statute, has no validity or effect, except as against property of his which may have been attached at the commencement of the action.[51] But if the question of jurisdiction depends on some local law or statute, and is presented to and decided by the court rendering the judgment, such decision is binding on the federal courts.[52]

(II) Effect of Recitals of Record. Although some of the earlier decisions in the inferior courts of the United States were disposed to hold that they should not allow any contradiction of the record of a state judgment in respect to jurisdictional recitals,[53] this position has been abandoned and it is now held that the want of jurisdiction may be shown, notwithstanding the recitals of the record.[54]

d. Pleading and Evidence. In declaring on a judgment of a state court as a cause of action, all the essential elements of the judgment should be set forth, but not necessarily the pleadings on which it was founded;[55] and it may be alleged to have been duly given or made, without alleging jurisdictional facts, if the statutes of the state where the federal court sits permit that form of pleading a judgment generally.[56] As a defense the judgment is admissible in evidence under the general issue in assumpsit.[57]

Form of judgment.— The fact that a judgment record of a state court is imperfect in some matters of form does not prevent it from being entitled to "full faith and credit" in a federal court. In re Robinson, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,939, 6 Blatchf. 253, 36 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 176.

3. FEDERAL JUDGMENTS IN STATE COURTS — a. Operation and Effect. Although judgments of the federal courts are not strictly speaking within the constitutional provision requiring state courts to give "full faith and credit" to judgments from other states,[58] yet the federal courts are not to be regarded by the state courts as strictly foreign tribunals;[59] but their judgments are to be accorded, in the courts of any state, the same effect, respect, and conclusiveness as would be accorded in similar circumstances to the judgments of a state tribunal of equal authority.[60] A judgment duly rendered by a federal court therefore cannot be impeached collaterally in a state court for any alleged irregularity or error;[61] and although it is not executory, so as to warrant the issue of final process,[62] it constitutes a cause of action on which a suit may be maintained in a state court,[63] and as evidence is conclusive and indisputable as to all points and questions in

It makes no difference that a judgment rendered by a federal court is such as could not have been recovered by plaintiff in a state court. Thus the fact that a judgment for personal injuries was recovered against a lessee in a federal court having jurisdiction, but could not have been recovered had the person injured sued in the state court, is no reason why the federal judgment should not receive full recognition in the courts of the state. Limits of jurisdiction.— A decree of the United States circuit court sustaining a bill as a general creditors' bill, and appointing receivers to take possession of the property of a corporation for the purpose of reducing it to money and distributing it pro rata among the creditors has no effect of its own force beyond the territorial limits of the state in which the decree is entered, and, as a matter of comity, will not be allowed by courts of another state to prevail against any remedy which its laws afford to its own citizens against property of the corporation within its jurisdiction. c. Authentication. Although the act of congress prescribing the mode of authenticating the judgments of a state court when intended to be used in the courts of another state[70] does not expressly include the judgments of the federal courts, yet it has always been the practice to authenticate such judgments in the same manner, and that form of authentication has been held sufficient.[71] Further some decisions hold that where the federal court sits in the same state in whose courts the judgment is to be presented the judgment is sufficiently authenticated merely by the seal of the court.[72]

d. Want of Jurisdiction. When a judgment of a federal court is made the basis of a claim or defense in a state court, it is open to the latter to inquire into the jurisdiction of the former court in respect to parties, subject-matter, diversity of citizenship, amount in controversy, or otherwise, and if a want of jurisdiction is shown the judgment will be treated as a nullity,[73] at least unless the fact upon which jurisdiction depends was admitted or adjudicated.[74] But the jurisdiction of the federal courts is presumed, and it is not necessary that their judgments should Collusive transfer to give jurisdiction.— Where a creditor of a corporation, holding a judgment recovered against it in a federal court, sues in a state court to enforce the liability of stock-holders for unpaid subscriptions, they cannot defend on the ground that the claim sued on in the federal court was collusively assigned to plaintiff for the purpose of giving that court jurisdiction. Tuthill Spring Co. v. Smith, 90 Iowa 331, 57 N. W. 853.

Federal court in same state.— In Minnesota it is held that a judgment of a federal court cannot be collaterally attacked in a state court of the same state in which it was rendered, unless a want of jurisdiction appears on the face of the record, the theory being that it stands on the same footing as a judgment of a domestic court of record. Sandwich Mfg. Co. v. Earl, 56 Minn. 390, 57 N. W. 938; Turrell v. Warren, 25 Minn. 9.

show affirmatively the facts on which the jurisdiction is based, but on the contrary the want of jurisdiction must be affirmatively proved.[75]

4. As Foundation For Creditor's Suit. A creditor's bill in a state court may be based on a judgment recovered by plaintiff in a federal court;[76] and conversely the federal courts, a proper foundation for their jurisdiction being shown, will entertain a creditor's bill founded on the judgment of a state court.[77]

5. State Judgments in Territorial Courts. When a judgment of a state court is relied on as a claim or defense in a court of one of the territories, or of the District of Columbia, the rules governing its conclusiveness and effect are the same as would be operative if it were presented to the courts of another state.[78]

6. Judgments of Territories in State Courts. The act of congress regulating the authentication of judgments, for the purpose of founding a claim or defense upon them outside the jurisdiction where rendered, applies to the records and judicial proceedings of "any territory or country subject to the jurisdiction of the United States."[79] Under this statute judgments of the courts of the several territories and dependencies of the United States, when properly authenticated, stand upon the same footing as those of the courts of a state, and are equally conclusive, and equally entitled to faith and credit, in all courts within the United States, whether state or national,[80] although as in the case of a state judgment they may be impeached for want of jurisdiction, even in contradiction of the recitals of the record.[81] And although the District of Columbia is neither a "state" nor a "territory," it is held to be within the provisions of the act of congress, and the judgments of its supreme court are entitled to the same faith and credit as those of a state.[82]

7. Judgments of Indian Courts. Judgments rendered by the courts of the Indian nations in the Indian Territory, when proceeding within their jurisdiction, stand on the same footing with those of the federal territorial courts, and are entitled to the same faith and credit;[83] but they may be impeached collaterally by showing a want of jurisdiction.[84] However, in determining the validity of a judgment rendered by one of these courts, on a plea of res judicata, the court will disregard informalities and enforce the judgment according to its intent, gathered broadly from the entire proceeding.[85]

D. Judgments of Courts of Foreign Countries — 1. Judgments In Rem[86] — a. In General. A judgment duly rendered by a court in a foreign country, in a proceeding in rem, is binding and conclusive on all parties in interest, and not reëxaminable on the merits, provided the court had jurisdiction and there was no fraud in procuring the judgment or sentence.[87] This applies to decrees of divorce,[88] to probate adjudications,[89] and adjudications in bankruptcy,[90] and to judgments settling a question of pedigree.[91]

The jurisdiction of these courts rests on treaties made by the United States with the Creeks, Cherokees, Choctaws, and other tribes of civilized Indians, giving them the right to establish and maintain courts of justice. These Indian courts have exclusive jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, where only members of the tribe, by nativity or adoption, are concerned, but jurisdiction of cases in which citizens of the United States are parties is reserved to the appropriate federal courts. See 7 U. S. St. at L. 478; 14 U. S. St. at L. 799; 25 U. S. St. at L. 783; 26 U. S. St. at L. 81. And see Ex p. Mayfield, 141 U. S. 107, 11 S. Ct. 939, 35 L. ed. 635. But it is competent for a white man to waive the treaty and statutory provisions which exempt him from the jurisdiction of an Indian court and submit himself to the jurisdiction, and when he does this, by entering a general appearance, pleading to the merits, and proceeding to trial, he cannot afterward contest the validity of the judgment on the ground of a want of jurisdiction of his person. b. Decrees in Admiralty — (1) Conclusiveness in General. A decree of a foreign court of admiralty, having jurisdiction, is binding and conclusive on all persons and in all countries, and cannot be disregarded or contradicted in any subsequent proceeding. This rule applies to a decree condemning a vessel as prize,[92] acquitting property claimed as prize or forfeited,[93] enforcing a maritime lien,[94] or awarding damages for injuries caused by a collision,[95] and to adjudications ordering the sale of wrecks and property left derelict.[96] Further, it has been held by some courts that a sentence condemning a vessel as prize is conclusive evidence of the ground of condemnation, as that she was enemies' property, in a subsequent action between the owners and the insurers.[97] And so where the ground of condemnation was a breach of blockade.[98] But the rule is subject to the qualification that the sentence is conclusive, in a collateral action, of the grounds on which it proceeded only when those facts are clearly stated in the decree itself.[99]

The presumption is in favor of the legitimacy of the foreign tribunal, at least when the authority under which it assumes to act is not made known and there are no circumstances to arouse suspicion. But if the source of the court's authority and the manner of its constitution are stated it is proper to scrutinize them, and if the circumstances are unusual or apparently illegal, it devolves upon the party who would support the decree to vindicate the rightfulness of the court's existence and authority. Snell v. Faussatt, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13,138, 1 Wash. 271.

Place of session.— The sentence of a court of a belligerent power set up within the territory of a neutral state is entitled to no authority, since it acts under an usurped and illegal power and one contrary to the law of nations; but if the court sits within the domains of an allied nation, its jurisdiction is rightful and its constitution legal. 1 Marshall Ins. 388.

authorizing the issue of final process or of creating a lien on real property,[7] although it may give the creditor a sufficient standing to maintain a suit to set aside fraudulent conveyances;[8] but it constitutes a good cause of action on which a suit may be maintained.[9] Such a judgment does not merge the original cause of action, or prevent a suit on the original claim or demand,[10] although payment and satisfaction of it may be pleaded in bar of an action on the original cause in the domestic courts,[11] and if the foreign judgment was for defendant, it will bar a new suit against him in this country on the same demand.[12] The recognition thus accorded to foreign judgments may be based either on the ground of comity,[13] or on the ground of a legal obligation arising from the judgment to pay the debt which it adjudges.[14]

The supreme court of the United States in the case of Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 16 S. Ct. 139, 40 L. ed. 95, laid down the following principles as applicable to actions on foreign judgments: Where an action is brought in an American court by an alien against a citizen, on a judgment recovered by the former against the latter in a foreign country, and it appears that the foreign court had jurisdiction of the cause and of the parties, the judgment is at least prima facie evidence of the truth of the matter adjudged, and it should be held conclusive on the merits, unless some special ground is shown for impeaching it. If there was opportunity for a fair trial before the foreign court, having jurisdiction as aforesaid, and the proceeding was conducted under a system of jurisprudence likely to secure an impartial administration of justice as between natives and foreigners, and if there is no special reason why the comity of the United States should not allow full effect to the judgment, the merits of the case should not be opened and tried afresh, in an action brought in this country on the foreign judgment, on the mere assertion that the judgment was erroneous in law or in fact. Nor can the foreign judgment be disregarded merely because the rules of evidence or of procedure in the country where it was rendered are more lax than ours, or do not accord with those principles which the American system of jurisprudence regards as essential to secure a just and impartial administration of justice. Thus, such a judgment cannot be impeached because plaintiff was permitted to testify without being sworn, and was not subjected to cross-examination, nor because documents were admitted in evidence with which defendant had no connection, and which would not be admissible in the United States, provided that the practice followed and the method of examining witnesses were according to the law of the forum. But it was also held in the case in which these rulings were made, although by a bare majority of the court, that judgments rendered in any foreign country, as, in this case, France, by the laws of apply to a judgment of an inferior or petty court of another country, it being held that such a judgment is not conclusive.[18]

(II) ENGLISH AND SCOTCH DOCTRINE.[19] The earlier decisions in England generally held that while a foreign judgment in a personal suit was sufficient to give a ground of action, and amounted to prima facie evidence of debt, yet it was not conclusive, and the case might be reëxamined on the merits,[20] or, according to a variant of the doctrine, that while it might be conclusive when pleaded as a defense, it was not so when sued on as a cause of action.[21] But it is now settled that such judgments, when rendered by a court having jurisdiction, and without fraud, and while still remaining in force abroad, are binding and conclusive in the English courts, in all cases, and not open to impeachment or reëxamination on the merits.[22] In the law of Scotland it appears that a foreign judgment is final and conclusive if adverse to plaintiff in the action in which it was rendered, but only presumptively just if in his favor.[23]

(III) CANADIAN DOCTRINE.[24] The courts in Canada have generally adopted the principle that a foreign judgment, duly proven, is conclusive on the merits when made the basis of a suit or defense, in the absence of fraud or want of jurisdiction,[25]

which judgments rendered in the United States are reviewable upon the merits, are not entitled to full credit and conclusive effect when sued upon in the United States, but are only prima facie evidence of the justice of plaintiff's claim.

Garnishment.— The judgment of a foreign court of competent jurisdiction in a garnishment proceeding is binding and conclusive, and affords a complete protection to the garnishee, and the money paid under it cannot be recovered back in any action in another country. although this rule is not universally applied in all cases, but is subject to some local variations.[26]

c. Grounds of Impeachment — (I) Want of Jurisdiction. A judgment of a foreign court is always open to impeachment on the ground of a want of jurisdiction over the cause or the parties;[27] but the presumption is in favor of the jurisdiction of a court assuming to exercise it,[28] and the facts of jurisdiction need not be set out in the pleadings of the party relying on the judgment;[29] but on the contrary he who seeks to avoid it must plead the want of jurisdiction, and that not generally, but by explicitly negativing every fact or circumstance from which the jurisdiction of the court over his person might be inferred.[30] Where

26. Ontario.— In this province the rule originally followed was that a judgment rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction in another province or in a foreign country was conclusive between the parties and not liable to be questioned on the merits. But in 1860 a statute was adopted (23 Vict. c. 24) which enacted that in any suit upon a foreign judgment or decree "any defense set up or that might have been set up to the original suit may be pleaded to the suit on the judgment or decree." Under this it was held that such a judgment was only prima facie evidence. But this law was repealed by the Ontario statute (39 Vict. c. 7), and the courts have consequently reverted to their earlier position, and now hold foreign judgments to be conclusive on the merits unless impeached for fraud or want of jurisdiction. defendant was a citizen or subject of the foreign country in which the judgment was recovered, the court may have acquired jurisdiction over him by any mode of service or notice recognized as sufficient by the laws of that country;[31] but a judgment against a citizen or permanent resident of another country, without personal service upon him, or personal notice of the action to him, is null and void,[32] unless he had voluntarily submitted himself to the jurisdiction by appearance and contesting the action.[33]

(II) Objections to Character of Proceedings or Judgment. As a general rule a judgment valid by the laws and practice of the state or country where rendered constitutes a good cause of action in any other state or country.[34] But an exception is made where the judgment was rendered in summary proceedings,[35] and where it was repugnant to natural justice, in the sense that a party in interest sat as a judge in the cause or that defendant was deprived of notice or an opportunity to defend or was not apprised of the nature of the charge or demand against him,[36] although it is not a sufficient ground of objec-

Service on traveler.— It is no defense to an action on a foreign judgment that defendant was served with process in the action while transiently stopping in the country, and that such service was made and timed for the purpose of embarrassing him, and obtaining an unjust advantage, by preventing his having a fair opportunity to make his defense unless he should indefinitely prolong his stay abroad. Fisher v. Fielding, 67 Conn. 91, 34 Atl. 714, 52 Am. St. Rep. 270, 32 L. R. A. 236.

Service on agent.— Personal service on an agent of defendant resident within the country where the judgment was rendered, and having charge of defendant's business there, may be sufficient to confer jurisdiction. Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 16 S. Ct. 139, 40 L. ed. 95.

Extraterritorial service.— Service of process outside the jurisdiction of the court rendering the judgment, although made personally upon the non-resident defendant at his own place of domicile, is of no effect and cannot give jurisdiction. tion that the methods of procedure in force in the foreign country or adopted by the foreign court, in reference to such matters as the manner of conducting the trial, the admissibility of evidence, or the mode of examining witnesses, would be contrary to the laws or practice of the state of the forum,[37] or that there were irregularities, not amounting to jurisdictional defects, in the conduct of the proceedings in the foreign court.[38] Further no country is bound to enforce the penal or revenue laws or police regulations of another country, by giving effect to judgments or sentences founded upon them,[39] or, according to some of the cases, to violate its own public policy or the principles of public order or morality by such recognition of foreign judgments.[40]

(III) ERRORS OF LAW. It is no ground for impeaching a judgment of a foreign court that it is erroneous in matter of law,[41] even where the foreign court proceeded upon a mistaken conception or application of the law of the country where the judgment is sought to be enforced.[42]

(IV) FRAUD. Fraud practised in the concoction or procurement of a foreign judgment, as distinguished from fraud in the transaction sued on, is a good defense against it, and will invalidate the judgment if successfully established.[43]

(v) Want of Finality. A foreign judgment is not available as a cause of action or defense unless final and conclusive in the place where rendered.[44] The pendency of an appeal from the judgment in the foreign country will deprive it of this character of finality if such appeal suspends all remedies for its enforcement in that country, although not otherwise;[45] but it is none the less final merely because defendant might cause it to be vacated or set aside by the court which rendered it, if he has not taken steps to do so.[46]

(vi) Statute of Limitations. The statute of limitations of the country of the forum may be pleaded in bar of an action on a foreign judgment.[47]

d. Pleading and Exhibiting Foreign Judgment. A plea of a foreign judgment should contain enough to show the competence of the foreign court,[48] and should set forth that the judgment was duly given or made,[49] that it was on the merits and conclusive between the parties where rendered,[50] and that it remains in full force and unpaid.[51] Parol evidence is admissible to show what matters were submitted to and passed upon by the court,[52] but the construction and effect of the judgment itself is a matter of law for the court.[53] The judgment should be authenticated by the seal of the court, if any, the certificate of the officer in whose custody the record remains, the attestation of the principal judge of the court to Perjury.— False testimony or the suppression of the truth does not constitute that kind of fraud by which a judgment is vitiated in the courts of another country. Hilton v. Guyott, 42 Fed. 249; Woodruff v. McLennan, 14 Ont. App. 242.

Authentication.— If the foreign court possesses a seal, it must be used for the purpose of authenticating its judgment, even though it is so much worn as no longer to make a legible impression. Cavan v. Stewart, 1 Stark. 525, 2 E. C. L. 200. But if the seal is used, there is no need of proof that the exemplification was compared with the original papers on file or with the roll. Warener v. Kingsmill, 7 U. C. Q. B. 409. Where the action was on a judgment recovered in the tenth judicial district of California, but the exemplification bore the seal of the fourteenth district, and the clerk stated it to be under the seal of his office, not the seal of the court, the court in Canada, where the judgment was put in suit, held the proof insufficient. Junkin v. Davis, 22 U. C. Q. B. 369. Where a foreign judgment was authenticated by the signature of a person describing himself as "Secretary of State of Foreign Affairs," with the addition of a private seal, it was held not admissible. Church v. Hubbart, 2 Cranch (U. S.) 187, 2 L. ed. 249. But on the other hand, a copy of a judgment rendered in a Cuban court was received in evidence in New York, upon proof that it was signed by the clerk of the court, that the court possessed no seal, that the seal used was that of the Royal College of Notaries, that the clerk's signature validated all the proceedings of the court, and that this was the usual method of authenticating records intended to be sent abroad. Packard v. Hill, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 434. The word "judicial" is used in two senses: The first to designate such bodies or officers "as have the power of adjudication upon the rights of persons and property. In the other class of cases it is used to express an act of the mind or judgment upon a proposed course of official action as to an object of corporate power, for the consequences of which the official will not be liable, although his act was not well judged. In re Zborowski, 68 N. Rep. 450, where it is said: "The word 'judicial' has two meanings. It may refer to the discharge of duties exercisable by a judge or by justices in court, or to administrative duties which need not be performed in court, but in respect of which it is necessary to bring to bear a judicial mind — that is, a mind to determine what is fair and just in respect of the matters under consideration."

As used in speaking of a judicial department of government, the word "judicial" means that department of government which

In Robey v. Prince George's County, 92 Md. 150, 163, 48 Atl. 48, it was said: "If its qualities make the act a judicial act, it continues to be judicial, no matter what official undertakes to perform it; otherwise the test would be found not in the nature of the act done but in the official character of the person assuming to do it, and there could, then, never be a question as to whether a designated act was an invasion by one governmental department of the province of another, because if the act became judicial by reason of being assigned to a Judge for performance, you would have to go no farther than to ascertain that it had been so assigned, and thereupon, no matter how obviously executive it might be, it would have to be treated as judicial."

The term "judicial," as applied to the actions of boards and officers authorized to prefer charges and remove officers, is not received in the sense ordinarily applied to courts of justice. The legislature may authorize boards of that character to perform judicial acts, though its judicial authority extends no farther than is necessary to an orderly and proper management of the affairs over which it has control. JUDICIAL DAY. A day in which the court is in session.[36] (See DAY; DIES JURIDICUS; DIES NON JURIDICUS; LEGAL DAY. See also, generally, HOLIDAYS; SUNDAY.)

JUDICIAL DECISION.[37] The application by a court of competent jurisdiction of the law to a state of facts proved or admitted to be true, and a declaration of the consequences which follow.[38] The declaration of what the law is, and not what it shall hereafter be.[39] (Judicial Decision: Of Appellate Court, see APPEAL AND ERROR; COURTS. Of Other Courts, see COURTS; EQUITY; JUDGMENTS. See also JUDICIAL OPINION.)

JUDICIAL DECREE.[40] See EQUITY; JUDGMENTS.

JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW; COURTS; JUDGES.

JUDICIAL DEPOSIT.[41] See DEPOSITS IN COURT.

JUDICIAL DETERMINATION. See JUDICIAL ACT; JUDICIAL ACTION; JUDICIAL DECISION.

JUDICIAL DICTUM. See COURTS; DICTUM.

JUDICIAL DISCRETION. The option which a judge may exercise either to do or not to do that which is proposed to him that he shall do;[42] that discretion which is not, and cannot be, governed by any fixed principles or rules;[43] a discretion to be guided by the spirit, principles, and analogies of the law;[44] such an exercise of authority in the mode of proceeding for the enforcement of rights or the redress of wrongs as is reasonably designed to promote substantial justice.[45]

36. Heffner v. Heffner, 48 La. Ann. 1088, 1090, 20 So. 281, where this term is distinguished from "legal day."

JUDICIAL DISTRICT. A district created for judicial purposes, for defining jurisdiction of courts, and distributing judicial business;[48] the circuit or territory within which a person may be compelled to appear.[49] (See, generally, COURTS; JUDGES; VENUE.)

JUDICIAL DOCUMENTS. Inquisitions, examinations, depositions, affidavits, and other written papers, when they have become proofs of its proceedings and are found remaining on the files of a judicial court.[50] (See, generally, AFFIDAVITS; DEPOSITIONS; EVIDENCE; JUDGMENTS; PLEADING; RECORDS. See also TITLE.)

JUDICIAL DUTY.[51] Such a duty as legitimately pertains to an officer in the department designated by the constitution as judicial.[52] (See, generally, COURTS; JUDGES. See also JUDICIAL ACT; JUDICIAL DISCRETION; JUDICIAL POWER.)

In cases of pure equity the judicial discretion which is or should be brought into play means no more than that the judge will weigh and balance the equities, and decide in favor of that party on whose side he finds the preponderance (West New York Silk Mill Co. v. Laubsch, 53 N. J. Eq. 65, 67, 30 Atl. 814); a discretion reduced to rules and clearly defined, to call the powers of the chancery court into exercise (Moon v. Crowder, 72 Ala. 79, 89).

Quasi-judicial power see infra, text and note 75.

The terms "discretionary power" and "judicial power" are often used interchangeably; but there are many acts requiring the exercise of judgment which may fairly be considered of a judicial nature, and yet do not in any proper sense come within the judicial power, as applicable to the courts. State v. Le Clair, 86 Me. 522, 532, 30 Atl. 7.

65. Century Dict. [quoted in Walker v. Maxwell, 68 N. Y. App. Div. 196, 199, 74 N. Y. Suppl. 94].

It is one of the striking and peculiar features of judicial power that it is displayed in the decision of controversies between contending parties, the settlement of their rights, and the redress of their wrongs. Durham v. Lewiston, 4 Me. 140, 143. It is the province of judicial power to decide private disputes between or concerning individuals. Sanders v. Cabaniss, 43 Ala. 173, 181. By the judicial power of courts is generally understood the power to hear and determine controversies between adverse parties and questions in litigation. State v. Le Clair, 86 Me. 522, 532, 30 Atl. 7; Armstrong v. Murphy, 65 N. Y. App. Div. 126, 127, 72 N. Y. Suppl. 475, O'Brien, J., delivering the opinion of the court.

As power to hear and determine.—A judicial power is said to be a power to hear and determine; but this definition is too comprehensive. Cameron v. Parker, 2 Okla. 277, 322, 38 Pac. 14. "Judicial power," as used in the Constitution, is not capable of a precise definition. It is included in the power to hear and determine, but does not exhaust the power. That it embraces the hearing and determination of all suits and actions, whether public or private, there can be no doubt; but we think that it is equally clear that it does not necessarily include the power to hear and determine the matter that is not in the nature of a suit or action between parties. De Camp v. Archibald, 50 Ohio St. 618, 625, 35 N. E. 1056, 40 Am. St. Rep. 692;

in the judges[67] or in the courts;[68] the power belonging to or emanating from a judge as such;[69] the power conferred upon a public officer, involving the exercise of judgment and discretion in the determination of questions of right in specific cases affecting the interest of persons or property, as distinguished from ministerial power or authority to carry out the mandates of judicial power or of the law;[70] the power exercised by courts in hearing and determining cases before them, or some matter incidental thereto, and of which they have jurisdiction;[71] the power to interpret the constitution and the laws, and make decrees determining controversies;[72] the power which adjudicates upon and protects the rights and interests of individual citizens, and to that end construes and applies the laws.[73] "Judicial power" is abstract or relative; in the latter sense it superintends and controls the conduct of other tribunals by a prohibitory or mandatory interposition.[74] Besides the mass of judicial power belonging exclusively to courts as a department of government, there is a considerable portion of power in its nature judicial — quasi judicial — invested from time to time by legislative authority in individuals,

JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS. A general term for proceedings in courts; for the course authorized to be taken in various cases to secure the determination of a controversy; to obtain the enforcement of a right or the redress or prevention of a wrong;[76] proceedings before a competent court or magistrate in the due course of law or administration of justice, which are to result in any determination of the action by such court or magistrate;[77] proceedings in a court of justice established by law, wherein the rights of parties recognized and protected by law are involved and may be determined;[78] proceedings which take place in or under the authority of a court of justice, or which relate in some way to the administration of justice, or which legally ascertain any right or liability.[79]

JUDICIAL PROCESS. In its largest sense, the term comprehends all the acts of the court from the beginning of its proceedings to the end. In a narrower sense it is the means of compelling the defendant to appear in court for suing out the original writ in civil, and after indictment in criminal cases.[80] (See, generally, Process.)

JUDICIAL PROOF. A clear and evident declaration and demonstration of a Ministerial officers with judicial powers.— As ministerial powers are often vested in judicial officers (Bellingham Bay Imp. Co. v. New Whatcom, 20 Wash. 53, 57, 54 Pac. 774), so in a less technical and more liberal sense of the terms, it seems, ministerial officers or boards are sometimes required to exercise judicial or rather quasi powers (Grider v. Tally, 77 Ala. 422, 424, 54 Am. matter which was before doubtful, conveyed in a judicial manner.[81] (See, generally, CRIMINAL LAW; EVIDENCE.)

JUDICIAL PURPOSES. Purposes of the courts and the administration of justice.[82] (See, generally, COURTS.)

JUDICIAL QUESTION. A question, where the validity of acts of a municipal council are involved, the determination of which under our form of government is intrusted to the judiciary, as distinguished from the other coördinate departments, when and only when such question is made by a person who has suffered or is threatened with some special injury which he seeks to redress or prevent.[83] (See JUDICIAL; JUDICIAL ACT; JUDICIAL FUNCTION; JUDICIAL POWER.)

JUDICIAL RECORD. A precise history of a suit from its commencement to its termination, including the conclusions of law thereon, drawn by the proper officer for the purpose of perpetuating the exact state of facts.[84] (See, generally, EVIDENCE; RECORDS.)

JUDICIAL REMEDIES. Such remedies as are administered by the courts of justice, or by judicial officers empowered for that purpose by the constitution and statutes of the state.[85]
