(II) TORT AND EQUITY. Ordinarily a demand which is purely of equitable cognizance cannot be joined with a cause of action for damages arising in tort.[83] Such a joinder is, however, permitted by a provision allowing the joinder of causes arising from the same transaction or transactions connected with the same subject of action when the causes so arise,[84] for example, an action to set aside a release may be joined with one seeking to recover upon the right of action released.[85]

(III) REFORMATION AND ENFORCEMENT OF INSTRUMENT. A plaintiff may properly seek the reformation of a written instrument and its enforcement as reformed,[86] such a complaint being sometimes held to state but a single cause of action.[87] Under this rule a contract may be reformed and specific performance had,[88] or damages had for its breach,[89] or a judgment recovered on it as reformed.[90] So likewise a deed may be reformed and enforced,[91] as by the recovery of damages for the withholding of the premises,[92] or mesne profits,[93] or damages had for breach of covenants which the deed would contain if reformed.[94] An answer in the nature of a cross bill may seek the reformation of an instrument for mistake and also that it be allowed as a bar to the suit when so reformed.[95]

(IV) RECOVERY OF PROPERTY AND OTHER RELIEF. So, applying the same principle, in an action to recover specific real property, equitable relief with regard to the same property may as a general rule be sought,[96] such as the cancellation

the complaint seeking such relief being sometimes held to state but a single cause of action.[6] In some code states, however, a cause of action upon the debt and to foreclose the mortgage cannot be joined,[7] although it appears that in such states a deficiency judgment may be rendered in foreclosure as incidental relief.[8] In the absence of a statute modifying the general rule, the same parties must be affected by the claims to establish the debt and to enforce the lien.[9] In the further application of these principles, it has been held that a claim for the possession of land may be united with one to recover upon the debt and for a foreclosure,[10] or that a vendor may have a judgment for purchase-money, and also subject the land sold to the payment thereof,[11] or enforce his vendor's lien.[12] So a mortgage may be foreclosed and a judgment had upon an unsecured debt,[13] or a note containing a mortgage lien on chattels enforced in connection with the foreclosure of another chattel mortgage on the same property, for the same debt.[14] So also an action upon an award as to the amount of damages resulting from a breach of covenant in a deed may be joined with one to foreclose a mortgage indemnifying plaintiff against such breach,[15] or a judgment may be had for money taken fraudulently, and a lien declared upon realty purchased with such money.[16] Where causes of action upon the debt and for foreclosure are held to

(VI) SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE AND DAMAGES FOR NON-PERFORMANCE. In the same action plaintiff may join a demand for specific performance and a claim for damages for the breach of a contract.[18] In such a case if the equitable relief sought cannot be granted plaintiff may recover such damages as he shows himself entitled to;[19] but he will not be entitled to damages in the absence of allegations showing a right thereto.[20]

(VII) ESTABLISHMENT OF DEBT AND SETTING ASIDE FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE. Under the rule that legal and equitable relief may be sought in the same action, a creditor may in the same proceeding obtain a judgment for his debt and also have the aid of equity to subject property of the debtor to the payment of the debt,[21] such as by the setting aside of a fraudulent conveyance.[22] In many of the code states, however, this rule does not prevail, and a creditor seeking to set aside a fraudulent conveyance must first obtain a judgment on his debt.[23] On the same principle, in an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, a money judgment may be awarded where the premises have been conveyed to innocent purchasers, rendering the equitable relief unavailing.[24] An action to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent may be joined with one to declare a transaction, whereby the debtor's statutory homestead had been enlarged, void as to creditors, and to subject the added land to the lien of the judgment.[25] In an action for divorce in which alimony is sought, a fraudulent conveyance by the husband may be set aside in order that the property conveyed may be reached and subjected to the payment of alimony.[26]

q. Admiralty and Law and Equity. A suit in admiralty cannot be joined with one in law or equity,[27] although by statute one court is given general jurisdiction over such proceedings, and one form of action is provided for the enforcement and protection of private rights and the redress and prevention of private wrongs.[28]

r. Necessity That All Parties Be Affected — (i) General Rule. A provision common to all of the codes is that causes of action which may be joined must affect all the parties to the action.[29] This rule does not require that the causes of action affect all the parties equally; it is sufficient that they affect all the parties, although in different degrees.[30] An exception to this rule is made by many of the codes, in the case of actions to enforce mortgages and other liens,[31] for example it may be proper to join a claim for a deficiency judgment against the maker of the mortgage, and also against the principal debtor, in an action for the foreclosure of a mortgage held as collateral.[32]

(ii) Plaintiffs — (a) In General. It is necessary that the causes of action shall each affect all plaintiffs.[33] Hence a cause of action which shows a joint right of recovery cannot be joined with one which shows a several right,[34]

although if plaintiffs have a common interest and seek a common relief, the fact that they might also have sued separately does not indicate a misjoinder.[35]

(B) Contracts. Several plaintiffs cannot join suits for breach of contracts made with them severally, although by the same defendant and of the same nature;[36] nor can simple contract creditors join to enforce their claims and set aside a fraudulent conveyance.[37] It has, however, been held that actions upon bonds for the same general object may be joined, although the obligees are different.[38]

(C) Torts. To authorize a joinder of causes of action in tort, it is necessary that they each affect all the plaintiffs;[39] hence a joint claim cannot be united with a single one,[40] nor when the same tort affects the several rights of different persons can their causes of action be joined.[41]

(D) Actions by Husband and Wife. A cause of action in favor of the husband[42] or of the wife[43] alone cannot be joined with one in favor of the husband and wife. Nor can actions by the husband and wife in their separate rights be joined.[44]

(E) Actions in Different Rights. A plaintiff cannot in the same action sue in more than one distinct right;[45] hence a plaintiff cannot sue as an individual and covery of possession of property, and assault and battery.

as a representative.[46] Under this rule a plaintiff cannot join an individual and a partnership claim;[47] but a surviving partner may sue as such, and also recover as an individual for services under a contract with the partnership, rendered after the death of his copartner.[48] So generally a cause of action for wrongfully causing the death of another cannot be joined with one in the right of the decedent accruing to his estate.[49] A cause of action in favor of devisees of realty cannot be joined with one in favor of the executor in the right of the decedent.[50] A plaintiff having a common interest as executor and devisee may join actions in both rights,[51] and in the same case the executors and devisees may join.[52] So also a person may sue as remainder-man and as heir-at-law of the life-tenant.[53] An action by an assignee to recover personal property cannot be united with an action to settle and distribute the estate of his assignor.[54]

(III) DEFENDANTS—(A) In General. Where causes of action affecting different parties defendant are joined, it is necessary that each cause of action affect all of the defendants, this necessity resulting from the rule common to all of the codes that causes of action may be joined only when they affect all the parties to the action.[55] It results from this rule that there must be a common or a joint of action upon liabilities which are partly joint and partly several cannot be joined.[59]

(B) Application of Equitable Principles. The abolition by the codes of the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity,[60] when taken in connection with the provision that causes of action arising out of the same transaction, or transactions connected with the same subject of action, may be united,[61] has caused the principles of equity as to multifariousness[62] to be applied to actions under the codes, in determining the propriety of the joinder of causes of action affecting different parties.[63] It is the object of these provisions to prevent a multiplicity of suits,[64] and their only effect, if any, upon equitable principles of multifariousness has been to enlarge the right of joining different causes in the same action.[65] It may be stated as a general rule that a complaint in an action of an equitable nature does not improperly join several causes of action, if they relate to matters of the same nature, in which all defendants are more or less interested, although the rights of defendants with respect to the general subject of the action may be different, or although some are directly interested in a part only of the general claim.[66] The existence of a connected interest in all the par-

Causes of action arising out of the same transaction or transactions connected with the same subject of action as the phrase is used in the codes may be taken to mean as in substance declaring that when a right, or certain connected rights, between the same parties are brought into legal controversy, all transactions between the parties bearing on the state of these rights may be included within the scope of the action, although such transactions considered as independent transactions would in their nature call for different forms of legal procedure for the purpose of investigation according to the practice that prevailed prior to the adoption of the code. Barrett v. Watts, 13 S. C. 441; Sueber v. Allen, 13 S. C. 317.

Fraudulent conveyances.— An action to set aside a conveyance of lands by a debtor, which he has not included in an assignment for the benefit of creditors, cannot be joined with a suit for an accounting under the assignment (Hatcher v. Winters, 71 Mo. 30); nor can a cause of action to set aside a conveyance, on the ground that it was made with intent to defraud creditors, be joined with a cause of action to set aside a mort-defendants to the causes of action is such as to require the working out of their various liabilities as between themselves.[70] Hence, where several acts are done in pursuance of a single fraudulent scheme, all persons may be joined who in any manner have participated in such scheme or received anything through it.[71] An action, however, cannot be regarded as equitable, within the meaning of this rule, merely because it is disclosed that it will be difficult to obtain relief against all of the defendants in separate actions.[72]

(c) Contracts — (1) IN GENERAL. Causes of action founded upon different contracts cannot be joined, unless all the parties thereto are affected by each.[73] So actions upon joint and upon individual agreements cannot be joined.[74] By analogy, where the causes of action arise from judgments, all the judgment debtors must be the same.[75] Where the action depends upon privity of estate, gage given by the debtor, on the ground that it was to secure a usurious loan (Marx v. Tailer, 12 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 226); nor can a cause of action arising out of a fraudulent assignment and breach of faith in the management of the assets by the assignee be joined with causes to set aside other alleged fraudulent conveyances made by the debtor to various persons, the different transactions being unconnected (Reed v. Stryker, 6 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 109). See, generally, FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES, 20 Cyc. 708.

and not of contract, several defendants may be joined.[76] An action upon a note pledged as collateral to another cannot be joined in an action upon a note which it secures.[77] Claims upon contracts made with different partnerships may be united, where the membership of such partnerships is identical.[78] In some states statutes provide that either one or more of the persons severally liable upon an instrument may be included in the same action.[79]

(2) OFFICIAL AND INDEMNITY BONDS. Actions against separate sureties upon bonds given to secure different duties cannot be joined;[80] but a common surety on different joint and several bonds given by an officer may be joined in an action against him upon all of the bonds;[81] and it has been held in many cases that actions may be brought on distinct indemnity bonds joining different sets of sureties, where the bonds relate to the same matters, and the rights and liabilities of each set of sureties depend upon those of the others.[82] A cause of action against the officer on a breach of his official bond may be joined with a cause of action against the sureties thereon for the same breach.[83]

95. See cases cited infra, I, B, 2, r, (III), (F), (2), (3), (4).

Causes of action against a city and its officers individually for damages to private property resulting from a public improve-cause of action against a person in a representative capacity, with one against him in a fiduciary or representative capacity;[96] for example a cause of action against a trustee[97] or a receiver,[98] or an agent,[99] as such, cannot be joined with one upon a demand against him individually.

(3) CORPORATION AND OFFICERS OR STOCK-HOLDERS. A claim against a defendant as an individual cannot be joined with one against him as an officer of a corporation,[1] or as a stock-holder;[2] but a judgment creditor may in the same action enforce the payment of unpaid stock subscriptions and enforce the statutory individual liability of stock-holders.[3] An action to enforce a stock-holder's individual liability cannot, however, be joined with one against him for misfeasance as a director.[4] A cause of action upon contract against a corporation cannot be joined with one against its directors, arising from facts outside of the contract.[5]

(4) PARTNERSHIP AND INDIVIDUAL MEMBERS. It has been held that an action upon a joint contract as a partner may be joined with a cause of action upon the individual contract of the partner;[6] and that a judgment creditor of the firm and of an individual member may bring an action against the firm and the individual partner to set aside a general assignment made by the members of the firm individually and as partners.[7] So also a single action will lie for services rendered to a firm and to a surviving partner;[8] and an action against a surviving partner may be joined with one against the administrator of a deceased partner.[9]

(G) Joinder of Defendants Who Are Not Liable. In case the complaint states but a single cause of action the fact that defendants are joined who are not liable will not render it bad as misjoining causes of action.[10]

which are particularly specified;[11] for example, claims arising from different contracts may be joined when one is not contrary to the other or does not preclude it.[12] In the absence of a provision in the code for joined actions on obligations arising from tort that applying to actions upon contract will be adopted by analogy.[13] A petitory action cannot be joined with a possessory action,[14] although it may be united with one for partition.[15]

b. Inconsistent Demands. A plaintiff cannot be allowed to cumulate several demands in the same action, when one of them is contrary to or precludes another,[16]

11. La. Code Prac. § 148 et seq.

Actions which may be cumulated see Hodge v. Monroe Mercantile Co., 105 La. 668, 30 So. 142 (demand to be decreed owner of personalty seized for debt of another, and damages for unlawful seizure); Harrison v. Soulabere, 52 La. 16. La. Code Prac. § 149; Tertrou v. Durand, 29 La. Ann. 506.

Examples of inconsistent demands see Brown v. Brown, 30 La. Ann. 966 (allegations that a transfer is a simulation, and that it is a donation in disguise); Dowling v. Gally, 30 La. Ann. 328 (suit for nullity of judicial sale and for proceeds); Theurer v. Knorr, 24 La. Ann. 597 (claim for payment of a mortgage from the proceeds of a sale under another mortgage, and attack upon validity of such other mortgage); Provosty v. Carmouche, 22 La. Ann. 135 (attack upon validity of sale and demand for payment from proceeds); Ouliber v. His Creditors, 16 La. Ann. 287 (claim for payment from proceeds of sale, and seeking the setting aside of the sale and a resale); Louisiana Bank v. Delery, 2 La. Ann. 648 (allegation that a judicial sale was null, and demand to be paid by preference from the proceeds); Blake v. His Creditors, 6 Rob. (La.) 520 (claim to set aside sales by the syndic of an insolvent, and claims that the syndic be condemned personally to pay the amount shown to be due plaintiffs by the tableau, as creditors); Petitpain v. Frey, 15 La. 195 (cause of action on an indorsement and for illegal possession of property for which the note was given).

Examples of consistent demands see Durbridge v. Crawley, 43 La. Ann. 504, 9 So. 95 (partition and petitory action and claim for rent); Chaffe v. Scheen, 34 La. Ann. 684 (where in an action to annul a dation en paiement it was alleged that the act was a simulation, or if not was in fraud of creditors and gave an undue preference); Morris v. Lalaurie, 34 La. Ann. 204 (partition and judicial ascertainment of claims of plaintiff and his co-proprietors); Fox v. McKee, 31 La. Ann. 67 (action for dissolution of lease and rent until the time of surrender of possession); Johnson v. Mayer, 30 La. Ann.

for example a plaintiff cannot demand both a rescission of the sale and a recovery of the price.[17]

c. As Affected by the Parties. Unless plaintiffs have a community interest in the suit, their demands cannot be cumulated without the consent of defendant, notwithstanding a similarity of rights and relief sought;[18] hence separate creditors cannot maintain a joint action against a defendant unless there is a joint interest in the thing demanded, or a privity of contract.[19] It is permissible to join claims against the same person in distinct capacities,[20] but a plaintiff cannot set up a demand involving distinct rights of several individuals.[21] A parent may sue in one action for damages accruing to him personally, and for damages to his minor child, where they grow out of the same tort.[22]

II. SPLITTING.

A. In General — 1. The Rule Against Splitting. It is a well settled principle of law that a judgment concludes the rights of the parties with respect to cause of action stated in the pleading on which it is rendered, whether such action embraces the whole or only part of the demand constituting the cause thereof,[23] and from this it follows that a demand indivisible in its nature cannot be split so 1203 (allegation in an action to annul the sale of realty, that the same was simulated, and if not simulated was fraudulent); Tertrou v. Durand, 29 La. Ann. 506 (action to remove an administrator, to enjoin a judgment rendered against plaintiff by such administrator, to compel a delivery to plaintiff of a deed of property at a probate sale, and to declare void a subsequent adjudication of such property to the administrator); Smith v. Donnelly, 27 La. Ann. 98 (demand for judgment homologating an award which was alleged to be a final liquidation of a partnership, and for judgment on a note given plaintiff for half of the alleged value of the property put into the partnership); Miller v. Rougieux, 20 La. Ann. 577 (action against the curator of an estate demanding that plaintiff be recognized as heir, that the curator be compelled to render an account and to surrender possession of the property in his hands to plaintiff); Nouvet v. Bollinger, 15 La. Ann. 293 (demand for recovery of property and in alternative for value); Dubois v. Xiques, 14 La. Ann. 427 (demand for dissolution of a lease and demand for rent); Montross v. Hillman, 11 Rob. (La.) 87 (cause of action for goods sold and delivered to plaintiff for a third person, and cause of action upon a guaranty of the price of such goods); Winter v. Zacharie, 6 Rob. (La.) 466 (action for land and slaves may contain a claim for fruits and damages for tortious possession); Buquet v. Watkins, 1 La. 131 (damages for slander and false imprisonment); Cross v. Richardson, 2 Mart. N. S. (La.) 323 (action on contracts of warranty for good conduct of an employee, and action for fraudulent and deceitful representations by reason of which such employee was taken into service); Ward v. Brandt, 9 Mart. 19. Dyas v. Dinkgrave, 15 La. Ann. 502, 77 Am. Dec. 196, holding that a firm cannot demand in the same suit payment of two notes dated at the same place and on the same day, and both payable to the firm under its firm-name, in case it is shown that the firm was composed of different persons, when the indebtedness was created which formed the consideration of one note, from those persons who composed the firm when the indebtedness was created which formed the consideration of the other note.

20. Kittredge v. Race, 92 U. S. 116, 23 L. ed. 488, holding that under the Louisiana code of practice a suit may be brought and distinct judgments rendered against a defendant as administratrix of her deceased husband, as widow in community and as tutrix of his minor heirs. But see Serret's Succession, 4 La. Ann. 100, holding that proceedings to liquidate and partition the wife's succession cannot be joined with a demand against her surviving husband for the proceeds of her separate property sold by him during marriage.

21. Gerson v. Jamar, 30 La. Ann. 1294 (holding that a claim for damages against a sheriff cannot be joined with an interventional demand setting up the intervener's title to personal property attached in his hands); Leverich v. Adams, 15 La. Ann. 310.

4. To Confer Jurisdiction. An entire contract cannot be split so as to maintain several suits for the purpose of bringing them within the jurisdiction of a court of limited jurisdiction.[27]

B. Splitting by Plaintiff — 1. In Actions Ex Contractu — a. Divisible and Indivisible Demands — (i) Distinction Between — (a) In General. The application of the rule against splitting requires a consideration of what constitutes a single and indivisible claim, upon which but a single action can be maintained, and what constitutes distinct causes of action, which may be sued on severally, and, while no rule of general application can be formulated,[28] it may be stated that a single and entire demand or cause of action is one that immediately arises out of one and the same act or contract,[29] and that demands or causes of action which arise out of different acts or contracts,[30] or which arise out of the Test of one or several acts or agreements. — In the well considered case of Secor v. Sturgis, 16 N. Y. 548, it was said that a simple and safe test is to inquire whether the demand rests upon one or several acts or agreements.

Test of entireness of consideration. — It has also been said that the entirety or severableness of the contract may not depend upon the exclusiveness of the subject or the multiplicity of the items composing it, but on the entireness of the consideration or its express or implied apportionment to the several items constituting its subject. If the consideration is exclusive, the contract is entire, whatever the number or variety of items expressed in its subject (Lucesco Oil Co. v. Brewer, 66 Pa. St. 351; Bigg v. Whisking, 14 C. B. 195, 2 C. L. R. 617, 78 E. C. L. 195); but if the consideration is apportioned expressly or impliedly to each of these items, the contract is severable (Lucesco Oil Co. v. Brewer, 66 Pa. St. 351).

Test of inquiries and findings involved. — Again it has been said that if the investigation involves separate and independent inquiries and findings, breaches, items, or transactions should be held to be independent causes of actions, although they arise out of the same contract. Boyce v. Christy, 47 Mo. 70; State v. Dulle, 45 Mo. 269; Howard v. Clark, 43 Mo. 344.

Identity of evidence. — With regard to the rule which forbids the splitting of a demand arising out of a single transaction, the best test of entirety is whether the same evidence is necessary to support all the branches of the demand. Maine v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cl. 531, holding that the element of entirety was wanting where money was borrowed by a state and spent in equipping troops for the United States, while the interest was paid to the bondholders.

same contract as several or distinct items or transactions,[31] are separable causes upon which distinct actions will lie.[32]

(B) Particular Cases — (1) ACCOUNTS — (a) RUNNING ACCOUNTS. While there are many decisions to the effect that each separate item of a running account furnishes a distinct cause of action which at the option of the creditor may be separately sued upon, unless there is an express contract to the contrary, the circumstances show that one entire contract was intended, or from usage or the course of dealing an agreement or understanding to that effect may be inferred,[33] yet, by what appears to be the better doctrine it is held that in the absence of special circumstances an open or continuous running account between the same parties constitutes a single and entire demand which is not susceptible of division, the aggregate of all the items being regarded as the amount due.[34]

(b) MUTUAL ACCOUNTS. In the case of mutual accounts each person does not have a separate cause of action for each item of his account, but a cause of action exists in favor of him only to whom there is a balance due.[35]

(c) STATED ACCOUNT. If an account of all the items be rendered to the debtor and he agrees that the whole is correct, or that he will pay it, or if he acquiesces in its correctness by silence or delay to dispute it, it may be treated as a stated account constituting but one cause of action.[36]

(d) ITEMS OF ACCOUNT SOLD ON CREDIT. It seems clear, however, that if individual items of an account are sold upon stated periods of credit, each item will constitute a separate cause of action upon which suit may be commenced and maintained as soon as the term of credit expires.[37]

(2) INTEREST — (a) IN GENERAL. Separate actions will lie to recover instalments of interest on an unmatured debt as they become due.[38]

(b) PRINCIPAL DUE. In some cases it has been held that where the principal of a debt is due, separate actions cannot be maintained therefor and for the interest which has accrued thereon, but that the same must be recovered in one action,[39] while in others it is said that promises to pay a debt at one time and interest thereon at another, being separate originally, no subsequent act, except the consent of the parties, can make them entire, and that in consequence the recovery of an instalment or instalments of interest will not defeat a subsequent recovery of the principal, although due when suit for the interest was begun.[40]

(c) PRINCIPAL PAID. Since interest is an incident of the debt, a suit will not lie for its recovery after payment of the principal, unless there is an express agreement with relation thereto.[41]

rate actions may be maintained on notes by the same maker to the same payee,[42] maturing at different times,[43] or given in the same transaction,[44] and although all are due.[45]

(4) SALES — (a) AT DIFFERENT TIMES. In the absence of an agreement to the contrary, where sales are made at different times each sale is a separate transaction for which a separate action may be brought,[46] especially when made at different times on different terms of credit.[47]

(b) CONTEMPORANEOUS SALES. The sale of several articles at the same time constitutes, however, one transaction, giving but a single right of action.[48]

(II) INDIVISIBLE DEMANDS — (A) The Rule Stated — (1) IN GENERAL. There can be but one recovery on an entire and individual contract[49] or for a partial performance thereof.[50] The remedy in such case is to sue for the breach, and to recover all damages present and future.[51]

(2) PARTICULAR CASES — (a) CONTRACT FOR PERSONAL SERVICES. Where a contract for personal service is for a fixed time, it is entire, although compensation to the employee is payable in instalments, and if the latter is wrongfully discharged, and, before the expiration of the time of the contract, sues for and recovers anything under the contract except wages actually due, he is precluded from any further recovery.[52] It has been held, however, that an action on a contract of service is not barred by a former recovery of wages due to the time of

The true question, according to McIntosh v. Lown, 49 Barb. (N. Y.) 550, is not whether separate actions on the different items would lead to a multiplicity of suits or be oppressive, but whether the former action was for the identical cause or demand as that for which the subsequent one is brought. And see Carleton v. Woods, 28 N. H. 290, holding that where goods are sold at the same time, and a separate value is agreed for each article, the contract is divisible, so that if the sale of some is prohibited by law the illegality will not affect the sale of the other articles.

discharge,[53] and that the employee may recover each instalment of wages as it becomes due,[54] and that he may not only recover the damages for breach of the contract at the time suit was brought, but also such as may have developed up to the trial.[55]

(b) PROMISSORY NOTE WITH PROVISION FOR ATTORNEY'S FEES. Where promissory notes contain provisions for the payment of attorney's fees in case of non-payment at maturity, such fees together with the specific sum of which payment is promised by the note constitute an entire cause of action, and separate actions for each cannot be maintained.[56]

(B) Effect of Assignment. A single cause of action or a cause of action which arises on an entire contract cannot be divided by partial assignment without the consent of the debtor so as to enable each assignee to institute an action for the part of the claim assigned to him, and thus subject the debtor to a number of actions.[57]

(III) DIVISIBLE DEMANDS — (A) Permitting Separate Actions — (1) IN GENERAL. The rule against splitting is limited to cases where the claim is single and entire;[58] and the fact that two causes of action spring out of the same contract will not ipso facto render a judgment on one a bar to a recovery on the other.[59]

(2) DISTINCT BREACHES OF ENTIRE CONTRACT — (a) FORMER RULE. At common law a contract to pay a sum certain in instalments at different times was considered an entire contract upon which no action of debt could be brought until all the days of payment had elapsed.[60] After the action of assumpsit was introduced, it was held at first that, although where the contract was to be by instalments, assumpsit would lie on default of the first payment, yet plaintiff was obliged to demand his whole damages, even where only one of the several instalments was payable, on the ground that the contract was entire and that no new action could be maintained.[61] Subsequently, however, it was determined that in assumpsit on such a state of facts an action might be brought for such sum only as was due when the action was brought, and that plaintiffs should recover damages accordingly and have a new action as the other sums became due toties quoties.[62]

(b) MODERN RULE. The great weight of modern authority is to the effect, however, that a contract to do several things at several times is divisible in its nature because, although the agreement is in one sense entire, the performance is several, and an action will lie for the breach of any one of the stipulations, each of them being considered in respect to the remedy as a several contract.[63] Thus on an agreement to pay a sum of money by instalments, an action will lie to recover each instalment as it becomes due[64] as rent[65] or compensation for personal to prevent confusion and oppression a consolidation of the actions may be enforced.[70]

(c) Taint of Illegality Affecting Some. If an action is brought on several and distinct contracts, the illegality of one or more of them will not preclude a recovery on such of the contracts as are legal;[71] but if a part of the consideration of an entire contract is illegal, no action can be maintained to recover anything thereunder.[72]

b. (II) SEVERAL CREDITORS OF COMMON FUND. Under some circumstances, where several are interested in the subject-matter of a contract or in the enforcement of a right, the recovery must be by or on behalf of all as in actions by coparceners against one who has received rent as a trustee;[75] or upon an implied demise or agreement to rent, upon a count for use and occupation;[76] or on a guardian's bond by one of several wards;[77] or by legatees on an executor's bond;[78] or scire facias proceedings on a judgment owned by several having separate interests therein;[79] while it has been held on the other hand that where several persons have distinct interests in an entire fund, each may maintain a separate action to recover the portion thereof to which he may be entitled.[80]

Under a statute limiting the recovery of damages in replevin to those for the illegal detention of the property, the owner of the property may institute a separate action to damages resulted from negligence combined with a natural cause,[93] or that the injuries produced were distinct.[94] On the other hand it has been held that if distinct injuries result from one and the same wrongful act separate actions will lie to recover for each;[95] and that if the same tort causes injury to different rights of the same party, a recovery for an injury to one right will not preclude a recovery for the injury to the other.[96]

If several animals are killed at the same time and by the same act, there is but a single cause of action which must be recovered for in one suit;[3] but if the killings occur at different times and are the result of different and distinct acts, the causes of action arising therefrom are separate and independent.[4]

(B) Affecting Two or More Persons. If two or more persons sustain injuries by the same wrong, a distinct right of action accrues to each, and separate actions may be maintained by them.[5]

(II) DAMAGES CAUSED BY SEPARATE WRONGS — (A) In General. For more than one tort or wrongful act from which different injuries result, separate actions may be maintained.[6]

(B) Continuing Trespass. While it has been held that a continuing trespass may be treated as a single cause of action, although damage results at different times,[7] the rule established by the weight of authority is that for trespasses which are continuous new actions may be brought as often as new torts are repeated and fresh injury results.[8] Thus the creation of a nuisance upon another's land that the prohibition presupposes knowledge of the constituent elements of the cause of action sought to be unwarrantably divided, and as the law does not require that which is impossible, it necessarily follows that a party should not be precluded in consequence of a former action, which was brought in unavoidable ignorance of the full extent of the wrongs received or the injuries done); Funk v. Funk, 35 Mo. renders it obligatory on the wrong-doer to remove it, and successive actions may be maintained against him until he is compelled to do so.[9] In such cases, however, the recovery in the first action must have been limited to damages sustained at the time of the commencement of the action.[10]

b. Against Joint Wrong-Doers. Where two or more are guilty of a trespass they may be sued jointly or severally in one action;[11] but a judgment against one of two joint tort-feasors will preclude a recovery against the other,[12] although where two not in privity are separately sued for the same wrong, a recovery against one will not bar a subsequent recovery against the other.[13]

C. Splitting of Counter-Claim by Defendant. There is authority to the effect that the rule against splitting an entire cause of action is applicable to a counter-claim, which in some respects is treated as an affirmative action by defendant, so that a recovery in the action will bar the whole claim;[14] but this rule is not applicable to a case where defendant is necessarily restricted to a defeat of plaintiff's claim, and is not permitted to obtain an affirmative judgment.[15] In such a case if the counter-claim or set-off is in excess of plaintiff's demand defendant may recover a judgment for the excess.[16]

Rule not applicable to liquidated demand.— In Lancaster Mfg. I. DEFINITION.

A joint adventure is an enterprise undertaken by several persons jointly.[1]

II. NATURE, CREATION, AND EXISTENCE OF RELATION.

A. Nature of Relation — Distinguished From Partnership. The subject of joint adventures is of comparatively modern origin. It was unknown at common law, being regarded as within the principles governing partnerships.[2] While some courts hold that a joint adventure is not identical with a partnership,[3] it is regarded as of a similar nature,[4] and governed by the same rules of law.[5] One distinction lies in the fact that while a partnership is ordinarily formed for the transaction of a general business of a particular kind, a joint adventure relates to a single transaction,[6] although the latter may comprehend a business to be continued for a period of years.[7] Another distinction is that a corporation incapable of becoming a partner may bind itself by a contract for a joint adventure, the purposes of which are within those of the corporation.[8] The principal distinction, however, is that in most jurisdictions where any is regarded as existing, one party may sue the other at law for a breach of the contract or a share of the profits or losses, or a contribution for advances made in excess of his share; but this right will not preclude a suit in equity for an accounting.[9] The contract need not be express but may be implied from the conduct of the parties.[10]

B. Pooling Contracts. A joint adventure does not exist where property is pooled by the several owners to be sold at a particular price, and each contributor is to receive the proceeds of the property contributed by him;[11] but it is created by a pooling agreement providing for a sale of the property and a ratable distri-

2. The earliest cases in this country in which the subject is mentioned are Hourquebie v. Girard, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,732, 2 Wash. 212, and Lyles v. Styles, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,625, 2 Wash. 224, both being reported in 1808. It was in the fifties that the subject first began to assume importance as a distinct title of law.

In New York a joint adventure is defined as a limited partnership, not limited in a statutory sense as to liability, but as to its scope and duration. Ross v. Willett, 76 Hun 211, 27 N. Y. Suppl. 785; Hubbell v. Buhler, 43 Hun 82. See also Clark v. Rumsey, 52 N. Y. Suppl. 417. The general rule is that a dissolution or an accounting of a joint adventure can be had only in equity (Spier v. Hyde, 92 N. Y. App. Div. 467, 87 N. Y. Suppl. 285; Halsted v. Schmelzel, 17 Johns. 80), and that no admissions of the answer will deprive equity of jurisdiction (Spier v. Hyde, supra). But in Felbel v. Kahn, 29 N. Y. App. Div. 270, 51 N. Y. Suppl. 435, it was held that an action at law for a share of the profits was maintainable.

bution of the profits among the contributors.[12] Such agreement is valid and binding, although the property is not placed in the hands of a trustee, nor any particular person appointed to sell it.[13] Under such circumstances dealings with their property by some of the parties which do not amount to a sale or place it absolutely beyond control will not constitute a breach of the pooling agreement, justifying the others in abandoning it.[14]

C. Consideration For Contract.[15] The mutual promises of the parties are a sufficient consideration to support the contract.[16]

D. Validity of Contract[17] — 1. In General. The agreement between the parties is not rendered invalid by any uncertainty in the duration of the business or indefiniteness in the minor details of the adventure,[18] or by a defect in the title of property contributed by one of the parties to the enterprise.[19]

2. Parol Agreements. A parol agreement to purchase and sell lands on joint account is valid,[20] and not within the operation of the statute of frauds.[21] If the parol agreement provides that the dealings in real estate shall be conducted in the name of one of the parties, his contracts will not render his associates directly liable to those with whom he deals.[22]

3. Illegality — Against Public Policy. Where the property contributed to the common undertaking by one of the parties is accepted and treated by the others as that of the contributor, they cannot afterward decline to account to him for his share of the profits on the ground that the title of the property was in another.[23] If the contract for the joint adventure is prima facie valid it is no defense to an action for an accounting to say that it was for an illegal purpose[24] or was performed in an illegal manner by defendant[25] that he was guilty of illegal acts or fraud in the execution of it,[26] or that the rights acquired thereunder were obtained in an illegal or immoral way.[27] Even if the contract be against public policy, if it is closed, the party receiving the profits must account to his associates therefor.[28]

E. Duration of Contract.[29] If no date is fixed by the contract for the termination of the adventure, or its termination is dependent upon the happening of a contingency, the agreement remains in force until the purpose is accomplished,[30] or the happening of the contingency,[31] and neither party can end it at will by notice or otherwise.[32] Nor will equity dissolve the joint adventure for any cause other than those which justify the dissolution of partnerships.[33] But where the adventure is undertaken on the basis of estimates which contemplate certain expenditures of time and money, and thereafter it develops that without fault of either party so much more time and money will be required than was contemplated, as to render success doubtful, either party may abandon the adventure without becoming liable to the other.[34]

F. Title to Property. Where property is purchased as a joint venture it is not material in whose name the title is taken, as any one holding the title will be regarded as trustee for his associates;[35] and property paid for out of the receipts of the joint adventure becomes the joint property of all the parties.[36]

III. MUTUAL RIGHTS, DUTIES, AND LIABILITIES OF PARTIES.

A. Good Faith Required. Persons united for a common purpose must be loyal to that purpose and each other. None may, without the consent of all the associates, appropriate to his own use the common property, or by any dealing therewith secure an unfair advantage over those interested with him.[37] An advantage or profit secured by one inures to the benefit of all.[38] He must account for a profit made by falsely representing the price of property purchased, or for commissions paid him by his vendor;[39] or profits on a sale negotiated by him before he induces his associates to sell to him at a less price than he obtains.[40] The duty to account for and share the advantage obtained is not affected by the fact that it was received in part as consideration for personal services rendered by the party acquiring it.[41] Those aiding him in procuring an advantage may, in equity, be held equally liable with him for the fraud.[42] The party paying the full contribution toward the adventure is entitled to a conveyance of his interest from the one holding the title,[43] and this right will be enforced against the administrator of the latter, although he died insolvent.[44] A sale of the common property, by one having authority to sell, made in disregard of the terms of the agreement, and at an inadequate price, will be vacated at the instance of the other parties; or if made to a bona fide purchaser, the vendor will be compelled to account and make good the losses of his associates.[45] In the absence of mistake, duress, or fraud, one accepting a consideration in full satisfaction of his interest in the joint adventure and property cannot thereafter claim any right or title therein;[46] but if the property has been used by his coöwner for his individual purposes and in the conduct of his private business, the withdrawing owner is entitled to a fair compensation for such use.[47] Joint property, used by the party to the adventure in whom is vested the title, to secure advances made to him individually, may be redeemed by the other party by payment of such advances.[48] An appropriation of the common property to individual use constitutes conversion,[49] or creates the relation of debtor and creditor between the parties;[50] and if property, other than money, be converted, those guilty thereof are chargeable with its highest value between the date of conversion and the time the complaining party had notice thereof.[51] One having authority to sell the common property, who fails to sell at the time specified in the contract, is answerable for the value of the property at the time the sale should have been made,[52] or its value at the time of refusal to carry out the agreement.[53] And a party having discretion to determine the time of sale of the common property must sell within a reasonable time,[54] and failing to do so he may be sued by the other party for profits that could have been realized;[55] and is chargeable with interest from the date of the suit.[56] The death of one of two persons jointly interested in real estate does not affect the rights or duties of the survivor who holds the title, and if he uses and improves the property as his own the personal representatives of the decedent may recover the latter's share of the net enhanced value of the property as it stood at the time of the improvement.[57] Parties to a joint adventure have the power and interest of a partner, as to the disposition of the property.[58] A majority vested with full power to determine the scheme for the disposition of the common property becomes the agent of and binds all by its acts.[59] A party to a joint adventure may advise, but not order, the party invested with the power to sell the joint property, as to the form in which the consideration shall be paid. The latter may exercise his discretion, and if he, in good faith, although in disregard of the advice of the coöwner, accepts a consideration which becomes worthless, he is not liable for the loss.[60] But the party having the power to sell is under obligation to notify his associate of the contemplated sale, and to use his best endeavors to procure the highest possible price,[61] although he need not declare at the time of the sale that it is made on joint account.[62] If the sale is made in good faith it binds all the parties.[63] The proceeds of the common property in the hands of a trustee appointed by the parties to receive them must be distributed by him to the several parties according to their contract. He has no authority to apply the shares of any of them to the payment of debts owing by them to others interested in the adventure.[64] If the joint property is not held for sale but for the profits of increase, and any part of it be sold and replaced with that purchased by all the parties, each one is entitled to a share of the proceeds of that sold.[65] If several of the associates in a joint adventure agree to take any unsold shares therein in proportion to the shares subscribed for by them respectively, those not parties to the agreement are not entitled to claim any part of such unsold shares, or the profits accruing thereon.[66] But the parties to such agreement must account for the price of the unsold shares, with interest, out of their individual funds, and cannot apply the undivided profits of the adventure to payment therefor.[67] The courts will not by implication impose upon the parties to the contract any duty or obligation which is not reasonably and naturally inferable from the terms thereof.[68]

B. Rights of Party Contributing Capital. The party furnishing the money to conduct the adventure, who, by the contract is entitled to reimbursement for all expenses, may deduct from the common fund commissions paid to a third party reasonably employed to make the sale;[69] or moneys paid by him in settlement of damages for a trespass committed by his associate in the execution of the common design;[70] or the cost of a part of the property destroyed without fault on his part.[71] But he cannot charge against the fund any part of the expenses of negotiating a loan to be used in the adventure,[72] or interest on such loan,[73] or on advances made by him.[74] If the contract is for the purchase and improvement of lands, he cannot claim out of the common fund the cost of lands unimproved, the title to which is in his name;[75] nor can he claim a higher price for the lands improved than that actually paid.[76] On the purchase of the interest of the other party to the adventure, he who furnishes the capital is entitled to charge the common fund, not only with the moneys advanced, but with any outstanding joint liability in favor of third persons, for which he remains liable after dissolution.[77] A mere provision of the contract for repayment of all advances made by one of the parties will not necessarily bind the others for repayment if the venture fails. Unless there is an express promise by them to repay, the presumption is that he was to be repaid out of the property acquired or its proceeds.[78]

C. Rights of Party Making Advances. Under a contract binding all parties to contribute an equal proportion of the capital and expenses, one advancing more than his share may compel contribution from the others as for money paid for their use,[79] and the refusal of a party to participate in or become a party to a plan for the management of the business of the adventure will not relieve him of the obligation to contribute.[80] The joint property is bound for the repayment of such advances;[81] and the right to subject it thereto is paramount to the rights of the creditors of the defaulting party,[82] and will be enforced to the extent of requiring the payment of outstanding joint debts created in the purchase of the common property.[83] Where the party making advances takes the title in his individual name he may hold it until repayment;[84] and on repayment the other party is entitled to a conveyance of his interest in the property.[85] If the property becomes valueless before sale, a sale thereof is not a condition precedent to an action to recover advances.[86] One contributing to a pool is entitled to compensation for the property contributed by him, with interest from the date of the contribution.[87] Unless otherwise provided by the contract, reimbursement of advances cannot be insisted upon until the completion of the transaction;[88] but if repayment prior to the consummation of the adventure is provided for, an action at law will lie to recover it.[89] If a stranger to the adventure repays or secures the repayment of advances made by one of the parties, such party may still recover from his associates the advances made, unless a contrary intention is clearly shown.[90] Interest should be allowed on advances from the time of payment,[91] or from the date fixed by the contract;[92] but ordinarily compound interest should not be allowed.[93] The party making advances can fix the terms upon which they will be made and such terms are binding upon those accepting them.[94] Under a contract requiring equal contribution the party furnishing all the capital and having entire control of the adventure may properly charge a reasonable salary for his services.[95] Contribution cannot be demanded where the party claiming it had no authority from the others to incur the expenses,[96] or where the expenses were not incurred for the common object and with a reasonable dependence upon the common fund;[97] and only advances actually made and expenses actually paid are recoverable.[98] A final accounting between the parties, in which all participate or acquiesce, by which the inequalities of their contributions are adjusted and settled, will not be set aside, except for fraud or mistake.[99]

with an agreement to furnish the money necessary to carry out the joint adventure will not release the party promising from the obligation;[1] and for such breach of the contract the other party is entitled to recover of him the sum he would have received on the completion of the undertaking, less the expense he would reasonably have incurred in rendering the services necessary thereto,[2] or the expenses incurred by him in good faith in anticipation of performance by the other party.[3]

E. Rights of Party Contributing Services. One who agrees to render services for a share of the profits of an enterprise becomes vested with an interest in the property when acquired and he may recover the value thereof,[4] and may compel an accounting in equity.[5] He cannot be deprived of his share of the profits for accepting a commission from the vendor, when the land was purchased at the price fixed by his associate.[6] And if he is to receive a part of certain property acquired in consideration of his services, the fact that losses were sustained on other property is not material to and cannot defeat his right to such share.[7] If the services are to be performed under certain conditions to be provided by the other parties, he cannot be required to perform them under any other conditions; and where the provisions made by the other parties fail without fault on his part, he may abandon the enterprise.[8] He is entitled to the compensation provided in the contract, and, if in litigation between the parties the court only allows a part thereof, he may collect the balance from the common fund,[9] and if on accounting he claims such balance as the property of himself and another, the other parties cannot object that he does not claim individually.[10] A party required to travel from home is entitled to the expenses of his return.[11] One rendering services cannot recover compensation therefor unless the contract so provides.[12]

IV. INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

Each party to the contract must perform the services required of him thereby, and if by his neglect the expense of employing others is incurred he is chargeable therewith.[13] No part of the expenses incurred by one party in the execution of his part of the common enterprise can be charged against the other parties;[14] but should be deducted from his share of the profits.[15]

V. PROFITS AND LOSSES.

A. Right to Share Profits. In the absence of express agreement the law implies an equal division of profits,[16] without regard to any inequality of contribution.[17] And this implication is conclusive where the circumstances warrant it, and is not affected by a construction of the contract by the parties.[18] But a party who fails or refuses to contribute toward the adventure before any part of the undertaking is accomplished cannot claim any interest in the profits derived therefrom,[19] or in property subsequently acquired by his associate individually, and with his own funds.[20] After dissolution of the joint adventure by mutual consent, if one of the parties pursues the same business on his own account, he will not be required to answer to his former associate for any part of the profits earned by him.[21] Profits in a joint adventure means the net amount after deducting any proper expenses incident to the business;[22] and may consist, not alone of money, but of the unsold portion of the property which was the subject of the adventure;[23] and the presumption is that they are to be determined by the ordinary rules of business.[24] Neither party to a pooling agreement providing for the sharing of profits or earnings of the pooled property can claim a share of the earnings of the property contributed by him. It is out of the earnings of the aggregate property only that he can claim a distributive share.[25]

B. Obligation to Share Losses. The risks attending the proceeds of a joint adventure held by the party into whose hands they come for the joint account of all are shared by all the parties.[26] If the contract for a joint adventure is silent as to sharing the losses, they must be borne by all the parties equally,[27] and without regard to inequality of contribution,[28] and the party paying the losses may recover from the others their pro-rata share thereof,[29] with interest from the date of payment,[30] or from the time that the other party receives notice of the losses.[31] A loss not actually incurred or reasonably anticipated cannot be recovered by one party from the other.[32] After a settlement and dissolution of the joint adventure, if the party who took the uncollected assets of the association and paid his associates for their interest therein sustains losses thereon he cannot recover any part thereof from his former associates.[33] An alteration of the place of sale of the property from that specified in the contract, although consented to, may operate to release the party agreeing to render services in connection with the adventure from liability for losses.[34] On the justifiable abandonment of the adventure by one of the parties the losses sustained up to that time must be shared equally by all of them.[35] Under such circumstances neither party can maintain an action against the other for a single item of expense, but the losses must be adjusted by an accounting;[36] and the burden of proof is on him claiming a balance due.[37]

VI. ACTIONS OR SUITS BETWEEN PARTIES TO JOINT ADVENTURE.

A. Nature of Remedy — 1. ACTIONS AT LAW. A party to a joint adventure may maintain an action at law to recover a share of the profits of the enterprise,[38] or advances,[39] or to enforce contribution for a proportion of the losses,[40] or for a breach of the contract.[41] An action at law is especially the appropriate remedy where the connection is closed.[42]

2. SUITS IN EQUITY. The remedy at law will not preclude a suit in equity for dissolution of the joint adventure[43] or for an accounting.[44] The party paying the purchase-price of the property acquired under a contract requiring each to contribute equally to the joint adventure may maintain a bill for contribution against the other,[45] before a sale of such property.[46] The failure of the party holding or controlling the legal title to the common property to make an honest sale thereof and account for the proceeds will not warrant a rescission of the contract by the other and a suit to recover his contribution; but his action should be for a sale of the property, division of the net proceeds, and such damages as he has sustained by the misconduct of his associate.[47] On the termination of the contract by one having authority, either party may sue for an accounting.[48]

B. Set-Off. One party may set off against the demands of another for advances payments made by him on behalf of plaintiff in connection with the common venture,[49] and the right to offset such claim is not affected by the fact that plaintiff cannot prove what profits defendant and other parties made in the transaction in which such payments were made on his account.[50] But where one party sues the trustee holding the common fund and some of the parties to the joint adventure, for his share of the fund, a defendant party to the agreement cannot set off against the demand a debt owing to him by plaintiff.[51]

upon actions of this character, it has been held that the statute begins to run as to advances from the time of payment.[53]

D. Parties to Actions.[54] All the persons interested in the adventure are not necessary parties to such actions by one party against another;[55] but a corporation organized by the parties to take over the common property is a proper party to a suit to determine the respective interests of the parties in the property and for a distribution of the capital stock of the corporation.[56]

E. Pleadings.[57] A complaint in an action to recover a share of profits which fails to allege that profits have been received by defendant is demurrable;[58] but the pleading of evidence, or matters of inducement, or mere surplusage will not render the complaint subject to demurrer.[59]

F. Evidence.[60] Where the party claiming the existence of a joint adventure is corroborated by the conduct of the parties, it is sufficient to establish the fact against the denial of a single defendant.[61] As a defense against an action based on a contract for a joint adventure defendant may prove its rescission or abandonment.[62] The presumption is that profits are to be determined by the ordinary rules of business, and under a complaint for a division of profits without limitation or explanation, proof that they were to be determined in an extraordinary manner is inadmissible.[63] Admissions of the party under duty to account are admissible against his executor, and are sufficient to sustain a verdict for a less sum than that he admitted to be due.[64] Where the evidence concerning a material issue in an action between the parties is conflicting, the question should be submitted to the jury.[65]

G. Judgment.[66] A judgment in favor of one party against others for his share of the property converted by defendants should be against all defendants participating in the conversion jointly.[67] A decree on accounting limiting the interest on advances does not affect the interest on disbursements.[68]

VII. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PARTIES AS TO THIRD PERSONS.

by differences in their interests in the property purchased, which are not brought to the notice of the vendor;[70] nor by an agreement between them limiting the liability of some of them to the capital contributed.[71] But if the party creating the liability is authorized to and does deal in his individual name,[72] or if he creates the liability in the performance of obligations imposed upon him individually by the contract,[73] or if the contract is void under the statute of frauds,[74] his associates are not bound therefor.

VIII. ACTIONS BY OR AGAINST THIRD PERSONS.

The party having authority to conduct the business of the joint adventure in his individual name may maintain an action against a stranger who deals with him to recover sums due on account of the joint enterprise.[75] Creditors of the association may maintain suits for the recovery of their debts against the managing associate alone, where he has been credited therewith on his accounts with his associates and assumed the payment thereof.[76] A person will not be held liable as a party to a joint adventure in the absence of convincing proof of the existence of the association and of his membership therein.[77] Non-joinder of parties to an action against joint adventurers must be pleaded to be made available.[78]

I. DEFINITION.

A joint stock company is an association of individuals for purposes of profit, possessing a common capital contributed by the members composing it, such capital being commonly divided into shares of which each member possesses one or more, and which are transferable by the owner.[1]

II. DISTINGUISHED FROM OTHER BUSINESS ORGANIZATIONS.

A. From Corporations — 1. IN GENERAL. Such an association is not technically a corporation; yet it has many of the characteristics of a corporation,[2] and it has been said that it may not be improper to call such an association a quasi-corporation.[3] In many cases almost the full measure of corporate attributes has by legislative enactments been bestowed upon joint stock associations, until the

As defined by an English statute a joint stock company is "a partnership whereof the capital is divided, or agreed to be divided, into shares, and so as to be tranferable without the express consent of all the copartners." difference has become obscure, elusive, and difficult to describe.[4] The fundamental distinction between a corporation and a joint stock company is this: A corporation on the one hand is an artificial entity brought into existence by the sovereign power of the state, and the individual liability of its members is completely eliminated unless some part of that liability is expressly preserved by constitutional or statutory provision;[5] while a joint stock company, on the other hand, is formed by a written agreement of individuals with each other, and its whole force and effect, in constituting and creating the organization, rest upon the common-law right and power of the individuals to contract with each other; the relation they assume is wholly the product of their mutual agreement and depends in no respect upon any grant of authority from the state; and hence the individual personal liability of the members remains intact unless there is express statutory authority for its elimination.[6]

2. Citizenship For Jurisdictional Purposes. It is now[7] settled that joint stock companies, unlike corporations,[8] are not to be considered artificial citizens for jurisdictional purposes.[9]

3. Taxation — a. Capital Stock. Unless the statute expressly includes joint stock associations,[10] they are not taxable upon their capital under a statute subjecting all moneyed or stock corporations deriving an income or profit from their capital or otherwise, to such taxation.[11]

b. Personal Property — Place of Taxation. The personal property held by a joint stock company is properly taxable where its business is carried on and not elsewhere.[12]

c. Shares of Members. The members of a joint stock company are taxable as partners and not as stock-holders of a corporation, and their shares in the company are therefore not subject to taxation under a statute as "stocks in a moneyed corporation."[13]

d. For Doing Business — Foreign Company. It has been held that a foreign joint stock company which possesses all the other attributes and powers of a corporation[14] may be taxed for doing business in a state other than that where it was organized, under a law imposing a tax on foreign corporations doing business within the state.[15]

B. Mining Companies. Mining companies and ditch companies in the mining regions, although not strictly joint stock associations, are more like them in their organization and manner of conducting business than ordinary mercantile copartnerships.[16]

C. Ordinary Partnerships. At common law these companies were regarded as commercial partnerships, and, in the absence of express provisions, statutory or otherwise, the rights and liabilities of their members are to be determined by substantially the same rules.[17] The fundamental distinction between ordinary partnerships and joint stock companies is that a partnership consists of a few individuals known to each other, bound together by ties of friendship and mutual confidence and who therefore are not at liberty, without the consent of all, to retire from the firm and substitute other persons in their places; the decease of a member also works a dissolution of the firm;[18] whereas a joint stock company consists of a large number of individuals not necessarily, or indeed usually, acquainted with each other at all, so that it is a matter of comparative indifference whether changes are made among them or not, and consequently the certificates of shares in such associations may be transferred at will, without the consent of other members, and the decease of a member does not work a dissolution of the association or entitle the personal representative to an accounting. In joint stock companies there is no delectus personæ.[19]

executed by all the members and filed with the officer designated by statute,[20] and these cannot be amended without the unanimous consent of the stock-holders.[21] It is analogous to the charter of a corporation on the one hand and to articles of partnership on the other, and the purchaser of stock is bound to know its provisions.[22] Where parties undertake to form a limited partnership the statute must be strictly pursued; otherwise they will be liable as general partners.[23]

IV. POWERS AND DUTIES OF OFFICERS AND MEMBERS.

A. Annual Meetings. It is usually provided by law or by the articles of association that there shall be at least one meeting of the members each year.[24] Timely notice in writing must be given the members of the time and place of the annual meeting.[25] The officers are elected by vote of the stock-holders at the annual meeting regularly called and upon due notice to all the members.[26] A statute securing to minority stock-holders in corporations the power of electing a representative in the board of directors and providing for cumulative voting of stock is not applicable to joint stock associations, unless it is made so in terms.[27]

B. Directors' Meetings. The mere fact that the members of the board of managers were not all present at a special meeting raises no presumption that the meeting was irregular.[28]

C. Power to Make Contracts — 1. In General. Contracts with joint stock associations can be made only with the officers or managers designated by statute or provided for in their articles of association.[29] Directors may bind the company

Appointment of tellers.— Where a by-law of a limited partnership provides that in case the managers fail to appoint tellers for an election of officers the stock-holders in the meeting assembled should elect tellers by vote, an election held by tellers appointed by the chairman of an election meeting against the protest of shareholders is void, and the managers elected will be enjoined from interfering with the business of the association. Tide Water Pipe Co. v. Satterfield, 12 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 457.

A special agreement by the members that in the management of the company there shall be two votes of equal power, one belonging to one member, and the other belonging to the other two remaining members, applies to the election of liquidating trustees, and when one vote is cast for one set of trustees, and the other vote for another set, there is no election. In re Imperial Steel Co., 2 Pa. An assignment for creditors, made by the chairman and secretary of a limited partnership association in pursuance of authority conferred by the stock-holders, is valid, without formal authority from the board of managers, although the by-laws provide that such board shall have entire control of the business of the association. for a loan without special authority, as the power to borrow money for the use of the company results necessarily from the power to make contracts.[30]

2. With the Company. A director of a joint stock company may make a valid contract with the company, if in so doing he deals fairly with the stock-holders.[31]

3. Ratification of Unauthorized Contract. Officers who make an unauthorized contract cannot ratify it;[32] but the company may ratify an unauthorized contract by accepting the proceeds of the contract,[33] or by bringing suit thereon.[34]

4. Limitations Imposed by Law. Where the power of the directors to make contracts is limited by statute or the articles of association they render themselves personally liable if they exceed their authority; but, where the other contracting party has notice of the limitation of their authority, the association is not liable unless the act be subsequently ratified by it.[35] Under the Pennsylvania statute relating to the organization of joint stock companies and limited partnerships, no liability for more than five hundred dollars, except against the person incurring it, shall bind such association unless the contract be reduced to writing and signed by at least two of the managers of the association.[36]

V. Rights and Liabilities of the Association and Its Members.

A. Mutual Rights and Remedies — 1. In General. Where the articles of a joint stock association do not regulate the remedies of the parties inter se, the general law of partnership applies.[37] The articles of association, however, will

Investment in stock of another company.— Where the managers of a limited partnership association for the manufacture of steel springs, to protect the company against a combination of steel makers which operated against them by requiring them to pay more for their steel than their competitors who made their own steel, purchase stock in a certain iron and steel company with the surplus earnings of the spring company, such investment is not ultra vires, there being nothing in the spring company's articles which prohibits it from manufacturing its own steel. compensation for services rendered to the company previous to his becoming a member of it.[41] But he cannot claim compensation for services rendered while a member, in the absence of an express agreement to pay him therefor.[42]

2. Dividends. Neither the acquisition of gain nor the provision for the distribution of a dividend among its members is of the essence of a joint stock company.[43] But where an association is organized for gain, the moment a dividend is declared, the company becomes debtor and the shareholder creditor, for the amount payable on demand.[44] Unpaid dividends are assets and are liable for the debts of the company as against the stock-holders.[45] An assignment of stock does not per se carry with it dividends previously declared.[46]

3. Transfer of Shares. Where the articles of association are silent on the subject certificates of stock may be transferred at the pleasure of the holder.[47] But where the articles prescribe the manner in which such transfer shall be made there must be compliance before the assignee can become a member of the association,[48] although the transfer may entitle the transferee to such interest in the property as is represented by the certificates transferred.[49]

4. Forfeiture of Stock. The articles of association of an unincorporated company organized under the joint stock plan are the law governing the right of forfeiture of the shares, and all the conditions precedent which are made by them must be strictly complied with or the forfeiture will be void.[50] If the company wrongfully confiscate a member's stock he may sue to be reinstated or to recover the value of his shares.[51]

5. Purchase of Property From Company. A member of a joint stock association has a right to purchase its property sold at public sale,[52] and the fact that it is bid in for less than it is worth is not conclusive evidence of fraud.[53] The fact that one of the managers of the association was also a member of another partnership which received from the first a conveyance authorized by its board of managers in satisfaction of a bona fide indebtedness is not sufficient to invalidate the conveyance in equity inasmuch as the property of the company must be appropriated to the payment of its honest debts.[54]

B. As to the Public — 1. In General. The stock-holders of a joint stock company are personally liable except in so far as such liability may be limited by statute[55] or special agreement[56] for the debts of the company precisely as general partners are liable for the debts of the firm.[57] The association and all its members are responsible for the acts of its officers within the scope of their authority.[58] But while a joint stock company or limited partnership is liable for its tortious acts, its members are not personally liable for such acts unless they participated in them.[59] To entitle members of a limited partnership to protection as such, the statute under which the association is organized and managed must be strictly complied with, otherwise the members are liable as general partners as to the public, although they may be special partners as among themselves.[60] The sub-

Sufficient compliance with statute illustrated.— The schedule of personal property subscribed in lieu of cash by members of a partnership association sufficiently complies with the statute if the schedule of the items and values of property contributed is both elaborate and truthful, and the result of an honest purpose to comply with the statutes, and it is such as to enable parties dealing with the association to readily ascertain the kind, amount, and value of property contributed. Robbins Electric Co. v. Weber, 172 Pa. St. 635, 34 Atl. 116. So it has been held that members of a limited stock company are not liable as general partners for goods ordered on approval, in the name of the company, but before the articles of association had been recorded, as required by statute, where such articles were recorded before approval. Hinds v. Battin, 163 Pa. St. 487, 30 Atl. 164.

Insufficient compliance with statute illustrated.— Where a portion of the capital stock of a limited partnership is contributed in machinery, and the recorded statement does not contain a detailed description and valuation of the same, the defect is fatal, and the members of the association are liable as general partners. Sheble v. Patterson, 5 Kulp (Pa.) 153. So where the certificate of organization of a limited partnership association, under the act of June 2, 1874, states that the subscribed stock was "to be paid on the execution hereof," such payment must precede the recording of the certificate, and, where nothing is paid in, the organization is not in compliance with the act, and its members are liable as general partners. Hill v. Stetler, 127 Pa. St. 145, 13 Atl. 306, 17 Atl. 887. And where a limited partnership was formed under the laws of the state of Pennsylvania, but failed to file articles of association in the proper recorder's office, as required by the statute, until after the explosion of a steam boiler and after being sued by their employees, the members of the partnership were general partners, and personally liable. Smith v. Warden, 86 Mo. 382.

Contribution in notes of third persons.— Where part of the stock of a limited partnership is subscribed for by paying in the notes of a third person, it is illegally organized, and the members are individually liable. Frank v. Lewis Foundry, etc., Co., 24 Pittsb. Leg. J. (Pa.) 33.

Contributions in patent rights.— Under a statute which allows contributions to be made "in real or personal estate, mines or other property, at a valuation to be approved by all the members," such contribution may be made by the transfer of patent rights. Rehfuss v. Moore, 134 Pa. St. 462, 19 Atl. 756, 7 L. R. A. 663.

Personalty subject to company's indebtedness.— Under a statute permitting subscriptions to be in "real or personal estate, mines or other property," contributions to the capital cannot be made in personal property of a company, subject to its indebtedness. Haslet v. Kent, 160 Pa. St. 85, 28 Atl. 501.

Excessive valuation.— In the absence of fraud, an excessive valuation put upon patent rights contributed to the capital of a limited partnership by the members does not vitiate the partnership. Rehfuss v. Moore, 134 Pa. St. 462, 19 Atl. 756, 7 L. R. A. 663 [affirming 6 Pa. Co. Ct. 245].

Withdrawal of part of capital.— The fact that part of the required capital of a limited partnership association is withdrawn from the bank where it has been deposited before the organization is completed does not impair the validity of the organization, unless it is also withdrawn from the association. Masters the partnership association will render each and every person participant in such omission or knowingly acquiescing therein liable for any indebtedness, damage, or liability arising therefrom.[62]

2. Who Are Members. It is sufficient to authorize a finding that a person is a member of such company if his name is signed to the subscription papers for its capital stock, and he has paid, without objection, assessments for the number of shares set against his name.[63] And where it appeared that parties had attended meetings of a joint stock association, and participated therein, and voted to hire money and carry on the business, and had accepted office in such association, they will be held to have been partners in the company.[64] A person who has held himself out to the world as a shareholder, has acted and been treated as such, and has accepted the benefits flowing from the ownership of shares, is liable for the debts of the company, notwithstanding a failure to observe all the formalities required by the articles of association to entitle him to the rights and privileges of a member of the association.[65] Where a member in good faith withdraws from the association he is relieved from liability for debts thereafter contracted.[66] But he cannot escape liability to creditors for debts contracted while he was a member,[67] although in case he is obliged to pay he is entitled to reimbursement from the association or its new members.[68] and transfer real estate is a creature of the statute.[70] An unincorporated association cannot as such take and hold real estate unless authorized by statute,[71] although its right to hold real estate can only be questioned by the state.[72] An attempt to convey to an association not authorized to take and hold real estate may properly be construed as a grant to those who are properly described in the deed who thus become tenants in common.[73] And where the land is paid for with the money of the association the outstanding certificates may be regarded as an equitable lien on the property.[74] But although the association cannot as a separate entity take or convey title to land, a joint stock association may be organized for the purpose of buying and selling lands through the instrumentality of trustees who take and hold as joint tenants in trust for the benefit of the persons composing the association.[75] defendant, it is the undeviating rule at law that a copartner cannot sue his firm or be sued by it.[81] Accordingly, in the absence of statutory authority, a member of a joint stock association cannot maintain an action against his company or be sued by it on a contract between him and the company,[82] for the reason that he would thus appear personally on both sides of the record.[83] He may, however, betake himself to a coördinate forum in which such technical incongruity would not be involved in the proper pleadings and procedure.[84] The hardship resulting from this technicality and the great inconvenience of making all the members of large unincorporated companies parties to actions by and against outsiders have been productive of remedial legislation both in this country[85] and in England.[86] In substance these statutes provide that such associations may sue and be sued in the name of a designated officer, as the president or treasurer of the company, who for the purposes of the action is substantially a corporation sole and the representative of the company as distinct from the individuals composing it. Under such legislation there can be no valid objection to litigation between a stock-holder and the appropriate officer as the representative of the whole company.[87] But such an officer must be designated by law; the members themselves cannot nominate an officer to represent the company in such a way as to give him any standing in court in that capacity.[88] Where an action is brought against a company in the name of an officer, or a counter-claim has been made in an action brought by an officer, no action can be brought to enforce the individual liability of the members until after final judgment in the first action and the return of an execution unsatisfied in whole or in part.[89] An action may, however, be brought by or against all the members in the first instance.[90] Statutes providing that actions shall be prosecuted in the first instance against an officer of the association are local in their application as they affect the remedy only, and in another jurisdiction, where no such legislation exists, the individual liability of members may be enforced by an action against them as partners in the first instance.[91]

C. Judgments.[92] In an action against the company in the name of its president judgment is properly rendered against the president as such, but it does not bind his individual property, and the execution issued must require the sheriff to satisfy it out of the joint property of the association,[93] unless the statute in terms authorizes the issuance of an execution against the individual property of any member of the association for the time being, after a return nulla bona against the company, in like manner as if such judgment had been recovered against the members personally.[94]

VIII. DISSOLUTION.

A. How Dissolved — 1. By Consent of Members. Inasmuch as it is a creature of contract and not of the state, a joint stock association may go into voluntary liquidation by mutual consent of all the members and appoint trustees to wind up its affairs;[95] but if formed for a special period it cannot be dissolved within that period without the unanimous consent of the stock-holders,[96] except by the interposition of a court of equity.[97]

4. By Insolvency. Proceedings for the dissolution of joint stock associations in cases of insolvency are to be conducted mainly according to the methods employed in cases of insolvent corporations rather than those derived from the law of simple partnership.[1] A receiver may be appointed who may maintain actions against the debtors of the association whether they be stock-holders or not.[2] But no creditor who is a stock-holder can receive any dividend until the other creditors are paid in full.[3]

5. By Sole Ownership of Stock. Where one member becomes the sole owner of all the stock there is nothing for certificates to represent; he simply becomes the owner of the assets and the association is dissolved.[4]

6. In Equity For Cause. Upon adequate cause shown, a court of equity has jurisdiction to decree the dissolution of a joint stock company.[5]

Determination of amount of indebtedness.— The terms of a subscription to a joint stock company prescribed that after twenty per cent had been paid the balance should be "subject to the call of the directors, as they may be instructed by the majority of the stockholders." The company having become insolvent, a receiver was appointed, who instituted an action against a stock-holder for the remaining eighty per cent of his stock subscription. It was held that the receiver had no authority to call upon the stock-holder for payment until the court had determined the amount of indebtedness of the corporation and fixed the liability of each share of the stock, and that these facts thus ascertained should be averred in the petition. Fraud or conversion of assets.— The court may decree the dissolution of the concern at the suit of one or more of the members upon a showing of such fraud as would defeat the rights of the shareholders in violation of the articles of agreement of the association, or where those in charge are converting the assets or profits of the association to their own use. IX. STATUTORY REGULATION.

While unincorporated joint stock companies with transferable shares are not illegal[8] as common nuisances,[9] at an early date in England they met with legislative opposition;[10] but later the Companies Act, an elaborate system of law, was enacted, under which and its amendments a large part of the business of the country is transacted.[11] And in many of the United States statutes substantially on the lines of the English Companies Act have been enacted.[12]

I. DEFINITION, CREATION, AND EXISTENCE.

A. Definition. A joint tenancy exists where a single estate in property, real or personal, is owned by two or more persons, other than husband and wife, under one instrument or act of the parties.[1]

B. Creation and Existence[2] — 1. IN GENERAL. A joint tenancy can only be created by purchase or act of the parties and not by descent or act of the law.[3] It may be created by devise,[4] or by any conveyance or act of purchase inter vivos which gives an estate to a plurality of persons without adding any restrictive, exclusive, or explanatory words;[5] as where property is conveyed to two or more persons as trustees,[6] or where two or more jointly lease a farm.[7] A mortgage to two or more persons as security for a debt due to them jointly creates them joint tenants,[8] until foreclosure;[9] but not where it is given to secure several debts.[10] It has also been held that such an estate may be created by a joint disseizin.[11]

2. DISTINCTION BETWEEN JOINT TENANTS AND TENANTS IN COMMON. The essential difference between joint tenants and tenants in common is that joint tenants hold the property by one joint title and in one right, whereas tenants in common hold by several titles or by one title and several rights.[12] They also differ in that the right of survivorship exists in case of joint tenancy but not in tenancy in common,[13] and in that a joint tenant may convey his interest to his cotenant by a release, which a tenant in common cannot do.[14]

3. WHO MAY BE JOINT TENANTS. As a general rule all natural persons are capable of becoming joint tenants;[15] but bodies politic or corporations cannot be joint tenants either between themselves or with natural persons.[16]

4. ESTATES SUBJECT TO JOINT TENANCY. A joint tenancy may be of an estate in fee, for life, for years, or at will,[17] or of an estate in remainder;[18] and may be of an equitable as well as of a legal estate.[19]

5. ESSENTIALS TO JOINT TENANCY. To create a joint tenancy there must coexist four unities: (1) Unity of interest; (2) unity of title; (3) unity of time; (4) unity of possession;[20] that is, each of the owners must have one and the same interest,[21] conveyed by the same act or instrument,[22] to vest at one and the same time,[23] except in cases of uses and executory devises;[24] and each must have the entire possession of every parcel of the property held in joint tenancy as well as of the whole.[25]

6. Construction of Instrumemts or Acts Creating Joint Tenancies. The ancient English law was apt in its constructions of conveyances to favor joint tenancy rather than tenancy in common; and where an estate was conveyed to two or more persons without any words indicating an intention that it should be divided among them it was construed to be a joint tenancy.[26] Joint tenancies, however, for a long period of time have been and still are regarded with so little favor in England and in this country, both in courts of law and of equity, that whenever the expressions in a conveyance will import an intention in favor of a tenancy in common, such effect will be given to them.[27] But notwithstanding this tendency of the courts, in the absence of statute a conveyance to several persons will still be construed to be a joint tenancy where there is no expression or words in the instrument creating it indicating an intention that the estate shall be divided.[28]

7. Statutory Modifications or Abolition. This leaning of the courts has led in

8. Severance and Termination. A joint tenancy may be terminated or severed, as it is frequently called, by any act that destroys one or more of its unities.[36] But the act of a joint tenant, to amount to a severance, must be such as to preclude him from claiming by survivorship any interest in the subject-matter of the joint tenancy.[37] Thus a joint tenancy may be severed by one or a part of the cotenants conveying or otherwise disposing of their shares, as this destroys the unity of title and creates a severance as to such shares;[38] as where one joint tenant a joint tenancy in executors or trustees, the deed must describe them as such.

C. Improvements and Repairs. As a general rule one joint tenant cannot compel another to make improvements on the joint property, nor can he maintain an action against him personally to compel contribution to the expense of repairs or improvements made thereon without his consent, express or implied, nor fix it as a lien on his interest in the estate.[58] But where the repairs or improvements

D. Rents and Profits. One joint tenant may receive the whole rent of the joint property or appoint an agent to collect it;[61] and at common law he was not accountable to his cotenants for receiving more than his share of the rents and profits or for exclusively occupying the common property or more than his share thereof unless he agreed to pay rent or had ousted his cotenant;[62] but under the statute of 4 Anne, c. 16, § 27, and similar statutes adopted in this country a joint tenant is now liable to account for occupying more than his share as well as for receiving more than his portion of the rents and profits,[63] except as to such rents and profits as accrued from improvements made by his own skill, labor, and capital,[64] and except where the property is susceptible of a several occupation, in which event a joint tenant in exclusive possession of a part, without hindering the others from the use of their shares, is not answerable to them for profits realized from the proportion in his exclusive occupancy.[65]

E. Conveyances and Contracts Between Joint Tenants.[66] A joint tenant may convey his interest in the joint estate to one of his cotenants, by any means that shows his intention to release such interest,[67] even though, where it is a conveyance of an interest in fee, no words of inheritance are used.[68] If one of two joint tenants conveys his interest to the other, the estate is turned to an estate in severalty; but if one of three or more joint tenants conveys to a cotenant, the purchaser remains as joint tenant with the others as to their original interests, and as tenant in common as to the share purchased by him.[69]

F. Liability For Waste. At common law a joint tenant was not liable to his cotenant for waste,[70] but it is otherwise under the statutes of Westminster II, c. 22, and similar statutes adopted in this country.[71]

G. Purchase of Adverse or Outstanding Title. One joint tenant cannot purchase or otherwise acquire for his own benefit, an adverse or outstanding title or encumbrance against the joint estate; but such a purchase will inure to the joint benefit of him and his cotenants,[72] providing the other joint tenants elect, within a reasonable time, to avail themselves of such adverse title, and contribute their ratable share of the expense of acquiring it.[73] It is not a breach of trust, however, for a joint tenant to take the title in his own name,[74] or to purchase an outstanding title in order to protect his rights.[75] The rule that the purchaser of an adverse claim by one joint tenant shall inure to the benefit of all the cotenants does not apply to a purchase made before the joint tenancy commenced[76] or after it has ceased.[77]

H. Disseizin and Adverse Possession. Since the seizin or possession of one joint tenant is in law the seizin or possession of the others, to constitute a disseizin and adverse possession by one joint tenant there must be an actual ouster and adverse holding by him,[78] and notice thereof on the part of his cotenant.[79] But the mere fact of an uninterrupted possession of one tenant which implies no exclusion of the others does not show an adverse possession,[80] nor does a mere failure to account for the proceeds by a joint tenant in possession amount to an ouster.[81]

I. Action Between Joint Tenants. Since the right of possession of the joint property is in all the joint tenants[82] it follows that until there is a severance no joint tenant is entitled to exclusive possession of the property; and therefore cannot sue his cotenant in respect to the possession and enjoyment thereof unless the latter has said or done some act amounting to an ouster.[83] Thus one joint tenant cannot maintain against his cotenant an action of replevin,[84] detinue,[85] trespass,[86] trover,[87] or ejectment,[88] unless such cotenant has said or done something which amounts to an ouster or to a denial of the right of the other tenant. If a joint tenant has been disseized by his cotenant by force he may have a warrant for forcible entry and detainer.[89] A joint tenant of personal property may maintain assumpsit against the other to recover his share of the same or its proceeds.[90]

In Louisiana the right of a joint owner to maintain a possessory action depends on the nature of his possession. While he continues to possess nomine communi the right does not exist; but where he has possessed nomine proprio and in good faith for more than a year, it has been held that he is to all legal intents a just possessor, and in case of a disturbance by the other joint tenant the possessory action will lie. Benton v. Roberts, 2 La. Ann. 749. Nor will the fact of commencing a suit for partition, after the institution of possessory action, in any manner affect the right to recover in the latter where each party had possessed for more than a year a portion of the land in his own right. III. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES AS TO THIRD PERSONS.

A. In General. As a general rule an act or contract of one joint tenant respecting the joint property without the authority or consent of his cotenants cannot bind or prejudicially affect the latter,[91] except where the act or contract is beneficial to all of them and does not impose any liability upon them.[92]

B. Leases. A lease of the joint property can only be made by all of the cotenants joining therein.[93] One joint tenant may, however, lease his interest in the joint property.[94]

C. Mortgages or Pledges. A mortgage or pledge of joint property is not binding on the cotenants who do not join in its execution,[95] unless by reason of their knowledge and acquiescence, or otherwise, they are estopped to deny it.[96] One joint tenant, however, may mortgage or pledge his interest in the joint property,[97] and to the extent of the mortgage lien the right of the survivors will be destroyed or suspended and the equity of redemption at the death of the mortgagor tenant will be all that will fall to his surviving cotenants.[98]

D. Sales and Conveyances.[99] A sale or conveyance by joint tenants before severance may be made by all of them actually joining therein.[1] But one joint tenant acting alone cannot sell or convey joint property so as to divest his cotenants of their interest therein unless they previously authorized or subsequently ratify the same;[2] although the grantee under such conveyance may acquire title by adverse possession as against the other cotenants.[3] One joint tenant cannot convey a distinct portion of the estate by metes and bounds so as to prejudice his cotenants;[4] but such conveyance operates as an estoppel against the grantor or those claiming under him.[5] It is well settled, however, that a joint tenant may alienate or convey to a stranger his part or interest in the joint property,[6] in which case the grantee becomes tenant in common with the other cotenants, but they as to each other remain joint tenants.[7]

E. Devises. Since a joint tenant's interest is not descendible, but passes immediately upon his death to his survivor,[8] he cannot dispose thereof by devise.[9]

F. Actions By or Against Joint Tenants. As a general rule all the joint tenants should join or be joined in an action respecting joint property. In the absence of a statute authorizing it, an action by or against one or any number less than all of the joint tenants cannot generally be maintained,[10] if objection thereto

One joint tenant may sue in the names of all in respect to the joint estate, although the others disclaim. Eichelberger v. Eichelberger, 4 Pa. L. J. Rep. 73, holding also that any of the other joint tenants may disclaim and thereby withdraw themselves from all the consequences of the proceedings.

Where plaintiffs in a suit are joint tenants at the commencement thereof it is no defense that they have since by mere operation of law become tenants in common and therefore not is made in the proper time and manner.[11] Thus in the absence of statute all the joint tenants must be joined as plaintiffs in an action of replevin,[12] detinue,[13] trespass,[14] or in an action of tort in the nature of waste,[15] respecting the joint property. On the other hand it has been held that one joint tenant may maintain unlawful detainer,[16] trespass to try title,[17] or ejectment[18] against a mere trespasser or wrongdoer. An action of trespass or trover by a joint tenant, however, without joining his cotenants is not void, and if objection to the non-joinder is not properly taken by plea in abatement he may maintain the action but can recover merely his proportionate share of the value or damages.[19] One joint tenant may maintain an action in respect to his own share, however, without joining his cotenants,[20] but of course can recover only to the extent of his interest.[21] To avoid the plea of the statute of limitations in an action by joint tenants, it must be shown that all plaintiffs were under disability to sue within the prescribed time.[22]

I. TERMINOLOGY.

A. Judge.[1] A judge has been defined as a public officer lawfully appointed to decide litigated questions according to law; an officer, so named in his commission, who presides in some court.[2] Whenever the law vests a person with

1. De facto judge see infra, IX.
Special judge see infra, VIII.
2. Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in State v. O'Gorman, 75 Mo. 370, 375; Foot v. Stiles, 57 N. Y. 399, 405; In re Lawyers' Tax Cases, 8 Heisk. (Tenn.) 565, 650].
Other definitions are: "A public officer, who, by virtue of his office, is clothed with judicial authorities." Todd v. U. S., 158 U. S. 278, 284, 15 S. Ct. 889, 39 L. ed. 982; U. S. v. Clark, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,804, 1 Gall. 497, 499.

power to do an act, and constitutes him a judge of the evidence on which the act may be done, and at the same time contemplates that the act is to be carried into effect through the instrumentality of agents, the person thus clothed with power is invested with discretion, and is quoad hoc a judge.[3]

B. Judge at Chambers. "A judge at chambers" is simply a judge acting out of court.[4]

"A public officer whose function is to declare the law, to administer justice in a court of law, to conduct the trial of causes between litigants according to legal forms and methods." Anderson L. Dict.

"One invested with authority to determine any cause or question in a court of judicature created by the queen's letters patent. Wharton L. Lex.

In its most extensive sense, the term includes all officers who are appointed to decide such questions, and not only judges properly so called but also justices of the peace and jurors, who are judges of the facts in issue. State v. O'Gorman, 75 Mo. 370, 376.

In its more limited sense the term "judge" signifies an officer who is so named in his commission and who presides in some court. State v. O'Gorman, 75 Mo. 370, 376.

According to the intent or context the term may include an assistant judge (City Bank v. Young, 43 N. H. 457, 460), a commissioner (In re Wong Fock, 81 Fed. 558, 560), a county court justice (State v. O'Gorman, 75 Mo. 370, 375), a county judge (State v. Maloney, 92 Tenn. 62, 68, 20 S. W. 419; Pfister v. Smith, 95 Wis. 51, 54, 69 N. W. 984); a court commissioner (Pfister v. Smith, supra; Woodruff v. Depere, 60 Wis. 128, 132, 18 N. W. 761), a judge of the recorder's court (People v. Wilson, 15 Ill. 388, 391), a justice of the peace (People v. Wilson, supra; People v. Mann, 97 N. Y. 530, 536, 49 Am. Rep. 556; Center v. Hoosick River Pulp Co., 43 Misc. (N. Y.) 247, 249, 88 N. Y. Suppl. 548; Carrington v. Andrews, 12 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 348, 351), an ordinary (State v. Hutson, 1 McCord (S. C.) 240, 241; Hays v. Harley, 1 Mill (S. C.) 267, 268), a recorder of a city (State v. Grandjean, 51 La. Ann. 1099, 1102, 25 So. 940), a recorder of the mayor's court (Com. v. Conyngham, 65 Pa. St. 76, 83), or a register of wills (Mintzer v. Baker, 5 Phila. (Pa.) 483). On the other hand it may not include within its meaning a commissioner of appeals (Settle v Van Evrea, 49 N. Y. 280, 284), a commissioner of mines (Re Malaga Barrens, 21 Nova Scotia 391, 398), a county commissioner (LeCroix v. Fairfield County Com'rs, 50 Conn. 321, 322, 47 Am. Rep. 648), a judge of probate (State v. French, 2 Pinn. (Wis.) 181, 184, 1 Chandl. 130); People v. Mann, 97 N. Y. 530, 536, 49 Am. Rep. 556), a prothonotary (McDougald v. Mullins, 30 Nova Scotia 313, 314), a recorder of a city (People v. Goodwin, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 562, 566; Com. v. Dallas, 4 Dall. (Pa.) 229, 230, 1 L. ed. 812; Respublica v. Dallas, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 300, 305; Egleston v. Charleston, 1 Mill (S. C.) 45), a recorder of a municipal court (Morrison v. McDonald, 21 Me. 550, 555), or a warden of a municipality (Palgrave Min. Co. v. McDonald, 24 Nova Scotia 70, 73).

A judge is an officer of the state charged with the duty of seeing that the law is faithfully administered. Cox v. State, 8 Tex. App. 254, 282, 34 Am. Rep. 746.

"Judge" as used in the Bankruptcy Act see BANKRUPTCY, 5 Cyc. 272 note 93.

Mere administrative officers of the government, such as commissioners, committees, auditors, selectmen, and the like, are not included within the meaning of the term. Betts v. New Hartford, 25 Conn. 180, 186; Foot v. Stiles, 57 N. Y. 399, 405.

Synonymous with "justice" see Low v. Cheney, 1 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 29. See also In re Wong Fock, 81 Fed. 558, 560.

"United States judge," as including a justice, judge, or commissioner see Chin Bak Kan v. U. S., 186 U. S. 193, 22 S. Ct. 891, 894, 46 L. ed. 1121; Fong Mey Yuk v. U. S., 113 Fed. 898, 51 C. C. A. 528.

"The terms, 'circuit judge,' and 'judge of the circuit court' are convertible. They mean precisely the same thing, and if there is no circuit court there can be no circuit judge or judge of the circuit court." Crozier v. Lyons, 72 Iowa 401, 404, 34 N. W. 186.

Compared with the term "court."—"Judge" and "court" are not, strictly speaking, convertible terms; but they are so in popular sense. U. S. v. Gee Lee, 50 Fed. 271, 273, 1 C. C. A. 516. C. Judge of Court of Record. A judge authorized by law to hold a court which is a court of record[5] is a judge of a court of record.[6]

D. Judge Pro Hac Vice. An attorney at law selected or appointed to act and preside as judge in the trial of a case when the regular judge is disqualified is a judge pro hac vice.[7]

E. Judge Pro Tem. A judge elected or appointed to act for and in the absence, sickness, or disqualification of the regular judge is a judge pro tempore; he is only a substitute never a duplicate.[8]

II. SCOPE OF TREATISE.

It is proposed in this article to include under the title of judges public officers authorized to preside in courts of justice, whether known as judges, justices, chancellors, surrogates, or by other titles, excluding, however, justices of the peace and members of courts-martial.[9]

III. THE OFFICE OF JUDGE.

A. Whether State or County Office. Whether the judge of a given court is a state or county officer may usually be determined by an examination of the constitutional or statutory provisions creating the office. In some instances, however, these provisions have not been clear, and have received judicial interpretation.[10]

B. Creation and Regulation. The office of judge is created in the United States by the constitution,[11] or by statutory provision, provided the power is delegated to the legislature.[12] Where the office is created by constitution, the power is sometimes delegated to the legislature to exercise control over the office by fixing

16. Although the constitution of Alabama requires the legislature to provide by law for the election of judges of the courts of probate and other inferior courts by the qualified electors of the counties, still the legislature may authorize the judge of the county court elected by the voters of the county to preside in the probate court in the same county, both courts having jurisdiction over the same territory. Randolph v. Baldwin, 41 Ala. 305. The supreme court of Pennsylvania has adopted the opposite view in Com. v. Conyngham, 65 Pa. St. 76. In the latter case, however, the president judge of the common pleas court was elected by the voters of the whole county, and it was held that he could not be designated by the legislature to preside over the mayor's court of one city in the county as the voters of the city were entitled by the constitution to elect the judge of the mayor's court. See to the same effect Mansfield's Case, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 224, where the judges of certain existing courts were authorized by statute to preside over a newly established juvenile court.

17. Maroney v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. 524, 78 S. W. 696.

18. International Bank v. Bradley, 19 N. Y. 245.

A municipal council has no power to change the character or duties of an office prescribed by legislative enactment. Oppenheim v. Pittsburgh R. Co., 85 Ind. 471.

19. State v. Scott, 9 Ark. 270. Thus the legislature cannot expel a circuit judge from his office by creating a new district and taking from him the territory that constituted his district. People v. Dubois, 23 Ill. 547. Nor by abolishing his judicial district before the expiration of his constitutional authority of the constitution, it may be abolished by statute, and the incumbent deprived of his office.[20] And where the constitution authorizes the legislature to increase the number of judges from time to time, and the legislature exercises the right, it may in turn abolish the number thus increased.[21] The adoption of a new constitution may result in abolishing offices previously existing.[22] Where the constitution establishes the office, but does not fix the number of judges, the legislature may abolish unnecessary judges by abolishing districts, or by providing that successors shall not be appointed for the supernumerary judges.[23] But it cannot terminate the office of a judge elected under a constitutional law for a constitutional term by simply devolving the duties of the office upon another official.[24]

IV. APPOINTMENT OR ELECTION.

A. Introductory Statement. The power can be exercised only by the authority to whom it is so given, and cannot be delegated,[25] and any encroachment thereon is void.[26] The power to select judges, like all other powers, is derived, in the United States, from the people.[27]

B. Method of Selection — How Fixed. Usually the constitution explicitly provides that the superior judges shall either be appointed or elected.[28] In some term. Com. v. Gamble, 62 Pa. St. 343, 1 Am. Rep. 422.

Where the existence of a court ceases by limitation at a fixed time and a judge has been elected to preside in said court during the remainder of its existence, the legislature cannot after such election extend the judge's term, the existence of the court having been extended by statute, as this would virtually give the legislature the power of appointment to fill a vacancy which is vested by the constitution in the governor. jurisdictions the election is by the people,[29] in others by joint ballot of the two houses of the legislature.[30] The method of selecting judges of inferior courts is commonly left to the legislature for determination.[31]

C. By Whom Appointed. Where the constitution provides for the appointment of judges, the power of appointment is usually vested in the chief executive, with the concurrence of the senate,[32] although some constitutions do not require the concurrence of the senate.[33]

D. Suspension and Exhaustion of Power of Appointment. Where an act of the legislature creating an office and conferring upon the governor the power of appointment provides that the law shall not go into effect until a future day, the power of appointment to fill the office is also suspended until the law takes effect.[34] When a governor has exercised his constitutional power of appointment of a judge and the appointment has been confirmed by the senate, and the appointee duly commissioned, the governor's power is exhausted, and he cannot recall the commission even for the purpose of reappointing the judge for a different term.[35]

E. Delegation of Power to Legislature to Determine by Whom Judges Chosen. Frequently the constitution delegates to the legislature the power to establish courts and to designate by whom the judges thereof shall be chosen.[36] And when the constitution is silent, the legislature may provide that judicial officers shall be elected by the people.[37] Where the constitution provides that certain judicial officers shall be either elected "or" appointed, the legislature may determine whether such officers shall be elected or appointed; but it cannot authorize the employment of both methods in selecting judges of the same grade at the same time.[38]

F. Time and Manner of Selection. The constitution, after designating by whom judicial officers shall be selected, may leave to the legislature the matter of fixing the time and manner of their selection.[39] This power does not include the right to provide that an officer may be elected by the electors of any community smaller than that which the officer is to represent. The "manner of the election" does not go to the question of what body of electors shall elect.[40]

G. Right to Office Derived From Election or Appointment. The right of a judge to his office is determined by his election or appointment and the fact that he has not been commissioned does not render him the less a judge.[41] On the other hand a governor cannot enlarge the official term of a judge by the terms of his commission.[42] And where a judge in office is reappointed as his own successor, he cannot change the term of office prescribed by law by a failure to apply for a second commission and to qualify thereunder.[43] Nevertheless a judge's commission issued by the proper authority is the highest and best evidence of his right to the office until on quo warranto or a proceeding of that nature it is annulled by judicial determination.[44]

V. ELIGIBILITY, QUALIFICATION, AND TENURE.

A. Eligibility. Eligibility to the office of judge in the United States is fixed by law in each state.[45] A certain period of residence within the state, circuit, or county prior to election is commonly required,[46] as is also residence therein at the Eligibility to particular judgeship.— The provision of the constitution of Louisiana, conferring on the recorder of the city of New Orleans the additional powers and functions of justice of the peace, does not vest the recorder with any other character or title of office than that of recorder. time of the election, and continuing during the incumbency of the judge.[47] But residence within the county or circuit is not universally required.[48] Some of the constitutions also provide that the period of service of judges shall terminate after they have attained a certain age.[49] Where the constitution provides that no person shall be eligible to the office of judge unless he is "learned in the law," such person must be an attorney at law admitted to the bar by some court authorized to license persons to practice.[50] And where the constitution provides that a person, in order to be eligible to election as judge, must have practised law in the state for a fixed period next preceding his election, such person must have practised under legal permission obtained by complying with the requirements prescribed by law.[51] The holding of any other office of profit or trust will in some states render a person ineligible to exercise the office of judge.[52]

B. Qualification[53] — 1. Necessity. While the right to an office is derived by election or appointment, it is competent for the legislature to render the enjoyment of the right dependent upon various conditions such as the issuing of a commission, the qualification of the officer, and in case of an election, the ascertainment of the result. When these conditions are imposed the right to enter upon and hold the office is not complete until they are satisfied.[54] Where the constitution requires a commission to be issued, a person elected as judge cannot

Construction of particular provisions.— A constitutional provision that the period of service of certain judges shall terminate on the last day of December after they have reached the age of seventy years creates a limitation on the term of office prescribed, applicable where the incumbent attains the age specified before the expiration of a full term. The provision applies to county judges (People v. Brundage, 18 Hun (N. Y.) 291 [affirmed in 78 N. Y. 403], but does not apply to the office of surrogate (People v. Carr, 100 N. Y. 236, 3 N. be legally qualified by taking the required oath until he has received his commission.[55] Generally the law requires the judge elect to take an oath of office;[56] and where a time is prescribed within which the oath must be taken, the performance of the requirement within the time limited is a condition precedent to the right to enter upon the office.[57] Where, however, the time for taking and filing the oath is not expressly made mandatory by statute, the statute will be construed as directory, and the oath may be taken at any time before induction into office.[58] County[59] and probate judges[60] are required in some states to give bond in qualifying.[61]

Performing duties of office before commencement of term.— It occasionally happens that a judge is required to discharge the duties of the office to which he has been elected before his term of office begins. Thus in Virginia the constitution provides that the terms of office of certain judges "shall commence on the first day of January next following their appointment; and they shall discharge the duties of their respective offices from their first appointment and qualification under this Constitution until their terms begin." Under this provision it was held by the supreme court of Virginia that a judge of the court, who was elected and qualified in March, 1874, was required to perform the duties of the office from the date of his qualification until the fourteenth day of the following January when his term began, he being the first judge of the hustings court elected under the constitution. Ex p. Fisher, 33 Gratt. states and of the federal government. When the constitution of a state ordains that a judge shall hold his office for a fixed term, the constitution governs, and the legislature has no power to alter his tenure.[77] The legislature, however, is sometimes expressly authorized by the constitution to fix the terms of judicial officers.[78] And when the constitution is silent the legislature may fix the term.[79] The terms of office as fixed by the provision vary in extent, judges are chosen for life,[80] during good behavior,[81] for a definite period of time,[82] or until the office is declared vacant by a resolution of the legislature.[83] Occasionally a judge is chosen to preside over a temporary court during the existence of the court,[84] during the military occupation of a state, the appointment being revocable at the pleasure of the military governor,[85] or under a provisional government for an indefinite period.[86]

2. CHANGE OF TERM OF JUDGES IN OFFICE. The tenure of judges in office may be changed by the constitution.[87] But where the office of judge is made elective, the legislature cannot continue the incumbent in office beyond the expiration of the term for which he was elected, either by extending the term,[88] or by postponing the time for the election of his successor,[89] unless there is constitutional authority therefor.[90]

3. Right to Full Term as Affected by Time of Commencement of Incumbency. The question occasionally arises whether a judicial officer is entitled to hold his office for the full term fixed by law, irrespective of the time when his incumbency began. It has been held in California,[91] Florida,[92] Maine,[93] South Carolina,[94] and Texas[95] that under the constitutions of those states judges of certain courts are entitled to hold their offices for full terms, although chosen before the expiration of the terms for which their predecessors were commissioned. In New York it has been held that it was intended that one full judicial term should follow another full term with no break in the regular and connected succession;[96] and in Illinois a similar ruling has been made with reference to the offices of judges of the circuit court of Cook county.[97] On the contrary in Louisiana[98] and Nevada[99] it is held that, although the constitution fixed the length of judicial terms, it contemplates that the terms of all judges of a designated grade in the state shall terminate at the same time, and that the legislature in increasing the number of such judges may provide that the terms of the first judges elected shall expire at the next general election. In Tennessee, under the constitution of 1834, a judicial officer was entitled to hold his office for the full constitutional term, without regard to the time of the beginning of his incumbency,[1] but this is changed by the constitution of 1870, which requires uniformity in the time for the commencement and termination of all judicial terms.[2]

4. Right to Hold Over Until Qualification of Successor. As a general rule, when the law creates an office and designates the term, the person chosen to fill the office will hold until his successor is elected and qualified unless there is some express provision of law to the contrary.[3] And this rule obtains whether the want of a successor results from a failure to hold an election, or from the failure of the person elected to qualify, or from the legal change in the time for holding the election.[4] But where the old judicial system ceases to exist at a given time by a constitutional provision,[5] or where the constitution creates the office and limits the term to a fixed period, the incumbent of a judicial office does not hold over until his successor has been elected and has qualified;[6] and where a judge has been elected and has qualified, but dies before the end of his predecessor's term of office, the latter is not entitled to hold over.[7]

5. Tenure of Judges Chosen to Fill Newly Created Offices. The creation of a new judgeship sometimes necessitates the appointment of a judge to hold the office until it can be filled in the regular way. As a rule a judge so appointed holds the office only until the next general election at which judges of the same grade are regularly elected.[8] And where the constitution of a state contemplates uniformity in the tenure of the judges throughout the state, the legislature in creating a new circuit may provide that the first judge elected in that circuit shall hold his office until the next general election for judges, although the term for such judge is fixed by the constitution.[9] So also where the constitution fixes the date of the commencement of the full term of a newly created judgeship, the legislature has no power to extend the provisional term of a judge appointed to the position beyond such date.[10]

F. Vacancy in Office — 1. What Constitutes Vacancy. An existing judicial office without an incumbent is vacant.[11] Vacancy applies not to the incumbent, but to the term or to the office.[12] An office is not vacant so long as it is supplied, in the manner provided by the constitution or laws, with an incumbent legally authorized to exercise the power and perform the duties pertaining to it.[13] An office presently filled cannot become or be vacant without a removal either voluntary or involuntary. When voluntary, no judicial determination resulting in vacation is necessary. When involuntary, such determination is essential unless otherwise provided by law.[14]

2. Matters Creating Vacancy. It is well settled that a vacancy may occur by reason of the creation of a new judicial office which has never been filled,[15]

In Missouri it was held in State v. Boone County Ct., 50 Mo. 317, 11 Am. Rep. 415, that where the office of probate judge was created and the election of a judge to fill the office was postponed until the next general election there existed in the meantime a vacancy in the office which the governor could fill by appointment. But in State v. Emerson, 39 Mo. 80, the same court held that the creation of a new office did not cause a vacancy happening by "death, resignation, or removal from the circuit" as defined by the constitution.

In Mississippi the creation of a new judicial office does not create a vacancy within the meaning of the provision of the constitution authorizing the governor to fill by ap-

by the death,[16] abandonment of the office,[17] or resignation,[18] of the incumbent, and by the refusal or failure of the person elected to qualify.[19] A vacancy may also be caused by the removal of a judge from the political subdivision of which he was required to be a resident when elected or appointed,[20] or from the state,[21] or by failing to move into his county within a reasonable time where a change in the boundaries of the county has placed a judge's residence without the same,[22] or by accepting or continuing to hold some other office of profit or pointment an office rendered vacant by the happening of some contingency. O'Leary v. Adler, 51 Miss. 28.

In Wisconsin, under the clause of the constitution declaring that "where a vacancy shall happen in the office of the judge of the supreme or circuit court," it shall be filled by appointment "until a successor is elected," it was held that where a new circuit was created, although there was a vacancy in the sense that the office was not occupied, still there was no vacancy within the sense of this clause, but the first judge must be elected, and could not legally be appointed. What constitutes abandonment.— The acceptance by the incumbent of another office or position incompatible with that already held amounts to an abandonment or forfeiture of the first; but abandonment is largely a question of intention. Where the legislature changed Logan county to Lincoln county, and the probate judge of Logan county was appointed by the governor probate judge of Lincoln county and entered upon and accepted the new office, and thereafter the supreme court declared the law changing the counties unconstitutional it was held that said judge had not abandoned his original office, and was entitled thereto. Hampton v. Dilley, 3 Ida. 427, 31 Pac. 807. It has been decided in Missouri that a judge does not abandon his office by saying that he has abandoned the same, by neglecting to perform the duties of the office, nor by engaging in the practice of law in violation of a statute forbidding a judge to practice; but such breaches of duty may subject him to indictment and impeachment. trust,[23] or some incompatible office.[24] An office may also be vacated by force of a constitutional declaration,[25] or by act of the legislature under constitutional authority.[26] Other matters which will result in creating a vacancy are the removal of the incumbent from office, the decision of a competent tribunal declaring the office vacant, a failure to elect at the proper election, there being no incumbent to continue in office until his successor is elected and qualified or other provision relating thereto, a forfeiture of the office as provided by law, and conviction of an infamous crime or of any public offense involving a violation of the oath of office.[27]

3. MATTERS NOT CREATING VACANCY. An office is not rendered vacant by reason of the institution of proceedings to contest the election of the incumbent,[28] or because the judge has been adjudged insane.[29] Nor will a vacancy result from an act of the legislature changing the number designating a judicial circuit without changing the territory comprising the circuit.[30] An act of the legislature fixing the number of judges of an already existing circuit will not be construed as meaning to remove the existing judges;[31] and a constitutional provision that the qualified voters of a state shall elect their own judges will not vacate the offices of judges in office at the date of the adoption of the constitution.[32] So the legislature cannot, by a declaratory enactment, make a vacancy in an office created by the constitution,[33] nor can it authorize the governor to declare such an office vacant.[34] Neither can a governor revoke an appointment of a chancellor, and, treating that revocation as creating a vacancy, fill the office by appointment of another person.[35]

Appointment during vacation of senate.— Judges and chancellors are appointed in Mississippi by the governor with the advice and consent of the senate. When the senate is in session and the term of a chancellor will expire before the next session of the senate the governor should nominate a person to fill the vacancy and send his name to the senate for their concurrence; and if he fails to do so he cannot make a valid appointment to fill such vacancy during the vacation of the senate. Christian v. Gibbs, 53 Miss. 314; Brady v. Howe, 50 Miss. 607.

In Colorado the legislature established a criminal court and provided that immediately after the act went into effect the judge thereof should be appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the senate. The governor was unable to make the appointment until after the legislature adjourned. It was held that no vacancy existed in the new office until the governor had lost his right to make the appointment, which occurred when the legislature adjourned; and that thereupon a vacancy existed which under the constitution must be filled by the county commissioners of the county where the vacancy existed. People v. Rucker, 5 Colo. 455.

In New York the consent of the senate is required if in session. But if the sittings of the senate are terminated by a long adjournment, it is not in session within the meaning of the constitution, and the governor may make a temporary appointment to fill a vacancy without its advice or consent. People v. Fancher, 50 N. Y. 288.

39. People v. Rucker, 5 Colo. 455.

40. Under the constitution of Michigan a vacancy in the office of probate judge is filled by appointment by the governor. But it has been held by the supreme court of that state that the constitution thus makes provision for filling the office with some degree of permanency, but does not provide for such temporary emergencies as occur when a judge is vacancies;[41] and it is customary to provide that upon the expiration of the term of the temporary appointee, the vacancy for the remainder of the unexpired term shall be filled by election by the people.[42] But in Rhode Island, in case of a vacancy in the office of judge of the supreme court, the same is filled by the grand committee consisting of both houses of the general assembly, until the next annual session for the election of officers, at which time the office is filled by election by the general assembly.[43]

c. Filling of Vacancies by Judges in Their Own Court. Judges of the supreme court have no power to appoint a judge to fill a vacancy occasioned by the absence during the term of one of the judges.[44] But where a member of the court is disqualified to hear certain cases, the remaining judges may call in a circuit judge to sit in determining these particular cases.[45]

5. Time of Filling Vacancy. When an official having the right to make an appointment is not by statute required to make it at any definite time, he may make it prior to the expiration of the existing term, provided he would be in office and would have the right to make it when the term actually expired. But when the statute expressly prescribes the time when the appointment shall be made, an appointment prior to that time would be invalid.[46] And a person cannot be elected to a judicial office which does not exist at the time of the election.[47] Nor can an election be held to fill an anticipated vacancy, unless expressly authorized by law.[48] A law which unnecessarily postpones the right to elect a judge would be unconstitutional. But a provision prescribing a reasonable time sick or absent; nor does it cover the case of an appointment made temporarily upon the death, removal, or resignation of the incumbent. For such emergencies the legislature may make provision by authorizing the circuit court commissioner of the county to serve until an appointment can be made. Kelley v. Edwards, 38 Mich. 210. Computation of time.— The constitution of New York provides that when a vacancy occurs "otherwise than by expiration of term in the office of justice of the supreme court, the same shall be filled for a full term, at the next general election, happening not less than three months after such vacancy occurs." for deliberation in the choice of a successor in case of a vacancy in a judgeship is valid.[49]

6. Term of Appointee to Fill Vancancy. The term of a judge temporarily appointed to fill a vacancy under some provision expires upon the qualification of his successor elected at the next general election at which judges are regularly chosen,[50] under others at the next general election.[51] In one state it has been held that such term expires upon the occurrence of a special election ordered by the governor, and held for the purpose of electing a judge to fill the balance of the unexpired term.[52] And under some provisions the term expires upon the election of a successor at the next meeting of the general assembly.[53] So under some provisions the appointee holds until the end of the unexpired term of his predecessor, and until his successor is elected and has qualified.[54] In no case can the legislature authorize the governor to appoint a judge to fill a vacancy for a longer period than prescribed by the constitution.[55] And on the other hand where the term of the appointee is fixed by law, it is not within the power of the governor to limit the appointment to such time as he shall revoke or determine the commission.[56]

7. Term of Person Elected to Fill Vacancy. Where a vacancy in a judicial term has been filled by an election the incumbent so elected holds as a general rule for the balance of the unexpired term, or until the election and qualification thereafter of his successor.[57] In some states, however, the rule is that certain reduce judicial expenses or because of a superfluity of judges,[68] nor for a mere error of judgment in applying legal principles to the cases to be decided.[69]

3. METHODS OF REMOVAL. The methods of removal are prescribed by law and none others than those prescribed are valid.[70] According as the provisions authorize, judges may be removed from office by impeachment,[71] by the courts for cause,[72] by address of the legislature,[73] by joint resolution of both houses of the legislature,[74] or by the governor upon the address of both houses of the legislature.[75] So it has been decided by the supreme court of the United States that the president has the power to remove a judge of the district court of Alaska before the expiration of his term of office, and that such judge was not a judge of a court of the United States within the meaning of that part of section 1768 of the Revised Statutes, now repealed, exempting judges of the courts of the United States from removal by the president.[76]

Effect of mistake.— Where a person elected to an office failed to take the constitutional oath of office within the time contemplated within a reasonable time remove into his county, he thereby forfeits his office.[79] So under some provisions a judicial officer forfeits his office upon conviction of the commission of a felony and the right is not revived by the granting of a pardon.[80] On the other hand the fact that one occupying a position as judge yields to the legislative and executive construction of the constitution, giving his office to another until the question can be settled by the courts does not operate as an abandonment or forfeiture of his office.[81] So it has been held that a probate judge does not forfeit his office by failure to perform duties which are separate and distinct from his judicial duties.[82]

VI. RIGHTS, POWERS, DUTIES, AND LIABILITIES.

A. In General.[83] A justice of the supreme court of the United States is entitled to personal protection while he is in discharge of his official duties.[84] Irrespective of any positive prohibition by statute or otherwise, a judge is exempt from arrest[85] and from the service of civil process[86] while necessarily going to, staying at, and returning from the court.[87] A judge cannot act as attorney or counsel in a case pending before him,[88] or before the court of which he is a member,[89] and in some states, usually by constitutional or statutory provision, further by the statute because of a mistake on his part as to the proper official oath to be taken, but soon thereafter took and subscribed the proper oath and filed it in the proper office before the office had been declared vacant, or any other right or title had intervened, such failure did not of itself forfeit the office. Duffy v. State, 60 Nebr. 812, 84 N. W. 264.

Where a person presents his official bond for approval within the time fixed by law, and because of the failure of the approving body to meet or by reason of no action or any other right or title had accrued he would not thereby forfeit the office as this would not amount to a refusal to take the constitutional oath within the meaning of the word there used. 89. Gallagher v. Kern, 31 Mich. 138 (holding that the statute prohibiting any judge from practising or from having a partner who practises in the court of which he is a judge is peremptory, and applies to arbitration proceedings as well as to others); Bashford v. People, 24 Mich. 244 (holding that the statute which forbids a judge to appear in a criminal proceeding as the assistant of the district attorney after having called another judge to hold the court and preside at the trial is imperative, and its operation is not affected by the fact that such judge has sent in his resignation, to take effect five days thereafter, and that he intends to act no more officially).

Right to appear as attorney when interested.— Under 3 N. Y. Rev. St. (5th ed.) §§ 4, 9, prohibiting a justice of the supreme court from practising in it, except where he is interested in the subject-matter of the proceeding, a justice who is a judgment creditor of an insolvent corporation for which a receiver has been appointed may act in procuring directions to the receiver in selling the property of the corporation. Libby v. Rosekranz, 55 Barb. (N. Y.) 202.

Right to appear as attorney in another county or circuit.— Under Ill. Rev. St. c. 13, § 10, which declares that no judge of any court of record shall be permitted to practise as an attorney in the court in which he presides, a county judge is not necessarily disqualified from practising as an attorney in the county court of another county, even though he has presided in that court in particular cases at the request of the judge of such other county. O'Hare v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 139 Ill. 151, 28 N. E. 923. The right of a circuit judge to practise in circuits other than his own was questioned in People v. Evans, 72 Mich. 367, 40 N. W. 473, and to settle the question a statute was enacted permitting such judges so to practise. Morton v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 81 Mich. 423, 46 N. W. 111, holding that under Howell Annot. St. Mich. § 7247, as amended by Pub. Acts (1889), p. 210, providing that no judge can practise in the circuit of which he has been elected judge, a judge can practise in other circuits, although he may have presided as judge in the latter.

Right of deputy judge to appear as attorney.— Appearance of a deputy judge of the court as attorney in a case pending in the court, while not professional, is not ground for reversal, since, he being an attorney of the court, it had no power to prevent him from acting as attorney in the case. French v. Waterbury, 72 Conn. 435, 44 Atl. 740.

90. In Arkansas, Const. art. 7, § 25, prohibiting a judge of the circuit court from appearing as counsel during his term of office, applies to one who, before he was elected judge, accepted a fee in a case and contracted to conduct it. Wood v. Keith, 60 Ark. 425, 30 S. W. 756.

In Florida, where an attorney becomes a judge of a circuit court, his right to practise in any of the courts of the state, including the supreme court, becomes suspended and continues so while he occupies the official position, except where he is in propria persona a party in the cause, and then his appearance should be to represent his individual interest exclusively. Perry v. Bush, 46 Fla. 242, 35 So. 225.

In Georgia, when a case has been tried before a mayor and appealed to the council, it is improper for the mayor to appear in the attitude of counsel for the municipality. Holliman v. Hawkinsville, 109 Ga. 107, 34 S. E. 214. So the ordinary of a county having jurisdiction of an administration is incompetent as an attorney to bring suit on the bond of the administrator (Smith v. Andrews, 70 Ga. 708); and since he may be called on to construe wills, an opinion as to one is upon "a matter connected with his court," and the statute prohibits him or his partner from acting as counsel in such a case (Massey v. Calhoun, 26 Ga. 127).

In Illinois, under Rev. St. c. 13, § 10, which declares that no "judge of any court of record, shall be permitted to practice as an attorney or counsellor at law in the court in which he presides," a probate judge cannot act as counsel in a suit in the circuit court to set aside a will which has been probated before him. Evans v. Funk, 151 Ill. 650, 38 N. E. 230 [affirming 38 Ill. App. 441]. However, the constitutional provision that "from and after the adoption of this constitution, no judge of the Supreme or circuit court shall receive any other compensation, perquisite or benefit, in any form whatsoever, nor perform any other than judicial duties to which may belong any emoluments" (Const. (1870) art. 6, § 16; 1 Starr & C. Annot. St. p. 133), does not prohibit a judge of the supreme court from rendering services as an attorney in the federal courts under a private contract for compensation. Bruce v. Dickey, 116 Ill. 527, 6 N. E. 435.

In New York it was formerly held that a circuit judge could not appear as counsel in the court of errors (Seymour v. Ellison, 2 Cow. 13) or the supreme court (Hobby v. Smith, 1 Cow. 588); and now, since Const. art. 6, § 20, forbidding a surrogate to practise as an attorney in any court of record, ipso facto suspends him from practice on his election, an order of the supreme court suspending him generally from practice is superfluous (Matter of Silkman, 88 N. Y. App. Div. 102, 84 N. Y. Suppl. 1025). However, the fact that plaintiff's former counsel, who had been appointed judge, appeared as a witness in an inquisition and assessment of damages was not ground for setting aside the assessment, since it was not a participation in the trial forbidden by the statutory prohibition against such magistrate's practising law. Beecher v. Long Island R. Co., 53 N. Y. App. Div. 324, 65 N. Y. Suppl. 642.

In Ohio, Rev. St. § 562, providing that "no person shall practice as an attorney and counselor at law in any court . . . who holds a commission as judge of any court of record," does not apply to one who has received a commission to act as judge for the term for which he was elected but whose term of office has not yet begun. State v. Hidy, 61 Ohio St. 549, 56 N. E. 469.

In Pennsylvania the word "attorney," as used in Act May 25, 1887 (Pamphl. Laws 271), which requires the declaration or statement of a claim to be filed by plaintiff or his "attorney," means attorney at law and not attorney in fact. But an attorney's right to practise does not cease on his mere appointment to a judicial office, but only when he actually assumes the office and subscribes to the oath, so that he may, before the latter time, properly sign a client's statement of claim under said act, and file the statement thereafter. Kelly v. Herb, 147 Pa. St. 563, 23 Atl. 889.

In Wisconsin, Rev. St. (1898) § 2582, prohibits a judge of a circuit court from acting as attorney in any matter which he has reason to believe will be brought before any of the courts of the state, but prohibits county judges only from giving advice to litigants in any matter pending before them, or which may be brought before them for decision, etc. Section 2452 declares that county judges shall not be retained as attorney or counsel in any matter which may judge shall hold any other office during his incumbency;[91] but in the absence of such a prohibition a judge may hold another office.[92] A judge of probate cannot sue for the correction or prevention of public abuse committed or threatened by other officers or individuals;[93] but he may sue on the bond of his predecessor, who has failed to account for moneys in his hands officially.[94]

B. Compensation[95]— 1. In General. In the United States the right of judges to receive compensation for their services is fixed by constitutional provision of statutory enactment, and the compensation may consist of a salary or the fees or the office.[96] A statute prescribing and regulating the salaries or fees of judges may operate as well on the judges in office at the time of its passage as on those depend on or relate to any judgment made by them, and shall not act as attorney or counsel for any executor, administrator, etc. It was held that such sections do not prohibit a county judge who was an attorney at law from being appointed to assist the district attorney in the prosecution of a person charged with homicide. Bliss v. State, 117 Wis. 596, 94 N. W. 325.

91. See the constitutions and statutes of the different states.

Who are "judges" within the prohibition. — N. Y. Const. art. 6, § 21, prohibiting "judicial officers," except justices of the peace, from receiving to their own use any fees or perquisites of office, while it prohibits a judge of the court of appeals from acting as a referee, does not so prohibit a commissioner of appeals, since the latter is not a member of the court of appeals. Settle v. Van Evrea, 49 N. Y. 280. A city recorder is not such a judge as is prohibited by the constitution from holding at the same time an office of trust or profit under the United States. Respublica v. Dallas, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 300; Com. v. Dallas, 4 Dall. (Pa.) 229, 1 L. ed. 812.

What is "another office" within the prohibition.— A judge cannot hold that office and also accept the office of member of the legislature (Com. v. Hawkes, 123 Mass. 525; State v. Draper, 45 Mo. 355), notary public (Old Dominion Bldg., etc., Assoc. v. Sohn, 54 W. Va. 101, 46 S. E. 222), postmaster (Hoglan v. Carpenter, 4 Bush (Ky.) 89), recorder (Com. v. Conyngham, 65 Pa. St. 76, 3 Brewst. 214), or referee (Countryman v. Norton, 21 Hun (N. Y.) 17, holding also that the fact that the trial of an action upon a claim against an estate had been commenced before the person acting as referee was appointed a justice of the supreme court, and that he made no charge for his services did not relieve him from the prohibition). However, the appointment of a judge of the supreme court as a "deputy recruiting commissioner" or his election to the colonelcy of a regiment of volunteers is not within the constitutional inhibition, neither of those offices being known to the law. State v. Cobb, 2 Kan. 32. And where a statute provided for the appropriation to purchase certain relics to be paid only upon the certificate of three persons named therein, an appointment upon such committee was not an "office or public trust" within N. Y. Const. art. 6, § 10, providing that a judge of the court of appeals should not hold any other office or public trust. People v. Nichols, 52 N. Y. 478, 11 Am. Rep. 734. So the offices of justice of the peace and judge of the common pleas are not incompatible. Com. v. Northumberland County, 4 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 275.

3. Forfeiture and Waiver.[2] A judge may forfeit his right to salary by neglecting to claim it for an unreasonable length of time after the services are rendered.[3] And if he voluntarily surrenders his office to another claiming title thereto under color of right and suffers such other person to discharge the duties and receive the salary of the office so as to become a judge de facto, he thereby forfeits his right to such salary.[4] A judge may also forfeit his salary by accepting another office, if by such acceptance he vacates the office of judge.[5] But a judge does not waive his right to the full amount of the salary to which he is entitled by merely accepting without protest a less amount.[6] It has been held that where a county judge has the right on appeal of probate matters to the district court to the prepayment of his fees, he may waive the right by establishing a regular method of collection in a different manner.[7]

4. When Payable. Ordinarily the salary of a judge is not payable until he has been elected or appointed and received his commission, and has qualified.[8] Sometimes judges are prohibited from drawing their salaries so long as cases that have been submitted to them for decision for ninety days remain undecided.[9]

5. De Facto and De Jure Judges. If the incumbent is in possession of the office under a certificate of election issued by the proper authority he is entitled to receive the compensation incident to the office, although his right to the office is being contested.[10] And the payment of the salary to a de facto judge is a defense to an action brought against the state by a judge de jure to recover the same salary.[11]

6. Effect of Suspension. When a judge has been lawfully suspended from office he is not entitled to the compensation incident to the office during the period of his suspension.[12]

certain judges are paid partly out of the state treasury and partly out of the funds of the counties in which they preside.[14] In some states county judges can be paid only out of fees actually collected.[15]

8. Appropriations. Where the salaries of judges are paid by the state, an appropriation by the legislature of the necessary funds is usually required before the salaries can be drawn.[16]

9. Amount. As a rule the authority to fix the amount of compensation to be paid judicial officers is vested by constitution in the legislature,[17] and congress and the legislatures of the different states have enacted laws determining what such compensation shall be.[18] Occasionally the constitution itself fixes the amount,[19] or establishes a limit beyond which compensation cannot be allowed.[20] The authority to fix the compensation of judges who are county or city officers is usually vested in the county or city.[21]

10. Right as Dependent on Performance of Duties. Where the law provides that a judge shall receive a fixed compensation, his right thereto is not dependent upon the manner in which he discharges his official duties; the compensation is an incident to the office and is not measured by the services he performs.[22] In some states, however, the legislature has authorized a deduction from the salary

11. EXTRA COMPENSATION. While extra duties may with some exceptions[24] be imposed upon judges by law without providing additional compensation therefor,[25] there is no good reason why in addition to the fixed salary provided by law the legislature may not in its discretion annex a compensation to a special judicial service when from its temporary or occasional nature or other circumstances it would be impolitic to increase the permanent salary.[26] Provisions of this character are found in the acts of congress[27] and in the statutes of many of the states.[28] It has been held that the right of a judge to extra compensation cannot be determined in a proceeding to test his right to the office brought by a claimant who has no interest in the extra compensation.[29]

U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 714 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 578], provides that a federal judge who resigns after reaching the age of seventy and after holding his commission for ten years shall receive during the remainder of his life the salary to which he was entitled at the time of his resignation. A federal judge who so retires is entitled thereafter only to the amount which was payable to him at the date of his resignation, although congress has previously appropriated more than the amount of the salary of the office and subsequently appropriates more for the same fiscal year in which he resigns. James v. U. S., 38 Ct. Cl. 615. And he is not entitled after resignation to receive an additional allowance made to him before his resignation for holding terms of court in a district other than his own, although he may for many years have held such term, as this allowance was uncertain and contingent and does not enter into the amount of his retired pay. App. 55, 78 Pac. 155, holding that a county judge in Colorado is not entitled to compensation from the county for time, work, and money expended in defending the jurisdiction of the county court in the district court.

In Idaho the constitution permits the probate judge to appoint a clerk or to act as his own clerk but limits the amount of fees which he may retain for his services; and if he appoints a clerk the aggregate fees and commissions of himself and clerk cannot exceed the amount limited by the constitution. Ada County v. Ryals, 4 Ida. 365, 39 Pac. 556.

In Montana whenever a court is appointed by the supreme court to be held in any county the chief justice or associate justice is allowed mileage at the rate of twenty cents per mile in going to and returning from the place where court is held. This allowance is intended to cover not only the expense of traveling, but also of living while holding the court. Power v. Choteau County, 7 Mont. 82, 14 Pac. 658.

In Nevada the statute allowing district judges, in addition to their salaries, traveling expenses in going to and returning from the place of holding court does not contravene the constitutional provision prohibiting the judges from receiving "any fees or perquisites of office." State v. Atherton, 19 Nev. 332, 10 Pac. 901.

In New York justices of the supreme court from districts other than the first are allowed compensation for their expenses and disbursements while holding court in the first department of that district, the compensation being payable by the city of New York. Accounting for fees.— The statute which requires the judges of the probate court to make out an account of their fees before they are collectable does not require the keeping of an itemized account of official services. Dean v. Witherington, 116 Ala. 573, 22 So. 869. A statute requiring county judges to pay into the county treasury fees received in excess of a certain sum does not contravene a constitutional provision requiring revenue to be provided by a tax according to valuation, the purpose of such a statute being to limit the judge's compensation and not to raise revenue. Kansas.— Camphell v. Labette Co., 63 Kan. 377, 65 Pac. 679, holding that probate judges are entitled to receive only such fees as the legislature may deem proper compensation for their services, and are not entitled to all fees which the law allows them to collect.

Ohio.— State v. Judges First Judicial Dist. Ct. of C. Pl., 21 Ohio St. 1; Millard v. Conrade, 26 Ohio Cir. A judge has no power in this state to grant (Seymour v. Farquhar, 95 Ala. 527, 10 So. 650) or dismiss (Ex p. Farquhar, 99 Ala. 375, 11 So. 913) a petition for the rehearing of a case as that power resides in the court alone; but if the petition is pending he may grant a supersedeas (Ex p. Farquhar, supra).

California.— Sanford v. Head, 5 Cal. 297, holding that under the former constitution of California clothing the district courts with original jurisdiction in law and equity where over two hundred dollars is involved, the district judge, while sitting in an equity cause, was possessed of all the powers of a court of chancery.

Louisiana.— It has been held in this state that a district judge has no power to employ experts to examine and report on the pleadings and evidence in a case and charge the expense of the examination to an estate under the control of the court, and that such an act amounts to malfeasance on the part of the judge. Mississippi.— Buckley v. George, 71 Miss. 580, 15 So. 46, holding that a judge of the supreme court may grant a supersedeas on an appeal from an order appointing receivers when the chancellor appointing the receivers has refused to grant it.

Missouri.— Voullaire v. Voullaire, 45 Mo. 602, holding that it is the duty of a judge who tries a case to hear the motion for a new trial, and that he cannot refuse to hear the motion or transfer the case and motion to another judge for final disposition.

New York.—Merritt v. Slocum, 1 Code Rep. 68, holding that the code conferred no power on a county judge to hear a motion pending in the supreme court. The judges of the court of common pleas of New York were county judges within the meaning of the act of 1860, "to secure creditors a just division of the estate of debtors who conveyed to assignees" and rightfully exercised the jurisdiction conferred by that act and the amendments thereto. In re Morgan, 56 N. But the supreme court of Ohio in 1838 in construing the New York statute adopted the contrary view and held that such a discharge made in New York was invalid. Utica Bank v. Card, 8 Ohio 519.

North Carolina.— A superior court judge has no authority to vacate injunctions or set aside attachments except in causes pending in his own district. Bear v. Cohen, 65 N. C. 511.

Ohio.— Harris v. Gest, 4 Ohio St. 469, holding that the jurisdiction of a judge of the court of common pleas in Ohio is coextensive with the district and not limited to any particular subdivision thereof.

Pennsylvania.— In this state a judge of the supreme court may grant a stay of execution, incidental to a rule to show cause why a non pros. should not be taken off. Lebanon Mut. Ins. within the precincts of his court as may disturb the administration of justice, and may to this end barricade a street if necessary.[45]

b. When Acting Individually and Not as a Court. It was held in Iowa that the county judge could exercise all the powers of the county court and that the judge and the court were one and the same thing.[46] But in Kentucky it was held that the civil code gave the county judge no powers except while holding a quarterly court.[47] And in Alabama the power to grant or dismiss a petition for a rehearing is in the court and not in the judge individually.[48] The statute of Ohio of 1838 which authorized the supreme court to direct a county attorney to file an information in the nature of a quo warranto did not authorize the judges of that court to make such direction in their individual capacity.[49] In Mississippi where a statute requires a duty to be performed by the judge of a court which is composed of only one judge, it is sufficient that the duty be performed by the court and not by the judge as an individual.[50] In Texas a county judge has authority to approve certain official bonds and the fact that he approves such a bond in open commissioner's court does not make the approval the act of the court instead of the act of the judge.[51]

c. Deciding Case in Limited Time. The constitution of Washington requires a judge of the superior court to decide every case submitted to him within ninety days from the date of its final submission, but his failure to do so does not render a judgment void for want of jurisdiction.[52]

d. Initiating Proceedings. A judge may of his own motion initiate an investigation for the correction of evils in the administration of justice, but he must proceed in an orderly and judicial manner, such as calling the attention of the grand jury to the matter, directing the district attorney to investigate, or, if the latter is interested, appointing a special prosecutor pro hac vice, or a commissioner with defined powers of inquiry, or conducting an open investigation himself at the proper time when a particular case is judicially before him.[53]

e. Participating in Decision When Absent During Argument. In Louisiana a judge of the supreme court may participate in a decision, although absent from the bench at the time of the oral argument;[54] and the same is true of a judge of the appellate division of the supreme court of New York, the other supreme court judges only being forbidden so to do by statute.[55]

f. Ex Officio Powers and Duties.[56] The parish judge in Louisiana exercised the powers of two courts, being presiding judge of the parish court and ex officio judge of the probate court, and it was therefore necessary when a suit was instituted before him that it should appear in what capacity he acted.[57] In Pennsylvania the judges of the supreme court in 1800 were ex officio justices of the peace and had power to take recognizances for good behavior.[58] The duties of an ordinary in Georgia are of a dual nature, he being both judge and clerk of the court of ordinary.[59]

g. Discretionary Powers. A judge before whom an issue of fact is to be tried has authority to determine which jury shall try the case, to excuse jurors when he thinks proper, to call a juror from one jury to serve on another at his discretion, and to discharge the jury at his pleasure when it cannot agree. These are matters within his discretion and it is doubtful if they can be reviewed on appeal.[60] In New Hampshire a justice presiding at nisi prius may in his discretion upon a proper case-made, suspend any of the rules of court and his action will not ordinarily be subject to review at the law term.[61] It was discretionary with a judge of the supreme court of Massachusetts who tried a case in 1830, whether he would report it to the full court, and if he refused to do so the full court could not interfere.[62] In Nevada district judges have the inherent power independent of any statute to adopt such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the proper disposition of the business of their courts.[63] A judge of the supreme court in New York holding a special term and a circuit at the same time may, if he deems it necessary, hear an application to determine the rights of parties aggrieved by a corporate election, although a rule of the supreme court provides that a contested motion shall not be heard at such a term.[64] In South Carolina a judge may in his discretion request a jury to reconsider their verdict, but he is not bound to do so at the request of counsel.[65] A judge has no right to decline to try a cause within his jurisdiction on the ground that it seeks the enforcement of an unjust law.[66]

h. Selecting Presiding Judge, Assigning Judges, and Fixing Terms of Court. In Nevada district judges are authorized by statute to select one of their number as presiding judge.[67] In New York any three justices of the supreme court may designate one of their number to preside in the absence of the presiding judge and the one so designated may, if deemed expedient, preside during the whole term, although the absent justice returns during the term.[68] Under the provisions of the constitution and code of that state the justices of the appellate division of the supreme court in each department may fix the times and places for holding special and trial terms therein and may assign the justices of the department to hold such terms, but they have no power under these provisions to assign justices outside their own department to hold terms therein. If, however, such an assignment is made it is an invitation which may be declined or accepted, and if accepted the designated judge has jurisdiction to hold the term provided he is not a member of an appellate division of another department.[69] In Pennsylvania the courts of common pleas have full control of the assignment of the judge or judges to hold the court of quarter sessions and need not consult the wishes of the public or of suitors. Judges so assigned have full authority to try any case within the jurisdiction of that court.[70] In Virginia the court of appeals had power to transfer a case pending in the district court of appeals to a circuit court, and when a case was so transferred, it was the duty of the judge of the circuit court to hear and determine the case and he could be compelled by mandamus from the supreme court of appeals to do so.[71] In Alabama judges of the circuit court had the power to hold successive courts in any of the counties of their respective circuits and the early statute of that state relative to the alternation of the judges was held to be merely directory.[72]

69. People v. Herrmann, 149 N. Y. 190, 43 N. E. 546. The constitution of New York authorizes the designation of judges of the superior and common pleas courts to hold circuits and special terms of the supreme court, and a judge so designated is clothed by statute with all the powers of a supreme court justice. It has been held by the court of appeals of that state that if an application has been made to a judge of the superior court sitting as such justice, and after hearing and submission he resigns from the superior court and is appointed a supreme court justice, he loses jurisdiction of the application. In re New York, 139 N. Y. 140, 34 N. E. 757 [affirming 69 Hun 270, 23 N. Y. Suppl. 532].

i. Instructing Jury. A county judge in Nebraska has no right to instruct a jury and it is error for him to do so.[73]

j. Presumption That Judge Acts Within His Powers. It has been decided in New York that where a petition was addressed to a county judge and not to the county court, and an order was signed by the judge, it would be assumed that the judge acted in the capacity in which he was called on to act, although the caption of the order recited that it was in the county court.[74] And in Colorado it was held that when a district judge holds a term of court outside his own district, his authority so to do and to try the causes pending in such court will be presumed unless the contrary appears.[75]

k. Judicial and Ministerial Functions. Judges may be required or authorized by law to discharge ministerial as well as judicial duties,[76] and ministerial acts performed by them do not become judicial because performed by a judicial officer.[77] Such duties, not being inherent, must be performed in strict accordance with the statute.[78] Among the ministerial duties which have been required or authorized by law to be performed by judges are the selection of jurors,[79] custody of records,[80] acting as clerk of his court,[81] administering oaths,[82] and taking affidavits,[83] depositions,[84] or acknowledgments,[85] issuing county orders or warrants,[86] appointment of police commissioners of a city[87] or other officers,[88] entering of public lands for town sites and awarding town lots to citizens,[89] awarding of contracts for the publication of advertisements[90] or the erection of a bridge,[91] the powers of notaries public,[92] and the designation of the number of deputies of certain officers.[93] It was held in New York that an order taken by default is not a judicial decision, such orders being taken as a matter of course.[94] But the refusal to approve a probate judge's bond[95] making orders in proceedings supplementary to executions[96] and taking evidence of the refusal of the Bank of the United States to pay in gold or silver its promissory notes and determine the facts[97] have been declared judicial functions. A judge has the inherent power to administer oaths to witnesses in his court, although the statute does not specifically authorize it.[98]

l. Coördinate Judges — (i) Coördinate Jurisdiction. The supreme court of the United States has decided that the acts of congress providing that in each district of the territory of New Mexico court shall be held by "one of the justices of the supreme court," and that each judge shall reside in the district to which he is assigned, do not, in case the judge of a district is disqualified, prevent the discharge of judicial duties for such district by the judge of another district.[99] The additional judge for the Indian Territory appointed under the act of June 7, 1897, is directed by the act to hold court at such places as shall be designated by the appellate court and he is given the same authority, powers, and salary and charged with the same duties as the other judges of the territory. While holding a term of court under an assignment from the appellate court he has the same power to call and hold a special session to dispose of unfinished business after the close of the regular term as the judge of the district would have.[1] The constitution of North Carolina providing that the judges of the supreme court shall preside in the courts of the different districts successively but that no judge shall hold the courts in the same district oftener than once in four years does not forbid legislation authorizing one judge to hold one or more regular terms of the superior

Appointment of assistant prosecuting attorney by "senior judge."— Under the act of the legislature of Ohio of April 2, 1882, the senior judge of the court of common pleas was authorized to appoint an assistant prosecuting attorney in Lucas county. court by exchange with some other judge with the governor's sanction, or the appointment by the governor of a judge to hold special terms of that court.[2]

(II) Jurisdiction of One Judge Over Cause Pending Before Another. As a rule if a judge of a district is presiding over his own court the judge of another district has no jurisdiction to make an order in a matter pending in the former's court.[3] In case of the absence, sickness, or disability of the judge to whom a cause is assigned, any other of the judges of the civil district court of New Orleans, Louisiana, may issue interlocutory orders or conservatory writs in the cause;[4] but only the judge to whom the case is assigned has power to render a judgment on the merits.[5] When a case has been tried before the judge of another district in Nevada the regular district judge may approve an undertaking in an application for a stay of execution on a motion for a new trial unless disqualified.[6] It was held in New York in 1857 that a proceeding commenced in the first judicial district before one of the judges of the district might be continued before any other judge of the same district competent to have commenced it.[7] In a later case in the same state where an interlocutory decree of foreclosure had been made by a court and the judge had ordered a reference without awarding costs, a judgment for costs afterward entered by another judge upon the referee's report was adjudged to be valid.[8] A judge cannot review and modify or reverse the orders of another judge of coördinate jurisdiction.[9]

(III) Power to Review, Modify, or Rescind Decision of Coördinate Judge. As a general rule a judge has no power to review on the same facts the decision of a coördinate judge, the remedy being by appeal alone.[10] In some

A regular judge has no power to sign a bill of exceptions in a case tried before a special judge. Cowall v. Altchul, 40 Ark. 172; Bement v. May, 135 Ind. 664, 34 N. E. 327, 35 N. E. 387; Lee v. Hills, 66 Ind. 474, holding that where certain preliminary proceedings in a case were had before the regular judge, and thereafter, on change of venue, a special judge tried the case, the bill of exceptions must be signed by the special judge.

Exceptions and limitations on rule.— It has been held, however, that where a decree of foreclosure has been granted by a substitute judge, the regular judge being interested, a subsequent application for the appointment of a receiver is in effect a new suit in which the regular judge is authorized to appoint a new judge, although the first appointment has substitute judge fails to appear,[17] or resigns,[18] or unless his term of office expires.[19] Where a superior court judge undertook to preside in a case pending in the city court, which the judge thereof was qualified to try, the trial was held to be a nullity, although the city court judge was at the time presiding in the superior court in the trial of a case which the superior court judge was disqualified to try.[20]

c. Duty of Judge on Expiration of Term Concerning Property of Office. It is the duty of a judicial officer upon the expiration of his term to surrender to his successor the property of the office which the law commits to his custody. The title to such property is not personal but resides in the public and he is merely its custodian during his continuance in office. The duty is merely ministerial and may be enforced by mandamus,[21] and the person holding the certificate of election being prima facie the officer is prima facie entitled to the records of the office in advance of the result of an election contest.[22]

2. Powers at Chambers or in Vacation[1] — a. At Common Law and Under Early English Statutes. Where the law authorizes or contemplates the doing of a judicial act, it is understood to mean that the court in term-time may do it and the judge in vacation cannot, without express authority, act therein.[2] While the foregoing is a general rule, it is evident that rules designed for the protection of rights would be of no avail, if judges were deprived of all power at any other time than during court. As a consequence at a very early period judges assumed the right to exercise judicial power at chambers and in vacation, which in their estimation was conducive to the furtherance of the business of the court without special interference with the right of any litigant.[3] At the common law the judges exercised at chambers and in vacation only a limited power, such as ordinarily was conducive to the facilities of business actually pending in court, and this power they exercised independent of any statute.[4] Rules and orders so made by the

W. 330); that where a regular judge has made an order reciting his own disability based on an insufficient affidavit, and has given way to a special judge, this will not prevent him from reassuming jurisdiction before the special judge has acted (Russell v. Russell, 12 S. W. 709, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 547); that where a defendant has been indicted and a special judge appointed to try the case, and before trial a new indictment is found, the regular judge has authority to quash the first indictment, and defendant may then be tried by the special judge upon the substitute indictment (Ex p. Clay, 98 Mo. 578, 11 S. W. 998); that an order for time to plead made by the recorder of New York in the absence of the circuit judge might be revoked by the latter on his return (Brown v. St. John, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 617); that where a default was taken in a district court before a substitute justice, the regular justice had power thereafter to open and excuse the default (People v. Campbell, 18 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 1); and that the fact that a substitute judge comes into the district and tries a case under special assignment while the regular judge of the district is holding court in the county at the same time does not oust the latter of jurisdiction (Williams v. Struss, 4 Okla. 160, 44 Pac. 273).

judge out of term were not effective until they had been made rules of the court in term-time, and until that was done an attachment for the violation thereof could not be issued.[5] Under early English statutes, which became a part of the common law of the United States, judges were enabled to exercise powers which they had not theretofore assumed, such as the ordering of attorneys to pay over moneys received in a pending suit; the production of documents; the compelling of a sheriff to return process; the rule on omissions from process or copy or indorsements thereon; to grant habeas corpus; to bail a person in custody on civil process; to hear justification of bail; to grant or refuse costs;[6] to grant a review by jurors;[7] to compel plaintiff to accept a plea or stay of proceedings in an action of ejectment;[8] to grant a change of venue;[9] to hear motions and petitions and to make rules and orders thereon.[10]

b. Under Constitutional and Modern Statutory Provisions. In the United States the powers of judges at chambers have been enlarged by constitution and statute, and in Canada by statute; and in the determination of the power of a judge at chambers or in vacation it would be well to consult always the local constitution and statutes.[11] In the absence of constitutional inhibition, the legislature may confer upon judges the power to perform judicial acts in vacation or at chambers;[12] but exclusive of those powers which judges exercised at common law at chambers and in vacation, a judge can exercise only such judicial functions as are expressly authorized by constitution or statute,[13] and he must act with due regard for the limits thereof, for if he exceeds them his acts will be void.[14] But the courts will not read into the enabling statute limitations and restrictions not expressed therein,[15] and they are powerless to adopt any rules limiting the exercise of the powers conferred by statute.[16] Where the court is made up of several divisions presided over by separate judges, the legislature may invest each judge with all the powers of the court to be exercised in vacation,[17] and may confer upon inferior judges the vacation powers which superior judges are authorized to exercise.[18] And the judges may exercise such power, notwithstanding the application might have been made to a superior judge.[19] Where the constitution does not prescribe the contrary, its provisions or those of a statute conferring judicial powers do not abrogate any of the power exercised at chambers by the judges, prior to its adoption, and under the common law.[20] And a statute providing that courts shall always be open for certain purposes does not repeal statutes conferring on judges certain powers to be exercised in vacation or at chambers.[21] Statutes conferring powers to be exercised in vacation do not apply to suits pending at the time of their adoption,[22] nor to cases not expressly mentioned therein.[23] If a statute confers power on a court, as distinct from a judge, to hear proceedings at vacation or at chambers, the judge has no jurisdiction to entertain such matters.[24] A judge sitting in court may treat the court-room as his chambers and dispose of chambers business therein.[25] He cannot compel a party to go out of the county of his residence where the cause is pending to appear before him at chambers in another county.[26]

c. Under Stipulations of Parties.[27] In some jurisdictions it is provided that by stipulation of the parties a judge may exercise at chambers powers conferred on him to be exercised in open court, and the parties will be bound by his acts.[28] While acting under a stipulation authorizing him to perform certain duties in vacation, he must comply strictly with the terms of the stipulation or his acts will be void;[29] and where by stipulation he may alter the time and place for hearing a motion, a special judge, holding court in his stead at the time and place named, has no authority to continue the motion;[30] but an order of continuance by the original trial judge is valid.[31] According to the weight of authority powers conferred on a court cannot be exercised by a judge in vacation even by consent of parties unless a statute so provides,[32] although there are some decisions to the contrary.[33]

a statute confers upon an inferior judge the powers which a superior judge may exercise in vacation, he is not vested thereby with any power which the latter may exercise by reason of any other office than that of judge (Dooley's Case, 8 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 188), and is invested only with the powers which the latter exercised at common law (De Myer v. McGonegal, 32 Mich. 120; In re Kindling, 39 Wis. 35; In re Remington, 7 Wis. 643; Conroe v. Bull, 7 Wis. 408. d. Powers in Particular Matters[34] — (I) ADMIRALTY PROCEEDINGS. A judge at chambers may, when and only when expressly authorized by statute, issue on a lien a warrant for the seizure of a vessel,[35] or make an order for the release of a vessel libeled for the breach of the embargo laws.[36]

(II) APPEALS. A judge of a United States circuit court, sitting at chambers, has power to allow a writ of error;[37] but a judge of a state court has no power to grant a writ of error in a criminal case,[38] or an appeal from an interlocutory decree,[39] or to hear an appeal from a justice's court,[40] or extend the time for filing an appeal-bond.[41] And he cannot, under authority to determine an appeal in vacation, decide upon the sufficiency of the appeal-bond.[42] So a clerk of the crown and pleas, acting as judge at chambers, cannot entertain an appeal from the report of a county judge as referee,[43] or hear an application for appeal from a judgment rendered on an affirmed report of a referee.[44] But a judge of the high court can hear at chambers appeals from a master in chambers without regard to whether the case is pending in the common pleas, king's bench, or chancery division.[45]

(III) ATTACHMENTS. The writ of attachment was unknown to the common law and no one had power to issue it unless specially authorized.[46] But in several jurisdictions the power has been expressly conferred by statute upon a judge out of court to issue the writ,[47] or to dissolve or vacate an existing one;[48] but in the absence of express authority a writ of attachment, or an order vacating or dissolving one,[49] or a final judgment rendered in an attachment proceeding,[50] is erroneous if granted by a judge in vacation or at chambers.

(iv) Bills of Exceptions and Case. A judge has no authority to allow and sign a bill of exceptions in vacation,[51] or extend the time for signing it,[52] even after notice;[53] and after the time for sealing a bill of exceptions has expired, a judge cannot be authorized to seal it, even by consent of the parties.[54] A judge cannot in vacation amend a bill of exceptions,[55] or order exceptions to findings, or refusal to find, to be stricken from the judgment-roll or case on appeal,[56] or order a bill of exceptions stricken from the record,[57] or fix a time for the signing of the bill other than that at which he is presiding over his court.[58] But it has been held that a bill of exceptions presented and allowed within the proper time may be signed by the judge in vacation.[59] So too a judge in vacation may enlarge the time for making a case, proposing amendments, and for giving notice of an appearance before the judge, provided the time originally allowed has not expired; and after the expiration of the time he may grant an order staying proceedings until the motion can be made to the court.[60]

(v) Change of Venue. Under some statutes a judge at chambers or in vacation may grant a change of venue;[61] but no such power exists independent of statute.[62]

(vi) Costs and Attorney's Fees. A judge at chambers cannot hear an application for costs,[63] set aside an allowance of costs,[64] make an extra allowance of costs,[65] materially alter a judgment for costs after action has been taken thereon,[66] decide as to the costs of a demurrer,[67] grant costs of motion,[68] retax costs,[69] or allow attorney's fees against an insolvent estate.[70] It has been held, however, that a judge may order a clerk to refund costs improperly collected.[71]

such statutory or constitutional authority, a judge at chambers[78] or in vacation[79] may not issue an injunction. A judge of one court has no power to grant in vacation or at chambers an injunction in a cause pending in another court,[80] unless he be expressly vested with such power by statute.[81] And when a judge is vested by statute or constitution merely with the power to issue an injunction in an action pending in another court, such judge may grant an injunction in an action pending outside his own judicial district only when the office of judge in such outside district is vacant, or when it is shown that the judge of that district is absent or unable to act.[82]

(B) Dissolution or Modification. Where a judge in vacation or at chambers is vested with power to issue an injunction, he is also generally expressly vested with the power to modify or dissolve it.[83] And the rule is that where only the power to grant an injunction is expressly conferred, such power carries with it the power to dissolve and modify it, the latter being incident to the former.[84] Unless express authority be found in the statute, a judge cannot, at chambers, or in vacation, on the dissolution of an injunction, dismiss the bill.[85]

(IX) JUDGMENTS. According to the weight of authority, unless there is special statutory authority therefor a judge has no power to render a judgment or decree at chambers or in vacation,[86] except in pursuance of an order made in term-time.[87] Under the statutes of some jurisdictions a judge may by consent of parties render a decree,[88] or a judgment in vacation.[89] And according to some decisions a judgment or decree may be rendered in vacation on consent or stipulation of the parties in the absence of statutory authority.[90] The weight of authority, however, is to the contrary,[91] the view being taken that the objection to the judgment is jurisdictional and cannot be removed by stipulation.[92] A judge cannot order the clerk to enter nunc pro tunc an order alleged to have been made in open court,[93] or materially change a judgment or decree;[94] but, he may correct clerical errors and misprisions in proceedings which are apparent on the record,[95] and may sign in vacation an order announced orally in open court where the delay was due to his act.[96] He has no power to vacate a judgment.[97]

Setting aside a default judgment.— According to some of the Canadian decisions a judge or a master in chambers has authority to reconsider a matter which has been brought before him ex parte, on the application of the opposing party, and he can open up a default where satisfied that a defense was intended, and injustice has been done. (x) Mandamus. In the absence of special statute conferring authority, a judge has no power in vacation or at chambers to grant writs of mandamus, whether peremptory[98] or alternative.[99] However, judges are generally vested by statute with jurisdiction or authority to issue, or direct the issuance, of alternative writs of mandamus,[1] which may or must, depending upon the statute, be made returnable in vacation,[2] in term-time,[3] or at the next term of court.[4] But if there is no requirement in the statute as to the place of the return of the writ it is discretionary with the judge issuing it when and where it shall be returnable.[5] So too judges out of court are sometimes empowered by statute to grant the peremptory writ.[6]

In Louisiana, however, it has been held that the practice has always been to issue the alternative writ at chambers, which practice has grown up because the writ is in the nature of an interlocutory order, and not a final judgment. (xi) New Trial. Unless authorized by statute[7] a judge cannot determine a motion for a new trial in vacation,[8] except by special order made during term-time;[9] and when the term-time order designates a time and place of hearing, the power is restricted thereto, unless the hearing be continued for some good cause then and there shown.[10] So if the motion is not disposed of at the appointed time, or properly continued to a future date, it is continued by operation of law to the next regular term, and the judge has no authority to dismiss it in vacation.[11] Where the motion is continued until the next term, the judge cannot dispose of it in vacation,[12] or transfer it to another judge for hearing.[13] Nor can he hear a motion to set aside an order made in term-time refusing a new trial;[14] or, after verdict on an issue out of chancery, deny a motion for a new trial and order judgment on the verdict;[15] or set aside a verdict and vacate a sentence in a criminal case;[16] or reinstate a case except on notice.[17]

plead double, or to withdraw a plea and plead de novo;[22] allow a defendant in an equity action to withdraw his plea and refile it with a jury notice;[23] extend the time to demur;[24] or enter judgment for defendant for failure of plaintiff to reply to an answer;[25] or permit the filing of exceptions nunc pro tunc.[26] A judge may at chambers grant leave to amend a complaint,[27] or file a supplemental complaint;[28] but not after the cause is at issue and noticed for trial,[29] unless it is stipulated that a trial shall be had before the judge without a jury.[30] He may grant further time to plead in abatement.[31] But an ex parte order extending the time made after the statutory time has expired is a nullity.[32] A motion to strike out an answer, and for judgment for its frivolousness, may be made and decided at chambers;[33] and a conditional judgment thereon may be granted.[34]

(XIII) PROBATE PROCEEDINGS. Since the vacation powers of a judge in probate matters are derived solely from statute, he cannot, without express statutory authority, appoint administrators,[35] decree the sale of lands by an administrator,[36] compel an administrator to give additional security on his bond,[37] or render a judgment or decree finally settling the account of an administrator.[38] It has been held, however, that he may grant administration orders in simple cases of account.[39] The power to appoint a guardian is usually lodged by statute expressly in the court, and in such event an appointment made by a judge at chambers is absolutely void.[40] But there are statutes in some states authorizing the provisional appointment of guardians by a judge in vacation, to be acted upon by the court at its next term.[41] So too some statutes confer on a judge in vacation power to finally discharge a guardian,[42] to permit him to sell his ward's realty,[43] or to order him to deposit in the court funds of the minor.[44]

(XIV) PROHIBITION. A judge when vested with express statutory authority may in vacation issue a writ of prohibition,[45] but not otherwise.[46] So too a judge

(XVII) REFERENCES. A judge may, at chambers, make an order of reference,[63] order the referee to report his findings and conclusions[64] and confirm such report;[65] and such order may be made in a county other than that in which the cause is pending.[66] He may also grant an allowance in case of a reference.[67]

(XVIII) SALES.[68] Under some statutes a judge at chambers or in vacation may confirm a report of a sale under foreclosure decree;[69] pass on objections to the regularity of the sale under foreclosure, including objections to the appraisement;[70] or order partition, provided he sits in the county where the land or a portion thereof lies.[71] He cannot order the resale of property under a decree foreclosing a mortgage, especially where the judge is without the county where the cause is pending, and the proper consent of the parties has not been given.[72] And a statute giving power to a judge in chambers to appoint new trustees and to order the sale of property under certain conditions applies only to cases of trust estates, such estates as should be in the hands of trustees and perhaps to such property or estates as might be within the equitable jurisdiction by reason of some pending litigation in courts of equity. Under a statute of this character no order can be made by a judge in chambers for the sale of an infant's property, unless held for them in trust, or within equity jurisdiction by reason of some pending litigation in a court of equity.[73] hands of the sheriff.[88] He may order the sale of trust property,[89] or grant the trustee power to encumber it.[90]

(xxi) Trial of Actions. According to the weight of authority a judge has no power to try actions at chambers or in vacation without express constitutional or statutory authority,[91] and in at least one jurisdiction it has been held that a statute conferring on him the right to try issues of fact at chambers is unconstitutional.[92] But under some statutes it is permissible to try an action at chambers or in vacation if the parties consent thereto;[93] and in some jurisdictions independently of any statutory provision consent of the parties authorizes trial or an action at chambers or in vacation,[94] although the weight of authority is to the contrary.[95] Authority is sometimes conferred by express enactment on a judge at chambers or in vacation to try certain classes of actions.[96]

(xxii) Trusts. In some jurisdictions a judge may, at chambers, appoint[97] or remove a trustee;[98] and such power may be exercised at any place within the territorial jurisdiction of the judge, without regard to the residence of the parties or the location of the trust property.[99] But he cannot accept the resignation of a trustee and appoint his successor,[1] except by consent of the parties.[2] He may enforce an order granted in vacation, directing a trustee to pay moneys for the support of a beneficiary,[3] and exercise the powers of the chancery court over trust estates when necessary to protect the beneficiary;[4] and in so doing, he acts as a court of equity, which is always open, and a presumption as to jurisdiction applies to orders so made;[5] by consent, he may order a settlement by a resigning trustee,[6] and such order will be valid, although not filed in the proper clerk's office until after the expiration of the judge's term.[7]

(xxiii) Warrants of Arrest. A judge in vacation or chambers may, when authorized by statute, issue a warrant for any criminal offense,[8] or grant an order of arrest in a civil cause.[9] In some jurisdictions a judge in vacation or at chambers has statutory authority, where a person is in custody or under arrest for a bailable offense, to let him to bail and take his recognizance.[10] In other jurisdictions the rule obtains that a motion to admit to bail[11] or to mitigate bail[12] has always been chamber business, so that a judge, independent of statute, has the power to grant such motion. In one jurisdiction it has been held that a judge cannot rescind his own order for a writ of capias ad satisfaciendum or discharge one arrested thereon.[13]

(XXIV) OTHER POWERS. In addition to the powers previously enumerated it has been held that a judge at chambers or in vacation may hear and determine objections of creditors of an insolvent;[14] order the return of property severed from the realty by a mortgagor while in possession;[15] hear a proceeding on a writ of right;[16] grant writs of assistance,[17] an order to show cause in favor of a stockholder of a corporation aggrieved by a corporate election,[18] an order for the winding-up of a company,[19] or order the payment of alimony and the expenses of litigation to a wife suing for divorce,[20] especially where he is invested with chancery powers,[21] but not prior to service of summons on defendant;[22] restrain the husband from interfering with the wife's personal liberty;[23] reduce an assessment of damages to conform to the amount warranted by the affidavit;[24] order publication as to non-resident parties,[25] except where no pleadings have been filed;[26] order the filing of documents nunc pro tunc;[27] order the surrender of the books and documents of a public office after judgment of ouster against the office-holder;[28] settle any difference between the parties as to a feigned issue;[29] recommit or transfer the report of road commissioners;[30] recommit a case for further evidence;[31] appoint jury commissioners;[32] hear a rule against a defaulting tax officer;[33] amend the court records upon notice to the parties in interest;[34] order a special term and revoke such order;[35] order that a judgment of the supreme court affirming a judgment in a criminal case should be made a judgment of the lower court;[36] order the custody of a minor child to be surrendered to its mother by its general guardian;[37] transmit a case from a court of law to one of equity;[38] refuse to adjourn any matter to be heard in court;[39] grant an interpleader order;[40] annul the registry of a mechanic's lien for a sum exceeding two hundred dollars;[41] or grant an application for a writ de lunatico inquirendo.[42] On the other hand it has been held that he cannot make an allowance to a sheriff;[43]

and under conditions expressed in the statute.[70] In the absence of express constitutional authority, the legislature cannot confer upon supreme and inferior judges the power to preside jointly over an intermediate court.[71] Judges of a coördinate jurisdiction may alternate and make exchanges of their districts[72] and are vested with all the powers of the regular judge of the court over which they preside.[73] A judge of a common-law court cannot appoint a receiver in a cause pending in chancery, where express statutory authority therefor is lacking.[74] Where there is no express prohibition, judges may be invested with other judicial powers than those conferred by constitutional provisions;[75] and the powers of a judge of one court may be conferred upon the judge of another court.[76] A judge authorized to preside over two distinct and separate courts cannot, while sitting in one, legally enter an order in a cause pending in the other.[77] A judge of the supreme court of the United States may issue an injunction at any place out of the circuit in which the suit is instituted, when the circuit and district judges thereof are absent therefrom, or otherwise prevented from taking action.[78]

b. Powers as to Causes Pending Outside of Territorial Jurisdiction[79] — (i) General Rules. As a rule a judge cannot make orders in a cause pending in a court outside of the limits of his territorial jurisdiction.[80] It is, however, competent for the legislature to confer upon the judge of one circuit or district the power to make orders in causes pending in another circuit or district when the judge of the latter is for any reason unable or disqualified to act;[81] and this has been done by the legislatures of many states.[82] In the absence of any dis-

Constitutionality of acts.— Such act will not constitute the holding of two offices in violation of a constitutional provision (Dukes v. State, 11 Ind. 557, 71 Am. (11) Substitution or Rotation of Judges.[84] Judges are generally authorized to exchange districts.[85] But such power exists only by virtue of positive constitutional or statutory provision.[86] Such exchange cannot be made until the judges have first held all the courts in their respective home districts.[87] Where judges exchange districts, the instant one of them enters the district of the other he becomes judge thereof, and the resident judge becomes judge of the district for which he has exchanged,[88] and should so time his journey as to enter it simultaneously with the entry of the non-resident judge into his district.[89] Where judges are required by statute to rotate, they can exercise their general jurisdiction only in the district to which they are assigned at the time, except where they exchange courts or are commissioned to hold a special term of the court.[90] Where a judge is required to hold a term of a court without his district, he retains all the powers vested in him as judge of his own district, and the jurisdiction of the resident judge is superseded by him in the county where the court is held during the specified term, but not otherwise, nor for a longer time;[91] and he is without authority to issue any order in a cause pending in a county of the district where he is temporarily presiding other than that to which he has been called.[92]

another has authority to continue the term, and finish the business at an adjourned term;[93] or to order a special term.[94]

d. Powers as to Holding Court in Another District. A judge of one district may hold court in another, where the statute so authorizes;[95] and the right may be exercised without regard to the ability or disability of the local judge;[96] and he may hold such court while the local judge is sitting in court in another county;[97] and he may hold court at the same time and in the same building with the latter.[98] A judge of the county court, acting under statutory authority, may hold court for the judge of another county,[99] and may preside over a branch of the court, while the local judge holds another branch.[1] Legislation conferring such authority is valid, where not expressly prohibited by the constitution.[2] But in the absence of express statutory authority no such power exists, and the acts of the judge done without his jurisdiction are void.[3] As to the necessity for the record to show the authority of a judge's act in a district other than his own, the authorities are not in harmony. In some jurisdictions the rule is that in the absence of any showing to the contrary it will be presumed that he acted under proper authority.[4] In others it is held that the record must affirmatively show that he acquired jurisdiction in accordance with statutory provisions.[5] Where a statute prescribes that a judge of one county shall perform the duties of a similar judge in an adjoining county when the latter is unable from sickness, absence, or other cause to perform such duties, he cannot discharge such duties where there is a vacancy in the office of the latter judge.[6] Where the constitution provides that one district judge may hold court for another, and shall do so when required by law, the legislature cannot confer on the supreme court the power to supplant a district judge by the appointment of another to hold his court.[7] If the constitution is silent on the subject, the legislature may authorize judges to exchange districts.[8] Where the constitution authorizes judges to exchange circuits temporarily, under such regulation as may be prescribed by law, the legislature may imperatively require such exchange;[9] but it cannot require a permanent exchange.[10] Where the right to exchange exists, it is not limited to a time in which courts are being held in both districts.[11] Under constitutional authority to exchange districts judges cannot exchange only parts of districts.[12] But where the governor may require a judge to hold court in any part of the district of another judge, their consent to his requirement that they exchange only parts of their districts will not invalidate the order and render the proceedings before them coram non judice and void.[13]

e. Powers While Without Over Business Within His District. Ordinarily the vacation and chambers powers of a judge of general jurisdiction, over cases pending in his district, may be exercised by him while he is outside of such district but within the state;[14] and he may under such circumstances appoint appraisers in a prize suit,[15] dissolve an injunction on the coming in of answer,[16] continue a motion for a new trial,[17] appoint or discharge receivers or act on provisional remedies generally,[18] render a decree,[19] or correct clerical errors in a decree rendered by him.[20] Where he is authorized to receive a plea of guilty at chambers, such plea may be received in a county other than that where the prosecution is pending.[21] But he cannot materially amend or supplement a decree,[22] settle a bill of exceptions,[23] or issue a writ of mandamus returnable by him outside of his district.[24] While holding court outside of his district under the rotation system, a judge is deprived of all jurisdiction over causes pending in the district of his residence,[25] except by consent, which must affirmatively appear in the record.[26] Where the jurisdiction of the judge is limited to his district, he cannot exercise any judicial power while absent from it.[27] But where an order made by him is attacked as invalid by reason of having been made while he was outside of his district, it will be held valid in the absence of a positive showing of that fact by the record.[28] And even where the jurisdiction is general, if the statute requires each judge to be assigned to a particular district in which he shall thereafter reside, his assignment will operate to limit his jurisdiction and the exercise of his powers to the district to which he is assigned.[29]

f. Powers as to Causes in Another District After Return to His Own District. A judge who exchanges with another may after departing from the district render his decision in a cause tried before him,[30] certify the evidence therein,[31] or make a settlement of facts for appeal.[32]

g. Powers When Out of State.[33] A judge cannot perform any judicial act when he is beyond the limits of the state;[34] but he may perform mere clerical duties,[35] although he may be superseded within his district, during his absence therefrom, by a substitute judge.[36]

h. Powers of Federal Judges. In the event of the absence of all the judges from a district and circuit, the judge of the United States supreme court may, at any place in the United States, grant an injunction operative in the district.[37] Where a district judge is authorized to act in another district when there is a vacancy in the judgeship therein, he cannot act when the judge of such district is only absent therefrom.[38] A district judge appointed by a circuit to hold court in a foreign district may, by consent of the parties, dispose of a case appealed from the judgment of the resident district judge.[39] A United States district judge, being authorized thereto by statute, may preside over a circuit court of which he is one of the judges, and exercise all of its powers.[40]

4. Powers After Expiration of Term[41] — a. In General. A special judge may render a decree in a cause heard by him during term, after the adjournment of the court and the expiration of his commission.[42] Where a judge is elected to hold office for a specified term and until his successor is elected and qualified, his judicial acts performed after the expiration of the specified term and before the qualification of his successor are valid.[43] But his judicial acts done after the qualification of his successor,[44] or after his term of office has expired,[45] are void.

A judicial officer whose term has expired may make return to a writ of certiorari issued to review a case tried before him,[46] or amend such return.[47]

b. As to Filing Findings. After a judge's term expires, no valid judgment can be entered on his order for judgment made theretofore, where no findings of facts were filed,[48] and according to some decisions he cannot file a finding of facts after his term has expired,[49] although the contrary view is maintained by others.[50] Where the findings of fact and conclusions of law filed during his term are insufficient as a basis for a final judgment, such judgment rendered by him after his term expires is a nullity;[51] and a judgment signed by the judge during his term, but not filed until after the expiration thereof, is void.[52] He cannot render a valid decision after the expiration of his term;[53] and the invalidity of the decision is not affected by the fact that it is ordered filed by his successor and is filed.[54]

c. To Grant New Trial. After his term has expired he cannot grant a new trial in a cause heard before him.[55]

Where an inquisition of insanity was ordered by a judge, and at the time fixed for the inquisition another judge appeared to conduct it, the latter was empowered to entertain a motion to dismiss the entire proceeding for insufficiency of the affias may be necessary to effectuate it;[65] and he may refuse his aid in carrying into effect an order made by his predecessor.[66] And where the determination of the cause is left unsettled and open to action in the future, the succeeding judge has all the power to dispose of it possessed by his predecessor.[67] Where one judge has issued a temporary injunction with leave to other persons interested to become parties and move for a dissolution thereof, another judge has jurisdiction to dissolve the injunction upon the motion of such new party.[68] Where the judge in a chancery cause has submitted the issue to the jury, his action cannot be disregarded by a succeeding judge.[69] A succeeding judge cannot correct errors of law committed by his predecessor. The error must be corrected on appeal taken for that purpose.[70]

b. Power to Sign Judgment or Decree. Where the judge directs the drawing of a decree his successor may sign it;[71] and if the signature of a judge is not required, the fact that the succeeding judge signed a judgment rendered by his predecessor will not invalidate it.[72] A succeeding judge may adopt the findings of fact made by his predecessor and render judgment thereon.[73] Where the order of a judge has disposed of all the issues in a cause, his successor may enter final judgment therein,[74] notwithstanding a statute prohibiting a judge from acting in any matter where he was not present and sitting as a member of the court at the hearing thereof.[75] A succeeding judge may render a final decree of divorce and allow alimony to the wife without hearing any evidence, where answers by jury to special interrogatories show the amount of the husband's property.[76]

c. Power to Modify, Vacate, or Review Orders of Predecessor. While in some jurisdictions, however, the office of judge is regarded as a continuing one, and a succeeding judge has the same right to review, modify, or reverse the orders of his predecessor as he has in respect to his own orders,[77] the weight of authority is that as a general rule a succeeding judge cannot review, modify, or reverse the orders of his predecessor;[78] but the rule does not apply to administrative orders, such as the ordering the taking of testimony,[79] a special jury term,[80] to orders made through mistake or fraud perpetrated on the court,[81] to those working extreme hardship,[82] or where there is a change of circumstances.[83]

d. Power to Grant New Trial. As a general rule a succeeding judge has authority to hear and determine a motion for a new trial in a case heard by his predecessor, where the latter has ceased to preside and departed from the district in which the trial was had,[84] where his term of office has expired,[85] or where he has died.[86] And this power may be exercised by a special judge elected to proceed with the business of the term.[87] A judge under such circumstances must act on the evidence upon which the verdict was founded,[88] which may be ascertained by reference to the notes of the trial judge or by his affidavit, or that of the counsel in the case, by reëxamination of the witnesses, or by any other lawful mode.[89]

e. Power Where District Is Divided. Where a district is divided, the judge elected or appointed to preside in the new district has authority to render a decree in a cause pending therein, which was theretofore submitted for decree in vacation, to the judge formerly having jurisdiction over the district, provided the testimony is preserved in depositions,[90] or where there are special findings of fact,[91] and the new judge may grant a new trial in a case tried before the judge who preceded him in the jurisdiction,[92] but he should not deny a motion for a new trial where the evidence is not preserved.[93]

as judge while acting within the limits of his jurisdiction,[95] nor is he liable for neglect or refusal to act.[96] The rule is especially true where the judge is one having general jurisdiction, and in such case there is no liability even though he exceeds his authority.[97] The overwhelming weight of authority is to the effect that where a judge has full jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties, whether his jurisdiction be a general or limited one, he is not liable civilly where he acts erroneously, illegally, or irregularly,[98] and he is not chargeable with costs is upon plaintiff to show that the judge knew or ought to have known that he was acting without jurisdiction.[7] In some courts inferior judges are civilly liable where they act corruptly,[8] or through malice,[9] but the malice must be clearly proved.[10] Where a judge acts wholly without jurisdiction of the parties or the subject-matter, he is subject to civil action for any damage resulting therefrom.[11]

b. For Taking Insufficient Bond. In some jurisdictions the view obtains that the act of a judge in taking a bond or other security is purely ministerial,[12] while in others it is regarded as judicial.[13] In the former class of jurisdictions the rule is that a judge is liable in damages in the matter of taking a bond or other security only when he fails to exercise ordinary care in the performance of his duty.[14] In the latter class the rule of liability is that a judge is not answerable for damages resulting from his failure to take security or sufficient security, as the case may be,[15] except where he acts corruptly,[16] or where the legislature imposes upon him express liability for failure to require security or to exercise certain precautions in taking the same, in which event the rule of liability varies somewhat with the terms of the statute.[17]

e. For Ministerial Acts.[18] For the wrongful execution of or refusal to perform a ministerial duty or authority annexed to a judicial office, the officer is answerable to the injured party in an action at law, whether or not he acts in good faith,[19] or personally, or by a clerk whom he has authorized to perform the acts;[20] and his judicial character affords him no protection.[21]

d. Maladministration of Estate. A judge who by virtue of his office comes into possession of the estate of another and undertakes the administration and distribution thereof is civilly liable for any erroneous or corrupt disbursements therefrom;[22] but he cannot be sued for a share or portion of such estate until the amount thereof has been judicially determined in his court.[23]

e. Slanderous Words Spoken in Discharge of Duty. Slanderous words spoken by one who is in the discharge of a judicial duty are not actionable.[24]

f. Acts Not Official. For his acts other than official a judge may be held responsible in the same manner as any private individual.[25]

g. Actions, Who May Sue. Where a statute provides that suit on the bond of a judge shall be brought in the name of the state, an action so brought is not demurrable, although the bond is made payable to the governor.[26] While a right of action against a judge for failure to take a proper bond from a guardian is generally given by statute to the ward alone,[27] who may maintain such action against the administrator of the judge who has brought suit to settle an estate, notwithstanding an injunction restraining creditors of the estate from suing except in that suit,[28] any person injured by such failure may maintain an action at common law, as where a surety seeking release from further liability is defeated therein by the judge's failure to require a new bond.[29] But such action, even by the ward, cannot be maintained in equity.[30] Where a statute provides that a judge who fails to require a proper and sufficient bond of his clerk shall be personally bound for any dereliction of duty on the part of the latter, he may be proceeded against summarily under a statute authorizing such proceedings against an officer and his sureties.[31] Where several judges constituting a court are all liable for an act done by them, suit may be brought against any one or more of them.[32]

h. Pleadings. Where the statute imposes liability on a judge for accepting sureties who do not satisfy him of their sufficiency, a complaint in an action to enforce the liability must allege that he knew of the insolvency of the sureties, or acted without taking any proof of the fact, or that the proof taken was insufficient to satisfy one of ordinary judgment that the sureties were sufficient.[33] If the act complained of is a judicial one, and within the jurisdiction of the judge, no allegation of malice, corruption, oppression, tyranny, or want of just or probable cause will operate to make the complaint sufficient in jurisdictions where such facts impose no civil liability.[34] And a complaint alleging that the act was not a judicial one is demurrable where the particular acts set out do not support such general averment.[35] Where liability vel non depends upon the date of the act, a complaint which fails to allege the date should not be dismissed on demurrer, for the evidence may show that the act was done at a time when liability attached.[36]

i. Evidence. In actions to enforce civil liability of judges the general rules of evidence in respect of admissibility, burden of proof, and weight and sufficiency govern.[37]

Where a court is composed of several judges, and only those are liable who actually participate in the acts of the court and the judge who signed the minutes, but denies his presence and participation in the act complained of, may properly show the negligence of the clerk in preparing the minutes, and that he called upon any of the judges to authenticate them when recorded. Strong v. Harris, 3 Humphr. (Tenn.) 451.

Burden of proof.— In an action against a judge for taking an insufficient bond, the burden of proof is on him to show that he had personal knowledge of the sufficiency of the sureties, or made such inquiry and ascertained such facts as would satisfy a man of ordinary care and prudence of their sufficiency. Lancaster v. Turpin, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 430; Williams v. Weeks, 70 S. C. 1, 48 S. E. 619.

Weight and sufficiency.— Evidence that a banker, although reputed to be solvent, was in fact insolvent, and engaged in stock speculations, is insufficient to prove a lack of good faith or want of due diligence on the part of a surrogate, who deposited funds of an estate with him, in the absence of proof that he was guilty of want of care and diligence or prudence. on account of his act or failure or refusal to act.[39] In an action against a judge for taking an insufficient guardian's bond, only nominal damages can be recovered in the absence of proof of actual loss;[40] and there can be no recovery for failure to require a bond, where the loss sustained would not have been covered by the bond if given;[41] but where actual loss is shown the judge is liable for the amount thereof with compound interest to the time the ward attains his majority, after which event no interest will be allowed.[42]

2. LIABILITY ON OFFICIAL BOND[43] — a. In General. Sureties on a judge's bond are liable for moneys received and not properly disbursed by him, only when it is his duty, under the law, to receive such moneys in his official character.[44] A judge and the sureties on his official bond are liable for his conversion of moneys of the state or county which he received by virtue of his office.[45] They are liable for his failure to pay over to his successor or the person entitled thereto moneys deposited with him in condemnation proceedings;[46] for moneys which he has received from an administrator;[47] for his failure to surrender to his successor bonds made payable to him in his official capacity;[48] for his failure to make annual inquiries as to the solvency of the sureties on a guardian's bond, and to require additional security when necessary where the statute imposes such duties;[49] where he accepts a guardian's bond to which the surety's name has been signed by one not authorized thereto;[50] where he fails to require a guardian's bond in the proper amount and with sufficient sureties;[51] where he fails to require, in accordance with the statute, a bond of an executor who purchases at his own sale;[52] where he improperly refuses to grant a retail liquor license;[53] or where he fails to make and deliver a tax-roll to the tax-collector, authorizing the collection of a special tax.[54] And they are liable for interest on moneys converted by him,[55] and demand is not necessary in order to charge them therewith.[56] But there is no liability against his bond for funds of a ward, the charge of which he assumes under agreement with the guardian and the latter's sureties;[57] for money unlawfully received from an executor and wasted by him;[58] for failing to require a guardian to renew his bond, or to give further security, on account of the insolvency, removal, or death of his original sureties, where the statute does not expressly impose such duty upon him;[59] for a failure to certify the fees of officers to a higher court, where an accused person demands jury trial;[60] for a failure to collect such fees, where his only duty with respect thereto is to issue execution therefor;[61] for the penalty given for the improper issuance of a marriage license to a minor;[62] for failing to award a contract for a public improvement to the lowest bidder;[63] or for the imprisonment of one who refuses to pay a fine justly imposed for contempt.[64] Where a judge is also a clerk of his own court and his only official bond is given in the latter capacity, there is no liability against the bond for his failure to discharge the judicial duty of requiring bond from a county tax-collector.[65]

b. Unlawful and Extra-Official Acts. The sureties on the official bond of a judge are not liable for money which was not received by him within the scope of his official duty.[66]

c. Extent of Liability. As a general rule the extent of the liability of the sureties on an official bond of a judge is measured by the latter's liability, up to the amount of the bond.[67]

3. Penalties. Under a statute giving a penalty for refusal to issue the writ of habeas corpus, a judge in vacation who refuses to allow the writ is liable for the penalty, because his allowance of the writ would be a ministerial act.[68] But judges sitting as a court may in their discretion refuse to allow the writ without incurring the penalty.[69] In several jurisdictions statutes are in force giving a penalty to the party aggrieved whenever a judge exacts illegal fees.[70] The gratuitous preparation of papers to enable a widow in poor circumstances to take out administration does not render the judge liable to a penalty for practising law.[71]

4. Criminal Liability. It is well settled that a judicial officer, when required to exercise his judgment or discretion, is not liable criminally for any error which he commits, provided he acts in good faith.[72] But any judicial officer who acts corruptly is responsible criminally,[73] whether he acts under the law or without the law.[74] The rule of the common law exempting a judge from indictment for any act done or omitted to be done when sitting as a judge[75] still prevails, except so far as it has been changed by particular statutes,[76] or by some constitutional provision.[77] Frequently, however, judges are by statute made subject to indictment for wilful neglect of official duty,[78] for corrupt acts done in their official capacity, such as oppression,[79] requiring excessive bail,[80] granting unlawfully a liquor license,[81] extorting illegal fees or compensation,[82] allowing an unjust claim against the county,[83] or failing to vacate his seat.[84]

VII. DISQUALIFICATION TO ACT.[85]

A. In General. Under the civil and canon law a judge was disqualified by interest in a cause,[86] and this rule was recognized as existing under the common law of England by Littleton, Bracton, Fleta, and Bacon,[87] but denied by Coke and Blackstone.[88] There was no other cause for the recusation of a judge at the common law.[89] It is now a universally recognized principle that a person cannot be judge of his own cause, and any interest in the subject-matter of a suit will disqualify a judge to preside on the trial thereof.[90] Authority to preside in his own cause cannot be conferred by positive enactment.[91] And however broad the grant of judicial power may be, this rule remains operative, and gives rise to a tacit exception from the general words of the grant.[92] But jurisdiction may be conferred where the interest is not direct, but remote; is not certain and palpable, but contingent and problematical; is not great and important, but minute.[93] Statutes disqualifying judges for designated causes will be liberally construed.[94] But the degree of disqualifying relationship will not be enlarged.[95] Such statutes apply to probate courts.[96]

B. Pecuniary Interest — 1. In General. The interest which disqualifies a judge is a pecuniary interest,[97] or one which involves some individual right or privilege.[98] It must be a direct interest in the subject-matter of the litigation,[99] and it is essential that a liability or pecuniary gain to him must occur on the event of the suit.[1]

2. INTEREST IN SUBJECT-MATTER. A direct, pecuniary, or personal interest in the subject-matter of a suit, however small, will generally disqualify a judge to act therein.[2] For a judge to be disqualified by interest it is not necessary that he be a party to the action. It is sufficient if he is in any wise interested in the subject-matter.[3] And his disqualification is not affected by a failure to serve him with process.[4] It is necessary, however, that he have an interest in the subject-matter and not merely in a legal question involved.[5] He is not necessarily disqualified beyond the point of his interest in a case, and he may properly refer a single question in which he is interested to another tribunal and retain jurisdiction of the main cause.[6]

3. INTEREST AS DIRECTOR OR STOCK-HOLDER OF CORPORATION. A judge who is a stock-holder or director in a corporation is disqualified to act in any proceeding in which such corporation is interested;[7] and the facts that he tried the cause with the consent and at the request of counsel and disposed of his corporate stock before rendering judgment will not operate to qualify him and validate the judgment.[8] But he is not disqualified by reason of having once owned stock in the corporation which was disposed of before the commencement of the proceedings,[9] although he may be liable to be sued for ultra vires acts done while a director of the corporation;[10] nor is he disqualified by having been a subscriber for stock in the corporation, where his subscription was canceled before delivery of the certificate;[11] nor by the fact that he and a party to the suit pending before him are stock-holders in a corporation, the interests of which are in no way involved in the litigation.[12]

4. INTEREST AS CITIZEN OR TAXPAYER. The fact that a penalty or forfeiture inures to the benefit of a municipality or county in which a judge resides and is a taxpayer will not confer upon him a disqualifying interest in an action to recover such penalty or forfeiture;[13] and the legislature may properly confer jurisdiction in disregard of such minute interest.[14] Such provision is valid even in the face of a constitution declaring the right of every citizen to be tried by judges as free, impartial, and independent as the lot of humanity will admit.[15] A judge is not disqualified to hear and determine a cause in which a municipality is interested merely because he is a resident of such municipality,[16] especially where the municipality as a corporation is not directly interested.[17] Nor is he disqualified by being a resident and taxpayer therein.[18] But he is disqualified when the cause involves the levy of a special tax for a period of years,[19] the validity of a tax,[20] the dissolution of the municipal corporation and injunction against the collection of its taxes,[21] or the removal of its officers.[22] Nor is a resident of a county disqualified to try a cause in which the county is interested merely by virtue of such residence,[23] or by being a resident and taxpayer therein.[24] him and collected go into the salary fund from which his salary as mayor is paid.[25] And the fact that a judge receives compensation for his services, which is increased with the addition of new duties or the addition of territory to his district, does not give him a disqualifying interest in the causes tried in his court.[26] A court may determine the validity of a statute, although the decision involves the validity of other statutes prescribing the salary, term, and qualifications of the judges composing the court.[27] Interest to the extent of costs accruing in a lower court will not disqualify a judge of a higher court to which an appeal is taken.[28] And the fees given by law for the performance of official duties in relation to civil and criminal proceedings do not constitute an interest in the proceeding which disqualifies a judge,[29] although his sole compensation in certain cases is a fee to be paid by defendant in case of conviction.[30] But where a judge is made a party as such to a suit he is disqualified, although his interest extends only to the costs of making him a party.[31]

6. Merely Nominal Party. A judge is not disqualified by being a merely nominal party to a suit.[32]

sioners to order an election on the question.[41] And the signing of a petition and voting for the annexation of territory to a city will not disqualify a judge to hear and determine the question of annexation.[42] Being owner of property alleged to have been stolen will not disqualify a judge to try the thief.[43] A judge's interest in a question of law involved in a case before him, due to the fact that its determination will in all probability control rights or remedies which may thereafter accrue to him, is not such an interest as will disqualify him;[44] nor will an interest which he may have in common with the other citizens in a public matter.[45]

8. INTEREST IN ANOTHER ACTION AGAINST ONE OF THE PARTIES. The pendency of an action by the judge against one of the parties to the suit at bar which is entirely independent of and cannot be affected by the latter suit will not constitute a disqualification.[46]

9. MEMBERS OF BAR ASSOCIATION. A judge who is a member of a bar association is not by virtue thereof disqualified to hear and determine a cause in which such association is interested.[47]

10. MATTERS IN PROBATE COURT — a. In General. A probate judge is disqualified to act on the administration of an estate where he has been temporary administrator thereof and has not made final settlement of his accounts as such;[48] where he has acted as attorney and counselor for the executor, whose accounts include payments made to him;[49] where he is assignor of a claim against the estate, which the assignee is attempting to enforce, although it was assigned without recourse;[50] where he appoints a relative as administrator;[51] or where he is the husband of a legatee under a will propounded for probate.[52] But such relationship will not disqualify if the wife is not made a party to the proceedings to probate the will,[53] or where she renounces her legacy by being a witness in such proceeding.[54] Where a probate judge holds another office by virtue of which he is a necessary party to a proceeding in his court he is disqualified to act therein.[55] He is not disqualified by being warden of a church from probating a will giving to the officers of the church a legacy for church purposes;[56] by being custodian of the personalty of the estate pending the contest of a will;[57] by being joint owner of lands with the estate of the decedent;[58] by having been guardian ad litem for a minor interested in an estate being administered in his court;[59] or by having been a nominal party to a suit against the decedent in which a judgment was obtained, and which is filed as a claim against the estate.[60] It is improper for him to act as agent or attorney for any person interested in the estate, but such relationship will not disqualify him and deprive him of jurisdiction, even where forbidden by statute.[61] But if he is authorized to charge a percentage on sums collected or received by him for a person interested in the estate he thereby becomes interested and disqualified.[62] A probate judge who receives payment of a decree in his court in worthless money is not thereby disqualified to entertain proceedings to compel the proper payment of the decree.[63]

b. Interest as Executor. Where he is executor of a will he is disqualified to act officially in a case involving the interests of his testator's estate.[64] And he is disqualified if he is executor of the will of a legatee under the will propounded for probate.[65]

c. Interest as Creditor of Estate. A probate judge who is a creditor of an estate is disqualified to act judicially thereon,[66] even though the representative's account shows that his claim has been paid.[67] He may, however, qualify himself by relinquishing his claim.[68] But merely determining in his own mind that he will not enforce it will not operate to qualify him.[69] If he is not in fact a creditor, he cannot be disqualified by the allowance of a claim in his favor by the commissioners appointed to investigate claims against the estate.[70]

d. Interest as Debtor of Estate. Where the probate judge is a debtor of an estate he is disqualified to act in respect thereto;[71] and his disqualification is not affected by a bona fide transfer of the claim against him made by the executor acting under a void grant of letters testamentary.[72]

e. Interest as Surety on Bond in Litigation. A surety on a bond who subsequently becomes judge of the court in which is pending the proceedings where the bond was given is disqualified to act in such proceedings,[73] or in any matter or proceeding in which liability on such bond may be involved.[74] But the fact of having been surety on the bond of a temporary administrator will not disqualify him to act on the accounts and doings of the same person who became regular administrator.[75]

f. Necessity May Obviate the Rule. The rule as to the disqualification of judges must yield to the demands of necessity. Where disqualification, if permitted to prevail, destroys the only tribunal in which relief may be sought and thus effectually bars the door of justice, the disqualified judge is bound to hear and decide the cause.[76] But to justify a disqualified judge in sitting in a cause in

C. Bias or Prejudice — 1. In General. In the absence of statutory provision, bias or prejudice on the part of a judge does not disqualify him.[78] In many states, however, there now exist statutes which expressly make the bias or prejudice of a judge a ground of disqualification.[79] But disqualifying a judge on the ground of prejudice is so liable to abuse that some states have refused to adopt it,[80] and even where it has been adopted its liability to abuse induces the most rigid construction of its terms.[81] A statute making the alleged prejudice of a judge a ground of disqualification is valid.[82] Even where the disqualification by reason of bias or prejudice is not expressly mentioned, it has been held to be comprehended in such statutory expressions as "otherwise disqualified to sit";[83] "cannot properly preside";[84] "otherwise unable," and "other disability";[85] and "any legal cause."[86] Even where the judge's prejudice does not constitute a ground for disqualification, if the charge is made and the facts alleged indicate the existence of prejudice, the appellate court will carefully scrutinize the record to see that no injustice has been done the complaining party.[87]

2. Character of Disqualifying Prejudice. The disqualifying prejudice of a judge does not necessarily comprehend every bias, partiality, or prejudice which he may entertain with reference to the case.[88] And where, under the law, the

In Higgins v. San Diego, supra, it was held that a long existing controversy between a water company and its patrons, including the judges, which had engendered bad feelings toward the corporation, and a newspaper controversy between it and one of the judges before his election to the bench, resulting in the cutting off of his water-supply, and his threat to forfeit its charter, and the fact that in another litigation the company's attorney incorporated in his brief matter reflecting on one of the judges, which he resented, did not disqualify him from sitting on the trial of a case in which the company was interested. That a party to the cause was a successful candidate for public office against a relative of the judge is insufficient. People v. Findley, 132 Cal. 301, 64 Pac. 472.

bias or prejudice of a judge disqualifies him, it must be made to clearly appear, not only that the bias or prejudice exists, but that it is of a character calculated to seriously impair his impartiality and sway his judgment.[89] He is not disqualified by having information or holding an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of a party charged with crime;[90] by having attended a meeting held for the purpose of devising means for suppressing the crime with which the defendant is charged;[91] by a pledge, made while canvassing for his office, to enforce the particular law the defendant is charged with violating, or by having advocated the passage of the law, or counseled with others as to the best means of enforcing it;[92] by having formed an opinion on the legal questions involved in the case;[93] having made a prior decision of law against a party,[94] or by repeated erroneous rulings made on successive trials of the cause;[95] or to try one charged with perjury by having, on request of the prosecuting attorney, ordered him held until the charge could be preferred.[96] A judge who is the subject of a libel is not by reason thereof disqualified to try and punish the person publishing it for a contempt of court.[97] The fact that he tried a case at law will not disqualify him to entertain a suit in equity to set aside the judgment therein.[98] The prejudice of a judge is no ground of disqualification on the trial of a feigned issue sent from an equity to a common-law court for trial by jury.[99] Nor will the prejudice of the regular judge affect the qualification of a special judge called to preside during the enforced absence of the regular judge.[1]

D. Relationship — 1. Relationship to a Party to the Cause. While under the common law a judge was not disqualified by relationship to a party to a cause, being merely privileged to decline jurisdiction,[2] it is now generally provided by constitution or statute that relationship by consanguinity or affinity between him and a party litigant, within specified degrees, to be variously computed according to the canon, civil, or common law, or statutory rule, will disqualify him.[3] It is merely nominal party;[11] to one having no personal interest in the subject-matter of the proceedings;[12] to one who owns an interest in the property which is the subject of the suit, but whose interest is not involved[13] or who is not made a party to the suit;[14] or to a stock-holder of a corporation which is a party to the suit.[15]

2. Relationship to Attorney. In the absence of a statute relationship between a judge and an attorney of record for one of the parties to a suit will not disqualify the judge.[16] But where the attorney's compensation depends on the contingency of recovery, he is, in some jurisdictions, regarded as an interested party, so that relationship to him will disqualify,[17] although the client may have agreed to pay fees commensurate with the services rendered, independently of success.[18] In other states a contrary rule prevails.[19] To disqualify a judge on account of relationship to an attorney, it is not necessary that the attorney's name appear on the record, that there should be any obligation on the part of his client to compensate him, or that his partnership with the attorney of record be continued.[20] But merely appearing as an attorney of record without actively participating in the management of the case will not disqualify.[21]

3. Must Be Against a Party. The only prejudice which will disqualify a judge is a prejudice against a party to the cause.[22] He is not disqualified by prejudice against the attorney of one party[23] or bias in favor of the attorney of the other party to a cause.[24] Prejudice against the cause or defense of a party is not a disqualifying prejudice.[25] It is actual existence of prejudice on the part of a judge, not the mere apprehension of it by a party which disqualifies.[26] But where he manifests a partisan feeling evidencing a pre-judgment of the matter in issue he is disqualified.[27]

E. Expression of Opinion. While a judge should be cautious in declaring his opinions as to causes that are to be tried before him,[28] he is not disqualified to sit in a cause merely by expressing his opinion on a question of law involved in a case in his court,[29] by ruling upon questions arising on the trial thereof,[30] by a declaration of his belief as to the guilt of a person charged with an offense before him,[31] of his freedom from doubt of the sanity of a defendant who relied on insanity as a defense,[32] or an expression of his opinion as to the merits of a cause pending before him.[33] Nor is he disqualified to appoint, in accordance with law, a tribunal to determine questions arising in a matter upon which he has expressed an opinion.[34] Advising the compromise of a suit will not disqualify a judge to try it.[35]

F. Presiding at Trial Involving Same Subject-Matter. A judge is not disqualified by reason of having presided at a previous hearing or trial in which the same subject-matter was involved.[36]

been of counsel in a cause pending before him is disqualified to act therein,[38] although his fee has been paid and his connection with the cause has been severed.[39] Such provisions of law apply to criminal as well as civil cases.[40] A judge who while prosecuting attorney actively participated in the preparation of a criminal case is disqualified to try it.[41] But the mere fact that he was prosecuting attorney at the time of the commission of the offense will not disqualify him.[42] If the judge was a partner in the firm which brought the suit and his name appears as counsel he is disqualified, although he did not actively engage in the management thereof,[43] or receive any compensation.[44] But if his name appears by mistake, and he never was interested in the case and had no connection therewith, he is not disqualified.[45] The disqualifying statute operates as to all cases, whether arising before or after its passage.[46] The disqualification of the judge on account of having been counsel is not limited to the identical case, but extends to another case between the same parties involving substantially the same facts and issues.[47] But he is not disqualified by having merely proposed to assist in the trial

In New Jersey the disqualification was denied in Peck v. Essex County, 20 N. J. L. 457, which was reversed by the court of errors and appeals, on another ground of disqualification, the court declining to decide this particular question. Peck v. Essex County, 21 N. J. L. 656. However, the latter court had previously decided that under the constitution judges who concurred in a judgment of the supreme court, although no formal opinion was delivered, were disqualified to sit

it,[56] or by a different character of action, involving substantially the same facts, and issues brought in another court of which he has been elected judge.[57] However, in some jurisdictions a contrary rule prevails, owing to constitutional or statutory provisions.[58] Where the constitution confers upon a judge the right to review his own decisions when he becomes a member of an appellate court, contrary acts of the legislature are inoperative.[59] In some jurisdictions a judge is disqualified to participate in the trial on appeal of any case in which he has as trial judge decided any question involved on the appeal.[60] In others it is held that a judge who only makes preliminary, collateral, or interlocutory orders is not disqualified.[61] The disqualification applies only to the identical case in which the judge acted in the lower court.[62]

I. Judge as Necessary Witness. While a judge is not a competent witness in a cause being tried before him,[63] yet he will not be deprived of his jurisdiction merely on account of being a material and necessary witness, when his failure to testify will not involve a complete denial of justice.[64] Nor is he ousted of jurisdiction by merely being named as a witness in papers filed in the cause.[65] But

In Ohio prior to the adoption of the statute of April 12, 1858, disqualifying a trial judge to sit as member of an appellate court on the trial of a case tried before him in the lower court, the rule of the text was indorsed. Month. 355, that the judge was disqualified, and his disqualification applied to criminal as well as civil cases, while in Powers v. Seaton, 2 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 365, 2 West. L. Month. 532, the statute was declared unconstitutional.

In New York an early statute undertook to disqualify a trial justice from presiding in an appellate court on the trial of a case which he had tried below, but it was declared unconstitutional as an attempt to deprive the justices of jurisdiction conferred by the constitution. it has been decided that where he has testified in the case on a former trial he is disqualified.[66]

J. Holding Incompatible Office. A judge cannot be recused because he holds another incompatible office.[67]

K. Illness. A judge may be legally disqualified by reason of sickness, so as to render proper the holding of the court by another judge, and the acts of the latter valid and effectual.[68]

L. Boards and Tribunals Affected by Restrictions. The rule of disqualification on account of interest in the subject-matter or result of litigation extends to every tribunal exercising judicial or quasi-judicial functions.[69] Justices of the peace,[70] jurors,[71] boards of education,[72] the trustees of a village,[73] a town board of supervisors,[74] a board of commissioners of highways,[75] a county auditor, authorized to correct return for taxation, and collect a percentage on the increase in taxes,[76] and stock-holders of a corporation acting as jurors in eminent domain proceedings by the corporation[77] are all included in its operation. On the other hand there are authorities holding that tribunals exercising quasi-judicial powers are not within the influence of the rule disqualifying a judicial officer by reason of interest. Under this contrary rule have been included the common council of a city,[78] and a board of directors of a chamber of commerce.[79]

M. Refusal of Judge to Act — 1. In General. A judge may take judicial notice of matters affecting his qualification and refuse to act if disqualified within his own knowledge and without any extrinsic evidence of such disqualification;[80] and it is not only the right but the duty of a judge to refuse to preside at the trial of a case in which he is disqualified, without regard to the manner of receiving information of his disqualification.[81] But a judge has no right to adjudge himself disqualified and refuse to act, when no party to the case could legally recuse him.[82] Where a judge yields jurisdiction to another on account of his disqualification the record should affirmatively show the facts which authorized the act.[83] And it must show the disqualification of the trial judge, not his predecessor.[84] Such adjudication may be made before the papers in the case are actually filed in his court, and while they are in his hands for a preliminary order.[85]

2. CONCLUSIVENESS OF REFUSAL TO ACT. His refusal to act on account of some disqualification existing in his own mind is not conclusive, and his competency may be determined on an application for mandamus to compel him to act,[86] or by appeal.[87] But the judge to whom the case is transferred has no authority to review or annul the order of recusation.[88] If any party is dissatisfied with the action of the judge in deciding himself disqualified, he must make timely objection and resort to his remedy or it will be considered as waived.[89] And the decision of a judge holding himself disqualified will not be reversed unless there is manifest error apparent therein.[90]

N. Right to Object and Proceedings on Objection — 1. IN GENERAL. As a general rule either party may object to a judge on the ground of his disqualification.[91] But where the right is given by statute to a particular party, the other cannot exercise it.[92] Different parties cannot join to disqualify a judge in different actions in which they are not jointly interested.[93] The number of judges which may be disqualified on the ground of prejudice varies in the different jurisdictions.[94]

2. PROCEEDINGS IN WHICH OBJECTIONS CAN BE RAISED. The question of disqualification may be raised on a petition to require the filing of a new assignment, inventory, and appraisement,[95] in a suit for divorce,[96] in proceedings by an administrator for the sale of real estate to pay debts,[97] in proceedings to redeem land from tax-sale,[98] in a preliminary examination before a committing magistrate,[99] in proceedings under a municipal law for the investigation of a town's finances,[1] or in a proceeding in contempt.[2] But not on the probate of a will which is made ex parte.[3] A court of chancery will not consider the suggestion of the disqualification of a judge of a circuit court to which it refers a feigned issue.[4]

should be made varies in the different jurisdictions, and depends upon arbitrary decision or rule of the court, or statute.[5] Where the party entitled to object is not informed of the disqualifying facts until after the expiration of the time in which objection should be made, his objection, made on discovery of the facts, will be regarded as seasonably made.[6]

4. Mode of Making Objection. In the absence of statute an objection to a judge should be made by petition setting forth the facts relied on to disqualify him, and requesting him not to sit on the trial of the cause.[7] But the proceeding is generally regulated by statutes requiring a verified application for a change of venue, or transfer of the cause to another court, or the calling in of another judge.[8] The statute must be strictly followed.[9]

must contain a specific statement of the facts on which the disqualification is based,[13] which statement must be positive and not on information or belief.[14] It must be made to clearly appear that the disqualification is a present subsisting one.[15] Where it is sought to disqualify a judge on account of having been counsel in the case, the affidavit need not allege that he was counsel before his election as judge.[16] If the regular judge vacates the bench on an insufficient affidavit, he may properly resume it before the special judge has acted in the case.[17] Where the disqualification can arise only on the filing of an amended petition and the bringing in of new parties, which will produce a misjoinder of causes of action and of parties, the objection is properly disregarded.[18]

b. By Whom Made. The affidavit must be made by the party, and not by his attorney or agent.[19] But the application may be made and the affidavit filed by his attorney in his absence.[20]

c. Where Affidavit Is Conclusive. In some jurisdictions an affidavit which sets forth the facts disqualifying the judge is conclusive, and deprives him of all further jurisdiction in the case,[21] and a statute which makes the affidavit conclusive is valid.[22] But the judge must decide as to the sufficiency of the facts stated to disqualify him.[23] If they are sufficient he must surrender jurisdiction;[24] but if insufficient, his imperative duty is to retain it.[25]

d. Where Affidavit Is Not Conclusive. In other jurisdictions counter-affidavits may be filed, and the truth of the facts made an issue for the determination of the judge,[26] and the burden of proof is on the party alleging the disqualification.[27] In the absence of such counter-affidavits the facts set up in the application must be taken as true,[28] although the judge's personal knowledge may be to the contrary;[29] and his unverified statements in rebuttal are of no weight in determining the question.[30]

e. Affidavit Conforming to Statute Sufficient. An affidavit which substantially conforms to the statute is sufficient,[31] and this is true notwithstanding a rule of court which prescribes additional facts to be stated.[32]

7. Proceeding on Objection. The objection must be made in the court over which the judge presides.[33] When the application conforms to the statute it must be granted; there is no discretion to refuse it;[34] for, although the statute may be in form permissive, it is imperative.[35] It is the duty of the judge to vacate the bench or transfer the cause to another tribunal on the filing of a sufficient affidavit or motion showing his prejudice.[36] No additional motion is necessary.[37] But the order recusing himself must be made in open court, not at chambers.[38] Where a judge is made a party to a case he cannot arbitrarily determine that he has no interest therein and strike the complaint from the files.[39] But where the objection is based upon a ground palpably false it may be overruled without hearing proof.[40]

8. CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS. A constitutional provision that, where a judge is disqualified, the parties may appoint a proper person to try the case, and that the judges may exchange districts, is not violated by a statute providing for the designation of another judge by the governor, and, if impossible for him to serve, then that the parties may agree on an attorney to try the case.[41] An amendment of the statute regulating the proceedings in case of the disqualification of a judge will not affect cases theretofore transferred, especially where the amended statute so provides.[42] Where the statute authorizes the selection of a special judge by the parties, and the record fails to disclose any act on their part, the calling in of another judge will not constitute reversible error.[43] But a statute specifying the officer who shall cite in another judge is directory only, and conformity to it is not imperative.[44] If a judge who is called in is unable to try the case he may properly call in another.[45] The judge called in must be one authorized by law to preside in lieu of the disqualified judge.[46] The provisions of a territorial statute relative to a change of judges, where an affidavit of prejudice is made, do not apply when the judge is presiding in a federal and not in a territorial court.[47] Where the general provisions of law relative to circuit courts in criminal cases are made applicable to a municipal court, a disqualified judge of the latter court may call in a judge of the former, under a provision authorizing a disqualified circuit judge to call in another circuit judge.[48]

9. PARTIES TO PROCEEDING. All of the judges whose disqualification is alleged should be made parties to the proceedings.[49]

10. RIGHT TO CALL IN OTHER JUDGE OR TRANSFER CAUSE. The law which prescribes the course to be pursued when a judge is disqualified, and directs a change of venue,[50] or the transfer of the case to another court,[51] or that the case be transferred to the nearest judge,[52] or the calling in of another judge,[53] or an attorney,[54] or the election of a special judge by the bar,[55] must be strictly followed. It is proper to refuse a change of venue when the statute directs the calling in of another judge,[56] to refuse to transfer the case to the appellate court of another department, when the statute permits the calling in of judges from such department;[57] or to refuse a transfer to another court in the county, when a change of venue is directed.[58] Where a judge who is called in grants a change of venue to another circuit, and the indictment is there nol prossed, on the finding of a new indictment in the county of original jurisdiction the judge therein is not obliged to call in the same judge.[59] The certificate of a judge is competent to prove him interested so as to authorize the calling in of another judge;[60] and he may call in another judge in an action to which he is a party;[61] and when he calls in another judge in a case where he is disqualified the parties are not entitled to a change of venue.[62]

O. Determination of Question — 1. Who Determines the Question Primarily. Where a judge sits alone, the general rule is that he must determine the question of his disqualification.[63] But his decision cannot be influenced by his mere belief.[64] Where other judges preside over the court with him the question must be decided by the court.[65]

2. Determination on Appeal. While the decision of the judge as to his qualification vel non may not be conclusive,[66] it will not be disturbed by an appellate court unless clearly erroneous,[67] and he is a competent witness on the question in the appellate court.[68] The jurisdiction of an appellate court cannot be ousted by the disqualification of the judge of the lower court, where such disqualification was not objected to below and does not appear from the record.[69]

proceeding with the trial and action taken by the judge therein, there is a waiver of the right to object to him on account of relationship to a party to the suit,[70] or having been counsel,[71] or having granted a change of venue,[72] or the temporary loss of jurisdiction, which has been restored.[73] The right to object on account of prejudice is waived by making a motion in the cause.[74] The objection must be made in the trial court, and cannot be made for the first time on appeal.[75] The authorities are not in harmony as to the right to waive the disqualification due to interest in the subject-matter of the suit.[76] A disqualification prescribed by a constitution cannot be waived.[77]

2. Waiver by Consent. The right to urge the disqualification of a judge may also be waived by consent,[78] but a judge may decline jurisdiction, although the proper consent is given.[79]

Q. Removal of Disqualification. The disqualification of a judge on account of interest may be removed by relinquishment of his interest,[80] or the transfer thereof.[81] His disqualification on account of relationship to a party may be removed by the renunciation of interest by the related party.[82] If the relationship is by affinity, the death without issue of the blood relative through whom the affinity exists will remove the disqualification,[83] and it has been held that the survival of issue will not operate to continue the disqualification.[84] But a judge who is disqualified by reason of relationship cannot remove the disqualification by dismissing the suit as to his relatives.[85] The jurisdiction of a judge which is lost by his temporary appointment as member of an appellate court is restored on revocation of such appointment.[86]

R. Operation and Effect of Disqualification — 1. In General. Where a judge is disqualified, he can make no order in the cause except to transfer it to the proper court.[87] A suit brought before a disqualified judge should not be dismissed, but transferred to the proper court.[88] The mere disqualification of a judge does not operate to transfer the cause to another court; there must be an order for the transfer.[89] A decree rendered by a disqualified judge cannot be avoided by his successor, if he is likewise disqualified.[90] The disqualification of the regular judge does not affect the qualification of another judge with whom he temporarily exchanges circuits by agreement in accordance with constitutional authority.[91]

2. Effect on Discretionary and Formal Acts. The disqualification of the judge invalidates all acts involving an exercise of discretion by him,[92] but mere

VIII. SPECIAL AND SUBSTITUTE JUDGES.[7]

A. In General. While judicial power cannot be delegated by a judge or granted by consent of parties in the absence of authority conferred by law,[8] provision is made either by constitution or statute in the different states for the selection of a special or substitute judge in the event that the regular judge is disqualified or unable to act.[9] In some states provision is made for the selection of a practising attorney to act as special judge;[10] but in other states neither the court

Sitting with court to make a quorum.— In some cases a disqualified member may sit with the court to make a quorum, and where he does not participate in the decision it is valid. Nephi Irr. Illegal constitution of the court as distinguished from mere disqualification of one or more of the judges thereof renders the decision absolutely void. Thus, where the court was required by statute to be held by a justice of the supreme court without an associate, and the court was in fact held by a justice of the supreme court with two justices of the sessions, the decision was void. People v. Bork, 96 N. Y. 188.

nor the parties to an action can empower an attorney at law to preside as judge at a trial or perform judicial duties.[11] Statutes authorizing the election of an attorney at law as special judge by members of the bar where the regular judge is absent or disqualified are generally held to be constitutional;[12] and the same is true where the statute authorizes the regular judge to appoint,[13] or the parties to agree upon[14] an attorney to hear and determine the case. But statutes authorizing trials before a member of the bar have been declared unconstitutional in several states.[15] Statutes authorizing the substitution of another judge when the regular judge cannot preside have also been upheld by the courts.[16] disqualified to act by reason of an application for a change of venue, and if for any reason it is difficult to secure the judge of another circuit to act, he may appoint a competent lawyer of the state of good standing to try the case. The power to decide whether it is difficult to secure another judge is vested in the judge of the court where the case is pending. Walter v. Walter, 117 Ind. 247, 20 N. E. 148; Kane v. State, 71 Ind. 559. And his decision will not be reviewed by an appellate court, unless it appears that there has been an abuse of discretion. Hauk v. State, 148 Ind. 238, 46 N. E. 127, 47 N. E. 465; Kane v. State, supra. He is not required to consult or conform to the wishes of the parties in making his selection. The suggestion of the names of several competent attorneys to the parties is merely a matter of courtesy, and he is under no obligation to heed their suggestions. Kissel v. Lewis, 156 Ind. 283, 59 N. E. 478. The law was formerly otherwise in this state. Barnes v. State, 28 Ind. 82 [approved in Kennedy v. State, 53 Ind. 542].

Formalities of appointment.— In Indiana the appointment of an attorney to act as judge must be in writing, and if not so made any judgment rendered by him will be void (Evans v. State, 56 Ind. 459), even if he acts with the consent of the parties (Herhster v. State, 80 Ind. 484). But when an appointment is made by an order entered in the order book, and the special judge qualifies, and his oath is also entered on the order book, a written appointment may be made out and filed pending objections to the special judge, and the objections may then be properly overruled. Taylor v. Bosworth, 1 Ind. App. 54, 27 N. E. 115. No particular form is necessary for the appointment of an attorney as special judge. State v. Murdock, 86 Ind. 124.

Special supreme court judges.— Under the provisions of the constitution of Tennessee relating to the appointment of special judges of the supreme court, if any of the regular judges are disqualified the governor may appoint a sufficient number of special judges to form a full court. Waterhouse v. Martin, Peck (Tenn.) 374.

Fee for commission.— In Arkansas a special judge of the supreme court is entitled to receive his commission without paying the statutory fee required of all state officers. Chism v. Martin, 57 Ark. 83, 20 S. W. 809.

28. Arkansas.— Hyllis v. State, 45 Ark. 478; Gaither v. Wasson, 42 Ark. 126; Dansby v. Beard, 39 Ark. 254. However, there is no such thing known to the laws of Arkansas as two circuit courts held in the same circuit at the same time, one presided over by a regular judge and the other by a special judge. So while the regular judge is holding court in one county a special judge cannot be elected to hold an adjourned term in another county. State v. Williams, 48 Ark. 227, 2 S. W. 843.

Indiana.— Kennedy v. State, 53 Ind. 542; Barnes v. State, 28 Ind. 82. However, the proper county officers may in certain cases elect a special judge. Geigel v. State, 85 Ind. 580.

Kentucky.— Beauchamp v. Com., 4 Ky. L. Rep. 27, holding, however, that a special judge can be elected only when there is a regular judge in office.

Missouri.— State v. Downs, 164 Mo. 471, 65 S. W. 258 (holding that the statute governing the election of special judges applies to both civil and criminal cases); State v. Flournoy, 160 Mo. 324, 60 S. W. 1098 (holding that under Rev. St. § 822, if an application for a change of venue is founded on the interest, prejudice, or other objection to the judge, the case shall be sent to another county, unless the parties either request the election of, or agree upon a special judge, a special judge elected in such a case without a request by the parties has no power to act); State v. Punshon, 133 Mo. 44, 34 S. W. 25 (holding that the power of the members of the bar to elect a special judge to hold the term depends only on the failure of the regular judge to procure another judge to do so, and that it is not necessary that he should have made any effort to secure the attendance of another judge); State v. Gilmore, 110 Mo. 1, 19 S. W. 218 (holding that the disqualified judge may order the members of the bar to elect a special judge); State v. Sanders, 106 Mo. 188, 17 S. W. 223 (holding that in order to disqualify an attorney from voting at an election of a special judge to try a cause upon the ground that he is of counsel in the case, it must be shown that he was counsel at the time the election was held); State v. Neiderer, 94 Mo. 79, 6 S. W. 708 (holding that under the statute, when the clerk of the circuit court conducts an election of a special judge and the election results in a tie vote, the clerk shall "give the casting vote").

Tennessee.— Low v. State, 111 Tenn. 81, 78 S. W. 110, holding that when a special judge is elected by members of the bar, the election must be held by the clerk of the court and by him alone, and that counsel concerned in the case cannot vote.

Texas.— Merrell v. State, (Cr. App. 1902) 70 S. W. 979, holding that if the regular judge is absent, this authorizes the election of a special judge, and that the reason for his absence cannot be raised; and that an attorney receiving a majority of the votes of those participating in the election is elected, although other attorneys who do not vote are present in sufficient number to have changed the result. A special judge may be elected to hold a special term of the district court when the regular judge is absent holding a regular term in another county. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Stinson, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 285, 78 S. W. 986; St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Swinney, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 219, 78 S. W. 547; Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. O'Connor, (Civ. App. 1904) 78 S. W. 374; Missouri, etc., R. Although the statute provides for the election of a special judge when the judge is unwilling to hold court, such an election cannot take place when the regular judge has resigned his office, as the constitution requires a vacancy to be filled by the commissioners' court. Byars v. Crisp, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 707.

West Virginia.— Franklin v. Vandervort, 50 W. Va. 412, 40 S. E. 374, holding that when the regular judge of the criminal court is sick on the day fixed for the beginning of the regular term, and the clerk holds an election for a special judge, and several attorneys are placed in nomination, and the clerk, after the ballot, declares that a certain attorney has received a majority of the votes cast by the attorneys present and is duly elected, it is a compliance with the statute.

Necessity of order for election.— In Missouri if, in a civil action, the disqualification of the regular judge is made apparent, no order for the election of a special judge is necessary, it being the duty of the clerk to proceed to hold an election (Lacy v. Barrett, 75 Mo. 469); and where the parties agree upon a special judge to try the case, no order for the election of such special judge is necessary (State v. Bishop, 22 Mo. App. 435); but in criminal cases in order to authorize the election of a special judge there must be an order made by the regular judge directing such election (State v. Bulling, 105 Mo. 204, 15 S. W. 367, 16 S. W. 830). The statutes of West Virginia forbid the election of a special judge when the regular judge is present holding the court, unless the regular judge enters of record an order for such election; and if this is not done the proceedings had before the special judge are void. State v. Cross, 44 W. Va. 315, 29 S. E. 527.

Duties of clerk of court.— The power to hold an election of a special judge under Shannon Code Tenn. §§ 5730–5732, declare the result, and administer the oath of office is vested in the clerk, and must be exercised by him alone, whose duty it is also, both under such provisions and under the statute requiring him to keep a record of the proceedings of court, to make a record of the election at the time it is held, and authenticate the same by his official signature. Low v. State, 111 Tenn. 81, 78 S. W. 110.

Oregon.— Baisley v. Baisley, 15 Oreg. 183, 13 Pac. 888, holding, however, that the circuit judge of Baker county could not, under the act of 1880, authorize another judge to hold court in his county while he himself was holding court therein.

South Dakota.— State v. Palmar, 4 S. D. 543, 57 N. W. 490, holding that under the statutes governing changes of venue, it is mandatory on the judge against whom an affidavit of prejudice has been filed to call another judge to preside at the trial.

Wisconsin.— Haley v. Jump River Lumber Co., 81 Wis. 412, 51 N. W. 321, 956.

And see State v. Mack, 26 Nev. 430, 69 Pac. 862, holding that no formal application for the calling of a qualified judge is necessary when the record discloses that the acting judge is disqualified. And where a regular judge is disqualified, the appointment of another judge of a court of record need not be in writing. Wood v. Franklin, 97 Ind. 117; Lewis v. Albertson, 23 Ind. App. 147, 53 N. him,[31] or the case may be certified to the governor for the appointment of some other judge to preside.[32] A United States circuit judge may appoint a district judge of any district to hold a district or circuit court in any other district whenever in the judgment of such circuit judge the public interest requires.[33] In some states where a vacancy occurs in the office of circuit judge by reason of the death of the incumbent, the governor may designate the judge of another circuit to hold court in the vacant circuit.[34] When a municipal judge is disqualified, absent, or unable to act, power to appoint a substitute is generally conferred by statute upon the mayor or common council.[35]

3. Selection During or After Trial. In some states if the regular judge takes up the trial and becomes unable to continue it a special judge may be selected to do so;[36] and it has been held that a special judge may be selected to dispose of a motion for new trial[37] or to pass on a bill of exceptions.[38]

4. Eligibility to Office of Special Judge. In some states a person must be a qualified elector in order to be qualified to act as a special judge;[39] but in most states a special judge need not be a resident of the judicial district to which he is appointed.[40] And the fact that the appointee already holds some other public office does not necessarily disqualify him as special judge.[41]

1071; State v. Newsum, 129 Mo. 154, 31 S. W. 605. So where the judge of a circuit court wrote the clerk of the court to procure the judge of the court of common pleas to preside and charge the grand jury, and the letter was delivered to the latter judge who did as requested and presided until the arrival of the circuit judge, there was a substantial compliance with the statute. Kambieskey v. State, 26 Ind. 225. Under Ind. Act (1855), the substitute judge derived his power to act from the statute and not from the notice given him by the disqualified judge, the notice being simply to secure his attendance and no part of the record. In Kentucky the statute provides that when the regular judge has been sworn off the bench and a judge cannot be procured by election, the clerk shall forthwith certify the facts to the governor, and he shall commission some circuit judge to attend and preside. Under this provision the duty is imposed on the clerk to decide whether a judge can be procured by election, and if he is satisfied that a judge cannot be so procured, he may certify the fact without going through the form of an election. 5. Qualification of Special Judge. The Revised Statutes of the United States, which authorize a United States circuit judge, in case a district judge is disabled from holding court, to appoint the judge of any other district in the circuit to discharge the duties of the disabled judge, require that the "appointment shall be filed in the clerk's office and entered on the minutes of said district court."[42] Special judges are generally required to take an oath of office before entering on the performance of their duties.[43]

North Carolina.— Bear v. Cohen, 65 N. C. 511, holding that whenever a judge exchanges districts with another with the consent of the governor or when required by the governor to hold a specified term of a superior court out of his district, the authority of the governor should be of record in every county in which he holds a term and should be attached to the record of every appeal case.

Texas.— Shultz v. Lempert, 55 Tex. 273; Brinkley v. Harkins, 48 Tex. 225; Smith v. State, 24 Tex. App. 290, 6 S. W. 40; Harris v. State, 14 Tex. App. 676; Perry v. State, 14 Tex. App. 166; Snow v. State, 11 Tex. App. 99; Thompson v. State, 9 Tex. App. 649 (holding that an agreement of counsel to appoint a special judge to try a cause should be perpetuated in writing, and such writing filed among the papers and made a part of the record); McMurry v. State, 9 Tex. App. 207.

See 29 Cent. Dig. tit. "Judges," § 63.

Contra.— Sweeptzer v. Gaines, 19 Ark. 96 (holding that where the law authorizes the selection of a special or substitute judge, it will be presumed, nothing to the contrary appearing, that the selection was regularly made); Newman's Estate, 75 Cal. 213, 16 Pac. 887, 7 Am. St. Rep. 146 (holding that a judge of a superior court of a particular county who holds court in another county must be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to be acting upon the request of the governor or of the judge of the court of the latter county); State v. Sachs, 3 Wash. 691, 29 Pac. 446 (holding that where the statute requires the stipulation of the parties agreeing upon a special judge to be in writing, it will be presumed that there was a written stipulation, although the journal entries do not expressly so state).

In Indiana and Missouri the rule of the text applies to special judges. State v. Murdock, 86 Ind. 124; Kennedy v. State, 53 Ind. 542 (both holding that the appointment of an attorney to hold court when for any cause the judge is unable to attend must be in writing and entered on the order book); Smith v. Haworth, 53 Mo. 88 (holding that an order appointing a special judge to try a particular case should be entered of record). But it does not apply to substitute judges. Wood v. Franklin, 97 Ind. 117; Lewis v. Albertson, 23 Ind. App. 147, 53 N. E. 1071; State v. Newsum, 129 Mo. 154, 31 S. W. 605.

In Tennessee an order for the election of a special judge under Shannon Code, §§ 5730–5732, to hold court on account of the absence of the regular judge should be entered on the minutes as a part of the caption of the proceedings of the term, and should recite the failure or inability of the regular judge to hold court; that an election was held by the clerk, at which the person selected was duly elected by a majority of the attorneys then present and residents of the state; that such person was also in attendance, a resident of the state, and possessed all the qualifications of judge; and that before entering on his duties the oaths of office, that against dueling (section 1073) and those prescribed for special judges (section 5731), which should be copied in full on the record and signed by the special judge, were duly administered to him; but where the election is to try a certain case the entry should be made under the style of the case to be tried, and should show, in addition to the above facts, the disqualification of the regular judge, and that the attorneys therein interested took no part in the election. Low v. State, 111 Tenn. 81, 78 S. W. 110.

it should show the grounds thereof,[47] and, in addition thereto, in some states his

Judicial notice of commission.— Where a special judge has been appointed and commissioned by the governor, the supreme court will take judicial notice of his authority, and his appointment need not appear in the record of the case. Bell v. State, 115 Ala. 25, 22 So. 526. See, however, Bear v. Cohen, 65 N. C. 511.

Consent to the appointment of a special judge or chancellor cannot be presumed against parties only constructively before the court, or against minors or married women, or purchasers who are not parties to the original record. Rudd v. Woolfolk, 4 Bush (Ky.) 555.

Sufficiency of record.— An order reciting a temporary exchange of districts by two regular judges, the vacation of the bench by one of said judges and the invitation of an attorney by the unanimous voice of the bar to preside is a sufficient entry to authorize said attorney to take the bench. Hughes v. Com., 89 Ky. 227, 12 S. W. 269, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 424. And a judgment entered June 12, 1896, which recites that the regular judge was disqualified, and that "on the —— day of ——, 1806," the governor appointed a special judge sufficiently shows that the appointment was made before the case was tried. Temple Compress Co. v. De More, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 42 S. W. 778. The mere omission in the order of the words "licensed" and "enrolled" as descriptive of the attorneys who participated in the election of a special judge does not render the order a nullity, where it speaks of them as members of the bar, and recites that the clerk, in conducting the election, conformed to the statute, since it will be presumed that the clerk properly performed his duty. State v. Gilmore, 110 Mo. 1, 19 S. W. 218. The record of the election and qualification of the special judge should be verified by the official signature of the clerk, and will constitute a part of the record of the case. Low v. State, 111 Tenn. 81, 78 S. W. 110.

Time of entry of appointment.— It is sufficient if the record of the appointment and qualification of the special judge is entered before he acts under his commission. Harris v. Musgrave, 72 Tex. 18, 9 S. W. 90. In Indiana, where the circuit judge may appoint a judge of the common pleas court to act as circuit judge, the circuit judge may order the letter of appointment to be entered nunc pro tunc and the common pleas judge may act as circuit judge after the appointment and before the entry is made. Kamhieskey v. State, 26 Ind. 225.

Contra.— Shircliff v. State, 96 Ind. 369 (appointment of second special judge); Hunter v. Ferguson, 13 Kan. 462; State v. Hunter, 171 Mo. 435, 71 S. W. 675 (holding that where a judge requested the judge of another circuit to try a case pending before the former, it was not necessary that the record should recite that no suitable person could or would be elected as special judge to try the cause, it being presumed in support of the order that the judge exercised his right under the constitution to request another judge to hold a part of his term); State v. Newsum, 129 Mo. 154, 31 S. W. 605 (holding that the record need not recite the reasons of the change in calling in the judge of another circuit to try a cause in which the former is disqualified); Com. v. Scouton, 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 503; State v. Newman, 49 W. Va. 724, 39 S. E. 655 (election of second special judge).

It will be presumed in a collateral proceeding that there were proper reasons for the appointment of a special judge. State v. Murdock, 86 Ind. 124. Contra, State v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 50 Iowa 692.

Sufficiency of record.— Under a statute authorizing the appointment of a special judge "if it shall be difficult, in the opinion of the court, for any cause" to procure the attendance of a regular judge, a recital by the court that "in the opinion of the court such regular judge cannot be readily obtained" is sufficient to authorize the appointment of an attorney as special judge. Smith v. State, 145 Ind. 176, 180, 42 N. E. 1019. And see Chissom v. Barbour, 100 Ind. 1. Where, on appeal, the record in relation to a declination of the regular judge to preside and his ap-eligibility[48] and qualification.[49] The transcript on appeal from the decision of a special judge should contain all facts required to be entered on the record in the court below.[50]

C. Authority, Powers, and Duties[51] — 1. Duration of Authority. A special judge who has been chosen and has qualified retains exclusive jurisdiction over cases tried before him until they have been finally determined.[52] His authority ceases ordinarily upon entry of a final judgment.[53] It has been held that a special pointment of another judge showed that such declination and appointment were made without objection "for good and lawful reasons," it was presumed that such declination was made on some of the grounds specified by statute. Leonard v. Blair, 59 Ind. 510, 514. An entry stating that the standing justice of the police court had heard the facts of the case as stated by plaintiff and was "somewhat interested in the plaintiff's favor," was sufficient to justify the standing justice to decline proceeding with the case and authorized the special justice to hear it. Williams v. Robinson, 6 Cush. 333, 334. Where a special judge is elected by the members of the bar to sit in the trial of a cause, such election is not invalidated by the fact that the record fails to recite the special facts which disqualified the regular judge. State v. Hosmer, 85 Mo. 553. A surrogate's certificate of his own disability to act in a case is sufficient proof to enable the district attorney to sit in his place as provided by statute. People v. Petty, 32 Hun (N. Y.) 443.

Effect of curative act see In re Moulton, 57 Hun (N. Y.) 589, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 717.

48. Horton v. Pool, 40 Ala. 629 (holding that the record should show that the person chosen to act as special judge is an attorney of the court); Low v. State, 111 Tenn. 81, 78 S. W. 110; Perry v. State, 14 Tex. App. 166. Contra, State v. Gamble, 108 Mo. 500, 18 S. W. 1111.

Sufficiency of record.— The record need not recite the provision of the statute that a person acting as special judge is "a disinterested person, learned in the law." Lawler v. Lyness, 112 Ala. 386, 390, 20 So. 574. Where a pro tem judge has been elected as provided by law, the presumption will be indulged that he possessed all the qualifications requisite to enable him to hold the court, if it appears that he was an attorney of the court, and was elected to preside, and did preside. Cotton v. Wolf, 14 Bush (Ky.) 238.

49. Kennedy v. State, 53 Ind. 542 (holding that where an attorney is appointed to try a criminal case on a change of venue thereon because of objection to the regular judge, the record should show that he took the required oath); Rudd v. Woodfolk, 4 Bush (Ky.) 555; Slone v. Slone, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 339 (both holding that the fact that the requisite oaths have been taken by a temporary judge should be entered in the order book); Low v. State, 111 Tenn. 81, 78 S. W. 110; Smith v. State, 24 Tex. App. 290, 6 S. W. 40 (holding that the fact that the oath of office was administered to a special judge should be entered on the record). Contra, State v. Gamble, 108 Mo. 500, 18 S. W. 1111; Green v. Walker, 99 Mo. 68, 12 S. W. 353; In re Loehr, 11 Mo. App. 53.

Sufficiency of record.— A recital in the record that the special judge "appeared at the bar of the court, and duly qualified to act as judge" in the absence of any recitals to the contrary imports that he was duly sworn. Ford v. Cameron First Nat. Bank, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 34 S. W. 684.

50. Georgia.— Worsham v. Murchison, 66 Ga. 715, holding that it is requisite that the selection and appointment of a judge pro hac vice should affirmatively appear in the record, but that the absence of jurisdiction in the presiding judge would operate to reverse his judgment, not to dismiss the appeal.

judge has no power to act after the expiration of the term for which he was elected.[54] If the regular judge appoints a special judge to hold an adjourned term, however, the latter may continue holding the adjourned term after the commencement of a regular term in another county of the same circuit.[55] Where a district judge recuses himself, and calls in the judge of an adjoining district, the latter may try and determine the cause after nine months have elapsed, although the law accords to either party in interest the right to have the cause transferred to an adjoining district, if it has not been disposed of within nine months from the date of the recusation;[56] and the substituted judge does not lose jurisdiction by reason of inability to try the case on the day on which it had been set for trial by the regular judge, but may hear the case at a later date.[57] A special judge does not lose jurisdiction to complete the trial of a case because the regular judge

Rep. 1271 (holding that in courts of continuous session the period of sixty days constitutes a term, and a special judge elected to try a particular case has no power to preside after the expiration of sixty days from the date of his election); Small v. Reeves, 104 Ky. 289, 46 S. W. 430 (holding that where a regular judge was disqualified by an affidavit of prejudice, and called in a judge who heard and overruled a demurrer to the complaint and gave time to answer, and thereupon the parties stipulated that the case should be docketed for trial at the next term, the power of the substitute judge ceased with the expiration of the term at which he was called to preside). Contra, Perkins v. Hayward, 124 Ind. 445, 24 N. E. 1033; Pennington v. State, 13 Tex. App. 44, holding that a special judge has equal authority with the regular judge to enter a judgment nunc pro tunc at a succeeding term.

Adjournment of case beyond term.— A special judge lawfully appointed and having jurisdiction of a case does not lose that jurisdiction because of having adjourned the hearing of the case beyond the term at which he was appointed (Wilson v. Piper, 77 Ind. 437; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Preston, 63 Kan. 819, 66 Pac. 1050, (Kan. 1901) 63 Pac. 444, holding also that he is not divested of authority by a failure to take a new oath at the subsequent term), where the adjournment is taken to a day before the commencement of the next regular term of court (Dillard v. State, 65 Ark. 404, 46 S. W. 533). So a substitute judge may adjourn the hearing of a case from time to time, although some of the adjournments may be to a day beyond the regular term of the court. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Rowe, 17 Ind. 568. But if a case is tried and a verdict returned before a special judge, and the term is adjourned without any further action being taken in the case and without any order being made adjourning it to a day in vacation, the authority of the special judge terminates with the adjournment of the term. returns during the trial and resumes his duties,[58] unless the special judge was selected to preside only during the regular judge's absence.[59] It has been held that if a disqualified regular judge resigns[60] or if his term expires,[61] the authority of the special judge ceases. The authority of a substituted judge cannot be divested by the election of a special judge after he has responded to the request of the regular judge to act.[62] The appointment of a justice of the peace as an assistant justice of the district court does not terminate on account of his entering on a new term of office as justice of the peace.[63] Where some of the plaintiffs have died, the filing of an amended petition making their heirs parties does not affect the authority of a special judge appointed to try the case.[64]

Cruson v. Whitley, 19 Ark. 99. And under Miss. Annot. Code (1892), § 922, providing that when a judge of any district is disqualified to act in any matter in vacation such matter shall be brought before the judge of another district, a special judge appointed by the governor has no jurisdiction of a quo warranto proceeding in vacation. Kelly v. State, 79 Miss. 168, 30 So. 49.

Change of venue.— A special judge called by the regular judge to try a case may pass upon an application for a change of venue and request another judge to serve if the application is granted (State v. Gilman, 97 Mo. App. 296, 70 S. W. 943); and where a substitute judge awards a change of venue to another county on account of the prejudice of the inhabitants, it is his duty to follow the case to the county to which the change of venue has been awarded (State v. Anderson, 96 Mo. 241, 9 S. W. 636).

Consolidation of cases.— The appointment of a special judge in a case with which other cases have been consolidated will give him jurisdiction over the consolidated cases (Mills v. Paul, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 30 S. W. 242), but he has no power to consolidate the case which he is appointed to try with another case (Texas-Mexican R. Co. v. Cahill, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 23 S. W. 232).

Powers at chambers.— The judge of an adjoining district appointed as substitute judge has no authority to grant an order at chambers within his own judicial district, and in his capacity as judge of the latter, transferring the suit to an adjoining district. Halphen v. Guilbeau, 38 La. Ann. 724. Mont. Const. art. 8, § 12, providing that "any judge of the district court may hold court for any other district judge," does not, in the absence of constitutional or statutory provision giving district judges concurrent jurisdiction, empower a judge, acting for another, to exercise out of court the judicial power of the judge whose court he is holding, and an order of injunction issued by such judge in chambers is void. Wallace v. Helena Electric R. Co., 10 Mont. 24, 25, 24 Pac. 626, 25 Pac. 278.

Power over records.— An officer upon whom devolves the duties of a probate judge is entitled to access to the probate records, but not to their exclusive possession (Nebraska Mfg. Co. v. Maxon, 23 Nebr. 224, 36 N. W. 492), and he must perform such duties in the probate court without removing the papers to his own court, and his acts become matters of record in the probate court (Bean v. Chapman, 73 Ala. 140; Bean v. Chapman, 62 Ala. 58).

Power to adjourn court.— A special judge has power to adjourn court (Dillard v. State, 65 Ark. 404, 46 S. W. 533; State v. Ross, 118 Mo. 23, 23 S. W. 196), even in violation of his promise to the regular judge not to do so (State v. Ross, supra).

67. State v. Wear, 145 Mo. 162, 46 S. W. 1099. See, however, Grinstead v. Buckley, 32 Miss. 148, holding that the functions of a member of the bar selected to try a case in which a chancellor is interested are ministerial rather than judicial, and that his proceedings must be signed by the chancellor before they have the effect of judicial acts.

W. 67, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 465. And see List v. Jockheck, 59 Kan. 143, 52 Pac. 420, where it is said that if a judge pro tem for a case is lawfully holding court, and the regular judge at the same time holds court in an adjacent room for other cases on the docket, "It would seem that, if the proceedings of either one should be declared void . . . it would be the proceedings before the regular judge," but objection not being made at the time the point is not decided.

App. 43, holding that a special judge appointed by the governor to act as such during the inability of the regular circuit judge has power to act on a motion for a new trial of a cause tried before the regular judge. See, however, Stinson v. State, 32 Ind. 124, holding that where an action commenced in the common pleas is set for trial before a judge of the circuit court because of the disqualification of the judge of common pleas, a motion for new trial in such cause must be heard and determined in the court of common pleas, and such substitute judge cannot determine it in his own court.

A judge pro tem may be selected by the parties to dispose of a motion for a new trial and to do whatever remains to be done

c. Signing Bill of Exceptions or Record.[72] As a rule a bill of exceptions should be signed by the judge who tries the case even if he is a special or substitute judge;[73] and he may sign the bill after the adjournment of the term if within the time fixed by law or order of court.[74] The record should be signed by the special judge who presided in the case,[75] and he may sign it at a term subsequent to that at which the final judgment was rendered,[76] if within the time allowed by order of court.[77]

d. Retrying Cause After Reversal. It has been decided in Missouri that if the judgment rendered before a special judge is reversed on appeal, he has authority to retry the case.[78]

If the bill is signed by the special and also by the regular judge, the signature of the latter will be treated as surplusage. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Bowles, 71 Miss. 994, 16 So. 235.

If he did not try the case, a special judge has no authority to sign at chambers the bill of exceptions therein. Travellers' Ins. Co. v. Leeds, 38 Ind. 444. And see Finch v. Travellers Ins. Co., 87 Ind. 302, holding that a bill of exceptions signed by a special judge, the record not showing that he had presided at the trial, cannot be regarded as in the record. In Florida where the trial judge becomes unable from sickness to settle and sign a bill of exceptions in vacation within the time given by order during the term, a judge of another circuit has power under the statute to settle and sign it in vacation within the time limited by the order. 75. Kambieskey v. State, 26 Ind. 225, holding, however, that if this is not done and the record is signed by the regular judge, it is a mere irregularity which does not render the proceedings void.

Matters not within special judge's knowledge.— A special judge elected to try a particular case has no power to authenticate a nunc pro tunc entry reciting the election at a previous term of another special judge, as he is not presumed to have knowledge of the facts recited in the order; and the fact that a regular judge of a circuit signed the final adjourning order of a term is insufficient to authenticate the nunc pro tunc entry. Low v. State, 111 Tenn. 81, 78 S. W. 110.

Record of election as special judge.— While the special judge has no control over his election or authority to authenticate the record of the same, it is his duty to see that a proper record is made by the clerk before he signs the decree or judgment made by him. But where a special judge was improperly selected and the regular judge had been succeeded in office by another who was not dis-

3. DUTY TO SERVE. Ordinarily an attorney appointed as special judge is not bound to serve as such,[79] and a substitute judge has a right to decline to preside at a trial if he is conscious of the existence of any cause which disqualifies him, and it is his duty in that event to decline to serve.[80]

4. DE FACTO JUDGES.[81] As a general rule a special judge who has been chosen and takes possession of the office becomes a de facto judge, provided that the selection of a special judge is authorized by law,[82] and his acts are valid until reversed or set aside by direct proceedings.[83] But where the authority of a de facto judge acting under color of a temporary appointment is promptly challenged in a proper method, the question of the validity of his appointment must be decided;[84] and the doctrine of the validity of acts of a de facto judge does not apply to the case of a judge pro tem appointed by a judge pro tem, the latter having no power of appointment.[85]

D. Waiver of Objections. Objections to the authority of a special or substitute judge may be waived by act or omission of the party,[86] and ordinarily such objections are waived where they are not promptly made.[87] The objection qualified, it was held that upon the case being remanded for retrial the latter should preside. Lacy v. Barrett, 75 Mo. 469.

Mode of objection.— In Arkansas a party to a suit may question the authority of an individual to try his case as special judge, and if the objection is overruled the grounds of the objection and the authority of the judge may be spread upon the record by a bill of exceptions and the authority of the judge to act will then be determined on appeal. White v. Reagan, 25 Ark. 622. Where proceedings are had before a special judge duly commissioned, and although before trial the authority of such judge ceases because of the removal of the disqualification of the regular judge by change of incumbent on the bench or otherwise, yet such special judge proceeds to try and determine the case, the proper remedy of the party objecting to his authority is not by quo warranto or by plea to the jurisdiction, but by an objection to the right of the individual to act as judge, and by causing him to place his authority upon record in order that the superior court may determine his right to exercise the powers of special judge. Caldwell v. Bell, 6 Ark. 227. In Kentucky an objection to a special judge on the ground that his powers have ceased on account of the termination of the term at which he was elected can be made informally; a mere suggestion on the record is sufficient. And see List v. Jockheck, 59 Kan. 143, 52 Pac. 420, holding that where a case is tried before a judge pro tem and at the same time the regular judge also holds court and tries cases, and the defeated party in the case before the judge pro tem makes no objection to the division of the court into two tribunals, he will not be heard to complain without showing that he was in fact prejudiced by such irregular proceeding.

E. Collateral Attack. The validity of the acts of a special or substitute judge cannot be attacked collaterally on the ground of his want of authority, except for jurisdictional defects.[90]

IX. DE FACTO JUDGES.

A. Who Are De Facto Judges. A judge de facto is one who exercises the duties of his office under color of an appointment or election to that office. He differs on the one hand from a mere usurper of an office who undertakes to act without any color of right; and on the other from an officer de jure who is in all respects legally appointed and qualified to exercise the office.[91] In order that there may be a de facto judge there must be an office which the law recognizes, 91. Brown v. O'Connell, 36 Conn. 432, 4 Am. Rep. 89; Plymouth v. Painter, 17 Conn. 585, 44 Am. Dec. 574; McCraw v. Williams, 33 Gratt. (Va.) 510; Northrup v. Gregory, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,327, 2 Abb. 503. A person in possession of an office may be an officer de facto while some other person is the officer de jure; but it is obvious that there cannot be an officer de facto and an officer de jure both in possession of the office at the same time. Carli v. Rhener, 27 Minn. 292, 7 N. W. 139.

Other definitions.— An officer de facto is defined to be "one whose acts, although not those of a lawful officer, the law, upon principles of policy and justice, will hold valid so far as they involve the interests of the public and third persons, where the duties of the office were exercised. First, without a known appointment or election, but under such circumstances of reputation or acquiescence, as were calculated to induce people, without inquiry, to submit to or invoke his action, supposing him to be the officer he assumed to be. Second, under color of a known and valid appointment or election, but where the officer had failed to conform to some precedent requirement or condition, as to take an oath, give bond, or the like. Third, under color of a known election or appointment, void because the officer was not eligible, or because there was a want of power in the electing or appointing body, or by reason of some defect or irregularity in its exercise, such ineligibility, want of power, or defect being unknown to the public. Fourth, under color of an election or appointment by or pursuant to a public unconstitutional law, before the same is adjudged to be such." State v. Carroll, 38 Conn. 449, 471, 9 Am. Rep. 409.

Effect of resignation.— Where a judge tenders his resignation unconditionally, but is afterward induced to withdraw the same by the persons vested with the power to fill the vacancy caused by his resignation, he is at least a de facto judge thereafter. McGhee v. Dickey, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 104, 23 S. W. 404. And where a judge's resignation is condi-

and where a court has no legal existence there can be no judge thereof, either de jure or de facto.[92]

B. How Color of Title Derived. Color of title necessary to constitute a judge de facto may be derived either from election, appointment, or acquiescence by the public for a length of time which would afford strong presumption of colorable right.[93] An unconstitutional statute is sufficient to give color of right or authority to elect or appoint a judicial officer, and a person elected or appointed by authority of such a statute is a de facto judge.[94] And in order to constitute a judge de facto, it is not necessary that he have color of appointment from a power having "actual" authority to make the appointment, but it is sufficient that he has been appointed by some power having "color" of authority to make it.[95]

C. Powers, Rights, and Liabilities — 1. In General. A de facto judge is competent to do whatever may be done by a judge de jure,[96] and where he has been commissioned and has qualified and is performing the duties of the office he is entitled in Missouri to draw the salary of the office until ousted by proper proceedings.[97] But it has been held in Connecticut and Mississippi that where a judge sues for fees or sets up a title to property, he must show himself to be an officer de jure;[98] and in Connecticut, when sued for acts which he would have authority to do only as a judge, he must, in order to make out a justification, show that he is a judge de jure.[99]

2. Validity of Official Acts. In passing upon the validity of official acts, inquiry into the title to the office of the party acting therein may be pursued far tional in its terms, he continues to be a de facto judge at least until the resignation has been accepted. Northrup v. Gregory, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,327, 2 Abb. 503.

Exercise of power by retiring judge.— Where a judge elect was attorney in a proceeding in the court to which he had been elected and his predecessor assumed jurisdiction of the case, both judges acting in good faith and believing that the retiring judge's term had not yet expired, and where their belief was based upon a reasonable although erroneous construction of the constitution, the judge so acting was a de facto judge. Application of rule.— Where the regular judge of a circuit court in Arkansas ordered an adjourned term but was unable to attend because holding a regular term in another county, the adjourned term failed, and there being no court the acts of a special judge appointed by the lawyers present could not be upheld on the ground that he was an officer de facto. Caldwell v. Barrett, 71 Ark. 310, 74 S. W. 748. There can be no office of judge of a district prior to the date fixed by law for the existence of the district to begin, and a person assuming to act as judge thereof before the office has come into existence is neither a de facto nor a de jure officer. enough to show whether he is a de facto officer.[1] But the official acts of a de facto judge, before he is ousted from office, are binding on third persons and the public.[2] This rule has been applied in cases where a judge's commission has been illegally issued by the proper authority,[3] where he has taken no oath of office,[4] or took an oath to support a power in insurrectionary hostility to the government,[5] where the election or appointment of a judge was declared void after the judgment in question was rendered;[6] where he has not been eligible to the office;[7] where he has been elected and commissioned and has assumed to act before the commencement of his term believing that his term has begun,[8] where he has acted after the expiration of his term, but while still in possession of the office,[9] where he has accepted an incompatible office but continues to act as judge under his commission and no one is appointed in his stead.[10] Nevertheless the principle that the official acts of de facto judges are valid as against third persons cannot be applied to an attempted exercise of judicial power by an officer de jure who claims the right to so act by virtue of his office, when in fact no such power is vested therein.[11] And the acts of one assuming to act as judge of a court which never had any legal existence are inoperative because he is neither a de jure nor a de facto judge.[12]

D. Collateral Attack on Title to Office and Validity of Official Acts. The right of a de facto judge to hold his office is not open to question, nor are his acts subject to attack in a collateral proceeding.[13] These being matters which can only be inquired into in a proceeding to which he is a party.[14] The rule applies although the person acting as judge is incapable of holding the office,[15] and irrespective of the question whether he was properly elected,[16] or whether he is holding two incompatible offices.[17] His right to hold the office will not be inquired into in a habeas corpus proceeding brought to secure the release of a person arrested and held under a writ issued by him. Such right can only be determined in a direct proceeding brought for the purpose.[18] Nor can his title be determined in an action tried before him.[19] Nor in certiorari proceedings to review a conviction had before him.[20] Nor on an appeal taken by a person who has been tried and convicted before him.[21]

I. NATURE AND ESSENTIALS OF JUDGMENTS.

A. In General — 1. DEFINITION OF JUDGMENT. At common law a judgment is the determination or sentence of the law, pronounced by a competent judge or court, as the result of an action or proceeding instituted in or before such court or judge, affirming that, upon the matters submitted for its decision, a legal duty or liability does or does not exist.[1] The corresponding term in equity practice is "The determination and sentence of the law." Clason v. Shotwell, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 31, 34.

"A definite sentence upon the matter at issue between the parties." State v. Wood, 23 N. J. L. 560, 561.

"Every definite sentence or decision by which the merits of a cause are determined, although it be not technically a judgment, or although the proceedings are not capable of being technically enrolled so as to constitute what is technically called a record." Freeman Judgm. § 16 [quoted in Eppright v. Kauffman, 90 Mo. 25, 27, 1 S. W. 736].

"The judicial sentences of courts, rendered in causes within their jurisdiction, and coming legally before them." Peirce v. Boston, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 520, 521.

A judicial sentence may be designated by a different term than "judgment." Thus, the words "final adjustment," as used in a statute, may be held equivalent in meaning to "final judgment." Cooper v. Metzger, 74 Ind. 544.

The use of the word "decree" is very often convenient and proper, as indicating the specific character of a judgment rendered; but it has no place in the statute, and represents nothing but what may with greater propriety

"decree."[2] But under the codes of reformed procedure every final adjudication or determination of the rights of the parties in an action or proceeding is a judgment, whether the proceeding is equitable or legal in its nature.[3]

2. DISTINGUISHED FROM DECREE. The term "judgment" is properly restricted to proceedings at law, while a "decree" is the determination, sentence, or adjudication of a competent court of equity, upon the controversy submitted for its decision.[4]

3. DISTINGUISHED FROM DECISION OR FINDINGS. A finding of facts or conclusions of law by the judge trying a case, or his decision of a controverted point, or be called a judgment. Gawtry v. Adams, 10 Mo. App. 29, 32.

A judgment is sometimes spoken of as "a power by means of which a creditor may enforce his claims by the sale of the debtor's property." Nichols v. Dissler, 31 N. J. L. 461, 473, 86 Am. Dec. 219.

"This definition," says Mr. Freeman, in his very excellent work on judgments, "is just broad enough to comprise all final judgments and all final decrees, and narrow enough not to comprise any which is less than final." Perkins v. Sierra Nevada Silver Min. Co., 10 Nev. 405, 411 [quoting Freeman Judgm. § 14].

4. See 2 Daniell Ch. Pr. 986; Ga. Code, § 4212.

Decree defined see 15 Cyc. 471.

"A decree differs from a judgment both in the process which precedes and determines it and in its contents. . . . While a judgment at law is usually, at least in contested cases, determined by the verdict, the conclusion of law following inevitably as soon as the facts are found, a judge in equity is called upon to decide upon the whole merits of the controversy as it addresses itself to his conscience and sense of fairness, of course within the established rules of equity. Hence while a decree is, equally with a judgment, the deliverance of the law, it is also to a considerable degree the decision of the man who frames it, as the interpreter of that moral standard which equity sets up. Another important particular in which they differ is that a decree is more pliable than a judgment. The latter proceeds upon the determination of a narrow issue, of law or fact, and merely decides upon the existence of an alleged liability as between two contending persons or groups of persons. A decree may be adjusted to meet all the exigencies of the opinion upon the matters submitted, whether oral or in writing, does not constitute a judgment; it is not such a definitive sentence or adjudication as is contemplated by that term.[5]

4. Distinguished From Rule or Order. An order is the mandate or determination of the court upon some subsidiary or collateral matter arising in an action, not disposing of the merits, but adjudicating a preliminary point or directing some step in the proceedings.[6] It has not the qualities or consequences of a judgment.[7] litigation, and to settle all the conflicting rights and claims, however numerous and complicated may be the interests involved. Further, a judgment has in general nothing whatever to do with the means of enforcing the liability which it declares. Certain consequences do indeed flow from it — as the right to issue execution, the attaching of a lien upon land — but these are no part of the judgment, nor is it concerned with directions for making its sanction effective. . . . On the other hand, a decree may, and frequently does, contain more or less minute and specific directions for effectuating its object. Also it may prescribe or forbid a specific act or course of conduct, which a judgment never does. Hence it will be perceived that the orbit of a decree in chancery, so to speak, is much wider than that of a judgment at law." 1 Black Judgm. § 1.

Merger of law and equity. — Under the codes, as stated in the preceding section (see supra, I, A, 1), the distinction being no longer maintained between legal and equitable proceedings, the term "judgment" is applicable to any final adjudication of the rights of parties. But besides this, in some of the states, there is a sort of border-land where equitable relief is administered through common-law forms. Thus in Pennsylvania, where an action of ejectment may be brought to enforce the specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, the sentence pronounced is not regarded as an ordinary judgment at law, but as containing the substance of a decree in equity, since it directs the payment of money by one party and the conveyance of the land by the other. Another definition is: "A decision made during the progress of the cause, either prior or subsequent to final judgment, settling some point of practice or some point collateral to the main issue presented by the pleadings, and necessary to be disposed of before such issue can be passed upon by the court, or necessary to be determined in carrying into execution the final judgment." Where the common-law system of pleading and practice is in force, the term usually employed to designate such an order is "rule." An order or rule is not ordinarily founded upon the whole record in the case, but is granted upon a special application to the court called a "motion."[8]

5. ESSENTIALS OF A JUDGMENT. It is essential to a judgment that it should appear to be the sentence or adjudication of a court or judicial tribunal,[9] and to be the judicial act of the court as such, or of the judge or magistrate who holds or presides in such court.[10] A paper purporting to be a judgment, but not stat-

There is a well known distinction between a "judgment" and an "order." Onslow v. Inland Revenue Com'rs, 25 Q. B. D. 465, 466, 59 L. J. Q. B. 556, 63 L. T. Rep. N. S. 513, 38 Wkly. Rep. 728. Cas. 31, 32 Wkly. Rep. 469]. The distinguishing characteristic of a judgment is that it is final, while that of an order, when it relates to proceedings in an action, is that it is interlocutory. Nolton v. Western R. Corp., 10 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 97, 99. By statute every direction of a court or judge, made or entered in writing, and not included in a judgment, has been denominated an order. Bentley v. Jones, 4 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 335. A direction or a decision of a court or judge entered upon the order book, or made in writing in an action and not final, is an order. Snyder v. Cox, 53 S. W. 262, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 796. Compare Onslow v. Inland Revenue Com'rs, 25 Q. B. D. 465, 466, 59 L. J. Q. B. 556, 63 L. T. Rep. N. S. 513, 38 Wkly. Rep. 728, where it is said: "A 'judgment,' therefore, is a decision obtained in an action, and every other decision is an order."

Examples.— An order for the sale of land of a deceased person is not a final judgment (Crews v. Cleghorn, 13 Ind. 438), nor is an order of a county court allowing a claim against the county and directing that a warrant issue therefor (Sears v. Stone County, 105 Mo. 236, 16 S. W. 878, 24 Am. St. Rep. 378), nor a decision of the court upon a matter addressed to its discretionary authority, as, an application to have a case brought forward on the docket, and to vacate a certain judgment rendered therein (Claggett v. Simes, 25 N. H. 402). And the refusal of the court to issue a writ of mandamus is neither a judgment nor a decree. Craddock v. Croghan, Ky. Dec. 100. On the other hand an order of court made upon motion directing that the surety on a replevin bond recover from his principal the amount which he has been forced to pay is a judgment. State v. Vogel, 14 Mo. App. 187. And it has been held that an order granting an application presented by a trustee for leave to sell the trust property has all the sanctity of a formal judgment. Reinhart v. Blackshear, 105 Ga. 799, 31 S. E. 748.

Order for judgment.— An order merely directing or authorizing the entry of judgment in the case, although entered in the judgment book, does not constitute a judgment. To have this effect it must be so worded as to express the final sentence of the court on the matters contained in the record and to end the case at once, without contemplating any further judicial action. Morgan v. Flexner, 105 Ala. 356, 16 So. 716; Klink v. The Cusseta, 30 Ga. 504 [but see Tift v. Keaton, 78 Ga. 235, 2 S. E. 690, holding that an order of court allowing plaintiff's attorney to enter up judgment for plaintiff is in itself a sufficient judgment for plaintiff for the amount sued for]; Whitwell v. Emory, 3 Mich. 84, 59 Am. Dec. 220; Robinson v. Govers, 67 Hun (N. Y.) 317, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 249; Putnam v. Crombie, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 232; Hagler v. Kelly, (N. D. 1905) 103 N. W. 629; McTavish v. Great Northern R. Co., 8 N. D. 333, 79 N. W. 443; Potter v. Eaton, 26 Wis. 382; Lincoln v. Cross, 11 Wis. 91.

A special proceeding terminates not in a judgment but in a final order. Fenton v. Paillard, 46 Misc. (N. Y.) 151, 93 N. Y. Suppl. 1101, construing Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1301, 3343.

Quasi-judicial bodies.— It is usual to recognize the determinations of certain bodies invested with minor administrative powers, and acting in a judicial capacity in reference to their exercise, as equivalent to judgments of the courts. Such is the case with reference to road commissioners, in adjudicating upon the necessity of a road and in locating and making assessments for the same. Longfellow v. Quimby, 29 Me. 196, 48 Am. Dec. 525. Also in the case of a town council, in auditing and allowing a claim for a certain and ascertained amount. Kelly v. Wimberly, 61 Miss. 548.

An act of the legislature directing the auditor-general to restore certain accounts between the state and certain of its counties to their condition as they were before he made certain charges and gave certain credits is not a judgment, and does not constitute an adjudication as between the counties. Clare County v. Auditor-Gen., 41 Mich. 182, 1 N. W. 926.

ing by what court rendered, or when, or for what cause of action, is a nullity.[11] It is also necessary to a judgment that there should be an existing action, and an issue to be decided, either of law or fact;[12] and except in purely ex parte proceedings that it should appear to have been rendered between adverse parties, or between a party plaintiff and some res which stands in place of a defendant.[13] But in general the office of a judgment is fully performed when it declares and adjudicates the existence or non-existence of the liability sought to be established; it is not concerned with the means of enforcing the liability declared. Although it adjudges that the one party "have and recover" a certain sum from the other, it is not necessary that it should command the debtor to pay the money, or authorize or direct the issue of an execution,[14] or that it should be served upon any party to the cause after it is entered or filed.[15]

6. Language of a Judgment. The proper formula of a judgment at law is, "It is considered by the court," etc.[16] But the use of these words is not essential to its validity; other terms may be employed if they clearly indicate that the sentence is the judicial act of the court adjudicating the matter in controversy.[17] A Decree drawn by counsel. — A paper drawn up by plaintiff's attorney, not signed and not mentioned in the record nor marked as filed, although found in the official files of the case, purporting to be a decree for the sale of the land in suit, will not as a decree authorize such sale. [quoted in Deuel v. Hawke, 2 Minn. 50, 57], where it is said: "If judgment be for the plaintiff, it is also considered that the defendant be either amerced for his willful delay of justice in not immediately obeying the king's writ, by rendering the plaintiff his due," etc.

Judgment for defendant. — The proper form of final judgment in an action at law, against plaintiff and in favor of defendant, is as follows: "Therefore it is considered that the said (plaintiff) take nothing by his suit and that the said (defendant) do go thereof without day." It is essential that the judgment should include a "nil capiat" or an "eat inde sine die" or equivalent words. People v. Severson, 113 Ill. App. 496. See also Sprick v. Washington County, 3 Nebr. 253.

On demurrer. — To constitute a sufficient judgment on a demurrer, there should be a formal entry of the submission on demurrer to a specified pleading, a recital of consideration thereof by the court, and a formal adjudication, such as "It is therefore considered and adjudged by the court that the demurrers be . . . and are hereby overruled" or sustained, as the case may be. Indiana. — To constitute a valid judgment, the word "recover" should be used, and the amount of the recovery should be stated where a money judgment is rendered. Need-judgment is properly expressed in the English language, although the previous proceedings have been conducted in French.[18]

7. Formal Requisites — a. In General. According to the modern doctrine a judgment is to be tested by its substance rather than its form, and the form is not very material, provided that in substance it shows directly and not inferentially the judicial character of the act, the nature and scope of the adjudication, and its application to the controversy before the court.[19] Even where the form of a judgment is prescribed by statute, a departure from it is not necessarily fatal to the adjudication.[20] A judgment and the findings may be incorporated in the same instrument without affecting the validity of the judgment.[21]

b. As Determined by Nature of Issues. Where issues of fact have been found by a jury, the proper form of the judgment, if it is for plaintiff, is "quod recuperet," that is, that plaintiff "do recover";[22] if for defendant, the judgment should be "nil capiat per breve," that is, that plaintiff "take nothing" by his writ or declaration,[23] except where plaintiff took issue upon a plea in abatement, in which case, the plea prevailing, the judgment for defendant is that the action abate, or that the writ or declaration be quashed.[24] Where the issue of law raised by a demurrer to any of the pleadings is found for plaintiff, the judgment is final and definitive and should be "quod recuperet,"[25] except where plaintiff has

Where issue has been joined on a plea in abatement (the only plea in the case) and the issue submitted to a jury, resulting in a verdict for plaintiff, the court should award a peremptory judgment "quod recuperet" and not a default for want of a plea. Bishop v. Camp, 39 Fla. 517, 22 So. 735.

23. Black L. Dict.; Coke Litt. 363.

24. Where judgment is rendered for defendant in an action, on his plea that the action is barred by the judgment in another suit, the proper order is that the action abate, and not that plaintiff take nothing by his action. Coubrough v. Adams, 70 Cal. 374, 11 Pac. 634.

But where defendant demurred for a variance between declaration and writ, and pending the demurrer leave was granted to amend, whereupon the demurrer was overruled, it was held that the judgment should successfully demurred to a dilatory plea or plea in abatement, in which case the judgment is "respondeat ouster," that is, that defendant "do answer over," and requires defendant, beaten on a preliminary point, to present a more substantial defense.[26] When the issue raised by the demurrer is determined in favor of defendant, the judgment in his favor is final and disposes of the case, unless leave be granted to amend the pleading, or withdraw the demurrer, as the case may be.[27] The proper style of the judgment may also depend upon the form of the action, immemorial custom having prescribed the formula of words to be employed in the judgments rendered in certain classes of proceedings.[28]

8. CERTAINTY OF DETERMINATION. It is necessary to the validity of a judgment that it should be certain and definite, or be capable of being made so by proper construction; and to this end it should state clearly the time of its rendition, the parties, the matter in dispute, and particularly the result of the action with the relief granted, so that what the judgment gives, orders, or decides should be clearly apparent.[29]

Partition.— In the action for partition, the interlocutory judgment whereby it is directed that partition be made, is called judgment "quod partitio fiat," while the style of the final judgment in the same action, confirming the partition made, upon the return of the writ, is "quod partitio facta firma et stabilis in perpetuum." 5 Bacon Abr. 292. Account.— The interlocutory judgment in an action of account, whereby it is directed that "the defendant do account," is called judgment "quod computet." 3 Blackstone Comm. 164.

Judgment nisi.— At common law a judgment nisi was one entered on the return of the nisi prius record with the postea indorsed, which would become absolute according to the terms of the postea, unless the court out of which the nisi prius record proceeded should, within the first four days, otherwise order. 9. Finality of Determination. Judgments may be either final or interlocutory.[30] A final judgment is one which disposes of the case, either by dismissing it before a hearing is had upon its merits, or after trial, by rendering judgment either in favor of plaintiff or defendant.[31] An interlocutory judgment is one which determines some preliminary or subordinate point or plea, or settles some step, question, or default arising in the progress of the cause, but does not adjudicate the ultimate rights of the parties.[32] No judgment is final which does not determine the rights of the parties in the cause and preclude further inquiry as Final judgments are such as at once put an end to the action (Elliott v. Mayfield, 3 Ala. 223, 226; Treadway v. Coe, 21 Conn. 283; Allen v. Adams, 17 Conn. 67, 72; Deuel v. Hawke, 2 Minn. 50, 57; Valentine v. Central Nat. Co. v. Davis, 40 Ga. 309, 320; Turner v. Browder, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 825, 827]), or by determining that plaintiff is or is not entitled to recover, and the amount in debt or damages to be recovered (Mahoning County Bank's Appeal, 32 Pa. St. 158). If a judgment so completely fixes the rights of the parties as that the court has nothing further to do in the action, then it is final. Valentine v. Central Nat. Bank, 10 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 188, 191. They are the ultimate and final adjustment of the whole matters in controversy, and put the parties out of court. State v. Hays, 30 W. Va. 107, 3 S. E. 177.

"A judgment of nonsuit is a final disposition of the suit in which it is entered, but it does not ordinarily bar a subsequent suit for the same cause of action; it is not a final disposition of the subject matter in litigation. In examining the books, it will be found that the term final judgment is sometimes used to signify a final disposition of the particular suit, and sometimes a final determination of all litigation on the subject matter thereof." Bowne v. Johnson, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 185, 186.

Necessity of entry.— The judgment is as final when pronounced by the court as when it is entered and recorded by the clerk, as required by statute. California State Tel. Co. v. Patterson, 1 Nev. 150. See also infra, VII.

32. See cases cited infra, this note.

An interlocutory judgment is one given in the course of a cause before final judgment (Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in Nacoochee Hydraulic Min. Co. v. Davis, 40 Ga. 309, 320]), or such as is given in the middle of a cause, upon some plea, proceeding, or default, which is only intermediate, and does not finally determine or complete the suit (3 Blackstone Comm. 396, 397 [quoted in Lockwood v. Jones, 7 Conn. 431, 446; Nacoochee Hydraulic Min. Co. v. Davis, 40 Ga. 309, 320; Turner v. Browder, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 825, 827; Holden v. McMakin, 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 270, 288]), but contemplates further proceedings for that purpose (Elliott v. Mayfield, 3 Ala. 223, 226 [quoting 3 Blackstone Comm. 396; Bingham Judgm. 2, 12, L. lib.; 2 Tomlyn L. Dict. 287]). All judgments that do not fully determine the controversy and put the parties out of court are interlocutory. State v. Hays, 30 W. Va 107, 118, 3 S. E. 177. If anything remains to be done by the court before the rights of the parties are fixed, it is interlocutory. Freeman Judgm. § 12 [cited in Valentine v. Central Nat. Bank, 10 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 188, 191]. The interlocutory judgments most usually spoken of are those incomplete judgments whereby the right of plaintiff is indeed established, but the quantum of damages sustained by him is not ascertained. 3 Blackstone Comm. 397 [quoted in Stedman v. Poterie, 139 Pa. St. 100, 108, 21 Atl. 219].

"Interlocutory order" defined see Keifer v. Ruchert, 93 Md. 97, 99, 48 Atl. 460; Clagett v. Crawford, 12 Gill & J. (Md.) 275, 281; Meyers v. Becker, 29 Hun (N. Y.) 567, 573. See also Orders.

The nature of any order, as a decree or final order, or as not final, depends entirely on the effect produced by the adjudication upon the rights and interests of parties. The usual distinction between interlocutory and other orders, depending on the stage of the cause on which they are made, is not the test for appellate purposes. Barry v. Briggs, 22 Mich. 201, 204.

Final or interlocutory decree see Equity, 16 Cyc. 471.

to their rights in the premises.[33] But it is not essential, for a judgment to be final, that it should settle all the rights existing between the parties to the suit; all that is required is that it should determine the issues involved in the action; and the judgment is none the less final because some future orders of the court may become necessary to carry it into effect.[34]

10. Judgments as Obligations — a. In General. A judgment is not an assignment, even though entered on confession,[35] nor is it a specialty, within the meaning of a statute providing for the limitation of actions founded upon a specialty.[36] But it is to be regarded as a debt of record,[37] and may constitute a vested right of property in the creditor which cannot lawfully be diminished or destroyed by legislative action.[38]

b. As Contracts. Although numerous cases have ruled that judgments are to be considered and treated in law as contracts,[39] yet this view is opposed by a

A judgment is a contract in the sense that it may be sued upon in another judicial tribunal, but it is not a contract in that it can only be rendered against a party then capable of contracting a specialty debt (Wadsworth v. Henderson, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 1003, 1008); for it is not true that a judgment rests either upon the will or the capacity to contract of the party against whom it is rendered (Freeman Judgm. § 4 [quoted in Wadsworth v. Henderson, 16 Fed. 447, 451]).

A judgment of this sort involves two ideas — the contract upon which it is rendered and the judgment itself. The one is the act of the parties — the other is the act of the court. They are entirely separate and distinct. Moore v. Holland, 16 S. C. 15, 27.

depends, as a general rule, on the law of the state or country in which it was rendered.[45]

B. Authority of Court or Judge[46] — 1. In General. Where proceedings are had under the authority of a statute, with no objection to the jurisdiction of the court or the validity of the law, the judgment cannot be disturbed, although the statute is afterward adjudged unconstitutional.[47] But where statutory powers are conferred upon a court of inferior jurisdiction, and the mode of executing those powers is prescribed, the course pointed out must be substantially pursued, or the judgments of the court will be void.[48]

2. Constitution of Court. In order that a judgment should be recognized as valid, it is necessary that it should have been rendered by a lawful and duly constituted court.[49] But on principles of public policy and for the security of rights it is held that the regular judgments of a de facto court, whose existence has afterward been pronounced unconstitutional and void, are nevertheless valid and conclusive.[50]

3. Time and Place of Rendition — a. Time of Holding Court. A judgment rendered at a term of court held at a different time from that ordained or authorized by the law is void,[51] or at least liable to reversal for irregularity.[52]

In Colorado, where a demurrer to a complaint was overruled, and defendant declined to plead over, it was proper to enter a judgment of the parties,[54] a valid judgment cannot be rendered in vacation, this being a judicial act which can be performed only when the court is in session.[55]

c. After End of Term. In accordance with these principles, it is held that a judgment of a court holding regular terms, if rendered after the time fixed by law for its adjournment, is invalid and will be reversed on appeal,[56] unless where ment against defendant in vacation on the complaint, under Mills Annot. But a judgment entered in vacation as of the last day of the previous term has the same effect, when signed by the judge at the next term, as if entered in term-time. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Elizabethtown Dist. Public Schools, 105 Ky. 358, 49 S. W. 34, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1228.

Rendition and entry of a judgment are to be distinguished; and if the judgment is duly rendered during term-time, it is then complete, and its validity is in no wise affected by the fact that the clerk does not enter it until the vacation. Sieber v. Frink, 7 Colo. 148, 2 Pac. 901; Earls v. Earls, 27 Kan. 538; Manitowoc County v. Sullivan, 51 Wis. 115, 8 N. W. 12. But see Mitchell v. St. John, 98 Ind. 598; McGregor First Nat. A judgment overruling a demurrer to a petition for injunction and receiver, rendered on an interlocutory hearing in vacation before the appearance term, is a mere nullity. Toomer v. Warren, 123 Ga. 477, 51 S. E. 393.

56. California.— Smith v. Chichester, 1 Cal. 409.

Connecticut.— Although Gen. St. (1902) § 510, provides that a trial shall be ended and judgment rendered before the close of the next term after that at which the trial was commenced, a judgment rendered thereafter, although it may be erroneous, and will be so if rendered against the express objection of one of the parties, is not void for want of jurisdiction. Lawrence v. Cannavan, 76 Conn. 303, 56 Atl. 556.

Illinois.— When proceedings for the confirmation of a special tax are begun in the county court at a probate term, the final

this is done by the consent of the parties,[57] or where the decision of the cause is carried over the vacation by a proper entry, such as a curia advisari vult.[58]

d. At Chambers. Regularly a judgment should not be made or rendered by the judge at chambers; it is not valid unless passed in open court.[59]

e. Premature Entry of Judgment. Where the statutes direct that judgment shall not be entered until a certain time after the commencement of the action, or the lapse of a term or terms, a judgment prematurely rendered is radically defective, and liable to be reversed or set aside,[60] although probably not absolutely void, the objection not going to the jurisdiction.[61] And the same applies to a judgment rendered before the case is in proper shape for such final action to be taken.[62] judgment may be rendered at a law term, without any order expressly transferring the cause to the common-law docket, since the county court when holding law terms and when holding probate terms is the same tribunal. Callon v. Jacksonville, 147 Ill. 113, 35 N. E. 223.

But where the trial of a cause is begun in a term, with the bona fide expectation and belief that it will be concluded before the day shall arrive when the judge is directed, but not imperatively required, to hold court in another county, he may remain, conclude the trial of that case, receive the verdict, and render judgment, although this may happen to be done on a day, or at a time, when regularly he would be holding court in the other county. Evidence of consent.— A party's consent to the rendition of a judgment after the time allowed by statute cannot be implied from his agreement at the first hearing for subsequent written and oral arguments at a date not then set, nor from other acts occurring before the expiration of the statutory time; and although such consent may be implied from his requests to postpone the hearing of the case, made after the time allowed by statute for the rendition of the judgment, he is not estopped from objecting thereafter to its rendition, where the other party is not misled to his prejudice. f. Place of Trial or Judgment. It is an irregularity but not a destructive jurisdictional defect to try a case and render judgment at a place other than that fixed by law for the holding of the court,[63] or in a county other than that declared by statute to be the proper county for its trial,[64] or to render judgment in a county other than that in which the venue was laid,[65] or other than that in which the trial was had.[66]

C. Validity as Affected by Status of Parties — 1. In General. Normally all persons, natural or artificial, may be made defendants in a judgment; but special rules determine the validity of judgments for or against persons whose status is abnormal, such as those who are insane or who are under the disability of infancy or coverture,[67] or those whose personality is suspended, for juristic purposes, by civil death.[68]

2. Death of Party Before Judgment[69] — a. In General. A judgment rendered either for or against a party to a suit after his death is held in some states to be absolutely void;[70] but according to the generally accepted doctrine, if the fact of the death does not appear on the record, the judgment may be voidable, but is not void so as to be exposed to collateral impeachment.[71]

b. Judgment Against Deceased Party — (i) In General. In several states the doctrine prevails that a judgment rendered against a defendant who is dead at the time is absolutely null and void.[72] But the great preponderance of authority is to the effect that, where the court has acquired jurisdiction of the validly be entered while an order staying all proceedings in the case remains still in force. Uhe v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 3 S. D. 563, 54 N. W. 601.

England.— The statute provides that judgment may be entered upon a verdict within two terms after the death of the party against whom the verdict was given. But it is held that a judgment is valid, although not entered within the time, if the verdict was returned during the life of the party, and the delay was occasioned by a motion touching an award. Doctrine of relation.— On the fiction that judicial proceedings are to be considered as taking place at the earliest period of the day on which they are done, a judgment may be held valid which was entered on the same day on which defendant died, although at a later hour of the day. Personal representatives joined.— If the personal representatives of a deceased defendant were duly made parties to the proceeding previous to the judgment, it is not enough to vitiate the judgment that it is entered against the dead man by name, instead of against the representatives, for the error is merely clerical. (II) Dissolved Corporation. And on similar principles a judgment rendered against a corporation after its dissolution by an act of the legislature is erroneous but not void.[74]

(III) Plaintiff's Knowledge of Death. In some few cases it is held that a judgment so entered is valid if plaintiff was ignorant of the death of defendant, but otherwise if he was informed of the fact.[75]

c. Death of One of Several Defendants. Where the action is against joint defendants, and one dies before judgment, his death not being suggested on the record, and judgment is rendered against all the defendants, it is generally held that the judgment is irregular and voidable, but not void,[76] although some of the decisions hold the judgment in such a case to be a mere nullity.[77] But although the judgment as against the deceased defendant is at best voidable it is valid and binding as against the surviving defendants.[78]

d. Judgment For Deceased Party. A judgment rendered in favor of a party after his death is regarded in some states as null and void,[79] although in a majority it is considered as valid until reversed or vacated.[80] With reference to the stage of the proceedings at which plaintiff's death occurs, it is held that if this happens before the verdict the action should be revived, and if this is omitted the judgment, although not void, may be vacated on a proper application.[81] If plaintiff missed, and the judgment should be entered as against the original parties under Code Civ. Proc. § 763. Jewett v. Schmidt, 45 Misc. (N. Y.) 471, 92 N. Y. Suppl. 737.

Where a defendant dies after damages have been assessed or a verdict rendered against him, a judgment entered on such assessment, or a verdict after his death, and before the end of the vacation next ensuing, is entitled to rank as a judgment in the administration of his assets. dies after verdict, it is proper to enter judgment nunc pro tunc as of the date of the verdict, but if it is entered as of the actual date when rendered, it is not void.[82]

e. Death of One of Joint Plaintiffs. If one of two joint plaintiffs dies before the rendition of judgment in their favor, the judgment may be irregular but is not void.[83]

f. Death of Party Before Suit. Where the death of the party or one of the parties named as plaintiffs, before the commencement of the suit, is not pleaded in abatement, the judgment rendered in the action is not void.[84] But if an action is begun against one who is dead at the time, and prosecuted to judgment, the judgment will be absolutely void for want of jurisdiction.[85] cannot confer jurisdiction; that is, the agreement of the parties cannot give the court the right to adjudicate upon any cause of action or subject-matter which the law has withheld from its cognizance.[87] But where the court has jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter, no mere error, irregularity, or informality will vitiate the judgment to such an extent as to render it absolutely void.[88] And the judgment of a court of general jurisdiction is always presumed to have been rightly given, and its jurisdiction to have attached fully, until the contrary is shown.[89] But jurisdiction which has once attached may be lost, and thereby the court may be deprived of the authority to make any further order or judgment; as, when the case has been taken up on appeal or error,[90] or duly removed from a state court to a federal court.[91] So jurisdiction may be lost and the authority of the court terminated by the expiration of the term without judgment rendered and without a proper continuance.[92]

2. OF PERSON. Jurisdiction of the person is essential to the validity of a judgment, and a judgment rendered against one who was not made a party to the action, or not duly cited, or who was no longer before the court, is void.[93] There must also be jurisdiction of the person of plaintiff.[94] Again jurisdiction of the person may depend upon the domicile or residence of a party; and if statutes provide that a defendant shall not be sued in a county or district other than that where he resides, a judgment given against him by a court in another place within the same state will not be valid.[95]

3. OF SUBJECT-MATTER OR CAUSE OF ACTION. Even with full jurisdiction over the parties, no court can render a valid judgment unless it also has jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the litigation or the cause of action.[96] This rule is

A judgment for defendant in an action in which the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter but not of the person of defendant is not erroneous, although he made a timely objection, and reserved an exception to the ruling of the court, and might for this reason have caused the judgment to be reversed had it been against him. 4. Of Question Decided. In addition to jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter, it is necessary to the validity of a judgment that the court should have jurisdiction of the question which its judgment assumes to decide, or of the particular remedy or relief which it assumes to grant, and should not undertake to pass upon matters outside the issue.[2]

Where a complaint alleges two causes of action, the fact that the court had jurisdiction of one of them will not support a judgment upon both, where it had no jurisdiction of the other. But a court of chancery, after acquiring jurisdiction of a party in a proper case, may decree performance of contracts relating to lands lying in another state, but if the party fails to convey in obedience to the decree, the decree does not affect the legal title to the land. constitutional law, would it be competent for the legislature of the state, by statute, to dispense with the necessity of such service or notice, although a contrary opinion has sometimes been expressed.[4] Mere cognizance of the fact that a suit has been brought is not notice in the sense in which the term is here used. To give validity to the judgment, the notice must apprise defendant of what is required of him and of the consequences which may follow if he neglects to defend the action.[5] Hence also he must be accorded an opportunity to present his defense.[6] And if defendant has not been served or notified, no judgment in his favor or against plaintiff can be given.[7] In the case of proceedings in rem the judgment may bind the property affected, without personal service on any party, but no personal judgment or decree can be made without such service.[8] in the process or its service, and gives the court full jurisdiction over his person;[9] but the case is otherwise where the appearance is special and is entered for the purpose of taking advantage of a failure of notice or defective service.[10]

c. Appearance by Attorney. An appearance for defendant by his authorized attorney is equally efficacious in waiving irregularities and conferring jurisdiction as an appearance in person.[11] And it will be presumed that an appearance so entered by attorney was authorized by defendant.[12] But if the appearance was in fact unauthorized, the judgment will be voidable, or even, according to some of the decisions, wholly void.[13]

d. Constructive Service of Process. It is said that a state has the right to prescribe the mode of serving the process of its own courts upon its own resident citizens, and that a judgment is valid, at least until set aside in a direct proceed-

Defendant duly served.— The validity of a judgment against a party who was duly served is not affected by the fact that the attorney who appeared for him and made defense was not authorized. Woodward v. Willard, 33 Iowa 542.

Parol proof of unauthorized appearance.—A non-resident defendant, who had no notice of an action in which judgment went against him by default, may, in a petition to review the judgment, prove by parol that an appearance entered by an attorney on his behalf was unauthorized, and in that event he is in no

ing for that purpose, when based upon such a form of citation as the law authorizes, although without actual notice to defendant;[14] but the weight of authority is to the effect that no valid personal judgment can be rendered against a defendant upon whom the service of process was merely constructive and who did not appear.[15] And at any rate statutes allowing other than personal service of process must be strictly complied with, in order to give the court jurisdiction, and such compliance must appear affirmatively in the proceedings.[16]

2. CITATION OF NON-RESIDENTS — a. In General. A personal judgment against a non-resident defendant, upon constructive or substituted service only, and without an appearance by or for him, is void, except as a means of reaching property of his within the state, or affecting some interest therein, or as an adjudication upon status.[17] But although defendant be a non-resident, the court will have jurisdiction if he is personally served with process within the state,[18] or if he appears in the action personally or by a duly authorized attorney.[19]

b. Extraterritorial Service of Process. Process issuing from the courts of one state or country cannot run into another, and although a non-resident defendant may have been personally served with such process in the state or country of his domicile, it will not give such jurisdiction as to authorize a personal judgment against him.[20]

c. Service by Publication. Some decisions hold that constructive service by publication will give the court such jurisdiction over a non-resident that its judgment, although not enforceable beyond the state, may be satisfied out of any property of defendant found within the state;[21] but the accepted rule is that a personal judgment rendered on this species of citation only, without attachment of property

Service on resident agent.— A non-resident may be bound by a judgment against him, if it is founded on personal service effected within the state on his duly authorized agent; but this does not apply where the cashier of a local bank is put into the ostensible position of an agent for a non-resident corporation, by receiving money due to it, by means of a trick on the part of the resident plaintiff, arranged for the mere purpose of bringing defendant within the jurisdiction of the state. Practice in Kentucky.— On the statute authorizing constructive service on a non-resident defendant by the making of a warning and without appearance by defendant, except in an action for divorce, which is governed by special rules, is void for all purposes.[22]

3. Attachment of Property — a. In General. Where jurisdiction of an action is acquired by attachment of defendant's property, but without personal service of process upon him, no personal judgment can be rendered against him, although the court may have power to adjudicate upon and dispose of the property attached.[23]

b. Non-Resident Defendant. In an action in a state court against a non-resident defendant, begun by attachment of his property within the jurisdiction of the court, there is no authority to render a judgment enforceable against him personally, unless there was also personal service of process upon him; and in the absence of such service, a judgment expressed in general terms will be effective only against the property so attached.[24] The judgment will not even be enforceable against other property of defendant found within the court's jurisdiction,

4. Joint Defendants — a. Service on Part Only. Unless a statute provides otherwise it is a general rule that, where a suit is instituted against several defendants jointly, and one is not served with process, and the court assumes jurisdiction and proceeds to render judgment against them all, the judgment is erroneous and voidable, or in some states absolutely void, at least as against defendant not served.[29] But the judgment is probably not void as an entirety, many cases holding that it is valid and enforceable against defendant who was served, and that he provided it is shown that defendants not brought in cannot be found or that it is impossible to serve process on them,[32] and that there is a joint liability or joint cause of action against all.[33] But a voluntary appearance for defendants not served will cure the error and permit a judgment against all.[34]

b. Statutory Provisions. In several states statutes have been enacted which provide that where an action is instituted against two or more defendants upon an alleged joint liability, and some of them are served with process, but not the others, plaintiff may proceed to trial against those who are before the court, and, if he recovers, may have judgment against all the defendants whom he shows to be jointly liable, but it must be so entered as to be enforceable only against the joint property of all and the separate property of those served.[35] The provisions of such a statute must be strictly followed to give validity to the judgment.[36]

Appearance for one defendant.— Where an attorney appears specially for one defendant in an action against two, and afterward, as attorney for defendant, acknowledges judgment in favor of plaintiff, it is good only as to defendant for whom he appeared, and a joint execution is erroneous. Kimmel v. Kimmel, 5 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 294.

Unauthorized appearance.—A judgment entered against one who has not been served, on an appearance by an unauthorized attorney, which has not been ratified or confirmed, is absolutely void as against such defendant. Newton First Nat. Bank v. Wm. B. Grimes Dry-Goods Co., 45 Kan. 510, 26 Pac. 56. Where two defendants were summoned in a case, but no return was made as to one, and afterward an attorney confessed judgment for defendants, on a scire facias issued seventeen years afterward to revive the judgment against the executors of defendant, served alone, it is competent to prove that the plural entry was made without authority, and that the judgment was not joint. Wright v. Harris, 24 Ga. 415.

Construction of judgment.— Where process is served only on a part of defendants, and judgment is taken against "defendants" without naming them, and without any appearance of those not served, the judgment will be understood to be only against those who were duly served. 36. The judgment must be in form against both or all the defendants; and a judgment against the one served alone is erroneous in substance. Kelly v. Van Austin, 17 Cal. 564; Stehr v. Ollbermann, 49 N. J. L. 633, 10 Atl. 547; Nelson v. Bostwick, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 37, 40 Am. Dec. 310. And if it should appear upon the trial that the contract in suit was not joint, but was made with one of defendants alone, then the statute does not apply, and plaintiff cannot recover under it. Fleming v. Freese, 26 N. J. L. 263; Harker v. Brink, 24 N. J. L. 333. And if defendant who was served and brought before the court succeeds in establishing a personal defense to the action, plaintiff cannot recover against the other defendants, although his cause of

c. Partners. At common law, in an action against a firm, each partner must be duly served with process, and if some are not served, a judgment rendered against them all will be voidable, at least so far as concerns those not cited.[37] But in those states where the joint debtor acts are in force a judgment may be rendered against the firm, to be enforced against the partnership property and the individual property of the partners served.[38]

d. Non-Residents. Similar rules apply where one of defendants is served within the jurisdiction, but the other, being a non-resident, is not cited. At common law, in this case, a joint judgment cannot be rendered nor any form of judgment which will bind a defendant not brought into court.[39] But in several states, either by force of statutes or the settled practice of the courts, a judgment, either joint or several, may be entered, which will be effective against defendant who was served.[40]

5. Defective Process. A summons or other writ which is radically defective will not support a judgment; but if the writ, although imperfect in some particulars, is sufficiently complete to constitute a legal notice to defendant, and to inform him of the essential facts he is entitled to know, the consequent judgment is not void, although it may be liable to be reversed or vacated if defendant takes advantage of the defect promptly.[41] Particularly with regard to misnomer, it is

Date of writ.— A mistake in the date of the writ, or the fact that the date is left blank, must be taken advantage of before judgment. Wood v. State Bank, 1 Fla. 378; Ambler v. Leach, 15 W. Va. 677.

Notice of time and place for appearance.— If the notice does not state the time or place at which defendant is required to appear, it lacks the essentials of legal process, and no valid judgment can be rendered upon it. Kitsmiller v. Kitchen, 24 Iowa 163; Falkner v. Guild, 10 Wis. 563.

Writ not signed or sealed.— If the writ lacks the signature of the clerk or other officer having authority to issue it, or if it is not under seal, it will not support a judgment. Costley v. Driver, 45 Ala. 230. But compare Doe v. Pendleton, 15 Ohio 735; Ambler v. Leach, 15 W. Va. 677, holding that held that if process is really served upon the person intended to be sued, although a wrong name is given him in the writ and return, and he suffers a default, or omits to plead the misnomer in abatement, he is bound by the judgment rendered against him.[42] And a similar rule applies in the case of a misnomer of plaintiff.[43]

6. DEFECTIVE SERVICE OF PROCESS. Although the service of process may have been defective or irregular, the judgment will not necessarily be void. Advantage of such a matter should be taken by a proper motion or proceeding in the action. It is only when the attempted service is so irregular as to amount to no service at all that there can be said to be a want of jurisdiction.[44] But statutes authorizing constructive service of process are to be strictly construed; and in the case of a these defects must be taken advantage of by motion or by writ of error.

Indorsement.— A judgment is not invalidated by the fact of an unnecessary indorsement of the amount upon the summons. Larimer v. Clemmer, 31 Ohio St. 499. So of the omission of such an indorsement when it is required by the statute. Lawton v. Nicholas, 12 Okla. 550, 73 Pac. 262.

Return.— The fact that the officer's return upon mesne process is not signed will not invalidate the judgment. McElrath v. Butler, 29 N. C. 398.

Naming defendant.— A summons which does not name defendant, otherwise than by describing him as the "heir of T.," will give the court no jurisdiction to render a judgment against him. Tremblay v. Ætna L. Ins. Co., 97 Me. 547, 55 Atl. 509, 94 Am. St. Rep. 521.

Returnable too soon.— If the writ is made returnable too soon, or does not give defendant the required number of days' notice, the judgment will be erroneous but not void. citation by publication, or other form of constructive notification, strict compliance with the provisions of the statute is necessary to give the court jurisdiction.[45] It is also held that no valid judgment by default can be taken when there is no return by the officer serving the writ,[46] or when the return is so faulty or defective as not to show a service of the writ,[47] although minor irregularities or ambiguities in the return will not vitiate the judgment.[48]

F. Pleadings to Sustain Judgment — 1. Necessity For Pleadings. No valid judgment can be entered in an action without the filing of a declaration or complaint or some written statement of plaintiff's cause of action and demands,[49] unless this is waived by the agreement of the parties or defendant's confession, or ratified by subsequent consent.[50] And it is a general rule that if an action proceeds to trial and verdict without the filing of any plea on the part of defendant, or without the formation of an issue for the determination of the court, a judgment rendered therein is erroneous and voidable if not absolutely void.[51]

G. Effect of Invalidity — 1. IN GENERAL. A judgment which is void, as distinguished from one which is merely voidable, or liable to be vacated or set aside, for irregularity or other cause, or reversed for error, is a mere nullity. It is not binding on any one; it raises no lien or estoppel; it does not impair or affect the rights of any one,[54] unless by the agreement of the parties concerned;[55] it confers no rights upon the party in whose favor it is given, and affords no protection to persons acting under it;[56] it does not even operate as a discontinuance of the action.[57] Such a judgment may be vacated or set aside, even on motion of the party in whose favor it is given, if it is not such a judgment as he sought;[58] but it is not necessary to take any steps to vacate or avoid it until an effort is made to enforce it.[59] Finally a void judgment is open to collateral impeachment, and may be declared a nullity in any court where it is material to the interests of the parties to consider it.[60]

2. PARTIAL INVALIDITY. It has been said that a judgment must be either valid or void as a whole,[61] and if it is a nullity as to some of the parties affected, it cannot be held good as to any others.[62] But this principle is not universally admitted,[63] and, as to jurisdiction of the subject-matter, it seems that, although the judgment may go beyond the issues and grant relief not asked for, or not

can be no recovery. Riley v. Jarvis, 43 W. Va. 43, 26 S. E. 366.

Judgments may be void, irregular, or erroneous.— Carter v. Rountree, 109 N. C. 29, 32, 13 S. E. 716.

An irregular judgment is one entered contrary to the course of the court — contrary to the method of procedure and practice under it allowed by law in some material respect; as if the court gave judgment without the intervention of a jury in a case where the party complaining was entitled to a jury trial and did not waive his right to the same (Carter v. Rountree, 109 N. C. 29, 32, 13 S. E. 716), or as a judgment without service of process (Koonce v. Butler, 84 N. C. 221, 223 [citing Wolfe v. Davis, 74 N. C. 597]).

An erroneous judgment is one rendered according to the course and practice of the courts, but contrary to law. Carter v. Rountree, 109 N. C. 29, 32, 13 S. E. 716; Koonce v. Butler, 84 N. C. 221, 223.

A void judgment is one that has merely semblance, without some essential element or elements, as where the court purporting to render it has not jurisdiction. Carter v. Rountree, 109 N. C. 29, 32, 13 S. E. 716.

Evidence of invalidity.— A judgment will not be held void on its face unless the record thereof affirmatively shows that the court was without jurisdiction to render it. 55. A decree rendered in accordance with a consent verdict, although it may not be valid as a judgment of the court, will, in the absence of fraud, accident, or mistake, be operative as an agreement binding on all the parties thereto. Driver v. Wood, 114 Ga. 296, 40 S. E. 257 [citing Kidd v. Huff, 105 Ga. 209, 31 S. E. 430].

Erroneous judgments distinguished.— While, as stated in the text, a void judgment will not protect a person acting under it, and while it is also held that a judgment which is voidable for irregularity will not, after being set aside, justify the acts of a party done under it before it was vacated, yet this principle is not applied to a judgment which is merely erroneous and which is reversed for error by a court of review. within the competence of the court, yet it may be good for so much as the court had power and authority to include in it.[64]

3. VALIDATING VOID JUDGMENT. A void judgment cannot be made valid and operative by its subsequent approval by the judge,[65] by his approval of a sale on execution held under it,[66] by afterward supplying the elements which were lacking to its validity,[67] by a subsequent proceeding instituted for that purpose in a court of equity,[68] by citing the party against whom it was entered to show cause why it should not be declared valid,[69] by a revival of the judgment,[70] or by the taking of an appeal from it, or even by an affirmance on appeal, if the affirmance is on grounds not affecting the question of validity.[71] But these principles do not apply to such errors as are cured by the statute of jeofails.[72] It should be added that it is not competent for the legislature to validate a judgment void for want of jurisdiction, and a statute purporting to have that effect would be unconstitutional.[73]

4. RATIFICATION AND ESTOPPEL. There are some cases holding that a void judgment cannot be made valid by ratification, waiver, or estoppel;[74] but the generally accepted doctrine is that the party who would have a right to avoid the judgment may give it validity by his acceptance and ratification of it, or be estopped by his conduct to impeach its validity.[75] And this he does by accepting or sharing in the fruits or benefits of the judgment,[76] by attempting to use the judgment as a bar or a defense to a subsequent action,[77] or by an unconditional offer of a certain sum in compromise and satisfaction of his liability under the judgment.[78] Also a party who successfully opposes an objection made by the adverse party that the court has no jurisdiction cannot question the jurisdiction after an adverse decision on appeal.[79] But mere acquiescence in a judgment does

II. JUDGMENTS BY CONFESSION.[82]

A. In General — 1. Nature and Requisites. A judgment may be rendered upon the confession of defendant, either in an action regularly commenced against him by the issuance and service of process, in which case the confession may be made by his attorney of record, or, without the institution of a suit, upon a confession by defendant in person or by his attorney in fact.[83] It implies something more than a mere admission of a debt to plaintiff; in addition, it is defendant's consent that a judgment shall be entered against him therefor.[84] But it may be made conditional, and in that case it can be enforced only upon compliance with the conditions or in accordance therewith.[85] A power of attorney to confess judgment may be incorporated in, or attached to, a promissory note, the condition being the non-payment of the note at maturity; the instrument being then commonly called a "judgment note."[86]

2. Statutory Provisions. Statutes regulating the confession of judgments without action, or otherwise than according to the course of the common law, are strictly construed, and a strict compliance with their provisions must be shown in order to sustain the validity of the judgment.[87] And this applies also to statutory restrictions upon the right to confess judgment,[88] as that authority to confess judgment shall not be given in the same instrument which contains the promise or obligation to pay the debt,[89] or that such confession shall not be authorized by any instrument executed prior to suit brought.[90]

3. Confession Without Action. In the case of a judgment confessed without the bringing of an action, it is not necessary that a declaration or complaint should be filed, the statement required by the statute being a sufficient setting forth of plaintiff's claim.[91] Nor is it necessary that any process should be issued or served on defendant, or any appearance entered by or for him other than the appearance for the purpose of confessing the judgment.[92]

4. Debts For Which Judgment May Be Confessed — a. In General. The statutes generally allow the confession of judgment for any debt "justly due and owing" or "justly due or to become due." Such a judgment therefore cannot be sustained if the claim on which it was based was fictitious or fraudulent as to creditors,[93] if it was extorted by duress,[94] or founded upon an immoral or illegal consideration.[95] It is, however, no objection to a confessed judgment that the claim for which it is given would be barred by the statute of limitations[96] or by the debtor's discharge in bankruptcy,[97] that several different debts to the same creditor are included in the one judgment,[98] or that it is given to one person as trustee for numerous small creditors, all the debts being justly due.[99] But the judgment must be for a certain and specific sum; it cannot be made to cover an indefinite amount or an unliquidated claim,[1] nor can a judgment be confessed for a claim arising out of a tort.[2] If the statute permits the confession of judgment for a debt "due or to become due," this may include a claim founded upon an obligation presently existing but not yet payable or not yet matured.[3] And under the same circumstances a judgment may be confessed to secure a liability which is at the time contingent or conditional, as on a contract of indemnity, indorsement, or suretyship.[4] duly authorized to act for him in that behalf.[7] The authority of an attorney at law appearing in open court will be presumed until the contrary is shown,[8] but this is not so in the case of an attorney in fact.[9] An agent acting within the scope of his authority and to the extent of it may confess judgment against his principal;[10] but an officer of a municipal corporation without special authority cannot confess judgment.[11] A trustee, although described as such, cannot confess an ordinary judgment so as to bind the trust estate.[12] It is immaterial to the validity of the judgment that defendant confessing it is an officer of the court in which it is entered; a judgment against himself may be confessed by the clerk,[13] or by the judge of the court.[14]

b. Joint Defendants. In a pending action against two or more defendants, one of them cannot confess judgment against them all, and a joint judgment rendered on the confession of one only will be set aside.[15] But it appears that one defendant may confess judgment to affect himself only, although it will remain interlocutory until the trial and determination of the issues as to the other defendant.[16] In the case of a confession without action, it is held that one joint debtor cannot bind the others by a confession of judgment; such a judgment will not be authorized unless all join in the confession or in executing the warrant of attorney.[17] And conversely, under a joint warrant of attorney authorizing the confession of a judgment for a joint debt, a judgment cannot be entered against one of the debtors alone.[18] Where a warrant of attorney or a statement of indebtedness is signed by only a part of defendants against whom it directs judgment to be entered, a judgment entered thereunder will bind those who subscribed the warrant or statement, although nugatory as to the others.[19]

6. To Whom Judgment May Be Confessed. A judgment may be confessed to any creditor being the legal owner of the debt in question,[20] or to an assignee or trustee for the benefit of various creditors.[21]

7. Consent or Ratification of Creditor. A judgment based upon a confession made without the request, knowledge, or consent of the creditor, and entered at the instance of the debtor alone, will have no validity unless the creditor ratifies or accepts it.[22] And the validity of the judgment dates only from such acceptance, and therefore it will not affect the priority of other creditors who came in between the entry of the judgment and its ratification.[23] The creditor's assent to or ratification of the judgment, if not express, may be implied from the circumstances of his dealing with it.[24]

B. Warrant or Power of Attorney[25] — 1. Validity and Necessity. A judgment by confession may be entered upon a written authority, called a warrant or letter of attorney, by which the debtor empowers an attorney to enter an appearance for him, waive process, and confess judgment against him for a designated sum,[26] except where this method of proceeding is prohibited by statute.[27] The warrant, as the basis of the judgment, is generally required to be placed on file in the clerk's office, and no judgment can be so entered until it is so filed.[28] And in some states the law requires proof of the execution of the warrant before the entry of a judgment, although, if the confession is in open court, the evidence of execution need not be preserved in the record.[29]

2. REQUISITES AND SUFFICIENCY — a. In General. A warrant or power of attorney to confess judgment should be in writing[30] and should conform to the requirements of the statute in force at the time of its execution,[31] although in the absence of specific statutory directions it is sufficient, without much regard to its form, if it contains the essentials of a good power and clearly states its purpose.[32] It must be signed by the person against whom the judgment is to be entered,[33] and also sealed by him if the statute so directs,[34] and attested by witnesses if that is expressly required,[35] and, unless accompanied by a declaration or sworn statement, it should set forth or describe the cause of action or nature of the liability,[36] specifying the exact amount of the judgment to be entered.[37] The statutes sometimes provide that the warrant or power of attorney must be a "separate instrument" from that which evidences the debt;[38] but in the absence of such a restriction it may well be attached to, or incorporated in, the note, bond, or other obligation.[39]

b. Effect of Blanks. Unfilled blanks in a warrant or power of attorney do not destroy its validity if enough remains to make it effective as a power, and if they do not render the instrument so ambiguous that its meaning cannot be determined.[40]

Designation of parties.— Where a note and power of attorney are included in the same instrument, the power will not be invalidated by the fact that the blank space in which the person giving the power should be named is left unfilled, as it will be presumed that the power was given by the maker of the note. But where the note is signed by several persons, and the power of attorney does not designate the person or persons against whom the judgment is to be entered, it has been

3. Construction and Operation. The authority given by a warrant of attorney must be strictly pursued,[41] and the warrant, in respect to its operation and effect, is to be construed strictly against the party in whose favor it is given.[42] Generally by its own terms it includes, or operates as, a waiver of process,[43] and release of errors,[44] and dispenses with proof of plaintiff's cause of action; but there are cases in which the creditor must prove some essential element of his right to recover, before he is entitled to use a power of attorney.[45]

4. Time of Execution. It is not necessary that the warrant of attorney should be given at the same time with the note, bond, or other evidence of debt,[46] or that an action for the recovery of the debt should have been begun before the confession of judgment,[47] unless this is expressly required by statute.[48]

5. For and Against Whom Judgment May Be Entered. The warrant should name or describe with reasonable certainty the person in whose favor the judgment is to be entered.[49] But he may be designated as the "holder" of the note secured, in which case judgment may be entered in favor of the person who at the time is the legal holder of the security.[50] And if the creditor is named, it seems that the power of attorney will be available to one to whom he has assigned the debt,[51] or to his executor or administrator.[52] In case of joint debtors, who jointly execute the power of attorney, a judgment may be confessed thereon against both or all.[53] But the power of attorney is not available against one who signs it, or the obligation secured, only in the character of a surety,[54] nor against the heirs or personal representatives of the deceased obligor.[55]

6. Time of Entering Judgment. The warrant of attorney should state the time when the judgment is to be entered, although this may be done by authorizing a confession "at any term" of court or "at any time hereafter," or upon the happening of a future event, uncertain as to time.[56] And where the warrant authorizes confession of judgment upon a note "at any time," the judgment may be entered up at any time after the delivery of the note, even before its maturity.[57] If the warrant is for the confession of judgment "as of any term," it does not authorize judgment to be entered up in vacation.[58] But if it is indefinite as to the time, or does not refer to the terms of the court, the judgment may be confessed in vacation as well as in term-time.[59] It was the settled practice under the common law, still operative in this country except where changed by statute or a rule of court, that a judgment could not be confessed on a warrant of attorney executed more than a year and a day before, unless an affidavit was filed showing that the maker was alive and that some portion of the debt was still due, and a rule of court, or order of a judge in vacation, must be obtained granting leave to enter judgment.[60]

In Pennsylvania a rule of court provides that "if a warrant of attorney to enter judgment be above ten years and under twenty, the court, or a judge thereof in vacation, must be moved for leave to enter judgment, which motion must be grounded on an affidavit that the warrant was duly executed, and that the money is unpaid and the party living. When the warrant is above twenty years old, there must be a rule to show cause served on defendant, if he can be found within the county." But the court may in a proper case after the entry of judgment name or description,[61] although the courts recognize the validity of a warrant running to "any attorney" of a particular court or to "any attorney of any court of record."[62] Where the power is thus expressed, it may be executed by two persons, acting jointly or as partners, both being attorneys of the court,[63] or by the payee of the note, being an attorney, in favor of the holder to whom he has transferred it.[64]

8. NATURE AND AMOUNT OF JUDGMENT — a. In General. A warrant of attorney to confess judgment will not authorize the entry of a judgment for any greater amount than that specified in the warrant or in the note or other obligation which it secures, whatever may be the state of accounts between the parties,[65] or for any other debt, liability, or claim than the one specifically set forth or described in the papers,[66] although when the obligation secured is a bond, it seems that judgment may be confessed for the full amount of the penalty.[67] Where the warrant authorizes the confession of judgment for "such amount as may be found due" on the obligation secured, it is sufficient, and judgment may be entered for the amount actually due.[68] And the judgment may include interest if the warrant authorizes it.[69]

b. Second Judgment. A power of attorney to confess judgment is exhausted by one such confession, and no second judgment can be entered by virtue of the power,[70] except where the first judgment has been vacated or reversed before the entry of the second.[71]

9. REVOCATION AND DEFEASANCE. A warrant of attorney to confess judgment is not revocable at the will of the grantor;[72] but it is revoked or defeated by the death of the grantor before entry of judgment,[73] or by payment of the debt

Second judgment not absolutely void.— Where a judgment by confession is entered on a warrant of attorney in one county, and afterward, such judgment remaining in force and unpaid, a second judgment upon the same warrant is entered in another county, it is held that the second judgment is not absolutely void, for a sale under it would vest a good title in the sheriff's vendee, but in that case the attorney who entered the judgment, or the obligee of the bond, if it was entered by him, would be answerable for the consequences. intended to be secured,[74] although not by the running of the statute of limitations against the debt,[75] or by the supervening insanity of the grantor, this disability not operating to revoke any power which he could not have revoked if he had remained sane.[76]

C. Statement of Indebtedness — 1. Nature and Necessity. Statutes in many of the states require a person confessing a judgment to file a written statement, signed and verified, designating the amount for which the judgment is to be entered, and stating concisely the facts out of which the indebtedness arose. This requirement is imperative.[77] But it applies only to confessions of judgment without action. Where a suit has been begun, process served, and a declaration filed, and defendant then confesses judgment, the case is not within the statute.[78]

2. Requisites and Sufficiency. It is essential to the sufficiency of such a statement that it should set forth explicitly the amount of the debt, or of the judgment to be entered, so that this particular may not be left uncertain or conjectural.[79] It has been held that the statement should be so precise that any one can calculate from it the amount due with the interest if any.[80] But technical accuracy in the description of the liability or cause of action is not requisite.[81] Nor is it necessary to comply strictly with a direction of the statute that the statement shall "authorize the entry of judgment," a substantial manifestation of the debtor's intention in that regard being sufficient.[82] A motion by plaintiff to amend the statement is addressed to the discretion of the court, and may be granted on such terms as shall appear just,[83] as against subsequent judgment creditors who have not sought to vacate the judgment,[84] but not against a creditor who has taken steps to have it set aside.[85]

3. Creation and Character of Debt — a. In General. In describing the nature of the debt and the facts out of which it arose, the statement should be definite enough to prevent the parties from shifting the consideration, and to furnish creditors and others with a basis for inquiry if they desire to investigate the bona fides of the judgment.[86] But if otherwise sufficiently specific, it is not invalid merely because indefinite as to time.[87] And it may refer for particulars to a schedule annexed, but in that case the schedule must contain all the necessary facts.[88] And where there have been numerous dealings between the parties, the statement will be sufficient if it sets forth an adjustment of accounts, with exact particulars of the balance found due and defendant's agreement or liability to pay it.[89]

b. Goods Sold and Delivered. A confession of judgment for a certain sum for "goods, wares, and merchandise" of a specified value is held by some of the authorities to be too indefinite; it should state the nature and quantities of the goods sold, the time of sale, and the aggregate price, or even the price of the several items.[90] But other cases hold the statement to be sufficient if the indebtedness is declared to be for goods, wares, and merchandise sold and delivered, with a merely approximate description of the period at or within which the sale took place.[91]

c. Bills and Notes. A statement is not sufficient which sets forth, as the basis of the judgment to be entered, a promissory note executed by defendant to plaintiff; for the consideration of the note should be described, or the facts creating the indebtedness for which the note was given.[92] And the statement will be held insufficient if it is substantially incorrect in describing the consideration of the note,[93] or if it fails to specify the amount of the note.[94] In regard to the degree of particularity with which the consideration of the note must be described, it has been held that a statement that it was given for "goods sold and delivered," or for "goods, wares, and merchandise," is not sufficient without details as to the date, amount, and subject of the sale or sales.[95] But it is enough to state that the note was given for "money loaned" to defendant, or "money borrowed" by him, if the amount and time of the loan are given, and the sum is alleged to be justly due.[96] It is also sufficient to set forth that the judgment is confessed to secure plaintiff for a debt due or to become due upon his indorsement, as the surety of defendant and for his benefit, of a certain note or notes fully described in all essential particulars.[97]

d. Loans and Advances. A recital in the statement that the indebtedness accrued for "borrowed money," or for "money loaned" or "advanced" to the debtor, sufficiently states the facts out of which the indebtedness arose,[98] provided there is no uncertainty as to the amount due.[99] As to stating the time of the loan or advance there are decisions from which it appears to be sufficient to allege that the money was loaned to defendant within a certain year or years, or at divers times after a specified day,[1] or on or about a day named.[2]

4. Signature and Verification. The statement of indebtedness and confession of judgment must be signed by the debtor in person; a signature by his attorney is not sufficient.[3] But signing the affidavit verifying the statement is a sufficient signing of the statement itself, especially if they are on the same page or sheet.[4] The statement must also be verified by the oath of the debtor himself.[5] And he must swear to the truth of the statement, not merely to his belief in its truth.[6] This affidavit may be made before any duly qualified officer,[7] and it is susceptible of amendment if faulty but not wholly void.[8]

D. Confession After Action Brought — 1. In General. Confessions of judgment in a suit regularly instituted are of two sorts; first, judgment by cognovit actionem, and second, by confession relicta verificatione. A cognovit is a specific confession of the justice of plaintiff's claim and that the amount claimed is due to him, and expresses or implies defendant's consent to the entry of judgment therefor. If he files a formal answer, although it admits the allegations of the petition, a judgment rendered in accordance with the legal conclusions of the petition is not one by consent or confession. Aull v. Day, 133 Mo. 337, 34 S. W. 578; Adler v. Anderson, 42 Mo. App. 189.

Time of preparing cognovit.— A judgment by confession is not affected by the fact that the cognovit was prepared before the cause of action accrued, where the judgment was not entered until after accrual. Blake v. State Bank, 178 Ill. 182, 52 N. E. 957.

The caption of the cognovit upon which a judgment is confessed in vacation is not an essential part of the instrument, and if defective may be treated as surplusage. Browne v. Cassem, 74 Ill. App. 305.

pleading and before trial, defendant both confesses plaintiff's cause of action and withdraws or abandons his plea or other allegations, whereupon judgment is entered against him without proceeding to trial.[10] In either case the judgment must be tested by rules and principles known to the common law, and is not governed by the statutes authorizing the confession of judgments without action, so that if good at common law it is not impeachable for the lack of an affidavit, statement of the origin of the indebtedness, or other supports required by those statutes.[11] A judgment by cognovit, after process has been served, may be entered in vacation;[12] but not pending a stay of proceedings,[13] or after the death of plaintiff,[14] nor in any case where a statute prescribes a different and exclusive form of proceeding on the particular obligation in suit.[15] And it has been decided that, where a party confesses judgment against himself under a mistake of fact as to what the pleadings contain, he may upon discovering his error retract the confession, provided it has not been recorded.[16]

2. PROCESS, APPEARANCE, AND PLEADING. It is essential to the validity of a confession of judgment in a pending action that process should have been regularly served upon defendant, or service accepted by him, or that an appearance should have been entered by him in person or by a duly authorized attorney for him;[17]

that there should be an appearance by plaintiff, or at least his consent to the entry of judgment;[18] and that a declaration or some statement of plaintiff's claim should have been filed,[19] although the confession of judgment operates as a waiver or release of any defects or omissions in the declaration.[20]

E. Proceedings to Obtain Judgment — 1. Necessity in General. As a general rule judgment may be entered up on defendant's confession as a matter of office business and without invoking the judicial functions of the court.[21] But where the statute requires an office confession of judgment to be confirmed by the court, its incidents as a judgment do not attach until the date of such confirmation.[22] The intervention of a jury is necessary where the right to enter the confession depends upon the happening of a contingency which must be ascertained as a matter of fact,[23] but not where the confession of judgment is unconditional and the amount certain.[24]

2. Jurisdiction and Venue. It is essential to the validity of a judgment by confession that the court should have such jurisdiction of the action that it might lawfully have rendered the same judgment in a contested action.[25] Thus a judgment of this character is subject to a statutory limitation that actions may be brought and judgments rendered only in courts having jurisdiction of the county or district where defendant resides.[26] And a warrant of attorney to confess a judgment, executed in one state and by its terms to be enforced there, will not support a judgment entered in another state.[27] But a warrant of attorney may be so drawn as to authorize the confession of judgment in a foreign state, as where the authority is to confess judgment "in any court of record."[28]

3. AUTHORITY OF CLERK OF COURT. The statutes generally authorize the prothonotary or clerk of the court to enter a judgment by confession, on the filing in his office of the necessary papers, without action by the judge. His act in entering the judgment being merely ministerial and not judicial, this method of proceeding is perfectly valid.[29] But any directions of the statute as to the conditions on which the clerk may thus enter judgment as a requirement that there must be proof of the execution of the confession of judgment must be strictly observed.[30] And if the papers submitted are defective or insufficient, defendant should make his objection to the court, not to the clerk.[31]

4. PROOF OF CAUSE OF ACTION — a. In General. As a general rule a confession of judgment dispenses with the necessity of proving plaintiff's cause of action,[32] except where the right to enter judgment depends upon a condition or contingency the occurrence of which is not disclosed by the papers.[33] But it is commonly required that plaintiff shall prove the due execution of the warrant or power of attorney.[34]

b. Affidavit Accompanying Warrant or Statement. To evidence the good faith of the transaction and prevent fraud, it is commonly required that the warrant or statement shall be accompanied by an affidavit that the debt is "justly due and owing" or "justly due or to become due." In respect to the form of this affidavit, a substantial compliance with the statute is sufficient, the precise form of words not being essential.[35] And the affidavit is not necessary where defendant files an answer admitting the debt and consenting to the judgment.[36] It is sometimes required that the affidavit shall set forth the true consideration of the bond or other obligation on which the judgment is confessed.[37] But this is not generally necessary where a complaint is filed fully describing the cause of action.[38] This affidavit must be made by plaintiff in person,[39] unless the statute allows it to be made "by some one in his behalf," in which case it may be made by his attorney, provided the affidavit discloses the sources of the attorney's information and gives a reason why it was not made by plaintiff himself.[40]

c. Necessity For Affidavit or Verification. A judgment by confession entered without the filing of the required affidavit to the justness of the debt secured, although erroneous and liable to be set aside, is not absolutely void.[41]

5. Judgment — a. Final or Interlocutory. A judgment entered upon the confession of defendant is in general final and not interlocutory,[42] unless the right to enter the judgment or to issue execution upon it depends upon the happening of a contingency, in which case it is necessary that the court should determine the matter by a final judgment.[43]

Accommodation indorsement. — The requirement of an affidavit that the debt is "justly due and owing" will prevent an accommodation indorser of notes, secured by bond and warrant of attorney, from entering up judgment before he has paid the notes, although he has assumed their payment, when the payee has not released the maker. b. Form and Requisites. A judgment rendered upon the confession of defendant should follow closely the cognovit or warrant of attorney,[44] particularly in regard to the parties defendant,[45] and the precise debt or obligation intended to be secured,[46] including any special conditions or stipulations in the warrant of attorney,[47] although it is not considered necessary to recite the warrant at length in the judgment.[48] The judgment must be signed by a judge or court commissioner, if it is so required by the statute,[49] and must otherwise comply, in respect to its form and contents, with the rules governing ordinary judgments.[50]

c. Rendition and Entry. According to the usual practice a judgment upon confession is to be entered by the prothonotary or clerk of the court,[51] who may be constrained to perform his duty in this respect by a rule or motion.[52] Irregularities in the entry of the judgment may be corrected by an entry made nunc pro tunc,[53] provided, however, that they are not jurisdictional, for in the latter case the judgment cannot be sustained, even though it should appear that the amount of the judgment was justly due.[54]

d. Time of Entering Judgment[55] — (i) In General. Judgment by confession in an action already pending cannot properly be entered before the return-term of the writ,[56] or before the filing of the agreement or warrant to confess judgment.[57] In respect to the day of the term on which the confession may be entered the case is governed by local laws and practice.[58] On a warrant or power

Not necessary for judge to be in court.— A judgment by confession will not be set aside on the ground that it was in fact entered before the judge took his seat, on the day of its entry, when the record shows that the term had commenced several days prior thereto, and does not show that there was any adjournment. of attorney, the judgment may be entered up on the same day on which the confession is given, if permitted by its terms;[59] and on the other hand the warrant does not lose its efficacy because remaining unexecuted for nearly a year,[60] and the statute of limitations does not run against it.[61]

(II) In Vacation. By force of statutes existing in most of the states, judgments upon the confession of defendant may be entered in vacation by the clerk of the court without an order or other direction from the judge.[62]

e. Form and Contents of Record. The warrant or power of attorney authorizing a confession of judgment should be filed as a part of the record,[63] but not the note, bond, or other evidence of the debt.[64] In some states it is held that, upon the confession of a judgment in vacation in the clerk's office, the formal writing up of the judgment in the court records is essential, so that execution cannot be issued until this is done.[65] But elsewhere it is considered that the statutory requirements as to the recording of such judgments are merely directory, the statement, affidavit, and other papers accompanying the confession constituting the judgment-roll and serving as the basis for an execution.[66] Where the statute

Recording in separate book.— Although a judgment by confession is not entered in the records of the ordinary proceedings of the court, but in a separate book called a "record of judgments by confession," it is not for that reason invalid. Brown v. Barngrover, 82 Iowa 204, 47 N. W. 1082.

Entry on leave of court.— A judgment on a bond and warrant of attorney can only be entered in the mode directed by the act for that purpose, although ten years have elapsed, and it has become necessary to obtain leave of the court on an affidavit, as required by the Practice Act. Eakin v. Smith, 21 N. J. L. 97.

requires plaintiff to file a sworn statement and directs the clerk to indorse the judgment upon the statement and to enter it in the judgment book, the two entries are deemed to have the force of duplicate originals, and the omission of one, the other being duly made, is an irregularity which will not avoid the judgment.[67] The record of a confessed judgment should show that the execution of the warrant or power of attorney was duly proved,[68] but need not include matters of evidence or other details not affecting the jurisdiction of the court.[69]

6. AMOUNT OF RECOVERY — a. In General. The judgment, in order that it may be valid, must be for such an amount as is authorized by the warrant of attorney upon which it is based.[70] But upon confession of judgment in a pending action, if plaintiff's demand is in the nature of a debt the amount of which may be ascertained by calculation, it is sufficient to enter judgment generally, the judgment in such case being supposed to be for the amount of damages laid in the declaration.[71] If the judgment entered on a warrant of attorney includes a greater sum than was actually confessed, it is held to be void only as to the excess, not in toto, unless the excess was fraudulently included.[72] The judgment

Trust for creditors.— Where the judgment is confessed for the benefit of plaintiff, and also for the benefit of certain other creditors of defendant, it is no objection to its validity, at the suit of other creditors who may be affected by it, that the trust does not appear upon the record. Harris v. Alcock, 10 Gill & J. (Md.) 226, 32 Am. Dec. 158.

70. Cobb v. Yetter, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. 293. And see Connay v. Halstead, 73 Pa. St. 354.

Rent.— Where the warrant authorizes a confession of judgment for any rent due by the terms of a lease which fixes the amount of rent, a judgment in accordance with such power may properly be entered, although the lease also binds the lessee to pay damages for waste of water and other items, thereby rendering the amount due, aside from the rent, uncertain. Scott v. Mantonya, 60 Ill. App. 481.

Future advances.— A confession of judgment to cover future advances is valid; but if the creditor gives a statement of the amount then due, to enable defendant to borrow from another, he is estopped from claiming beyond that amount. Ter-Hoven v. Kerns, 2 Pa. St. 96.

Penalty of bond.— Where a bond, with warrant of attorney, is made in a certain penal sum, to be void on payment of half that amount under certain circumstances, judgment may be entered for the penalty of the bond, it being for the obligor to show any payment that may have been made, and have the judgment corrected accordingly. Latrobe Bldg., etc., Assoc. v. Fritz, 152 Pa. St. 224, 25 Atl. 558. So a judgment entered for the amount of the penalty, in pursuance of the express direction of the warrant, is not illegal, although a part of the real debt had already been collected by foreclosure of a mortgage given for the same debt. Earl v. Jenkins, 71 N. J. L. 416, 58 Atl. 1086.

Fraud.— A judgment confessed on a note given as security for indorsements is not fraudulent because confessed for more than the amount of the notes indorsed, the party not having at hand at the time the means of determining their amount, and nothing more than was due ever having been claimed or received on the judgment. Page v. Simpson, 188 Pa. St. 393, 41 Atl. 638.

Amount indorsed on process. — Judgment by confession may be for a larger sum than is indorsed on the process. Hunt v. Shivers, 4 N. J. L. 89. And see Lewis v. Smith, 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 142.

may also include interest on plaintiff's demand, if that is warranted by the terms of the confession.[73]

b. Liquidation by Court or Clerk. Where the confession of judgment does not determine the extent of the recovery, and it is not ascertainable by mere calculation, it must be liquidated by the court,[74] but if it is simply a matter of calculation, this may be done by the clerk.[75]

c. Costs and Attorney's Fees. A judgment by confession may ordinarily include plaintiff's costs,[76] and also a fee for his attorney, if that is authorized by the terms of the warrant or confession.[77] A stipulation in the warrant for such a fee rests upon a valid consideration and is not fraudulent as to other creditors,[78] unless the amount specified is grossly excessive, in which case the judgment is voidable as against other creditors, at least to the extent of such fee.[79] If the amount is not fixed, but the stipulation is for a "reasonable attorney's fee," it is for the court, not for the attorney himself, to determine what is a reasonable fee, and this contemplates a judicial proceeding by the court to determine the amount to be allowed. Hence if the attorney fixes the amount of his fee and confesses judgment for the whole amount, without the intervention of the court, the judgment is void.[80]

F. Construction and Operation of Judgment — 1. In General. A judgment upon confession, whether entered upon a warrant of attorney, or in open court upon a cognovit, is the act of the court, and until it is reversed or set aside, it has all the qualities and effects of a judgment on a verdict.[81] At the same time it is the act of the parties also, and binding upon them as their voluntary settle-

Excessive or unclaimed interest.— Judgment on a note is not vitiated because confessed for a greater rate of interest than the note bears (Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Newton Cotton Mills, 115 N. C. 507, 20 S. E. 765), nor because the prothonotary made an entry for interest from the date of the note no claim for interest having been made by plaintiff, and none ever received by him on the judgment (Page v. Simpson, 188 Pa. St. 393, 41 Atl. 638).

Delay in liquidation.— This duty must be performed by the clerk without unnecessary delay. ment.[82] And if the judgment is confessed upon terms duly entered, it is in effect a conditional judgment, and the court will take notice of the terms and enforce them,[83] and also in a proper case restrict the security of the judgment to the debt or claim actually intended to be secured.[84] The judgment will also operate as a release or waiver of errors not going to the jurisdiction;[85] but it will not preclude the creditor from pursuing other remedies for the collection of the same debt,[86] or discharge sureties or indorsers who are not parties thereto.[87] If the confession of judgment is void, it is not sufficient consideration to support a mortgage made to secure its payment.[88]

2. CONCLUSIVENESS. A judgment upon confession is as conclusive, between the parties and their privies, of the facts and points involved in and determined by it, and as final a bar to the maintenance by the creditor of another suit for the same demand as any other judgment.[89]

3. PRESUMPTIONS SUPPORTING JUDGMENT. A judgment upon confession, entered in a court having jurisdiction, is supported by the same presumptions in respect to the regularity of the proceedings, the sufficiency of the pleadings and evidence, and other matters essential to its validity, as a judgment in a contested action.[90]

4. VALIDITY — a. In General. A judgment entered upon the confession of defendant may be impeached for fraud by other creditors whose rights or remedies are affected by it,[91] although, if no fraud or deception was practised on the debtor, it is binding as between the original parties.[92] As to the proceedings in entering or confessing the judgment, although there are some decisions to the effect that a judgment which does not conform to the requirements of the statute is absolutely void,[93] the better rule appears to be that if there has been an attempt to comply in all respects with the law, the judgment is at most only voidable at the instance of creditors, although the execution of such attempt be informal or defective; but the total omission of any of the steps prescribed by the statute will

Other creditors secured.— Where a judgment has been confessed in favor of one creditor, intended also to secure the claims of certain other creditors, it operates as a merger of the debt due the former; but with regard to the others, it is a mere collateral security, and leaves them at liberty to prosecute any remedy which they might have sought previous to the judgment. render the judgment entirely inoperative and void.[94] Where the statute provides that there shall be filed with a confession of judgment a statement of the facts out of which the indebtedness arose,[95] it has been held that the filing of a defective or insufficient statement will not render the judgment void as between the parties; as against other creditors it raises a presumption of fraud, and they may attack it on this ground;[96] but plaintiff may sustain his judgment by proving that it is fair, and not fraudulent or collusive, and warranted by the facts actually existing, although such facts were not included in the statement.[97]

b. Estoppel to Deny Validity. A defendant confessing judgment is estopped to question its validity on account of irregularities to which he did not object, or to dispute any facts set forth in the confession or the accompanying statement,[98] or to set up any claims or defenses which might have been presented in opposition to plaintiff's action,[99] and if, after the entry of the judgment, he ratifies or accepts it, or acquiesces in it, he is estopped to deny the authority on which it was confessed or otherwise to impeach its validity.[1]

G. Opening or Vacating Judgment — 1. Jurisdiction and Authority of Court. While a judgment by confession operates as a release of errors, and therefore cannot ordinarily be carried up by appeal or certiorari,[2] yet courts of law exercise an equitable jurisdiction over judgments entered in this way, and

4. Form and Requisites of Application. An application to open or set aside a judgment by confession should be made by motion, and if on behalf of defendant should recite that the claim was unjust and that the judgment ought not to have been confessed, or otherwise show a meritorious defense to the action,[14] as well as the specific ground on which the application is based;[15] and if on behalf of creditors it should allege fraud or collusion between the parties and consequent injury to the applicants' rights.[16]

Applications of text.— Where county officers are sued upon a warrant drawn by them on account of a just debt, and confess judgment therefor, such judgment will not be stricken off at the suit of a taxpayer on the mere technicality that the action should have been brought on the original debt. Maneval v. Jackson Tp., 141 Pa. St. 426, 21 Atl. 672. So where the indorsee of a negotiable note described himself as the payee's assignee, it was held, on a motion to set aside a judgment by confession, that this was a mere descriptio personæ, and therefore did not ining the judgment that defendant's signature to the confession or warrant of attorney was forged,[19] that his name was never signed by him or by any one authorized to sign it for him,[20] or that the attorney who assumed to appear for him and confess the judgment had no authority to do so.[21] And a material alteration in the judgment note may also be ground for opening the judgment.[22] The judgment may be opened on showing a want of consideration for the note, bond, or other obligation on which it was entered,[23] or a failure of such consideration,[24] or that the consideration was illegal or immoral,[25] or where it appears that the debt had already been paid or otherwise released or discharged,[26] or was subject to credits or counter-claims for which no allowance was made,[27] or to the defense of usury,[28] or that plaintiff has broken an agreement with defendant as to entering up or enforcing the judgment.[29] Ground for vacating the judgment may also be found in the death of defendant before entry of the judgment,[30] or his personal disability.[31] A judgment entered upon a warrant of attorney to confess judgment upon a breach of any of the conditions of a lease will be stricken off where defendant has had no opportunity to be heard on the question of breach of condition.[32] But a judgment entered under a warrant of attorney contained in a lease of a chattel, which on its face is a bailment and not a conditional sale, will not be opened when neither fraud, accident, nor mistake is shown as a basis for relief.[33] An indorser of a note, confessing judgment in ignorance of the fact that no demand has been made on the maker, is entitled to have the judgment set aside, and set up such fact as a defense.[34] A judgment taken by plaintiff on a cognovit entered by an attorney will not be set aside on the ground that it was in violation of an injunction issuing from another court.[35] A judgment against a surety on a bond, entered on a warrant of attorney, will not be set aside on the ground that the principal debtor lives in another state, and is there the administrator of the obligee, and alleges that nothing is due on the bond.[36]

b. Time of Entering Judgment. A judgment by confession will not be opened or vacated on the mere ground that it was taken prematurely, as, before the maturity of the note secured, without showing a meritorious defense.[37]

c. Objections to Affidavit or Statement. Mere defects or irregularities in the affidavit or statement of the indebtedness, required by the statute,[38] constitute no ground for vacating or setting aside the judgment.[39] This relief may be granted where the affidavit or statement is wholly lacking or entirely insufficient,[40] although even in this case some of the decisions hold that the judgment should not be set aside where no fraud or injustice is shown, and the debt is admitted to be due, there being in that event no equitable ground for the court's interposition.[41]

d. Defects in Pleading or Evidence. A judgment by confession cannot be set aside on account of immaterial defects in the pleadings or evidence in the case, or because of variances not going to the root of the action,[42] although it seems that it may be vacated for want of proof of the execution of the power of attorney by defendant,[43] or where the petition for judgment does not state facts necessary to give jurisdiction.[44]

e. Fraud, Imposition, or Duress. A confessed judgment may be vacated on a sufficient showing that it was obtained by means of fraud, deception, or imposition practised upon defendant.[45] Or it may be vacated by showing duress.[46] And fraud or collusion between the original parties to the judgment will be cause for setting it aside at the instance of other creditors.[47]

f. Objection to Amount of Judgment. A judgment by confession may be opened or set aside where, in consequence of mistake or of fraud or extortion practised upon defendant, the amount of it is excessive, and it would be unconscionable to enforce it as it stands.[48] But the mere fact that the judgment was confessed for less than the amount apparently due is no ground for setting it aside on the motion of defendant.[49]

6. Evidence. The party who moves to have a judgment by confession opened or vacated must assume the burden of proving the facts on which he relies as the ground of his application,[50] and the motion will not be granted except upon clear, positive, and satisfactory evidence.[51]

7. Affidavits. The affidavits filed in support of a motion to open a confessed judgment, and let defendant in to a defense, must show that he has a good defense

Absence of fraud or undue influence.— A confession of judgment will be supported where it was voluntarily made in consideration of further time being granted, although by one of weak understanding, in the habit of making improvident bargains, subject to intoxication, and in embarrassed circumstances, there being no evidence of fraud in obtaining it or of undue influence. on the merits,[52] and must state positively, and not by way of inference or belief, the facts on which he relies.[53] Such affidavits are to be construed most strongly against the party making the motion.[54] Counter affidavits may be received and considered,[55] and in this case the moving party must establish his contention by a fair preponderance of evidence, the court refusing to disturb the judgment if the counter affidavits are as strong and convincing as his own.[56]

8. Submission of Issue to Jury. Where an application to open a confessed judgment is based on grounds going to the merits, and is contested, the issues raised should ordinarily be tried by a jury.[57]

9. Relief Awarded — a. In General. On a proper application and good cause shown, the court may vacate a judgment by confession,[58] or simply open it for the purpose of letting defendant in to make his defense,[59] or to make a conditional order to plead and for the examination of witnesses, leaving the judgment standing to await the finding on the issues formed.[60] If the judgment includes several claims or items, some of which are due and others not, or some of which are sufficiently described in the statement and others not, it may be vacated or set aside as to those demands which cannot be supported and left standing as to the others,[61] or it may be reduced to the amount which the court finds to be justly due.[62]

b. Imposition of Terms. Terms may be imposed upon defendant, on granting his application to open the judgment;[63] but it is not proper to require that the money supposed to be due shall be brought into court, although the judgment may be allowed to stand as security to abide the result.[64]

10. Proceedings After Opening Judgment. When a judgment entered by confession is opened generally, and without terms, plaintiff is put to the proof of his cause of action precisely as if no judgment had been entered.[65] And it follows from this that the defendant may set up on the trial any defense which would have been available to him if an action had been brought, instead of a judgment being entered, on the debt or instrument in suit.[66] And the defendant may

III. JUDGMENTS ON CONSENT, OFFER, OR ADMISSION.[68]

A. On Consent of Parties — 1. Nature and Requisites. The parties to a suit can adjust the matters in controversy and their rights between themselves, and have a judgment or decree entered by consent of all parties, without regard to the state of the pleadings or evidence in the case.[69] A judgment of this kind is to be distinguished from one entered upon confession, as also from a judgment by default, its special characteristic being the settlement between the parties of the terms, amount, or conditions of the judgment to be rendered.[70] A consent judgment may be entered in open court by the judge on the consent of the parties or their attorneys, orally expressed, or may be entered on the record without the express sanction of the court from a written agreement between counsel, duly filed, in which latter case the court's assent is presumed.[71] A judgment entered which the judgment was opened). But see Roby v. Updyke, 61 Ill. App. 328.

Matter of defense arising subsequent to the judgment cannot be set up by defendant. Curtis v. Slosson, 6 Pa. St. 265.

Fraud, when set up as a defense to a judgment by confession, opened by order of the court, must be affirmatively and positively proved. Hipps v. Wardle, 1 Pa. Cas. 147, 1 Atl. 727.

Record evidence of consent.— A judgment entry that the parties came by their attorneys, and by consent of defendants the judgment was rendered against them, shows that defendants, and not their attorneys, consented. McNeil v. State, 71 Ala. 71. And so, where the record shows that, issues of fact having been formed and the evidence heard, the "court by consent" found for plaintiff, and rendered judgment accordingly, this shows a judgment by agreement of the parties. Hudson v. Allison, 54 Ind. 215. But a decree reciting that the cause came on to be heard before a special judge, "presiding by consent of parties," does not show consent to the contents of the decree. Crosby v. Morristown, etc., R. Co., (Tenn. Ch. App. 1897) 42 S. W. 507.

Time of entering.— In Georgia it has been held that a judgment obtained with the consent of defendant at the term during which the writ was filed, while good inter partes, cannot affect the rights of third persons. Ainsworth v. Mobile Fruit, etc., Co., 102 Ga. 123, 29 S. E. 142. And in California stipulations by defendants for the taking of judgments against them are of no avail where they are entered after the expiration of three years. Grant v. McArthur, 137 Cal. 270, 70 Pac. 88.

Amount of recovery.— Where the declaration in the case asks judgment on a note for a precise amount, the consent of defendant cannot authorize a judgment for a larger sum. Lester v. Cloud, 67 Ga. 770.

Verification of claim.— A statute requiring, in the absence of process, verification of the justness of the debt alleged and confessed, applies to judgments entered by agreement of the parties. Lauderdale v. Ennis Stationery Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 24 S. W. 834.

Authority of an administrator to consent to a judgment against him see Merrill v. Bachelder, 123 Cal. 674, 56 Pac. 618.

Waiver of irregularities.— The validity of a judgment for plaintiffs in an action at law, entered by consent of defendant's attorney given in open court, and on admissions of fact made by him, is not affected by the fact that a jury trial was not formally waived, nor because no findings were made by the court, the consent to the judgment having rendered them unnecessary. Harniska v. Dolph, 133 Fed. 158, 66 C. C. A. 224.

Indorsement by attorney.— Where a decree drawn up by counsel for one of the parties is submitted to the attorney of record for the other, and the latter indorses on it the letters "O. K." with his signature, and it is placed in the hands of the court and ordered to be recorded, it makes a binding and effective decree by consent. Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Sands, 133 Ind. 433, 32 N. E. 722. Compare Davis Paint Mfg. Co. v. Metzger Linseed Oil Co., 188 Ill. 295, 58 N. E. 940; McMaster v. Radford, 16 Ont. Pr. 20.

Statement of cause of action.— A judgment entered by agreement, without a specific statement of the cause of action, signed by the parties or their attorneys, as required by on a stipulation of the parties is in fact a judgment by consent.[72] The fact that a defendant causes a decree to be entered up shows his consent to it,[73] but his mere request that it may be modified in a certain detail does not;[74] nor does a mere statement of counsel that he has no objection to the entry of the judgment.[75] And it is within the jurisdiction of the court to determine the fact and the sufficiency of the consent of the parties.[76]

2. Operation and Effect — a. In General. A judgment by consent of the parties is more than a mere contract in pais;[77] having the sanction of the court, and entered as its determination of the controversy, it has all the force and effect of any other judgment,[78] being conclusive as an estoppel upon the parties and their privies,[79] and not invalidated by subsequent failure to perform a condition on which the consent was based,[80] although it may be inquired into for fraud practised upon one of the parties,[81] or as against other creditors of defendant.[82] After a defendant has consented that a judgment may be rendered against him, he is not entitled to a jury trial to fix the amount of damages.[83] Where several defendants are brought into court, a judgment by agreement as to one only is a dismissal as to the others.[84]

b. As Waiver of Defects or Irregularities. A judgment by consent operates as a waiver of any defects in the process or pleadings, or irregularities in the previous proceedings, or grounds of objection which would have constituted errors in the judgment if rendered upon trial, provided they do not go to the jurisdiction.[85]

B. Offer of Judgment — 1. In General. Where a judgment is entered upon defendant's offer to suffer judgment for a certain amount, and plaintiff's acceptance of it, it is as valid and binding as any other judgment.[86] Such an offer may be made where the only matter in dispute is the amount of the recovery to which plaintiff is entitled,[87] as where the claim is for unliquidated a rule of court, is a nullity. Baider v. Murray, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 273.

72. Corby v. Abbott, 28 Mont. 523, 73 Pac. 120.

Stipulation to abide result of another suit. — The parties may stipulate that the determination of a question in another suit pending between them shall be authority for the entry of judgment in the suit at bar; but a judgment cannot be entered on such a stipulation unless it is shown that a judgment has been rendered in the other suit. damages,[88] or where defendant admits his liability to a certain extent, but disputes plaintiff's demand beyond that sum.[89] It is not a pleading, amendable by the party at his own pleasure, but a proceeding amendable only by direction of the court,[90] and it must be unconditional and unqualified,[91] and precludes defendant from proceeding with the case until plaintiff's right to elect has been exercised or has expired.[92] The offer may be made at any time after service of process,[93] and by one of several joint debtors who has been served.[94] Its effect, where plaintiff proceeds to trial and recovers no more than the amount offered, is to give defendant his costs.[95]

2. Mode of Making Offer. A defendant making an offer of judgment must comply strictly with any directions of the statute, as to its being in writing,[96] and verified,[97] and as to its service on plaintiff,[98] or its being made in open court, according to the terms of the statute;[99] but the phraseology is not an essential matter, provided the intention is made clear.[1]

3. Acceptance or Rejection. To have the benefit of an offer of judgment, plaintiff must definitely and positively accept it.[2] If he rejects it or fails to accept it he cannot have any advantage of it in the subsequent proceedings, or secure a judgment for the amount offered, except on due proof and recovery in the ordinary way.[3] Nor will he be allowed to play fast and loose with the offer; having once refused it, he cannot change his mind and accept it.[4] By going to trial he waives the right to accept a previous offer of judgment,[5] and the same result may follow where he amends his complaint in matters of substance.[6] As to the time within which plaintiff must exercise his option to accept or refuse, if it is fixed by the terms of the offer, the court has no authority to extend the time after its expiration,[7] and if fixed by statute plaintiff must have the full number of days allowed,[8] and defendant cannot withdraw his offer, although yet unaccepted, within the time limited,[9] nor take any other effective step in the proceedings, such as filing an answer, since the acceptance will relate back to the filing of the offer.[10]

C. Judgment on Admissions — 1. Admission in Pleadings in General. If defendant in his pleadings admits plaintiff's cause of action against him, or his liability to plaintiff to a specific limited amount, the latter will be entitled to take judgment for that amount.[11] But the admission must be distinct and unequivocal and not conditional,[12] and it is conclusive of nothing but defendant's liability.[13] It admits only the traversable allegations of the declaration, and the amount of the debt or damages confessed, and no greater sum can be recovered without further proof.[14]

2. Admission of Part of Demand. If defendant's answer admits the justice of a portion of plaintiff's demand, the latter is entitled to take judgment for the amount so admitted to be due.[15] As to his right to take a judgment for what defendant is willing to concede, and then proceed to trial for the remainder of his claim, with the possible result of securing a second judgment in the same action, it appears that this could not be done at common law,[16] but it is permitted by statute in many of the states.[17] But the admission must be uncon-

In New York an early statutory provision fixed the rights of a plaintiff, where a part of his claim is admitted by the answer, as follows: "When the answer of the defendant . . . admits part of the plaintiff's claim to be just, the court, on motion, may order such defendant to satisfy that part of the claim, and may enforce the order as it enforces a judgment or provisional remedy." ditional,[18] although it need not specify the particular items of plaintiff's claim or account to which it applies.[19]

3. PLEA OF SET-OFF OR COUNTER-CLAIM. Where defendant pleads a set-off or counter-claim, but no other answer or defense, it is an admission of his liability for so much of plaintiff's demand as is in excess of the alleged recoupment, and for that excess plaintiff is entitled to take judgment.[20]

D. Submission of Agreed Case. An agreed case is a formal written enumeration of the facts in a case, assented to by both parties as correct and complete, and submitted to the court by their agreement, in order that a decision may be rendered without a trial, upon the court's conclusions of law upon the facts as stated.[21]

E. Rendition and Entry of Judgment — 1. IN GENERAL. The entry of a judgment upon an agreement of the parties, or upon an offer and acceptance, is in general a mere ministerial act, which may be performed by the clerk of the court,[22] upon notice to the adverse party in cases where he has the right to be heard as to the nature or terms of the judgment to be entered.[23] The judgment must conform to the terms of the agreement of the parties,[24] and the court has no power to add to it conditions which the parties have not agreed on.[25]

Availability of defenses.— In a case presented upon a statement of facts, without any stipulation that the decision should be influenced by the pleadings, defendant is entitled to judgment when the facts will verify any plea which is a bar to the action. Machias Hotel Co. v. Fisher, 56 Me. 321. So, where there is a declaration and no plea, and a case agreed is submitted to the court for its decision, plaintiff's cause of action, as set forth in the declaration, is submitted to the court without reference to any particular form of defense, and defendant is entitled to judgment if the facts stated afford him a defense of which he might have availed himself under any form of pleading. Sawyer v. Corse, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 230, 94 Am. Dec. 445. So it has been held that a judgment for the amount stipulated in an agreed statement of facts, as owing by one party to the other, was properly refused where it was determined that the party to whom payment was due was liable in damages for negligence to the party owing. Western Union Cold Storage Co. v. Winona Produce Co., 197 Ill. 457, 64 N. E. 496.

Affidavit of good faith.— Under a statutory requirement that the parties, on submission of a controversy, shall file an affidavit that the controversy is real and the submission made in good faith, an affidavit made by the attorney in fact of one of the parties that the submission is in good faith and that the controversy is real to the best of his knowledge, information, and belief is not sufficient. 2. TIME OF ENTRY. Defendant's offer of a judgment, or his consent to the entry of a judgment against him, will generally entitle plaintiff to take judgment at once, without reference to the stage of the proceedings at which it is made.[26] Thus the judgment may be entered before the return-day of the writ,[27] or before the expiration of defendant's time for pleading,[28] and in vacation [29] in those jurisdictions where the consent of parties will authorize the entry of judgments out of term.[30]

F. Opening or Vacating Judgment — 1. IN GENERAL. A court has power to open or vacate a judgment entered by consent or agreement of parties, on adequate grounds, but it cannot alter or correct it, except with the consent of all the parties affected by the judgment;[31] nor can it set aside such a judgment after the expiration of the time allowed by statute for instituting proceedings for that purpose.[32]

2. GROUNDS FOR OPENING OR VACATING. A judgment by consent or agreement may be opened or set aside for want of compliance with statutory directions as to such judgments,[33] or where it was entered by the consent or direction of an unauthorized attorney,[34] or for an excessive amount or otherwise in violation of the agreement of the parties,[35] or for fraud,[36] or collusion,[37] or where defendant was tricked or misled by false representations,[38] or on account of a mistake or misapprehension of the party or his counsel,[39] and also to allow defendant to set up the defense of usury;[40] and, it seems, where the rights of an infant are concerned, and there is reason to think they may not have been adequately protected by the judgment.[41] If a corporation enters into a transaction which is ultra vires, and litigation ensues, in the course of which a judgment is entered by consent, such judgment is as binding on the parties as one obtained after a contest, and will not be set aside because the transaction was beyond the powers of the corporation.[42]

IV. JUDGMENTS BY DEFAULT.[43]

A. Nature and Requisites — 1. What Constitutes Judgment by Default — a. On Default Proper. Properly speaking, a judgment by default is one taken against a defendant when, having been duly summoned or cited in an action, he fails to enter an appearance.[44] The term is not properly applied to a judgment rendered when a defendant, after appearance and plea, withdraws his plea and abandons the defense,[45] or where he fails to plead within the time limited after the overruling of his demurrer.[46] But the term is frequently, and indeed commonly, used in a much wider sense, in which it includes judgments given against defendant for want of a plea, answer, affidavit of defense, etc., as well as for want of an appearance.[47]

b. Judgment of Nil Dicit. This is the form of judgment to be entered when defendant, having appeared, fails to put in any plea or answer, or having pleaded, withdraws the plea and makes no defense,[48] or where he elects to stand upon a plea to which a demurrer has been sustained.[49] But the distinction between this form of judgment and the other varieties of judgment against defendant for failure to take some required step in the action is no longer strictly observed; and the entry of a judgment by nil dicit, when it should have been by default, is a mere informality and not reversible error.[50] There is also a form called judgment by "non sum informatus," which is rendered where, instead of pleading, Appearance by attorney.— A justice's judgment when defendant is present by attorney, although the attorney takes no part in the trial, is not a judgment by default. Borgwald v. Fleming, 69 Mo. 212.

47. Black Judgm. § 80. And see Debs v. Dalton, 7 Ind. App. 84, 34 N. E. 236.

Failure to appear and oppose a demurrer constitutes a default within N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1294. Forgotson v. Becker, 81 N. Y. Suppl. 321.

48. Hutchison v. Powell, 92 Ala. 619, 9 So. 170; Stewart v. Goode, 29 Ala. 476; Summerlin v. Dowdle, 24 Ala. 428; Dart v. Hercules, 34 Ill. 395; Foster v. Filley, 2 Ill. 256; Greenough v. Sheldon, 9 Iowa 503; Gilder v. McIntyre, 29 Tex. 89. And see Bennett v. Couchman, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 73.

Partial defense.— Where defendant's plea or answer sets up a defense only to a part of plaintiff's declaration or complaint, the latter may take judgment by nil dicit for that portion which is unanswered. Deshler v. Hodges, 3 Ala. 509; Safford v. Vail, 22 Ill. 327; Warren v. Nexsen, 4 Ill. 38; Cross v. Watson, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 129. Thus, in an action on two notes, each set up as a distinct cause of action, where defendant answers only as to one of the notes, judgment should be given, on motion, on the other note. Curran v. Kerchner, 117 N. C. 264, 23 S. E. 177.

Failure to appear at trial.— If defendant has put in his plea, and issue has been joined, and he then fails to appear when the case is called for trial, the judgment to be entered against him cannot properly be in the form of a judgment nil dicit, for he is not in default for want of an answer. Taylor v. McLaughlin, 2 Colo. 375.

49. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Bozarth, 91 Ill. App. 68.

50. Elyton Land Co. v. Morgan, 88 Ala. 434, 7 So. 249; Atlantic Glass Co. v. Paulk, 83 Ala. 404, 3 So. 800; Shields v. Barden, 6 Ark. 459.

defendant's attorney declares that he "is not informed" of any answer or defense to be made.[51]

c. Want of Affidavit of Defense or Merits. Where the statutes require a defendant, if he means to contest plaintiff's claim, to file an affidavit setting forth the facts on which he means to rely as a defense, or an affidavit that he has a meritorious defense to the action, his failure to comply with this provision will entitle plaintiff to a judgment,[52] which is not technically a judgment by default,[53] although practically it has the same consequences and effects.[54]

d. Non Prosequitur. Judgment of non prosequitur or non pros is given against plaintiff for his default or neglect to take any of those steps in the proceedings which he is required to take in due time, as a failure to file a declaration or reply, to amend a pleading after demurrer, or to appear when the case is called for trial. In states where this term is no longer employed, its equivalent is a judgment of "dismissal for want of prosecution."[55] The judgment of non pros. is said to be in effect a judgment by default for laches.[56] It is sometimes provided by statute that a defendant may proceed with the case upon the failure of plaintiff to appear, and judgment may be rendered on the merits.[57]

The proceeding to ascertain the amount due is the same on a judgment by nil dicit as upon a default. Storey v. Nichols, 22 Tex. 87.

In Texas it has been held that a judgment by nil dicit is entitled to a more liberal construction than if it had been rendered in the absence of defendant; and that it is to be regarded as partaking of the nature and conclusiveness of a judgment by confession. Constitutionality of statutes.— Statutes requiring defendant to file an affidavit of defense, or affidavit of merits, are constitutional and valid. Honore v. Home Nat. Bank, 80 Ill. 489; Wilder v. Arwedson, 80 Ill. 435; Hunt v. Lucas, 99 Mass. 404.

Insufficient affidavit of defense.— If an affidavit of defense is filed, but plaintiff deems it inadequate in law to constitute a defense to the action, he may have a rule on defendant to show cause why judgment should not be entered against him for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense. But it is error to give judgment on account of the insufficiency of an affidavit of defense filed, where the case is not one in which such an affidavit can legally be required. Bartoe v. Guckert, 158 Pa. St. 124, 27 Atl. 845. A motion for judgment on this ground, being in the nature of a demurrer, admits the facts averred in the affidavit, and denies their sufficiency as an answer to the claim. Hicks v. Northern Liberties Nat. Bank, 168 Pa. St. 638, 32 Atl. 63. And if the court decides that the allegations of the affidavit are not adequate to constitute a defense to the action, judgment will be given for plaintiff, unless, for special reasons, leave should be granted to file a new or supplemental affidavit. Laird v. Campbell, 92 Pa. St. 470; Callan v. Lukens, 89 Pa. St. 134; Sykes v. Anderson, 14 Pa. Co. Ct. 329. Where such leave has been given, the affidavit must be filed within a reasonable time, or else the court may enter judgment without a new rule or further notice to defendant. Close v. Hancock, 3 Pa. Super. Ct. 207. On motion for judgment for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense, the correctness of an averment in the affidavit as to the law of another state cannot be tested by reference to the statutes of that state. 2. ACTIONS IN WHICH DEFAULT MAY BE TAKEN. In some states the right to take judgment by default, or for want of an affidavit of defense, is restricted to actions of contract, or arising ex contractu.[58] This excludes actions for damages founded on a tort,[59] and actions for an injunction.[60] In some states also this procedure is not applicable in actions of replevin.[61]

3. AGAINST WHOM DEFAULT MAY BE TAKEN — a. Defendants Generally. As a general rule a default may be taken against any natural person or corporation[62] against whom the same judgment might have been obtained as the result of contested proceedings,[63] including not only principal defendants but also garnishees.[64]

b. Joint Defendants. At common law, where several persons are summoned as defendants, and one of them suffers a default, while the others plead, final judgment cannot be entered upon the default until the issue as to the other defendants is disposed of, and not even then unless plaintiff had a verdict on the issue or defendants' pleading set up a merely personal defense.[65] Nor can plaintiff discontinue or dismiss his action as to one defendant and take judgment against the other,[66] unless in a case where the cause of action is joint and several.[67]

58. This will include an action to recover the value of services rendered (Whereatt v. Ellis, 68 Wis. 61, 30 N. W. 520, 41 N. W. 762); an action against principal and surety on a bond to insure the faithful performance of a contract (Fidelity, etc., Co. v. U. S., 187 U. S. 315, 23 S. Ct. 120, 47 L. ed. 194); an action for the foreclosure of a mortgage (Chamberlain v. Armstrong, 9 Ont. Pr. 212); an action to enforce a statutory liability of stock-holders of banking corporations, to depositors and creditors, for double the par value of their stock (Coulbourn v. Boulton, 100 Md. 350, 59 Atl. 711), and an action upon a foreign judgment (Martel v. Dubord, 3 Manitoba 598).

Claim barred by limitations.— A part of plaintiff's claim being more than six years old does not render a judgment on default for the whole illegal. Wilson v. Hayes, 18 Pa. St. 354.

In several states, however, the joint debtor acts provide that in actions regularly commenced against several joint defendants the court may, whenever a several judgment would be proper, render judgment against one or more of them, leaving the action to proceed against the others; and this permits the entry of a judgment by default against a defendant not appearing or not pleading, where the cause of action is joint and several,[68] although, if the claim is upon a joint liability, no final judgment can be entered until the issues raised are finally disposed of, for in that case defendants must stand or fall together.[69] And such statutes do not authorize the entry of a judgment against one only of several defendants who are all equally in default.[70] It has been held that where process is served on only one of two defendants, judgment by default cannot be rendered against both or against the one served,[71] unless by the aid of statutes such as those above mentioned.[72] One who is originally a defendant, but afterward, by leave of court, becomes a plaintiff and files a cross bill, is not entitled to a default judgment against his co-defendants, if they had no notice of his cross bill or that he had changed his status in the case.[73]

4. Jurisdiction of Defendant. A judgment entered by default against a party who has not been served with process and who has not appeared in the action is irregular and void.[74] And due and proper service must appear on the record, or

A voluntary appearance by defendant will confer jurisdiction and amount to a waiver of defects in the process or its service; but the entry of an order that the cause "is hereby continued by consent" does not show such an appearance and waiver of service as will support a judgment by default. Flowers v. Jackson, 66 Ark. 458, 51 S. W. 462.

thus acquired, it is not divested by subsequent errors or irregularities in the proceedings.[78] In the case of constructive service of process, by publication or otherwise, jurisdiction to render a judgment by default will depend upon a strict compliance with the requirements of the statutes in that behalf.[79]

5. WAIVER OF DEFAULT. A plaintiff who means to take advantage of defendant's default must insist upon his right to do so; he waives the default if he voluntarily extends the time for defendant to take the required step, accepts a pleading filed too late, consents to a reference of the case, and allows the introduction of evidence, or goes to trial without objection.[80]

6. DISCRETION OF COURT. Upon an application for judgment by default, defendant being technically in default, it is in the sound discretion of the court to grant the motion or take off the default, according to the justice of the particular case and the relative diligence or laches of the parties, or, on granting defendant leave to plead, to restrict the time within which he may do so, or otherwise impose reasonable terms on him.[81]

7. EFFECT OF DEATH OF DEFENDANT. As the mere entry of a default does not involve or amount to a final judgment and does not determine either the kind or

B. Pleadings to Sustain Judgment — 1. Requisites of Declaration or Complaint. A default admits only what is well pleaded; and consequently a judgment by default cannot be sustained if plaintiff's declaration or complaint does not state a good cause of action or lacks those averments which are necessary to show his right to recover.[83] The test proposed by some of the decisions is that the declaration or complaint must be sufficient to withstand a general demurrer.[84]

Thompson v. Stetson, 15 Nebr. 112, 17 N. W. 368. So a judgment by default for fraudulent representations cannot stand unless the intent to defraud was alleged in the complaint. Shields v. Clement, 12 Misc. (N. Y.) 506, 33 N. Y. Suppl. 676. But such a judgment is not void merely because the complaint fails to show whether plaintiff described as a "company," is a corporation or a partnership. Failure to lay venue.— Where a judgment has been entered by default for want of a plea, defendant cannot, on a rule to strike off the judgment, allege that the statement of claim was insufficient, because it did not lay a venue; in such a case the omission is cured by the default. In addition to this, it is necessary to sustain the judgment, if so provided by statute, that the complaint should be verified,[85] and accompanied by plaintiff's affidavit;[86] nor will the judgment be valid if it grants relief different from that prayed in the complaint or in excess of plaintiff's demands.[87] But if the declaration contains several counts, one of which is good, the judgment will be sustained, although the other counts are not sufficient.[88]

2. Filing and Serving Declaration or Complaint. Unless a plaintiff has filed his declaration or complaint at or within the prescribed time, and served the same on defendant, if that is required by the statute, he will not be entitled to a judgment by default on defendant's failure to appear or plead, and a judgment so entered will be irregular and voidable.[89]

3. Effect of Amendment. It is a general rule that an amendment of the declaration or complaint, after default, if it introduces a new cause of action, or if it otherwise goes to the substance of the pleading, opens the default and admits the defendant to all the rights which he would have had on the filing or service of the original declaration or complaint,[90] although it is otherwise if the amendment is immaterial or merely formal.[91] And if the amendment brings in a new defendant, he cannot be defaulted until he has had due time to appear and plead.[92] But judgment rendered on the amended declaration or complaint

4. Service or Notice of Amended Pleading. Where the declaration or complaint is amended in matters of substance, or withdrawn and a new one filed in its place, the amended or substituted pleading must be served on defendant, or he must be otherwise notified of it, according to the requirements of the statute, before he can be defaulted.[94] It has been held that defendant should be admitted to a defense only as to the new matters set up in the amended petition, not as to matters pleaded in the original petition, which he failed to answer in due season.[95]

C. Grounds For Judgment by Default[96] — 1. What Constitutes Default in General. Although a default properly means defendant's failure to appear at the return-day,[97] the term is also used where he fails to demur or plead.[98] But the mere failure of defendant to obey an order of court made incidentally in the progress of the cause does not usually entitle plaintiff to take judgment as by default.[99] It is also erroneous to enter a judgment by default, where a judgment of nonsuit appears on the record as still subsisting.[1] Where defendant pleads in abatement, and no replication is filed, his failure to move for a judgment of non pros. does not authorize the entry of a judgment against him.[2]

2. Default of Appearance — a. In General. Defendant's failure to enter his appearance, or cause an appearance to be entered for him, is a default which will entitle plaintiff to take judgment.[3] Defendant's rights will be saved in this respect not only by a formal entry of appearance,[4] but by his taking any step in

96. In Connecticut under a statute providing that, in cases where an attorney appears for defendant, plaintiff may require him to state to the court whether he believes a bona fide defense exists to the action, whether such defense will be made, and whether there will be a trial, and that if the attorney refuses to disclose as required, or fails to satisfy the court that such defense will be made or such trial had, the court may order judgment for plaintiff, it has been held that where the rule is complied with, the court has no authority to pass on the legal sufficiency of the defense, and render judgment because it deems such defense insufficient. Jennings v. Parsons, 71 Conn. 413, 42 Atl. 76.

Proc. § 237), providing that in actions for the recovery of real estate defendant, before he is permitted to plead, shall file an undertaking with good and sufficient surety, but containing no requirement that the bond shall be justified in the first instance, the mere entry on the back of the undertaking of plaintiff's exception to the filing thereof, without any action of the court thereon, is insufficient to entitle plaintiff to judgment by default final on the failure of defendant to have the undertaking justified. 4. Sheepshanks v. Boyer, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,741, Baldw. 462, holding that an application to the clerk and his promise to enter an appearance are equivalent to an appear-the proceedings which unequivocally shows that he submits himself generally to the jurisdiction of the court.[5] But this effect is not produced by a special appearance entered for the purpose of objecting to the jurisdiction,[6] or by a motion to dissolve an attachment,[7] or for a continuance.[8] If the appearance is entered by an attorney for defendant, it should be done by a formal entry of record, or formal notice of his appearance, or by the filing of a pleading.[9] A default obtained without proper service and on an unauthorized appearance by an attorney is void.[10]

b. Withdrawal of Appearance. If the attorney who has entered an appearance for defendant withdraws his appearance, although without leave of court, before further proceedings are had, judgment by default for want of an appearance may then be taken.[11] And so if defendant, after pleading, withdraws his own appearance, his plea goes with him, and judgment may be rendered against him as on default.[12] But the withdrawal of the attorney's appearance after the filing of a plea does not withdraw the plea so as to justify a judgment by default.[13]

c. Absence at Trial or Other Proceeding. In most states it is held that the mere failure of defendant to appear when the case is called for trial, his plea or answer being on file, will not entitle plaintiff to take judgment as by default, but the trial must proceed and plaintiff must present evidence in support of his demands.[14] In a few, however, judgment by default is allowed in such cases.[15]

In Georgia the mere marking of the name of defendant's counsel on the docket, where no other pleading or defense is filed, is not sufficient to prevent the taking of a judgment by default. not be defaulted for want of an answer.[23] Nor can a default be entered pending a call on plaintiff for a bill of particulars.[24]

b. Rule or Notice to Plead. Where the rules of practice or something exceptional in the case, such as an amendment of the complaint, the striking out of the plea or answer with leave to plead anew, or an arrangement of the parties, requires defendant to be ruled to plead, he cannot be put in default without the taking of such a rule[25] and its proper service upon him or due notice to him.[26] But if he then fails to plead or answer within the appointed time, judgment may be taken against him as for want of a plea.[27] It has been held, however, that a plea filed after the day fixed by the rule will not be too late, if before a default is asked for and ordered.[28]

c. Time For Answering. A judgment rendered by default against a defendant before the expiration of the time allowed to him for filing a plea or answer is irregular and voidable at his instance.[29] But on the other hand he cannot escape the consequences of his neglect by filing a plea after the expiration of the time,[30] unless it be done by consent of plaintiff or leave of the court,[31] or, in some jurisdictions, before plaintiff has claimed the entry of a default,[32] or unless the delay was due to the action of the court,[33] or is attributable to plaintiff's own fault or irregular action in the case,[34] or a delay in the mails,[35] or the grant of further time in which to plead.[36] Defendant has the whole of the last day in which to plead, and cannot be said to be in default until that day has fully expired,[37] and if the last day falls on a Sunday or holiday, he is entitled to the whole of the next succeeding day.[38] But a judgment thus prematurely entered is not absolutely void; if defendant takes no steps to vacate or reverse the judgment, or otherwise to correct the error, he is presumed to have waived it.[39] In case of default judgment may be entered before the case is reached in its regular order on the docket.[40]

d. Answering Amended Pleadings. Leave granted to plaintiff to amend his declaration or complaint, and to defendant for time to plead, is an abandonment of all existing issues, and if plaintiff amends, and no plea is filed by defendant to the amended declaration or complaint, plaintiff is entitled to a judgment by default, notwithstanding there was a plea to the original declaration or complaint,[41]

unless the amendment was merely formal,[42] or the original plea or answer set forth a sufficient defense to the declaration or complaint as amended.[43] But the amended declaration or complaint must be served on defendant, or otherwise notified to him,[44] and he cannot be defaulted when no time for filing the new answer is fixed either by statute or rule or order of court.[45]

e. Answer to Part of Cause of Action. If defendant's plea or answer sets up a denial or defense to only a part of plaintiff's cause of action, severable from the rest, plaintiff may take judgment by default, or more properly by nil dicit, for the portion unanswered, and proceed to trial for the rest.[46] Or if plaintiff is willing to concede the validity of the defense, as to that portion of his demand which it undertakes to answer, he may have judgment by default for the remainder.[47]

f. Necessity For Filing Plea. To prevent a default defendant's plea or answer must be actually and duly filed in the clerk's office.[48]

g. Necessity For Affidavit of Defense. In some states the statutes or rules of court require defendant to file an affidavit of defense, on penalty of having judgment taken against him, where plaintiff's claim is upon an instrument for the application to claims arising out of torts,[50] or where defendant is sued in a representative capacity,[51] or where there has been an award of arbitrators finding that the plaintiff has no cause of action.[52] If the defense alleged in the affidavit is good as to a part of the claim, but insufficient as to the balance, the court may direct judgment for the part insufficiently denied, and allow plaintiff to try the case as to the remainder.[53] In Pennsylvania it is also provided by statute that such an affidavit shall be filed in actions of scire facias on mortgages, judgments, and mechanics' liens.[54]

h. Failure to Plead Over or Rejoin. Judgment by default is properly entered where a party fails to plead in due season after the overruling of his demurrer, with leave given him to plead or a preliminary judgment of respondeat ouster,[55] or where a plea to the jurisdiction is found against him,[56] or his motion to quash the summons is overruled.[57] And the rule is the same where plaintiff demurs to the plea or answer, and the demurrer is sustained, and defendant neglects to avail himself of leave given to file a new plea,[58] or where, on a plea of former recovery, and a replication of nul tiel record, defendant fails to rejoin.[59]

i. Striking Out Pleading. Judgment as by default or nil dicit may be entered against a defendant where his plea or answer is stricken out, as sham, frivolous, irrelevant, or filed without authority, and he does not ask or obtain leave to file a new plea;[60] or where, having obtained such leave, he fails to file an

4. When Entry of Default Improper — a. Plea Filed and Not Disposed of. When an answer or other pleading of a defendant, raising an issue of law or fact, is properly on file in the case, no judgment by default can be entered against him; to authorize a default, the answer or other pleading must be disposed of by motion, demurrer, or in some other manner.[63] Even though the plea filed by defendant is bad in form or substance, yet, if it does not admit plaintiff's case, the latter cannot have judgment for want of a plea,[64] unless the plea is such that it

Missouri.— After replying to a plea filed in proper time, plaintiff cannot take judgment by nil dicit; if the plea is bad, he may be treated as a mere nullity,[65] or where it has been expressly or tacitly withdrawn.[66]

b. Pending Decision on Demurrer. On similar principles it is erroneous to render a judgment by default against a defendant who has filed a demurrer to the declaration or complaint, when the same remains unanswered and not disposed of in any way, and he has not waived or withdrawn the demurrer.[67] It makes no difference that the demurrer would not be sustainable; still it must be disposed of in some proper manner,[68] although of course if it has been stricken out plaintiff may then take a judgment.[69]

c. Exceptions Not Disposed of. A judgment by default, entered while exceptions are pending and undetermined, is erroneous and irregular.[70]

d. Pendency of Motion. Generally it is erroneous and irregular to enter a judgment by default while a motion remains pending and not disposed of.[71]

A default is an admission of every material and traversable allegation of the declaration or complaint necessary to plaintiff's cause of action,[77] that defendant is the person named in the writ and intended to be sued,[78] and that the court has acquired jurisdiction of his person and has jurisdiction of the cause of action.[79] Also it admits the due execution of a note, contract, or other instrument sued on, and, where defendant is a corporation, its capacity to make the contract in suit.[80] But a default does not admit allegations of facts extrinsic to plaintiff's cause of action or unnecessary to its establishment,[81] or facts alleged by a co-defendant,[82] or according to some of the authorities, the legal effect of plaintiff's facts; that is, while the

c. Where Service Is Constructive. When the service of process upon defendant was constructive only, as, by publication, his default has much less force as an admission; and it is necessary for plaintiff, in order to obtain judgment, to show affirmatively a full compliance with the statute in regard to the mode of issuing and serving the process,[85] and also the facts which give the court jurisdiction over the property attached, or the res upon which alone its judgment can operate,[86] and, according to some of the decisions, the facts which entitle plaintiff to the relief demanded.[87]

d. Amount of Claim or Damages. If the action is in tort, or upon an unliquidated claim or demand, a default admits plaintiff's right to recover but not the amount to which he is entitled, and therefore further proceedings will be necessary to determine the amount of the judgment.[88] But if the cause of action is such that plaintiff is entitled to recover a fixed sum or nothing at all, or if the amount of his damages is ascertainable by mere calculation, the default admits his right to recover the sum demanded in the declaration or complaint, and judgment may be entered therefor.[89]

Breach of promise of marriage.— Under a statute providing that a default shall be taken as an admission of the amount of damages claimed "in actions on contract for the recovery of money only," it has been held that an action for a breach of a promise of marriage is of this character, and judgment may be rendered for the amount claimed without proof, although plaintiff also al-

3. Right to Participate in Further Proceedings. After making default a defendant is not entitled to notice of further proceedings in the case, or to participate in them, where they are not of such a character as to open the default or affect the question of his ultimate liability;[90] but where further proceedings are taken for the assessment of the damages or the taxation of costs, he is entitled to take part, and to offer proper evidence and cross-examine witnesses.[91]

E. Rendition and Entry of Judgment — 1. Preliminary Entry of Default. In some states a final judgment cannot be rendered against defendant without a preliminary entry of the default,[92] in others this action is not at all necessary,[93] and in others, while it is the regular and proper practice, and the omission to enter the default may be reversible error, it does not avoid the judgment.[94] This preliminary entry is to be made by the clerk of the court,[95] on application of plaintiff, or on an order of the court granted on plaintiff's motion,[96] and the entry should show the default affirmatively, not merely that plaintiff claimed it or moved for the entry.[97]

taken before the day set for the trial of the case,[99] and on the other hand where defendant fails to plead, plaintiff is not deprived of his right to claim a default because he does not demand it until the time of trial.[1] A default judgment prematurely entered is not validated by its subsequent confirmation or the entry of a final judgment upon it.[2]

b. Time Allowed For Appearance or Pleading. A judgment by default for want of an appearance, entered before the expiration of the time allowed by law for defendant to enter his appearance, or taken for want of a plea, before the expiration of the time granted by statute, rule, or order of court, or stipulation for the filing of a plea, is premature, and although not absolutely void, is reversible for error or voidable for irregularity.[3]

c. On Service by Publication. Statutes authorizing the service of process on non-resident defendants by publication commonly provide that a party so served shall have a certain number of days after the completion of the publication in which to answer; and no judgment by default can be taken until this period has fully expired.[4]

d. In Case of Joint Defendants. Where the action is against several defendants, judgment by default cannot properly be entered against any, unless by the help of a statute, until all have been served;[5] and all must have the full time allowed for answering;[6] and if one appears and pleads, and the others do not, the rule at common law is that no judgment can be entered on the default until the issue as to the other defendants is disposed of.[7]

e. After Entry of Default. When a preliminary entry of default is made, the final judgment is usually deferred until the assessment of the damages; but when there is no such reason for delay, there is no impropriety in rendering final judgment at once, or as of the day of the default,[8] unless it is provided by statute that a default shall not be made final until after the lapse of a certain number of days.[9] On the other hand, when the default has been entered, no rights of plaintiff are forfeited by delay in taking the final judgment.[10]

f. Term of Court. In many states the laws provide that judgment shall not be entered against a defendant at the return-term or appearance term, but only at a subsequent term, where certain conditions exist, as, where he is absent from the state, or where the writ has not been served or the declaration filed a certain number of days before the beginning of the term, or in any actions except such as are specified in the statute. Where this is the case, a default judgment entered at the return or appearance term is premature and liable to be reversed or set aside.[11]

g. Day of the Term. A judgment by default cannot be sustained unless it is entered in accordance with statutes or rules of court relating to the day of the term on which judgments may be taken.[12] Where it is the custom to enter judgments as of the last day of the term, a judgment by default may be so entered, although the record shows that the default occurred on a previous day.[13]

h. Hour of the Day. Where a defendant is cited to appear at a certain hour on a day named, judgment cannot be taken against him at an earlier hour on the same day.[14] And when he is required to plead within a certain number of days, he has the whole of the last day in which to plead and cannot be defaulted until that day has fully expired.[15]

where the rendition of a final judgment of this character is to be performed as a judicial act by the court, or involves an application to the court, it can be done as a general rule only in term-time.[17]

j. Presumption as to Time of Entering Judgment. Where the record does not show on what day a judgment by default was rendered, it will be presumed to have been rendered on the proper day.[18] And if the record recites that the time for answering had expired, it will be presumed that the court satisfied itself that such was really the case.[19]

3. Application For Judgment — a. Necessity For Application to Court. Where defendant makes default, and the nature of the action and of plaintiff's demand is such that there is no necessity for judicial action in determining the relief to be granted or the amount of the recovery, the statutes generally provide that a judgment may be entered by the clerk of the court, without application to the judge,[20] although otherwise it is necessary to move or apply to the court for the judgment.[21]

A defendant who has withdrawn his appearance is not entitled to notice of application for judgment by default. Day v. Mertlock, 87 Wis. 577, 58 N. W. 1037.

Upon affirmance of an order requiring defendant to do certain acts or have his answer stricken out, and judgment rendered against him by default, no stay being granted by the appellate court until after the time limited in the order has expired, plaintiff is entitled to judgment by default, without notice to defendant, immediately upon the record being returned to the trial court. court may hear evidence as to the right to take such a judgment, although it will not under ordinary circumstances receive evidence upon the merits of the case.[25] It may disregard objections which are not jurisdictional but amount to no more than mere irregularities,[26] and, as the facts of the case justify, may either render a judgment by default or confirm the entry thereof and assess plaintiff's damages,[27] or deny the application,[28] or it may set aside a preliminary entry of the default.[29] A rule requiring the court sitting as a jury to find separately facts and conclusions of law does not apply in rendering a judgment by default against one of several defendants.[30]

d. Bond or Recognizance on Taking Judgment. Under a statute providing that, before the rendering of a judgment against a defendant who was constructively summoned, and did not appear, a bond or recognizance shall be executed conditioned to save him harmless if he procures a vacation or modification thereof, a judgment rendered without the required security is erroneous.[31]

4. Assessment of Damages — a. Notice of Assessment.[32] Where defendant has appeared but not answered, in an action for the recovery of money only, and the complaint is duly verified, he is not entitled to notice of assessment;[33] but it is otherwise where the amount sought to be recovered is unliquidated or uncertain, and defendant will have the right to be heard on the question of the amount of the judgment.[34]

b. Method of Assessment. The rules governing the assessment of damages, where a judgment by default is entered by the court or by a jury, clerk of court or referee upon a writ of inquiry or other proceeding are fully discussed elsewhere in this work.[35]

5. Evidence — a. Proof of Jurisdictional Facts. To sustain a judgment by default there must be proof of the service of process on defendant. This is furnished by the officer's return, which imports verity,[36] although in some states an affidavit of the person serving the writ is required, which must be made in due form in order to support the judgment.[37] In case of service by publication upon an absent or non-resident defendant, a strict compliance with all the requirements of the statute must be shown.[38] A written acknowledgment of service of process, indorsed on the writ, and purporting to be signed by defendant, will not be sufficient to support a judgment by default, without proof of the authenticity of the indorsement and signature.[39]

b. Proof of Default. Where judgment is taken for want of an appearance by defendant, no proof of the fact is required, as the court can determine judicially from an inspection of the record whether or not an appearance has been entered.[40] And the rule is the same where the default consists in the failure to obey a rule to plead,[41] or to plead over after the overruling of a demurrer.[42] But in the ordinary case of defendant's omission to plead or answer within the time limited by law, plaintiff is required in some states to make and file an affidavit that no plea or answer has been received or filed within the time allowed.[43]

c. Proof of Cause of Action — (1) Necessity For Proof. As a general rule a default admits the cause of action and the material and traversable allegations of the declaration, although not the amount of damages, and hence the amount to be recovered is all plaintiff is required to prove or defendant permitted to controvert.[44] There are, however, numerous decisions disapproving of the entry of such a judgment without proof of the facts essential to plaintiff's recovery, chiefly, however, in cases where the action is for unliquidated damages or based upon a condition or contingency.[45] The filing of a copy of the instrument sued on,[46] of an affidavit of the amount due to plaintiff,[47] is sometimes required. Where one of two joint defendants answers, controverting the material allegations of the declaration, the fact that the other defendant suffers default does not dispense with the necessity of proof as to the answering defendant.[48]

(II) Admissibility, Weight, and Sufficiency. The ordinary rules concerning the admissibility of evidence are applicable.[49] If the nature of the evidence to be required on an application for judgment by default or an assessment of damages is not prescribed by statute, the judgment may be founded on any evidence sufficient to satisfy the court;[50] but it must be legal evidence, tending to establish plaintiff's claim or to fix the amount of his recovery.[51] The unless the allegation is proved, does not apply where defendant is in default. Steamship Richmond Hill Co. v. Seager, 33 N. Y. App. Div. 640, 54 N. Y. 51. Kentgen v. Jordan, 15 La. Ann. 219, holding that the evidence of one witness, who simply declares that an account sued on is correct, without giving his reasons for this assertion, is not sufficient to authorize the confirmation of a default.

An unsworn statement of an attorney as to the contents of papers which are not introduced in evidence or submitted to the accompanying affidavit of plaintiff may be sufficient by itself to support the judgment, if in proper form and containing the allegations needed to fix liability on defendant;[52] but it is in the discretion of the court to require other or further proof.[53] Where plaintiff's claim is required by statute to be verified, by affidavit or otherwise, it is prima facie evidence of the amount for which judgment should be rendered on an assessment of damages on defendant's default.[54]

d. Evidence For Defendant. On an inquest of damages defendant has the right to cross-examine plaintiff's witnesses,[55] although he cannot object to the introduction of testimony or demur to the evidence.[56] He may also offer any evidence which goes in mitigation or reduction of damages;[57] but he cannot introduce evidence controverting plaintiff's entire cause of action, or tending to avoid it or to show that no right of action existed.[58]

e. Presumptions as to Proof. Where a judgment is entered by default, it will be presumed that whatever proofs were necessary to support it were duly presented and taken.[59]

6. Relief Awarded — a. In General. Although defendant, by a default, admits the truth of the allegations in the complaint,[60] the judgment rendered thereon must pronounce the true sentence of the law, and if it does not it is erroneous.[61] If plaintiff's pleading states a cause of action, and defendant fails to answer, it is error to give judgment for defendant.[62] And if defendant is a non-resident and is served by publication only, it is error to render a personal judgment against him on his default; the only proper judgment is one in rem.[63] But aside from such limitations, the court has jurisdiction to render any judgment to which plaintiff is entitled under the relief demanded in his complaint.[64]

b. Conformity to Pleadings. A judgment by default for a sum greater than that prayed for in the declaration or complaint, or justified by its allegations, is irregular and erroneous.[65] Where the complaint is for so much money, without specifying the kind, or does not show that the contract sued on was made payable in any particular kind of money, it is error to enter a judgment on default for a sum payable in gold coin.[66] When the prayer of the complaint is for specific relief, plaintiff is confined to a recovery in strict accordance with what he has asked for.[67]

c. Costs and Attorney's Fees. A judgment for plaintiff by default will ordinarily entitle him to recover the costs of the action as in other cases.[68] And where the suit is on a written instrument containing a stipulation for the payment of an attorney's fee, the judgment rendered on defendant's default may include the amount of such fee as well as the principal sum of plaintiff's demand.[69]

7. Form and Effect of Judgment — a. Final or Interlocutory. In some states, as already stated, a final judgment cannot be entered immediately upon a default; there must first be a preliminary entry of the default.[70] And generally a final judgment cannot be entered where the damages are unliquidated or the amount of plaintiff's claim uncertain or indeterminate;[71] there must first be an interlocutory judgment by default, and the final judgment is entered after the damages have been assessed on a writ of inquiry or otherwise determined according to law.[72] If a part of the declaration or complaint is unanswered, plaintiff may have an interlocutory judgment as to such part, but final judgment cannot be entered until the issues are tried and determined.[73] Where one of two joint defendants suffers a default, but the other answers and proceeds to trial, there may be an interlocutory judgment against defendant in default, but there can be no final judgment in the action until the termination of the case against the other.[74] In some states a judgment entered upon default must be confirmed by the court, before it can have the effect of a final judgment;[75] in others, it is proper for the court, on entering an interlocutory judgment, to direct what final judgment shall be entered, or to direct that the final judgment shall be settled by a judge or referee.[76] But when a judgment by default is properly entered by the clerk or a commissioner, in final form, it becomes the judgment of the court, and stands until reversed or set aside.[77]

b. Form and Requisites.[78] A judgment by default should possess the formal requisites of a judgment,[79] and should be certain and definite in respect to the amount of the recovery.[80] The names of the parties appearing in the judgment should correspond with those in the declaration and the writ, the ordinary rules as to variance in this respect being applicable.[81] Where a judgment by default is given against a defendant absent from the state, it should direct plaintiff to comply with the statutory provisions which in such a case are necessary to entitle him to execution.[82]

c. Recitals of Judgment — (I) In General. A judgment by default should recite facts sufficient to show that defendant was in default, and for what reason, whether for want of an appearance, for want of a plea, or otherwise.[83] And, if the statute requires plaintiff to produce or file proof of his cause of action, before the judgment can be entered, it is necessary that the judgment shall show a compliance with this requirement.[84] And if there was an inquiry larities.[90] The review of a judgment by default on error or appeal,[91] and opening or vacating such a judgment,[92] are discussed elsewhere. On a proceeding to open or vacate, defendant may present objections going to the power and authority of the court to render the judgment, such as a want of jurisdiction,[93] the failure of plaintiff to present proof of his cause of action, as required by the statute,[94] that the declaration or complaint does not set forth a good cause of action,[95] or that there was fraud in the procurement of the judgment.[96] If the action was against a non-resident defendant, who did not appear and was served only constructively, the suit being begun by an attachment of his property within the jurisdiction, the judgment binds only the property so attached and does not affect defendant personally.[97]

V. JUDGMENTS ON MOTION OR SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS.[98]

A. When Authorized — 1. In General. As a general rule a judgment cannot be awarded upon a mere motion, but only upon the trial of the action, according to the parties a full opportunity to assert and litigate their rights.[99] But a judgment on motion may be granted where it is merely to complete a judgment already entered between the parties or to make effective provisions already incorporated in it,[1] or to authorize the recovery of money illegally obtained under an existing judgment.[2] There are also statutes in some of the states allowing a judgment to be entered on motion when plaintiff sues for a fixed sum or for liquidated damages, and files an affidavit in support of his claim, and defendant fails to file an answering affidavit.[3] The entry of judgment in summary proceedings, that is, on motion heard by the court without a jury, has been authorized, either by statute or the settled practice of the courts, in actions against receivers of the public revenues,[4] and contractors undertaking work for the government,[5] as well as against certain public officers, such as sheriffs, and the sureties on bonds given in the course of judicial proceedings.[6] So, where funds in the custody of a court are loaned out by order of the court, the borrower is a party to the cause to which the funds belong; and his obedience to an order requiring the return of the money may be enforced by a judgment entered against him on mere motion.[7]

2. JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS. This is a form of judgment not infrequently used in practice under the reformed codes of procedure. It is rendered on motion of plaintiff, when the answer admits or leaves undenied all the material facts stated in the complaint.[8] But such a judgment cannot be given where the pleadings of defendant set up a substantial and issuable defense,[9] or where the suit is for unliquidated damages and the answer states matters in mitigation.[10]

B. Application For Judgment. A defendant is entitled to notice of a motion for judgment against him; and even if the statute authorizing such a proceeding is silent as to notice, still he is entitled to a reasonable notice.[11] If judgment is entered on the motion before the time notified to defendant, it is erroneous, but not void.[12] But on the other hand, if the motion is not taken up on the day specified, it operates as a discontinuance, and the case cannot be taken up subsequently, on the same motion, and judgment entered,[13] unless defendant waives the objection by appearing personally, failing to object at the proper time, or himself calling up the motion.[14] In case of joint defendants, plaintiff, if otherwise entitled to a judgment of this sort, may proceed against those served with the notice.[15] A motion for judgment as in case of nonsuit is a special motion, and must be founded on an affidavit showing the facts necessary to entitle the party to his judgment.[16] In respect to the forms of pleadings to be employed on an application of this kind, and the evidence to be admitted, the provisions of the statute must be closely followed.[17]

C. Form and Requisites of Judgment. The rendition of judgment on motion or in summary proceedings being in derogation of the common law, the statute authorizing it must be strictly pursued, and the judgment must show on its face all facts necessary to give jurisdiction and to support the judgment.[18] The entry of a decree on the minutes of the court in a summary proceeding is the judgment; and where, after such entry, defendant died, the fact that it is signed during the term thereafter does not make it irregular.[19]

D. Relief Awarded. As the duty of judges is to administer justice according to law, if counsel should inadvertently omit to ask what his client is entitled to demand in a summary proceeding, the court would unquestionably be bound to award it to him, notwithstanding the omission.[20]

VI. JUDGMENT ON TRIAL OF ISSUES.[21]

A. Rendition, Form, and Requisites in General[22] — 1. Power and Duty of Court[23] — a. In General. The fact that there may be no way in which a judgment can be satisfied is no valid reason for withholding it, if one shows himself entitled thereto. Shurtleff v. Wiscasset, 74 Me. 130.

Directing verdict.— Where the state of the case is such that it is proper for the court to direct a verdict one way or the other, this should be done, and the court has no right simply to refuse to proceed with the case. Hatch v. Frazer, (Mich. 1904) 101 N. W. 228.

It is error for the court to refuse to sign a judgment, and to order a continuance, in order that plaintiff may move to have a judgment of another court affecting the land set aside, where the cause has been heard and the case is ripe for judgment. Burgess v. Kirby, 94 N. C. 575.

Failure to enter judgment for plaintiff for an amount admitted to be due and tendered in court is error for which the judgment will be reversed. Mace v. Gaddis, 3 Wash. Terr. 125, 13 Pac. 545.

Failure to comply with terms.— In a case where plaintiff obtained leave to amend his writ, on terms which he failed to comply with, but the case was given to the jury as upon the judicial discretion of the court is attempted.[25] But the authority of a court to render a judgment does not always depend upon the fact that regular proceedings have taken place and culminated in a verdict; it may in some cases rest upon the consent or agreement of the parties.[26] Where issues are sent from one court to another to be tried, it belongs to the court in which the main litigation is pending to enter any judgment that may be necessary in the case.[27]

b. Necessity of Issues. As a general rule there can be no final judgment rendered in an action before the cause is expressly or tacitly at issue.[28] Hence it is error to proceed to trial and judgment while a good and valid plea, or one of several pleas, remains unanswered and not in any way disposed of.[29]

c. Determination of All Issues. A judgment must determine all the issues properly raised in the case, and hence it is error to render a final judgment while an issue remains undisposed of.[30] Thus, where there is an issue of law and also one of fact, plaintiff cannot have final judgment until both issues are found in amended without objection, and upon the return of a verdict for plaintiff the court ordered that plaintiff should comply with the terms before the judgment was entered, it was held that defendant had no ground of objection. Cannon v. Leonard, 10 Allen (Mass.) 247.

A judgment prematurely entered by the court of its own motion, after issue joined, and without any hearing, trial, or opportunity to be heard on the issues, is irregular and will be reversed. Hennessy v. Tacoma Smelting, etc., Co., 33 Wash. 423, 74 Pac. 584.

Applications of rule.— Where defendant, in an action on a judgment, pleads nul tiel record, and also sets up a defense on the merits, such as payment or the statute of limitations, and the latter plea is found against him, this is not sufficient to warrant judgment for plaintiff; it is error to render judgment without also disposing of the first plea. Gatewood v. Palmer, 10 Humphr. (Tenn.) 466; Gee v. Hamilton, 6 Munf. (Va.) 32. But a judgment which determines the amount due upon the contract sued on is in legal effect a determination against defendant of all matters pleaded by him to re-

his favor.[31] And the rule is the same where defendant pleads matters triable by a jury and also sets up equitable defenses.[32] But if defendant proves any one of several pleas in bar, he is entitled to judgment, whatever disposition may be made of the others.[33]

d. Judgments in Causes Tried Together. Where several causes are tried and submitted together, it is not proper to render a general judgment, but separate judgments should be entered in the separate cases.[34] And so in a penal action to recover on several distinct offenses judgment must be rendered separately on each specific offense.[35]

e. More Than One Judgment in Same Case. There can be only one final judgment in any action; and therefore, when such a judgment has once been entered, no second or different judgment can be rendered between the same parties and in the same suit, until the first shall have been vacated and set aside or reversed on appeal or error.[36] On this principle different judgments are not allowed in one action upon independent contracts which by common-law rules could not be joined in the same suit; and so, where several contracts sued on in duce plaintiff's demand, and therefore it will not be reversed on the ground that it does not determine all the issues raised by the pleadings. Williams v. National Bldg., etc., Assoc., 59 S. W. 321, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 962.

Compare Plummer v. Park, 62 Nebr. 665, 87 N. W. 534, holding that the rendition of two decrees in a case at the same term, but not on the same day, is not reversible error, if the rights of the litigants have been correctly determined.

the same action are proved to be entirely distinct in their nature, plaintiff must elect which count he will retain and obtain judgment on that count.[37]

2. As Depending on Nature of Issues — a. Issues of Fact in General. An issue of fact is raised by the plea or answer, or by the subsequent pleadings, and it is generally necessary to the rendition of a judgment in the case that such issue should be tried in some regular mode and determined in favor of one party or the other.[38]

b. Issues on Plea in Abatement. Where issue has been joined upon a plea in abatement, there being no other pleas in the case, and the issue submitted to a jury, resulting in a verdict for plaintiff, the court should award a peremptory judgment quod recuperet, and it is error to give judgment of respondeat ouster or a default for want of a plea.[39] On the other hand, if such an issue is found in favor of defendant, the judgment is that the suit abate or that plaintiff's writ be quashed.[40]

c. Issues on Demurrer. The judgment on sustaining or overruling a demurrer may be either final or interlocutory, allowing further pleadings, according to the nature of the pleading which it attacks.[41] But where issues of fact have also been joined and are not disposed of it is error to render final judgment on a demurrer.[42]

d. Demurrer to Evidence. On a demurrer to evidence,[43] where it is manifest that the merits of the cause have not been tried, the court is not compelled to render a final judgment, but may remand the cause for a new trial.[44] But when such a demurrer is overruled, the other party is entitled to judgment.[45]

3. Nonsuit or Dismissal of Action.[46] Where plaintiff fails to prove his case, or

43. This proceeding, now practically obsolete, was analogous to a demurrer to a pleading. It was an objection or exception by one of the parties in an action at law to the effect that the evidence which his adversary had produced was insufficient in point of law, whether true or not, to make out his case or sustain the issue. Upon joinder in demurrer the jury was discharged, and the case was argued to the court in banc, who gave judgment upon the facts as shown in evidence. Black L. Dict.

in other words, where the court decides that he has given no evidence on which the jury could find a verdict in his favor, the proper judgment to be entered is one of nonsuit.[47] But this is not the proper judgment when defendant successfully controverts plaintiff's evidence, or proves that no such facts exist as are alleged by plaintiff; in that case there should be a general judgment for defendant.[48] The corresponding judgment under the code practice is one of dismissal. But when this judgment is granted for failure of plaintiff's evidence it is not a judgment on the merits, and should not be so denominated; and if the judgment recites that the complaint was dismissed "on the merits," it is reversible error.[49] An analogous form of judgment against plaintiff is that of nolle prosequi, which is entered where, after appearance, he declares that he "will not further prosecute his suit." It is used as a means of abandoning one or more counts of a declaration or parts of a cause of action, or releasing one or more of the joint defendants, Peremptory nonsuit.— "Notwithstanding some difference of opinion, it is now generally agreed that the right of trial by jury does not include the right to have the jury render a verdict in cases where the law is clearly against the plaintiff. The jury are to try and determine the facts, but it is the court which must declare the law applicable to the facts. Consequently, when the judge, at the close of the plaintiff's evidence, orders a peremptory nonsuit, on the ground that, conceding all the facts which the jury could find from the evidence, those facts are not sufficient to establish a liability against the defendant, such action is no violation of the plaintiff's constitutional rights." Plaintiff trying merits.— When the court, upon a trial at special term, has granted a motion, at the close of plaintiff's evidence, to dismiss the complaint, but plaintiff, instead of resting upon this decision as a nonsuit, afterward requests the court to find upon all the issues of fact in the case, and the court accordingly does make findings of fact and conclusions of law, and directs a judgment dismissing the complaint upon the merits, plaintiff cannot assert, merely because defendant did not formally rest his case, that the decision so made is in effect a mere nonsuit, and not a determination upon the merits. Dazey v. Pennington, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 326, 31 S. W. 312.

Dismissal for want of prosecution.— Where there is no plea of set-off, and plaintiff fails either to reply or to appear, the proper judgment to be entered is one dismissing the case for want of prosecution. Caldwell v. McKay, 65 Ill. App. 405. And see supra, IV, A, 1, d.

The proper form of a judgment dismissing an action, with costs to defendant, is as follows: "It is therefore considered and adjudged by the court that this cause be dismissed, and that the defendant recover from the plaintiff all costs herein expended."

while holding to the rest.[50] A judgment of retraxit is given against plaintiff when, after appearance, he voluntarily goes into court and enters upon the record a statement that he "withdraws his suit." It differs from a nonsuit in being an open and voluntary renunciation of his claim, while a nonsuit is the consequence of his neglect or default or the failure of his evidence.[51]

4. As Depending on Form of Trial — a. Judgment on Verdict of Jury[52]— (i) In General. The party in whose favor a verdict is found will ordinarily be entitled to the rendition of a judgment upon it, after the time allowed to move in arrest or for a new trial,[53] unless exceptions or points of law have been reserved for the decision of the court.[54] But the verdict, to sustain a judgment, must have been given in a case which was at the time ripe for trial,[55] and must be in itself valid and sufficient in form,[56] responsive to the issues submitted to the jury,[57] and not released, stricken off, or set aside.[58] But a verdict is not affected by subsequent matters, such as may furnish ground of objection to the form or contents of the judgment.[59] And although the law permits or directs a case of the particular kind to be tried by the court without a jury, the judgment is not necessarily void because a jury was called and rendered a verdict; for the court may adopt the verdict as its own judicial act.[60] But in any case the judgment should show distinctly that it is founded upon the verdict and entered in accordance with it.[61]

Pending demurrer to evidence.— The rendition of a verdict unconditional on its face, where there is a demurrer to the evidence, is not error, if such demurrer be afterward passed upon and determined by the court; but it cannot render judgment upon such verdict, without determining the demurrer. Green v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., 11 W. Va. 685.

55. A verdict rendered without issue having been joined will not support a judgment. Brown v. Cunningham, 23 W. Va. 109; Gallatin v. Haywood, 4 W. Va. 1.

Agreement as to amount.— Where counsel for the two parties, after the introduction of testimony, agree in open court upon the amount for which a verdict ought to be returned, a verdict rendered in pursuance of such agreement is equivalent to a confession, and will support a judgment entered up in the usual form, although no issuable defense had been filed in the case. 56. See Tourtelotte v. Brown, 1 Colo. App. 408, 29 Pac. 130; Hepburn v. Hoag, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 57. But a judgment apparently founded on a void verdict may be good if it is in a case where the law requires no verdict. Lockett v. Usry, 28 Ga. 345.

Two verdicts in same case.— Where a trial resulted in a verdict for plaintiff, and a motion for a new trial was granted, but by inadvertence the verdict was not set aside, and the case then proceeded to a default and another verdict for plaintiff, and to judgment, the fact that such judgment is supported by two verdicts does not vitiate it. Walsh v. Walsh, 114 Ill. 655, 3 N. E. 437.

Practice on second verdict.— Where a case has been tried, and a verdict returned for plaintiff, which has not been set aside, and then there has been another trial and a verdict for defendant, the court will not set aside the second verdict and render judgment on the first if the motion for judgment is not made until after the second verdict is returned. (II) Special Verdict. In cases where the statutes provide for the returning of special verdicts and enact that if a general and a special verdict are inconsistent, judgment shall be rendered pursuant to the latter, it is held that the judgment should be rendered on the general verdict in all cases where the facts constituting the special finding are not inconsistent with the general verdict.[62] A special verdict or finding, to sustain a judgment, should be definite and certain,[63] and responsive to the issues submitted,[64] and should find the facts essential to support a judgment.[65]

b. Decision on Trial by Court.[66] Where the court tries the case without a jury and finds facts entitling one of the parties to a judgment, he has the right to have such a judgment entered and it is error to refuse it.[67] When the trial is thus held, it is essential to follow closely the directions of the statute, as for instance that the decision shall be given in writing and filed with the clerk,[68] and that it shall contain a finding of the facts or statement of the grounds of decision,[69] although it seems that a direction that the decision shall be filed within a limited number of days after the submission of the case is only directory.[70] If the finding is contrary to the weight of the evidence, it will not support the judgment.[71]

c. Judgment on Report of Referee[72] — (I) In General. An order of reference is intended for the finding of the issues in the case, and a submission of such findings to the court, subject to exception and review, and such reference stands

Necessity of decision.— Under N. Y. Code Civ. as a verdict of a jury if the referee is to report the facts, or as the decision of the court if the reference is as to all the issues, and judgment entered on the report of the referee has all the force and effect of a judgment on verdict.[73] The party in whose favor the referee finds is entitled to have judgment entered on the report,[74] unless exceptions are filed and successfully maintained.[75] The court may order judgment on the report, or confirm it and adopt it as its own decision.[76] But to sustain a judgment the report must be in proper form [77] and responsive to the issues submitted,[78] and a judgment in favor of a defendant who did not answer or appear before the referee and as to whose interest the referee made no finding cannot be sustained.[79] An objection that the referee erred in the legal principles adopted by him is not available against a motion for judgment, but should be presented by exceptions to the report or motion to set it aside.[80]

(II) Necessity of Application to Court. In several of the states it is the rule that judgment may be entered by the clerk, without application to the court, upon the report of a referee to whom the whole issue was submitted for decision.[81] But this cannot be done where the reference is a special proceeding and not the whole issue in the case,[82] or where the report reserves questions for the decision

Form of judgment.— When a referee reports that nothing is due to plaintiff, and it appears by his report that the case had not been heard, but that his report is founded on the default of plaintiff to appear before him, the proper judgment to be entered is a dismissal of the complaint, not an absolute judgment as upon a verdict. of the court,[83] or is subject to exceptions filed,[84] or does not settle the form of the judgment to be entered.[85]

5. Judgment Notwithstanding the Verdict[86]— a. In General. At common law a judgment non obstante veredicto is one which may be entered by order of the court for plaintiff in an action at law, notwithstanding the jury have found a verdict for defendant, where it is apparent from defendant's plea that he can have no merits.[87] The granting of such a judgment rests very much in the discretion of the court,[88] but such a judgment is always upon the merits, and should never be granted but in a very clear case,[89] and this procedure should never be used as a means of reviewing and reversing the decision of the jury on questions of fact which are properly within their exclusive province.[90] But in some states, where the special findings of the jury are in direct conflict with the general verdict, it is the practice to grant a judgment notwithstanding the verdict.[91] But this can be done only where the special findings are so irreconcilably in conflict with the general verdict that both cannot stand.[92] And the motion for the judgment can be made only by the party against whom the verdict goes; hence, if the general verdict is in his favor, but the special findings do not correspond with it, a motion in that behalf will not avail him.[93] A judgment notwithstanding the verdict will not be upheld for a variance where it does not appear that no amendment of the complaint can be properly made.[94]

b. Verdict Not Sustained by Evidence. A judgment non obstante veredicto should not be granted because the verdict may be contrary to the weight of the evidence, or where there is evidence to sustain the verdict, although it may be uncertain or unconvincing, or where the evidence is conflicting and therefore properly to be weighed by the jury.[95] But such a judgment may be given if there is an entire failure of evidence, or if the evidence shows as a matter of law that the verdict should have been directed, and it is not probable that a different result would have been reached on another trial.[96] But even so it should be refused if it appears that on a new trial the party will be able to supply the defects in the evidence and make a showing which would sustain the verdict.[97]

c. Judgment on Pleadings.[98] Where defendant's plea or answer alleges matter which does not constitute a defense to the action, or confesses a cause of action in plaintiff and sets up matter in avoidance, and such matter, although found true by the verdict of the jury, is insufficient in law to constitute a bar or defense to the action, the court will enter a judgment for plaintiff notwithstanding the verdict.[99]

And similar action may be taken where issue has been joined upon a point which is wholly immaterial.[1] But if the plea or answer tenders a real and substantial issue, plaintiff cannot have this judgment,[2] however defective technically or faulty in point of form the plea may be,[3] the proper judgment in a case of the latter kind being one of repleader.[4] Defendant is entitled to judgment notwithstanding the verdict where plaintiff's pleadings are not sufficient to support a judgment in his favor and it appears on the record that the verdict cannot be supported as a matter of law.[5]

d. Verdict Subject to Question Reserved. If a point of law is ruled provisionally at the trial, but reserved for the further consideration of the court, and if its ultimate decision shows that the party in whose favor the verdict goes is not entitled to judgment, the court may enter judgment notwithstanding the verdict, the record showing the point of law reserved and the specific facts on which it arose.[6] In Pennsylvania the court may reserve the question whether there is any

In Pennsylvania a judgment non obstante veredicto cannot be entered where no question of law has been reserved. Inquirer Printing, etc., Co. v. Rice, 106 Pa. St. 623; Mechanics' Sav. Fund v. Murphy, 1 Walk. 31. Compare Gedusky v. Rubinsky, 8 Pa. Dist. 10, holding that on a verdict in trespass awarding plaintiff a specified amount of damages as compensation and a specified amount as punitive damages, the court on appeal may enter judgment for the amount of the compensatory damages, and a judgment non obstante for defendant as to the punitive evidence in the case entitling plaintiff to recover; and if it decides this point in the negative it may give judgment for defendant, notwithstanding a verdict for plaintiff.[7]

e. Motion For Judgment. A motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict must be made in the trial court,[8] before judgment has been entered upon the verdict,[9] and must contain a specific request for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, a mere motion for a new trial not being sufficient;[10] although a party may make his motion in the alternative, for judgment notwithstanding the verdict or, in case that is denied, for a new trial.[11] It is also a prerequisite to such a judgment, under some statutes, that the moving party has moved to direct a verdict in his favor at the close of the testimony.[12] Such a motion is founded on the record alone, and its determination cannot be influenced by affidavits or extrinsic evidence.[13] It cannot be heard in vacation, in the absence of an agreement of the parties to that effect.[14]

f. Party Entitled to Judgment. At common law, and according to the rule still in force in many of the states, a defendant is not entitled in any circumstances to move for judgment non obstante veredicto, the right to make this motion being confined to plaintiff, and the proper motion for defendant, when the verdict is damages, although no point was reserved on the record. But where, after reserving a point on certain facts, the court submits other evidence to the jury, a judgment non obstante cannot be entered if it is uncertain whether the jury found on the facts on which the reservation was made or on the other evidence. against him, being a motion in arrest of judgment.[15] But in several states this rule has been relaxed, either by statute or judicial decisions, so as to permit the entry of judgment notwithstanding the verdict in proper cases on motion of defendant,[16] especially where plaintiff's pleadings do not state a cause of action,[17] or where plaintiff has failed to reply to an answer, or paragraph in the answer, setting up a good defense,[18] as where, in an action for negligence, a plea of contributory negligence is not controverted.[19]

the rendition of the judgment within a certain limited time, it is generally held that the court loses authority over the case at the expiration of that time, so that a judgment thereafter rendered cannot be sustained,[22] as where the judge is directed by statute to render his decision within a certain number of days after the case is submitted to him.[23] But in the absence of such statutory directions the court has authority to take a case under advisement for a reasonable length of time before rendering its decision.[24]

b. On Verdict. In the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, a party is ordinarily entitled to have judgment rendered immediately upon the return of a verdict in his favor.[25] But in some states it is provided that there shall be a delay of a certain number of days to allow time for motions in arrest or for a new trial. Nevertheless a judgment entered at once upon the verdict is not entirely void, although the disregard of such a provision may make it irregular.[26] So a statutory provision that judgment shall be entered forthwith upon the verdict, or within a limited time after its return, is directory only, and failure to obey it does not avoid the judgment.[27] Even where the statute requires the judgment to be entered at the same term at which the verdict was returned, it may be competent and the time expires without his filing it, and judgment is then entered, he cannot complain that the judgment was premature merely because members of the bar had been notified that "undisposed of cases upon prior current motion lists" would not be called for argument until a still later day. for the court to enter the judgment at a subsequent term, the parties appearing and being heard.[28]

c. On Report of Referee.[29] On the report of a referee, as on a verdict, the successful party is entitled to judgment at once, in the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary.[30] But if the statute provides that judgment shall not be entered on the report until after a certain number of days, a judgment entered within that time is irregular, although not void.[31]

d. Date of the Judgment. By the common law, followed in some of the states, all judgments rendered at a given term of court are presumed to have been rendered on the first day of that term,[32] and at the earliest possible moment of that day.[33] In other states a judgment is regarded as rendered on the last day of the term unless the contrary is shown.[34] But in a majority of states a judgment takes effect from the day it is actually rendered or entered.[35] And the date of the judgment may be fixed by reference to the record of the proceedings in the case.[36] The fact that a judgment is not dated does not render it void.[37]

e. Motion For New Trial or to Set Aside Verdict. In some jurisdictions it is held that a judgment cannot properly be entered pending a motion for a new trial.[38] But in others it is thought that the entry of judgment at such time is at most a mere irregularity.[39] But the judgment may be entered up immediately on disposing of the motion,[40] although the court, having granted a new trial, can-

Presumptions in support.— In the absence of contrary evidence in the record, it will be presumed in support of a judgment that the day of its date occurred during a regular term of court (Baldridge v. Penland, 68 Tex. 441, 4 S. W. 565), and that it was rendered before the expiration of the term of office of the judge (Babcock v. Wolf, 70 Iowa 676, 28 N. W. 490).

not rescind the order and render judgment on the verdict at a subsequent term.[41] As for a motion to set aside the verdict, it is said that the entry of a judgment on the verdict itself disposes of the motion, so that no formal dismissal of the motion is necessary.[42]

f. Stay of Proceedings. It is irregular to render a judgment while an order staying proceedings in the case remains unrevoked and unexpired, but the judgment is not for that reason void.[43]

7. Proceedings to Obtain Judgment — a. Application For Judgment. Where judgment follows as the result of contested proceedings and the finding of a verdict, it is usually not necessary for the successful party, in modern practice, to take active measures to secure the rendition of judgment,[44] unless required by statute.[45] While it is usually required, when an application for judgment is necessary, that notice of the motion therefor shall be given to the opposite party,[46] yet the failure or insufficiency of the notice will not vitiate a judgment otherwise regular and to which the moving party was clearly entitled.[47]

On conditional verdict or finding.— Where a party is held entitled to a certain judgment on condition of doing a certain act within a specified time, the proper practice is, on the expiration thereof, and on due notice to the other party, to make proof of performance, or of failure to perform, and apply for a judgment. be followed by an order of court directing the clerk to enter a judgment in the form and terms specified;[48] and a mere expression of the court's opinion that a designated party is entitled to recover is not sufficient.[49]

c. Mode of Rendition. The rendition of a judgment is the judicial act of the court in pronouncing the sentence of the law upon the facts in controversy as ascertained by the pleadings and the verdict, and must be done by the judge — or a majority of the judges composing the court[50] — with a due regard to any statutory provisions regulating the manner of its performance.[51]

8. Interlocutory and Final Judgments. Although there cannot be two final judgments in the same case,[52] it is sometimes proper to enter an interlocutory judgment before the final disposition of the case.[53] Generally speaking the judgment is final if it at once disposes of the entire controversy, settling the rights of the parties, and leaving nothing for further consideration;[54] but interlocutory if it merely settles some preliminary point or matter, or reserves for future determination some detail essential to the complete adjustment of the subject of litigation.[55]

But it seems that a general order that judgment be entered in all cases then ready for judgment will be sufficient. Somerville v. Fiske, 137 Mass. 91. And where the purport and intention of the order are plain, it is not vitiated by the omission to employ the technical language of a judgment. Henlein v. Graham, 32 S. C. 303, 10 S. E. 1012.

Ambiguous order.— A judgment ordered for "plaintiff," after overruling a motion for new trial, without specifying which plaintiff, the action being brought by two plaintiffs jointly, and the verdict rendered for "plaintiffs," is fatally defective. Aultman v. Wirth, 45 Ill. App. 614.

Authority of clerk.— The order for judgment is the clerk's authority for entering the same, by which alone he must be guided. Hence a judgment entered in pursuance of an express order of the court will not be void, although it may be voidable, when the court, by a subsequent order not noticed by the clerk, has directed the case to be continued. Under a statute abolishing special pleading the final judgment depends upon what the law as applied to the case may require after the facts in controversy have been settled. Potter v. Titcomb, 16 Me. 423.

Effect of interlocutory judgment.— Where a statute provides that in an action tried by the court an interlocutory judgment "may" state the substance of the final judgment, but does not require that it shall state it, the court, in directing final judgment, is not confined to the interlocutory decree or foreclosed by it. The judgment is ordinarily final when rendered in pursuance of a general verdict,[56] or on submission of the entire case to the court,[57] or on a submission for decision on the pleadings.[58] But an interlocutory judgment may be entered where it is necessary to frame an issue on which the parties may properly go to trial,[59] or on overruling a demurrer, where leave is given to amend the pleading or to plead over,[60] or where the court has not before it all the papers necessary to settle the form of the final judgment,[61] or reserves the decision of some point affecting the amount recoverable or the right to modify the judgment,[62] or finds it necessary to appoint a master or referee to find issues in the case, unless where the action to be taken on the coming in of his report is definitely prescribed.[63] So also a judgment is generally interlocutory if it embodies a condition, the performance of which is necessary to make it effective, or a condition on the performance of which it may be released.[64] And in the action of account, it is usual and proper to render a preliminary judgment that "the parties do account."[65]

9. Form and Contents of Judgment[66] — a. In General.[67] No particular form of words is usually considered necessary to show the rendition of a judgment. It is sufficient if it shows distinctly that the matter has been determined in favor of one of the litigants, or that the rights in litigation have been adjudicated, with a statement of the time, place, parties, matter in dispute, and the result, with the relief granted.[68] But a statutory provision that judgments must be in writing is imperative, and a decision of the court, not reduced to writing or entered on the minutes, is not effective as a judgment.[69] It should be noted that a much less degree of technicality and formality is required in judgments of justices of the peace and other inferior courts than is exacted in respect to the judgments of courts of record.[70]

Although a judgment may be interlocutory in form or in the manner of its expression, yet it is final if it really decides completely the contestation between the parties. Singster v. Lacroix, 14 Quebec Super. Ct. 89.

b. Recitals — (i) In General. A judgment should recite facts sufficient to identify the parties, subject-matter, and amount or character of the relief granted,[71] but it is not ordinarily required to set out the facts on which it is founded, it being sufficient if they are stated in the pleadings and ascertained by the judgment.[72] But where, as in Louisiana, the constitution or a statute expressly requires the court to assign a reason for its judgment, a judgment not stating the reasons on which it is founded is void, although it need not refer to the particular law on which it is based;[73] and it is sufficient if it gives as the only reason why it is rendered that "the jury have found a verdict in favor of the plaintiff."[74]

(ii) As to Jurisdictional Facts. Where service of process upon defendant was constructive only, the judgment should recite facts sufficient to show compliance with the statute.[75] But otherwise in the case of judgments of courts of record, there is a presumption of jurisdiction which will aid defects or omissions in the record and protect the judgment against collateral impeachment on the ground of want of jurisdiction.[76]

Applications of rule.— A judgment for plaintiff in an action in which a set-off was pleaded need not specifically show what disposition was made of the set-off. Coats v. Barrett, 49 Ill. App. 275. And in a suit to subject a contract for the sale and purchase of land held as collateral security for the payment of promissory notes, the judgment need not find the value of the land, or ascertain what proportion of the purchase-money has been paid, or the extent of the purchaser's equitable interest in the land. not necessary to incorporate the verdict in the judgment;[77] nor, when tried by the court, the special findings on which the decision is based.[78]

c. Designation of Amount of Recovery[79] — (i) In General. It is essential to the validity of a judgment that the amount of the recovery which it awards should be stated in it with precision and certainty.[80] But if the judgment entry itself, without naming the amount of the recovery, contains data which permit its calculation, as by referring to the verdict or the pleadings, where the amount is precisely stated, a sufficient degree of certainty is attained.[81] If there is a blank in the judgment, where the statement of its amount should be, this will deprive it of all force and efficacy as a judgment, at least until the blank is filled.[82] Whether the statement of the amount of the judgment only in figures instead of the sum being written out will impair its validity is an unsettled question. Some of the authorities refuse to give effect to a judgment thus expressed,[83] while others do not admit the irregularity to be fatal.[84] But if the amount of the judgment is Verdict indefinite.— It is error to render a judgment on a verdict for plaintiff which fails to state how much he should recover, when all debt is denied by defendant. But in Pennsylvania it appears to be the rule that a judgment entered for an unliquidated sum will sustain an execution and a sheriff's sale thereon, if the actual amount of the judgment debt is indorsed on the execution. See Ulshafer v. Stewart, 71 Pa. St. 170; Gray v. Coulter, 4 Pa. St. 188.

Filling in blanks.— Where the court orders a judgment, the amount of which the clerk is directed to assess, and he makes a judgment entry, leaving a blank for the amount, which he subsequently fills in in vacation, this is at most an irregularity and it may be filled in in compliance with an order made by the court in term-time. Figures controlling writing.— If the amount of recovery stated in figures in a judgment differs from that stated in writing, but the written out, the designation "dollars" (or "cents," or both, as the case may be) must be appended to it;[85] and if it is expressed in figures only, the dollar-mark ($), or some other appropriate sign, must be used to show the sum intended.[86] But an entry of judgment for the right sum, although it is inaccurately named "damages" instead of "debt," or so much debt and so much damages, is not reversible error.[87] So where the record does not show of what the judgment was made up it is competent to show that fact by extraneous evidence.[88] And where judgment is recovered for compensatory and punitive damages, the court is not required to specify how much is for the one and how much for the other.[89]

(II) As to Interest.[90] Judgment may be rendered in the aggregate for the debt and interest due at the time,[91] unless where a statute requires the debt and interest to be separately specified in the judgment.[92] Where interest enters into a judgment as a separate part of it, the amount must be stated with precision,[93] or sufficient data given for its calculation with certainty, as by stating the rate of interest[94] and the date from which it begins to run.[95]

Interest on verdict.— Although a statute provides that when judgment is rendered on a verdict interest shall be computed from the date of the verdict to the time of rendering the judgment on the same and made a part of the judgment, yet a judgment is not void for uncertainty because of the fact that the interest is not so computed. No. 5,148, 1 Sawy. 243. Where plaintiff exhibits a claim for principal, and with interest added, up to a given day, it is error in the county court to enter up a condemnation for the gross sum as bearing interest from the day on which the attachment issued. Wrong date.— It is immaterial that a judgment recites that the money recoverable bears interest from an erroneous date, where it appears that the amount, with interest, for which judgment is rendered does not exceed the amount for which the party complaining is legally liable. Dean v. Blount, 71 Tex. 270, 9 S. W. 168. And see Washington Park Club v. Baldwin, 59 Ill. App. 61.

(III) As to Costs and Fees. A judgment for a specified amount and costs is not void as to the costs because the amount thereof is left blank, since it may be afterward inserted by the clerk.[96] But where the judgment is for costs only, it is erroneous if the amount thereof is left blank.[97] An attorney's fee or commission, stipulated for in the contract or obligation in suit, may be incorporated in the judgment as a part of it.[98]

(IV) Designating Medium of Payment.[99] As a general rule a judgment has nothing to do with the means or the medium of satisfying the debt which it establishes; and hence it is ordinarily beyond the power of the court to prescribe the kind of money in which the judgment shall be paid;[1] and this rule has been adhered to even though the judgment is rendered on a contract specifying the medium of payment.[2] But this rule has been very generally changed by statute. By reason of the legal tender act and of the statutes in various states, the general rule now is that if an action is brought on a note, bond, or other contract expressly made payable in a specific medium of payment, a judgment thereon in favor of plaintiff should also be expressed to be payable in that medium,[3] as in gold

Bank-notes.— In Kentucky under the act of Jan. 5, 1824, a judgment on any suit depending on a contract for the payment of notes of the bank of Kentucky or bank of the commonwealth, or for the payment of current paper of the state, shall be given for the amount of such debt to be discharged by paper of the same kind, provided that plaintiff makes a written statement on the declaration or warrant that he is willing to take such paper and discharge the debt, but this statute does not extend to a contract payable in part in bank-notes and in part in money (Kincaid v. Carpenter, 6 J. respect of contracts expressly stipulating for payment in coin that judgments for coin can be entered.[7] Such a judgment is not permissible in an action for unliquidated damages,[8] or in an action of tort.[9] And although interest on a debt expressed to be payable in coin can be paid only in coined money,[10] yet the costs of the action may be paid in legal tender notes.[11]

Property ordered to be sold.—Because there is a want of certainty in the description of land ordered to be sold to satisfy a judgment, it does not follow that the judgment is otherwise bad. e. Conditions and Alternative Provisions. In an ordinary action at law the court cannot render a conditional judgment.[15] But in many states, and especially where the courts are invested with more or less of the authority of courts of equity, it is held permissible and proper to insert in a judgment such conditions or alternative provisions as are necessary to work out all the equities of the parties or make the judgment conform to their contract or undertaking.[16] And in suits for the recovery of personal property, the court may make a judgment ordering the restoration of the property or the payment of its value in default thereof.[17]

f. Provisions as to Payment and Enforcement. As a general rule a judgment has nothing to do with the means of its enforcement. It merely pronounces the sentence of the law, without directing how it shall be satisfied.[18] But a judgment may order payment to be made out of a particular fund, when the contract of the parties contemplates the payment out of such fund,[19] or may be adapted to the proportionate liabilities of the several defendants in the action,[20] or, in the case of a debt payable by instalments, the judgment may be so framed as to provide for its payment at successive periods, as the instalments fall due, or may order the payment of the amount presently due, with leave to plaintiff to take out execu-

St. Rep. 484, holding that a judgment that plaintiff recover "the property in controversy," or in default thereof a sum fixed as its value, will not be reversed for uncertainty in the recovery, where, although the petition claims several articles, the record shows that the controversy was reduced to two of them.

18. It is no objection to the validity of a judgment that it does not declare that execution may issue. Bradley v. Clark, 3 Day (Conn.) 502.

Lien on realty.— A judgment on an ordinary promissory note, although given for the purchase-money of real estate, should not contain provisions declaring it a lien on such real estate and ordering that the same be sold to satisfy it; it should be an ordinary personal judgment against defendant, authorizing an ordinary execution to be issued against the property in general of the debtor. Greeno v. Barnard, 18 Kan. 518.

In an action begun by the arrest of defendant the judgment must be against defendant and not against his goods. It should be against defendant to be made of his goods only. Miller v. Tuttle, 5 N. J. L. 810.

tions for the succeeding instalments.[21] So if the action is upon a written obligation which waives the benefit of exemption or stay laws or appraisement laws, the judgment may contain provisions giving effect to the waiver.[22] But a judgment entered for a certain amount, to be discharged on the payment of a less sum, is erroneous.[23]

g. Surplusage. A judgment is not vitiated by the addition to it of merely superfluous provisions or directions, or of matters which follow as the legal consequences of the judgment whether or not they are incorporated in it.[24]

B. Nature and Extent of Relief Awarded[25] — 1. In General. Judgments are presumed to follow the obligations they enforce, unless in cases where the declaration or complaint does not follow the obligation.[26] But in general a judgment cannot be given for any matter which will or may happen posterior to its rendition,[27] or for claims which were not due at the time of the commencement of the action, although they may fall due pendente lite.[28]

2. As Measured by Plaintiff's Claims — a. Amount Indorsed on Summons. In some states plaintiff is required to indorse on the summons the amount for which judgment will be taken if defendant fails to appear, and the amount so indorsed is conclusive on plaintiff, so that it is error to render judgment for a larger sum,[29] unless where the excess is for interest accrued since the commencement of the suit,[30] or where defendant appears and answers to the merits.[31] But in other states plaintiff's recovery is not limited to the sum named in or indorsed upon the writ.[32]

b. Amount Demanded in Declaration or Complaint. It is a general rule that a judgment cannot properly be rendered for a greater sum, whether by way of debt or damages, than is claimed or demanded by plaintiff in his declaration or a greater amount of damage than was alleged by plaintiff.[34] A judgment for a greater sum than that laid in the complaint or declaration cannot stand even though defendant confesses judgment for the larger amount[35] or withdraws his pleas.[36] But the rule does not prohibit the addition of costs to the amount of the recovery, although this may swell the total beyond the sum claimed in the declaration;[37] nor will it prevent the addition of interest lawfully accruing on plaintiff's claim,[38] although it bars the addition of an attorney's fee if the result would be to make the recovery exceed plaintiff's demand.[39] But a judgment rendered for an excessive amount is not absolutely void. It is erroneous and liable to reversal, and may be voidable in toto or as to the excess; but it is a valid adjudication until the proper steps are taken against it.[40] The judgment may be rectified by reducing the amount of the recovery, or it may be ordered reversed unless plaintiff will remit the excess.[41] It is also held that a judgment for less than the amount claimed in the complaint is erroneous, as not according to the allegations and proof, where there is no evidence on which a reduction of the claim could be based.[42]

the demand of specific relief, the court is not limited to the specific demand, but may grant such other appropriate relief as may be consistent with the allegations and proofs and necessary to adjust fully the equities of the case.[44] Nevertheless even under a prayer for general relief, the court cannot go outside the issues and decree in favor of plaintiff on grounds not alleged, although they may appear in evidence, or grant relief inconsistent with that which is prayed or entirely different from it.[45] Under the code practice it is generally provided that if there be no answer the relief granted cannot exceed that which plaintiff shall have demanded in his complaint.[46] But if defendant answers, the court may grant

New York.— Where only equitable relief is asked in an action on a contract, and the court finds that plaintiff is not entitled to equitable relief, it cannot retain the action as one at law, and assess damages on facts not alleged, but must dismiss the complaint. Variance between judgment and petition.— A cause will not be reversed for variance between the judgment and the prayer of the petition, where the judgment substantially follows the prayer and the variance is so slight that plaintiff would be allowed to amend at any time without costs (Mitchell v. Milhoan, 11 Kan. 617); a material variance, however, will be fatal to the validity of the judgment (Condit v. Stevenson, 13 Ill. any relief which is consistent with the case made by the pleadings.[47] And indeed in many of the cases we find a much broader rule stated, viz., that the prayer for relief in a complaint is not conclusive as to the relief to which plaintiff is entitled, but the court may give such relief as he is entitled to on the facts stated and proved or admitted.[48]

3. INTEREST. If plaintiff is entitled to interest on his claim or demand, it should be found by the jury and included in their verdict,[49] and the verdict is sufficient in this respect if, without specifying the amount of the interest allowed, it contains data from which it can be calculated with certainty and precision.[50]

The contrary view.— In several states it is held that this equitable power of the courts will not justify them in awarding to plaintiff, upon a replication, an entirely different judgment from that prayed for in his petition. 49. A verdict assessing the damages at a certain sum with interest is sufficient to sustain judgment for the amount stated without the interest. Wiseman v. Ziegler, 41 Nebr. 886, 60 N. W. 320.

Excessive interest.— Interest cannot be allowed to an amount in excess of that demanded, or from a time prior to that from which interest is asked. Carter Brick Co. v. Clement, (Tex. Civ. App. 1904) 84 S. W. 434; Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Dawson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1904) 84 S. W. 298.

But if the jury does not allow interest in its verdict, the court cannot allow it, and it is error to give judgment for interest in addition to the amount of the verdict.[51] But interest may be allowed on the verdict, from the time of its return to the entry of judgment, if the delay in entering judgment was caused by defendant's unsuccessful motion for a new trial.[52] Similar rules obtain in cases tried without a jury. Interest may be included in the recovery, in proper cases, but the finding in regard to it must be certain and definite as to amount.[53] By statute in most of the states interest is allowed upon judgments; and it may be proper to insert in the judgment a direction as to the rate of interest it shall bear, particularly where such rate corresponds with that fixed in the contract in suit and is different from the ordinary legal rate of interest;[54] but generally such a direction forms no proper part of the judgment, the interest recoverable upon it being dependent entirely upon the statute, and not being a matter of judicial determination.[55]

4. Personal Judgment in Proceedings In Rem.[56] Although a judgment in proceedings in rem is properly against the res only,[57] yet if defendant appears and defends the action on the merits a personal judgment against him may be rendered, if the facts will justify and sustain it.[58]

5. Statutory Penalty or Damages. Where a statute imposes a penalty for the commission or omission of a certain act, the judgment, if for plaintiff, must be for the full amount of the penalty, and the courts have no power to mitigate it.[59] And where the statute gives double or treble damages, the jury, if they find for plaintiff, should assess his damages and increase them by the statutory multiple; but if the verdict finds only single damages, the court may perform the multiplication and order the entry of judgment for the larger amount.[60]

6. CONFORMITY TO VERDICT. In respect to the amount of the recovery, as in other particulars, the judgment must conform to the verdict, the successful party being entitled to a judgment for just what the jury have allowed him,[61] unless the verdict is erroneous through a mere miscalculation, which can be corrected by a proper computation;[62] and it is equally erroneous to render a judgment for an amount less than the verdict,[63] except where a remittitur is entered,[64] or for an amount greater than that found by the jury,[65] although it has been held in the Indefinite verdict.— When the jury returns a verdict for a specific sum "subject to a set-off of a certain number of dollars, if such set-off has not been already paid," judgment should be rendered for the sum specified, and the rest of the verdict should be rejected as surplusage. 7. Tender, Counter-Claim, and Offer of Compromise. Payments made on plaintiff's account, before or pending the suit, should be deducted before judgment,[67] and if he recovers a verdict for less than the amount tendered in court, the verdict should be set aside and judgment entered for the amount tendered.[68] If defendant succeeds in establishing a counter-claim, judgment should be in his favor if it exceeds the claims proved by plaintiff,[69] or if it is less than that amount then judgment should be rendered for plaintiff for the difference only.[70] An offer of settlement made by plaintiff before suit will not preclude him from recovering a larger sum than that contemplated by his offer.[71] But an agreement between the parties as to the amount of the recovery will support a judgment for such amount, although the pleadings were not amended to correspond with the agreement.[72] such relief,[74] provided the facts constituting the foundation of such relief are stated in the pleading,[75] or such relief is asked for therein.[76]

9. Relief as Between Co-Defendants. At common law one defendant to a suit cannot recover a judgment against a co-defendant, at least without a cross pleading and service of process or an appearance to the cross pleading by defendant thereto.[77] But in equity a decree between co-defendants, grounded on the pleadings and proofs between plaintiff and defendants, is regular, and indeed the court is bound to make such a decree in order to avoid a multiplicity of suits.[78] And in several states, by force of statutes or the adoption of equitable procedure, it is proper to grant affirmative relief as between co-defendants,[79] when they have been given a full opportunity to litigate their claims as against each other.[80]

C. Parties[81] — 1. Necessity For Determination as to All Parties. Under the rule that there can be but one final judgment in any case, and except where authorized by statute, it is reversible error to render final judgment against a part of defendants without disposing of the case as to the others,[82] unless where one

2. JOINT PLAINTIFFS. Where several plaintiffs join in the action, it is the rule at common law that all must recover or none, and if only part of plaintiffs have a right of action, the suit must fail as to all.[84] But this rule does not apply where the claims of the several plaintiffs are distinct, although united for a common interest;[85] and it has been changed by statute in several of the states so as to permit the recovery of a judgment by any plaintiff who shows himself entitled, although the others may fail.[86]

Rules as to joinder of plaintiffs.— Several persons having distinct claims against the same defendant may unite in an action against him for the protection or enforcement of their common rights or interests. But their recovery will be limited to what concerns them jointly, and they cannot make one suit the vehicle for carrying all their claims into judgment. Grant v. Schmidt, 22 Minn. 1. And see Helmuth v. Bell, 150 Ill. 263, 37 N. E. 230. Under these statutes, if a plaintiff sues two or more defendants on a joint obligation, he is no longer compelled to establish a joint cause of action against all, but a judgment may be taken against the party or parties shown to be liable, when the others are not liable.[97] And where the law of the state contains a provision of obtains a verdict against defendant who answers, he is then entitled to a joint judgment against all the defendants.[2] And it would be erroneous and improper to render judgment against that defendant alone who answered; both must be joined in the judgment as in the action,[3] although it is proper and usual to enter an interlocutory judgment against defendant who defaults, to await the trial of the issue as to the other.[4]

e. Discontinuance or Dismissal as to One Defendant. Although it is a general rule as above stated that plaintiff must recover against all the defendants or none, yet it is held permissible for him to enter a dismissal, discontinuance, or nolle prosequi against one or more of the defendants, and proceed to trial and judgment against the rest;[5] and this course is proper where its object is to cure a misjoinder,[6] or where there is a failure of jurisdiction over one of the defendants because of his non-residence,[7] or because of a failure to secure service of process upon him,[8] in which case it is not only proper but necessary to dispose of the proceeding as to him by a dismissal or nolle prosequi, the court having no author-

Effect of "joint debtor" acts.— The rule stated in the text is modified by the so-called joint debtor acts, permitting the rendition of judgment for or against one or more of the several defendants, so that a judgment may be taken against defendant who defaults, although it is given in favor of the answering defendant (Bailey Loan Co. v. Hall, 110 Cal. 490, 42 Pac. 962; Kingsland, etc., Mfg. tiff's demand or recovery.[16] But the form of the judgment may be determined by the verdict, which it should follow and to which it should conform.[17] And it should be observed that, although a judgment be rendered against two or more parties jointly, the judgment itself is a joint and several obligation.[18] Similar rules obtain in the case of joint plaintiffs; their recovery should be joint if their cause of action is joint, but otherwise several.[19]

(II) In Actions of Tort. At common law, in an action of tort against several defendants, plaintiff is not entitled to any judgment unless he shows a joint tort,[20] although this has been changed in some states by the joint debtor acts,[21] and if defendants plead jointly, and a joint verdict is given against them, the judgment must be joint and not several,[22] the general rule forbidding the jury

Maker and indorser.— In a suit against several makers of a note and the indorsers thereon, a several judgment against the makers may be entered. Van Ness v. Corkins, 12 Wis. 186.

Partnerships.— Where the action is against partners on a partnership obligation, a joint judgment should be entered against defendants, although it seems that the entry of separate judgments is merely an irregularity, which may be corrected on motion. Judd Linseed Sperm Oil Co. v. Hubbell, 76 N. Y. 543. But judgment may be entered against defendants individually who are named and described in the complaint as a certain company, although they are not members of it, if the jury find that they are liable individually. to divide or apportion the damages among defendants and requiring, in case they do, the entry of a joint judgment against both or all defendants for the larger amount.[23]

g. Joint Judgment as Entirety. By some of the authorities a judgment against two or more defendants jointly is regarded as an entirety, so that if it is irregular, erroneous, or void as to one of the defendants, it is equally so to all;[24] but other decisions are disposed to hold that a judgment may be valid and enforceable as to one or some of defendants, although voidable or void as to others.[25]

4. Separate Judgments Against Different Parties. The rule of the common law is that only one final judgment can be entered in any action, and separate judgments against the several defendants are improper.[26] But this rule has been changed by statute in several states;[27] and there are authorities supporting the rendition of separate judgments against defendants where their liabilities are not only several but, by the terms of the contract, differ in extent,[28] or where one of defendants, after a joint judgment against them, obtains a new trial.[29]

5. Judgment For or Against One Not a Party.[30] No valid judgment can be rendered for or against one who was not a party to the action; and a judgment so given will be void as far as concerns the person improperly included in it,[31]

A misrecital in a decree to the effect that an intervener who resisted plaintiff's claim was a defendant is not fatal. Newman v. Bullock, 23 Colo. 217, 47 Pac. 379.

them in such terms as will identify them with certainty.[37] Thus a judgment expressed to be merely for or against "plaintiff" or "defendant" will be sufficient, if the names of the parties thus designated can be ascertained without ambiguity from the record.[38] And a judgment for "plaintiff," when there are several plaintiffs in the case, or against "defendant," when there are several, or one which erroneously describes the parties as "plaintiffs" or "defendants," when there is only one party on each side, will not be void, if the record as a whole shows clearly, and without any doubt, for and against whom the judgment is intended to be given.[39] It has also been held that a judgment which describes the parties plaintiff or defendant as the "heirs" or "descendants" of a person named is not void for uncertainty, although they are not named individually, if the papers in the case show who are meant.[40] And the fact that a descriptive

Designating principal and sureties. — In Ohio it is required by statute that the judgment shall certify which of defendants is principal and which surety; but it is held that this applies only where they are sued jointly, and if judgment is recovered in an action against the surety alone, it is not necessary to its validity that it should specify the fact of his suretyship. Assignee of claim.— Under a statute providing that a transfer of interest during the pendency of an action does not abate the action, which may be thereafter prosecuted to judgment in the name of the original plaintiff, it is not error for the court to enter up judgment in favor of plaintiff, notwithstanding an assignment of his claim to his attorney, as security for fees, pending the trial. word or phrase is added to a party's name in a judgment neither affects the validity of the judgment nor changes the legal rights and relations which it engenders.[41]

b. Names and Misnomer. A judgment will be vitiated by a misnomer of the parties therein or a material variance between the declaration and the judgment,[42] unless the error is a mere clerical misprision not calculated to mislead,[43] or the right and wrong names are idem sonantes,[44] or unless the record contains data by which the judgment can be amended, or the record and judgment together point out the persons to be bound by the judgment, with unmistakable certainty.[45] Properly each party should be designated by his true name, both christian name and surname in full,[46] and in the case of a partnership, the names of the individual

46. Omission of christian name will not necessarily vitiate the judgment, if such name is disclosed by other parts of the record, or if the party can be connected with the judgment by proper evidence. Root v. Fellowes, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 29; Goodgion v. Gilreath, 32 S. C. 388, 11 S. E. 207; Hays v. Yarborough, 21 Tex. 487; Newcomb v. Peck, 17 Vt. 302, 44 Am. Dec. 340. And see Preston v. Wright, 60 Iowa 351, 14 N. W. 352. But in Vincent v. Means, 184 Mo. 327, 82 S. W. 96, it is held that where there is no proof that a person has ever received or executed conveyances of land by using the initial letter or letters of his name, a judgment rendered in a suit against him to quiet title to land, in which he is sued by his initials and surname, and which does not disclose his christian name, is void.

Error in christian name.— The fact that the judgment in a case is entered in favor of the true plaintiff by a christian name other than his own is immaterial, and will not work a reversal. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Surrells, 115 Ill. App. 615.

Initials.— Defendant may be designated by the initial letter of his christian name, with the surname, if he habitually signs his name in that style, so as to make it his business name, or if it appears that there is no other person having the same initial and last name. Oakley v. Pegler, 30 Nebr. 628, 46 N. W. 920; In re Jones, 27 Pa. St. 336.

Middle name.— The middle name of a party is of no consequence, as the law recognizes but one christian name; and hence the omission of such middle name from the judgment or a mistake in it will not be regarded. Hicks v. Riley, 83 Ga. 332, 9 S. E. 771; Clute partners should be set out.[47] But a defendant may be sued by a fictitious name, and if the complaint is amended by inserting his true name when discovered, the judgment following it will be valid.[48] And a defendant who is sued by a wrong name, but with due service of process upon him, who fails to plead the misnomer and suffers a judgment to be taken against him in such name, may be connected with the judgment by proper averments and will be bound by it.[49]

D. Conformity to Pleadings and Verdict[50] — 1. Conformity to Pleadings — a. In General. A judgment must accord with and be warranted by the pleadings of the party in whose favor it is rendered; if it is not supported by the pleadings it is fatally defective.[51]

b. Nature and Form of Remedy. At common law if plaintiff has mistaken the nature of his remedy, or chosen a wrong form of action, he cannot have any relief which he has not asked for, or which is not consistent with the theory of his action, although the evidence may show him entitled to it.[52] But in some states the common-law forms of pleading having been abolished, it is made the duty of the courts to give such judgments as the evidence warrants, without regard to the form or name of the action.[53]

c. Grounds of Action or Defense. It is also a rule, without special regard to the form of the action, that a judgment cannot be rendered for a cause of action not stated in the declaration or complaint,[54] or upon a view of the facts which is contrary to the theory on which plaintiff's action proceeded.[55] Thus if he alleges Allegations of answer.— Defendant cannot complain of a judgment based on a contract, as it is alleged in his answer, although it differs from that alleged by plaintiff. Ach v. Carter, 21 Wash. 140, 57 Pac. 344.

Judgment on reversal and remand.— Where a judgment for plaintiff was reversed on appeal, with directions to render judgment for defendant as prayed in the answer, which was that the prayer of the complaint be denied, and that plaintiff take nothing by the action, and that defendant have judgment against plaintiff for costs, a judgment rendered that the prayer of plaintiff be denied, that plaintiff take nothing by the action, and that defendant have judgment against plaintiff for costs, and is entitled to "appropriate process" to enforce the judgment, and every part thereof, was not objectionable, as granting more relief than demanded, in so far as it awarded process to enforce the judgment. White v. Wise, (Cal. 1905) 81 Pac. 664.

52. Applications of rule.— A plea of set-off for money had and received does not permit a recovery of damages for breach of an express contract. Smith v. Weed Sewing Mach. Co., 26 Ohio St. 562. So in an action to restrain a mortgagee from foreclosing plaintiff is not entitled to an accounting. Davis v. Hinchcliffe, 7 Wash. 199, 34 Pac. 915. But compare Chaurant v. Maillard, 56 N. Y. facts showing a cause of action in tort he cannot have a judgment on proving a cause of action in contract;[56] and a count for goods sold and delivered will not sustain a recovery for money advanced or services rendered for defendant;[57] so in an action for money obtained from plaintiff by fraud, it is error, on finding no fraud shown, to give judgment as for money loaned.[58] And where the theory of the complaint and of the trial, as well as of the entire evidence, was that a deed was not intended as a mortgage, but as a conveyance, a judgment based on the theory that the deed was a mortgage cannot be upheld.[59]

d. Issues Raised by Pleadings. To render a valid judgment the court must have jurisdiction not only of the parties and the general subject-matter, but also of the particular question which it assumes to decide, or of the particular remedy or relief which it assumes to grant; and a judgment of a court upon a subject which may be within its general jurisdiction, but which is not brought before it by any statement or claim of the parties, and is foreign to the issues submitted for its determination, is void.[60] An exception to the rule is recognized in some jurisdictions where it is held that parties may if they so elect depart from the issues made by the pleadings, and try other questions relating to the merits of the controversy by consent or acquiescence.[61]

e. Parties to Judgment. The judgment must correspond with the pleadings in respect to the parties for and against whom it goes; and it is erroneous for example to include in it a defendant as to whom there has been a discontinuance.[62] So a judgment for plaintiff alone cannot be sustained where the complaint shows that he is not the sole owner of the claim sued on, but that others named in the pleadings are joint owners of it.[63] Similarly, where the complaint asks different relief as against the different defendants, or alleges only a partial liability on the part of each of them, there cannot be a general judgment against one or all of them for the entire claim or demand.[64] But a complaint alleging performance of services for defendant and others at their request, and an agreement of defendant to pay therefor, supports a judgment against him alone.[65] And a judgment against a principal only for exemplary damages is not erroneous because the petition asked such damages against principal and agents, and the verdict was general.[66]

f. Personal or Representative Capacity. Generally the judgment should be for and against the parties in the capacity in which they sue and are sued. But it is held that if plaintiff sues as executor or administrator, and the evidence shows that the right of recovery is in him as an individual, the judgment may follow the evidence.[67] But on the other hand a personal judgment against an

Illustrations of rule.— Where the complaint alleges a cause of action on a note only, the court cannot decree the foreclosure of a mortgage which was given to secure the note. Hibernia Sav., etc., Soc. v. Thornton, 123 Cal. 62, 55 Pac. 702. And so a judgment foreclosing a trust deed on church property cannot be entered in a suit between different factions of the church for the possession of the property, where neither party sought a foreclosure of the deed nor a sale of the property. Paris First Baptist Church v. Fort, 93 Tex. 215, 54 S. W. 892, 49 L. R. A. 617. And a decree in an action between a mortgagor and certain mortgagees of chattels, whereby a mortgage not attacked by the pleadings and whose holder is not a party to the action, is declared void, cannot be sustained. Rockford Watch Co. v. Manifold, 36 Nebr. 801, 55 N. W. 236. But in South Carolina it is said that where, in practice under the code, an instrument comes in question in an issue, and is relied on as an estoppel, the court, on deciding that the instrument is void, may order the same to be canceled, although there is no prayer in the complaint for such relief. Descriptio personæ.— Where a note in suit was given to plaintiff as "guardian" of certain minor heirs, and he is so described in the petition and citation, but the judgment is rendered in favor of plaintiff as "administrator," it may be sustained, the words

g. Facts and Evidence. Where all the material facts are conclusively established, the court should apply the law to such facts, and render the judgment which it requires.[69] But the judgment must correspond with the allegata and probata. Facts proved at the trial, but not set up in the pleadings, cannot sustain a judgment;[70] and conversely the judgment must be supported by the evidence, and cannot be based on facts of which there is no proof or admission, although they may have been pleaded. In the latter case the judgment will be erroneous, although not void.[71]

2. Conformity to Verdict and Findings[72] — a. In General. The judgment must follow and conform to the verdict, not only as to the amount of the recovery, but also as to the nature and measure of relief and as to the parties, and it cannot go beyond the verdict in settling the rights of the parties, or admeasuring the recovery, or declaring or foreclosing liens,[73] except that in cases where the evidence

Kissecker v. Monn, 36 Pa. St. 313, 78 Am. Dec. 379. But if there was a good and a bad count, and it appears that the evidence was applied solely to the bad count, the judgment must be reversed. would have authorized the court to direct a verdict, it may in rendering judgment go further than the verdict in adjusting the equities of the parties.[74] But if the judgment is sustained by the verdict, it is not invalidated by the fact that a mistake is made in the judgment in its description of the verdict.[75] Judgment should not be rendered upon a verdict which finds upon a part only of the issues.[76] Where there is a general verdict on several counts, the court cannot enter judgment specially on one count, leaving the other count without a judgment.[77] rights of the parties.[83] In some states the statutes provide that if a general and a special verdict are inconsistent, judgment shall be rendered pursuant to the latter. But it is held that the judgment should be rendered on the general verdict, not only in the case provided, but in all cases where the facts constituting the special finding are not inconsistent with the general verdict.[84]

c. Modification of Verdict. The court may of its own motion eliminate surplusage from a verdict and render judgment on the verdict as corrected.[85] Or the parties may agree to a modification of the verdict.[86] But when the court has permitted the jury to amend their verdict, it is error for it to reject the amended verdict, and enter judgment on the original verdict.[87]

d. Parties to Judgment. In respect to the parties for and against whom it is given, as in other particulars, a judgment must follow and conform to the verdict.[88] Thus a several judgment cannot be entered on a joint verdict,[89] unless plaintiff remits the damages as to one of defendants,[90] or the court grants him a new trial.[91] In designating the parties the use of the singular for the plural or

A judgment inconsistent with the facts specially found by the court will be reversed and made to conform to the findings. Powell v. Holman, 50 Ark. 85, 6 S. W. 505. But where a part of the conclusions of law based on a special finding of facts by the court are erroneous, but the judgment apparently ignores such erroneous conclusions, and is proper under the conclusions which are correct, it will not be disturbed. Hill v. Hazen, 93 Ind. 109.

Disregarding findings.— The court will not be justified in disregarding the special verdict or findings and rendering judgment in accordance with the evidence (Waller v. Liles, (Tex. 1902) 70 S. W. 17), unless where the allegations of the pleadings are so defective or vague as not to support the findings (Kullmann v. Greenebaum, 84 Cal. 98, 24 Pac. 49).

vice versa will not amount to a variance between the verdict and judgment, where it is evidently a mistake and does not cast obscurity upon the decision.[92]

e. Conformity to Report of Referee. If the report of a referee or master is accepted by the court or sustained against exceptions the judgment must conform to its findings and conclusions; to depart from it in any essential matter will be reversible error.[93]

f. Objections on Ground of Variance. The objection that a judgment does not conform to the verdict may be taken by motion in arrest,[94] or application to the court rendering the judgment to correct or reform it,[95] or by appeal or error.[96]

E. Arrest of Judgment[97] — 1. Grounds in General — a. General Rules. At common law the arrest of judgment is a withholding or staying of judgment, notwithstanding a verdict has been given, on the ground that there is some error appearing on the face of the record which vitiates the proceedings.[98] As a general rule judgment cannot be arrested if it appears on the whole record for which party judgment ought to be given.[99] The power to arrest judgment is inherent in courts of general common-law jurisdiction,[1] but in several of the states is regulated or restricted by statute.[2]

b. Matters Appearing of Record. As a general rule judgment can be arrested only for error apparent on the face of the record itself.[3] And for the purpose of a motion in arrest the record does not include the evidence taken at the trial.[4]

c. Process and Matters Preliminary to Trial. A fatal defect in the writ or process by which the suit is begun may be taken advantage of by motion in arrest,[5] but not a mere irregularity or clerical mistake in the process,[6] or such a defect as may be waived by the party's submitting to trial,[7] or such as will be cured by the verdict.[8] Failure to serve defendant with process may furnish ground for a motion of this kind,[9] but not the omission of other steps proper or necessary to be taken before the trial, but not affecting the jurisdiction of the court.[10]

d. Matters Pleadable in Bar or Abatement. Generally speaking a judgment will not be arrested on account of any matter which defendant might have pleaded and relied on as a defense to the action, whether by plea in bar[11] or in abatement.[12] But an objection to the jurisdiction of the court is never waived, and hence may be presented on a motion in arrest.[13]

e. Matters of Evidence. It is no ground for arresting a judgment that there was error in the admission of evidence at the trial,[14] or that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the verdict.[15]

2. Defect, Misjoinder, or Non-Joinder of Parties — a. In General. The objection that there is a defect of parties is waived by going to trial without objection, and cannot therefore be raised by motion in arrest of judgment.[17] In most jurisdictions it is likewise no ground for arresting judgment that there is an alleged misjoinder of plaintiffs or defendants;[18] or that there is a non-joinder of such parties,[19] except where the record shows that a joint owner or joint obligor has not been joined.[20]

b. Death of Party. The death of one of several plaintiffs or defendants before judgment, being matter dehors the record, is not properly matter to be moved in arrest of judgment.[21]

3. Defects in Pleading — a. Insufficiency in General. If the declaration or complaint entirely omits the allegation of facts essential to plaintiff's right of recovery, or plaintiff's title or cause of action appears from the declaration itself to be defective and bad in law, so that his pleadings could not support a judgment in his favor, the judgment may be arrested on motion of defendant,[22] if such

The rule has been applied in the case of omission of a similiter (Babcock v. Huntington, 2 Day (Conn.) 392; Sammis v. Wightman, 31 Fla. 10, 12 So. 526; Huling v. Florida Sav. Bank, 19 Fla. 695) or of the formal concluding words (District of Columbia v. Eaton, 13 App. Cas. (D. C.) 182; Bowen v. White, 26 R. I. 68, 58 Atl. 252; Stearns v. Stearns, 32 Vt. 678); or any omission not affecting plaintiff's cause of action, especially where it can be supplied from other papers in the case (Huling v. Florida Sav. Bank, 19 Fla. 695, omission of the signature of plaintiff's attorney to an amended declaration); Proctor v. Crozier, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 268, omission to lay damages in the declaration, where the blank may be filled by reference to the writ; Com. v. Eagan, 103 Mass. 71; Dollman v. Munson, 90 Mo. 85, 2 S. W. 134); and it has also been applied in case of mere clerical mistake (Newcomer v. Kean, 57 Md. 121), such as of an ordinary misspelling of a party's name (Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Ingraham, 77 Ill. 309).

Variance as to form of action.— Whether a judgment should be arrested for a variance between the declaration and the writ, in naming the form of action, as where one of them is in trespass and the other in case, is as against a motion of this kind,[25] giving it the benefit of a liberal construction to cure any ambiguity or looseness of description,[26] aiding the pleader by every reasonable implication and intendment,[27] and overlooking any defects which are cured by the verdict or the omission to allege any facts which must have been found by the jury.[28] Nor will the judgment be arrested because the complaint fails to anticipate and negative defenses.[29] Nor can the question of the propriety of allowing an amendment to be made in the pleadings be reached on motion in arrest.[30]

b. Misjoinder of Causes of Action. A misjoinder of counts or causes of action, apparent upon the declaration, with damages assessed entire, is ground for arresting the judgment,[31] unless one of the counts or causes so joined is stricken out or withdrawn from the jury,[32] or is fatally defective,[33] or unless the damages have been separately assessed upon the several counts.[34]

c. Joinder of Good and Bad Counts. In several states, following the English rule,[35] it is held that if a general verdict for plaintiff is taken upon several counts in the declaration, and one of the counts is fatally defective, the judgment will be arrested on motion, although other counts not liable to objection were covered by the verdict.[36] But the general rule is that the judgment will not be an unsettled point. It is answered affirmatively in Niles v. Brown, 25 R. I. 537, 56 Atl. 1030, but negatively in Homan v. Fleming, 51 Ill. App. 572.

Waiver of defect.— On a motion in arrest, the whole record is before the court, and where a defect in the petition is waived of record by defendant, the motion will not be granted on account of such defect. Auld v. Butcher, 2 Kan. 135.

Matter of inducement.— Where the gist of an action is tort, and a contract is disclosed in the declaration merely by way of inducement, the declaration is sufficient, and judgment will not be arrested for such joinder. Stoyel v. Westcott, 2 Day (Conn.) 418, 2 Am. Dec. 109.

In Ohio it is held that where, in an action brought to recover for an injury to personal property, a count in trespass quare clausum fregit is joined in the declaration with several counts in case, for negligence, the court, looking to the provisions of the act of March 12, 1844, "to regulate the practice of the judicial courts," will not arrest the judgment on account of an alleged misjoinder of causes of action. arrested if there be one good count to which the verdict can be applied; that is, a motion in arrest will not prevail unless all the counts are so defective as not to have been cured by the verdict.[37]

d. Defects Available on Demurrer — (I) In General. Judgment will not be arrested for any defect in the pleadings which would not have been fatal on general demurrer.[38] And it is not every such defect that will warrant arresting the judgment; for greater strictness is shown on a motion of this kind than upon a demurrer,[39] the motion being denied if the issue joined be such that the court can presume that the defects or omissions were supplied by proof at the trial.[40] And in several states it is the rule that judgment will not be arrested for any defect which might and should have been objected to by demurrer, if enough appears to show for whom the judgment should be rendered.[41]

(II) After Decision on Demurrer. A motion in arrest of judgment should not be entertained after the overruling of a demurrer to the declaration, at least where the motion is based on any exceptions which might have been considered on the demurrer,[42] and a fortiori matter which was objected to by demurrer and decided upon cannot afterward be urged in arrest of judgment.[43]

e. Defects Amended, Waived, or Cured. A motion in arrest of judgment will not be granted on account of any failure or defect in the pleadings which could have been amended, the amendment being considered as made for the purposes of the motion,[44] or for any defect or omission which may be considered as having been waived by defendant,[45] or cured by the verdict or finding,[46] the rule in regard to omissions being that, although the petition may be defective, yet if it appears that the verdict could not have been given or judgment rendered without proof of the matter omitted to be stated, the defect will be cured and the judgment will not be arrested.[47] Nevertheless if a fact essential to plaintiff's right of action is neither expressly stated nor necessarily implied from the facts which are stated, a verdict will not cure the defect, and judgment will be arrested.[48]

f. Variance. As a general rule a motion in arrest of judgment cannot be based on the ground of an alleged variance.[49] This applies where the variance is between the writ or præcipe and the declaration or complaint.[50] It also applies

Contrary view.— This rule is not universally accepted. In one state it is said that there can be no error in declaring a fatally defective complaint bad on motion in arrest, although a demurrer thereto may have been previously overruled; for it is the duty of the court not to permit a judgment to be entered upon a complaint which is so clearly insufficient as to afford the judgment no foundation. An objection to the mode of drawing and impaneling the jury will not be ground for a motion in arrest of judgment,[52] or an objection to the competence or qualification of an individual juror.[53] And because a judgment can be arrested only for matter of record, it is held that misconduct of the jury or improper influence brought to bear upon them after the trial is no ground for arresting the judgment.[54]

b. Verdict on Immaterial Issues. It will be ground for a motion in arrest of judgment if the verdict is rendered upon an immaterial issue, not decisive of the merits of the cause.[58] jurisdictions the time allowed for making such a motion is limited by statute,[64] and in others it is held that it cannot be made after the end of the term of court at which the verdict was returned,[65] or at any rate after the lapse of such a time as shows laches.[66] But a motion of this kind may be made and heard after the decision on a motion for a new trial.[67]

b. Requisites of Application. A motion in arrest of judgment should be presented to the court in some mode recognized as sufficient by the local statute,[68] and should point out the specific errors on which it is based.[69] It is subject to amendment, but not so as to change it into a motion for a new trial,[70] and since it must be tried by the record it cannot be aided by affidavits.[71]

c. Hearing and Determination. A motion in arrest of judgment serves in some measure the office of a demurrer and it should be governed by the principles of a demurrer.[72] It must be tried by the record and cannot be aided by extraneous evidence or by the judge's recollection of the course of the trial.[73] The judgment of the court should be decisive and responsive to the motion,[74] and should, if justice requires it, dismiss plaintiff's case altogether,[75] or award a new trial.[76] If several defendants join in the motion, it must be sustained or overruled as to all.[77]

d. Presumptions in Aid of Verdict. On a motion in arrest of judgment, after trial, every reasonable intendment will be made in favor of the pleadings,[78] and it will be presumed after verdict that every material fact alleged in the declaration, or fairly inferable from what is alleged, was proved on the trial,[79] although it cannot be presumed that a cause of action was proved where none was stated, and where a material fact is omitted, which cannot be implied in or inferred from the finding of those which are stated, the verdict will not cover the defect.[80]

e. Operation and Effect of Arrest. The granting of a motion in arrest of judgment prevents the entry of a final judgment in the cause, unless it is made conditional upon an amendment or such other action as will remove the cause of arrest.[81] And if it does not award a venire facias de novo, it operates as a discontinuance and dismisses defendant without day.[82]

2. Presumption as to Entry. As it is the duty of clerks of courts to enter the judgments of the courts, it will be presumed, in aid of a judgment, that this duty was performed, when the dockets or records have been lost or destroyed, especially after the lapse of a considerable period of time.[91]

C. Authority and Duty to Enter — 1. In General. Authority for the entry of a judgment must be found in the actual rendition of such a judgment, and an order of court for its entry, unless the entry follows as of course, according to the local practice, without such an order.[92]

2. Authority and Duty of Clerk.[93] When a judgment has been rendered in a cause, it becomes the duty of the clerk, according to the usual practice, to make a record entry of it.[94] And whether he does so in pursuance of an order of the court,[95] or without such an order,[96] his authority extends only to the entering of the judgment exactly as it was rendered by the court, without addition, diminution, or change of any kind;[97] and a judgment entered by a clerk who had no authority to enter it at all, or in the form in which it is entered, is void.[98] The fact that a judgment is entered up by a deputy clerk, and not by the clerk in person, does not affect its validity.[99]

D. Parties Entitled to Enter. Where the successful party neglects to enter judgment, the court has power to compel him to do so, or to direct that the defeated party may cause it to be entered, if the other does not do so within a specified time.[1] Under a statute providing that when a verdict shall be rendered the party in whose favor it is may enter judgment at any time within four days after adjournment of court, the attorney of a plaintiff who has procured a verdict in an action ex delicto may enter judgment within such time, although plaintiff has died since the verdict.[2]

E. Time For Entry — 1. In General. In the absence of a statute or rule of court, judgment upon a verdict may be entered at any time after the return of the verdict, either immediately or after a delay which is not unreasonably great.[3] But it is sometimes the practice to enter all judgments on the last day of the term.[4]

2. When Entry Must Be Delayed. At common law, and by statute in some of the states, judgment cannot be entered on a verdict until the lapse of four days from its rendition, to allow of motions in arrest or for a new trial.[5] But in other states this rule is not in force,[6] and it does not apply where the case was tried by the court without a jury.[7] It is irregular to enter judgment in an action before it is ripe for such proceeding, as where an accounting must be taken,[8] where damages are yet to be assessed,[9] where other ancillary or subsidiary matters remain to be determined before the judgment can be put in its final shape,[10] where a motion for a new trial is pending, although this does not render the judgment void, but only irregular,[11] or where the verdict has been taken subject to the opinion of the court[12] or the court has ordered a stay of proceedings after the verdict.[13] Still the premature entry of a judgment is not a jurisdictional

Numbering folios.— A rule of court forbidding the clerk to file a paper in which the folios are not numbered does not invalidate the entry of a judgment the folios of which are not numbered, a statute providing that no judgment shall be impaired or affected by an informality in entering it. defect, and therefore does not avoid the judgment, but at most makes it irregular and voidable.[14]

3. Time Within Which Entry Must Be Made — a. In General. Statutes requiring that judgment shall be entered within a limited time after the rendition of a verdict or other determination of the cause are generally directory only, so that the validity of the judgment is not affected by failure to comply with them.[15]

b. Entry After Term. Although regularly the judgment should be entered at the same term at which the verdict is returned or the final decision of the case made, yet it is generally held to be competent for the court to order its entry at a subsequent term, if no rights of third persons will be prejudiced.[16]

c. After Expiration of Judge's Term. If a judgment or decree was actually rendered or settled before the expiration of the term of office of the judge trying the case, it is generally held to be immaterial that it was not filed or entered of record until afterward, the judicial act being the rendition of the judgment, and its entry being merely ministerial.[17]

4. Entry in Vacation. The entry or recording of a judgment being a ministerial act, as distinguished from the rendition of it, it has been held that if a judgment is duly rendered during term-time, it is then complete, and its validity is in no wise affected by the fact that the clerk does not enter it until vacation.[18]

But in several states the statutes or the settled practice of the courts forbid the entry of judgments in vacation.[19]

5. Presumption as to Time of Entry. It will be presumed in the absence of direct evidence that a judgment was entered at such a time as would make it valid, rather than at a time when it would be illegal or irregular to enter it.[20] In some states there is a presumption that all judgments are entered on the first[21] or last day of the term.[22]

F. Entry Nunc Pro Tunc — 1. Power and Authority of Courts. There is an inherent, common-law power in the courts to cause the entry of judgments nunc pro tunc in proper cases and in furtherance of justice.[23] This power belongs to all courts of record, and may be exercised by an appellate court as well as by the trial court,[24] but does not appertain to the clerk of a court.[25] It can be exercised, however, only in cases where the cause was ripe for judgment, that is, where the case was in such a condition at the date to which the judgment is to relate back that a final judgment could then have been entered immediately.[26]

rule applies where defendant is a corporation and is dissolved, or its charter expires, after the action has been tried and the case taken under advisement by the court.[32] Where the entry of judgment on a verdict is delayed by a motion in arrest or for a new trial, pending which one of the parties dies, judgment may be entered nunc pro tunc, on the decision of the motion, as of the time when the verdict was returned.[33] And so where an appeal has been taken and one of the parties dies before hearing in the appellate court the proper practice is to affirm or reverse the judgment below nunc pro tunc.[34]

b. Delay by Act of Court. Whenever delay in entering a judgment is caused by the action of the court, as in holding the case under advisement, judgment nunc pro tunc will be allowed as of the time when the party would otherwise have been entitled to it, if justice requires it.[35]

c. Failure to Enter Judgment on Rendition. In any case where a judgment was actually rendered, order made, or decree signed, but the same has not been entered on the record, in consequence of any accident or mistake, or the neglect or omission of the clerk, the court has power to order that the judgment be entered up nunc pro tunc, the fact of its rendition being satisfactorily established and no intervening rights being prejudiced.[36]

It may also be invoked in proceedings in a probate court (Brooks v. Brooks, 52 Kan. 562, 35 Pac. 215), and in actions for divorce as well as in other cases (Rush v. Rush, 97 Tenn. 279, 37 S. omissions of the court. This procedure cannot be employed to enter a judgment where the court wholly failed to render any judgment at the proper time,[38] or to change the judgment actually rendered to one which it neither rendered nor intended to render,[39] or where the fault in the original judgment is that it is wrong as a matter of law,[40] or to allow the court to review and reverse its action in respect to what it formerly refused to do or assent to.[41]

3. Time of Entry. The right to enter judgment nunc pro tunc is not defeated by a delay of several terms, or even several years, which is explained or justified, where justice to the parties requires it and no intervening rights are affected.[42]

4. Proceedings For Entry Nunc Pro Tunc — a. In General. An application for the entry of a judgment nunc pro tunc should be made by motion, to which only the parties to the original proceeding are proper parties.[43] The party opposing the motion may present any reasons in opposition to it which are available at such a stage of the cause;[44] but the proceeding is summary, and no inquiry will be permitted into the merits of the original action or the facts already established by the judgment.[45]

b. Notice of Application. In some jurisdictions no notice of an application for the entry of a judgment nunc pro tunc is necessary, where the motion is based on matters of record, such as could not be disputed by the opposite party even if he were heard;[46] but in other jurisdictions the proper practice is to give notice of all such applications.[47]

c. Evidence. According to the generally accepted rule, the evidence to justify the entry of a judgment nunc pro tunc must be record evidence, that is, some entry, note, or memorandum from the records or quasi-records of the court, which shows in itself, without the aid of parol evidence, that the alleged judgment was rendered, and what were its character and terms.[48] But according to some authorities an entry nunc pro tunc may be ordered on any evidence that is sufficient and satisfactory, whether it be parol or otherwise.[49] And when the fact that a judg-

5. Effect of Entry Nunc Pro Tunc. A judgment entered nunc pro tunc relates back to the time of the original entry and cures defects and irregularities.[51] But the effects of such an entry by relation will be confined to the rights and interests of the original parties, and it will not be allowed to prejudice the intervening rights of third persons without notice.[52] A nunc pro tunc entry of record is competent evidence of the facts which it recites,[53] and cannot be impeached collaterally.[54] Entering a decree nunc pro tunc, and thereby restricting the time for appeal, is not prejudicial error, where the defeated party succeeds in perfecting his appeal.[55]

G. Proceedings For Entry — 1. Necessity For Order. When a judgment has been rendered in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, it is the duty of the clerk to enter it of record, and for this no special order of the court is required in ordinary cases.[56]

2. Application or Motion and Notice. If the party entitled to judgment neglects to have it entered, the opposite party, if it is important to his interests, may move the court to compel the entry to be made, and the court upon a proper showing will order it to be done.[57] In cases where a motion or application to the court for the entry of a judgment is necessary, it should generally be on notice to the adverse party.[58]

3. Judgment on Report of Referee. Where an order of reference directs the entry of judgment upon the filing of the referee's report, the clerk may enter the judgment without any further order and without notice.[59]

4. Notice of Entry. By force of statutes in some of the states it is necessary for the party causing the entry of a judgment to serve the opposite party with notice of such entry.[60]

H. Judgment-Roll or Record — 1. Nature and Requisites in General. At common law the judgment-roll was a roll of parchment upon which all the proceedings in the cause, up to the issue and the award of venire inclusive, together with the judgment which the court awarded in the case, were entered; it included as well the pleadings and process as the signing of judgment.[61] In some states it is still required that a judgment-roll shall be made up.[62] And generally either as a substitute for the judgment-roll or in addition to it, the clerk is required to make a record of the case. This is a history of all the proceedings in the action from its inception to final judgment, including all the papers filed in the case and upon which the court acted at any stage of the proceedings.[63] To sustain the

Where the effect of a decision is to set aside the report of a referee, but to leave the cause pending, no judgment being directed or authorized, an entry of judgment by the prothonotary without an order, and at variance with the decision, is irregular and should be stricken from the record. Docketing judgment before filing judgment-roll.— In some states it is required by law that before a docket entry is made of a judgment there shall be filed a judgment-roll containing all the papers necessary to be attached according to the provisions of the statute; and it seems that unless this provision is complied with the docketing of the judgment is an unauthorized and illegal act. The clerk's docket is the record of the court, until the record is fully extended. Read v. Sutton, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 115.

Destruction of record.— As the judgment record is merely evidence of the judgment, its accidental destruction does not destroy the judgment. Ames v. Hoy, 12 Cal. 11.

File-marks on papers.— If the law does not require the clerk to indorse papers with the date of their filing, such an indorsement is not a part of the record and is not evidence of the date. Clow v. Winfield, 15 Tex. 449.

Docketing judgment before entry in judgment book.— In some states to constitute a judgment for the purpose of docketing it must first be entered in the judgment book. And a docketing without such entry is of no avail, even though a judgment-roll be filed with what purports to be a copy of the judgment in it. Maurin v. Carnes, 71 Minn. 308, 74 N. judgment, it is essential that the roll or record should show the actual rendition of a judgment, and describe it with sufficient particularity to leave none of its provisions in substantial doubt.[64]

2. MATTERS TO BE SHOWN.[65] A judgment-roll or record of a judgment is sufficient if the time,[66] place,[67] parties,[68] matter in dispute,[69] method of trial,[70] and the result[71] are clearly stated.[72] Although the entry of judgment recites the hearing of certain named witnesses for plaintiff, it is not objectionable because it fails to state that they were sworn.[73] Where the record shows the filing of a demurrer to the answer, it must also show what disposition was made of the demurrer, or circumstances implying its abandonment.[74]

3. RECITAL OF JURISDICTIONAL FACTS. It is essential to the validity of a judgment of an inferior court, or of any court proceeding on constructive service of process, that the facts necessary to show its jurisdiction should be recited in the record. But in the case of a court of general or superior jurisdiction, proceeding in the ordinary way, the want or insufficiency of such recitals will be aided by presumptions in favor of the court's jurisdiction.[75]

4. PAPERS TO BE INCLUDED. The judgment-roll or record in a case should include the writ or original process, with the necessary indorsements thereon, and any other papers on which the jurisdiction of the court is founded.[76] It should also include the pleadings,[77] the verdict, decision, or report on which the judgment is founded,[78] the judgment itself,[79] and generally any matters involving the merits of the action and necessarily affecting the judgment,[80] but not interlocutory rulings or the proceedings on collateral or incidental issues in the case.[81]

5. MAKING AND FILING. In most of the states it is made the duty of the clerk on the rendition of a judgment to make up the record or to make and file the judgment-roll.[82] The making of a record may, however, be waived by the agreement of both parties.[83]

6. DATE. The entry or record of a judgment is not void merely because it is

Where plaintiff puts in two replications to a plea, either of which is a good answer to it, and defendant demurs to one and rejoins to the other, and the demurrer is overruled and the issue joined on the other replication is found for plaintiff, the record need not include the replication demurred to and the proceedings thereon. The omission of the clerk to file the judgment-roll of a judgment will not render void his subsequent proceedings. Williams v. McGrade, 13 Minn. 46.

Limits of clerk's authority.— In making up the judgment-roll, the clerk has no authority to determine whether the cause of action is such as to authorize an execution against the person, but the attorney for plaintiff must take the responsibility of determining that question from the record. Bacon v. Grossmann, 90 N. Y. App. Div. 204, 86 N. Y. Suppl. 66.

Fastening papers together.— If all the papers constituting the judgment-roll are on file, it is not a fatal objection that they are not sewed together as required by the statute. Earle v. Barnard, 22 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 437. And this is so where all the papers are placed together in an envelope properly indorsed. Melchers v. Moore, 62 S. C. 386, 40 S. E. 773.

Recording judgment.— A statute which requires decrees of the chancery court vesting title to property in either of the parties to a suit to be recorded in the office of the clerk of the county court of the county in which the real property is situated does not make the vesting of title dependent upon the recording of the decree; but the decree is affected by a failure to have it so recorded, just as a deed would be under the registration laws. not dated.[84] It may be dated back to the time when the court directed judgment to be entered,[85] but is not valid if post-dated, at least until the arrival of the day named.[86]

7. SIGNATURE — a. Necessity. It is sometimes necessary to the validity of a judgment or decree that it shall be signed by the judge.[87] According to some authorities, however, statutes requiring the judge to sign all judgments rendered in his court are held to be merely directory, so that his omission to sign a judgment or any irregularity in doing so will not invalidate the judgment, although it may cast doubt upon its authenticity.[88] But in perhaps a majority of the states it is entirely unnecessary to the validity of a judgment that it should be signed by the judge, the presumption being that if it is entered by the clerk it was so directed and authorized by the court.[89]

b. Time and Place. If the signing of judgment is required to be suspended for a certain number of days to allow of motions for a new trial or the like, the premature signing of it is irregular, but not a fatal defect.[90] On the other hand delay in signing the judgment does not invalidate it, if it is signed before proceedings are taken on it or before it is pleaded or relied on.[91] The signing of judgment should be done in open court,[92] and in term-time,[93] and regularly it should be done within the territorial jurisdiction of the court.[94]

c. Signature of Clerk. Although the clerk of the court should attest the judgment-roll or entry by his signature, his failure to do so is at most an irregularity, and does not affect the validity of the judgment.[95]

Judgment never entered.— A statutory application to supply a lost record cannot be made the means of getting on the record a judgment or decree which never was entered there, or of completing a record imperfectly entered. Box v. Delk, 47 Ala. 729.

Whole record to be restored.— It is not sufficient to restore a part only of the lost record — such as the final judgment — but the restoration must be of the whole record, including the summons, pleadings, etc., as the court can determine the legal effect of its own records. A bill in equity will not lie to supply or restore a record in a court of law.[97] And the restoration cures no defects or objections. A substituted record possesses only the same validity as the original.[98]

b. Procedure. An application for the restoration of a lost or destroyed record should be made by motion,[99] showing the interest of the moving party and his right to apply for the restoration,[1] and containing at least the substance of that which he will ask the court to enroll in place of the original record.[2] The opposite party must have notice of the motion,[3] and be permitted to contest the application.[4] The motion may be supported by affidavits, and sustained by any evidence which satisfies the court of the existence and loss of the original record and the correctness of the proposed substitute,[5] and when so satisfied it will order the substitute to stand enrolled as and for the original.[6] a judgment only from an inspection of the whole record. Vail v. Iglehart, 69 Ill. 332.

Voidable and void judgments.—If it clearly appears that the original judgment was void on its face, a motion to restore it should be refused. Being a nullity, it was of no advantage to the creditor, and he is not injured by the refusal to restore it. But the restoration should not be denied if it appears that the original judgment was merely voidable. Vail v. Iglehart, 69 Ill. 332.

Want of notice.— Although a judgment of which the record has been destroyed is wrongfully restored by the court without notice to the debtor, yet when the judgment is revived by scire facias, with notice to the debtor, he should make his objection by plea of nul tiel record. George v. Middough, 62 Mo. 549. And see Gibson v. Vaughan, 61 Mo. 418.

Sufficiency of notice.— The notice must be sufficiently explicit to advise the opposite party of what is intended, as well as to enable him to controvert the affidavits submitted. McLendon v. Jones, 8 Ala. 298, 42 Am. Dec. 640. But if the notice is explicit in describing a judgment and papers alleged to be lost or destroyed, it is sufficient, although it does not conform to a statute providing for such a proceeding. Doswell v. Stewart, 11 Ala. 629.

Service of notice may be made by a private person, if the statute regulating the proceeding does not direct how it shall be made. Jones v. Lewis, 37 Miss. 434.

4. The judgment debtor should not be permitted to contest the application on grounds which go to the merits of the original judgment. Vail v. Iglehart, 69 Ill. 332. Nor can he contest the truth of the recitals of the proposed record, although he may show that the lost record contained no such recitals. Peddy v. Street, 87 Ala. 299, 6 So. 3.

In Arkansas it has been held that the debtor may show that he had a good defense to the original action, which he was deprived of the opportunity of asserting, without fault on his part, by fraud and collusion. Guess v. Amis, 54 Ark. 1, 14 S. W. 900.

In Kansas the statute permits the judgment debtor to set forth any new matters arising subsequent to the judgment which operated in whole or in part to extinguish or set it aside. See Davidson v. Beers, 45 Kan. 365, 25 Pac. 859.

In Kentucky the judgment debtor may show that a motion for a new trial had been regularly made and was pending when the judgment was destroyed. Green v. Stevens, 2 Duv. 420.

I. Judgment Book or Docket and Index — 1. Docket and Entries Therein. In some states it is the statutory duty of clerks of courts[7] to keep a "judgment book" or "docket,"[8] in which they are to enter the final judgments of their courts;[9] and in some the judgment is first to be entered in a judgment book and a judgment-roll filed, and then the judgment is to be docketed.[10] But the failure of the clerk to docket the judgment does not destroy it, or deprive it of the usual consequences of a judgment,[11] and his erroneous or false entries do not conclude the parties, or impair the validity of the judgment.[12] In determining the sufficiency of a docket entry, the whole entry must be considered, and if from the whole, the amount and date of the judgment, the parties to it, and the court in which it was rendered, appear, the entry will be held sufficient.[13]

2. Separate Books. Where the clerk is directed by law to keep certain books for the entry of judgments, or to record judgments in a book specially designated by statute for that purpose, or to enter different kinds of judgments or decrees in different books, and deviates from the course prescribed, the validity of the judgment is not thereby impaired as between the parties,[14] although it may be otherwise as to third persons who are misled, or who fail to receive the notice which a proper entry would have afforded them.[15]

3. Indexing Record. Where the statute requires the entries in the judgment docket to be arranged alphabetically, or to be so indexed, this is an essential part of the docketing of the judgment, and at least a substantial compliance is necessary to the validity of the judgment, at any rate as against third parties.[16]

J. Irregularities and Defects — 1. In General. In the entry or record of a judgment, a clerical error, misdescription, irregularity, or other defect not going to the jurisdiction of the court will not vitiate the judgment nor give it an effect which it would not have had if correctly entered,[17] provided there is enough in the entry or record to constitute a judgment.[18] And the same rule applies to alterations or interlineations, if explained by other parts of the record, or authorized by the court.[19]

2. Designation of Parties. The question who are parties to a suit is to be determined by all the pleadings, process, and proceedings in the case; and a judgment is operative for or against all who are real parties, although their names be incorrectly given in the judgment entry, or wholly omitted from it.[20] Hence the omission from the entry of judgment of the names of some of the defendants does not work a dismissal or discontinuance as to them,[21] and conversely the erroneous inclusion of persons as defendants does not bring them into the case,[22] and as between the parties themselves the validity and effect of the judgment are not impaired by a misnomer or misdescription of a party.[23] These and other like errors are regarded as immaterial where other parts of the record afford the means of correcting them.[24]

3. Designation of Amount. A judgment is not invalidated by a clerical error in the entry of it in respect to the amount of the recovery,[25] or where a blank space is left in the entry for the amount of the damages[26] or costs,[27] as this may

K. Effect of Entry and Record — 1. Conclusiveness of Record. No one, whether or not a party, may impeach the record of a judgment considered as a record.[29] And a record of a court imports absolute verity, and is conclusive evidence of the facts which it recites[30] as between the parties to the judgment and those in privity with them,[31] and cannot be contradicted or varied by evidence aliunde.[32] This rule, however, is subject to the qualification that one portion of a record may be limited, explained, or qualified by another portion thereof,[33] and

Conflicting evidence.— Evidence which, although it would not directly contradict any fact certified by the record of a judgment, would conflict with its legal effect, or with judicial deductions from its tenor, should not be admitted, after acquiescence in the judgment and rights derived under it for a long term of years. that extraneous evidence is admissible to point out and correct a clerical mistake in the record.[34]

2. Recital of Jurisdictional Facts. A recital in a judgment record of the facts on which the jurisdiction of the court is based, when those facts are sufficient in law to confer jurisdiction, is at least prima facie evidence that the court duly acquired jurisdiction, and, according to the doctrine prevailing in many states, is conclusive evidence on that point.[35]

3. Record as Notice. The record of a judgment is notice of what it contains or recites [36] as against parties properly before the court [37] and those whose situation requires them to inform themselves of the judgment,[38] provided the judgment is properly entered and clearly recites or describes the fact in question,[39] or shows enough to induce a cautious man to make an investigation.[40]

4. Conflict in Record. In case of conflict or inconsistency between statements in different parts of a judgment record, that one will be presumed true which will sustain the validity and correctness of the judgment, if it is possible to regard the other as a mistake.[41]

L. Filing Transcript of Judgment — 1. Transfer From One County to Another. In several states the statutes authorize the transfer from one county to another, by the filing of a transcript, of final judgments of the court,[42] where they have been docketed or recorded in the county where rendered.[43] And this may be done, not only by the judgment creditor, but after his death by his heir, administrator, or creditor.[44] The transcript will not be vitiated by mere clerical Judgments, etc., which cannot be transferred.— A judgment by default, which still requires the assessment of damages by a jury is not capable of being transferred (Connell v. Miller, 1 C. Pl. (Pa.) 67), nor an award, until the time allowed for appeal has elapsed (Hallman's Appeal, 18 Pa. St. 310), nor a verdict, without the rendition of a judgment upon it (Bailey v. Eder, 90 Pa. St. 446); and the same is true of a decree of a court of equity, although it be for the payment of a definite sum of money (Brooke v. Phillips, 83 Pa. St. 183).

errors,[45] but it must be sufficiently full to give reasonably certain and definite information to subsequent purchasers or lienors.[46] A transcript thus entered in another county does not become a judgment of the court to which transferred, but a quasi-judgment for certain limited purposes, such as lien, execution, and revival.[47] And hence, if it is desired to enter the judgment in a third county, it must be done by transcript from the original judgment, not from the transcript entered in the second county.[48] And further, the merits of a judgment thus transferred cannot be inquired into by the court to which it is taken; it is there only for purposes of enforcement and satisfaction.[49]

2. TRANSFER FROM INFERIOR TO SUPERIOR COURT — a. In General. For the purpose of enforcing the judgments of justices or other inferior courts against real property of the debtor,[50] statutes in several states[51] allow the creditor[52] to take a transcript of such a judgment[53] and file it in the office of the clerk of a superior court, whereupon, being there duly docketed,[54] it acquires the same force as a lien which it would have had if originally rendered by the superior court.[55] If the statute contemplates the filing of a complete transcript of the justice's record, it is not satisfied by a mere abstract of the judgment;[56] but otherwise the transcript is sufficient if it shows all the essential elements of a judgment,[57] and particularly the jurisdiction of the inferior court,[58] the date of the judgment,[59] the names of the parties, and the amount of the recovery.[60]

b. Certificate and Authentication. It is necessary that the transcript should be certified as correct by the justice or other court from which it is taken, and authenticated in accordance with the directions of the statute.[61]

c. Time For Filing. If there is no explicit restriction of the time within which a transcript of a justice's judgment may be taken, it may be done at any time during the life of the judgment.[62] But generally it is necessary that there should be a judgment actually rendered and still in force,[63] which has not become dormant,[64] or barred by the statute of limitations,[65] and is not so old as to be invalidated by the presumption of payment after twenty years.[66] The transcript may be filed before the time to appeal from the judgment has expired,[67] but not after an appeal has been taken.[68]

d. Affidavit of Creditor. In some states statutes[69] require the judgment creditor, on filing a transcript from a justice or other inferior court, to make and file an affidavit of the amount remaining due and unpaid on the judgment, or that the judgment is due and unpaid, and that it cannot be satisfied from the goods and chattels of the debtor. This requirement is jurisdictional and the affidavit is indispensable.[70]

Who must certify.— The transcript should be certified by the justice who rendered the judgment. But the certificate of one justice to the transcript of a judgment by another, with the certificate of the clerk of a court of record to the official character of such justice, may perhaps, in the absence of a statutory requirement, be sufficient to authenticate the judgment. Draggoo v. Graham, 9 Ind. 212. A justice cannot certify a transcript after his term of office has expired. Singley v. Fisher, 2 Leg. Rec. (Pa.) 168. And where a justice certifies that the judgment was rendered by him, but it is shown that it was rendered by his predecessor, the record of the transfer will be vacated, and the issuance of process on the judgment as transferred will be enjoined. Hamilton v. Thomson, 3 Kan. App. 8, 44 Pac. 437. e. Operation and Effect of Transfer. The effect of transferring a judgment by transcript from an inferior court to a superior court is to divest the former of all jurisdiction over the case and the judgment,[71] and to make it in most of the states to all intents and purposes a judgment of the latter court,[72] which may thereafter issue process on it,[73] modify it or grant other relief against it,[74] or vacate it or strike it off the docket for cause shown.[75]

VIII. AMENDMENT AND CORRECTION.[76]

A. Jurisdiction and Power to Amend — 1. Power and Authority of Courts[77] — a. In General. Expiration of judge's term.— The author-

This power is inherent and independent of statutes.[79] But in several states statutes have been enacted[80] either defining the authority of the courts in this regard and regulating its exercise,[81] or limiting the cases in which amendments may be made,[82] or the time within which such relief may be granted.[83] Statutes of this character should not be construed retrospectively.[84] It is not only the right, but also the duty, of a court to amend or correct its judgment when substantial grounds for such action are shown[85] by a party entitled to make the application;[86] and it appears that the amendment asked for will accomplish the purpose and give him the relief to which he is entitled,[87] and this without regard to the possible or probable effect of the amendment on the interests of other parties.[88]

b. During the Term. A court has plenary control of its judgments, orders, and decrees during the term at which they are rendered, and may amend, correct, modify, or supplement them, for cause shown, or may, to promote justice, revise, supersede, revoke, or vacate them, as may in its discretion seem necessary.[89]

the term does not apply to interlocutory judgments or such as remain in fieri,[91] or to action in that behalf taken with the consent of the parties concerned or at their request,[92] or where the judgment is carried over the term by a motion to amend or correct it or a petition for a rehearing.[93]

d. In Vacation. By statute in some of the states an amendment or correction of a judgment may be made in vacation, especially if there is matter of record by which to amend,[94] but in others this can only be done in term-time.[95]

e. After Appeal. Where the court would otherwise have the authority to amend the judgment, it may be done after an appeal has been taken;[96] but not after the adjudication of the appeal in the court above,[97] except perhaps as to matters not considered on the appeal.[98]

2. Authority of Clerk. The clerk of the court has no authority on his own responsibility and without an order or direction of the court to amend, change, or correct a judgment.[99]

3. Judgments Which May Be Amended or Corrected — a. In General. The power of amendment extends to interlocutory as well as final judgments,[1] and to orders;[2] and its exercise is not impeded by the fact that the judgment may have become dormant,[3] or may be irregular or even wholly invalid;[4] but an amendment should not be made after the issue of an execution on the judgment,[5] and still less after it has been paid or otherwise satisfied.[6] A memorandum made by the clerk at the foot of the judgment is not a part of the judgment, and if erroneous may be rectified on motion.[7]

b. Judgments by Confession. Courts have power to amend a judgment by confession, as well as any other, by rectifying mistakes, correcting the form of the judgment, or supplying omissions.[8]

c. Judgments by Consent. A judgment entered by consent cannot be altered or corrected except with the consent of all the parties affected by it.[9]

d. Judgments by Default. A judgment by default may be amended or corrected in a proper case, at the instance of plaintiff,[10] or on motion of defendant.[11]

e. Judgment Entered on Transcript From Another Court. Where a judgment of a justice of the peace or other inferior court is filed in a court of record, the latter court has power to amend and correct it.[12] But where a transcript of a judgment is taken from one court to another court of coördinate jurisdiction, for purposes of lien, it can be amended only in the court which rendered it.[13]

B. Nature of Errors and Corrections — 1. Clerical Errors. A mere clerical error arising from inadvertence or the formal misprision of clerks or other officers may always be corrected by the court, so as to make the judgment speak the truth, even after the term.[14] The term "clerical error" as here used must not be taken in too narrow a sense. It includes not only errors made by Rule in Illinois.— As the writ of error coram nobis was employed only to correct mistakes of fact in a decree or judgment, not put in issue or passed upon by the court, and is abolished by Ill. Rev. St. c. 110, § 67, providing that such mistakes may be corrected on motion, such motion can only reach such mistakes of fact as might have been corrected by the writ of error coram nobis before it was abolished. McPherson v. Wood, 52 Ill. App. 170. A mistake in entering the judgment, so that it reads for plaintiff instead of for defendant, or vice versa, or so that it gives the right of execution to the defeated party instead of to the other, may be corrected on motion. Hogue v. Corbit, 156 Ill. 540, 41 N. E. 219, 47 Am. St. Rep. 232; Morrison v. Stewart, 21 Ill. App. 113. A misnomer of the term of court in the entry of the judgment is a clerical error and amendable. Burnham v. Chicago, 24 Ill. 496.

2. Judicial Errors. A decision which is wrong in law cannot be corrected on motion, and the allowance of an amendment should never be used as a means of reviewing the judgment on the merits or rectifying judicial errors or mistakes.[16] Thus the judgment cannot be modified or amended because as it stands it is not supported by the evidence,[17] or because the conclusions of law on which it is founded are alleged to be erroneous,[18] or to make it conform to what ought to have been done but was not in fact done.[19] And when a statute authorizes the correction of judgments on the ground of "mistake," it means mistake of fact, and not of law.[20]

Wrong entry of default.— Where a judgment appears of record as entered by default, but in fact two pleas were filed and appear of record, the court will presume that the judgment was entered through inadvertence judgment of ambiguity,[25] or to make it conform to the verdict, where by mistake it has been entered in terms differing therefrom.[26] And so the court may amend its record by transferring the proceedings to the proper suit when by mistake they have been filed in a suit to which they do not belong.[27]

4. SUBSTANTIAL CHANGE OR MODIFICATION OF JUDGMENT. The power of a court to amend its own record is limited to such changes or corrections as are in affirmance of the judgment originally rendered; and where the judgment expresses the entire judicial action taken at the time of its rendition, the court has no authority to enlarge or diminish it, to make a change or modification in matter of substance, or, under the guise of amendment, to review the case and render a different judgment.[28] A judgment therefore cannot be amended so as to vary the rights of the parties as fixed by the original decision;[29] and it is error to amend a judgment by reducing its amount, where the reason for the alteration is that the court has and correct the mistake. Miller v. Hoc, 1 Fla. 189. And so where a judgment is confessed in open court and the clerk improperly enters it as a judgment by default the mistake will be corrected. Grand Rapids Sav. Bank v. Widdicomb, 114 Mich. 639, 72 N. W. 615.

5. SUPPLYING OMISSIONS. If anything has been omitted from the judgment which is necessarily or properly a part of it, and which was intended and understood to be a part of it, but failed to be incorporated in it through the negligence or inadvertence of the court or the clerk, the omission may be supplied by an amendment after the term.[35] But on the other hand, if the proposed addition is a mere afterthought, and formed no part of the judgment as originally intedend
