40. Gay v. Cheney, 58 Ga. 304, holding that where by mistake judgment has been entered in favor of a former administratrix whose letters had abated by marriage, it is proper for the court to correct the mistake and amend the judgment, so as to make it read in favor of the administrator de bonis non, if he had been duly made a party and was the real plaintiff when the judgment was entered. Kees v. Maxim, 99 Mich. 493, 58 N. W. 473. But see Boland v. Benson, 54 Wis. 387, 11 N. W. 911.

Where judgment has been entered for the use of a third person, who disclaims the assignment to him, defendant may move the respond with the record in consequence of a clerical error or inadvertence, which makes it include more or fewer parties than it should, it may be amended by striking out the names of those erroneously added[41] or inserting the names of those improperly omitted.[42] But this power of amendment cannot be employed to bring within the judgment new parties, who were not previously before the court,[43] or, by changing the parties, to change the substance and effect of the judgment.[44]

c. Personal or Representative Capacity. A judgment entered against a party in a representative capacity, when it should have been against him individually, or vice versa, or a personal judgment against an executor or administrator which should have been against the goods of the estate, may be amended by other parts of the record, when the mistake was clerical and not judicial.[45]

7. PROCESS, SERVICE, AND APPEARANCE — a. In General. An erroneous recital of the judgment or of another part of the record in regard to the issuance or service of process may be amended to make it conform to the actual facts, or to make it more explicit.[46] But when the fault is not in the statements or recitals of the record, but in the writ or process itself, this cannot be amended, being a jurisdictional defect.[47]

b. Return or Proof of Service. When the court actually acquired jurisdiction of defendant, but the return of the officer or other proof of service fails to show that fact, or is otherwise irregular or defective, it may be amended after judgment.[48] But the officer's return cannot be so amended as to render the judgment erroneous or cause its reversal.[49]

a proper case.[58] It is within the power of a court within the term at which a judgment is entered against an administrator to strike therefrom an award of execution.[59]

b. Amount of Recovery. If, in consequence of a clerical error or miscalculation on the part of the clerk or the court, the amount of the recovery in a judgment is stated at a wrong sum, the entry may be amended to conform to the truth.[60] So an amendment may be made where the amount of the judgment is in excess of that claimed by plaintiff in his pleadings,[61] or greater than the sum found by the verdict or ordered by the court,[62] or larger than the amount which limits the jurisdiction of the court,[63] or excessive in consequence of the failure to allow proper credits,[64] although not where the excess of the judgment is due to an error of law, as where it is greater than the evidence will support,[65] unless in that case plaintiff remits the excess.[66] A similar rule applies where through inadvertence or mistake the judgment is entered for too small an amount,[67] as where it is for less than appears on the face of the obligation in suit,[68] or less than the amount admitted to be due by defendant's pleadings.[69] And an amendment is proper where the clerk in entering the judgment has omitted to insert the sum recovered.[70]

C. Proceedings and Relief — 1. Amendment on Court's Own Motion. The court which rendered a judgment may, on its own motion and without application by a party, amend it by the correction of a clerical error or mistake, more especially during the same term;[75] but it cannot do so where the proposed amendment involves a review of the judgment or a substantial modification of it.[76] The court has power, after announcing a judgment, to amend the order before it is signed to conform to the facts.[77]

2. Application to Court — a. Nature and Form of Proceeding. A judgment once entered must be corrected, if irregular or erroneous, by some proper proceeding for that purpose; it cannot be merely disregarded and the proper judgment entered anew.[78] During the term at which the judgment was rendered, the correction may be made by an order of the court upon a mere suggestion of the error.[79] But after the term the amendment can only be made upon the presentation of a formal petition or motion,[80] entitled and filed in the same action or proceeding,[81] and not by an independent suit for that purpose,[82] or by a pleading in the nature of a complaint.[83]

b. Form and Requisites of Application. A motion for the amendment of a judgment should set forth clearly and specifically the nature of the errors or omissions complained of, the terms of the correction desired, and the reasons for invoking the court's action.[84]

c. Jurisdiction. A motion to amend a judgment cannot be entertained by another court or another judge than the one rendering the judgment.[85] But the jurisdiction of the proper court to amend the judgment is not affected by defendant's absence from the state, jurisdiction of his person having attached in the action,[86] or by the fact that similar relief has already been granted to a joint party.[87]

d. Time For Application. An application for the amendment of a judgment must be made within a reasonable time; if unduly delayed, it will be denied on the ground of laches, especially where rights have vested under the judgment which would be disturbed by its alteration.[88] At the same time the inherent power of a court to correct or amend its own records in the interests of justice is not lost by the mere lapse of time,[89] except where the matter is regulated by stat-

i. Discretion of Court. An application to amend or correct a judgment is addressed to the discretion of the court, and its action will not be interfered with by an appellate court, unless where an abuse of discretion is manifest, or controlled by mandamus.[18] Further the regularity of an amendment made by a court of competent jurisdiction cannot be inquired into collaterally.[19]

3. Mode of Making Amendment. An amendment of a judgment may practically be accomplished by entering the order therefor or the making of an order which effects the same result,[20] in which case the amendment may actually be made at any time thereafter,[21] or by the entry of a release or remittitur, where that will make the necessary correction;[22] but good practice requires not only that the amendment should be ordered, but that the clerk should actually make it as directed.[23] The courts tolerate but do not favor the making of such corrections by erasure and interlineation on the original record,[24] the better method being to annul or vacate the defective entry and replace it by a new entry ordered to be made nunc pro tunc.[25] Where a decree already made in a cause is tacitly revoked during the same term, and a second decree is made on the same subject-matter, it would be more orderly and convenient, in making the second decree, to refer to the first one and state in what particular it is intended to modify, supplement, or supersede it; but this is not essential if a comparison of the two decrees discloses the changes or modifications made.[26]

4. Allowing Amendment Nunc Pro Tunc. The court may not only order the amendment or correction of a judgment, but may order it to be done nunc pro tunc.[27] But this cannot be done where the original judgment was a nullity, or where the effect would be to enter a judgment entirely different from that originally rendered.[28]

5. Operation and Effect of Amendment — a. As Between the Parties. The amendment or correction of a judgment relates back to the original judgment and becomes a part of it, and makes the judgment of the same effect as if the defects or mistakes on account of which it was amended had never existed.[29] But it does not make a new judgment or confer any new or additional rights.[30] Where a party applies for and obtains an amendment of the judgment, he thereby waives all erroneous rulings of the court preceding the judgment.[31]

b. As Against Third Persons. An amendment of a judgment will not be allowed to prejudice the rights of third persons, such as subsequent judgment creditors, purchasers, or mortgagees, who have acquired interests for value,[32] unless where they have taken with notice,[33] or where the amendment is made at the same term at which the judgment was rendered.[34] The order allowing an amendment should contain a saving of the intervening rights of third persons, but the law will make this reservation whether it is expressed or not.[35]

own judgment before it for review and reversal or modification, on account of some error of fact, not of law, affecting the validity and regularity of the proceedings, and which was not brought into the issue.[36] It is not a writ of right. It can be granted only on a showing of cause, and then it is in the discretion of the court whether, on the affidavits presented, to allow the writ or not, and its decision will not be reviewed by an appellate court.[37] In most of the states, if not abolished by statute, it has become obsolete, being superseded by the more speedy and efficacious remedy by motion in the same court.[38]

2. GROUNDS FOR APPLICATION. Error coram nobis does not lie to correct any error of law, its office being confined strictly to errors of fact.[39] Only such errors can be assigned as are consistent with the record before the court,[40] and the court will not look into the cause of action on which the judgment was rendered,[41] or consider any facts which might have been presented to the court on the trial of the cause,[42] and still less any facts which were put in issue and adjudicated upon the trial.[43] But the writ may issue where there is a vital jurisdictional defect not apparent on the face of the record,[44] or on account of the death of a party before judgment, or the infancy, insanity, or coverture of defendant, such disability not

3. PROCEEDINGS. There is no limitation of the time within which a writ of error coram nobis may be brought,[47] unless fixed by statute.[48] The writ can be prosecuted only by one who was a party or privy to the record, or injured by the judgment,[49] and it issues upon a motion or petition addressed to the court and supported by affidavits[50] setting forth with certainty and particularity the errors or defects complained of.[51] Notice of the application must be given to the opposing party,[52] and the writ issues upon an order of the court allowing it.[53]

is that the judgment complained of be affirmed; if in his favor, that the judgment be revoked and recalled, and the latter judgment puts the suit in the same situation as when the judgment was rendered.[56]

E. Action to Review Judgment — 1. Jurisdiction and Authority. In some states the statutes authorize the review and modification or reversal of a judgment upon an independent action brought for that purpose[57] in the same court which rendered the judgment, no other having jurisdiction,[58] after the party has unsuccessfully moved for a modification of the judgment, or for a new trial, in the original action, and duly reserved exceptions to the court's refusal to grant him such relief, or to its rulings and decisions made at the trial.[59]

2. Grounds For Review. A proceeding of this kind for the review of a judgment may be maintained for want of jurisdiction,[60] for the insufficiency of the complaint to show any right of action,[61] for error of law committed by the trial court,[62] for material new matter discovered since the rendition of the judgment,[63] for fraud

62. A proceeding to review a judgment for error of law appearing in the proceedings and judgment is in the nature of an appeal, and is to be tried by the record alone; hence only such errors can be considered as would be available on a direct appeal, and the suit cannot be sustained unless the errors relied on are such as would have justified a reversal of the judgment if it had been appealed directly. Assessment of damages.— Mistake or misapprehension of the court, in the assessment of damages, resulting in the assessment of too great a sum, cannot be reviewed. Burton v. Harris, 76 Ind. 429.

63. What is here meant is an entirely different thing from new evidence. The term means facts constituting the whole or part of a ground of action or defense. Dippel v. Schicketanz, 100 Ind. 376; Peyton v. Kruger, 77 Ind. 486; Fleming v. Stout, 19 Ind. 328; Nelson v. Johnson, 18 Ind. 329; Hall v. Palmer, 18 Ind. 5; Springfield Engine, etc., Co. v. Michener, 23 Ind. And further, it must be new matter of fact, and not matter practised in obtaining the judgment,[64] or where the judgment was taken against the party in consequence of surprise, mistake, inadvertence, or his excusable neglect,[65] or to correct a mistake in the form of the judgment;[66] but not on account of matters which might have been pleaded in defense to the original action,[67] nor merely on account of a conflict in the evidence.[68]

3. Time For Proceedings. The right to bring an action for the review of a judgment is not lost by delay, not amounting to laches,[69] unless the time is limited by statute, in which case it must be exercised within the statutory time,[70] except in the case of persons under a legal disability at the time of the rendition of judgment, whose rights in this behalf are generally saved by the statute, for an equal length of time after the removal of the disability.[71] A complaint to review a judgment cannot be prosecuted while an appeal from the judgment is pending, or after the affirmance of the judgment on appeal,[72] except where it is founded on the discovery of material new matter, in which case it may be prosecuted after the judgment has been affirmed on an appeal involving only alleged errors of law in the proceedings below.[73]

4. Parties. In a proceeding to review a judgment, the same parties, and all of them, as those in the original proceeding sought to be reviewed, should be before the court.[74]

5. Complaint — a. Requisites in General. A complaint for review of a judgment should show that exceptions to the errors alleged were duly taken,[75] and that one of the statutory grounds for review of the judgment exists, setting forth the facts and circumstances relied on with at least so much certainty and particularity as will sustain it against a demurrer.[76] In particular, if the complaint is founded on the discovery of material new matter, it must set forth plaintiff's ignorance of it at the time of the trial, the fact that it could not have been discovered in due season by the exercise of proper diligence, and the circumstances of its discovery.[77] But a complaint stating a cause of action in general terms will be good, after verdict, as against a motion in arrest of judgment.[78] And a complaint is not bad on demurrer for want of facts, if otherwise sufficient, merely because it fails to show that the suit was commenced within the time limited by the statute.[79]

b. Transcript of Record. In order to review a judgment the complaint therefor should contain a true and complete transcript of so much of the record of the proceedings as would be necessary on a direct appeal, or so much as is necessary fully to present the questions on which error is predicated.[80]

6. Defenses, Answer, Etc. In an action for the review of a judgment, only such defenses are proper as are available on an appeal from the judgment.[81] Defendant may demur to the complaint, and thereby admits the truth of its statements of fact.[82] He is not entitled to amend his pleadings in the original case.[83]

7. Evidence. Plaintiff must prove all the facts necessary to entitle him to the relief asked,[84] and may according to the circumstances of the case present the testimony of witnesses, affidavits, or other exhibits;[85] but the recitals of the record, unless controverted by evidence, will control the allegations of the complaint.[86]

Affidavit.— In an action to review a judgment because of new matter, an affidavit made by the witness by whom it is claimed such new matter can be proved, and filed with the complaint, will be deemed a mere exhibit, and not a part of the complaint; and in determining the materiality of the newly discovered evidence, the court can consider only the allegations of the body of the complaint itself. IX. OPENING OR VACATING.[90]

A. Jurisdiction and Authority in General — 1. Nature and Scope of Remedy — a. In General. The power to vacate, open, or set aside a judgment is a common-law power inherent in courts of general jurisdiction, and may be exercised without the grant of special statutory authority.[91] An application for this purpose is not in the nature of an appeal from the judgment;[92] but is addressed to the equitable powers of the court,[93] and is to be based upon a showing of good and sufficient grounds for the relief asked,[94] and granted only upon hearing the parties, and not in an ex parte or summary manner.[95]

b. Constitutional and Statutory Provisions. It is not in the power of the people of a state, by the adoption of a constitutional provision, or of the legislature, by the enactment of a statute, to annul an existing final judgment or class of judgments, or order the same to be set aside and a new trial granted.[96] But the legislature may give to the courts authority to open or set aside judgments, in addition to that common-law power which they already possess,[97] and some statutes of this character have been sustained, although retroactive in their operation.[98] A statute of this kind is not exclusive. That is, if it enumerates certain grounds for which judgments may be vacated, the party applying for relief under the statute must bring himself within its terms. But the statute will not prevent the courts from acting on other grounds or causes which would be good and suffi-

In Pennsylvania the courts, for cause shown, open, without vacating, a judgment by default, for the purpose of letting defendant in to a defense. Although this practice is unknown to the common law, it is an appeal to the equitable powers of the court to allow a hearing on the merits, from which defendant, by adherence to the strict forms of law, would otherwise be precluded. cient at common law, and an application based on such a ground is not governed by the statute.[99] Such a law is remedial in its character, and should be liberally construed,[1] although it cannot be extended beyond its legitimate purport. Thus if it speaks only of "defaults" it cannot be applied to final judgments otherwise rendered.[2]

c. Other Remedies Available. A motion to vacate or set aside a judgment will not be entertained when the proper remedy of the party aggrieved is by appeal, error, or certiorari;[3] by a motion for a new trial in the court rendering the judgment;[4] by mandamus requiring the court to take some action which would give the party what he seeks;[5] by an independent action for damages;[6] or by a bill in equity for injunction or other relief.[7]

Pending a suit in equity to restrain proceedings on a judgment and have it declared void, the court in which it was rendered has no jurisdiction of a proceeding to set it aside. Wilmington First Nat. judgments is incident to all courts of record, or of general jurisdiction,[8] including not only the nisi prius courts, but also courts of equity,[9] and appellate courts,[10] and probate or surrogates' courts.[11] The power to vacate a judgment must be exercised by the court which rendered the judgment, and no other court can take cognizance of such an application.[12] As between courts of coördinate jurisdiction, such as two county courts or circuit courts of the same state, the rule is that neither has power to vacate a judgment rendered by the other which is not void upon its face.[13]

b. As Between Federal and State Courts. A federal court has no jurisdiction of an action or other proceeding to vacate or set aside a judgment rendered by a state court,[14] except where the ground of objection is that the judgment was obtained by fraud, in which case the federal court, if otherwise it has jurisdiction of the action, may entertain a suit and make a decree which as between the parties shall have the effect of vacating the judgment and any proceedings taken or rights acquired thereunder.[15] And so in a state court a judgment rendered by a federal court may be attacked as fraudulent, but cannot be reviewed as to any alleged errors or irregularities, or annulled for an alleged want of jurisdiction.[16]

3. What Judgments May Be Vacated — a. In General. The power of courts to grant relief by opening or vacating judgments is not generally limited either by the nature and form of the action,[17] or by the amount in controversy.[18] It extends to judgments rendered upon default,[19] by confession,[20] and upon trial and verdict;[21]

After removal of cause.— Where, at the time a cause was removed to the federal court, a judgment had been rendered against defendant, but the state court had power under the statute to vacate the same, the federal court is vested on the removal with the same power. Ordway v. Suchard, 31 Iowa 481; Simmons v. Church, 31 Iowa 284; Harper v. Drake, 14 Iowa 533. And see Sargent v. Wilson, 2 McCord (S. C.) 512; Hane v. Goodwyn, 2 Bay (S. C.) 521.

In California a motion to vacate a default entered by the clerk may be made at any time before final judgment is entered, although the court may have adjourned for the term at which the default was entered before the motion is made. Willson v. Cleaveland, 30 Cal. 192.

20. See supra, II, G.

Office judgments.— In some states it is held that mere office judgments are under the control of the court in succeeding terms and can be modified or set aside for cause shown. Wilson v. Torbert, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 296, 21 Am. Dec. 632; Powell v. Jopling, 47 N. C. 400; Bougher v. Bougher, Tapp. (Ohio) 158; James v. Gott, 55 W. Va. 229, 47 S. E. 649. See Enders v. Burch, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 64.

21. The verdict must be set aside as well as the judgment. A judgment regularly entered upon a verdict cannot be stricken off so long as the verdict is permitted to stand, for if this were done the relief awarded would be

and may be applied as well to interlocutory as to final judgments,[22] and to orders as well as final decisions,[23] and even to such judgments as are utterly void and mere nullities.[24] The final settlements of executors and trustees may be opened or vacated.[25] In Pennsylvania it has been held that there is no authority for a rule to open a judgment of nonsuit, such a judgment not being within the meaning of the statutes on the subject; but the proper and only practice is to apply to the court to take off the nonsuit.[26]

b. Executed or Satisfied Judgments. It has been held that a judgment may be opened or vacated for good cause, such as fraud or mistake, even after the amount of it has been collected by payment or by levy and sale on execution;[27] but the weight of authority seems otherwise.[28]

c. Judgments on Transcripts. Where a judgment rendered by an inferior court, such as that of a justice of the peace, is transferred to a superior court, by taking and filing a transcript, for the purposes of lien and execution,[29] the latter court cannot open or vacate the judgment so transferred.[30]

4. RIGHT TO RELIEF — a. In General. A motion to vacate or open a judgment should not be granted unless it is shown that the judgment is unjust, as to the moving party, as it stands, or that he is actually or prospectively injured or prejudiced by it,[31] that he will be benefited by the granting of the relief asked,[32] and that the motion can be granted without material injustice or injury to the opposing party[33] or prejudice to the intervening rights of third persons.[34] Further, to entitle himself to this relief, the moving party must show a sufficient reason why he did not assert and enforce his rights at the proper time and in the regular manner,[35] and that his own conduct throughout has been free from fraud or any turpitude,[36] and he must free himself from all imputation of negligence or laches, for the judgment will not be disturbed if it appears to have been entered as a result of his own heedlessness, sloth, or lack of diligence in protecting his own interests.[37]

b. Discretion of Court. A motion to vacate or set aside a judgment is addressed to the sound legal discretion of the trial court on the particular facts of the case.[38] And consequently its determination will not be disturbed on the other hand, if he shows himself plainly and justly entitled to the relief demanded, the court must grant the application and has no discretion to refuse it.[43] When a party moving to vacate or open a judgment brings his case within the statute, if the application is based on a statute, and shows himself to be free from any negligence or wrong conduct, and it appears that he has acted in due season and is clearly and plainly entitled to the relief asked, the application must be granted as a matter of right, and the court has no discretion to refuse it.[44] Under no circumstances will the court be justified in refusing to receive and hear a motion to vacate the judgment; its discretion is to be exercised on the facts as developed on a hearing, not in advance of it.[45]

c. Waiver and Estoppel. A person who would ordinarily be entitled to apply for the vacation of a judgment may waive the right to such relief, or be estopped by his conduct to ask for it.[46] This is the case where he acquiesces in the rendition of the judgment[47] or in the effect of the judgment as rendered,[48] or expressly acknowledges its binding force,[49] or receives and retains benefits accruing to him under it,[50] or voluntarily pays the amount of it,[51] or suffers his property to be sold

A stipulation between the parties, in consideration of an extension of the time to answer, that plaintiff should have judgment for the amount claimed if a third person failed to appear and ask for leave to defend within such time, does not waive defendant's right to apply for the vacation of a judgment against him by default, on the ground of its having been taken against him through his mistake or excusable neglect. Barker v. Keith, 11 Minn. 65.

Failure to defend at plaintiff's request.— Where defendant refrains from setting up usury as a defense, at the request of plaintiff, and because the latter desires to obtain a speedy decision of another question in the case, defendant will not be estopped from moving to open the judgment. on execution without objection,[52] or where the party against whom a default or other interlocutory judgment is taken submits to and ratifies it by participating in the further proceedings in the action.[53] It is also generally held that a party waives his right to apply for the vacation of a judgment by taking an appeal from it,[54] or by instituting an independent action for substantially the same relief.[55] Where two entries of a judgment for the same debt are made by mistake, and the debtor contrives to procure an entry of satisfaction of the first, he is estopped to have the second vacated for irregularity.[56]

B. Persons Entitled to Relief — 1. In General. A judgment will not be vacated or set aside on the motion of a third person, who was not a party or privy to the action,[57] unless it appears that the moving party was the real party in inter-

12 Atl. 658; Murphy v. Cawley, 7 Kulp (Pa.) 128.

Payment of the amount admitted to be due, although voluntary, does not deprive defendant of the right to have the judgment opened. Roberts v. Price, 2 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 681, 4 West. L. Month. 581.

Payment not voluntary.— Payment made to prevent the sheriff from seizing property on which he is about to levy is not voluntary, and will not prevent the party from having the judgment set aside for irregularity. Knox County Bank v. Doty, 9 Ohio St. 505, 75 Am. Dec. 479.

Offer to pay before suit.— Defendant is estopped to apply for the opening of a judgment where he made a declaration of no defense to the note on which the judgment was entered and offered to pay it to the present holder before or about the time of its maturity. Applications of text.— Submitting to a reference, or permitting the report to be confirmed without objection, waives the right to apply for the vacation of the judgment. Koehler v. Brady, 82 N. Y. App. Div. 279, 81 N. Y. Suppl. 695; Davis v. Garr, 7 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 311. So an objection that a default was improperly taken is not available to one who afterward pleaded without objection upon the setting aside of the default. Cupp v. Ayers, 89 Ind. 60. But filing a demurrer in the mistaken belief that a default had not yet been entered is no waiver of the right to object to the judgment by default as void for want of jurisdiction. State Ins. Co. v. Waterhouse, 78 Iowa 674, 43 N. W. 611. Taking part in the inquisition of damages, after a default, waives the right to open or vacate the default. Burke v. Stokely, 65 N. C. 569. But compare Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Ritchie, 31 Md. 191. On the assessment of damages, if defendant is present and cross-examines the witnesses without objecting to the default, he cannot afterward move to set it aside. Sneaghan v. Briggs, Wils. (Ind.) 75; Mason v. Bidleman, 1 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 62. But where judgment is rendered in trespass to try title, and proceedings are begun to restrain interference with the property, a motion to dissolve the injunction does not waive the right to have the judgment opened. Louisiana.— A judgment apparently in his favor, but really prejudicial to a person, may be annulled where the proceedings have been taken without his authority or knowledge in the exercise of his rights; but otherwise where his name merely has been used

3. JOINT DEFENDANTS. A judgment against several defendants jointly, which is void or irregular as to one of them, may be vacated on the application of that defendant.[65] In such a case it is not necessary that the judgment should be vacated as to all the defendants if their liability is several as well as joint,[66] unless they are inseparably connected in interest,[67] except in those jurisdictions where a joint judgment is regarded as an entirety for all purposes.[68]

4. LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES. Statutes regulating the opening or vacating of judgments sometimes provide that an application for such relief may be made by the "legal representatives of the defendant" or by "any person legally representing him"; and it has been held that these phrases include not only the executor or administrator of a deceased defendant[69] or his widow and heirs,[70] but also one who by deed or other grant has acquired his entire interest in the subject-matter of the action.[71] Persons applying in this character for the vacation of the judgment must show a state of facts which would have supported the application if made by the original party.[72]

5. CREDITORS, LIENORS, AND PURCHASERS. An application to vacate or set aside a judgment may be made by another judgment creditor[73] who has been defrauded or injured by the judgment,[74] or by a person holding a lien or encumbrance which is injuriously affected by the judgment,[75] or by a bona fide purchaser of the property affected,[76] except where such person loses his right by passing on his interest to another or it is lost by foreclosure or otherwise,[77] and except where he is seeking or has already sought a remedy by a separate and independent action.[78]

C. Persons as Against Whom Judgment May Be Vacated. The assignee of a judgment cannot set up his rights to prevent its being opened or vacated, as he stands in no better position than his assignor,[79] nor can one of several defendants prevent such action being taken, although the judgment is beneficial to him, and he was no party to the fraud perpetrated by the other defendants on which the motion is based.[80] But the statutes are generally so framed as to save and protect, when the judgment is opened or vacated, the rights and titles of purchasers in good faith under the judgment.[81]

D. Time of Application — 1. During the Term. During the whole of the term at which a judgment or order is rendered, it remains subject to the plenary control of the court, and may be vacated, set aside, modified, or annulled,[82] and a new trial is made and continued over the term, it suspends the finality of the judgment so that the court may set it aside at the subsequent term.[90]

c. Consent of Parties. The court may vacate or open a judgment after the end of the term, if the parties consent or agree thereto.[91]

d. Interlocutory Judgments. An interlocutory judgment or order is always under the control of the court until the final decision of the suit, and it may be modified or rescinded, on sufficient grounds shown, even after the term at which it was made, so it be before the entry of final judgment.[92]

e. Void Judgments. Where a judgment is entirely void for want of jurisdiction the power to vacate it or set it aside is not limited to the term at which it was rendered, but may be exercised at a succeeding term.[93] And this applies as the motion is sufficient to preserve the jurisdiction of the court over the judgment, although the motion is oral and not accompanied by any statement of the grounds thereof. Hartman v. Viera, 113 Ill. App. 216.

well to a want of jurisdiction of the subject-matter as to a lack of jurisdiction over the parties.[94] But this rule cannot be extended so as to apply to mere errors and irregularities,[95] and defects or irregularities in regard to the jurisdiction, such as make the judgment voidable at most, are not ground for vacating it after the term, especially where acquiesced in by the parties for a considerable length of time.[96]

f. Irregularities. A judgment will not be vacated after the end of the term for any mere irregularity not affecting the jurisdiction, and therefore not rendering the judgment void, unless the statute grants an extended time for moving to vacate it on this ground, and in that case the application is too late if not made within the statutory time.[97]

g. Judgments Obtained by Fraud. The inherent power of the courts to set aside a judgment obtained through fraud, deception, or collusion may be exercised after the expiration of the term,[98] and the statutes limiting the time within which applications to vacate judgments must be made do not cover the case of a fraudulent judgment, unless expressly made applicable thereto.[99] But if the statute applies, a motion made after the statutory time has run comes too late, and only a court of equity can then afford the requisite relief.[1]

3. Under Statutes. Where statutes authorize the courts to vacate or set aside judgments, on certain enumerated grounds, within a prescribed time from the rendition of the judgment, the power of the court over the judgment absolutely ceases upon the expiration of such time, and thereafter it has no discretion, or even jurisdiction, to grant relief by vacating or modifying the judgment.[2] Such statute extending the time limit is not retroactive.[4] The limitation is usually one of time only, and has no reference to the amount in controversy.[5] Such a statute does not, in respect to the causes enumerated, limit the power of the courts to set aside their own judgments at the same term;[6] but after the close of the term, the party's remedy must be sought under the statute, and is confined to the grounds therein mentioned,[7] although, if the application is based on a ground not named in the statute, but otherwise recognized as sufficient, it need not be made within the statutory time.[8] Even if the application is made within the statutory time, it will be regarded with disfavor, and may be refused, if there is unexplained delay in presenting it, or such unreasonable dilatoriness as amounts to laches.[9] Where the statutory time begins to run from "notice" of the judgment, this means actual knowledge of the judgment, however acquired, whether by written notice or otherwise;[10] and under a provision of this kind the judgment may be vacated if moved against within the time limited after notice of it, although more than that time has passed since the judgment was rendered.[11]

4. LACHES OF PARTY. A party who has knowledge of the judgment against him is required to exercise reasonable diligence in seeking to have it set aside, and his unexcused delay in making the application, amounting to laches, will justify the court in refusing the relief asked,[12] especially where the vacating of the costs are not taxed, and are finally waived by plaintiff, will not prevent the running of the year within which application to set aside the judgment by default must be made.

the judgment would work unusual hardship to the opposing party,[13] or where rights of innocent third persons have intervened.[14] But however great the lapse of time laches is not imputable to a party who had no knowledge of the judgment against him; it is only required of him to be diligent in seeking relief after he has notice of it.[15] And lapse of time will not affect the right to vacate a judgment on the ground that the court never had jurisdiction to render it.[16] While it is impossible to lay down a precise rule as to what will constitute reasonable diligence, or what amounts to laches, it may be stated as the general result of the authorities that a delay of more than a very few months will be fatal to the application.[17] Where a judgment is irregularly entered against a person under a legal

18. Six years after the removal of the disability is too long a time to wait. Kemp v. Cook, 18 Md. 130, 79 Am. Dec. 681; Becker v. Bochus, 5 Redf. Surr. (N. Y.) 488. Two years is a sufficiently liberal time to allow to a party in this situation. Barnes v. Gill, 13 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 169. But it is immaterial how long after the rendition of the judgment the motion may be made, if it is presented with reasonable promptness after the disability is removed. Thus a petition to vacate a probate decree was entertained twenty-two years after its entry, where the moving party had been during the whole of that time under the disability of coverture. Fitzsimmons v. Johnson, 90 Tenn. 416, 17 S. W. 100.

applying for the vacation of a judgment, the moving party, to bring himself within its terms, must not only file his motion or petition within the prescribed time, but also issue or serve such process or notice as may be necessary to bring the opposite party into court,[19] and present his case in a condition to be heard within the limited time.[20] But when this has been done in due season, the petition may be amended, or a new one substituted, after the expiration of the time,[21] or new parties added,[22] or the application continued for further hearing.[23] And if the motion was made within the limited time, it is competent for the court to act on it and grant the relief demanded, although the time has expired before the decision.[24]

E. Grounds For Opening or Vacating — 1. In General. A motion to open or vacate a judgment is addressed to the equitable powers of the court,[25] and should be granted only upon a showing of one of the statutory grounds for such action,[26] or else that the enforcement of the judgment would be unjust, oppressive, or inequitable,[27] and not for the mere convenience of the moving party or to restore to him some right or advantage which he has forfeited,[28] nor in any case where the relief to which he is entitled can more appropriately be awarded in some other action or proceeding,[29] and never where it appears that on a new trial or hearing the same judgment would be rendered.[30]

Misconduct of judge.— A judgment may be vacated where entered by the judge corruptly; but mere harshness to the one party and an appearance of favoring the other, where no actual injustice is done, is no such misconduct as would justify setting aside the judgment. Newton v. Joslin, 30 Fed. 891.

28. A judgment should not be set aside merely to allow a change of venue (Elliston v. Commonwealth Bank, 3 Dana (Ky.) 99); or to allow an appeal, the right of appeal from the judgment as originally rendered being barred by lapse of time (Memphis, etc., R. Co. v. Johnson, 16 Lea (Tenn.) 387); or to allow a trial on the merits, judgment having been taken by default, when the conduct of plaintiff has been fair, and the proceedings regular, and no circumstances of hardship or injustice prevented the making of a defense (Murat v. Boulton, 13 N. J. L. 304).

Alleged disagreeemnt of judges.— A judgment rendered in open court, without any expression of dissent from any of the judges, will not be set aside on a motion based on the allegation that there was an equal division of opinion among the members of the bench at their consultations. In such case it is not competent to inquire what

2. Invalidity of Judgment. A judgment which appears on the face of the record to be absolutely void, and therefore a mere nullity, may be vacated on motion by the court which rendered it at any time.[31] This action may be taken not only where there was a want of jurisdiction of the person of defendant, but also where the judgment is outside of the issues and on a matter not submitted for decision,[32] and where the judgment is vitiated by the fact that the trial judge was disqualified to act, in consequence of his consanguinity with one of the parties.[33]

3. Jurisdictional Defects — a. Want of, or Irregularity in, Process, Service, or Notice. It is good ground for vacating or opening a judgment that defendant had no notice of the action, either because of a failure to serve him with process, or because the process or service was fatally irregular or defective.[34] And this notice of the commencement of the action[40] and refrained from appearing and defending in the expectation that he could overturn the judgment in consequence of such error or defect,[41] or where his objections to the process or service are waived by his appearance.[42] On a motion for this purpose the recitals of the record in regard to questions of jurisdiction are presumptively correct, but not conclusive, and they may be impeached and contradicted,[43] and although an officer's return of service is usually conclusive between the parties, this is not so on a motion to open or vacate the judgment; it may be traversed and the judgment set aside if the return is shown to have been false.[44] But when a party has once been properly served with proper process, he is in court for every purpose connected with the action, and is bound at his peril to inform himself of the various successive steps in the proceedings, and cannot have the judgment vacated for the failure to notify him of some intermediate action in the case.[45]

b. Judgment on Constructive Service. New York.— The modern doctrine in this state is that relief against a judgment rendered against one not served with process, on the unauthorized appearance of an attorney in his name, may be sought and obtained by motion in the case in which such appearance was entered; that if, at the time of such motion, the attorney who entered the appearance is insolvent, it is no reason for denying the motion that at the time the judgment was given the attorney was able to respond in damages; that it rests in the discretion of the court, according to the cir-

acquiescing in it or failing to object, with full knowledge.[53] And one of two joint defendants under similar circumstances may have the judgment vacated in so far as it relates to or affects him.[54] But the party moving for such relief must assume the burden of proving that the attorney had no authority to act for him,[55] and establish the fact by evidence which fully negatives any such authority,[56] especially where innocent third persons have acquired rights under the judgment or decree sought to be set aside.[57]

4. FRAUD AND COLLUSION — a. In General. A judgment obtained by fraud or collusion may be vacated or set aside,[58] courts of record possessing an inherent cumstances of the particular case, either to vacate the judgment entirely or to allow it to stand as security, with leave to defendant to come in and defend; but that, if defendant was a non-resident and was not served, he is entitled to have the judgment set aside absolutely. common-law power in this behalf, which is not dependent upon legislation,[59] although in some states its exercise is specifically regulated by statute.[60] Relief in cases of this kind is generally granted on motion of the party defrauded;[61] but in certain states after the end of the term he must proceed by bill in equity or by an independent action at law.[62] Some of the decisions limit the authority to set aside judgments for this cause to cases where the fraud complained of was practised in the very act of obtaining the judgment;[63] but more generally it is held that a judgment should be vacated for fraud or deceit practised by one party upon the other, in regard to the cause of action,[64] or for misrepresentations or

Plaintiff having no right to sue.— Where A sues for the foreclosure of a mortgage which he had already assigned to B, the judgment may be set aside for fraud. Marshall v. McGee, 33 Hun (N. Y.) 354.

Violation of agreement as to costs.— A party is not entitled to the vacation of a judgment for costs entered on motion, at the hearing of which he did not appear, merely because the judgment fails to conform to an agreed division of costs, in the absence of actual fraud. Note obtained by fraud.— A judgment may be vacated where defendant was tricked into signing a judgment note, supposing it to be a simple promissory note, or was secretly made to assume obligations toward third persons which he had no intention of incurring. Anderson v. Field, 6 Ill. App. 307; United Security L. Ins., etc., Co. v. Ott, (N. J. Ch. 1893) 26 Atl. 923. But defendant's unsupported testimony that the note was procured from him by fraud will not justify its vacation, in the face of his previous written admission of its validity and the fact that the person who obtained it vouches for its validity. Deering Har-

tricks practised upon defendant to keep him away from the trial or to prevent him from claiming his rights in the premises or setting up an available defense.[65] Fraud practised upon the court is always ground for vacating the judgment, as where the court is deceived or misled as to material circumstances, or its process is abused, resulting in the rendition of a judgment which would not have been given if the whole conduct of the case had been fair.[66] A judgment may also be set aside for misconduct of an attorney or other officer, amounting to constructive

Where a partner wrongfully gives a firm-note for a private debt a judgment based on such note will be set aside. Adams v. James L. Leeds Co., 189 Pa. St. 544, 42 Atl. 195.

Mistake.— A mistake of an administrator in supposing his decedent to have been a surety on a bond, and so suffering a judgment on the bond, whereas he was only a witness, is no ground for vacating the judgment, where there was no fraud practised, and the mistake arose from the administrator's ignorance of the foreign language in which the bond was written. Fackler v. Bavarian Relief Soc., 8 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 56, 5 Cinc. L. Bul. 353.

fraud, although there was no actual intention to cheat or mislead,[67] or for fraudulent collusion between some of the parties to the action, or between the counsel in the case, working injury to the just rights of the others.[68] But a judgment or decree will not be vacated on a mere suspicion or presumption of fraud; there must be clear and strong evidence.[69] The right to have a judgment opened on this ground may be waived by the party injured, or he may be estopped by his subsequent conduct to apply for such relief.[70]

b. Taking Judgment Contrary to Agreement. Where there was an agreement between the parties that the case should be continued, or that defendant's time to answer should be extended, or that the action should be dismissed as the result of a compromise or settlement, or a promise of plaintiff that he would not press the case to judgment, in violation of which plaintiff, without notice to defendant, enters a default, or secures a judgment against the latter in his absence, it is good ground for vacating the judgment.[71] But the agreement or

Irregularities before trial.— A judgment by default, taken at the return-term, when the declaration has not been filed at the issuance of the writ, will be set aside. Nelson v. Rogers, 41 Miss. 635. And where plaintiff's attorney served a declaration without indorsing his place of residence thereon, as required by a rule of court, a judgment was set aside. Watkins v. Stevens, 3 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 28. But this action will not be taken because of the failure of plaintiff to furnish security for costs (Lytle v. Fenn, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,651, 3 McLean 411), or to pay the jury fee before entering up judgment (Heisterhagen v. Garland, 10 Mo. 66). Nor will a judgment be set aside, in a case where no affidavit of defense was filed, because the instrument in suit, a copy of which was filed, was not such as entitled the party to judgment (Philadelphia Sav. Inst. v. Smith, 10 Pa. St. 13), or because defendant was proceeded against as a non-resident, although his absence from the state was merely temporary (Smothers v. Meridian Fertilizer Factory, 137 Ala. 166, 33 So. 898).

Irregularities at trial.— A judgment may be vacated where it is clear that the issues submitted to the jury were not the issues made by the pleadings (Yannes v. Brandtmaier, 7 Kulp (Pa.) 517), or where it was rendered on issue joined without any notice of trial or appearance at the trial (People v. Bacon, 18 Mich. 247; Ashcraft v. Powers, 22 Wash. 440, 61 Pac. 161); but not on the mere ground that a deposition was used without proper notice of its taking (Hill v. Bowyer, 18 Gratt. (Va.) 364), or because defendant, who had moved to strike out the verdict, was not given an opportunity to amend the motion and make it a motion for a new trial (Chappell v. Real-Estate Pooling Co., 91 Md. 754, 46 Atl. 982), or because the judge was absent from the bench while part of the testimony was being taken, there being no dispute as to what the testimony was (Crook v. Hamlin, 140 N. Y. 297, 35 N. E. 499), or because the case was tried by the judge instead of by a jury, without the consent of parties thereto (Henry v. Hill, 84 Ga. 283, 10 S. E. 742; White v. Morris, 107 N. C. 92, 12 S. E. 80. But compare Benton v. Lindell, 10 Mo. 557; Cowles v. Hayes, 69 N. C. 406).

Irregularities in taking judgment.— A judgment entered on a declaration reciting a bond and warrant of attorney to confess judgment, but without any appearance for defendant or formal confession of judgment, will be set aside. Lytle v. Colts, 27 Pa. St. 193. And see Knox County Bank v. Doty, 9 Ohio St. 505, 75 Am. Dec. 479. This will be done where a default was entered without applying to the court (Rosevelt v. Giles, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 166), or where a rule for judgment for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense

sion,[78] or amounts to no more than a mere lack of strict technical form,[79] or is of such a character as to be curable by amendment,[80] or where it may be deemed cured or waived by failure to object in due season,[81] or where the fault complained of is not shown to be prejudicial or dangerous to any substantial right or interest of the party.[82] And in some states it is held that a judgment cannot be vacated for this cause unless the irregularity appears on the face of the record,[83] at least was made absolute through the failure of the court to notice the filing of a supplemental affidavit which had been allowed (Com. v. Krause, 23 Pa. Co. Ct. 511). But where, in an action for conversion, judgment on default was entered for damages by the clerk, it will not be set aside merely because there was no proper assessment of the damages, where the amount so entered by the clerk was right. Hersey v. Walsh, 38 Minn. 521, 38 N. W. 613, 8 Am. St. Rep. 689.

Want of findings or decision.— It is proper to vacate a judgment entered where no findings of fact or law were made or filed by the court, as required by law, and findings were not waived (Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Crampton, 63 Cal. 537; Hunt v. Patterson, 38 Mich. 95; Prondzinski v. Garbutt, 9 N. D. 239, 83 N. W. 23), or where special findings require the entry of a judgment thereon notwithstanding the general verdict, but judgment is wrongly entered on the general verdict (Seeds v. American Bridge Co., 68 Kan. 522, 75 Pac. 480), or where there is an inconsistency between the findings of fact and the conclusions of law (Moore v. Richardson, 5 S. C. 142). But in Minnesota it is held that the omission to file findings may be supplied by a nunc pro tunc order, and is not cause for vacating the judgment. Swanstrom v. Marvin, 38 Minn. 359, 37 N. W. 455. And in New York the remedy of a party complaining of such omission is by appeal, not by motion to set aside the judgment. People v. Church, 2 Lans. (N. Y.) 459; People v. Albany, etc., R. Co., 57 Barb. (N. Y.) 204. A judgment may be vacated where the judge neglects to make and file a formal written decision of the cause, as required by the statute. Thomas v. Tanner, 14 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 426; Garr v. Spaulding, 2 N. D. 414. 51 N. W. 867. Compare Hupfel v. Schœmig, 34 N. Y. Super. Ct. 476; Bullard v. Harris, 21 N. Y. Suppl. 9.

Irregularities in form of judgment.— Mere informality or irregularity in the entry of the judgment, not constituting error of law, or a defect necessarily fatal to its validity, will not be ground for setting it aside. Jones v. Hart, 60 Mo. 351; Bulkley v. Smith, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 643; Ramsburg v. Kline, 96 Va. 465, 31 S. E. 608.

Allowing answer after default.— Where the court, after a default judgment, erroneously allows defendant to file an answer at the second term, all subsequent proceedings are nugatory, and a judgment of nonsuit rendered against plaintiff should therefore be vacated. Cauley v. Wadley Lumber Co., 119 Ga. 648, 46 S. E. 852.

If any portion of a judgment is regular and valid, it will not be set aside as irregular on a motion to set aside the entire judgment. Challiss v. Headley, 9 Kan. 684. And see Mailhouse v. Inloes, 18 Md. 328.

78. Acklen v. Fink, 95 Md. 655, 53 Atl. 423; Dufur v. Ashland County, 88 Wis. 574, 60 N. W. 829.

Illustrations.— A judgment will not be vacated because no judgment-roll had been made up or filed before the issuance of execution (Lathrop v. Snyder, 17 Wis. 110), or because the judgment-roll omits recitals which may be supplied by intendment from the judgment itself (Whitney v. Daggett, 108 Cal. 232, 41 Pac. 471), or because it does not contain all the proper papers (Breckinridge Co. v. Perkins, 14 N. Y. App. Div. 629, 43 N. Y. Suppl. 800).

Designating party entitled to recover.— A judgment for a sum of money should not be set aside by reason of its omitting to state that it is for plaintiff and against defendant, where the declaration duly states the cause of action and the parties. Adams v. Walker, 59 Ga. 506.

where the application is made after the end of the term at which judgment was rendered.[84]

b. Unauthorized or Premature Entry. A judgment may be set aside where it is shown to have been entered by the clerk without any authority therefor, whether his entry thereof was the result of mistake, inadvertence, or wrongful intent;[85] and the same is true where the entry was ordered by the court improvidently or under a mistake.[86] A similar rule obtains where the entry of judgment was premature, either because made before the return-day or the day fixed by law for entering judgments,[87] or before the time for answering had expired,[88] or while there was an answer or demurrer on file and not disposed of,[89] or because,

Ga. 640, 50 S. E. 483, holding that in proceeding by petition, with rule nisi or process and service on necessary parties, the courts of the state may exercise the jurisdiction which obtained at common law to set aside judgments for irregularities not appearing on the face of the record.

6. ERROR IN JUDGMENT — a. In General. After the term at which a judgment was rendered, it cannot be vacated or set aside because erroneous in matter of law.[91] Thus a motion for this purpose cannot be based on the reception of incompetent evidence or the alleged insufficiency of the evidence to support the judgment.[92] But mistake of fact or misinformation as to the status of the case or the facts in controversy, inducing the court to render a judgment which it would not have given if fully and correctly informed, will be ground for setting the judgment aside.[93]

During the term it is within the power of the court to recall or set aside a judgment, not only where it was inadvertently or improvidently entered, but also in cases where the court is satisfied that its rulings or decisions on which the judgment rested were erroneous as a matter of law. Conforming to direction of appellate court. — A trial court, being satisfied that its order for the distribution of a fund is not in accordance with the direction of the supreme court relative thereto, may vacate the order, to the end that the direction may be carried out. b. Error in Amount of Judgment. A judgment may be vacated when rendered for an amount in excess of that claimed in the writ or declaration,[94] or where it includes an unauthorized allowance of damages in addition to the amount fixed by the jury,[95] unless the fault can be cured by reducing or remitting the excess,[96] or unless the excess is very trifling.[97] But this cannot generally be done on account of an erroneous computation of the amount of damages or interest,[98] or on an allegation that the amount of the judgment is greater than the facts of the case will warrant.[99]

c. Erroneous Taxation of Costs. A judgment should not be set aside for irregularity in the taxing of costs, or error in the amount as taxed, the remedy being by motion to correct the judgment by reducing or otherwise changing the taxed costs.[1]

7. Defects and Objections as to Parties — a. In General. A judgment may be vacated for non-joinder of a necessary party,[2] or where it was rendered on a joint contract against only a part of defendants,[3] or where it includes defendants who were never made parties to the suit,[4] or where it appears that the real party in interest has not been joined.[5] But a judgment will not be set aside on account of the misnomer of a party, at least where it did not mislead, and is not calculated to work substantial injury.[6] Nor will a judgment be set aside because of a technical objection, not appearing on the face of the record, to plaintiff's capacity to sue.[7]

b. Persons Under Disabilities. Coverture,[8] infancy,[9] and insanity[10] have been held sufficient grounds for setting aside a judgment improperly rendered. A judgment entered on a judgment-note will not be opened on a petition by defendant alleging that if he signed the note it was when he was drunk, the indebtedness not being denied.[11] The entry of a judgment against a person under legal disability is not an "irregularity," within the meaning of a statute authorizing judgments to be vacated for that cause, but an error of fact, and therefore the statute does not affect the power of the court to set aside such a judgment on motion.[12]

c. Death of Party. It is competent and proper for the court to set aside a judgment which was rendered after the death of a party.[13]

8. Matters Available in Defense — a. In General. A proceeding to vacate or set aside a judgment cannot be sustained on any grounds which might have been pleaded in defense to the action, and could have been so pleaded with proper care and diligence.[14] This includes the defense of a counter-claim or set-off

Usury.— In Pennsylvania a judgment may be opened to let defendant in to defend on the ground of usury in the contract on which it was founded (Walter v. Breisch, 86 Pa. (Pa.) 378), or the judgment creditor will be required to release or remit the excess of interest (Scovel v. Hunter, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 531), or if usurious interest has been paid on a judgment note after the entry of a judgment upon it, the payment will be considered as an equitable payment on the judgment itself, and proper relief can be given to the debtor without opening the judgment (Shafer's Appeal, 99 Pa. St. 246). It seems that a similar rule obtains in Illinois. Fleming v. Jencks, 22 Ill. 475. But compare Lucas v. Spencer, 27 Ill. 15. But in other states a judgment will not be set aside on the ground of usury, where there is no showing that defendant was prevented from setting up the usury in the original action. In Illinois it is provided by statute that all judgments, mortgages, bonds, etc., given or executed for money won at gaming shall be void and may be vacated or set aside. Rev. St. c. 38, § 135. This makes it immaterial that the defense of illegality of the consideration might have been pleaded in the original action; and the statute applies not only to judgments entered on confession, but also to those rendered in a contested suit. Grubey v. White, 23 Ill. App. 600.

were equally guilty in participating in an immoral or unlawful contract, the courts will give no relief after the recovery of a judgment thereon, but will leave them where they stand.[19]

c. Want or Failure of Consideration. The failure, want, or inadequacy of the consideration for the contract or undertaking on which a judgment is founded is not a ground for vacating a judgment,[20] unless there are circumstances of fraud or great oppression in the case,[21] or where the judgment attacked was rendered on an earlier judgment, recovered in another court or another jurisdiction, which earlier judgment has since been reversed or vacated.[22]

9. Defects and Objections as to Pleadings. A judgment will not be set aside on account of defects or insufficiency in the pleadings,[23] especially where the alleged fault was amendable[24] or has been waived by joining issue and going to trial,[25] although it seems a judgment may be vacated if the declaration or complaint states no cause of action, or contains no averments showing liability on the part of defendant.[26]

10. Newly Discovered Evidence. A judgment may be vacated or set aside where new evidence is discovered or new facts occur, after the judgment, or too late to have been presented on the trial, which show that a different judgment should have been rendered, or that the judgment as it stands should not be enforced,[27] provided the party also shows that he was ignorant of such evidence

North Carolina.— The action of the trial court in setting aside a judgment for newly discovered evidence is discretionary and not subject to review. 11. DISOBEDIENCE OF ORDER OF COURT. Where plaintiff enters judgment in disobedience to an injunction forbidding the further prosecution of the action, or in disregard of a pending order for a new trial, the judgment will be set aside.[31]

12. STATUTORY GROUNDS FOR VACATING — a. Necessity For Excusing Default. A defendant seeking to be relieved against a judgment taken against him through his "mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect," or "unavoidable casualty or misfortune," or other statutory grounds, must show a good excuse for failing to defend himself at the proper time; it is not enough that he has a meritorious defense to the action; he must give a sufficient reason for the omission to plead it in due season.[32]

In Alabama it is provided by statute (Ala. Code, § 2407) that a judgment may be opened on the discovery of a written release of the claim sued on; but this does not apply where after judgment on a promissory note a paper is found showing that the consideration on which the note was supposed to be given had no existence at the time of its execution on account of previous payments. Davis v. McCampbell, 37 Ala. 609.

Impeachment of evidence already used.— Where plaintiff in a suit relied on an existing judgment, which was received in evidence without objection from defendant, and recovered a judgment, it cannot be set aside on the ground that the judgment so relied on was afterward set aside as fraudulent. Peeples v. Ulmer, 64 S. C. 496, 42 S. E. 429.

vacation of a judgment taken against a defendant by mistake,[33] provided he excuses the mistake and explains what it was and how it occurred.[34] But this applies only to mistakes of fact, not to mistakes of law.[35] And if the statute gives the right to open or vacate a judgment taken against a party through "his" mistake, no mistake made by any other person will justify this action,[36] although in the absence of such a restriction the mistake may be one made by plaintiff, whereby he fails to secure all he is entitled to,[37] or a mutual mistake or misunderstanding of the parties,[38] or a mistake of the court arising from misinformation or misunderstanding as to matters of fact,[39] or even the mistake of an entire stranger,

In North Dakota it has been held that to warrant the setting aside of a judgment by default on the ground of mistake under a statute in that state, the mistake must consist in something done in the case, either by the court or a party, which was not intended to be done. Mistake in the instrument sued on may furnish cause for setting the judgment aside; as where by mistake judgment was entered on a note never executed by the party charged. South Dakota.— That defendant was erroneously advised and honestly believed that the payment of certain delinquent taxes and of certain costs was essential to his right to make a defense or file an answer in a suit concerning land is no ground for setting aside a judgment by default against him, the mistake being one of law. Keenan v. Daniells, 1904) 99 N. Compare Walton v. Jones, 53 Ga. 91, holding that where an administrator, sued on a debt of his intestate, fails to plead plene administravit, under the belief that the default judgment taken against him will only bind property of the estate subsequently coming to his hands, the court in its discretion may open the judgment and permit him to plead as he should have done.

which affects the progress of the cause or the entry of judgment.[40] But a motion for relief on this ground will not be granted where the defense set up in the moving papers is entirely new, and not disclosed by the original pleadings,[41] and the motion has been denied where the judgment was rendered after a trial at which the moving party was present.[42]

(II) As to Cause of Action. A judgment will not generally be set aside on account of a mistake as to the identity of the suit or the cause of action, as where the party erroneously supposes the action is brought upon one claim or obligation, although it is really upon another,[43] unless there are strong circumstances to show that the mistake was natural and excusable and productive of decided injustice.[44] But a mistake as to the capacity in which the party is sued, as where he supposes the action to be against him in an official capacity, when he is really sued as an individual or vice versa may be ground for vacating the judgment,[45] and this is true of a mistake as to plaintiff's capacity or title to sue.[46]

(III) As to Time For Pleading or Trial — (A) In General. A party who makes an honest and excusable mistake as to the time when he is required to plead or answer, or as to the time of the trial, whereby he is prevented from making his defense in due season, may have judgment opened or set aside;[47] but not where the mistake was the result of his own heedlessness or lack of due attention.[48]

(B) Misinformation as to Time of Trial. A default judgment should be set aside where the absence of defendant and his counsel was caused by their reliance on a statement made officially by the judge of the court that the case could not be reached or would not be tried before a certain date, or that nothing further would be done without notifying counsel, notwithstanding which a default was taken,[49] or where they were similarly misinformed and misled by the clerk of the court,[50] or by the calendar or official list of cases set for trial,[51] or by counsel for plaintiff.[52] But some cases hold that even such official assurances will not relieve litigants or their counsel from the duty of exercising the utmost vigilance in watching the progress of their cases.[53]

(IV) As to Process. A person served with a summons must make sure that he understands what it is, by reading it or having it read to him; he cannot have a default set aside on the ground that he mistook it for a subpœna or for a notice in another suit,[54] unless he failed to receive a copy of the writ and was misled by the officer as to its purport,[55] or where the copy was so illegible that it could not be ascertained upon whom a notice of appearance should be served.[56]

(v) As to Employment of Counsel. A defendant cannot ordinarily procure the setting aside of a judgment against him, on the ground of his mistaken belief that he had retained an attorney to protect his interests; he must see to it that the attorney understands and accepts the retainer; otherwise his failure to pay personal attention to the case is inexcusable negligence.[57] But where the mistake was as to the employment of counsel by a person whom defendant justifiably relied on to attend to that matter as a co-defendant, or a business agent, it may furnish cause for vacating the judgment.[58]

(vi) As to Validity of Proceedings. A mistake as to the regularity of the proceedings is one of law, not of fact; and therefore a defendant cannot have a judgment set aside because he erroneously believed that the service of process upon him was illegal,[59] or that the proceedings were otherwise irregular or invalid.[60]

(vii) Resulting From Ignorance. The illiteracy of a defendant, or ignorance of the English language, of the course of judicial procedure, or of his rights and duties, will furnish no excuse for failing to defend the action, nor justify the vacation of the judgment, where he at least knew that he had been sued, and neglected to ask information or advice from others,[61] although it may be otherwise where such ignorance prevented him from discovering that legal proceedings had been taken against him until after the rendition of the judgment,[62] or where plaintiff has taken a fraudulent or deceitful advantage of his ignorance.[63]

c. Surprise. A judgment by default, obtained in such a manner as to constitute a legal surprise to defendant, may be set aside.[64] But this does not include surprise occasioned by a ruling or decision of the court,[65] the unexpected introduction or rejection of evidence at the trial,[66] or the calling of the case for trial before defendant thought it could possibly be reached.[67] The unanticipated transfer of the case to another court may constitute legal surprise,[68] and so may the taking of judgment contrary to an agreement to postpone the time for answering or for the trial,[69] or a mistake as to the employment of counsel,[70] or a misunderstanding among several counsel for defense as to who was charged with the duty of filing the answer.[71] There is no legal "surprise" where the judgment was given by consent of the party's attorney, and the contention is merely that he exceeded his authority.[72]

d. Excusable Neglect — (i) In General. Under the statutes in many states a party may be relieved against a judgment taken against him through his "excusable neglect," which means a lack of attention to the progress of his cause, or failure to attend the trial, which is excused or justified by the peculiar circumstances of the case.[73] Such negligence may be excusable where it is caused by his

On overruling demurrer.— Where defendant filed a demurrer and an answer, and the demurrer was overruled, and judgment given against him on the insufficiency of his answer, and he alleged surprise, because, in the absence of a motion for judgment on the pleadings, he had no expectation that the answer would be passed on, it was held that the judgment should be vacated. Indefinite statements.— Defendant cannot excuse a default by showing that he relied on statements in regard to the dismissal of the case, or the probable time of the trial, when they appear to have been vague, indefinite, or lacking in positiveness. Chambers such other person promised to do so or was chargeable with that duty,[78] or by a well founded belief that the case would not be reached for trial as quickly as it was in fact reached.[79]

(II) Diligence Required of Suitors. A party seeking relief against a judgment on the ground of his excusable negligence must clear himself of the imputation of want of due diligence; he cannot have relief if the taking of the judgment appears to have been due to his own carelessness, slothfulness, or indifference to his own rights.[80] Thus to put himself in a position where he can claim relief against an adverse judgment, he must, unless he means to try his own case, retain an attorney practising in the particular court,[81] and see that the attorney understands and accepts the retainer,[82] and in case his counsel dies, or withdraws or is discharged from the case, he must promptly engage another.[83] Further it is his duty to inform his counsel fully of the facts constituting his cause of action or defense,[84] and to be personally active in procuring witnesses, collecting evidence, and otherwise preparing for trial, the mere employment of counsel not being sufficient to excuse the party from giving the case his personal attention.[85] Also he must keep himself informed of the progress of the case, not relying upon such news as he can obtain from persons not bound to keep him advised,[86] and particularly, he must find out when his case is set down for trial or when it is likely to be reached in its order on the calendar,[87] and must be in attendance while the court is in session and there is a prospect of his case being called.[88]

e. Mistake, Negligence, or Misconduct of Counsel — (I) Mistake in General. A mistake of the party's counsel, as well as a mistake of his own, may be pleaded as excuse for a default and as a reason for opening the judgment, provided it was genuine and reasonable, and a mistake of fact rather than of law,[89] such as counsel's mistaking the case in which he was retained or becoming confused between several similar cases,[90] or his misunderstanding of the real facts of the case or the circumstances of the transaction out of which the suit arose,[91] or his erroneous impression that the action had been discontinued.[92]

(II) Mistake as to Time For Appearance or Trial. A judgment may be vacated or opened when it is shown that the failure to defend was due to a mistake or miscalculation of the party's attorney as to the time allowed him for pleading or taking some other step in the action,[93] as to the term of court at

(III) Mistake or Ignorance of Law. A party cannot be relieved from a judgment taken against him in consequence of the legal ignorance or mistake of his counsel, whether it concerns the rights or duties of the client, the legal effect of the facts in the case, or the rules of procedure.[98]

(IV) Erroneous Advice. It is generally held not to be good ground for setting aside a judgment that it was suffered by the party in consequence of receiving erroneous advice from his attorney as to the necessity of making a defense or as to the validity of his defense.[99]

It is no sufficient excuse that the attorney forgot on what day the term began, when the summons, which he duly received, showed the date (Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Flinn, 2 Ind. App. 55, 28 N. E. 201), nor that it was the usual, but not invariable, custom for the court not to try cases on the first day of the term, the particular case having been set for trial on that day (Wilson v. Scott, 50 Mo. App. 329), nor that the attorney erroneously supposed that the court met at half-past nine in the morning, whereas it convened at nine (Savage v. Dinkler, 12 Okla. 463, 72 Pac. 366).

negligence of the attorney consisted in his failure to file a plea or answer in due season,[2] but also where he failed to pursue and follow up the case with due care and watchfulness.[3] In a few states, however, the courts are indulgent in opening or setting aside judgments taken against a party in consequence of the negligence or inattention of his attorney, provided the party himself was not directly in fault.[4] Such relief has been granted on a showing that the attorney is insolvent and therefore unable to make good his fault by paying damages.[5] The negligence of an attorney may be excusable, when attributable to an honest mistake, an accident, or any cause which is not incompatible with proper diligence on his part, and in these circumstances it will be proper to set aside or open the judgment taken in consequence thereof.[6] But in any case the client himself must be free from fault; negligence of his counsel is not excusable negligence, for which a judgment will be set aside, if the client wholly neglected the case and took no interest in its issue.[7] And if he would excuse himself on this ground, he must also show that he employed counsel practising habitually in the particular court, or who specially agreed to attend to the case.[8] When an attorney is employed simply to retain counsel to appear at another place, he is a mere agent, and his negligence is imputable to his client,[9] and likewise the negligence of any person who is delegated or employed by the attorney to attend to the case is imputable to the attorney himself, and will not be excusable in the one unless it would have been in the other.[10]

(VI) Misconduct of Attorney. A judgment will be set aside where it was obtained through the fraudulent or dishonest conduct of defendant's attorney, as where he deceives and misleads his client,[11] enters into a collusive arrangement with the opposing counsel,[12] corruptly sells out his client's interests,[13] or even for such constructive fraud as is implied in his attempting to act for both parties,[14] or secretly withdrawing from the case and leaving it undefended, from hostility to his client.[15] But where a party is actually represented by counsel in court, fully prepared to try the cause, and such counsel refuses to proceed for the sole reason that he thinks the justice presiding may decide against him, the judgment thus rendered cannot be vacated as though taken by default, and no reason can be suggested for disturbing it which could not be urged with equal force to vacate a judgment alleged to have resulted from the incompetence of the attorney conducting the trial.[16]

(VII) Misunderstanding of Counsel. Where a defense is not interposed, and judgment is consequently suffered, through a genuine and accidental misunderstanding between the party and his counsel, the judgment may be set aside;[17] but not where either is chargeable with negligence or carelessness, without which the misunderstanding would not have arisen.[18] The rule is similar where the misunderstanding was between different counsel retained on the same side or between the attorneys for the opposing parties, the courts holding this sufficient ground for vacating the judgment.[19] In such case, however, in order that the judgment may be set aside, it is necessary that, the facts shall be fully explained and that the mistake shall be shown to be excusable.[20]

f. Casualty or Misfortune — (I) In General. Where statutes authorize the vacation of judgments on account of "unavoidable casualty or misfortune,"[21] they mean an accident or mishap arising from causes beyond the party's control, and which he could not have guarded against in the exercise of due foresight and diligence.[22]

(II) Absence of Party From State. Absence of defendant from the state or beyond seas at the time of the trial will be cause for setting aside the judgment if it is shown that he could not have been present and that his absence operated to his prejudice,[23] provided he is not chargeable with negligence or lack of proper attention to his case.[24]

(III) Absence of Party From Trial. The mere fact that a judgment was rendered in the absence of defendant is no cause for setting it aside, where his absence is not excused or shown to have been unavoidable.[25] But it is a good

Failure to receive notice.— A judgment should be vacated on this ground where it appears that the summons was left at defendant's residence while he and all his family were absent on a vacation, and he had no knowledge of the suit until after judgment (Schnitzler v. Wichita Fourth Nat. Bank, 1 Kan. App. 674, 42 Pac. 496. But compare Howard v. Abbey, 2 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 64, 2 West. L. (iv) Absence of Counsel. The mere absence of one's attorney at the time of the trial is no cause for setting aside a judgment,[28] unless it is shown that he could have gone to trial, if present, or presented good grounds for a continuance,[29] and that injustice and injury have resulted to the client in consequence,[30] or that the attorney's absence was excusable or unavoidable, it being considered a sufficient excuse that he was engaged at the time in trying a case in another court,[31] or was in attendance upon another court as a witness,[32] or was suddenly called

Illustrations.— It is a sufficient excuse for his absence that defendant was compelled to attend before a grand jury and could not be released until after his own case was disposed of (Frazier v. Bishop, 29 Mo. 447), that he was in compulsory attendance before another court (Tullis v. Scott, 38 Tex. 537. Compare Kitson v. Blake, 14 N. J. L. 288. And see Bonnell v. Rome, etc., R. Co., 12 Hun (N. Y.) 218).

It is not a sufficient excuse for his absence from the trial that defendant was a milkman, delivering milk every day in a city, and had no one to attend to his duties in his absence (Landa v. McGehee, (Tex. 1892) 19 S. W. 516), or that he was a candidate for office and was busy on the day of the trial in looking after the returns (McGuire v. Drew, 83 Cal. 225, 23 Pac. 312).

Diligence and foresight required.— An excuse of this kind will not be accepted as sufficient if it appears that the party failed to exercise a reasonable degree of prudence in guarding against the obstacles which might delay him, or of effort to overcome them. Thus he will not be relieved from the judgment where he simply failed to leave home in time to reach the court before the trial (Bradford v. Coit, 77 N. C. 72), where he made a mistake as to the distance he would have to travel (Almy v. Hess, 2 Utah 223), where he knew that the roads were in bad condition, but did not allow for the probable delay arising therefrom (Mehnert v. Thieme, 15 Kan. 368), where a storm kept him at home for one day, but there were three other days during which he could have gone to the court (Malek v. Kodad, 92 Iowa 763, 60 N. away by the illness or death of a near relative,[33] or, being out of town, was unexpectedly detained,[34] or even that the mere multiplicity and pressure of his professional engagements prevented him from giving attention to the case.[35] But some cases take a stricter view of the attorney's obligations, and hold that if he has cases coming on in different courts he must obtain leave of absence from one court or the other, and arrange that neither case shall be proceeded with in his absence,[36] that if he is likely to be detained elsewhere he must apply for a continuance or extension of time,[37] that if he is detained on his way to the place of trial he should telegraph to the judge and ask to have the case held,[38] and that it is no excuse for his voluntary absence that he believed the case would not be reached before his return.[39] And a majority of the decisions, particularly the more recent ones, do not favor accepting the excuse that the attorney was detained elsewhere by important business, even when it was of a public character, such as his attendance upon the legislature, of which he was a member.[40]

(v) Sickness of Party or Relative. If a party is prevented by sickness from preparing his case or attending the trial, and the circumstances are such that his personal attention and presence are necessary to the due protection of his rights, the judgment against him may be set aside on the ground of "casualty or misfortune" or of "excusable neglect."[41] But the illness of a member of his

(VI) Sickness of Counsel or Relative. The illness of defendant's counsel, so severe as to prevent him from appearing and trying the case, is good ground for vacating the judgment, provided defendant did not know of it in time to retain other counsel or was otherwise prevented from doing so.[43] And the same rule applies in case of the illness of a member of the attorney's family, withdrawing his attention from all professional business, and leaving the client without legal aid and without the opportunity to retain other counsel.[44]

F. Proceedings For Relief — 1. Nature and Form of Proceedings. The form of proceeding for relief against a judgment by having it opened, vacated, or set aside varies in the different states. In some the writ of audita querela is still in use for this purpose,[45] in others such relief may be granted on writ of error coram nobis,[46] and in others a bill of review is an appropriate remedy.[47] But in a direct proceeding for the purpose, not a mere incident to the progress of the cause or to the execution of the judgment, and one which is appropriate to the relief sought.[51] A statutory form of proceeding for this purpose is not the exclusive remedy, unless clearly so intended, but is cumulative to the common-law right to move in proper time and form for the setting aside of the judgment.[52] But if it is attempted to adopt and follow the statutory method, the provisions of the statute must be complied with, in order to authorize the court to act.[53]

Washington.— Under the statutes in this state, a proceeding to open or set aside a judgment may in certain cases be by motion in the cause, but in others must be by peti-

2. Vacation of Judgment on Court's Own Motion. During the term at which a judgment was rendered, the court has power on its own motion to vacate the same for irregularity or because it was improvidently or inadvertently entered,[54] and this may be done even after the term if the judgment was void on its face.[55]

3. Indirect Vacation of Judgment. A judgment may be practically vacated, although not in terms set aside, by the taking of subsequent proceedings in the same action which are inconsistent with the judgment continuing in force,[56] as by the entry of a second judgment in the case, different from the first,[57] or by an order granting a new trial,[58] or by the reversal of the judgment on appeal.[59]

4. APPLICATION FOR VACATION — a. Form and Requisites. An application to vacate or open a judgment, whether in the form of a petition or motion, must be in writing;[60] but it is not required to be in any particular form unless one is prescribed by statute,[61] and even in that case the motion may be entertained, although it is not strictly in conformity with the statute, trifling irregularities not being sufficient to oust the jurisdiction of the court.[62] But the application should show compliance with any preliminary requisites,[63] describe the judgment or portion of it sought to be vacated,[64] and contain an appropriate demand of relief.[65] In some jurisdictions leave of court to file the motion must be obtained.[66]

b. Sufficiency of Allegations. A motion or petition to vacate a judgment must state the nature of the suit in which it was entered,[67] and show that the petitioner has such an interest in the judgment as entitles him to apply for its vacation.[68] Further the application must show the existence of one of the statutory causes for setting aside a judgment, or facts sufficient to warrant the court in taking such action in the exercise of its general jurisdiction,[69] and it is not

Failure to move for new trial.— A motion to set aside a judgment should show why the party did not seasonably move for a new trial, if the same matters would have been available. Blood v. Beadle, 65 Ala. 103; Heine v. Treadwell, 72 Cal. 217, 13 Pac. 503.

Failure to move at same term.— Where the motion is made at a term subsequent to that at which the judgment was rendered, it must be shown that there was a good reason or excuse for not moving at the same term. Lindsley v. Sparks, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 56, 48 S. W. 204; Rodriguez v. Espinosa, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 25 S. W. 669.

New evidence.— An application to set aside a judgment for newly discovered evidence ligence was excusable.[72] And the motion must show that he has a good and meritorious defense to the action, not merely by so alleging, but by setting forth fully the facts which constitute the proposed defense,[73] except in cases where the judgment is absolutely void, when no defense need be shown.[74]

5. Answer and Other Pleadings. Where a proceeding to vacate a judgment is begun by petition or complaint, it is the right of the judgment creditor to controvert its allegations by an answer, and the court cannot refuse to permit a proper answer to be filed.[75] The answer must raise an issue by direct and positive averments; if it fails to do so, the petition may be taken as confessed and the judgment set aside.[76] On the other hand the petition may be dismissed for failure to file a replication, if one would be required by the ordinary rules of pleading.[77]

6. Parties on Application. As a general rule all the parties to a judgment should be made parties to a proceeding to vacate or open it,[78] as well as those must state the means used to secure the evidence; it is not sufficient to state that every means had been used to find the witness. Turner v. Davis, 132 N. C. 187, 43 S. E. 637.

Joint defendants.— Where a judgment is invalid as against one defendant for lack of jurisdiction, and he moves to have it set aside as to him, the other defendant, who was properly served or appeared in the action, is not a necessary party. Durre v. Brown, 7 Ind. App. 127, 34 N. E. 577; Carlon v. Ruffner, 12 W. Va. 297. Although all defendants join in the petition to set the judgment aside, that is no reason for denying the motion in toto; it may be permitted to stand as to those served. Stewart v. Parsons, 5 N. D. 273, 65 N. W. 672. A defendant who has not answered, and who has not appeared on the argument of a motion to vacate the judg-

who may have acquired interests in the judgment, or under it, and therefore have an interest in maintaining it.[79] Where defendant in a pending case seeks to avoid an existing judgment on the ground that he was not duly served, and there is an entry of service purporting to have been made by a sheriff, he must traverse the return and make the officer a party to the proceeding.[80]

7. Notice of Application — a. In General. During the term at which a judgment was rendered, it may be set aside for sufficient cause without notice to the party affected.[81] But after the term this action cannot be taken except upon notice to the party or parties interested in maintaining the judgment,[82] which ment, will not be permitted to join in the motion after its submission for decision. Havemeyer v. Brooklyn Sugar Refining Co., 13 N. Y. Suppl. 873, 26 Abb. N. Cas. 157.

Misnomer.— One petitioning for the vacation of a judgment must appear to be the same person against whom it was rendered; a motion by "Samuel" to vacate a judgment against "Simon" will not be granted, although the summons was served on "Samuel." Upham v. Cohn, 14 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 27.

notice must be in writing,[83] sufficiently full and explicit to advise the party of the nature of the proceeding, the judgment to be affected, and the grounds on which the motion will be based,[84] and duly and regularly served,[85] unless service is waived by appearance or otherwise.[86]

b. Service on Party's Attorney. Where an attorney has appeared for a party in an action and has prosecuted it to judgment, he remains attorney for that party until he has secured a judgment not liable to vacation for any cause provided by statute or established practice, and hence a motion to vacate the judgment may properly be served on the attorney of record for plaintiff.[87]

8. Affidavits and Evidence — a. Affidavits in Support of Motion — (i) In General. A petition or motion to vacate a judgment should be verified or supported by an affidavit as to the facts set forth,[88] which should regularly be made by the party himself, but may be made by his attorney, if the latter speaks from personal knowledge and shows a sufficient reason why he makes the affidavit instead of his client.[89] A copy of the affidavit should be served on the opposite party or his counsel.[90]

(II) Requisites and Sufficiency. An affidavit in support of a motion to vacate a judgment should state facts positively and directly; it is not sufficient to allege them on information and belief.[91] It should show the existence and nature of the judgment sought to be set aside,[92] and state the grounds on which relief is asked, not inferentially but directly, and not generally but specifically and in detail,[93] and show that the applicant has not been negligent or failed in the exercise of due diligence,[94] and if it is necessary to excuse his default or show why the action was not defended, this must be done by a particular and detailed statement of the facts constituting his excuse,[95] the rule being that in all the particulars

tion is made by the applicant's attorney. Caperton v. Wanslow, 18 Tex. 125; Woodworth v. Coleman, 57 Vt. 368. But in Nebraska the petition need not be verified positively, but is sufficiently verified on belief. Anthony v. Karbach, 64 Nebr. 509, 90 N. W. 243, 97 Am. St. Rep. 662.

Adding verification by amendment.—Where the statute requires a petition verified by affidavit, the court is not deprived of jurisdiction by the fact that the petition is not so verified, but an amendment may be allowed, so as to supply the omission. Rush v. Rush, 46 Iowa 648, 26 Am. Rep. 179.

An affidavit used on a motion for a change of venue cannot be used as the foundation of a motion to set aside a judgment by default. Cutler v. Biggs, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 409.

Filing.— This affidavit is not required to be filed before the hearing on the motion is entered on. Jones v. Swepson, 94 N. C. 700. And see Whidby Land, etc., Co. v. Nye, 5 Wash. 301, 31 Pac. 752.

In Indiana the complaint or motion need not itself be verified, but it must be supported by an affidavit showing the facts. Newcome v. Wiggins, 78 Ind. 306; Hunter v. Francis, 56 Ind. 460.

In New York the statute does not require the city controller, on an application to open a judgment against the city obtained by fraud or collusion, to show by affidavit the ground of his belief of the existence of fraud. Sharp v. New York, 31 Barb. 572.

In Pennsylvania it has been held that an affidavit is not required to support a rule to strike off a judgment which appears on the face of the record to have been unlawfully and improvidently entered. Allen v. Krips, 119 Pa. St. 1, 12 Atl. 759.

of the motion is not discretionary with the court, but is demandable of right, as where there was no jurisdiction over defendant,[98] where a judgment was taken by default before defendant's time to answer had expired or after the case was at issue,[99] where the judgment was entered without authority, by mistake, or improvidently,[1] or where it was obtained by fraud.[2] Where such affidavit is necessary, its lack cannot generally be supplied by a pleading or any other paper.[3] As to the contents of the affidavit, it should set forth fully the facts constituting the proposed defense, a mere allegation that defendant has a meritorious defense not being sufficient,[4] and the facts must be stated positively and affirmatively, and not merely upon information and belief.[5] It has been held, however, that it is sufficient to set forth in the affidavit that defendant has fully and fairly stated the case to his counsel, and is advised by him, and believes that he has a full and meritorious defense to the action.[6] The affidavit should be made by the applicant

d. Counter-Affidavits. The party seeking to sustain a judgment, as against a motion to set it aside, may present for the consideration of the court affidavits in opposition to those of the moving party, in regard to the alleged grounds for vacating the judgment or the matters set up in excuse of defendant's failure to make his defense in due time,[14] provided such counter-affidavits set forth facts, and not merely matters of inference, conjecture, or belief;[15] but the affidavit of merits cannot be thus controverted. As it is only required to show a prima facie defense, and the court is not to inquire into its truth, counter-affidavits as to the facts of the defense are not admissible.[16]

Personal knowledge of judge.— A trial court, in setting aside a default judgment, may rest its action upon matters within its matters stated in the applicant's moving papers.[24] Although some cases show a reluctance to permit contradiction of the record,[25] it is generally held that the recitals of the record are only presumptively correct, and may be contradicted and overthrown by evidence of sufficient weight and clearness.[26]

(II) Weight and Sufficiency. According to the rule generally favored, the party seeking to have a judgment vacated or opened must establish the facts on which he relies by clear, strong, and satisfactory proof.[27] His own testimony alone

may answer this requirement, if not contradicted or impeached;[28] but the motion must fail if the affidavit of the applicant is squarely contradicted by that of the opposing party, and there is nothing else in evidence, so that the testimony is in equipoise.[29] If in addition to opposing affidavits one party or the other is corroborated by circumstances, admissions, or evidence drawn from the record, the decision will be in his favor.[30] In case of a decided and irreconcilable conflict in the evidence for and against the motion, the general rule is that the court must decide according to the fair preponderance of the evidence,[31] although

Opposing affidavits of unequal weight.— It is not considered that the opposing affidavits counterbalance each other where the one is direct and positive, while the other merely states the affiant's belief, opinion, or recollection, or charges matters by way of inference or implication. In Illinois it has been held that where the

in some states it is thought that in these circumstances the motion should be denied.[32] If the relief asked is accorded, it will be presumed, on review in an appellate court, that there was sufficient evidence to justify the order.[33]

9. Showing Meritorious Defense — a. Necessity. To obtain an order opening or vacating a judgment, the party applying therefor must allege and show to the court that he has a good and meritorious defense to the cause of action.[34] And in evidence on a motion to vacate a judgment by confession is conflicting, and the contested matter in doubt, the motion should be allowed. Brown v. Huber, 79 Ill. App. 109.

In Pennsylvania it has been held that a petition to open a judgment should not be granted unless there is more than oath against oath; but when there is more than this, and it comes to a question of the weight of the evidence, it is for the trial court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, to decide to which side the scales incline, and if it is in doubt on this question, or as to the credibility of the witnesses, it is always proper to open the judgment and let the issue be decided by a jury. some states, by force of statute, it is erroneous for the court to set aside a judgment, until it has first found and adjudged that there is a valid defense to the action.[35] There is, however, an exception to this rule in cases where the judgment attacked is void for want of jurisdiction,[36] and in certain other cases, as where judgment was obtained by fraud,[37] or where a judgment by default was rendered before defendant's time to plead had expired,[38] or was taken against a lunatic.[39] It is not necessary that the defense should go to the entire action; it is sufficient if it purports to defeat any substantial part of plaintiff's claim.[40] The court is not to try and decide upon the facts set up by way of defense, or to determine whether the defense will ultimately prevail;[41] but is only to inquire whether it is meritorious, interposed in good faith, and prima facie sufficient to defeat the action or some part thereof.[42] But the motion is properly denied if the court finds that the proposed answer is clearly frivolous,[43] or is so inadequate and immaterial that the result of a new trial would be nothing but the entry of the same judgment,[44] or is plainly untenable.[45] And it is not sufficient to allege in general terms that defendant has a good or meritorious defense to the action; the facts constituting the proposed defense must be set forth in detail, so that the court may judge whether or not it is meritorious and sufficient.[46]

b. Sufficiency of Defense. A judgment will not be opened or vacated if the defense set up by defendant, and which he proposes to plead, is not meritorious or is purely technical in its character or is dishonest or unconscionable.[47] Of such

In New Jersey it has been held that it is not necessary for defendant, seeking the opening of a judgment, to show that he is unquestionably entitled to a judgment in his own favor, but it is enough if he shows that he has a defense which is of such merit that the court may properly be asked to pass upon it. want of title in plaintiff to the property in suit,[65] or want of authority in an agent or trustee to make the contract or conveyance in suit,[66] or contributory negligence,[67] or a plea of res judicata.[68] A judgment will not be opened on the ground that defendant was incapacitated by habitual drunkenness to make the contract sued on, where no fraud or imposition is charged, and the evidence does not show that he was entirely incapable of making a contract.[69] Before a court will set aside a judgment rendered on an earlier judgment for a sum of money, it must be shown that the petitioner was not indebted to the judgment plaintiff; and the defense of nul tiel record is not sufficient.[70] A judgment entered upon a bond given to secure any indebtedness that might be found against the obligor by award of arbitrators will not be opened on the ground that it was given to compound a felony, where the evidence shows that there was no actual agreement not to prosecute, and that the obligor, although charged with a felony, did not actually commit it.[71]

10. Effect of Application on Status of Judgment. The filing of a motion or petition to vacate a judgment does not suspend its operation, or prevent the issue and execution of final process upon it.[72] On the contrary some cases hold that such action admits the regularity of the judgment and waives any objections to it on that score.[73]

G. Trial and Determination of Application — 1. Hearing and Decision. On a contested application to open or vacate a judgment, the court should hear both parties and examine thoroughly into all pertinent facts and circumstances,[74] and it is error to grant or dismiss the motion summarily or on an ex parte hearing,[75] unless the question at issue is one which can be determined from an inspection of the record or unless the facts are such as do not admit of dispute.[76] A motion of this kind is triable by the court,[77] although it is within the power of the court in a proper case to award an issue to be tried by a jury,[78] or to order a

Examining parties.— A motion to vacate a judgment, made by one of three defendants therein, on the ground that the appearance of the attorney was unauthorized, is properly denied, after the death of the attorney and of the co-defendant who retained him, where the moving party refuses to submit himself generally to the jurisdiction of the court, so that it is impossible to cross-examine him as to his knowledge and the authority from him to the attorney. reference,[79] or to itself proceed to take an accounting.[80] The inquiry will be limited to the grounds set up in support of the motion and in opposition to it, including questions of due diligence and the like, but not extending to a consideration of the merits of the original action.[81] The motion may be dismissed for want of jurisdiction if it appears that notice of it was not served on the party opposing,[82] or it may be withdrawn by the party presenting it.[83]

2. Relief Awarded — a. In General. On granting an application to set aside a judgment, it is not proper to enjoin its enforcement.[84] If taken by default it should be opened, and thereupon defendant should be allowed or required to plead within a reasonable time;[85] otherwise the cause should be set down for hearing or a new trial should be ordered, according to the situation,[86] unless justice can be done between the parties by amending or correcting the judgment, or reducing its amount, in which case the court will be warranted in entering a new judgment in the proper form.[87] Opening a judgment, it will be observed, is a different thing from vacating it; the former action merely lets in a defense to the suit, while the latter annuls the judgment;[88] and generally a judgment cannot be stricken off unless it is entirely null and void.[89] But either on opening or vacating the judgment, the relief granted may also include the setting aside of an execution or a sale thereunder.[90]

b. Partial Vacation of Judgment. A court having power to vacate a judgment entirely may grant less relief by vacating it in part only, where justice so

3. ORDER AND FINDINGS. An order for the opening or vacation of a judgment should show clearly what disposition was made of the judgment and that the action purporting to have been taken was by the authority of the court.[96] In addition to this it is sometimes also required that the court should find the order and state the facts on which it is based,[97] or recite the grounds for granting the

In Pennsylvania it has been held that where a judgment is set aside after the term at which it was entered, it is better that the formal entry should be, "Judgment vacated, verdict set aside, and new trial granted," instead of merely, "Rule absolute for new trial," which does not at once show all that has been done. motion,[98] or make a finding and adjudication that there is a valid defense to the action.[99] If the order sets the case down for trial, notice of the time and place must be given to the adverse party,[1] and in any case the order must be duly entered of record.[2] The order may be reviewed on appeal,[3] or recalled or rescinded on motion for that purpose.[4] The motion should not be denied upon the particular grounds assigned thereby, and the mover left to make another motion for the same purpose, simply assigning in its support a ground not before specified, but which plainly appears in the record.[5]

4. Objections and Exceptions. Defects or irregularities in the proceedings to vacate a judgment, or in the action of the court thereon, are waived if the party fails to object in due season, or shows his acquiescence by participating in the further proceedings in the action.[6]

H. Conditions on Grant of Relief — 1. Imposition of Terms in General. imposition of terms is not a necessary condition on opening the judgment; and the judgment creditor cannot complain that terms were not imposed, unless he can also show that the action of the court was arbitrary and unjust.[8] Where the opening or setting aside of the judgment is demandable as of right, it is not proper to impose any terms;[9] as in the case where the judgment was void for want of jurisdiction,[10] or was taken without notice to defendant,[11] or was entered prematurely or improvidently,[12] or procured by fraud and collusion.[13]

like manner, it may, if it deems proper, restrict him to the defenses set up in his petition or moving papers.[16]

3. PAYMENT OF COSTS AND EXPENSES. It is proper for the court to impose as a condition on opening a judgment that defendant shall pay the accrued costs in the action,[17] and also in a proper case and where justice requires it the disbursements of the opposite party,[18] his reasonable personal expenses incurred in connection with the suit,[19] a proper fee to his attorneys,[20] and the costs of the motion itself.[21] But it is not the imperative duty of the court, unless made so by statute, to impose costs, and it is in its discretion to omit this requirement,[22] particularly if it is not insisted on by plaintiff,[23] or if defendant is not chargeable with any negli-against him. Audubon v. Excelsior F. Ins. Co., 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 64.

Want of jurisdiction.— Where the court has jurisdiction of the class of cases to which the one at bar belongs, but for some reason failed to acquire jurisdiction in the particular case, it has power, on opening a default at defendant's request, to impose the condition that he shall waive the want of jurisdiction. gence or fault in suffering the judgment.[24] If costs are left to abide the event, the court may impose the condition that defendant shall furnish security for them.[25]

4. Securing Payment of Judgment. It is within the authority of the court, on opening a judgment, to impose the condition that defendant shall give a bond or undertaking to pay any judgment plaintiff may eventually recover.[26] But this is regarded as a severe condition, and will be held an abuse of discretion unless the facts of the case and the situation of the parties fully justify it.[27] It is also competent for the court in proper cases to require defendant to give an undertaking that he will not sell or encumber any of his property to hinder plaintiff in the collection of his claim,[28] or even to require him to deposit with the clerk of the court a sum sufficient to secure plaintiff's claim.[29]

5. Judgment to Stand as Security. If it appears that defendant, moving to set aside a judgment, is in failing circumstances or of doubtful solvency, it is proper to impose the condition that the judgment already entered shall stand as security for the amount ultimately recovered.[30]

6. Payment of Amount Admitted as Due. It is a proper condition upon opening a default to require defendant to pay so much of plaintiff's claim as he admits to be due, to enable him to dispute the rest.[31]

7. Performance of Conditions. Compliance with the terms imposed on the opening of a judgment is a condition precedent to the relief granted; unless they are complied with the judgment will remain in full force and effect.[32] But performance of the conditions may be waived by the party for whose benefit they were prescribed,[33] and where a judgment which should never have been entered is stricken off on terms, an order reinstating it for non-compliance with the terms will be reversed.[34]

I. Operation and Effect of Vacating or Opening — 1. In General. Where a judgment is vacated or set aside, it is entirely destroyed and the rights of the parties are left as if no such judgment had ever been entered,[35] and it affords no justification for acts done before the order of vacation,[36] although generally the rights of third persons, such as purchasers in good faith who have relied on the judgment, will be saved.[37] But merely opening a judgment, or setting aside a final judgment by default, does not necessarily vacate prior interlocutory judgments in the case.[38] It leaves the action still pending and undetermined and justifies further proceedings therein.[39] And where the judgment is left to stand as security, it does not determine any rights of the parties in the action, but subsists only for the purpose of security.[40] If the party who obtains the opening of a judgment is afterward defeated in the action, the effect is to restore the original judgment to full force and finally conclude his rights in the premises.[41] An order denying a motion to set aside a judgment does not give jurisdiction where none before existed or confer on the judgment any validity it did not originally possess.[42]

2. CONCLUSIVENESS OF DECISION. An order granting or denying a motion to open or vacate a judgment is binding and conclusive on all parties to the application and on those in privity with them.[43]

3. AS BAR TO SUBSEQUENT PROCEEDINGS. The remedy of a party aggrieved by the denial of a motion to open or vacate a judgment is by appeal;[44] he cannot resort to independent proceedings to obtain the same relief,[45] or renew his motion on the same grounds[46] unless the court grants him leave to do so,[47] or unless the order dismissing the motion is without prejudice to a renewal,[48] or is made in a manner too defective or imperfect to prevent a renewal.[49] A new motion should always be entertained when based on new grounds, not covered by the former motion and not then known or available to the party.[50]

4. Restitution. Where a final judgment is absolutely vacated, after it has been paid, or satisfied by execution or by possession of the property in controversy, the party benefiting by it should be ordered to make restitution;[51] but not where the judgment is merely opened to permit a defense; in that case there should be no order of restitution until after trial and final judgment.[52]

5. Defenses Available After Opening Default. If the order opening a default and permitting a plea limits the defenses which may be interposed, defendant will not be allowed to set up matters outside the specifications of the order;[53] but otherwise he may avail himself of any meritorious defense,[54] although not of merely formal and technical objections.[55]

leave granted in the order, or on being ruled so to do [56] the case should be placed on the calendar or set for trial,[57] and should thereupon be proceeded with as if no default had been entered.[58] Plaintiff is not bound to serve the declaration on a party who is let in to defend after a default.[59] Although the judgment may have been left to stand as security, it does not retain its vitality for any other purpose, and therefore does not determine any rights of the parties nor stand in the way of an entirely new trial of the controversy.[60] But if plaintiff for the second time recovers a judgment, it should stand as of the date of the original judgment;[61] and in any case the new judgment is conclusive upon all other matters going to the right of recovery.[62]

7. Vacation of Order. An order of court vacating or opening a judgment may be reversed, vacated, or recalled, when given without jurisdiction,[63] or obtained irregularly or fraudulently,[64] or because erroneous,[65] or on defendant's failure to comply with the conditions imposed on him.[66] The effect of vacating such an order is to restore the original judgment,[67] but when this is done, provision should be made for saving the intervening rights of third persons.[68]

Decisions justifying grant of new trial.— In several states it is held that chancery has jurisdiction to relieve against a judgment at law by ordering a new trial in the action, especially when the judgment was obtained by fraud, accident, or mistake. West Chicago St. R. Co. v. Stoltzenfeldt, 100 Ill. App. 142; Prussian Nat. Ins. Co. v. Chichocky, 94 Ill. App. 168; Booth v. Stamper, 6 Ga. 172; Benton v. Crowder, 7 Sm. & M. Forum for new trial.— In cases where it would be proper for equity to order a new trial, the parties will be sent back to the law court for this purpose if the grounds of action or defense are purely legal; but if they are suitable for the cognizance of equity, the chancellor will generally close the controversy by a final decree. Cummins v. Kennedy, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 642. And so if the only question is as to allowing credit for certain payments, and the amounts can be ascertained in the proceeding in equity, a new trial will not be granted, but the rights of the parties settled in the one proceeding. Chase v. Manhardt, 1 Bland (Md.) 333. It is also held permissible for the court of equity on granting a new trial at law to direct that the verdict be certified to it, and thereupon to proceed to make a final decree. Wilson v. Rucker, 1 Call (Va.) 500.

of fraud, accident, mistake, or some other circumstance peculiarly within the cognizance of equity,[73] when the usual and proper course is not to award a new trial in express terms, but to decree that unless the party consents to have the judgment set aside and a new trial had, he shall be perpetually enjoined from collecting his judgment.[74] It is indeed within the authority of a court of equity to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment at law, whenever sufficient equitable grounds are shown,[75] and this is the proper method of granting relief; but in so doing the equity court does not undertake to interfere with the judgment itself, but lays its prohibition upon the party otherwise entitled to enforce it.[76]

2. STATUTORY PROVISIONS. The statutes existing in many of the states which authorize courts of law to open, vacate, modify, or set aside their own judgments, for causes specified,[77] do not exclude the power of courts of equity to relieve against judgments on sufficient grounds, but furnish a cumulative or additional remedy,[78] except in cases where a motion or other proceeding under the statute

To entitle a party to relief in equity against a judgment at law, he must show that he did not procure or consent to the judgment attacked, or acquiesce in it, or waive the errors complained of;[80] that his situation is not due to his own neglect or carelessness;[81] that there is an attempt or threat to enforce the judgment against him;[82] that he is injured by the judgment as it stands or will be injured by such enforcement;[83] and that he comes into equity with clean hands and is entitled to the favorable consideration of the court.[84] He must also show that he has no other available or adequate

But it is no objection to relief in equity against a judgment, obtained by mistake for twice as much as it ought to have been, that the complainant's land, which was taken and sold on execution to satisfy the judgment, was previously conveyed by the complainant to his own children with a remedy;[85] that there is in the case a recognized ground such as fraud or the like for equitable interference;[86] and if a new trial is asked that such trial will probably result in a different judgment.[87]

b. Lost by Negligence. Equity will refuse to relieve a party against a judgment which results from his own negligence or carelessness in failing to plead or defend the original action, or otherwise to watch over, protect, and assert his rights in that proceeding,[88] or where he has negligently omitted, having full fraudulent intention to evade the payment of the judgment. Williamson v. Johnson, 5 N. J. Eq. 537.

b. Motion to Review, Vacate, or Correct. Equitable relief against a judgment will generally be refused if the party can be equally well relieved on a motion in the trial court to open, modify, or vacate the judgment,[93] or to stay or quash execution.[94] In a few cases, however, it has been held that an injunction might be granted, although the judgment might be vacated or set aside on motion and the time for such a motion had not yet expired.[95]

c. Motion For New Trial. Injunction will not be granted to restrain the enforcement of a judgment or to order a new trial, where the party still has an opportunity to move the trial court for a new trial, or had such opportunity and negligently omitted to avail himself of it.[96]

Statutory remedy not exclusive.—A statute giving to courts of record power to relieve a party of a judgment, order, or other proceeding taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, does not exclude his right to seek relief in equity against a decree obtained by fraud, where he has not invoked the statutory proceeding. Froebrich v. Lane, 45 Oreg. 13, 76 Pac. 351, 106 Am. St. Rep. 634.

Exception as to fraud.— In Georgia it is said that where a judgment is obtained by fraud, the party aggrieved may go into either a court of equity or a court of law for relief, and having applied to the former, he cannot be sent back to a court of law, although his remedy there might be equally adequate. Griffin v. Sketoe, 30 Ga. 300. And see Alspaugh v. Adams, 80 Ga. 345, 5 S. E. 496.

Payment before execution.— Injunction may be granted to restrain further proceedings on an execution, where the judgment debtor has paid the amount thereof to the real plaintiff in interest, although he would also have a remedy at law by motion to quash the writ. Crawford v. Thurmond, 3 Leigh (Va.) 85.

Refusal of leave to petition.— Since a petition to reopen a decree, rendered without an appearance by the petitioner, may be commenced without previous leave of court, a refusal to grant such leave is nugatory, and no bar to a bill seeking relief on the same grounds relied on in the petition. Hill v. Bowyer, 18 Gratt. (Va.) 364.

Injunction restraining the right to plead a judgment in bar may be granted, where such use of it would give an unfair advantage in an action at law, notwithstanding that the trial court might give substantially the same relief on the trial or on motion. In Louisiana the remedy by action for nullity of judgment, as provided by Code Pr. art. 607, is independent of the remedy by appeal, but is not a substitute therefor, nor a means of affording another day in court to a litigant who has neglected his opportunity. The case taken up by an appeal is the case heard and decided in the court of first instance and which is contained in the record, while the case presented in an action for the nullity of the judgment appealed from is one which has not been heard and which is dehors the record in the appellate court. Hence the action of nullity and the appeal may be maintained at the same time without conflict. State v. Sommerville, 112 La. 1091, 36 So. 864.

an adequate remedy by certiorari.[98] But some decisions make an exception in cases where fraud is alleged against the judgment,[99] where the matters alleged against it lie outside the record and therefore are not cognizable on writ of error,[1] or where the amount in controversy was so small that no appeal could be taken.[2]

e. Independent Action at Law. Equity will refuse to enjoin a judgment where the party would have an available and adequate remedy for any damage he may suffer from its enforcement, by means of a cross action or an action against some person responsible for such injury.[3]

f. Loss of Legal Remedy. Where the party had a remedy at law by appeal or motion to vacate or for a new trial, and has lost it, without fault on his own part, by causes which he could not control, preventing him from applying for it in due season, equity will not refuse to enjoin the judgment merely because the remedy at law, if it had been available, would have been appropriate and adequate.[4]

Action for breach of warranty. — Where judgment has been recovered for the price of property sold, equity will not enjoin the judgment where the purchaser may sue for breach of warranty of the property. Ponder v. Cox, 26 Ga. 485; Gorman v. Young, 18 S. W. 369, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 785; Henry v. Elliott, 59 N. C. 175.

Counter-claim. — Although defendant in a suit was prevented from setting up offsets or counter-claims, he is not entitled to have the judgment enjoined, but must pursue his remedy at law, by an independent action (Hudson v. Kline, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 379), even where the other party is a non-resident and keeps beyond the jurisdiction (Beall v. Brown, 7 Md. 393). But see Norton v. Wochler, (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 72 S. W. 1025, holding that if the judgment creditor is insolvent, this will entitle defendant to enjoin the collection of the judgment so far as to establish a counter-claim against it.

Third person responsible. — Equity will not enjoin a judgment where the debtor is in such a position that he may make himself whole immediately upon paying the judgment, by a suit at law against a person who is responsible over to him for the loss or damage he may suffer. Drake v. Lyons, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 54.

Unlawful arrest. — The remedy of a party who has been unlawfully arrested, and against whom a judgment has been rendered on such arrest, is in an action at law for the arrest, and not by a bill in equity to enjoin the collection of the judgment. Baldwin v. Murphy, 82 Ill. 485.

Fraud of adverse party. — If complainant was deprived of his opportunity to appeal, or to move against the judgment in the law court, by the fraud or deceit of his adversary, or by a trick played upon him, this will furnish ground for equity to interfere, if he also shows that the judgment is wrong or

But the mere loss of a legal remedy is no ground for equity to interfere, unless it is also shown that there is equitable ground of objection to the judgment as it stands;[5] and relief will in no case be granted where the loss of the remedy at law was due to the party's own negligence or fault or that of his counsel.[6] And it against conscience. Johnson v. Unversaw, 30 Ind. 435; Paddock v. Palmer, 19 Vt. 581. But the conduct of the adverse party must have been actually fraudulent and such as to leave the complainant without adequate remedy at law. Thus the mere fact that the judgment creditor did not notify the debtor of the entry of judgment, and let a year go by without suing out execution, with the intention that the latter should not petition for a writ of review, is not such fraud as will justify the interference of equity. Amherst College v. Allen, 165 Mass. 178, 42 N. E. 570. So also, where complainant abandoned his proceedings instituted for a new trial, on the promise of the other party to "make a fair offer of compromise." Dalhoff v. Keenan, 66 Iowa 679, 24 N. W. 273. So where the judgment creditor wrongfully obtained possession of a case made for appeal, and withheld it until the time for appeal had passed, it was considered no ground to enjoin the judgment, there being a remedy by petition in error in the appellate court. Muse v. Wafer, 29 Kan. 279.

Death or disability of judge.— Where the right of appeal is cut off by the sickness, death, or resignation of the judge before signing the bill of exceptions, equity may relieve against the judgment, if it is shown to be unjust or oppressive and the complainant has not been negligent. Refusal to allow appeal.— In Picket v. Morris, 2 Wash. (Va.) 255, it was held that equity will relieve against a judgment at law, where the law judge wrongfully refuses to allow an appeal or sign a bill of exceptions. But the weight of authority is against this position, it being considered that the remedy by mandamus is adequate to meet such a case, and therefore equity should not interfere. Boyd v. Weaver, 134 Ind. 266, 33 N. E. 1027; Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Ellisor, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 706, 37 S. W. 972.

Mistake of judge.— If a meritorious bill of exceptions is dismissed because of a mistake of the certifying judge, without the fault of counsel, the judgment may be enjoined until the matters set up in the bill of exceptions can be heard. Kohn v. Lovett, 43 Ga. 179.

Destruction of records.— Equity may act where the attempt to appeal was frustrated by the destruction of the records by fire, provided the complainant has been in no fault. Bailey v. Stevens, 11 Utah 175, 39 Pac. 828.

Unexpected adjournment.— Where the complainant was deprived of the opportunity to move for a new trial, or to press his motion to a hearing, because of the sudden and unexpected adjournment of the term, equity may relieve him, if the case be otherwise proper. Johnson v. Branch, 48 Ark. 535, 3 S. W. 819; Tarver v. McKay, 15 Ga. 550; Knifong v. Hendricks, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 212, 44 Am. Dec. 385.

Inability to furnish bond.— It has been thought a proper ground for equity to interfere that complainant could not secure an appeal from the judgment on account of his inability to get sureties on his appeal-bond. Roberts v. Cantrell, 3 Hayw. (Tenn.) 219. But see contra, Dupre v. Anderson, 45 La. Ann. 1154, 13 So. 743.

Amount too small.— If no appeal could be taken because the amount in controversy was too small to allow it, equity may enjoin the judgment if sufficient ground is shown Gulf, etc., R. Accident in general.— In Illinois the doctrine is that a court of equity will not disturb the judgment of a court of law because mere accident prevented a party from perfecting an appeal. Ballance v. Loomiss, 22 Ill. 82; Chicago Waifs Mission, etc., School v. Excelsior Electric Co., 44 Ill. App. 425.

New grounds.— Equity may properly interfere where the grounds on which it is asked to act were not discovered, or did not arise, until after the time when they could have been made available in the law court on a motion for a new trial or to vacate the judgment. Larson v. Williams, 100 Iowa 110, 63 N. W. 464, 69 N. W. 441, 62 Am. St. Rep. 544; Hoskins v. Hattenback, 14 Iowa 314; Colyer v. Langford, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 237.

Change in construction of statute.— Where a judgment was rendered according to a particular construction of a statute, and after a writ of error thereon was barred by the statute of limitations, the supreme court gave a different construction to the statute in another case, it was held that equity would not interfere to open the judgment. has also been held that relief will not be granted where the loss of the remedy at law was due to a mistaken mode of proceeding.[7]

5. WHAT COURTS EXERCISE THE POWER. In some states it is the rule that any court of equitable powers, having jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter, may enjoin the enforcement of a judgment, although it was rendered by a court of concurrent or equal jurisdiction.[8] But in others, either by statute or settled practice, a suit to enjoin a judgment must be brought in the same court which rendered it, and will not be entertained by another court of coördinate jurisdiction.[9] Where the former rule prevails, a court of chancery jurisdiction

Pendency of writ of error is not ground for the refusal of an injunction staying proceedings at law upon the judgment, where the suit in chancery does not draw into question the judgment and proceedings at law, or claim a right to revise them, but sets up an equity independent of the judgment, which admits the validity thereof, but suggests reasons why the party who has obtained it ought not to avail himself of it. Parker v. Judges Maryland Cir. Ct., 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 561, 6 L. ed. 729. It does not affect the jurisdiction of a court of equity over a bill to enjoin a judgment that the judgment is pending on error, and under a supersedeas, in the supreme court. Platt v. Threadgill, 80 Fed. 192.

Federal jurisdiction.— A bill to enjoin a judgment will lie in the federal circuit court where the judgment was rendered, although the original plaintiff resides in and is a citizen of another state. Dunlap v. Stetson, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,164, 4 Mason 349.

The amount in controversy must be within the limits of the court's jurisdiction. Breuning v. Weigel, 22 La. Ann. 593; Walker v. McMaster, 48 Tex. 213. may enjoin a judgment obtained in another chancery court,[10] or in the supreme court of the state,[11] or even in a court in another state,[12] and may take jurisdiction of a bill to impeach its own former decree.[13] The federal courts are prohibited by statute from granting injunctions to stay proceedings in the state courts, and this prevents them from enjoining the enforcement of judgments recovered in state courts.[14] But a federal court, having otherwise jurisdiction of the action, may make a decree which, as between the parties, shall set aside and vacate a judgment of a state court, and the proceedings taken and rights acquired thereunder, on the ground that it was procured by fraud or was void for want of jurisdiction.[15] Conversely state courts have no power or jurisdiction to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment rendered by a court of the United States.[16]

6. Persons Entitled to Relief — a. In General. As a rule relief in equity against a judgment at law is given only to the parties to the action,[17] or those in privity of interest or estate with them.[18] A stranger to the proceedings can have merely interlocutory order in a cause still pending in another court,[30] nor a final judgment which has been affirmed on appeal.[31] Although some of the decisions deny the right of equitable relief where the judgment is merely erroneous or void, on the ground that in the former case it may be revised on appeal, and in the latter may be disregarded or set aside on motion,[32] yet others hold that injunction is a proper remedy against a void judgment,[33] and this is clearly the case where the judgment has been vacated or set aside by the court which rendered it,[34] or enjoined in the state where it was procured,[35] or paid or otherwise satisfied,[36] or where the record has been destroyed and there has been no renewal by substitution.[37]

b. Judgments by Confession or Consent. A judgment entered upon the confession of defendant may be enjoined in equity for fraud or other adequate cause;[38] but not for mere defects or irregularities in the instrument of confession,[39] or on account of matters which should have been presented to the law court in opposition to the judgment,[40] or where defendant has been negligent or improvident.[41] And although equity is little disposed to overhaul judgments settled by consent or compromise, yet such a judgment may be enjoined if fraud or mistake in its procurement is clearly established.[42]

9. Conditions Precedent. A party coming into equity to obtain relief against a judgment at law must on his part do whatever equity requires.[43] In particular, if the complainant does not dispute the validity of the judgment with respect to the entire amount of it, he must first pay or offer to pay whatever amount he admits to be due.[44] But it is not usual or necessary, before filing a bill for this purpose, to obtain leave of the court whose judgment is to be impeached or of that in which the bill is filed.[45]

B. Grounds For Relief in Equity — 1. General Rules. As a general rule any fact which clearly proves it to be against conscience to execute a judgment, and of which the injured party could not have availed himself in a court of law, or of which he might have availed himself there, but was prevented by fraud or accident unmixed with any fault or negligence in himself or his agents, will authorize a court of equity to enjoin the adverse party from enforcing such judgment.[46] It must therefore be made to appear that it would be unjust and uncon-

close the grounds of its invalidity.[52] But to obtain relief on this ground it is necessary for the complainant to show that he has no adequate remedy at law,[53] or that he has exhausted his legal remedies by motion to vacate or strike out the judgment,[54] or by certiorari to review it.[55]

b. Disability of Parties. It has been held that the personal disability of defendant in a judgment, such as coverture, infancy, or insanity, is not a ground for equitable interference with the judgment, the defect not being jurisdictional, and the remedy being at law.[56] But other decisions regarding a judgment against such a person as void hold it proper for chancery to restrain its enforcement.[57] Execution on a judgment against a person deceased, it has been held, will not be enjoined, the remedy being at law.[58]

same remedy may be sought where the failure of jurisdiction was in respect to the subject-matter of the action.[64] But the complainant has the burden of proving affirmatively the facts constituting want of jurisdiction,[65] and that he has not been negligent in failing to seek his remedy at law,[66] and also according to numerous decisions that the judgment, in addition to being void for want of jurisdiction, is groundless, excessive, or unjust.[67]

b. Want or Defect of Process or Service. Jurisdiction of federal courts.— Where a suit between citizens of the same state has been brought in a federal court, by collusion or otherwise, on the ground of defendant's alienage, and a default judgment entered, the proceedings are wholly without jurisdiction, and an injunction may be granted to restrain execution of the judgment. Joint defendants.— Where judgment was rendered against two defendants, although process was served on only one of them, defendant not served may have relief in equity against the judgment. Morgan v. Scott, Minor (Ala.) 81, 12 Am. Dec. 35; Gerrish v. Seaton, 73 Iowa 15, 34 N. W. 485. But see Mason v. Miles, 63 N. C. 564, holding that where a judgment has been obtained against a principal and surety it is no ground for an injunction in favor of the surety that the principal was not served with process and had no opportunity to defend.

Judgment fraudulently altered.— Equity has jurisdiction to vacate a judgment which has been fraudulently altered so as to include a defendant who was not served and not originally included in the judgment. Chester v. Miller, 13 Cal. 558.

Service by publication.— Equity will set aside a judgment rendered on constructive service of process, where defendant had no actual knowledge of the action, and the affidavit filed by the plaintiff, and on which the service by publication was ordered, was false. Dunlap v. Steere, 92 Cal. 344, 28 Pac. 563, 27 Am. St. Rep. 143, 16 L. R. A. 361.

Waiver of want of notice.— Equity will not interfere where the want of notice was cured by an agreement of the party affected, by which the rendition of the judgment was suspended by consent until the opinion of the supreme court in another case between the same parties could be had. Stein v. Burden, 30 Ala. 270.

Mistake of defendant.— It is no ground for relief that defendant forgot that the writ had been served upon him, and thereby was prevented from appearing and defending. Failure to object.— Defects in the process or service of which defendant had full knowledge will not be ground for enjoining the judgment, where he fails to object in due time or to take advantage of such defects, or to make any sufficient excuse for his failure to do so. Griffith v. Milwaukee Harvester Co., 92 Iowa 634, 61 N. W. 243, 54 Am. St. Rep. 573; Wilsey v. Maynard, 21 Iowa 107; Graham v. Roberts, 1 Head (Tenn.) 56.

Want of seal.— Equity will not interfere because the summons was defective for want of a seal, for this does not invalidate the judgment (Krug v. Davis, 85 Ind. 309), and the proper remedy of the party is by motion to quash the execution (Logan v. Hillegass, 16 Cal. 200).

Language of writ.— The fact that the petition and process were not expressed in the French language, the maternal tongue of defendant, affords no ground for enjoining the judgment. Ortes v. Lallande, 4 La. Ann. 188.

negligently fails to pursue.[70] And ground for the interposition of equity may be laid by showing a fatal defect in the manner of serving the process.[71] But a defective return or proof of process duly served is not sufficient ground for equity to interfere.[72]

c. False Return of Service. Equity may vacate or enjoin a judgment in an action of which defendant had no legal notice, the trial court assuming jurisdiction on the strength of a false return of service of process by the sheriff or other officer.[73] Earlier decisions holding that the party's only remedy was by an action against the officer [74] are inconsistent with the modern rules. But in several states it is held that relief cannot be granted on this ground unless it is shown that the false return was induced or procured by plaintiff or that he was connected

Decoying defendant into jurisdiction.— In Vastine v. Bast, 41 Mo. 493, a court of equity refused to interfere in a case where defendant, not denying that he had been duly served, alleged that he was not a citizen or resident of the state and that he had been fraudulently decoyed within the jurisdiction in order to secure service on him; for the objection should have been taken by appearing in the original suit and moving to set aside the service. d. Unauthorized Appearance. It is generally held that equity may enjoin the enforcement of a judgment taken against a defendant on an unauthorized appearance of an attorney for him,[78] although some of the cases still adhere to the early English rule that he must first exhaust his remedy by suit against the attorney, if the latter is solvent and able to respond in damages.[79] At any rate the party seeking such relief must also show that the judgment is unjust or inequitable, or that the result would be different on a full and fair trial of the merits.[80]

4. INSUFFICIENT OR ILLEGAL CAUSE OF ACTION. That the cause of action stated by plaintiff is not sufficient to support the judgment or does not entitle him to the relief awarded is a defense which must be interposed at law, and equity will not enjoin the judgment on this ground,[81] unless it appears that there was some good reason why defendant did not or could not plead it.[82] That the contract or cause of action was illegal, immoral, or contrary to public policy is good ground for enjoining the enforcement of the judgment;[83] but according to many of the cases only when the defense could not have been made at law or was prevented,[84] and never, it has been held, where the party seeking relief is in pari delicto with the other.[85]

5. WANT OR FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION. Although certain decisions favor the right of equity to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment, on account of the want or failure of consideration for the contract on which it is founded, on the broad ground that it would be against conscience to permit the collection of the judgment under such circumstances,[86] yet the general doctrine is that this is a defense which should be interposed in the action at law, and will furnish no ground for relief in equity if the party pleaded it at law, or might have done so.[87] However, equity may relieve him against the judgment where the defense could not have been set up at law,[88] where there are circumstances in the case amounting to fraud or deceit,[89] or where the failure of consideration occurs or is discovered after the rendition of the judgment,[90] always provided he has then no adequate remedy at

6. PAYMENT — a. Payment or Settlement of Claim in Suit. Payment, settlement, or discharge of the claim in suit must generally be set up as a defense before judgment, and it will furnish no ground for a court of equity to enjoin the judgment, unless the party was prevented from making his defense at law by fraud, circumvention, or deceit, or by an accident.[94] But it is otherwise where the circumstances of the case were such that this plea could not have been received in the action at law.[95] So also, where the payment or settlement was made after one of the courts of the state, recovered upon a judgment in the courts of another state, if the party applying has not been guilty of laches in the assertion of his rights, and the judgment of the foreign court has been reversed.

Non-residence of judgment creditor.— The fact that the vendor of a chattel resides in another state and has brought suit for the price in the courts of this state is no ground for a court of equity to enjoin his judgment at law for the price, on account of a breach of warranty in the sale. the institution of the suit, and was not then pleadable, a court of equity will grant relief against the judgment.[96]

b. Payment or Satisfaction of Judgment. It is generally held that equity may enjoin a judgment creditor from proceeding to collect a judgment which has been in fact paid, discharged, or satisfied,[97] although some authorities hold otherwise, considering the remedy at law to be adequate;[98] and it is clear that one who might have set up the fact of payment or discharge of a judgment, by way of defense to an action at law upon it, or in a proceeding to revive it, cannot claim equitable relief against its enforcement.[99]

c. Relief to Sureties and Indorsers. Although there is nothing in the mere character of a surety entitling him to the special consideration of equity,[1] yet there may be circumstances giving him a right to relief against the judgment which would not be available to the principal, such as an extension of the time of payment of the debt, without his knowledge or consent,[2] a release of the principal or of cosureties,[3] a promise to the surety not to hold him liable or enforce the debt against him,[4] fraud, accident, or mistake preventing him from defending the action at law,[5] or payment or release of the debt or judgment.[6] But he cannot have relief in equity if he has been negligent in failing to defend himself before judgment,[7] or on any ground which might have been pleaded in defense in the action at law.[8]

7. Errors and Irregularities — a. In General. Equity will not set aside or enjoin a judgment recovered at law, against a party who had a full opportunity to defend himself, in a case of which the court had jurisdiction, simply on the ground that the judgment is irregular or erroneous, or because the court of chancery would in deciding the same case have come to a different conclusion.[9]

3. Johnson v. Givens, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 91.

Judgments differing in amount.— Where separate actions are brought against the principal and the surety, and judgments recovered, that against the principal being less in amount than that against the surety, it would seem to be ground for relieving the surety to the extent of the excess. But in such a case, if the court is satisfied, from facts which were not brought out at the trial, that the judgment against the surety is for the correct amount, and that against the principal too small, an injunction will not be granted. Whetcroft v. Christie, 4 Harr. & M. (Md.) 385.

Failure to obtain satisfaction of the judgment out of available assets of the principal debtor will not generally afford the surety ground for an injunction to restrain the enforcement of the judgment as against him. c. Objections as to Evidence. Equity will not enjoin the enforcement of a judgment at law either on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support it,[11] or the lack of evidence of essential facts,[12] or because of erroneous action of the court in admitting or excluding particular evidence.[13]

d. Defects in Pleadings. Judicial error.— If the error in the amount of the judgment is judicial instead of merely clerical, arising from the application of the mind of the court or jury to the facts in the case, and resulting in the award of a sum greater than it should justly be, equity has an adequate remedy by appeal, motion, or other proceeding in the law court,[19] or where he is chargeable with negligence in permitting the mistake to occur or in failing to seek his remedy in due time.[20]

g. Irregular Rendition or Entry. Irregularities or errors in the time, form, or manner of the rendition or entry of a judgment furnish no ground for equity to reform it or enjoin its collection,[21] unless in cases where there is no other way of obtaining relief,[22] or where the party has been prevented from obtaining relief at law by fraud, accident, or the act of the opposite party, without fault or neglect on his own part.[23]

8. Defenses Not Interposed at Law — a. Legal Defenses in General. A defendant in an action at law who has a defense to the suit of which he is fully aware, which is cognizable in a court of law and within its jurisdiction, and which he has an opportunity to interpose, is chargeable with negligence if he fails to set up such defense and insist upon it, not being prevented from doing so by any fraud, accident, or surprise; and he cannot have relief in equity against the judgment in that action, on the same grounds which constituted such defense, however unjust or inequitable the judgment may appear to be.[24] This rule applies to all defenses generally no power to interfere, the remedy being by appeal or other appropriate proceeding at law. Reed v. Clarke, 4 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 18; Smith v. Butler, 11 Oreg. 46, 4 Pac. 517.

b. Equitable Defenses. If a party's defense to an action at law was not within the cognizance of a court of law, being purely equitable in its nature, he is of course not chargeable with negligence in failing to make it effectual at law; and he may have relief in equity against the judgment, if it is unjust and inequitable, on the grounds constituting such defense.[27] And this rule is not altered by the Duress or threats.— Although the extortion of a note, bond, or confession of judgment by means of compulsion or intimidation is a defense which may and should be pleaded at law (Hendricks v. Compton, 2 Rob. (Va.) 192), yet it has been held that equity may enjoin the judgment on this ground (Heath v. Cobb, 17 N. C. 187).

Forgery.— It is no ground for equitable relief that the instrument sued on at law was forged, this being a defense which must be set up in the action at law. Watkins v. Landon, 67 Minn. 136, 69 N. But compare Reynolds v. Dothard, 7 Ala. 664, holding that, where a statute judgment is rendered against a surety in an appeal-bond, without notice to him, he may go into equity for relief against the judgment on the ground that the signature of his name to the bond is a forgery. And see Barnett v. Lynch, 1 Marv. (Del.) 114, 40 Atl. 666, where it is said that a joint judgment on a note which had been decreed void for forgery as to one of defendants will be set aside as to the other.

fact that there may have been an ineffectual attempt to set up the defense in the suit at law.[28] But under the codes of practice, which blend legal and equitable powers, or confer extensive equitable powers upon the courts of common law, it is held that a defense, if available under the code, must be set up in the original action, and cannot be made the basis of a subsequent application to equity, although it is inherently equitable in its nature.[29]

c. Defenses Available Either at Law or in Equity. Where a party's defense to an action is cognizable either at law or in equity, it is generally held that he may choose in which forum he will make his defense, and if he omits to do so at law he may then have recourse to equity for relief against the judgment.[30] But if in any such case the party makes his defense in the trial at law, he will be

Difficulty of establishing defense at law.— Equity will not relieve, after a judgment at law, on the mere ground of the difficulty of the defense in a court of law, even in cases where courts of equity and of law have concurrent jurisdiction, as in matters of account. To authorize relief it must be a case where it is impossible for the party to make an effectual defense at law. Dilly v. Barnard, 8 Gill & J. (Md.) 170.

Defenses both legal and equitable.— If defendant has both a legal defense and an equitable defense, the latter not cognizable at law, a failure to use diligence in making his legal defense will not prevent a court of equity from granting an injunction on proof of the equitable defense. Gaming contracts.— In several states courts of law and of equity have concurrent jurisdiction of the defense that the debt sued regarded as having made his election, and if he fails he will have no ground for a bill in equity for relief against the judgment, unless his defeat occurred through fraud or accident.[31]

9. Excuses For Not Defending at Law — a. General Rules. Equity may grant relief against a judgment at law, which is unjust and inequitable, where the party had a good defense to the action, but had no opportunity to avail himself of it in the legal action;[32] or where the loss of his defense was occasioned by the fraud or fault of the adverse party, by surprise or accident, or by his own mistake or ignorance of his defense, provided there has been no negligence or fault on the part of the complainant or his counsel or agents.[33] Equity will not enjoin a judgment where the only reason alleged for the failure of defendant to avail himself of a legal defense is an erroneous ruling of the trial court excluding such defense, for this is to be remedied by appeal.[34] To establish the state of facts constituting the excuse for failing to defend at law, no such certainty of proof is required as to prove the defense itself;[35] yet if the excuse is not proved it avails nothing to prove the defense.[36]

b. Ignorance of Facts or Law — (i) In General. Equity may grant relief against a judgment at law, where there was a good and valid defense to the action, of which defendant was ignorant at the time of the trial, and which on was for money lost at play; and defendant may suffer a judgment to be taken against him by default at law, and then obtain relief against the judgment in equity. Cases of doubtful jurisdiction.— If there is a doubt whether a defense is available at law, while there is an undoubted jurisdiction in equity, and defendant omits to make his defense in the action at law, or if he makes it and it is overruled on the ground that it cannot be considered at law, equity may afford relief, notwithstanding a trial at law. Illustrations.— A judgment for a part of the purchase-money of real estate was enjoined, on the ground that the vendee had been deceived by the vendor as to the title, and had remained ignorant of the defect therein until after the rendition of the judgment. Fitch v. Polke, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 564. So where an administrator has recovered judgment for the price of property of his intestate sold by him, it is a sufficient excuse to the vendee for not defending at law that he did not know until after the judgment that the administrator had no authority to sell. Crisman v. Beasley, Sm. & M. Ch. (Miss.) 561.

Public records.— The fact that a party is ignorant of a recorded judgment is due to his own negligence, and equity cannot relieve him from the consequences. Bunn v. Lindsay, 95 Mo. 250, 7 S. W. 473, 6 Am. St. Rep. 48.

Diligence at trial.— If defendant in an action at law denies the genuineness of the deed under which plaintiff claims, it is his duty to attack the authenticity of such deed on the trial at law, and, having failed to do so, he cannot have relief in equity on the ground that he has since discovered it to be a forgery. Hamilton v. McLean, 169 Mo. 51, 68 S. W. 930. But a party having no knowledge or information of a fact material to his defense, and which was exclusively within the knowledge of the adverse party, is not guilty of such laches or want of diligence as will deprive him of the right to equitable relief against the judgment merely because he failed to bring out such fact on cross-examination. Cairo, etc., R. Co. v. Titus, 28 N. J. Eq. 269.

ignorance of the law, of the nature or consequences of the action, or of the party's legal rights and duties, will generally afford no ground for equitable interference.[39]

(II) Necessity of Seeking Discovery. If defendant in an action at law could obtain information concerning the facts which constitute his defense, and which are necessary to make his defense effectual, by the aid of a bill in equity for a discovery from the adverse party, his failure to avail himself of this means of information will preclude him from afterward obtaining an injunction against the judgment.[40]

c. Evidence Not Available at Law. Where defendant cannot make good his defense, because the only evidence to sustain it is not admissible or cannot be produced in a court of law, but can be supplied in equity, he may be relieved against the judgment;[41] but not where the same grounds of objection to the proposed evidence are equally prohibitive in equity as at law.[42]

d. Mistake. A mistake of fact, provided it be honest and genuine, and such as a man might reasonably make, will be a sufficient excuse for not defending an action at law, and will warrant a court of equity, if the judgment be against conscience, in enjoining its enforcement.[43] But it is no ground for relief in equity

Suspicion not equivalent to knowledge.— Although a party may have suspected the existence of a fact which would have given him a good defense to the action at law, this will not preclude him from relief in equity, if his suspicions did not amount to legal or moral certainty, and if he is not chargeable with laches in failing to make efforts to discover the truth. West v. Logwood, 6 Munf. (Va.) 491.

Special favor to administrators.— Some courts are disposed to show special indulgence in this particular to administrators, on the ground that they are obliged, from the nature of their office, to rely upon the information which they may derive from others. Hewlett v. Hewlett, 4 Edw. (N. Y.) 7.

e. Surprise — (i) In General. Equity may relieve a party from a judgment obtained against him by surprise.[47] But it will not do so where the surprise relied upon was such as might reasonably have been guarded against,[48] where the party has a remedy in the trial court,[49] or where the surprise was occasioned by his own negligence or lack of care or attention.[50]

Unexpected call for trial.— Where a party for good and sufficient reasons, and without any negligence or inattention, believes that his case will not be reached for trial during the current term or within a certain time, but nevertheless it is called and he is defaulted, this constitutes such surprise as will justify a court of equity in giving him relief, if he cannot obtain it by application to the trial court. The fact that the supreme court refused to review the judgment of the circuit judge cannot be an occasion of legal "surprise," where the parties had made a stipulation which in effect made the decision of the circuit judge final. absence of a witness from the trial,[51] by the unexpected character of the testimony given by a witness,[52] by the introduction of unanticipated evidence,[53] or by a discovery that a witness who was relied on to testify is incompetent or privileged[54] is not in general ground for relief in equity against the resulting judgment, at least where the party could have guarded himself against such a surprise by the exercise of proper care and vigilance.[55]

f. Accident or Misfortune — (I) In General. Unavoidable accident or misfortune, preventing the party from making his defense at law, is sufficient ground for the interference of equity in an otherwise meritorious case.[56] But relief will not be granted on this ground where no counsel was employed, or witnesses summoned, or any other steps taken to defend the action.[57]

(II) Absence of Counsel. The unavoidable absence of the party's attorney from the court at the time of the trial may in some circumstances entitle the party to relief in equity,[58] although the courts are not very much disposed to English v. Savage, 14 Ala. 342; Brooks v. Whitson, 7 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 513.

Loss of papers.— Equity may give relief on account of the loss of documents essential to the defense of the action at law (Vathir v. Zane, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 246), but will not do so unless fully satisfied that the loss of the papers would interfere fatally with the complainant's success in the trial court (Rogers v. Cross, 3 Pinn. (Wis.) 36, 3 Chandl. 34), and will refuse its aid if the loss was attributable in any degree to the negligence of the party himself or his counsel (Marshall v. Marshall, 7 Okla. 240, 54 Pac. 461).

Loss of witness.— Where parties were prevented from making their defense at law by the acts of plaintiff, until the only witness by whom the defense could be proved was dead, it was held that they were entitled to relief in equity. Mack v. Doty, Harr. (Mich.) 366.

Disturbed local conditions.— Equity refused to enjoin a judgment on the ground that defendant was prevented by intense excitement prevailing in the country from attending court, that it was dangerous to travel from home, that it was generally understood there would be no court, and that the judge of the court said he would hold no session for the trial of cases. interfere on this account,[59] and will not do so where it appears that defendant could have saved himself by the timely employment of other counsel,[60] or where he had another attorney of record in the case.[61]

(III) Sickness of Party or Relative. The severe illness of defendant, or of a near relative, preventing him from attending the trial, may be ground for relief in equity against the judgment.[62] But it must first appear that his personal presence was necessary to the successful defense of the action.[63] And further, a party in this situation must use diligence in endeavoring to prepare for the trial, employing counsel, summoning witnesses, asking for a continuance or for a new trial, or otherwise making suitable efforts to save himself; and if he fails in this, equity will not relieve him.[64]

g. Excusable Neglect. Equity may relieve a party from a judgment taken against him through his excusable neglect.[65] But if he has carelessly or foolishly omitted to attend to his case, to retain and instruct counsel, to gather his witnesses, or otherwise to prepare for the trial, he is in no position to invoke the aid of equity, and it will be refused.[66]

Forgetfulness.— It is not a sufficient excuse for failing to defend the action at law that the party forgot all about the suit, or about the time of trial, no matter what causes may have engrossed his attention. Cullum v. Casey, 1 Ala. 351; War-

for failing to defend an action at law that the party relied on others, who were not officially bound to give him correct information or any information at all, to advise him concerning the character or purpose of the suit, the necessity of defending it, the progress of the cause, or its probable time of trial.[67]

i. Negligence or Misconduct of Counsel. It is no sufficient ground for relief in equity that a judgment was obtained against a party in consequence of the neglect, inattention, mistake, or incompetence of his attorney.[68] Nor will equity

11. Compelling Set-Off or Reduction of Damages — a. In General. As equity may order one judgment to be set off against another, so it has power to restrain the execution of a judgment when it is made to appear that the judgment defendant has a debt against plaintiff exceeding the judgment in amount, and which he cannot otherwise collect.[75] But such action will not be taken where the judgment debtor has an adequate remedy at law,[76] or unless it appears that the judgment creditor is insolvent or in some way unable to respond to the claim against him, so that the complainant is in danger of losing it.[77]

Set-off previously refused.— A party who has refused a set-off when it was offered in a suit at law, and who refuses to adjust the matter on equitable principles, cannot come into chancery to enforce the set-off. Love v. Freer, Wright (Ohio) 412.

Set-off less than judgment.— An injunction granted to restrain the collection of a judgment on the ground that the debtor therein is entitled to a credit for a sum less than the whole amount of the judgment should provide that the judgment creditor may proceed by execution to collect the undisputed balance of the judgment. Cas. No. 1,644, 3 Cranch C. C. 628.

Non-residence of judgment creditor.— In some states it is ruled that if the judgment creditor is a non-resident of the state, so that the debtor, having a cross claim against him, cannot get personal service on him, and particularly if he has no property within the state, this will be sufficient ground for the interference of equity to decree a set-off. Livingston v. Marshall, 82 Ga. 281, 11 S. E. 542; Moss v. Rowland, 1 Duv. (Ky.) 321. But in some other jurisdictions this is denied. Walker v. Thomas, 88 Ky. 486, 11 S. W. 434, 11 Ky. L. may be used as a means of setting off one judgment against another;[78] but it is by no means necessary that the claim to be set off should have been reduced to judgment,[79] or even that it should be a demand enforceable at law, equity possessing the power to set off an equitable debt against a legal one, where there are special circumstances of which only a court of chancery can take notice.[80] And although the claims may not appear on their face to be mutual, a court of equity will look beyond the nominal parties to the real parties in interest and adjudge accordingly;[81] and a set-off may be decreed as against an assignee of the judgment if he took it with notice of the equities, or if the assignment was fraudulently intended to prevent a set-off.[82] So also a judgment debtor may in this way set off an amount which he has paid in the character of a surety for the judgment creditor.[83] But generally a party going into equity to enjoin a judgment on the ground of a set-off must show as strong a claim to be paid the amount of his demand as if he were suing on the same at law or in equity,[84] and equity will not ordinarily grant this relief where the claim set up is contingent, uncertain, or unliquidated,[85] or where it accrued, or was acquired by the complainant, after the recovery of the judgment at law.[86]

c. To Relieve Vendee on Failure of Title. Where a vendor of property has recovered judgment for the purchase-money and become insolvent, and the vendee is damnified by a failure of title or possession, or by having to pay off an encumbrance, equity may enjoin the judgment to the extent of the loss which the vendee has suffered;[87] but not where he has a plain and adequate remedy at law by action for breach of the covenant of warranty or against encumbrances,[88] or where he has neglected an opportunity to set off his damages when sued for the purchase-price.[89]

d. Failure to Plead Set-Off at Law. Equity will not enjoin a judgment on account of matters which might have been pleaded by way of set-off in the action in which the judgment was recovered, where the party neglected his opportunity in that respect,[90] unless he shows a good and sufficient excuse for his neglect,[91] and still less on account of any set-off or counter-claim which was set up in the action at law and rejected or decided adversely to him.[92]

See 30 Cent. Dig. tit. "Judgment," § 836.

Fraudulent alteration.— It is good ground for the intervention of equity that a judgment fairly and regularly obtained has afterward been fraudulently altered so as to increase the amount for which it stands (Babcock v. McCamant, 53 Ill. 214), or so as to include a person not originally named in it or made a party to the action (Chester v. Miller, 13 Cal. 558).

Amending pleadings.— There can be no fraud in filing an amended declaration and an amended account on leave granted by the court, and a new trial will not be granted for that cause. Davis v. Presler, 5 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 459.

Lack of proof.— In a suit against a married woman in which she was personally served the fact that a judgment was rendered against her without any proof that the cause of action was one for which her estate was properly chargeable is not such a fraud on her rights as will justify an injunction against the judgment. Cayce v. Powell, 20 Tex. 767, 73 Am. Dec. 211.

should be clearly stated and proved,[96] and it must appear that the fraud was practised or participated in by the judgment creditor,[97] that it was actually effective in bringing about the judgment which was rendered,[98] that the complainant in equity has a good defense to the action on the merits,[99] and has no other adequate means of obtaining relief against the judgment or avoiding its consequences,[1] and that his situation is in no way due to his own negligence or lack of proper diligence.[2]

b. Fraud in Cause of Action. Although some of the earlier cases support the right of equity to enjoin a judgment on the ground of fraud in the instrument or transaction on which it is founded,[3] for example, that equity may relieve Fraud of agent.— Although the fraud which brought about the rendition of a judgment was practised by an agent without the knowledge or consent of his principal, still the latter cannot avail himself of the fruits thereof. Webster v. Diamond, 36 Ark. 532.

Fraud of judge.— Where fraud and collusion are charged against a judge in entering an order or judgment a court of general equity jurisdiction can review the same and annul it, if the facts justify such action. Sanford v. Head, 5 Cal. 297.

Disqualification of judge.— A bill attacking a judgment as fraudulent by reason of the judge's having been counsel before the trial should state on whose behalf he so acted, and that the complainant objected to his sitting as judge, or failed to object by reason of ignorance of such disqualification. Griffith v. Griffith, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1898) 46 S. W. 340. Mar. 620

Fraud of officer.— Equity may enjoin the enforcement of a judgment obtained by the fraud of the officer charged with the service of the writ. Dowell v. Goodwin, 22 R. I. 287, 47 Atl. 693, 84 Am. Reduction of damages.— Equity will not generally relieve against a judgment alleged to have been obtained by fraud, where the relief asked for is merely a reduction of the damages. Murdock v. De Vries, 37 Cal. 527; Essex County v. Berry, 2 Vt. 161.

Statutory remedy cumulative.— A statute which authorizes a petition to set aside a judgment for fraud practised by the successful party does not impair the right to file a bill in equity to impeach the judgment for fraud, but furnishes a cumulative statutory substitute therefor. Wheeler v. White, 2 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 584, 4 West. L. Month. 110.

Solvency of creditor immaterial.— The fact that one is solvent is no ground for refusing to enjoin proceedings on a judgment which he has obtained by fraud. Sanderson v. Voelcker, 51 Mo. App. 328.

Fraud in procuring instrument.— Some decisions sustain the right of equity to grant relief against a judgment, where the instrument in suit, whether a note, bond, warrant against a judgment for the price of property sold, where the sale was induced by false representations or concealment of the truth, in regard to quantity, character, or title,[4] it is now generally held that the fraud which will justify such action must be extrinsic or collateral to the matters involved in the issues or the trial at law,[5] and that fraud in the cause of action or instrument in suit must be set up in the trial at law, and furnishes no ground for relief in equity, unless the party aggrieved shows a good and sufficient reason why he did not avail himself of this defense at law.[6]

c. Fraud in Preventing Defense. Where a defendant in an action at law has a good defense, but is prevented from setting it up by the fraud, artifice, deceit, or misrepresentation of plaintiff, without negligence or fault on his own part, and a judgment is thereby obtained against him, it is a proper case for equitable relief.[7]

Exceptions to this rule have been made in cases where the judgment was based on service by publication and defendant had no actual knowledge of the suit (Irvine v. Leyh, 102 Mo. 200, 14 S. W. 715, 16 S. W. 10), where the court in which the action was brought and the trial had was without jurisdiction to pass on the question of fraud (Sanders v. Soutter, 126 N. Y. 193, 27 N. d. Fraud in Procuring Judgment. Fraud practised in the very matter of obtaining the judgment is regarded as perpetrated upon the court, as well as upon the injured party, and will warrant a court of equity in enjoining the judgment.[9] This may for example consist in deceit and imposition practised upon the court as a means of obtaining a judgment which otherwise would not be rendered,[10] or Fictitious plaintiff.— Equity may grant relief where the suit at law was instituted in the name of a person not interested, whose name was used only for the purpose of preventing a defense which defendant had against the real plaintiff in interest. Greenleaf v. Maher, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,780, 2 Wash. 393.

But equity will not set aside a decree allotting a homestead to the widow of a decedent, on the ground that she misrepresented to the court the facts concerning the property. Hanley v. Hanley, 114 Cal. 690, 46 Pac. 736. Nor is it sufficient ground to enjoin the judgment that defendants made false statements to the court as to their financial condition, whereby the court was induced to render a judgment for a less sum than would otherwise have been awarded. U. S. v. Beebe, 92 Fed. 244, 34 C. C. A. 321. Or that evi-

in the act of the successful party in illegally tampering with the jury,[11] or in wrongfully obtaining a judgment by the surreptitious use of legal process and proceedings.[12] But relief will not be granted where the injured party is chargeable with such timely knowledge of the facts alleged as would have enabled him to prevent the entry of the judgment, if he had used proper diligence,[13] or where his own conduct has been improper or fraudulent.[14]

e. Deceit and Concealment. An unjust judgment obtained by means of deceit, artifice, or concealment may be enjoined in equity, there being no adequate remedy against it at law.[15] On the other hand no party is bound to furnish weapons to his adversary or plead himself out of court; and the mere fact that he keeps silence and does not communicate to the court or to the adverse party facts which would defeat his recovery is not such fraud as will justify a court of equity in enjoining the resulting judgment.[16]

dence was collusively withheld from the court, unless it also appears that the judgment was in fact unjust. Hoboken First Baptist Church v. Syms, 51 N. J. Eq. 363, 28 Atl. 461. And where one party misrepresents to the court the contents of a bill of exceptions it is no ground for equitable relief if the other party or his counsel was negligent in failing to scrutinize the paper. Bigby v. Powell, 25 Ga. 244, 71 Am. Dec. 168. And in a case in Texas, where the drawing up of a decree was left to the attorney of the successful party, who fraudulently framed it not in accordance with the judgment of the court, and caused it to be entered on the minutes, it was held that as it was the duty of the judge to see and approve such minutes the decree as entered must be regarded as the deliberate act of the court, and not to be interfered with in equity. A. 50, holding that a default judgment, recovered by means of false statements in respect to a fact essential to the right of recovery, which deceived both defendant and the court, cannot be set aside by a suit in equity, as this is not a collateral or extrinsic fraud.

Compromise judgment induced by deceit.— A bill in equity for relief against a compromise judgment should be sustained where it alleges that complainant's consent thereto was obtained by a fraudulent withholding by defendant of material facts, well known to him, and unknown to complainant, which facts which probably have controlled the case in complainant's favor, the facts being fully stated. Guild v. Phillips, 44 Fed. 461. But such a judgment will not be set aside on account of false representations by defendants that they were without property and that nothing could be realized by execution against them, when no representations were made with respect to the merits of the cause of action. U. S. v. Beebe, 180 U. S. 343, 21 S. Ct. 371, 45 L. ed. 563. And see Wilson v. Schaefer, 107 Tenn. 300, 64 S. W. 208.

Forged agreement.— Equity will relieve against a judgment entered on an agreement to which one defendant's name was forged, although the co-defendant who forged it was the only culpable party. Lindsley v. Sparks, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 66, 48 S. W. 204.

Character of concealment, how far material.— Equity will refuse to interfere on the ground that the attorney of the opposite party had fraudulently concealed a written agreement, where there was no concealment of the character of the demand thereon. Cairo, etc., R. Co. v. Titus, 30 N. J. Eq. 502.

False conclusion of law.— In a suit to quiet title an allegation of ownership of the property, constituting a false deduction from the facts pleaded, is not such a false statement as will constitute fraud or imposition on the court justifying the interference of equity. Ruppin v. McLachlan, 122 Iowa 343, 98 N. W. 153.

16. Illinois.— Field v. Flanders, 40 Ill. 470; Durham v. Field, 30 Ill. App. 121.

f. Collusion. Equity will restrain the enforcement of a judgment which was unjustly obtained by means of a conspiracy or fraudulent collusion.[17] This rule is applied where the collusive agreement was between plaintiff and the judge,[18] between plaintiff or his attorney and defendant's attorney,[19] between plaintiff and one of defendants, to the prejudice of another,[20] between plaintiff and the officers of a defendant corporation, who are bound to protect its interests,[21] between the parties to the action, to the injury of a third person having an interest in the property in suit,[22] or between plaintiff and an executor or administrator, being defendant, resulting in the establishment of an invalid claim against the estate.[23] But fraud of this kind is no ground for relief in equity if it could have been pleaded in defense to the original action,[24] and in any case the collusion or connivance alleged must be clearly and fully made out.[25]

g. Perjury and Subornation of Perjury. Although some few cases sustain the doctrine that equity may grant relief against a judgment obtained by means of false testimony,[26] and especially where it was procured, concocted, and inten-

Rule in Louisiana.— An action of nullity lies against a judgment obtained on false documents, although not forged, and although the party using them was innocent of any evil intention. Beauchamp v. McMicken, 7 Mart. N. S. 605. But not where the existence of such documents was known to defendant before trial, or where the judgment was predicated on the false testimony of a witness, whom defendant made no effort

tionally produced by the successful party,[27] yet the weight of authority is to the effect that there is no ground for equitable interference with a judgment in the fact that perjury was committed by such party or his witnesses at the trial,[28] or that he suborned the witnesses and conspired with them to secure a judgment in his favor.[29]

h. Taking Judgment Contrary to Agreement — (1) In General. If defendant in an action at law, having a good defense, is induced to refrain from setting it up, in consequence of the promises or representations of plaintiff, upon which he honestly relies, and the latter, fraudulently and in violation of the agreement, proceeds to take a judgment, equity will grant relief by injunction.[30]

In Minnesota a statute authorizes an action to set aside a judgment obtained by means of the "perjury, subornation of perjury, or any fraudulent act, practice or representation of the prevailing party." Minn. Gen. St. (1894) § 5434. And see Watkins v. Landon, 67 Minn. 136, 69 N. W. 711. Under such a statute it is held that such an action cannot be maintained upon the bare allegation that upon an issue of fact squarely made so that each party knows what the other will attempt to prove, and where neither has the right or is under any necessity to depend on the other to prove the fact to be as he himself claims it, there was false or perjured testimony by the successful party or his witnesses. defendant is not chargeable with negligence in failing to prevent the entry of judgment when he could have done so,[34] and provided there is no longer an adequate remedy at law against the judgment.[35]

13. Newly Discovered Evidence — a. In General. Where a defendant was prevented from making good his defense by the lack of evidence to support it, being ignorant of the existence of such evidence and unable to discover it by the exercise of due diligence, equity will relieve him against the judgment, upon the subsequent discovery and production of such evidence.[36] Statutes authorizing the courts of law to grant new trials on the ground of newly discovered evidence do not divest the courts of equity of the power to grant a new trial in cases where the facts will justify it.[37]

b. Diligence in Former Proceedings. Equity will not grant relief against a judgment on the ground of newly discovered evidence, if the evidence could have been discovered before trial by the exercise of care and diligence in searching for it or in interrogating persons cognizant of the facts.[38]

Failure to take nonsuit.— In an action concerning realty, plaintiff, being unable to find a certain deed which constituted a link in his chain of title, relied upon a certified copy of its record, which was excluded by the court, and judgment rendered for defendant. Afterward the deed was found and plaintiff brought suit to set aside the judgment. But it was held that he was not entitled to such relief, since he might have averted the judgment by taking a nonsuit. Brownson v. Reynolds, 77 Tex. 254, 13 S. W. 986.

c. Character and Effect of Evidence. To justify a court of equity in enjoining a judgment on the ground of newly discovered evidence, it must appear that such evidence is material,[39] and is of such a character and strength that it is reasonably certain that it would have produced an opposite result if produced at the trial,[40] some cases even going so far as to hold that the new evidence must be incontrovertible and conclusive.[41] Further it will not be sufficient for this purpose if it appears to be merely cumulative or corroborative,[42] or merely intended to impeach some of the witnesses at the former trial.[43]

14. Meritorious Defense — a. Necessity in General. A court of equity will not interfere with the enforcement of a judgment recovered at law, unless it is unjust and unconscionable; and therefore such relief will not be granted unless the complainant shows that he has a good and meritorious defense to the original action.[44] The only exception to this rule is in the case of a judgment which is Evidence obtainable on cross-examination. — Equity will not relieve against a judgment at law when the facts relied on as a ground for relief, although discovered since the trial, might have been established at such trial on cross-examination. Cairo, etc., R. Co. v. Titus, 27 N. J. Eq. 102.

But the fact that defendant might have obtained evidence by a bill of discovery or otherwise will not affect his right to relief if he had no reason to suspect the existence of such evidence. Winthrop v. Lane, 3 Desauss. Eq. (S. C.) 310.

39. Cairo, etc., R. Co. v. Titus, 28 N. J. Eq. 269. But there is no rule requiring newly discovered evidence relied on as a basis for equitable relief against a judgment to be in writing. Cantey v. Blair, 1 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 41.

Parsons v. Nutting, 45 Iowa 404.

Minnesota.— Magin v. Lamb, 43 Minn. 80, 44 N. W. 675, 19 Am. St. Rep. 216.

even this is not universally admitted, but some courts require a meritorious defense to be shown even where the judgment is void.[46]

b. Nature of Defense. Within the meaning of the rule just stated, equity will not relieve against a judgment on the showing of a merely technical defense,[47] or one which would be considered unconscionable.[48] But immorality tainting the consideration of the transaction on which the judgment was founded is regarded as a meritorious defense,[49] and so also, it seems, is the statute of limitations.[50]

C. Procedure and Practice — 1. Form of Proceeding. Where application is to be made to a court possessing equitable jurisdiction, for relief against a judgment, it should be in the form of a separate and independent proceeding commenced by bill,[51] or, under the code practice, by complaint,[52] or, where the adjudication to be impeached is a decree in equity, either by petition in the original action or by original bill in the nature of a bill of review, according to the circumstances,[53] praying for an injunction to restrain the enforcement of the judgment or other appropriate relief.[54] But in those jurisdictions where legal and equitable powers are vested in the same courts, it is permissible for the judgment debtor, when suit is brought on the judgment, to set up in his answer the grounds on which he claims that it should be vacated or enjoined, and demand appropriate relief, whereupon the answer will be treated as equivalent to a bill in equity.[55]

The writ of supersedeas is not the proper remedy by which to vacate a judgment for usury. White v. Harris, 5 Humphr. (Tenn.) 421.

A bill or action to vacate or enjoin a judgment cannot be treated as a motion in the original cause or a petition for a new trial, where it is not framed on that theory and the only relief asked is a perpetual injunction. Action of nullity in Louisiana.— If it is claimed that an adjudication is absolutely void, for illegality or other cause, resort should be had to an action of nullity, and not an injunction. Cook v. State, 16 La. 288. And see Woolfolk v. Woolfolk, 30 La. Ann. 139. But the action of a creditor to have a judgment recognizing a homestead in favor of his judgment debtor declared inoperative and void, because the conditions which were the motive of the judgment have ceased to exist, rests on the principle that when anything happens to destroy the force of a judgment it ceases to have effect, and must not be confounded with action for the nullity of the judgment, as provided in La. Code Pr. c. 6, § 3. Denis v. Gayle, 40 La. Ann. 286, 4 So. 3.

2. Jurisdiction. The question of what courts may entertain a bill for equitable relief against a judgment, and the question of their jurisdiction, have already been considered.[56]

3. Venue. A bill in equity for relief against a judgment should as a general rule be brought in the county or other judicial district in which the judgment was rendered,[57] unless an objection on this ground is waived,[58] or a change of venue is granted for due cause.[59] But in some cases the proper venue of the action has been held to be the place where defendant resides, although it be other than the place of the rendition of the judgment,[60] and in others that when the judgment is sought to be enforced against specific property, an action to restrain such enforcement may be maintained at the place where the property is situated.[61]

4. Parties — a. In General. To a bill in equity to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment recovered at law, all the parties to the original action should be made parties,[62] and also any other persons whose rights would or might be affected by the grant of the relief asked.[63]

b. Joinder of Plaintiffs. Where a judgment is recovered against two or more as joint defendants, all should join as plaintiffs in an action to enjoin its enforcement or be made parties.[64] And the rule is the same where the judgment was recovered jointly against a principal and surety.[65] So also tenants in common may sue jointly to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment in ejectment, although they were not all made defendants in the ejectment.[66]

c. Defendants. A bill in equity for relief against a judgment should join as defendants all persons really and beneficially interested in the judgment, or whose rights are liable to be affected by the injunction,[67] including plaintiff or joint plaintiffs in whose name the judgment stands,[68] the party for whose use the action was really brought, although he is not the nominal plaintiff,[69] the assignee as well as the assignor of the judgment,[70] persons claiming or acquiring interests in the property specifically affected by the judgment,[71] and any persons who participated a judgment, where it is necessary, to protect an attorney's lien, that he should be made a party thereto, the court will allow him to intervene. Patrick v. Leach, 17 Fed. 476, 3 McCrary 555.

in an alleged fraud, charged as the means whereby the judgment was obtained, although they were not parties to the original action.[72] If the action is brought against the sheriff or other officer holding process under the judgment to restrain him from proceeding for its collection the judgment plaintiff should be joined as a defendant;[73] but where the suit is against the judgment creditor, it is not necessary to make the sheriff a party, unless it be under special statutory provisions.[74]

5. Process and Service. In a suit in equity to enjoin a judgment, the respondent must be brought before the court by a proper service of process; service by publication, he being a non-resident, will not in the absence of a statute so providing give jurisdiction.[75] But service of the subpœna may well be made on the attorney of record for plaintiff in the original action.[76]

6. Release of Errors. By statute in some states the complainant in a bill in equity for relief against a judgment at law is required to file or indorse on his bill a release of errors, and if this is not done no injunction will be granted.[77] In other states a release is necessary only when required by the court.[78] These requirements have, however, been held inapplicable to proceedings in chancery, or those in their nature equitable,[79] or in a case where the judgment is not merely erroneous but is void.[80] The omission of such a release is not in any case ground for dismissing the bill.[81] A release when so given applies only to errors in the legal proceedings which might be taken advantage of in the appellate court, and does not affect the remedy of the party in equity.[82]

injunction may be granted where the judgment appears to have been obtained by fraud, mistake, or surprise,[83] or to await the determination of issues upon which the rights of the parties depend.[84] But this action will not ordinarily be taken unless plaintiff's equity is clear, or at least supported by a strong prima facie case,[85] and not where the judgment appears to rest upon a good and valuable consideration,[86] where the judgment has already been enforced by execution before the filing of the bill,[87] or where it is not shown that the refusal of the injunction will cause serious injury to the complainant.[88]

b. Proceedings to Obtain. Where a temporary injunction against a judgment is asked, notice of the application must be served on defendant.[89] And further, the complainant must furnish security.[90] But in most states the ordinary injunction bond is considered sufficient for this purpose, and he is not required to bring into court the amount of the judgment, unless under extraordinary circumstances.[91] Elsewhere, however, it is necessary for him to deposit in court the amount of the judgment, unless the court will accept a sufficient bond conditioned to pay the judgment, in place of the actual deposit.[92]

c. Continuance or Dissolution — (i) In General. If the rights of the parties depend on unsettled issues of fact, the preliminary injunction will ordinarily be continued until the hearing and determination.[93] But it may be dissolved if the court becomes satisfied that it ought never to have been granted,[94] or for want of a release of errors,[95] or for want of prosecution on the part of the complainant,[96] or where the amount proposed to be set off against the judgment, for which purpose the injunction was sued out, bears an insignificant proportion to the amount of the judgment,[97] or where the judgment was recovered by a vendor of land for the purchase-money, and was enjoined on the ground of a defect or failure of title, it should be dissolved on his exhibiting a good title or tendering a good and sufficient deed, as the case may be.[98] But the injunction should not be dissolved for a mere defect of parties.[99]

(ii) On Answer. When the respondent's answer denies the equity of the complainant's bill, and fully and explicitly negatives all its essential allegations, the preliminary injunction should in general be dissolved.[1] But this will not be

Modification.— Where a preliminary injunction was granted restraining the enforcement of a judgment to allow the complainant to set off another judgment against it, and it appears that the complainant's judgment is less in amount than the judgment enjoined, the injunction should be modified so as to permit the respondent to proceed to collect the excess of his judgment over the amount of complainant's judgment. A general allegation of injury is not sufficient to entitle the party to equitable relief from a judgment. Lawson v. Bettison, 12 Ark. 401.

Fraudulent judgment.—A party may enjoin the enforcement of a judgment obtained by fraud, without alleging that irreparable injury would ensue unless such relief was granted. Byars v. Justin, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 686. And see Brown v. Byam, 59 Iowa 52, 12 N. W. 770, holding that, on petition to vacate a judgment on the ground of fraud, where fraud has been clearly shown, a presumption of prejudice should follow, unless the court is able to say from the record that the prejudice is not material. But on the other hand, in McNair v. Toler, 21 Minn. 175, it is held that the complaint must show, not only the commission of the fraud, but also damages resulting therefrom to plaintiff.

(B) Newly Discovered Evidence. A bill for relief in equity against a judgment at law on the ground of newly discovered evidence must set forth such evidence in detail, so that the court may judge of its nature, materiality, and weight;[11] and it must also aver that the complainant was ignorant of it at the time of the trial at law,[12] and show, not merely that he was diligent in seeking to discover it before the trial, but what efforts he made for that purpose and what degree of diligence he employed.[13]

(C) Fraud. If fraud is the ground on which the aid of equity in relieving against a judgment is asked, it is not sufficient to incorporate in the bill a general allegation of fraud, deceit, or misconduct, but the specific facts constituting the alleged fraud must be set forth particularly.[14] On the other hand if the facts

Want of jurisdiction.— A petition which alleges that there was no service of process on the judgment defendant, that he did not employ counsel or authorize any one to employ counsel to represent him in the suit, and that he knew nothing about the suit until after the rendition of judgment therein, sufficiently shows a lack of jurisdiction as a basis for equitable relief. Rule stated.— In Mulford v. Cohn, 18 Cal. 42, the rule is thus fully stated: The bill must show that the facts are of controlling force; that they were unknown to defendant at the time of the trial; that he used proper diligence in preparing for trial and procuring evidence, and without his fault or negligence was unable to procure it; that it is now within his control and can be produced on another trial; and the facts to be proved should be particularly stated, with the names of the witnesses, and the bearing and relevancy of the proposed proof; also the time and manner of discovery of the facts, and the reason why a motion for a new trial was not made during the term, in the court trying the case.

False testimony.— A petition in equity for a new trial at law on the ground that the judgment was recovered on the false testimony of a certain witness should state that the testimony of such witness was false, and should also give the names and residences of the witnesses by whom plaintiff can show a state of facts contrary to that testified to by the witness impeached. are so set forth, the bill is sufficient, although it lacks a specific allegation of fraud.[15]

(v) Averments to Exonerate Complainant. The complainant in a suit in equity for relief against a judgment at law must exonerate himself; that is, his bill must contain proper averments to show that the judgment against him was not attributable to his own negligence or fault, and that he has been diligent in seeking to make his defense, and he must set forth the facts which he relies on as showing such diligence.[16]

(vi) No Adequate Remedy at Law. Further the complainant must allege that he has no adequate remedy at law against the judgment, or if the case be so,

Fraudulent judgment.—A bill to enjoin the execution of a judgment obtained by fraud need not aver that the respondent is insolvent. Smith v. Schwed, 6 Fed. 455, 2 McCrary 441.

19. Miller v. Curry, 53 Cal. 665, holding, however, that while a court of equity may in a proper case enjoin a sale of real property under an execution the bill cannot properly ask such relief against the enforcement of two separate executions in favor of different judgment creditors.

Injunction and vacation of judgment.— A bill praying for an injunction to restrain the collection of a judgment and the levy of an execution thereunder, and also that the judgment be decreed to be void and of no effect may be treated simply as a bill for an injunction, since the invalidity of the judgment would be implied in the grant of a perpetual injunction against it. Weaver v. Poyer, 70 Ill. 567.

Injunction and damages.— A bill for an injunction against a judgment on the ground of its having been obtained by fraud may also under the statute in Minnesota include a demand for damages against the judgment plaintiff for procuring the issue and levy of an execution on the judgment. Baker v. Sheehan, 29 Minn. 235, 12 N. W. 704.

Vacation of mortgage.— A complaint in an action to set aside a judgment against a corporation, as being in fraud of its creditors and obtained by the collusion of certain directors, may also ask the court to set aside a mortgage and a bill of sale alleged to have been executed by the corporation with intent to defraud creditors. Cross complaint.— In an action to enjoin a sheriff from executing a judgment in a suit in which plaintiff was not a party, the person in whose favor the judgment was rendered cannot file a cross complaint, setting up a new cause of action against plaintiff, independent of the judgment on which the execution is issued, and in which the original defendant has no interest. East Riverside Irr. Dist. v. Holcomb, 126 Cal. 315, 58 Pac. 817.

hypothesis on which the complainant's equity could be founded.[26] If want of jurisdiction in the equity court appears on the face of the bill, the objection may be taken by motion to dismiss,[27] or if the bill appears to lack equity, the respondent may demur.[28]

d. Issues, Proof, and Variance. To enable the court to act upon an application for relief against a judgment, it is necessary that the parties should frame and present distinct issues as to the matters they mean to contest,[29] and the hearing will be confined to the issues thus raised, excluding all collateral matters and questions lying outside the pleadings.[30] Thus if the judgment is assailed on the ground of fraud or want of jurisdiction, the court will not enter upon an inquiry as to the validity of the obligation sued on or the merits of the original action.[31]

9. Defenses — a. In General. A bill for an injunction against a judgment may be defended on any ground destructive of the equity set up by the complainant,[32] but the judgment attacked cannot be pleaded as a bar or as res judicata.[33]

b. Limitations. In the absence of a statute controlling the time of application to a court of equity for relief against a judgment, no particular lapse of time will Answer of third parties.— Where judgment is recovered on a bill of exchange by the holder thereof, and a bill is filed to enjoin it, joining as defendants such holder and the drawer of the bill of exchange, the injunction ought not to be granted until the coming in of the answer of the judgment plaintiff, the holder of the bill as aforesaid, although the other respondent admits that he had paid the judgment, as stated in complainant's bill, and is the only person interested in it, for such admission may be false and collusive. Matters admitted or not denied.— Where the bill alleges as a reason why the complainant did not make his defense at law that he was deceived by his attorney as to the time of the trial this fact must be proved, although it is not denied by the answer. Cowan v. Price, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 173, 4 Am. Dec. 627. So if the answer admits that the jury did not allow a credit to which the complainant was entitled, but it appears upon calculation upon the data on which the verdict was made that the credit was allowed, the judgment will not be enjoined. Pogue v. Shotwell, 2 Dana (Ky.) 281. On the other hand, where the bill charges the respondent with having failed to do an act on which the equity of his claim depends, and the answer is silent as to that allegation, the court will consider this an admission that he has not done the act in question, and will decree against him. Page v. Winston, 2 Munf. (Va.) 298.

Waiver of estoppel.— Where a bill filed to set aside a judgment showed that complainant had a meritorious defense, which without laches he had been prevented from making, but disclosed that the judgment had been so affirmed on writ of error as to preclude any injury into the merits, it was held that defendant, by an answer joining issue both on the allegation denying laches and those attacking the justice of the original judgment, waived the right to rely on the estoppel. Georgia.— Crawford v. Cantrell, 40 Ga. 284.

Indiana.— The three-year statute of limitations does not apply to an action to set aside a judgment on the ground that it was obtained by fraud. Nealis v. Dicks, 72 Ind. 374; Quick v. Goodwin, 19 Ind. 438. See Underwood v. Deckard, 34 Ind. App. 198, 70 N. E. 383, exception as to minors.

Iowa.— Relief against a decree not sustained by the evidence cannot be granted in an action brought, after the time for appeal has expired, to set the decree aside. Geyer v. Douglass, 85 Iowa 93, 52 N. W. 111.

Louisiana.— An action to annul a judgment must be brought within one year from its rendition; if on the ground of fraud, within one year from the discovery of the fraud. And see Martin v. Walker, 43 La. Ann. 1019, 10 So. 365. And prescription does not run against an action to annul a judgment confessed by a minor. De Moss v. Cobb, 23 La. Ann. 336. Continuous resistance to the enforcement of a judgment interrupts the statute of limitations from running as regards the action of nullity. De St. Romes v. Carondelet Canal, etc., Co., 24 La. Weber v. Frost, 22 La. Ann. 348.

Mississippi.— A bill of review must be filed within two years. Bowen v. Seale, 45 Miss. 30.

Nebraska.— An action to set aside a judgment on the ground of fraud must be brought within four years after the discovery of the facts constituting the fraud, or facts sufficient, if pursued, to lead to such discovery. Ritchey v. Seeley, (Nebr. 1905) 102 N. W. 256; Hughes v. Housel, 33 Nebr. 703, 50 N. W. 1127; Boone County v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 139 U. S. 684, 11 S. Ct. 687, 35 L. ed. 319. cannot be pleaded where the institution of proceedings within the time limited was prevented by the fraud of the adverse party,[37] or where he has been a non-resident during the running of the statutory period.[38] And laches is not imputable to a complainant who takes all the time which the statute allows him.[39]

c. Laches of Complainant. One who desires to invoke the assistance of equity as against a judgment at law must act with reasonable promptness, and relief will not be granted to a complainant who has delayed his application to equity, without adequate excuse, for such a considerable period of time as to be chargeable with laches.[40] But however great the lapse of time since the rendition of the Texas.— In general, a suit for an injunction against a judgment must be brought within one year after its rendition. Miller v. Clements, 54 Tex. 351; Cook v. Baldridge, 39 Tex. 250; Harrison v. Crumb, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 991. But this does not apply where the pretended judgment is a mere nullity (Cooke v. Burnham, 32 Tex. 129), or where the injunction is sought on account of some matter arising since the rendition of the judgment (Easley v. Bledsoe, 59 Tex. 488), or where the application is to reform the judgment by vacating a portion thereof, charging certain land with a lien (Kempner v. Jordan, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 275, 26 S. W. 870). If injunction is sought on the ground of fraud, the action may be brought within four years after the discovery of the fraud. Foust v. Warren, (Tex. Civ. judgment, the applicant is not to be charged with laches if he was ignorant of its existence, or of his defenses against it, and acts promptly after discovering the facts.[41] And so, where an infant proceeds promptly, upon attaining his majority, to show cause against a judgment, the defense of laches cannot be made.[42] Nor is laches imputable to a party who, during the interval, has been contesting the validity of the judgment in the courts of law or attempting to obtain relief against it in those courts.[43]

10. Evidence — a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof. On a bill in equity against a judgment at law, presumptions will be indulged in favor of the jurisdiction of the court, the regularity of its proceedings, and the validity of the judgment.[44] Also it will be presumed that an appearance entered for a party by an attorney was duly authorized,[45] and fraud in procuring the judgment will neither be presumed nor inferred from circumstances which are not inconsistent with good faith.[46] In general the burden of proof is upon the party demanding relief against the judgment to establish by sufficient evidence all the facts on which he relies as the basis of his application.[47]

ent, if denying positively the charges of the bill, will be so far evidence in his favor that the bill must be dismissed unless complainant sustains his case by corroborative evidence.[59] But the answer of one defendant cannot be considered as evidence against another.[60]

d. Weight and Sufficiency. To justify a court of equity in enjoining the enforcement of a judgment, the complainant's case — including alike the specific grounds on which he asks equitable relief, his excuse for not making his defense in the original action, and the showing that he himself is free from fault or negligence — must be supported by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence, preponderating distinctly in his favor.[61]

11. Hearing, Determination, and Relief — a. Trial or Hearing. The hearing on a bill for an injunction against a judgment will be restricted to the issues raised and presented by the pleadings,[62] and it may be dismissed for failure of the complainant to appear and follow up his application,[63] or a perpetual injunction may be decreed if there is no issue of fact to be tried.[64] If there are disputed questions of fact involved, or the evidence appears to be conflicting or contradictory, it is in the discretion of the court to send the issues to a master or commissioner for determination,[65] or to a jury,[66] on interrogatories or under proper limitations as to the questions they are to consider,[67] and in this case the court should make its decree in accordance with the facts as found by the jury.[68]

b. Judgment or Decree. The decree or judgment of the court of equity upon a bill of this kind may according to the circumstances be so framed as to dissolve the preliminary injunction, leaving the complainant to prove his bill,[69] or make

Fraud.— Facts which might show a motive to fraud in procuring a judgment, but do not show fraud itself, are not sufficient to justify setting aside a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction. Moore v. Parker, 25 Iowa 355.

Foreign judgment.— An order of seizure and sale, obtained on a foreign judgment purporting to have been rendered on the confession of defendant made through his attorney, will be enjoined, where the transcript of the foreign record has a suspicious appearance on its face, and where, although plaintiff in injunction denied under oath the authority of the attorney to confess judgment for him, and swore he never abandoned his defense, no evidence is offered to disprove these allegations. Dunlap v. Hundly, 2 La. Ann. 212.

62. See supra, X, C, 8, d. But in a suit to set aside a judgment as obtained by fraud, plaintiff's statement in his petition as to what was the issue in the action, the judgment in which is attacked, is a legal conclusion; and the court will examine the pleadings in such action as copied in the pleadings in the present suit, to ascertain what the issues really were. Hamilton v. McLean, 169 Mo. 51, 68 S. W. 930.

Merits of original action.— On an application of this kind, the equity court will not reëxamine matters determined in the suit at law. See supra, X, B, 10, a. But it is said that where the application to enjoin the judgment is based on the ground of surprise, the court may consider the merits of the original case. Philips v. Samuel, 76 Mo. 657.

Changing nature of bill.— A bill filed to set aside an alleged fraudulent judgment and deeds made thereunder, to which answers have been filed, on which issue has been joined, evidence presented, and hearing had, cannot on the argument be considered to be a bill to enforce specific performance of an agreement. 69. Where the temporary injunction is dissolved on an answer containing an unqualified denial of the charges of the bill the court should not dismiss the bill, if there is sufficient equity on its face to give the court jurisdiction, for the complainant has a right, after his injunction is dissolved, to prove his bill. Bettison v. Jennings, 8 Ark. 287;

the injunction perpetual,[70] or set aside the judgment complained of,[71] or grant a new trial in the action at law.[72]

c. Relief Awarded. On a bill for an injunction against a judgment at law, properly framed, the court has authority to grant the parties any and all relief to which they may appear to be entitled,[73] including the vacation or annulment of the judgment,[74] or a perpetual injunction against its enforcement,[75] and the restitution of money already collected on it,[76] although the decree should not go beyond the prayer of the petition or bill.[77] If the judgment is attacked on the ground of fraud, want of notice, or other like cause, a decree restraining its enforcement and putting the parties in statu quo will generally be proper,[78] remitting them to the court of law for a new trial, or other means of working out their rights,[79] although there are decisions favoring the power of the equity court to go into the whole case and hear and adjudicate finally upon the merits.[80] Relief may also be granted as to one of two or more complainants, and denied as to the rest,[81] and where it appears that any part of the judgment is justly due,

Thompson v. Adams, 2 Ind. 151; Barton v. Rushton, 4 Desauss. Eq. (S. C.) 373. On the other hand it is error to render a final judgment on overruling defendant's motion to dissolve the injunction. Knox v. Coroner, 13 La. Ann. 88.

70. But where a bill was brought to enjoin proceedings on a judgment at law, and it appeared that no injunction bond was executed, or process issued, it was held that a decree that "the injunction be perpetuated" was irregular. Pilcher v. Higgins, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 16.

71. On setting aside a judgment obtained by fraud or mistake, no equitable element existing in the original controversy, the adjudication of the original controversy on the merits is omitted, and the parties are left to pursue their remedy in the legal forum. Lieserowitz v. West Chicago St. R. Co., 80 Ill. App. 248.

72. On a bill in chancery to enjoin a judgment at law and for a retrial, there must not be a decree before such retrial annulling the judgment and granting a new trial in the law court, but the judgment is allowed to stand as security for what may be found to be justly due, and the injunction allowed to stand until after the retrial, and the decree should direct an issue or issues to be tried in the law court to find what the nature of the case requires, and upon the verdict the equity court should perpetuate or dissolve the judgment, wholly or in part. Mesne profits in ejectment.— Where an injunction is granted to restrain the enforcement of a judgment in ejectment, it should also forbid proceedings to collect the judgment for mesne profits. Cummins v. Latham, 4 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 97.

Judgment on injunction bond.— Where an injunction is dissolved, and a judgment recovered on the injunction bond, but afterward, on a second bill for injunction against the same judgment at law, the bill is held sufficient and a perpetual injunction decreed, it should be so framed as to prevent the respondent from collecting his judgment on the injunction bond. the injunction may be so framed as to permit the collection of that part, while forbidding proceedings to enforce it as to the residue.[82]

d. Operation and Effect of Injunction. An injunction against a judgment at law operates as a release of errors.[83] It is strictly in personam to restrain the respondent from using the judgment unconscientiously;[84] it does not necessarily negative the authority of the court rendering the judgment or the legality of its action, nor does it, by relation back, make the proceedings at law irregular,[85] or strip the judgment of its usual incidents and consequences, except in regard to proceedings to enforce it.[86] But the injunction will prevent the maintenance of an action upon the judgment,[87] whether at law or in equity.[88] But this does not prevent a proceeding to revive the judgment, upon the death of a party, by scire facias, although the injunction will operate upon the revived judgment as well as upon the original.[89] And an injunction effective only as to one of the parties to the judgment will not prevent its enforcement against the others.[90]

e. Conditions on Granting Relief. He who seeks relief in equity against a judgment must do equity; and it is competent and proper for the court to impose such terms upon him, or require him to submit to such orders or conditions, as may be necessary to adjust the rights of all parties in entire accordance with equity.[91] An order for an injunction to a sale under execution does not become

Who liable.— The statute in Mississippi (Code, § 572), providing that five per cent damages shall be allowed on the dissolution of an injunction staying proceedings for the collection of a judgment, applies exclusively to injunctions sued out by parties to the judgment; and therefore only attorney's fees can be allowed where the injunction is sued out by a stranger to the judgment before final decree. Armstrong v. Fusz, (Miss. 1894) 16 So. 532. Compare Claytor v. Anthony, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 518.

94. Alabama.— Damages to the amount of six per cent on the judgment may be allowed where the injunction was obtained for delay. Wharton v. Jones, 49 Ala. 102; Weissinger v. Johnson, 13 Ala. 93; Crawford v. Mobile Bank, 5 Ala. 55.

District of Columbia.— Ten per cent per annum allowed as damages. Mason v. Muncaster, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 9,248, 3 Cranch C. C. 403.

Illinois.— Damages may be allowed not to exceed ten per cent of the amount of the judgment enjoined. Camp v. Bryan, 84 Ill. 250; Smith v. Powell, 50 Ill. 21; Off v. Title, etc., Co., 87 Ill. App. 472; Moriarity v. Galt, 23 Ill. App. 213.

Kentucky.— Ten per cent damages allowed. McIlvoy v. McIlvoy, 4 Dana 289; Elliot v. Krimbough, 6 J. J. Marsh. 634; Ward v. Davidson, 2 J. J. Marsh. 443; Southerland v. Crawford, 2 J. J. Marsh. 369; Noland v. Richards, 1 J. J. Marsh. 582; Davis v. Ballard, 7 T. B. Mon. 603. But the statute authorizes the allowance of damages only where the injunction was directed against a judgment at law, not where it was against a decree in chancery. Martin v. Wade, 5 T. B. Mon. 77; Head v. Perry, 1 T. B. Mon. 253. Earlier decisions in this state were disposed to deny the right to award damages in such a case. McCallister v. Dugan, 4 J. J. the effect would be to make the damages greater than the statutory limit.[96] Further, such statutes relate only to judgments for money; when the judgment is of a different character, the amount of damages becomes a question of fact which must be determined in an action on the bond.[97] Where the injunction did not extend to the whole judgment, but only stayed the collection of a part of it, damages should be awarded on that part only, when the injunction is dissolved.[98]

g. Appeal and Review. The decision of the court of chancery on a bill for an injunction against a judgment will not be disturbed on appeal where the evidence was conflicting,[99] or for immaterial irregularities in its action,[1] or on objections to the judgment not presented to the equity court.[2] But a decree for complainant will be reversed where the bill states no cause of action, or its want of equity is apparent on its face.[3]

h. Costs and Fees. Where a judgment debtor seeks relief in equity, on the ground of his having been prevented from making his defense at law, he is generally chargeable with the costs of the proceeding,[4] and especially where he might have obtained the same relief on application to the court of law,[5] or where his injunction is dissolved;[6] but otherwise costs are allowable to a successful complainant.[7]

See 30 Cent. Dig. tit. "Judgment," § 903.

Rule in North Carolina.— In ascertaining the damages sustained by reason of an injunction, reference must be had to the condition of the debt enjoined; and if, by reason of the delay, the judgment debtor has become insolvent, the whole debt would properly be included as damages sustained by it; but if his pecuniary circumstances remain unaltered, no damages will be allowed except the costs and disbursements. Errors considered.— On appeal in a suit to set aside a judgment, assignments of error alleged to have been committed on the trial of the former case cannot be considered. MacRitchie v. Stevens, (Ariz. 1904) 76 Pac. 478.

Matters not in record.— Where all the evidence given on a former trial is not contained in the record under review, the court cannot determine whether the judgment on such trial was the result of false testimony. Barr v. Post, 59 Nebr. 361, 80 N. W. 1041, 80 Am. St. Rep. 680. Whether a given state of facts constitutes excusable neglect so as to warrant the vacation of a judgment, is a question of law which the supreme court cannot decide where the facts are not set out in the record. Jones v. Swepson, 79 N. C. 510.

Construction of findings of lower court.— A finding that by reason of certain facts defendant fraudulently took and obtained an unfair advantage over plaintiff will not be considered upon appeal as a finding that judgment was obtained by fraud. XI. COLLATERAL IMPEACHMENT.

A. General Rule. A judgment rendered by a court having jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter, unless reversed or annulled in some proper proceeding, is not open to contradiction or impeachment, in respect to its validity, verity, or binding effect, by parties or privies, in any collateral action or proceeding.[8]

garnishment,[14] foreclosure,[15] partition,[16] or relating to realty.[17] So the rule applies to orders or judgments dismissing the cause,[18] vacating, modifying, or setting aside former judgments,[19] setting aside sales on execution,[20] distributing proceeds of execution sales,[21] distributing assigned estates,[22] settling accounts,[23] authorizing a receiver to pay claims[24] or to levy an assessment,[25] to scire facias to revive a judgment,[26] to judgments or orders for costs[27] or fixing attorney's fees,[28] to judgments forfeiting recognizances,[29] or to orders of restitution on vacating or reversing judgments.[30] Even conflicting orders made by a court of superior jurisdiction cannot be collaterally attacked in a court of inferior jurisdiction.[31]

2. Judgments on Confession or Consent. The rule against collateral attack applies to judgments entered upon confession, either in open court or under warrants of attorney,[32] and also to such as are rendered by consent of parties, as the result of a compromise or settlement.[33]

Void for want of jurisdiction.— Where a court assumes the power to punish a defendant for contempt by striking out his answer, and thereupon proceeds to enter a judgment pro confesso, it is void for want of jurisdiction, and may be impeached in a collateral proceeding. 3. JUDGMENTS BY DEFAULT. A judgment entered by default, the court having jurisdiction, is as conclusive against collateral impeachment as any other form of judgment.[34]

4. TAX JUDGMENTS. Judgments rendered in statutory actions to enforce the payment of delinquent taxes are not impeachable in any collateral proceeding on account of errors or irregularities, or for anything less than a total want of jurisdiction.[35]

In this state it was at one time held that a judgment by default, in a statutory proceeding for the condemnation and sale of land for delinquent taxes, was not conclusive on the taxpayer and might be collaterally impeached. See Gage v. Pumpelly, 115 U. S. 454, 6 S. Ct. 136, 29 L. ed. 449. But this rule is very much narrowed by an amendment to the revenue law, which provides that the tax judgment shall estop all parties from raising objections which existed at or before the rendition of the judgment and could have been presented in defense thereto, and which makes the judgment conclusive evidence of its own regularity and validity in all collateral proceedings, except where the tax had been paid or the land was not liable for it. Taxes paid before suit.— It cannot be shown against such a judgment, in any collateral proceeding, that the taxes on the particular land had been actually paid before suit brought. Chauncey v. Wass, 35 Minn. 1, 25 N. W. 457, 30 N. W. 826; Cadmus v. Jackson, 52 Pa. St. 295.

Lack of assessment.— Such a judgment cannot be impeached collaterally on the ground that no assessment was made for the year in question. Gibbs v. Southern, 116 Mo. 204, 22 S. W. 713.

Invalidity of statute or ordinance.— It is not permitted to show in any collateral proceeding that the assessment on which the taxes were based was illegal and void, or that the statute or ordinance authorizing the assessment was unconstitutional or invalid. unless it be on the ground of a want of jurisdiction.[37] The rule applies also to a discharge in bankruptcy,[38] and no state court can properly hear objections or defenses against the legitimate effect of a discharge in bankruptcy, in any action proceeding before it.[39]

6. Judgments in Criminal Cases. A judgment rendered against defendant in a criminal prosecution cannot be collaterally impeached or contradicted in a subsequent proceeding, where it becomes material, even though it may appear to be erroneous unless it is absolutely void.[40]

7. Judgments and Orders in Special Proceedings. The rule against collateral attack applies to orders and judgments made by the courts in special proceedings taken before them, although not in the nature of contested actions, or purely ex parte, provided the matter involves a judicial determination and carries the sanction of the court's authority.[41]

8. Judgment Void on Its Face. If a judgment shows on its face that it is void for want of jurisdiction either of the person or the subject-matter, it is a mere for example, to decrees of partition made by a probate court having jurisdiction for that purpose.[51]

c. Coördinate Courts. A judgment at law cannot be impeached collaterally in a court of equity,[52] nor can the validity of a decree rendered by a court of equity be impeached in a collateral action at law.[53] So also a judgment of a state court cannot be reviewed in a collateral proceeding in a federal court,[54] except that the jurisdiction may be inquired into,[55] and conversely, the judgments and decrees of the federal courts, within their jurisdiction, cannot be collaterally assailed in the state courts, however erroneous they may appear to be.[56]

d. Boards and Officers Acting Judicially. The rule against collateral impeachment of judicial decisions applies to the determinations of state and county officers or boards of officers, who, although not constituting a court, are called upon to act judicially in matters of administration,[57] such as boards of county commissioners,[58] boards of land commissioners,[59] or railroad commissioners,[60] or a state board of equalization.[61]

C. What Constitutes Collateral Attack — 1. In General. The term "collateral" as used in this connection is opposed to "direct." If an action or proceeding is brought for the very purpose of impeaching or overturning the judgment, it is a direct attack upon it.[62] Such is a motion or other proceeding to Correcting improper use of judgment.— On an accounting by a judgment creditor, it is permissible to show that the judgment (by confession) was not given for any absolute debt, but as a conditional obligation, this being not so much an offer to impeach the validity of the judgment, as to show that it was given for one purpose and used for another. West Virginia.— Miller v. White, 46 W. Va. 67, 33 S. E. 332, 76 Am. St. Rep. 791.

Trespass to try title.— In this action any attack upon a judgment which forms the basis of the title of one of the parties, or enters into his title, will be considered a collateral impeachment of such judgment. Crawford v. McDonald, 88 Tex. 626, 33 S. W. 325; Lee v. Kingsbury, 13 Tex. 68, 62 Am. Dec. 546; Bouldin v. Miller, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 26 S. W. 133.

Garnishment.— The validity of a judgment cannot be questioned in garnishment proceedings based thereon. Whitworth v. Pelton, 81 Mich. 98, 45 N. W. 500; Cleveland Co-Operative Stove Co. v. Mehling, 21 Ohio Cir. Ct. 60, 11 Ohio Cir. Dec. 400.

Restoring lost record.— On proceedings to restore or reinstate a judgment, of which the record has been lost or destroyed, no attack upon the validity of the judgment can be allowed. Kanke v. Herrum, 48 Iowa 276; McFeeley v. Osborn, 19 La. Ann. 471.

Distribution of funds.— In a proceeding for the distribution of a fund in court among various claimants, no inquiry can be made into the validity of judgments on which their several claims are founded. Prayer for vacation of judgment.— Where defendant in an action on a judgment answers, asking to have the judgment set aside, the parties being the same, it amounts to a direct proceeding to have the judgment set or on a note given in satisfaction of the judgment,[71] or a proceeding to revive the judgment,[72] or proceedings supplementary to execution,[73] or bill in equity in aid of execution or to enforce the lien of the judgment,[74] or an action of ejectment,[75] or a proceeding by mandamus to compel the levy and collection of a tax to provide funds for the payment of the judgment, the debtor being a muncipal corporation.[76]

3. PROCEEDINGS TO PREVENT ENFORCEMENT OF JUDGMENT. According to some of the decisions, a suit in equity to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment constitutes a direct attack upon it;[77] according to others, such a proceeding is collateral.[78]

Invalidity may be shown.— In a proceeding of this kind, it may be shown that the judgment is absolutely void for want of jurisdiction (Moore v. Edgefield, 32 Fed. 498. Compare Boasen v. State, 47 Nebr. 245, 66 N. W. 303), and the writ of mandamus will be refused where it appears on the face of the record, not that mere error supervened in the rendition of the judgment, but that it rested upon no cause of action whatever (Brownsville Taxing Dist. v. Loague, 129 U. S. 493, 9 S. Ct. 327, 32 L. ed. 780).

Action to enjoin tax.— The same principles apply in an action to enjoin the collection of a tax levied to pay a judgment against a municipal corporation; the validity of the claim on which the judgment rests cannot be questioned, the judgment being conclusive against collateral attack by the municipality or by any individual taxpayer. But conceding the latter view to be correct, it is no objection to the maintenance of a suit for that purpose that it involves a collateral impeachment of the judgment, provided the demand for relief is based on want of jurisdiction, fraud, or some other distinctive ground of equitable interference, although it is not permissible in such an action to review mere errors or overthrow the judgment for mere irregularities.[79] And the same is true of an application for a writ of prohibition to forbid the court to enforce its judgment,[80] and of a direct action to impeach and avoid the judgment,[81] or of a cross complaint[82] or cross bill attacking the judgment in an action in which it is sought to be enforced.[83] But the validity of a judgment cannot be impeached on a motion to quash an execution issued on it.[84]

4. SEPARATE ACTION AGAINST PARTY OR OFFICER. The validity or correctness of a judgment cannot be impeached in a subsequent action brought by the former defendant against the former plaintiff, involving the same issues,[85] or in an action to recover back the money paid under the judgment,[86] or for fraud and conspiracy in obtaining the judgment.[87] Nor can it be impeached in an action of

A motion to set aside an execution, on the ground that the judgment was obtained by fraud, is a direct attack on the judgment, and not collateral; but otherwise, where the ground of the motion is that the judgment was dormant and that it contained entries dated prior to its date. Kelsey v. Wyley, 10 Ga. 371.

85. Smith v. Kelly, 2 Hall (N. Y.) 217.

Ejectment.— In Indiana, under a statute providing that defendant in ejectment may show, under a general denial, any defence "either legal or equitable," where plaintiff's title in such action is based on a sheriff's sale under a judgment by default, defendant may attack the judgment by showing that it was rendered on matters not in issue. Overpayment.— A purchaser having paid, by notes and in cash, for more goods than he received, allowed judgment to be recovered on the notes; but it was held that he might maintain an action for such overpayment, the judgment not being thereby impeached. Whitcomb v. Williams, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 228.

Breach of agreement to discontinue.— If a plaintiff agrees to discontinue the action, and in reliance thereon defendant makes no defense, but plaintiff nevertheless takes judgment, it is held, in Massachusetts, that an action will lie to recover damages for the fraud and breach of promise, as this does not replevin or trespass,[88] or a suit against the officers concerned in the entry of the judgment or its execution.[89]

D. Parties Affected by Rule Against Collateral Attack — 1. Parties and Privies. The rule forbidding the collateral impeachment of judgments applies to all persons who were parties to the action in which the judgment was rendered[90] and to all those who are in privity with them.[91]

For example the validity of the judgment cannot be impeached in an action against the sheriff for failure to return the execution (Vicksburg Grocery Co. v. Brennan, (Miss. 1896) 20 So. 845), nor in an action by one officer against another for the proceeds of a sale (Stephenson v. Newcomb, 5 Harr. (Del.) 150). But it is said that a suit on the bond of a clerk of court for charging illegal fees as costs is not a collateral attack on the judgment for costs. State v. Stevens, 103 Ind. 55, 2 N. See 30 Cent. Dig. tit. "Judgment," § 923.

Party improperly joined.— A person made a party to a partition proceeding, who has no interest in the land and is not a necessary or a proper party to the proceeding, and as to whom no adjudication is made, is not estopped to deny the validity of the sale. Miller v. Wright, 109 N. Y. 194, 16 N. E. 205.

Joint defendants.— Where a judgment rendered against several defendants is invalid as to some of them, for want of jurisdiction over them, it is not void in toto, and cannot be impeached collaterally by those as to whom the court had jurisdiction. Murdock v. Browder, 5 Mart. N. S. (La.) 677; Jasper County v. Mickey, (Mo. 1887) 4 S. W. 424; Holton v. Towner, 81 Mo. 360; Bailey v. McGinniss, 57 Mo. 362.

91. Johnson v. Thaxter, 7 Gray (Mass.) 242.

Corporation and stock-holders.— A stockholder in a corporation against which a judgment has been recovered, who may be made liable for its payment, is a privy in law and cannot attack the judgment collaterally. Came v. Brigham, 39 Me. 35; National Foundry, etc., Works v. Oconto Water Co., 68 Fed. 1006; Graham v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 14 Fed. 753.

Bondholder and trustee in a corporation mortgage are in privity, and the former cannot impeach a judgment to which the latter was a party, at least without alleging actual fraud. Kent v. Lake Superior Ship Canal, etc., Co., 144 U. S. 75, 12 S. Ct. 650, 36 L. ed. 352.

Municipal corporation and citizens.— A judgment against a school-district cannot be impeached collaterally by an inhabitant whose property has been taken to satisfy it. McLoud v. Selby, 10 Conn. 390, 27 Am. Dec. 689.

Executor and heirs.— A judgment against an executor is prima facie evidence of the debt, as against the heirs of decedent, and cannot be attacked by them collaterally save on the ground of fraud. Sidener v. Hawes, 37 Ohio St. 532; Atherton v. Atherton, 2 Pa. St. 112; Schmidt's Estate, 4 Pa. Dist. 161. Compare Woolridge v. Page, 1 Lea (Tenn.) 135; Neal v. McComb, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 10. See also Executors and Administrators, 18 Cyc. 1054.

Assignee for creditors.— An assignee for the benefit of creditors cannot collaterally impeach a judgment against his assignor. Johnson v. Thaxter, 7 Gray (Mass.) 242; Finley v. Houser, 22 Oreg. 562, 30 Pac. 494;

2. THIRD PERSONS IN GENERAL. A stranger to the record — who was not a party to the action in which the judgment was rendered nor in privity with a party — is not prohibited from impeaching the validity of the judgment in a collateral proceeding;[92] but in order to do so he must show that he has rights, claims, or interests which would be prejudiced or injuriously affected by the enforcement of the judgment,[93] and which accrued prior to its rendition.[94] Thus situated he may attack the judgment on the ground of want of jurisdiction,[95] or for fraud or collu-

People's Bank v. Williams, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1896) 36 S. W. 983. And persons claiming land under such assignee cannot collaterally assail a judgment rendered against the assignee subjecting the land to the payment of a creditor's claim. Gonzales v. Batts, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 421, 50 S. W. 403.

Partners.— Where a partnership note is executed by one partner, without the knowledge or consent of the others, to secure his individual debt, and judgment is recovered on it against the firm, the other partners may show, even collaterally, that the judgment is fraudulent. McNaughton's Appeal, 101 Pa. St. 550.

to injure the attacking creditor, or at least such as directly affects his interests; fraud practised upon the debtor is not sufficient.[2] And the privilege can be claimed only by a party having rights which had vested or accrued at the time the judgment was rendered, and which would be impaired or prejudiced if it were allowed full effect as against them.[3] Subsequent creditors cannot generally assail the prior judgment.[4]

E. Grounds For Collateral Impeachment — 1. Invalidity of Judgment — a. In General. A judgment which is absolutely void is entitled to no authority or respect, and therefore may be impeached in collateral proceedings by any one with whose rights or interests it conflicts.[5] But if the judgment is merely voidable, that is, so irregular or defective that it would be set aside or annulled on a proper direct application for that purpose, and not absolutely void, it is well Karnes v. Lloyd, 52 Ill. 113. See Fraudulent Conveyances, 20 Cyc. 398.

Proof required.— As the law always favors the stability and finality of judgments, it is held that a stranger who seeks in a collateral action to impeach a judgment as a fraud upon his rights must show the fraud by clear and satisfactory proof. settled as a general rule that it is impregnable to collateral impeachment so long as it stands unreversed and in force.[6]

b. Insufficient or Illegal Cause of Action. A judgment cannot be impeached collaterally on account of any illegality or insufficiency in the cause of action on which it is founded, this not being a jurisdictional defect or sufficient to render the judgment void.[7] Thus under this rule it is not permissible to attack the judgment on the ground that the claim in suit had been paid or satisfied,[8] or was not supported by a consideration,[9] or was not yet due at the time the action was brought,[10] or that the creditor, proceeding by attachment, had no such demand as would entitle him to use that process,[11] or on the ground that the cause of action was based on a gambling transaction,[12] or was in violation of the Sunday laws,[13] or was otherwise tainted with illegality.[14]

A judgment recovered by a public officer for services rendered under a fixed employment cannot be impeached on the ground of

c. Legal Disability of Parties. It is generally considered that a judgment against a person under the disability of coverture[15] or infancy,[16] or an insane person,[17] is not absolutely void, although it may be voidable, and therefore is not open to collateral attack. The same rule has been applied to a judgment obtained against a corporation after it had ceased to do business and transferred its property to a trustee for creditors.[18]

d. Death of Party Before Judgment. Where jurisdiction of the parties to an action has duly attached, the fact that one of them died before the rendition of the judgment, that fact not appearing of record, does not make the judgment absolutely void so as to permit its impeachment in a collateral proceeding.[19]

And the defect of jurisdiction may be either in respect to the person, the subject-matter, or the authority to render the particular judgment or decree, a judicial determination outside the issues, or otherwise beyond the scope of the court's authority, being entirely void.[22] But there is a distinction between those facts which involve the jurisdiction of the court over the parties and subject-matter and those quasi-jurisdictional facts, without allegation of which the court cannot properly proceed, and without proof of which a decree should not be made; absence of the former renders the judgment void and assailable collaterally, but not so as to the latter.[23] And although a judgment may be so uncertain and incomplete as to be void on its face and incapable of execution, that does not go to the jurisdiction of the court, and is not cause for avoiding it on that ground in a collateral proceeding.[24]

b. Want of Jurisdiction of the Person. Where the court undertaking to try an action and render judgment never acquired jurisdiction of the person of defendant, the judgment is entirely void, and may be so held in a collateral proceeding,[25]

A variation in the name of defendant, as stated in the decree and as stated in the bill, not of a nature to raise a substantial doubt of the identity of the person, is not sufficient, on collateral attack, to show that the court had no jurisdiction of his person. Wilkins v. McCorkle, 112 Tenn. 688, 80 S. W. 834.

Recitals of record.— Where the record of partition proceedings in the probate court failed to show that a minor interested was served with process, but the judgment recited that he was represented by guardian, and that the guardian qualified, the judgment unless defendant, by appearance in the action, has waived the original want of jurisdiction.[26]

c. Want of Process or Service. It is generally held permissible to impeach a judgment collaterally by showing that no process was ever issued in the action in which it was rendered,[27] or that, if issued, it was never served on defendant either actually or constructively, so that he had no notice of the action,[28] provided he did not enter an appearance.[29] But there are numerous decisions refusing to permit a collateral attack upon a judgment on this ground.[30]

d. Defects in Process or Service. A defect in the form or matter of the summons or other process not absolutely destructive of its validity, or an irregularity or defect in the service of it upon defendant, although material and sufficient to cause the reversal of the judgment on a proper application, does not deprive the court of jurisdiction, and therefore does not expose the judgment to collateral impeachment.[31] But if the defect in the process is so radical that it amounts to was not void or open to collateral attack. Penn v. Case, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 4, 81 S. W. 349.

no process at all — as where it wholly fails to give the party the information it is expected to convey — or if the attempted service is so faulty that it does not reach defendant at all, there is a want of jurisdiction, and the judgment will be impeachable collaterally.[32]

Misnomer.— Where a party is named in a summons by a name other than his own, and which is not a customary designation of him, a judgment by default, based on service of such summons, is void. Durst v. Ernst, 45 Misc. (N. Y.) 627, 91 N. Y. Suppl. 13.

Unsealed writ.— A judgment is not void in collateral proceedings because the summons in the original suit was without a seal. Krug v. Davis, 85 Ind. 309; Newman v. Mackey, (Tex. Civ. App. 1904) 83 S. W. 31; Moore v. Perry, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 204, 35 S. W. 838.

Want of attestation.— It cannot be objected collaterally to a judgment that the writ was not properly attested, because signed by a deputy instead of by the proper officer. Torrans v. Hicks, 32 Mich. 307.

Wrong date on a scire facias is not ground for collateral impeachment of the judgment. Chicago Dock, etc., Co. v. Kinzie, 93 Ill. 415.

Incorrect copy.— It is not a matter affecting the jurisdiction or exposing the judgmeut to collateral impeachment that the copy of the summons given to defendant was incorrect. Haughey v. Wilson, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 259.

Manner of service.— It is not ground for impeaching a judgment collaterally that service was made on defendant as an adult while he was an infant, that fact not appearing of record. Kennedy v. Baker, 159 Pa. St. 146, 28 Atl. 252. Nor that service was made by reading the summons to defendant instead of giving him a copy. Gandy v. Jolly, 35 Nebr. 711, 53 N. W. 658, 37 Am. Service by wrong persons.— Service of process by an officer not authorized to perform that function, or by one disqualified by interest in the suit, is an irregularity, but does not avoid the judgment collaterally. Russell v. Durham, 29 S. W. 16, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 516; Howard v. Lock, 22 S. W. 332, 15 Ky. L. No. 10,634, 4 Dill. 436.

Service on corporation.— Where defendant is a corporation, service of process on persons who are supposed to be, but who are not, its proper officers or agents, is an irregularity, but not such as to authorize the impeachment of the judgment by a third person, the parties to the action not objecting. Bennett v. Wilson, 133 Cal. 379, 65 Pac. 880, 85 Am. St. Rep. 207; Fahs v. Taylor, 10 Ohio 104.

Short notice.— That the writ was not served the requisite number of days before the hearing or judgment is not ground for impeaching the judgment collaterally. Ballinger v. Tarbell, 16 Iowa 491, 85 Am. Dec. 527; Armstrong v. Grant, 7 Kan. 285; Dutton v. Hobson, 7 Kan. 196; Leonard v. Sparks, 117 Mo. 103, 22 S. W. 899, 38 Am. See 30 Cent. Dig. tit. "Judgment," § 927.

Failure to state time and place.— A judgment rendered upon service of an original notice which does not state the time or place at which defendant is required to appear is not valid, and may be attacked collaterally. Kitsmiller v. Kitchen, 24 Iowa 163. But compare Wood v. Payea, 138 Mass. 61.

protected against collateral impeachment as any other,[33] and it cannot be shown collaterally that defendant was not in fact a non-resident as alleged,[34] or that he had no property subject to the jurisdiction of the court.[35] Failure to comply with the provisions of the statute in some essential and vital particular will deprive the court of jurisdiction, and so expose the judgment to collateral impeachment,[36] as where the published notice is wholly insufficient to warn the defendant of the action or to give him the information he is entitled to expect from it,[37] but a mere irregularity in making service by publication will not have this effect;[38] nor will the judgment be collaterally assailable, although the affidavit on which the order of publication was based was defective, insufficient, or false in fact,[39] more especially if the court has judicially considered or adjudicated its sufficiency.[40]

f. Defects in Return or Proof of Service. A judgment cannot be impeached in a collateral proceeding on the ground that the return or proof of service of process was defective, irregular, or informal,[41] although it is otherwise where the return or proof wholly fails to show the facts necessary to give the court jurisdiction.[42]

g. Unauthorized Appearance. Many decisions hold that it is not permissible, in any collateral proceeding, for a party to contest the validity of a judgment against him on the ground that an attorney who appeared for him in the action had no authority to do so.[43] But on the other hand in several states the rule obtains that the authority of the attorney may always be controverted.[44] At any rate all presumptions are strongly in favor of the authority of an attorney professing to represent a party, and of the truth of recitals recognizing his appearance as authorized; and if a party is permitted at all to deny this fact in a collateral proceeding, he must support his contention by positive proof.[45]

h. Presumptions as to Jurisdiction — (I) Courts of General or Superior Jurisdiction — (A) Jurisdiction Presumed in General. In the case of a judgment rendered by a domestic court of general or superior jurisdiction, which is attacked in a collateral proceeding, there is a presumption, which can only be overcome by positive proof, that it had jurisdiction both of the person's and the subject-matter, and proceeded in the due exercise of that jurisdiction.[46]

Suit involving patent.— A state court of general jurisdiction, in the absence of a showing in the record to the contrary, will be presumed to have had jurisdiction of an action involving conflicting claims to letters patent, where its judgment is collaterally attacked; since, where a cause of action in relation to letters patent depends primarily on some contract of the parties, jurisdiction exists in the state courts, although the validity of the patent may be drawn in question incidentally. Jurisdiction of subject-matter.— It is stated that the rule respecting courts of special jurisdiction, that all necessary jurisdictional facts must be shown by the record, applies to the subject-matter and not to the person; and when jurisdiction as to the subject-matter has once vested in such a court, the rules which govern its exercise, as to the person, respecting process, evidence, etc., are generally the same as those applicable to courts of general jurisdiction. Cason v. Cason, 31 Miss. 578.

Cases not within the rule.— The rule stated in the text does not apply to a confession of judgment upon warrant of attorney (Bush v. Hanson, 70 Ill. 480), to a proceeding commenced by attachment (Van Wagenen v. Carpenter, 27 Colo. 444, 61 Pac. 698. Compare Mentzer v. Ellison, 7 Colo. Ex parte proceedings in probate courts.— Although the authority of probate courts to appoint guardians for insane persons, to confirm the adoption of a child, and the like, is derived from statute, yet they exercise a general jurisdiction in such matters, and their orders and judgments therein are upheld by the usual presumptions of validity. rendered in summary proceedings, which must clearly show on their face everything necessary to sustain the jurisdiction.[51]

(II) Courts of Inferior or Limited Jurisdiction. Nothing is presumed in favor of the judgment of a court of inferior or limited jurisdiction, as against a collateral attack; but the record of its proceedings must show on its face that the court rendering the judgment had jurisdiction both of the person and subject-matter.[52] But although the court may be a limited or inferior tribunal, yet if it has general jurisdiction of any one subject, its proceedings and judgments in respect to that subject will be sustained by the same presumptions which obtain in the case of superior courts.[53] And if the record of the judgment of an inferior court does affirmatively show the facts necessary to confer jurisdiction, then

Showing jurisdiction by outside evidence.— In some states the rule prevails that the jurisdictional facts necessary to support the judgment of an inferior court of limited jurisdiction, when it is attacked collaterally, may be shown by extrinsic evidence, except as to facts which the law expressly directs the court to spread upon its record. Jolley v. Foltz, 34 Cal. 321; Van Deusen v. Sweet, 51 N. Y. 378; Beaudrias v. Hogan, 23 N. Y. App. Div. 83, 48 N. Y. Suppl. 468.

the same presumptions are indulged in favor of the regularity and validity of its proceedings as are extended to the superior courts, and the record can be impeached and contradicted only in like cases and to the same extent.[54]

(III) Federal Courts. The courts of the United States, although of statutory and limited jurisdiction, are not inferior courts in the sense of this rule; their judgments and decrees stand on the same footing as those of state courts of general jurisdiction, and their authority and jurisdiction are presumed, although the facts conferring jurisdiction do not appear in the record.[55]

(IV) Probate Courts. In nearly all the states probate courts or surrogates' or orphans' courts now rank with the courts of general and superior jurisdiction, for the purposes of the rule under consideration; so that it is not necessary for their records to show the facts necessary to sustain them against collateral attack, but on the contrary their jurisdiction and authority will be presumed.[56]

i. Jurisdictional Recitals — (I) Effect in General — (A) Presumption From Recitals of Record. Where a judgment or decree of a domestic court recites that proper notice of the action was given, that process was duly served, or that the parties were duly summoned or cited, it is presumed to be correct, and is prima facie evidence that the court had jurisdiction of the action.[57] And a similar presumption arises from a recital that the parties appeared.[58] Further an ambiguous or imperfect recital in the judgment will be so construed, if possible, as to make it show jurisdiction.[59]

(B) As to Service by Publication. In the case of a judgment against a non-resident defendant on service by publication of the summons, if the judgment recites that publication was "duly made," or was "in all respects regular and according to law," or that defendant was "duly notified," this is sufficient to sustain the validity of the judgment on collateral attack, in the absence of record evidence showing a failure to comply with the statute.[60] And the same effect has

(II) Silence or Incompleteness of the Record. In a collateral attack upon a judgment or decree, it will be presumed that jurisdiction attached and the judgment is valid where the record, although failing to show jurisdiction affirmatively, yet does not distinctly show a want of jurisdiction,[62] as where the record of a judgment of a court of general jurisdiction is silent as to the facts conferring jurisdiction,[63] or is defective in consequence of the omission of proper recitals,[64]

or the loss or absence of parts of the record.[65] It will also be presumed under the same circumstances that the judgment was rendered at a regular term of the court,[66] and that the property in dispute was within the territorial jurisdiction of the court.[67]

(III) Contradicting Recitals. In the case of a judgment of a domestic court of general jurisdiction, the great majority of the decisions sustain the rule that its recitals concerning the service of process or the other facts on which its jurisdiction is founded import absolute verity, and cannot be contradicted or disproved, in a collateral proceeding, by any extrinsic evidence.[68] But still in some of a certain fact or state of facts, and it is shown by the record that there was evidence tending to prove such facts, and that such evidence was adjudged sufficient, and the court judicially determined that such facts existed, then the judgment cannot be collaterally impeached or contradicted.[77] These rules also apply where the service of process was by publication.[78] But in some cases it is held that if the record discloses the evidence concerning jurisdictional facts on which the court acted, its finding that it had jurisdiction is not conclusive unless the facts shown support it.[79]

(v) No Presumption Against the Record. Where the facts upon which a court assumes jurisdiction are recited in the record, and appear by it to have been such as would not in law confer jurisdiction, the judgment may be impeached collaterally; for in this case there can be no presumption, in aid of the judgment, that the recitals of the record are incorrect or incomplete.[80]

ties,[90] or for any technical objection to plaintiff's capacity to sue,[91] or because the judgment may be irregular or voidable as against another person who was a joint plaintiff or defendant,[92] or because the judgment was rendered against a defendant personally instead of in the representative capacity in which he was sued,[93] or because minors were not properly represented in the action.[94]

c. Defects and Objections as to Pleadings. A judgment cannot be impeached collaterally on account of any defects in the pleadings.[95] Its validity cannot be impugned for instance by showing that a wrong form of action was chosen,[96]

See 30 Cent. Dig. tit. "Judgment," § 942.

Effect of misnomer on validity of judgment see supra, VI, C, 7, b.

Apparent identity of parties.— Where the record shows that the names of plaintiff and defendant in the action were identical, it will not be presumed, in a collateral proceeding, that the parties were the same person, thereby invalidating the judgment. A sale under order of the probate court is not subject to collateral attack because made on application of the administrator in behalf of creditors, instead of being made on the application of the creditors themselves. Simpson v. Bailey, 80 Md. 421, 30 Atl. 622.

Administrators.— In case of a judgment recovered by an administrator, it cannot be objected in collateral proceedings that his letters were irregularly granted or granted without jurisdiction (Abbott v. Curran, 98 N. Y. 665), or that, being appointed in a foreign state, he had not filed copies of his letters before bringing suit (Marshall v. Charland, 109 Ga. 306, 34 S. E. 671).

Corporation.— It cannot be objected collaterally that plaintiff, being a corporation, had failed to allege the fact of its incorporation. McFall v. Buckeye Grangers' Warehouse Assoc., 122 Cal. 468, 55 Pac. 253, 68 Am. St. Rep. 47.

Real party in interest.— It is no ground for collateral impeachment of a judgment that plaintiff was not the real party in interest. Cates v. Riley, (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 55 S. W. 979. Compare National Exch. Bank v. Wiley, 3 Nebr. (Unoff.) 716, 92 N. W. 582.

One party on both sides.— A judgment entered in favor of a plaintiff, against himself and others, and revived to the use of one to whom it has been assigned, is valid as against a creditor of plaintiff whose judgment was recovered after the revival. Union of legal and equitable claims.— Although the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity is carefully maintained in the federal courts, and when a case which unites both legal and equitable grounds for relief, as permitted by the practice of the state in which it is brought, is removed into a federal court, the pleadings should be recast so as to separate the two causes of action, yet where an action to enforce a mechanic's lien and to recover the debt which it secures, in which plaintiff had also obtained an attachment, which had been served, was thereafter removed and proceeded with in the federal court on the original pleadings as a suit in equity, without objection, and a money judgment was rendered against defendant, such judgment is not void, even if erroneous, and cannot be collaterally attacked. Applications of text.— A judgment is not impeachable collaterally because of the failure to file a bond in an injunction suit (Lewis v. Rowland, 131 Ind. 103, 29 N. E. 922), or an affidavit in a proceeding by attachment (Slade v. Le Page, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 403, 27 S. W. 952; Barelli v. Wagner, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 445, 27 S. W. 17. Compare Tacoma Grocery Co. v. Draham, 8 Wash. 263, 36 Pac. 31, 40 Am. St. Rep. 907); because of an insufficient affidavit (Rogers v. Ingersoll, 103 N. Y. App. Div. 490, 93 N. Y. Suppl. 140); because an administrator's sale ordered by the judgment was not made at the time required by law, if it was afterward confirmed by the court (Brown v. Christie, 27 Tex. 73, 84 Am. Dec. 607); because the claim in suit was directly passed on by the court, instead of being referred to a master in chancery (Youngstown Bridge Co. v. North Galveston, etc., R. Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 31 S. W. 420); or because of failure to treat a counter-claim as withdrawn, where defendant does not appear at the trial (Groton Bridge, etc., Co. v. Clark Pressed Brick Co., 136 Fed. 27, 68 C. C. A. 577 [affirming 126 Fed. 552]). So an order requiring a garnishee to pay money into court cannot be attacked by the judgment debtor in a collateral proceeding, although the property in ground of collateral objection that the action was tried by the court alone, where it was properly triable by a jury or vice versa,[4] and the same applies to irregular action in regard to continuances or adjournments of the case,[5] or upon proceedings for a change of venue.[6]

e. Disqualification of Judge. Incompetence of a judge to act in a case, by reason of his interest in the subject-matter, personal or professional, will render the judgment void and open to collateral impeachment; but not so if the disqualification arises merely from a defect in his title to the judicial office.[7]

f. Insufficiency of Evidence. A judgment of a court having jurisdiction cannot be impeached collaterally by showing that the evidence on which it was based was illegal, improperly received, or insufficient to sustain the judgment.[8]

g. Defects in Entry or Contents of Judgment — (i) In General. No question of jurisdiction being raised, a judgment or decree cannot be collaterally impeached because it was prematurely rendered,[9] or entered in vacation without consent of the parties,[10] or based on defective findings by the court, or given without any findings at all;[11] nor because it appears from the record or the opinion of the controversy may be exempt. Day v. Garden City First Nat. Bank, 6 Kan. App. 821, 49 Pac. 691.

Leave to sue receiver.—A judgment against a receiver, rendered by a court other than that which appointed him, is not impeachable collaterally merely because the record fails to show affirmatively that permission to sue the receiver was first obtained from the court which appointed him. Right of creditors to assert fraud see supra, XI, D, 3, b.

Action for damages.— A person against whom judgments have been obtained cannot maintain an action for damages against the parties who obtained them, the attorney who prosecuted, and the officer who served the writ, for fraudulently conspiring together to injure and defraud him in those proceedings, while the judgments remain unreversed. Smith v. Abbott, 40 Me. 442; White v. Merritt, 7 N. Y. 352, 57 Am. Dec. 527.

A composition in bankruptcy, under the federal statutes on the subject, cannot be impeached collaterally in an action at law in a state court, by a creditor who was a party to the proceedings, by showing that the composition was obtained by the fraudulent acts of the bankrupt. Farwell v. Raddin, 129 Mass. 7; Home Nat. Bank v. Carpenter, 129 Mass. 1.

Contested election.— After judgment in an election contest, rendered by agreement between the claimants and giving possession to the relator, defendant, in his answer to the relator's alternative writ of mandate demanding possession, cannot assail the judgment on the ground that, being rendered by agreement and in consideration of a sum paid to defendant, it was corrupt and fraudulent and therefore void. XII. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION OF JUDGMENTS.[34]

A. General Principles of Construction — 1. APPLICATION OF GENERAL RULES. A judgment should be so construed as to give effect to every word and part of it,[35] including such effects and consequences as follow by necessary legal implication from its terms, although not expressed;[36] and where there are two possible interpretations, that will be adopted which makes the judgment harmonize with the facts and law of the case and be such as ought to have been rendered,[37] which brings it within the authority and jurisdiction of the court,[38] and which renders it the more reasonable, effective, and conclusive.[39] Further a construction adopted or acquiesced in by the parties will not be changed without strong reason.[40]

2. CONSTRUCTION OF RECITALS. Recitals in a judgment are presumed to be true and correct,[41] and they will be construed according to the proper legal import of

Applications of text.— Where a judgment recites notice to defendant, but the record shows service by publication only, the judgment will be construed as in rem only, and not as authorizing the issue of a general execution. Mayfield v. Bennett, 48 Iowa 194. So a mistake apparent on the face of a judgment, amounting to an impossibility, will not destroy the judgment, if enough remains, after it is corrected or eliminated, to disclose the actual judgment rendered. Evans v. McMahan, 1 Ala. 45. As between coördinate courts.— A court in construing the judgment of another court of equal rank in the same system, will presume, in the absence of clear expressions to the contrary, that such other court holds the same view of the law on which the judgment is based as that held by the construing court. the terms used, considering the judgment as a whole;[42] but not extended by interpretation beyond what is expressed or follows by necessary implication from the language employed.[43]

3. CONSTRUCTION WITH REFERENCE TO PLEADINGS. Where the language of a judgment is ambiguous or its meaning doubtful, reference may be had to the pleadings in the case, and the judgment interpreted in the light which they throw upon it.[44] But if the meaning of the judgment is clear and plain on its face, it cannot be changed, extended, or restricted by anything contained in the pleadings.[45]

4. CONSTRUCTION WITH REFERENCE TO VERDICT OR FINDINGS. A judgment should be interpreted with reference to the verdict of the jury,[46] and if possible so as to harmonize them;[47] and the same rules apply where the facts are found by the court.[48]

5. EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE TO AID CONSTRUCTION. Evidence outside the record — even parol — is admissible to show for what the judgment was recovered, that is, what was the real cause of action;[49] but not to modify or explain the judgment itself.[50]

Parol or extrinsic evidence to contradict or

or the capacity in which he recovers, the judgment will be read in the light of the pleadings and other parts of the record,[51] and a plural number will be read as singular, if necessary to make the judgment agree with the facts and law of the case.[52]

b. Parties Liable. Where a judgment is rendered against "the defendants" generally, it will be understood to be against those parties who appear, from the whole record, to be liable in the capacity of defendants;[53] and if there is only one defendant, a judgment in favor of plaintiff is equivalent to a judgment against that defendant.[54] On the other hand, where some of the defendants were not brought within the jurisdiction of the court, or not affected by the verdict, or otherwise not liable to the judgment, the fact that the judgment is expressed to be against "the defendants" will not enlarge its scope so as to include them, but it will be restricted to those properly liable;[55] and conversely, if the record shows that all defendants are liable, a judgment against "the defendants" will include them all.[56]

c. Particular Capacity. A judgment will in general bind a party only in the capacity in which he appears in the action, even though he is not described in the judgment in that capacity;[57] but the addition to a party's name, as it is recited in the judgment, of a title or designation which is merely descriptio personæ and therefore may be rejected as surplusage will not prevent the judgment from binding him personally.[58]

d. Joint or Several Liability. In the absence of express directions to the contrary, a judgment entered against two or more defendants jointly is a joint and several obligation, available against either of the judgment debtors separately.[59]

e. As Between Co-Defendants. As a general rule a judgment against two or more defendants decides nothing as to their rights or liabilities inter sese, but only their liability to plaintiff,[60] although in some circumstances a judgment for plaintiff may include affirmative relief to one defendant as against another, in which case its effect is to be determined by the ordinary rules of construction.[61]

2. Subject-Matter. In respect to its operation upon the subject-matter of the action a judgment is to be understood as including and determining whatever follows by necessary implication from its terms, although not specified in so many words,[62] and as disposing of all the issues and controversies raised in the case,[63] unless questions are reserved or leave given to the parties to take further proceedings, in which case the unadjudicated matters are left entirely open, except in so far as their determination in a particular way would be inconsistent with the general tenor of the original judgment.[64] But the scope of the judgment is not to be extended beyond the issues raised in the case, or the state of facts and situation of the parties existing at the time of the action.[65]

3. Amount of Recovery or Relief Granted. If the judgment is ambiguous or silent as to the amount of the recovery or the relief granted, reference may be had to the pleadings, the verdict, if any, and other parts of the record, and the judgment will be presumed to be in accordance with what they show to be due.[66]

A decree directing the sale of premises unless a certain sum is paid within a limited time is not to be construed as a personal decree for the payment of the money, but as in the alternative.[67] And if it provides for periodical payments in the future, so long as a given relation or state of affairs continues, the amounts due from time to time may be fixed by successive applications to the court.[68]

C. Operation and Effect — 1. In General.[69] A judgment duly rendered creates an estoppel, barring any further suit upon the same cause of action between the parties or their privies,[70] and precluding any further litigation, between such parties, of a point or question once put in issue and decided.[71] Also it may create a lien upon the real property of the judgment debtor.[72] But while the debt or claim in suit becomes merged in the judgment, and the judgment itself becomes thereafter a new liability and a fresh cause of action;[73] yet as to the original debt the judgment neither creates, adds to, nor detracts from it; its only office is to declare the existence of the debt, fix its amount, and secure to the creditor the means of enforcing its payment.[74] But it may in certain circumstances operate to create a title to property, or to transfer the title,[75] and although it may be erroneous or voidable, still, before it is reversed or vacated, it will support proceedings taken under it.[76] As to its effect on pleadings in the case, it may be remarked that a judgment on a verdict virtually overrules all demurrers.[77]

2. Conflicting Judgments. Of two conflicting judgments rendered by the same court upon the same rights of the same parties, that which is later in time will prevail.[78]

3. TIME OF TAKING EFFECT. In some states judgments take effect, by relation back, from the first day of the term at which they are rendered; in others, from the last day of the term; but in most, from the day of the actual rendition of the judgment.[79] As to the rights and titles of the parties to the action, a judgment takes effect upon them as they exist at the time of the trial and rendition thereof, and not as they existed at the commencement of the suit or before that time.[80]

4. CONDITIONS. The party who claims the benefit of a judgment rendered in his favor must comply with any terms or conditions which it may impose upon him, and failure to do so will destroy the effect of the adjudication.[81]

XIII. FORMER RECOVERY AS MERGER OR BAR.[82]

A. General Principles — 1. ESTOPPEL BY FORMER RECOVERY. A judgment rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction on the merits is a bar to any future suit between the same parties or their privies, upon the same cause of action, in the same or another court, so long as it remains unreversed and not in any way vacated or annulled.[83] This rule rests upon fundamental legal principles, Civ. App. 295, 30 S. W. 935. But see Gage v. Downey, 94 Cal. 241, 29 Pac. 635, holding that where a court inadvertently determines two matters standing in such opposition as to be incapable of a harmonious construction, as for instance that the same property belongs absolutely to each of two persons, the decision is of no effect.

Matters excepted.— A severable portion of a claim put in suit which is expressly excepted from the judgment thereon is not merged in the judgment. Hall v. Hall, 8 Vt. 156.

Judgment as collateral.—A judgment given merely as collateral security for a simple contract debt does not extinguish it. Davis v. Anable, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 339.

Lien.— The doctrine of merger will not be applied to destroy the security of a decree as a lien to defeat justice. Turner v. Stewart, 51 W. Va. 493, 41 S. E. 924. And see Curtis v. Gooding, 99 Ind. 45; Pence v. Armstrong, 95 Ind. 191; Manns v. Brookville Nat. Bank, 73 Ind. 243.

Judgment in rem.— It has been held that a judgment against a steamboat — being a judgment in rem and not enforceable against the property of the owners — if unsatisfied, could not be pleaded as a bar to a subsequent action against the owners of the vessel on the same contract. Toby v. Brown, 11 Ark. 308. And see Tabor v. The Cerro Gordo, 54 Fed. 391.

Revival of merged debt.— To enable a plaintiff to recover on a debt barred by a former recovery, the debt must not only be acknowledged, but there must be a distinct promise to pay it. Anspach v. Brown, 7 Watts (Pa.) 139.

87. Temple v. Scott, 3 Minn. 419. But when the essential rights of the parties are influenced by the nature of the original contract, the court will look into the judgment for the purpose of ascertaining what the original contract was. Owens v. Bowie, 2 Md. 457. Thus a city which has purchased with drainage warrants a plant to perfect its drainage system, under an agreement to collect the drainage assessments and apply the fund to the payment of the warrants, does not cease to be a trustee, with respect to the assessments against its own property, because they are reduced to judgments. New Orleans v. Warner, 175 U. S. 120, 20 S. Ct. 44, 44 L. ed. 96.

A claim for necessaries is merged in and extinguished by a judgment rendered in a suit upon the claim, and an action upon such judgment is not a suit for necessaries furnished within a statute relating to trustee these rules apply to all species of demands, including contracts,[88] bonds,[89] promissory notes,[90] and according to some cases, even demands founded upon earlier judgments.[91]

3. MERGER OR BAR BY DECREES IN EQUITY.[92] A final decree in a court of equity is a bar to a second suit between the same parties or their privies upon the same cause of action; and when the decree orders the payment of money, it operates process and exemptions. Brown v. West, 73 Me. 23.

Arrest; action for moneys received in fiduciary capacity.— By the obtaining of a judgment, the original cause of action is merged. Hence in an action upon a judgment defendant is not liable to arrest upon the ground that the judgment was obtained for moneys received by him in a fiduciary capacity. Goodrich v. Dunbar, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 644.

Discharge in bankruptcy.— It has been held that a discharge in bankruptcy is no bar to a judgment recovered after defendant's application to be decreed a bankrupt, although founded upon a claim which, until merged in the judgment, would have been provable in bankruptcy. Uran v. Houdlette, 36 Me. 15; Pike v. McDonald, 32 Me. 418, 54 Am. Dec. 597. But where defendant applied to the court to have an execution against him stayed and the judgment satisfied, by reason of his discharge in insolvency proceedings, it was held that the court had a right to go behind the judgment and examine the pleadings, and where they showed that the original claim was created by a fraud, and therefore not barred by the discharge, it was not so merged in the judgment as to create a new debt subject to be discharged by the insolvency certificate. Carit v. Williams, 74 Cal. 183, 15 Pac. 751; Murphy v. Manning, 134 Mass. 488. See, generally, BANKRUPTCY.

Usury.— Although the original contract was tainted with usury, this blemish does not follow it into the judgment, and the new debt created by the judgment is not affected thereby. Thatcher v. Gammon, 12 Mass. 268. See, generally, USURY.

Penal laws of foreign state.— It is no objection to a recovery on a judgment rendered in a foreign state that it was originally rendered upon a forfeited recognizance taken in consequence of an alleged violation of the penal laws of that state. Spencer v. Brockway, 1 Ohio 259, 13 Am. Dec. 615.

As evidence.— The fact that a note secured by a deed of trust is merged in a decree in foreclosure proceedings in chancery, so that it could not form the basis of another action, does not destroy its character as evidence in ejectment founded on the trust deed. Confession of judgment on note.— After a judgment has been recovered before a justice of the peace on a judgment note, the warrant of attorney therein is functus officio, and no judgment can be entered thereon in the court of common pleas, the debt being merged in the higher security. as a merger of the original debt in the same manner and to the same extent as a judgment at law.[93]

4. New Liability Created by Judgment. As a general rule the recovery of a judgment creates a new debt or liability, distinct from the original claim or demand, and this new liability is not merely the evidence of the creditor's claim, but is thereafter the substance of the claim itself.[94] Thus, where an administrator recovers judgment on a debt due to his intestate, the new debt thereby created is due to him, and he may sue upon it in the courts of another state, although as administrator he could not have sued upon the original claim outside of the state which granted his letters.[95] Still it has been broadly stated in a few decisions that a judgment will not be regarded as creating a new debt, but rather as an old debt in a new form, when justice to the parties requires such a course.[96] And there are some cases holding that an unsatisfied judgment is not a bar to a new action upon the same cause.[97]

5. Necessity of Identity of Parties[98] — a. In General. To make a former judgment a bar to the maintenance of a present suit, it must have been rendered in an action between the same parties, or between those in privity with them.[99]

against whom the estoppel is set up was actually a party to the former litigation.[3] If the cause of action is substantially different, the judgment is no bar, although some of the parties to the present suit were parties to the former action.[4]

6. Time of Commencement of Action as Affecting Bar. By the weight of authority the fact that a judgment was obtained after the commencement of the suit in which it is pleaded does not prevent its being a bar. It is the first judgment for the same cause of action that constitutes an effective defense, without regard to the order of time in which the suits were commenced.[5]

B. Judgments Operative as a Bar — 1. Character or Rank of Court or Tribunal[6] — a. Coördinate Jurisdiction. The doctrine of estoppel by judgment does not rest upon any superior authority of the court rendering the judgment; and a judgment or decree of one court of competent jurisdiction may be pleaded in bar of an action in another court of coördinate or concurrent jurisdiction.[7]

b. Inferior Courts.[8] A judgment rendered by an inferior court, such as that of a justice of the peace, on a matter of which it had no jurisdiction is not conclusive for any purpose or to any extent.[9] But if there was no defect of jurisdiction, such a judgment, rendered on a consideration of the merits, is a bar to another suit between the same parties on the same cause of action, either in another court of the same grade or rank or in any other court.[10]

c. Probate Courts.[11] A judgment of a probate court on a matter over which it has no rightful jurisdiction, as determining the title to land, is not conclusive on the parties in another court.[12] But as to matters within its jurisdiction, its Supreme and superior court.— The supreme court, although it has original jurisdiction in habeas corpus, will not entertain a petition, where a like petition has before been presented to a judge of the superior court and refused. In re Graham, 7 Wash. 237, 34 Pac. 931.

Common pleas and orphans' court.— After unsuccessfully suing an administrator for a debt of the decedent in the court of common pleas plaintiff cannot enforce payment of the same claim in the orphans' court against the estate. Dyer's Appeal, 3 Grant (Pa.) 326.

Different territorial jurisdiction.— It has been held that where several suits ancillary to one another are brought in the several districts through which a railroad runs, to foreclose mortgages and marshal liens on it, a decree in one of such suits, not appealed from, is not conclusive on an appeal from the decree in another of such suits. Compton v. Jesup, 68 Fed. 263, 15 C. C. A. 397. And see Robinson v. Lamb, 131 N. C. 229, 42 S. Consular courts.— It was held that a judgment of a British consular court, established abroad under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 94, in an action of debt properly brought by plaintiff in that court, together with payment by defendant to plaintiff of the sum awarded to the latter by such judgment, was a bar to an action in a court in England for the same subject-matter. judgment on the merits is a bar to any further proceedings between the same parties on the same cause of action in any other court,[13] unless where a special form of proceeding for the particular case, to be pursued in another court, is provided by statute, so that the matter could only come incidentally before the probate court.[14]

d. Boards and Officers Acting Judicially.[15] A decision rendered by an officer or a board of state or municipal officers, when acting judicially, and which has by law the force and effect of a judgment, is a bar to further actions on the same matter between the parties or their privies.[16] And this may include the decisions of referees and auditors,[17] and the sentences of military commissions or courts established by the authority of a military commander.[18] But if such an officer or board does not act judicially in the particular matter, but ministerially, or if the decision is not recognized by the law of the forum as a judgment, it is no bar to further proceedings in relation to the same matter.[19]

e. Appellate Courts.[20] The doctrine of res judicata applies as well to judgments of courts of last resort as to those of nisi prius courts; and a decision of the appellate court will preclude any further action upon the same matter between the parties.[21] Moreover if the same subject-matter comes in question in a second action between the same parties before an appellate court, it is bound by its own former decision.[22]

Want of equitable jurisdiction.— A judgment of a probate court is not a bar to an equitable proceeding respecting matters of which the probate court had not equitable jurisdiction requisite to determine the facts and adjudge the relief to which the parties were entitled. 2. Nature or Form of Action[23] — a. In General. The principle of estoppel by judgment is in no way dependent on the form or the object of the litigation in which the adjudication was made; it is only essential that there should have been a judicial determination of rights in controversy with a final decision thereon.[24] The rule applies in real as well as personal actions,[25] in proceedings in rem,[26] in proceedings for injunction[27] or mandamus,[28] and in proceedings by attachment or garnishment;[29] and it is immaterial whether the question alleged to be concluded by the former adjudication was presented as a cause of action or a defense or by way of intervention.[30]

b. Actions at Law and Suits in Equity.[31] A final judgment on the merits in an action at law will bar any further action between the same parties on the same cause of action in a court of chancery,[32] except in cases where the subject-matter

Identity of parties necessary.— It is only where the parties and the subject-matter are the same that an appellate court is absolutely and technically bound by its own former decision. For instance a decision of such a court holding a statute to be constitutional when attacked in one action does not prevent the court from declaring it to be unconstitutional, when assailed in another action, between different parties and on other grounds. Anderson v. Fowler, 48 S. C. 8, 25 S. E. 900. If in such a case the court should decide to abide by its former decision, without reëxamination of the validity of the statute, it would be an application of the rule of stare decisis not that of res judicata. And on the other hand a final judgment in a court of last resort remains valid and binding, although the court in subsequent actions of a similar character may have determined that it has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter. Applications of the rule.— A judgment of a county court confirming a special assessment made on abutting property for the improvement of a public street is conclusive. Rich v. Chicago, 187 Ill. 396, 58 N. E. 306. So of an order of removal of a pauper from one township to another (Cadwallader v. Durham, 46 N. J. L. 53), and of a decision in proceedings for the adjudication of priorities in the appropriation of water rights (Louden Irr. Canal Co. v. Handy Ditch Co., 22 Colo. 102, 43 Pac. 535). On the other hand where a plaintiff, employed by contract as a teacher in the public schools, was compelled to cease teaching because the provisional license issued to him had expired, and sought a mandamus to compel the board of education to accept his services, it was held that, as the grant of this writ was not an absolute right but was discretionary with the court, its refusal was no bar to an action for salary due for the time after his services were refused. Steinson v. Board of Education, 165 N. Y. 431, 59 N. E. 300.

Habeas corpus.— A judgment as to the custody of an infant in habeas corpus proceedings is res judicata between the same parties on the same facts. Slack v. Perrine, 9 App. Cas. (D. C.) 128. See also infra, XIII, B, 2, d, text and note 47.

d. Summary Proceedings.[43] Where proceedings of a summary character afford the parties concerned an opportunity to be heard and to contest the issues raised, the decision is as conclusive as a judgment entered in a formal action. Such for instance is the case with summary proceedings between a landlord and tenant,[44] or by a client against an attorney at law to recover money or property collected by the latter,[45] or for the taxation of costs,[46] or on habeas corpus,[47] or by a person injured by the careless driving of another to recover compensation.[48] But if the proceedings are purely ex parte, they do not constitute a bar to the litigation of the same matters in a formal action.[49]

e. Decisions on Motions[50] — (i) In General. The determination of a motion or summary application is not res judicata so as to prevent the parties from litigating the same matters again in the more regular form of an action, especially if the matter affected by the motion was only incidental or collateral to the determination of the main controversy.[51] But orders affecting substantial rights, fully litigated, and from which an appeal lies, are conclusive of the matter adjudged and a bar to further proceedings.[52] Overruling a motion to set aside a verdict and entering judgment thereon bars a similar motion in a subsequent suit between the same parties or their privies to set aside a verdict settling the same questions in the same way;[53] and by the weight of authority the denial of a motion to open a default, or to vacate or set aside a judgment, if not appealed from, is generally considered final and conclusive, and a bar to any further proceedings for the same purpose.[54] The rule has also been applied to a motion for a new trial,[55] and to a motion for leave to issue execution.[56] A motion to quash an execution[57] or to dissolve an attachment[58] has also been held to be within the rule, although in some jurisdictions there have been decisions to the contrary.

(11) Renewal of Motion in Same Cause. Although the doctrine of res judicata does not apply in its strictest sense to incidental or interlocutory orders in the progress of a cause, yet the denial of a motion or petition for such an order will generally operate as a bar to its renewal in the same proceeding,[59] unless the action of the court was based on irregularities in the application or the insufficiency of the moving papers,[60] or unless leave of court is obtained to renew the motion, in consideration of new facts which have arisen since the former determination, or additional facts which were not before presented, through surprise or excusable neglect, or which have been since discovered.[61]

Petition for new trial.— Where the court of common pleas had concurrent jurisdiction with the supreme court of petitions for new trials, it was held that the decision of either court upon such a petition presented to it was conclusive and that another petition upon the same grounds would not be entertained by the other court. Curry v. Swett, 13 R. I. 476.

The mere setting aside of a verdict for plaintiff, with the remark by the court that a nonsuit should have been entered, but without showing why, is not such a judgment for defendant as may be availed of in bar of the same claim against his estate in the orphans' court. Dunlevy's Estate, 10 Pa. Co. Ct. 454.

An order directing interrogatories to be taken for confessed is not a judgment; and a motion to have such an order set aside is not an application for a new trial, in such free from ambiguity or contradictions as to show clearly what was the claim or cause of action adjudicated;[64] and that it should be effective and enforceable, so that no injustice to the parties may result from recognizing the judgment as prohibitive of further proceedings.[65] But it makes no difference in the conclusive effect of the judgment that the circumstances are such that no appeal can be taken from it,[66] or that by reason of lapse of time it can no longer be enforced by aense that its refusal will give to the original order the effect of res judicata. Cusachs v. Dugue, 113 La. 261, 36 So. 960.

Defects of form.— A regular judgment is none the lesa effective as a bar because it is defective in form and grammar. Davis v. Trump, 43 W. Va. 191, 27 S. E. 397, 64 Am. St. Rep. 849.

Want of signature.— In Louisiana a judgment not signed is no foundation for a plea of res judicata. Ferguson v. Chastant, 35 La. Ann. 485.

Effect of blanks.— Where the amount of a judgment is left blank, it constitutes no bar to another action on the same cause, unless the blank can be filled with certainty from other parts of the record. School Directors v. Newman, 47 Ill. App. 364; Wells v. Dench, 1 Mass. 232.

Discretionary action.— Petitions for laying out and discontinuing highways are not proceedings where a former adjudication may be asserted as an estoppel, since such petitions are of necessity addressed largely to the discretion of the court. Ferguson v. Sheffield, 52 Vt. 77. But see Straits of Dover Steamship Co. v. Munson, 100 Fed. 1005, 41 C. C. A. 156, holding that the refusal of a court, when within its equitable discretion, to award costs to a successful party is an adjudication which precludes him from maintaining an independent action for their recovery.

Ministerial acts.— An order of a probate court that a return of sale of land made by a guardian be recorded, under the statute, is simply a ministerial act, and does not conclude the parties in interest from investigating the conduct of the guardian in making the sale. Holbrook v. Brooks, 33 Conn. 347.

Allowance or rejection of claims.— The action of an assignee for creditors in rejecting a claim presented for allowance is a conclusive adjudication between the parties unless appealed from. Cody v. Vaughan, 53 Mo. App. 169. So of the rejection of a debt by an administrator within the time allowed by law for presentation of claims. Matter of Phyfe, 5 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 331.

Inconsistent positions.— Where the judgment is based on two inconsistent grounds, or contains two positions so repugnant that they cannot be reconciled, it is of no effect as an estoppel. Knapp v. Crane, 14 N. Y. App. Div. 120, 43 N. Y. Suppl. 513; Union, etc., Bank v. Memphis, 107 Tenn. 66, 64 S. W. 13.

Conflicting decisions in same case.— It has been held that where there have been two adjudications of the same matter between the same parties, with opposite results, the estoppel of one judgment neutralizes that of the other, and both parties may assert their claims anew. Shaw v. Broadbent, 129 N. Y. 114, 29 N. E. 238. And see Johnson v. Hesser, 61 Nebr. 631, 85 N. W. 894. But in Minor v. New Orleans, 115 La. 301, 38 So. 999, it was held that where there are two conflicting judgments in the same cause, the later in point of time will prevail. And see supra, XII, C, 2.

Defects of declaration.— A judgment on the merits, remaining in force, is a bar to another suit for the same cause of action, although the declaration was so imperfect that it would not stand the test of a demurrer. Hughes v. Blake, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,845, 1 Mason 512. But see Conway v. Hall, 1 Va. Cas. 6, holding that the cause of action is not merged in a judgment, in an action thereon, where no declaration was filed.

Lack of proof.— A verdict and judgment against plaintiff is a bar to his subsequent suit, notwithstanding the fact that he offered no proof of his claim on the former trial. Ramsey v. Herndon, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,546, 1 McLean 450.

Unknown owners are concluded by a judgment against them regularly entered in an action of which the court had jurisdiction. Walker v. Ogden, 192 Ill. 314, 61 N. E. 403. See infra, XIV, B, 2, d.

But compare Sanford v. Cloud, 17 Fla. 532, where it is held to be no reply to a plea of res judicata that no damages were awarded and the decree cannot be enforced.

Inadequate recovery.— Where the cause of action is the same, a former judgment in a suit between the same parties, although an inadequate one, is a bar to a second recovery. Pinney v. Barnes, 17 Conn. 420.

66. Jungnitsch v. Michigan Malleable Iron Co., 121 Mich. 460, 80 N. W. 245; Griffin v. Long Island R. Co., 102 N. Y. 449, 7 N. E. 735; Dolan v. Scott, 25 Wash. 214, 65 Pac. 190; Johnson Steel St.-Rail Co. v. Wharton, 152 U. S. 252, 14 S. Ct. 608, 38 L. ed. 429.

execution;[67] nor is the scope of the estoppel to be determined by the reasoning of the court, the substantial effect of the actual decision being the only consideration.[68] And payment, satisfaction, or release of the judgment does not affect its conclusiveness as an estoppel.[69]

b. Verdict Without Judgment.[70] A verdict without a judgment entered upon it is generally held to be of no validity as an estoppel or bar,[71] although some cases have applied a contrary rule,[72] particularly where the verdict has become unassailable by the lapse of the time within which it might be set aside or a new trial granted,[73] or where the parties have acquiesced in the verdict or tacitly or expressly agreed to let it stand in the place of a judgment.[74]

c. Master's Report. A master's report is not evidence as an adjudication between the parties until it has been accepted and judgment rendered upon it.[75]

d. Decision of Court Without Jury. When a case is legally and properly tried by the court alone, without the aid of a jury, its judgment is as binding and conclusive upon the parties as if based upon a verdict,[76] and it makes no difference

Where an action had been brought in a state court, and a verdict rendered for defendant, and plaintiff's motion for a new trial overruled, and a notice of appeal given, it was held in a federal court that the action of the court was res adjudicata, although the formal judgment had not been entered, and that the jurisdiction of the court was exhausted, and therefore that an order entered in the circuit court after appeal to the supreme court, giving plaintiffs leave to discontinue their cause on payment of costs, was coram non judice and would not enable them to maintain a libel in a court of admiralty on the same cause of action. that the court's decision was wrong in law.[77] But the decision or findings of the court do not constitute a bar to a subsequent action unless followed by a judgment based thereon.[78]

4. Validity of Judgment — a. Void Judgments.[79] Where a judgment is void for want of jurisdiction, whether of the subject-matter or of the person of defendant, it is of no effect whatever as an estoppel, does not merge the cause of action, and constitutes no bar to further litigation upon the same cause of action.[80]

b. Erroneous or Irregular Judgments.[81] This is not true, however, of erroneous judgments. So long as a judgment remains unappealed from and in full force, it does not detract from its effect as a bar to further suits upon the same cause of action that it may be erroneous, so as to be reversible on appeal or error, or so irregular that it would be vacated on a proper application for that purpose.[82]

See 30 Cent. Dig. tit. "Judgment," §§ 1004, 1005. And see infra, XIV, A, 4, h, (I).

Unauthorized judgments.— The effect of res judicata cannot be ascribed to a judgment rendered without authority of law, as where it assumes to determine the rights of a party not before the court (Westerly Prob. Ct. v. Potter, 26 R. I. 202, 58 Atl. 661), or where the court undertakes to decide a question not raised by the pleadings or submitted by the parties (Luck v. Chicago, 211 Ill. 183, 71 N. E. 878).

But where a cause has been removed from a state court to a federal court, appealed to the supreme court, and there decided on the merits, all without objection to the jurisdiction, it is a bar to a subsequent action between the same parties on the same cause of action. Des Moines Nav., etc., Co. v. Iowa Homestead Co., 123 U. S. 552, 8 S. Ct. 217, 31 L. ed. 202.

Waiver by pleading judgment.— Pleading a judgment in bar of an action on the original demand is a waiver of defendant's right to avoid it for want or insufficiency of service. Henderson v. Staniford, 105 Mass. 504, 7 Am. Rep. 551.

Failure to proceed to quash order.— Where an order, bad upon its face for want of jurisdiction, is sought to be enforced in a civil court, the failure to obtain relief on a collateral application for certiorari to quash the order does not conclude the party from showing that the order was void. O'Grady v. Synan, [1900] 2 Ir. 602.

There are a few isolated decisions, however, which are not in accord with the rule stated in the text.[83]

c. Judgments Procured by Fraud. By the weight of authority a judgment duly rendered by a competent court having jurisdiction is none the less a bar to the further litigation of the same cause of action between the parties, because it may have been procured by the fraud of the successful party,[84] or by the concoction and use of false testimony.[85] But if the suit in which the judgment was entered was merely collusive, and a fraudulent arrangement between some of the parties to trick the others out of their rights, it is not an estoppel or bar against the proper claims of the latter.[86]

5. Finality of Determination[87] — a. In General. A judgment cannot be set up in bar of a subsequent action unless it was a final judgment on the merits,[88] adjudicating the rights in litigation in a conclusive and definitive manner.[89]

pel, however, does not depend on the form of the judgment, but upon its nature and effect; and although it may be final in form, it is no bar if it is only interlocutory in its nature.[92] On the other hand a decree is none the less conclusive because it was merely interlocutory at the commencement of the action in which it is set up as a bar, if it afterward ripened into a final decree.[93]

c. Conditional Judgment. A judgment which is not to become effective unless certain conditions are complied with, or which may be defeated and annulled by the performance of conditions subsequent, is no bar to a second action on the same subject-matter, unless it has become absolute by performance of the conditions in the one case, or failure to perform in the other.[94]

d. Pendency of Motion For New Trial. It has been held that the mere pendency of a motion for a new trial does not rob the judgment of its conclusive effect;[95] but if the motion is granted it throws the whole matter open, and the judgment cannot be pleaded in bar of a second action while the new trial is pending.[96] And a defendant cannot plead in bar a judgment recovered against him in a former action for the same cause, while in another suit, still pending, he is seeking to have such judgment set aside as erroneous.[97]

e. Pendency of Appeal.[98] In many states it is held that the pendency of an

Test of finality.— A judgment or decree is final where it settles the ultimate rights and liabilities of the parties, although it may leave details for further ascertainment or determination. Thus, where a suit to enforce liens is heard by the court, the parties are conclusively bound by a decree therein finding the existence of the liens and definitely adjudicating this point, although it may leave the question of the amount and priority of the liens to be afterward investigated and decided. appeal from a judgment, although it stays the enforcement of the judgment, does not affect its conclusive effect as evidence, and therefore does not prevent the judgment from being pleaded in bar of a second action for the same cause.[99] But in several others it is considered that while an appeal is pending the judgment lacks that character of finality which is necessary to constitute it an estoppel, and for that reason it cannot be set up as a bar to a new suit.[1] But in any case if the appeal asked for is not allowed or perfected, or is abandoned or withdrawn, the proceedings will not affect the operation of the judgment as an estoppel.[2]

some cases stand, although the original or principal judgment fails.[7] And the fact that an execution issued upon a judgment has been quashed does not entitle plaintiff to another judgment for the same debt.[8] A judgment vacating a judgment entered on confession, on the ground that the debt was contracted without authority and is not a valid obligation, is not confined in its operation to removing the judgment set aside from the record, but precludes the creditor from any other or further proceeding to enforce the demand.[9]

C. Decision on the Merits — 1. Necessity For Adjudication of Merits. A former judgment will not operate as a bar to a subsequent suit upon the same cause of action unless the proceedings and judgment in the first case involved or afforded full legal opportunity for an investigation and determination of the merits of the suit.[10] But although a judgment may have been rendered on tech-

Conclusive effect of judgment of reversal.— A judgment reversing a judgment of the court below is binding and conclusive, in respect to the points decided by it, upon the parties to the action and upon the lower court. 7. Thus a decree confirming the title of a purchaser of land at an execution sale is conclusive against the parties and their privies, although the judgment on which the execution was issued is afterward reversed on writ of error. Gould v. Sternberg, 128 Ill. 510, 21 N. E. 628, 15 Am. St. Rep. 138. So in another case it appeared that an inferior court of the state of Kentucky had rendered a judgment deciding that taxes imposed upon certain property for a certain year were invalid and uncollectable, because a statute of that state created an irrevocable contract of exemption from taxation with respect to that property, which, under the federal constitution, could not be impaired by subsequent legislation. A federal circuit court, accepting this decision as res judicata, made a final decree enjoining the collection of taxes on the same property for another year. Afterward the judgment of the Kentucky court was reversed by the highest court of that state, and both the latter court and, in another case, the supreme court of the United States repudiated the idea that there was any contract exemption. And moreover it appeared to be the settled law of Kentucky that an adjudication in respect to taxes for one year cannot be pleaded as an estoppel in suits involving taxes of other years. Notwithstanding these facts, it was held that the decree of the circuit court, so long as it remained in force, was conclusive in the further proceedings had in the state court. nical grounds, or by dismissal, or generally not on the merits, yet the admissions made by a party in his pleadings in that suit may be received as evidence against him, although not conclusive, in a subsequent action between the same parties.[11]

2. WHAT CONSTITUTES JUDGMENT ON THE MERITS. A judgment is on the merits when it amounts to a decision as to the respective rights and liabilities of the parties, based on the ultimate fact or state of facts disclosed by the pleadings or evidence, or both, and upon which the right of recovery depends, irrespective of formal, technical, or dilatory objections or contentions.[12] If the case is brought to an issue, heard upon evidence submitted pro and con, and decided by the verdict of a jury or the findings of a court, the judgment rendered is upon the merits.[13] But it is not necessary that there should have been a trial. If the judgment is general, and not based on any technical defect or objection, and the parties had a full legal opportunity to be heard on their respective claims and contentions, it is upon the merits, although there was no actual hearing or argument on the facts of the case.[14] On the other hand the judgment is not on the merits if the case went off on any preliminary, subsidiary, or technical plea or objection.[15] It is immaterial what the judgment is called or how it is framed, if it really involved a consideration and determination of the merits.[16]

8. Judgments by Confession[17]—a. In General. A judgment entered upon confession without action is as conclusive as any other judgment, and operates as a merger of the cause of action, and while it remains in force plaintiff cannot maintain an action for the same claim or demand.[18] But this rule does not apply

14. State v. Padgett, 19 Fla. 518. And see Buck v. Collins, 69 Me. 445, where it is said that a judgment will be regarded as rendered "on the merits," so as to operate as an estoppel, if the status of the action was such that the parties might have had their lawsuit disposed of according to their respective rights, if they had presented all the evidence, and the court had properly understood the facts and correctly applied the law.

Judgments by confession and default may be regarded as on the merits so as to bar subsequent suits, although there was no actual trial of the issues. See infra, XIII, C, 3, 5.

Claims withdrawn from jury.— Judgment in an action in which defendant pleaded a counter-claim is a bar to an independent action brought by him on the subject-matter of the counter-claim, although the court in the first action withdrew from the jury the consideration of the counter-claim, where it does not appear that it was so withdrawn for any technical reason. Several defenses.— Estoppel by judgment is no defense to a suit by plaintiff, where in a former suit, jointly instituted by him and others, as to the same matter, defendant interposed several distinct defenses, some going to the merits, and one to the right to maintain the action, and it does not appear on which defense the judgment in his favor was rendered. Callaway v. Irvin, 123 Ga. 344, 51 S. E. 477.

Contempt proceedings.— A judgment declaring a party guilty of contempt is not a judgment on the merits of the controversy involved in the principal proceeding, and does not constitute an adjudication of the rights of the litigants. Proctor v. Cole, 104 Ind. 373, 3 N. E. 106, 4 N. E. 303.

Plea of res judicata.— A decision that the subject-matter of the suit has already been determined by a valid and subsisting judgment between the parties is a decision on the "merits" of the case. Buck v. Spofford, 35 Me. 526.

to a judgment by confession which has been entered without the knowledge or consent of the creditor,[19] or which has been set aside.[20] And a judgment against a defendant by confession does not preclude him from suing for a counter-claim, since he is not bound to present it as a set-off in the first suit.[21]

b. In Case of Joint Defendants. At common law it was the rule that a confession of judgment by one of several joint debtors or joint defendants, accepted by plaintiff, released the others and merged the cause of action, so that a subsequent suit could not be maintained upon it against those not joining in the confession.[22] But this rule has generally been relaxed by statute, so that a confession so entered will not prevent plaintiff from pursuing his remedies against the other defendants.[23] Judgment confessed by one partner for the firm without authority binds only that partner, but it bars another action for the same cause against the firm.[24]

4. Judgments by Agreement or Consent.[25] A judgment settled and entered in whole or in part by the agreement, consent, or compromise of the parties is no less effective as a bar or estoppel than one rendered upon contest and trial.[26] And

A warrant of attorney to confess a judgment on a debt due directly from defendant to plaintiff is not a collateral security merging the original debt. Sloo v. Lea, 18 Ohio 279.

Merger.— Acceptance of an offer of judgment and entry thereof will bar an action for any part of the claim embraced in the complaint and which might have been litigated. Davies v. New York, 93 N. Y. 250. See infra, XIII, C, 4, text and note 27.

Fraud and mistake.— And it has been held that a judgment by confession is, while subsisting, conclusive as to the amount of plaintiff's claim, although it can be clearly shown that there was a mistake as to the amount and that the mistake was due to the false and fraudulent representations of defendant. Solomon v. Loper, 4 Harr. (Del.) 187. Compare supra, XIII, B, 4, c.

Confession of plea.— If, when the plaintiff could reply an avoidance of a release, instead of doing so, he confesses such plea and receives the cost of the cause up to the time of pleading such plea, as entitled to do by rule of court, he is estopped from bringing any fresh action for any claim which he might have thus set up in the first action; for the effect of such confession is not that of a mere nolle prosequi, but of a final judgment for defendant. Newington v. Levy, L. R. 5 C. P. 607, 39 L. J. C. P. 334, 23 L. T. Rep. N. S. 70, 18 Wkly. Rep. 1198 [affirmed in L. R. 6 C. P. 180, 40 L. J. C. P. 29, 23 L. T. Rep. N. S. 595, 19 Wkly. Rep. 473].

19. A judgment by confession entered without the knowledge or consent of the creditor is invalid for all purposes until ratified by him, and is operative neither as an estoppel nor as a merger of the demand. Haggerty v. Juday, 58 Ind. 154. And see Wolf v. Wyeth, 11 Serg. & R. Indiana.— A judgment, entered by agreement by a court of general jurisdiction, having power in a proper case to render such a judgment, and having the parties before it, will bind those by whose agreement it was entered, although the pleadings would not, on the same principle a judgment entered on plaintiff's acceptance of defendant's offer of judgment for a certain amount, or admission that so much is due, will estop him from suing for the remainder of his claim, unless the judgment is rendered without prejudice to his right to do so, or on leave given him for that purpose.[27] It has been held in equity, however, that where a decree was the result of consent of the parties, and not of the judgment of the court, the court may, if its aid in enforcing the same is asked by a subsequent bill, refuse to treat it as res judicata and decree contrary to what it finds to be the right of the case.[28] And a consent judgment which has been set aside or vacated by consent will not operate as res judicata.[29]

5. JUDGMENTS BY DEFAULT.[30] A judgment rendered upon default, in a case where the court has full jurisdiction, operates as a merger of the cause of action and prevents any further suit upon the same subject-matter.[31] But this rule does in a contested case, authorize such a judgment. Fletcher v. Holmes, 25 Ind. 458. See Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Terrell, 12 Ind. App. 328, 39 N. E. 295.

Contra, under rule of court.— Poyser v. Minors, 7 Q. B. D. 329.

Test case.— But where several suits were pending between the same plaintiff and differ-

may be framed nor what it may be called.[39] Nor is it material that the nonsuit was compulsory or ordered upon the failure of plaintiff's evidence.[40] But it has been held that a compulsory nonsuit ordered by a justice of the peace, having no authority to give such a judgment, must be taken as equivalent to a judgment that plaintiff has no cause of action, and therefore will be a bar to another suit.[41]

b. Non Prosequitur. A judgment of non prosequitur has no greater effect as an estoppel than a judgment of nonsuit, and does not bar another action for the same cause.[42]

c. Retraxit. A retraxit is an open and voluntary renunciation by plaintiff in open court of his suit or cause of action, and a judgment entered thereon is a bar to any further suit upon the same cause of action.[43]

ent defendants, and it was agreed by all parties that the suits should be stayed and should await the event of a suit between other parties in which the same questions arose, it was held that a judgment in that suit would operate as an estoppel between the parties to the agreement, even though the judgment was one of nonsuit. 39. State v. Anderson, 26 Fla. 240, 8 So. 1; Smith v. McMillan, 90 Hun (N. Y.) 542, 36 N. Y. Suppl. 24. Thus the entry of "neither party," that is, neither party proceeds further with the action, is no evidence of an adjudication of the merits and no bar to a future action; it is merely equivalent to a nonsuit and default by consent. Marsh v. Hammond, 11 Allen (Mass.) 483. So of a record entry that plaintiff's writ, on his failing to appear, was "abated and dismissed." Haws v. Tiernan, 53 Pa. St. 192. What constitutes retraxit.— A judgment upon motion of defendant's attorney of record, with the consent of plaintiff's attorney, that "it appearing that the subject-matter of this suit has been adjusted and settled by the parties, it is therefore ordered that this cause be and the same is hereby dismissed," is held to be a judgment on the merits, final in form and nature, being in the nature of a retraxit, and therefore a bar to a subsequent suit against defendant on the same cause of action. U. S. v. Parker, 120 U. S. 89, 7 S. Ct. 454, 30 L. ed. 601. But it has been held that a judgment in the nature of a retraxit must be entered by plaintiff personally, and cannot be effected by stipulation of counsel, so as to bar plaintiff's subsequent action on the same claim. Hallack v. Loft, 19 Colo. 74, 34 Pac. 568.

A nominal plaintiff, assignor of a chose in action, suing for the benefit of his assignee, cannot, by a dismissal of the suit under a collusive agreement with defendant, create a valid bar against any subsequent suit for the same cause of action. This, it is said,

7. Judgments on Dismissal or Discontinuance [44] — a. Dismissal of Bill or Suit in General. The dismissal of a complaint in an action at law, even after plaintiff has put in his evidence, when in the nature of a judgment of nonsuit or non prosequitur or a judgment on a plea in abatement, is not such a judgment on the merits as will bar a second suit on the same cause of action.[45] This is the case not only where the complaint is dismissed because of plaintiff's failure to appear,[46] but also where the dismissal is based on his failure to establish his cause of action by his evidence.[47] The same rule applies to suits in equity; if a bill was dismissed without a hearing or examination into the merits, it will be no bar to another bill or to an action at law for the same cause.[48]

complaint, plaintiff may voluntarily dismiss his action, and if he does so the dismissal will not bar a new suit.[50] And the rule is the same where plaintiff dismisses after the rendition of a judgment and the taking of an appeal, or after a reversal of the judgment on appeal,[51] or after the setting aside of a verdict and the grant of a new trial.[52]

c. Dismissal Pursuant to Agreement. It is generally held that a judgment of dismissal, when based upon and entered in pursuance of the agreement of the parties, amounts to a conclusive adjustment and adjudication of the merits of the controversy, in the absence of anything in the agreement or the judgment to the contrary, and therefore will bar another action for the same cause.[53] But to have this effect the judgment must have been upon the same identical cause of action as that presented in suit,[54] and the theory of the two actions with respect to the legal effect of the facts in issue must be the same.[55]

Remedy at law.— In several cases it is held that the dismissal of a bill seeking equitable relief in respect to a cause of action or an instrument on which the party can sue at law is no bar to an action at law upon the same matter, although the decree does not state the dismissal to have been without prejudice. g. Dismissal as to Part of Defendants. In all cases where the cause of action against two or more defendants is joint and several, either at common law or by force of a statute, or where their interests in the subject-matter are independent or disconnected, a discontinuance or dismissal as to one of such defendants will permit the bringing of a subsequent action against him alone.[71]

Where a court of law declines to determine a question of set-off, this is not res judicata so as to preclude an inquiry in a court of equity having concurrent jurisdiction of the matter. Hackett v. Connett, 2 Edw. (N. Y.) 73.

And where a court of equity dismisses a bill solely on the ground that there is an adequate remedy at law, the dismissal, not being on the merits, does not bar a subsequent action at law. 9. Judgment on Demurrer[99] — a. In General. A judgment rendered on a demurrer is equally conclusive, by way of estoppel, of the facts confessed by the demurrer, as would be a verdict and judgment finding the same facts.[1] But a judgment on demurrer, based merely on formal or technical defects and raising only a question of pleading, is no bar to a second action for the same cause.[2] And where the ground of the demurrer is the omission of a material allegation from plaintiff's pleading, a judgment sustaining the demurrer will not prevent the maintenance of a new suit on the same cause of action, in which the declaration or complaint supplies the missing averment.[3] On the other hand a judgment on a demurrer which goes to the merits, raising a question of substance and not merely one of form, and disposing of the whole cause of action, is a complete bar to a subsequent suit on the same claim or demand.[4] But where the demurrer was based on several grounds, some of which were merely formal and others going to the merits, and it was sustained generally, and the record does not show on what grounnd, it will not be presumed to have involved an adjudication of the merits, but on the contrary it will be intended that the action was dismissed on the technical objections set up by the demurrer.[5]

b. General Demurrer. It is generally held that a judgment sustaining a general demurrer to the declaration or complaint is a bar to a new suit upon the same state of facts;[6] but it will not prevent the maintenance of an action on a new declaration so amended by the insertion of new allegations or new facts as to raise a different issue.[7] It has been held that the overruling of a demnrrer to a complaint is a conclusive determination that a right of action exists;[8] but on the other hand it has been held that an interlocutory order overruling a general demurrer to a complaint is not res judicata of its sufficiency to support a judgment for plaintiff, and hence is no bar to the vacation of such order at a subsequent term and the entry of judgment on the pleadings in favor of defendant, since the doctrine of res judicata applies only to a final judgment on the merits.[9]

Demurrer to plea or answer.— A judgment on demurrer to an answer setting up a good defense, given in favor of the party pleading it, is a bar to a subsequent suit on the same claim. Wilson v. Ray, 24 Ind. 156; Bissell v. Spring Valley Tp., 124 U. S. 225, 8 S. Ct. 495, 31 L. ed. 411. See also Stinson v. Branigan, 10 U. C. Q. B. 210. But see Westerly Probate Ct. v. Potter, 26 R. I. 202, 58 Atl. 661, holding that a decree overruling a demurrer to a plea of release may not be pleaded as an adjudication of the fact of release or as determining the question whether the release, if any, was avoidable for fraud. Where, upon demurrer, the matter of a plea is adjudged no bar, and a writ of inquiry as to damages awarded, the case is not opened by the jury of inquiry returning a special verdict, finding the same facts. The judgment on the demurrer estops the party against whom it is given. Bush v. Critchfield, 5 Ohio 109.

Demurrer to bill in equity.— A decree dismissing a bill in equity, rendered on a demurrer which embraces the whole merits of the case, will support a plea of res judicata. New Orleans City Bank v. Walden, 1 La. Ann. 46. But where it amounts merely to a decision that the complainant has not shown facts entitling him to relief, and not to a decree upon the merits, it is no bar to a subsequent proceeding. Detrick v. Sharrar, 95 Pa. St. 521.

Demurrer to bill for want of equity.— Where a demurrer to a bill in equity on this ground is sustained and the bill dismissed it is an adjudication of the merits and bars any further action on the same cause. Turner v. Cates, 90 Ga. 731, 16 S. E. 971; Smith v. Hornsby, 70 Ga. 552; Ferguson v. Carter, 8 Ga. 524. And conversely, where a demurrer for want of equity in the bill is overruled, it is a conclusive adjudication of the equity of the bill, which cannot be disputed if the facts alleged are proved at the hearing. c. Demurrer to Cause of Action Stated. A judgment sustaining a demurrer to a complaint on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action is an adjudication upon the merits, so far as the complaint goes, and may be pleaded in bar of another suit on the same facts;[10] but such a decision will not bar a subsequent suit on a new complaint, supplying the omissions to which objection was taken by the demurrer, or setting up new or different facts.[11]

d. Demurrer to the Evidence. On a demurrer to the evidence a judgment in favor of the demurrant is on the merits and is a bar to any future suit on the same cause of action.[12]

In General. Although a judgment may be conclusive evidence on any point formerly litigated and decided between the same parties,[15] yet it is not pleadable in bar of a second action unless founded on the same identical cause of action. If this identity exists the former judgment may be interposed to prevent a second recovery by plaintiff on the same cause, or to bar the maintenance of a second

Overruling demurrer.— Where a demurrer to a complaint, on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, is overruled with leave to answer, plaintiff's right to maintain the action is not res judicata, but defendant, by answering, withdraws the demurrer, and he may raise any objections to the maintenance of the action which he did not waive by answering. c. Theory of Action or Recovery. Where a plaintiff is defeated in an action based upon a certain theory of his legal rights or as to the legal effects of a given transaction or state of facts through failure to substantiate his view of the case, this will not preclude him from renewing the litigation, without any change in the facts, but basing his claim on a new and more correct theory.[21] This rule applies where he bases his claim in the second suit upon a different right or title from that set up in the first action, provided the two titles are so inconsistent that they could not both have been brought forward in the same action;[22] where he

Applications of rule.— A judgment in an action for land against a party suing as the heir of one person is not a bar to his second action for the same land, in which he sues as the heir of another person. Downing v. Diaz, 80 Tex. 436, 16 S. W. 49. So a judgment dismissing for want of evidence a suit for obstructing a right of way in gross is not a bar to a similar suit alleging the way to be appendant or appurtenant. Whaley v. Stevens, 24 S. C. 479. And where a town borrowed money to pay certain expenses, giving notes therefor, and, in an action at law upon these notes the town was held not liable, for want of authority to borrow for that purpose, it was held that the judgment was not a bar to a subsequent action in equity by the person who made the loan, claiming as the equitable assignee of the debts to pay which the money was borrowed. Wells v. Salina, 71 Hun (N. Y.) 559, 25 N. Y. Suppl. 134.

Limitations of rule.— To prevent the estoppel of the judgment from attaching, there must be a real and substantial difference in the two titles set up, and it is not sufficient if it is the same title presented under a different aspect or with only nominal or technical variances. Werlein v. New Orleans, 177 U. S. 390, 20 S. Ct. 682, 44 L. ed. 817. Again the former judgment will be a bar if it really involved a determination of the title set up in alleges a different ground of liability on the part of defendant;[23] where he has been defeated in an action to recover on an alleged express contract for services to be rendered or goods to be furnished, failing to prove such a contract, and afterward sues to recover the reasonable value of the services or goods;[24] where he fails to establish defendant's liability under a written instrument, and afterward seeks recovery as on a resulting trust or on the ground of fraud or mistake;[25] where, having failed to establish a specific lien on property, he sues again on the ground of the personal liability of defendant;[26] where, having sued for the price of property and failed to prove a sale, he brings a new action for its use or the second action, or of a question underlying both titles, and subversive of plaintiff's right to recover under either. Carnes v. Carnes, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 610, 64 S. W. 877. Further a plaintiff must bring forward in one action all the titles or claims he may have to the property in suit, when they are not mutually exclusive; and the rule stated in the text applies only where he entirely abandons the title alleged in the first action, and brings forward, as the basis of his second action, a title wholly irreconcilable with that first alleged. detention;[27] or where an unsuccessful attempt to enforce a liability under a statute is followed by an action to hold the same defendant liable on the same facts as at common law.[28] And a similar rule obtains in equity; where the equities of a second bill are materially different from the first, although the origin of both is the same, the adjudication of the first is no bar to the second.[29] But there must be some essential difference in the two causes of action set up; and if the gist of both actions is the same, and the evidence sufficient to sustain the one would also authorize a recovery in the other, the former judgment will operate as a bar, notwithstanding nominal variances or verbal alterations of plaintiff's claims.[30] Moreover a plaintiff may be precluded from maintaining a second action by his election to pursue a given remedy, or by election between two or more causes of action.[31]

d. New Facts or Grounds of Recovery. The estoppel of a judgment extends only to the facts as they were at the time the judgment was rendered, and to the legal rights and relations of the parties as fixed by the facts so determined; and when new facts intervene before the second suit, furnishing a new basis for the claims and defenses of the parties respectively, the issues are no longer the same, and consequently the former judgment cannot be pleaded in bar.[32] But the Defense in One Suit as Cause of Action in Another.[35] Matters alleged by way of defense to an action, and fully negatived by the judgment therein, cannot afterward be made the basis of a new action by the former defendant against the former plaintiff.[36] But it is otherwise if such matters, although they might have been used as a defense in the first suit, constituted a substantive and distinct cause of action which defendant in the former suit was not bound to plead or set up.[37]

Different theory as to same facts.—The rule stated in the text must be taken subject to that set forth in the preceding section, as to the right of a plaintiff, unsuccessful in one action, to maintain a new suit on a new and more correct theory as to the legal effects or consequences of the same state of facts. See supra, XIII, D, 1, c.

Facts additional but not new.— It is a general rule that a judgment is conclusive of whatever might have been litigated in the action in which it was rendered, and that a party must bring forward in one suit all the claims or defenses which he has, which are included in or applicable to the cause of action in suit. See infra, XIII, D, 4, c. Hence in general additional facts bearing on the original cause of action, and which might have been presented in the first action, as distinguished from facts which have occurred since that action, will not be sufficient to sustain a new suit. Thus a judgment on the merits in an action for personal injuries, on the ground of defendant's negligence, is a bar to a second action between the same parties for the same injury, although additional acts of negligence are charged. McCain v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 22 S. W. 325, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 80; Colum v. Webster Mfg. Co., 84 Fed. 592, 28 C. C. A. 225, 43 L. R. A. 195. But certain cases hold the former judgment conclusive only as to the facts actually set up and litigated. Thus where plaintiff brought an action to set aside a tax-sale on the ground that the property was exempt from taxation, and was defeated, and afterward brought another suit against the same defendant, alleging not only the exemption of the property but also errors and irregularities in the levy and assessment of the tax, it was held that he was barred by the former judgment from raising the question of exemption, but not barred from litigating the question of irregularities. sought to be bound in the second suit is the successor in interest, title, or office to the party bound by the first judgment;[41] and a former judgment will operate as a bar if the parties to the two suits are really and substantially in interest the same, although they may nominally be different, or although nominal parties may be added in the second suit.[42]

action in the two suits shall be the same.[47] Undoubtedly the subject-matter involved in the two actions must be the same, for otherwise there could not possibly be an identity of the causes of action. But the same transaction or state of facts may give rise to distinct causes of action, and a judgment upon one will not bar a suit upon another.[48] Therefore a judgment in a former suit, although between the same parties and relating to the same subject-matter, is not a bar to a subsequent action, when the cause of action is not the same.[49] Again a judgment may be binding and conclusive evidence upon some particular point or question involved in the action in which it was rendered, although not a bar to the subsequent suit; and to have this effect it is not necessary that the two suits should relate to the same subject-matter, but only that the same issue should be involved in both.[50] Hence the fact that in the former action additional property was involved does not affect the conclusiveness of the judgment upon the property involved in the suit on trial.[51]

3. Nature and Form of Remedy — a. Varying Form of Action Does Not Affect Estoppel. A party cannot escape the bar of a judgment against him by bringing a new suit on the same cause of action, but in a different form of action or proceeding.[52] But this rule is subject to the following limitations: If plaintiff has misconceived his remedy, and the suit is dismissed on that ground, without an adjudication of the merits, it is no bar to a second action rightly brought;[53] nor is it a bar where the new action, although based on the same facts, proceeds upon a different theory as to their legal consequences or the relative rights of the causes of action in two suits may be different, so as to prevent an estoppel, although the same relief be asked.[62] On the other hand if the causes of action in two suits are substantially the same a difference in the relief sought will not prevent the judgment in one from operating as an estoppel in the other.[63] But there is in general no identity of the causes of action in two suits where the relief demanded or appropriate in the one is such as would be entirely inconsistent or inadmissible in the other, although both actions may be founded on the same transaction or state of facts.[64]

b. Demands Adjudicated in Former Action. A former judgment is conclusive, in a subsequent action between the same parties, as to all demands, claims, or titles put in issue and adjudicated in the first suit, although the second has a different object or relates to a different subject-matter.[65] And although two distinct pieces or kinds of property or two separate claims or rights may be involved in the two suits, yet if the ground of recovery or relief in respect to them, or the right or title set up in respect to them, is identical, or founded on the same claim or source of title, and constitutes the basis of the adjudication in the one action, the judgment will operate as an estoppel in the other.[66]

the reasons, grounds, and evidence which he may have in support of his claim or defense,[68] and if he has several claims or titles to the property in controversy he must assert them all.[69] Again if a party is brought into a case and has a fair legal opportunity to present and enforce any claim he may have in relation to the subject-matter he must avail himself of it,[70] and whether an original party or an intervener, he must present his whole case, extending his claim so as to embrace everything which properly constitutes a part of his cause of action or defense.[71] Further a plaintiff must recover in one action all he is entitled to; if dissatisfied with the result, he cannot bring a new suit to recover something more on the same cause of action.[72] But this rule does not require a plaintiff to join in one suit several distinct and separate causes of action which he may have against

Statement of rule.— "Where the cause of action is the same, and plaintiff has had an opportunity in the former suit of recovering that which he seeks to recover in the second, the former recovery is a bar to the latter action. To constitute such former recovery a bar, however, it must be shown that the plaintiff had an opportunity of recovering, and but for his own fault might have recovered, in the former suit that which he seeks to recover in the second action." Injunction and accounting.— In a suit against a corporation to enjoin its use of complainant's trade-mark and to obtain an accounting of profits, it appeared that a previous suit had been brought by the same complainant against the selling agent of defendant for the same purpose, and that there had been a decree for an injunction, but that it was shown in that suit that the selling agent was employed upon a salary and received no share of the profits, and for that reason no decree for an accounting was made against him. Election of remedies.— The rule stated in the text applies only where plaintiff's election is between two or more claims or causes of action. It does not apply where he elects between different theories as to his legal rights in the premises, or between different remedies or methods of seeking redress. Thus, where a vendor elects rather to sue for the purchase-money than to disaffirm the contract, the judgment in the suit is conclusive as to the right of parties or privies to disaffirm the contract. Roberts v. Lovejoy, 60 Tex. 253. So where a contract was subject to two constructions, either of which was open to plaintiff at his election, it was held that having made his election and enforced it by suit he could not afterward maintain another action based on the other construction of the contract, as the judgment recovered in the first suit was a bar. 5. Splitting Causes of Action[84] — a. Entire and Inseverable Demands. Where a demand or right of action is in its nature entire and indivisible, it cannot be split up into several causes of action and sued piecemeal, or made the basis of as many separate suits; but a recovery for one part will bar a subsequent action for the whole, the residue, or another part.[85] A particular application of this rule is that a party who has an entire claim which exceeds in amount the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, and who, to bring his action within such jurisdiction,

Pr. 340, the rule is thus stated: A judgment concludes the rights of the parties in respect to the cause of action stated in the pleadings in which it is rendered, whether the suit embraces the whole or any part of the demand constituting the cause of action. An entire claim, arising either on a contract or from a wrong, cannot be divided and made the subject of several suits; and if several suits are brought for different parts of such claim, the pendency of the first may be pleaded in abatement of the others, and a judgment on the merits in either will be available as a bar in the other suits.

divides it into several portions, is barred by his first recovery and cannot afterward sue for the remaining portions.[86] Neither can a party, by assigning a part of his claim to another, divide an entire cause of action so as to sustain more than one suit upon it.[87] But the rule forbidding the severance of a cause of action is for the benefit of defendant, and he may waive it or renounce it by agreement with plaintiff.[88]

b. Contracts in General.[89] As a general rule but one cause of action arises from the breach of a contract or agreement, and where an action is brought on a contract all claims arising under the same and then due constitute an entire and indivisible cause of action, and a judgment therein is a bar to any further action founded on such claims.[90] But where a contract contains several stipulations, to

A judgment is a single and indivisible cause of action, and separate suits cannot be maintained for different portions of the amount which it awards, merely because different interests in it have been assigned to different persons. Hopkins v. Stockdale, 117 Pa. St. 365, 11 Atl. 368.

Severable demands.— The rule against splitting causes of action cannot be applied unless the two claims separately sued on were both parts of one and the same cause of action, equally available for purposes of suit at the time of the first action, and equally within the scope and purview of that action. See Wheelock v. Svensgaard, 63 Minn. 486, 65 N. W. 937; Claflin v. Mather Electric Co., 98 Fed. 699, 39 C. C. A. 241. Thus the right of a creditor having various claims against a corporation to exact payment from a stock-holder is not such a single demand that, by placing one such claim in judgment against the stock-holder, he is precluded from proceeding against him upon the others. Manley v. Park, 68 Kan. 400, 75 Pac. 557, 66 L. R. A. 967. So the rule does not prevent one whose property is taken by a single trespass from maintaining replevin for so much of the property as is owned absolutely by him, and trover for the remainder, owned by him in common with another. Rent.— If a lessor to whom rent is payable quarterly brings an action and recovers judgment for a part of a quarter, he cannot afterward sue for the residue. Warren v. Comings, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 103.

Bonds.— As a general rule there can be only one recovery on a bond for breach of its conditions. Stephens v. Crawford, 3 Ga. 499; Hanes v. Planters' Cotton-Press, etc., Assoc., 55 Miss. 654; Stinson v. Branigan, 10 U. C. Q. B. 402. But where there are successive breaches of the conditions of a bond, a judgment recovered for such breaches as had occurred at the time of bringing the suit, and not embracing the penalty of the bond, but damages for such breaches will not bar a second action for subsequent breaches. Ahl v. Ahl, 60 Md. 207; Orendorff v. Utz, 48 Md. 298. And see White v. Smith, 47 N. C. 4.

Leases.— The lease of premises for a period of six months, although the rent is payable monthly, being an entire contract, there can be only one recovery for a breach; and the recovery of an instalment of the rent is a bar to any further action on the contract. Burckhardt v. Greene, 26 Ohio Cir. Ct. 315 [affirmed without opinion in 68 Ohio St. 711, 70 N. E. 1116].

Partial breach of contract.— A recovery of damages for a partial breach of a contract will bar a further claim for damages occasioned by the breach sued on. Crabtree v. Hagenbaugh, 25 Ill. 233, 79 Am. Dec. 324.

Contract for work and labor.— If a person performs work for another at various times under one entire contract, and brings an action and recovers a judgment for a portion of the sum due on it, he cannot recover in a second action for a further sum due him under the contract, although he shows that as to the part sought to be recovered in the second action no evidence was given in the first. Logan v. Caffrey, 30 Pa. St. 196. But where persons contract in writing for the performance of a piece of work, and extra work is afterward done with their verbal assent, the contractor cannot recover for it in an action of covenant on the agreement, and therefore the recovery in such suit for the work originally contracted for will not bar him from suing in assumpsit for the extra work. Baehler v. Hartman, 1 Pearson (Pa.) 500.

Partial performance of contract.— Where one contracts with a railroad to do grading and clearing on its road, and performs a portion of the work, but is prevented from completing it by the company's failure to acquire right of way, a judgment obtained for the work actually performed up to the time of such failure will not prevent a subsequent action for the damages sustained by reason of such failure. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Yawger, 24 Ind. App. 460, 56 N. E. 50. So also an action to foreclose a lien for the contract price of removal of buildings is not barred by a previous action by the laborers to foreclose a lien for the amount due them on account of work done for the contractor. Boucher v. Powers, 29 Mont. 342, 74 Pac. 942.

Principal and interest.— One who has sued for and recovered the principal of a debt cannot afterward maintain a separate action for interest on the debt. Harty v. Harty, 2 La. 518; Saul v. His Creditors, 7 Mart. N. S. (La.) 425; Nugent v. Delhomme, 2 Mart. (La.) 307; Faurie v. Pitot, 2 Mart. (La.) 83; Gordon v. Omaha, (Nebr. 1904) 99 N. W. 242.

Interest due under separate agreement.— Where plaintiff sued defendant as maker and A as indorser of two notes, adding a count for interest, and at the trial to support this count offered in evidence a separate written undertaking signed by defendant, and a similar one by A, to allow him interest at the rate of thirty per cent, until payment, in consideration of plaintiff allowing three months' time, and the court ruled that the action being joint evidence of a separate liability against either defendant could not be received, and plaintiff then took a verdict against both defendants for the amount of the notes and interest at six per cent, and after judgment had been entered upon this and satisfied, he sued defendant on his undertaking, to recover twenty-four per cent, the balance of interest agreed to be paid by it, it was held that the judgment recovered was a bar to any further claim for interest contract must be included.[91] Moreover separate causes of action may arise from the breach of separate covenants or undertakings in the same deed or contract.[92]

c. Contracts of Employment.[93] A servant or agent wrongfully dismissed from his employment has his election to treat the contract as rescinded and recover pay for his services rendered, or to sue for breach of the contract; but if he chooses the latter, he must recover all his damages in the one action, and cannot thereafter maintain an action either for wages earned or for such as would have been earned in the future.[94] Yet in some states it is held that if the stipulated wages or salary was to be payable in instalments the employee may bring a separate suit for each instalment on the day it would have fallen due, and one such recovery will not bar another.[95]

Former judgment as evidence.— In an action for one instalment of wages, if defendant sets up a defense going to the entire cause of action, such as that there was no such contract of employment as alleged, and judgment is given in his favor, it will be a bar to a subsequent action for another instalment. Strauss v. Meertief, 64 Ala. 299, 38 Am. Rep. 8. On the other hand where defendant has unsuccessfully attempted to defend one such action on the ground of plain-

d. Actions on Running Accounts. A continuous running account for goods sold, money lent, work and labor, or the like, is an entire demand, not severable into distinct causes of action, and a recovery on such an account must include all that is due at the time, subsequent actions on it being barred.[96] But this rule does not apply where the subsequent action is for goods sold on credit, where the time for payment had not elapsed when the first suit was brought,[97] or for items of the account accruing subsequent to the commencement of the first action.[98]

e. Entire Claims Founded on Tort.[99] An entire claim arising from a single tort cannot be divided and made the subject of several suits; a judgment upon the merits in respect to any part will be available as a bar in other actions arising from the same cause,[1] the rule being that plaintiff must include in the one action all the various items or elements of his damage, and recover all the compensation

Distinct accounts.— While all the items of a running account must be recovered in one action, it is important to note that plaintiff may have several distinct and separate accounts, each of which may include several items, against the same defendant, and in that case a recovery on one will not bar an action on another. Tommey v. Finney, 45 Ga. 155. Thus where plaintiff kept an establishment, one part of which was devoted to the sale of ships' stores, and another to the business of repairing ships, and he kept separate accounts for each branch of his business, and defendant bought stores and also had repairs made, and separate bills were sent to him, it was held that the two accounts constituted distinct causes of action, which might be separately sued. he is entitled to for each and all of such items,[2] including prospective damages in cases where the injury was single, complete, and not repeated.[3] Thus for a single and completed trespass upon and injury to an entire tract of land several actions for damages cannot be maintained, but a recovery for the damage to a part of the land will bar a similar action as to another part.[4] And on the same principle if several chattels are taken or injured at the same time and by the same tortious act, the right of action is single, and a recovery of judgment in respect to any of them will merge the whole cause of action and bar any subsequent suit for the residue.[5]

f. Distinct Trespasses.[6] Distinct and separate acts of trespass or other tort, committed at different times or in different places, although they may be more or less connected, will give rise to distinct causes of action.[7]

2. Covington, etc., El. R., etc., Co. v. Kleimerer, 49 S. W. 484, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1415, holding that the whole of the injury to abutting property from the construction and prudent operation of a railroad constitutes one entire cause of action, and a recovery for a part of such injury bars an action for the remainder.

Overflowing lands.— A judgment for plaintiff in an action for wrongfully causing his land to be overflowed is a bar to another action for damages resulting from the same overflow to land which forms a part of the tract involved in the former action, although that action was for damages to growing crops, while the latter action is for preventing plaintiff from planting and cultivating the ground. Wichita, etc., R. Co. v. Beebe, 39 Kan. 465, 18 Pac. 502.

Conversion of a chattel.— A judgment in an action for the seizure and conversion of a chattel will bar a subsequent action of trespass for the wrongful entry upon plaintiff's premises or the forcible taking of the chattel. Repetitions of slander.— A judgment against a press association for sending out a libelous article to its customers, on a complaint which does not claim damages for the publication by the various newspapers to which it is sent, is not a bar to a judgment against one of such newspapers for the publication. Union Associated Press v. Heath, 49 N. Y. App. Div. 247, 63 N. Y. Suppl. 96. g. Claims Omitted Through Ignorance or Mistake. The rule prohibiting a multiplicity of suits has no reference to a case where the party has no knowledge of his means of redress; and a former recovery does not bar claims of which plaintiff was ignorant, although they existed at the time and might have been joined.[8] And some of the decisions extend this exception to claims or items omitted by plaintiff, not through ignorance of them, but by mere mistake.[9] But the general rule is that a party who inadvertently, or by his own negligence or mistake, and without fault or fraud of the adverse party, takes judgment for a sum less than his actual claim, is estopped to bring a second action for the residue.[10] And the same result follows where claims or items were omitted in consequence of the mistake or erroneous decision of the court or a referee.[11]

h. Plaintiff Not Required to Join Distinct Demands. The rule against splitting causes of action does not require a plaintiff who has distinct and disconnected causes of action against the same defendant, each of which by itself would authorize independent relief, to join them in a single suit, although they exist at the same time and might permissibly be so joined.[12]

6. Successive Causes of Action — a. In General.[13] Where several claims, due or enforceable at different times, arise out of the same contract or transaction, separate actions may be brought as each liability accrues,[14] although all of such claims which may be due at the time of bringing a given action must be included in it.[15] Thus as a general rule a contract to do several things at several times is divisible in its nature, so as to authorize successive actions;[16] but if the contract is entire and its breach total, only one cause of action accrues to plaintiff, and he

Special assessments.— A judgment refusing sale for a delinquent instalment of a special assessment is conclusive upon the parties on application for judgment of sale for another instalment of the same assessment, where it appears from the evidence that the court based its former judgment upon the fact that the assessment ordinance was wholly void. Statute of limitations.— In an action to recover an assessment on the stock of a corporation, a decision that the cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations is no bar to a subsequent action between the same parties to recover a subsequent assessment. Priest v. Glenn, 51 Fed. 405, 2 C. C. A. 311.
Several defenses pleaded.— Where, in defense to one of a series of actions, defendant pleads various matters, some of which go to the merits of the whole transaction and others only to the particular action, and it does not appear on what ground the judgment in his favor was based, such judgment will not bar another action of the same series. Augir v. Ryan, 63 Minn. 373, 65 N. W. 640.
Action for usury paid and to recover penalty for usury.— A judgment defeating the recovery of interest on a note to a national bank on a plea of usury (U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 5198 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3493]) does not bar a subsequent action to recover back, under such statute, twice the amount of usurious interest theretofore paid; since not only is the forfeiture of interest due, for usury in the contract, distinct from the recovery of usurious payments, but such payments are not ascertained to be usurious until judgment is rendered for an amount greater than the principal and legal interest. such as a trespass or nuisance, is not permanent and final in its character, but is continuing, repetitive, or periodical, damages can only be recovered for the injury sustained up to the time of the commencement of the suit, and every repetition of the trespass or continuance of the nuisance is a fresh injury giving rise to a new cause of action.[42] On this principle a former recovery in an action for a nuisance is no bar to a subsequent action between the same parties for a continuance of the nuisance.[43] So a judgment in a former action against a railroad company or other corporation for damages to real property caused by the construction of its road or other works, sustained up to the time of bringing the suit, is not a bar to an action for such damages accruing subsequently.[44] And where the wrongful or faulty construction of a railroad, bridge, culvert, or other work causes it to obstruct the waters of a stream, so as to overflow the lands of an adjoining proprietor, a recovery by the latter for damages occasioned by one such overflow will not bar a subsequent suit for subsequent injuries arising from the same cause.[45]

Repetition of libel.— Repetitions of a slander or successive publications of the same libel give rise to as many distinct causes of action, and the recovery of damages for one statement or publication of the defamatory charges will not prevent the injured party from recovering fresh damages for a repetition of it. Woods v. Pangborn, 14 Hun (N. Y.) 540; Underwood v. Smith, 93 Tenn. 687, 27 S. W. 1008, 42 Am. St. Rep. 946. Applications of rule.— So where a railroad company, in constructing its track, permitted the timber cleared from its right of way to remain in a stream, obstructing the flow of water therein so as to cause the same to overflow adjacent land in time of heavy rains, the injury to the land is recurrent, authorizing the owner to sue as often as he suffers injury for the loss of the use of the land or loss of growing crops, but not for the difference in the market value of the land before and after the obstruction. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Roberts, (Tex. Civ. App. 1905) 86 S. W. 1052. Thus a judgment for the diversion of water which supplied plaintiff's mill, limited by its terms to damages sustained from the time of the diversion to the commencement of the action, does not bar an action for the damages afterward sustained. Covert v. Brooklyn, 13 N. Y. App. Div. 188, 43 N. Y. Suppl. 310. But see Porter v. Cobb, 22 Hun (N. Y.) 278, holding that a recovery of nominal damages and costs in trespass for wrongfully leaving on a certain day a wagon on plaintiff's premises is a bar to a recovery for allowing the wagon to remain there on succeeding days against plaintiff's commands to take it away.

(III) Permanent Trespass or Nuisance. On the other hand, where a trespass or nuisance is of a permanent character, so that the injury resulting from it is complete and final, a single recovery may and must be had for the whole damage resulting from the tort, and no second action will lie.[46]

(IV) Former Judgment as Evidence. According to some decisions where a plaintiff has recovered damages for a trespass or nuisance, the judgment for plaintiff is not admissible at all in a subsequent action for a continuance of the same tort, or at most is only prima facie evidence of his right to recover in the second action.[47] According to others defendant is estopped, in a subsequent action for a continuance of the same tort, to deny the existence or character of the nuisance or trespass or plaintiff's right to recover, provided the latter shows the continuance of the same conditions.[48] And conversely, a verdict for defendant in such an action will be conclusive against plaintiff's right to recover in a subsequent action,[49] unless the defense went only to the merits of the first action, or plaintiff shows fresh damages and a new cause of action.[50]

7. Distinct Causes of Action From Same Act or Transaction[51] — a. In General. Causes of action which are distinct and independent, although growing out of the same contract, transaction, or state of facts, may be sued upon separately, and the recovery of judgment for one of such causes of action will not bar subsequent actions upon the others.[52]

b. Separate Clauses or Conditions of Contract.[53] Where a deed, lease, or contract contains several covenants or undertakings, which are distinct and independent and have no connection with each other except that they all relate to the same general subject-matter, the recovery of a judgment for a breach of one of them will not bar an action for a breach of another.[54] But all breaches of the

On the other hand an action on the case for a deceit in falsely representing that a farm contained a certain number of acres is not a bar to an action of assumpsit upon a guaranty that the farm contained that number of acres. Schriver v. Eckenrode, 87 Pa. St. 213. And in an action of assumpsit on a due-bill given for whatever amount of encumbrances might be found against a tract of land conveyed by defendant to plaintiff, a judgment for defendant in a former action on the case between the same parties, for a deceit practised by defendant in representing himself as the owner of the said tract and inducing plaintiff to exchange valuable property for it, when in fact he was not the owner of it, and his title thereto was valueless to plaintiff, is not a bar to plaintiff's recovery, although the due bill was given in evidence in the former action. Finley v. Hanbest, 30 Pa. St. 190.

Wrongful taking of goods.— An unsatisfied judgment for damages for the tortious seizure or taking of plaintiff's goods will not bar an action to recover the value of the goods and vice versa. So a judgment in an action for conversion of goods is not a bar to an action between the same parties for the price of the same goods. Southern R. Co. v. Raney, 117 Ala. 270, 23 So. 29. And a judgment for the value of goods alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed by one defendant to another is not a bar to an action in tort for conspiracy between defendants to prevent plaintiff from collecting a judgment against one of them. Tams v. Lewis, 42 Pa. St. 402.

Other examples.— A recovery in an action for the hire of a horse and buggy is no bar to another action to recover damages for injuries done to the buggy while in possession of the hirer. Shaw v. Beers, 25 Ala. 449. So a judgment for the statutory penalty for illegal overcharge of fare on a railroad will not bar a suit for wrongful ejection from defendant's cars. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Trimble, 54 Ark. 354, 15 S. W. 899. And an action on a contract settling the title to real estate will not bar an action between the

d. Distinct Injuries From Same Tort — (I) In General. Distinct causes of action, capable of being sued on separately and successively, may arise from one and the same tortious act in favor of the same plaintiff; as where damage to goods and injuries to the person are caused by the same negligent or wrongful act,[57] or where two separate portions or kinds of plaintiff's property are damaged by the same tort,[58] or he is injured thereby in respect to different rights or interests.[59] So an action for a civil penalty for a tortious act may lie in addition to a criminal prosecution therefor.[60] But generally, where a statute authorizes an action of debt for a penalty, to be brought in the name of the state, for the benefit of a person injured by a particular form of tort, he must choose whether he will sue under the statute or in a common-law action, and cannot prosecute both remedies.[61]

(II) Separate Actions by Parent and Child For Injury to Child. Where a minor child is injured by the negligence or fault of a third person, separate causes of action accrue, to the child for his own injuries, and to his parent for expenses incurred in consequence of the injury and for the loss of the child's services; and these may be prosecuted separately, and a recovery in one action will not bar the maintenance of the other.[62]

same parties for slander of title of the same real estate, although the allegd slander was connected with the title in the contract. Linville v. Rhoades, 73 Mo. App. 217. Nor will a judgment for defendant in an action for seduction under promise of marriage bar a subsequent action for breach of the same promise of marriage. Ireland v. Emmerson, 93 Ind. 1, 47 Am. Rep. 364. And judgment for the mortgagor in a suit to compel the mortgagee to discharge the mortgage and to restrain him from proceeding with an action to foreclose is no bar to a subsequent action to recover the statutory penalty for the mortgagee's refusal to execute a discharge and the special damages occasioned thereby. Mallory v. Mariner, 15 Wis. 177. On the other hand, where one who is sued on a note sets up a larger claim as a set-off and recovers judgment thereon, it will estop him from suing the former plaintiff for a malicious prosecution founded on the suit on the note. Dolan v. Thompson, 129 Mass. 205.

59. See cases cited in subsequent notes in this section. Thus recovery by a husband for injuries to himself is not a bar to a subsequent action for injuries to his wife, sustained at the same time and as a result of the same act or negligence. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Nelson, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 156, 29 S. W. 78; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Edwards, 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 346; Newbury v. Connecticut, etc., R. Co., 25 Vt. 377. So an action by an administrator for the wrongful killing of his intestate, for the benefit of the widow and next of kin, is not a bar to an action to recover for the benefit of the estate the medical and funeral expenses and damages for mental anguish suffered by deceased after receiving the injury. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Sweet, 63 Ark. 563, 40 S. W. 463. But see Clare v. New York, etc., R. Co., 172 Mass. 211, 51 N. E. 1083. Where two or more persons are injured by the negligent act of a railroad company, the recovery of exemplary damages for intentional wrong by one of them will not bar the claim of the others to recover exemplary damages. Griffin v. Southern R. Co., 65 S. C. 122, 43 S. E. 445. And it makes no difference that the two suits are brought by the same person in the character of administrator of the injured persons, their death having resulted from the injury. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Slater, 139 Ill. 190, 28 N. E. 830.

Partners.— A recovery of judgment by a partnership for injury to the firm's property is no bar to an action by one of the partners for damages to his private property, or to his person, sustained by the same act. Taylor v. Manhattan R. Co., 53 Hun (N. Y.) 305, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 488; Cahnmann v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 35 Misc. (N. Y.) 127, 71 N. Y. Suppl. 317. And a joint judgment obtained by partners in a slander suit is no bar to a several suit by one of the partners on the same cause of action. Duffy v. Gray, 52 Mo. 528.

Husband and wife.— A wife's right of action for injuries from a tort is distinct from her husband's right of action for the loss of her services caused by the same injury. Denver Consol. Tramway Co. v. Riley, 14 Colo. App. 132, 59 Pac. 476; Brierly v. Union R. Co., 26 R. I. 119, 58 Atl. 451. Co. v. Flato, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 214, 35 S. W. 859.

Parent and child.— The recovery of a judgment by a husband for injuries causing the death of his wife is no bar to an action by their children against the same defendant for the wrongful killing of their mother by the same act. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Kutac, 72 Tex. 643, 11 S. W. 127.

Landlord and tenant.— A stranger, committing waste on premises leased or held by a particular estate, is liable separately to the tenant for the injury to the possession and to the landlord or reversioner for the injury to the freehold or inheritance. California Dry-Dock Co. v. Armstrong, 17 Fed. 216, 8 Sawy. 523.

Principal and surety or guarantor.— A recovery against a sheriff for money had and received by him in his official capacity is no bar to an action on his bond against the sureties for the same money. State Treasurer v. Oswald, 2 Bailey (S. C.) 214. And a judgment against the principal, on a contract guaranteed, will not bar an action against him and another, on the contract of guaranty, executed by both of them jointly. White v. Smith, 33 Pa. St. 186, 75 Am. Dec. 589; Fischer v. Quigley, 8 Wash. 327, 35 Pac. 1071. And see Walden Nat. Bank v. Birch, 130 N. Y. 221, 29 N. E. 127, 14 L. R. A. 211. So different parties interested may maintain successive actions on an executor's bond. People v. Randolph, 24 Ill. 324.

Different creditors.— A judgment foreclos-plaintiff is derived from or subordinate to that of the other.[64] So the same facts may give rights of action to the parties mutually against each other,[65] or to one plaintiff against separate defendants.[66]

f. Extinguishment by One Satisfaction. Where a plaintiff has separate concurrent or successive rights of action on the same transaction or for the same injury, he can have only one full satisfaction; this obtained, his further actions or remedies will be barred.[67]

8. Cause of Action on Debt and Collateral Security[68] — a. In General. A judgment on a security held as collateral does not merge or extinguish the principal debt;[69] and conversely a collateral security will not be merged in a judgment on the debt, when equity requires it to be kept alive.[70]

b. Indebtedness and Lien. The recovery of judgment on a debt secured by a lien, so long as it remains unsatisfied, is no bar to an action to enforce the lien.[71] But a judgment or decree enforcing the lien will merge the cause of action on the original debt, at least if it is coextensive with the debt or provides for the collection of any deficiency.[72] A successful defense on the merits to an action ing a mortgage in a suit in which the question whether or not the mortgage was executed to defraud the mortgagor's creditors was not in issue does not preclude a creditor of the mortgagor, who was not a party to the foreclosure suit, from attacking the mortgage on that ground. Brooks v. Wilson, 125 N. Y. 256, 26 N. E. 258. So where several insurance companies are subrogated to the right of the insured to sue a railroad company for causing the loss, the fact that the railroad company allowed one of the companies to take judgment against it, and paid the same, does not bar an action by the other companies to recover their proportion of the loss. In this case plaintiff sued for damages for personal injuries, exhibited all his injuries and recovered for all, concealing the fact that part of such injuries were sustained in a later accident of the same kind. Afterward he brought a suit against another defendant for such later injury, and it was claimed that the former judgment was a bar, on the ground that plaintiff had already been compensated for the injuries now in suit. But the court held otherwise, for the reason that the first defendant could recover the sum paid plaintiff.

either on the debt or the lien will bar an action on the other,[73] but a judgment merely denying the lien claimed will not bar an action on the debt.[74]

c. Debt and Collateral Note or Bond. An unsatisfied judgment on a debt or claim cannot be pleaded in bar of an action on a note or bond given as collateral security for it,[75] nor will an unpaid judgment against an administrator, trustee, sheriff, constable, or other officer prevent a subsequent suit on his official bond.[76] Conversely a judgment recovered on the collateral note or bond, if unsatisfied, will not bar an action on the original debt.[77] A successful defense on the merits, in an action either on the principal debt or on the collateral, will bar an action on the other;[78] but where the defense successfully interposed to an action on the note or bond goes only to the validity of the instrument in suit, and is not inconsistent with the theory that there is a good cause of action on the original debt or vice versa, the former judgment is no bar.[79]

d. Note or Bond and Collateral Security.[80] The recovery of a judgment, without satisfaction, on a note, bond, or other evidence of debt will not bar proceedings on any security given as collateral to it, such as another note, a deed, or a mortgage.[81] And the foreclosure of a mortgage or other lien on property will not prevent a suit on the note or bond to which it is collateral, no satisfaction having been obtained,[82] except in cases where the decree of foreclosure makes provision for a possible deficiency and awards a personal judgment and execution for it.[83] A judgment in favor of defendant, on either the note or the collateral, will not bar an action on the other, unless his defense was such as to undermine plaintiff's entire claim;[84] but the creditor can have only one satisfaction, whether he obtains it in proceedings on the note or on the collateral.[85]

this rule are found in cases where the judgment was rendered on constructive service only, which will not preclude defendant from setting up defenses which he might have made if he had had notice and had appeared in the action,[91] and where he had no knowledge at the time of the suit of facts which would have constituted a defense to it,[92] or was prevented from setting them up by the fraud or artifice of the adverse party,[93] or where a defense to the claim arises or accrues to the defendant after the rendition of the judgment.[94] But it is not sufficient to lift the bar that the court improperly rejected a good and sufficient defense; defendant should seek the correction of such an error by appeal or other appropriate proceeding.[95]

b. Adverse Title. In an action for the recovery of real property, or to try title, or to foreclose a mortgage, or for trespass, defendant must set up all the titles or claims to the property which he holds or can make available in his behalf; failure to assert any title or claim in such action will preclude him from setting it up afterward.[96]

Performance of conditions of contract.— Where there has been a previous recovery on the same contract, plaintiff may set up such previous recovery, by way of estoppel, to show that certain stipulations in the contract, as conditions precedent on his part, had been complied with, and defendant was estopped from denying all but the subsequent breach and damage. c. Fraud. Fraud by which defendant was induced to enter into a contract sued on or otherwise tainting plaintiff's cause of action is a defense which must be set up when defendant has an opportunity to plead it, and if not asserted in due time, it will be barred by the judgment.[97]

d. Illegality of Claim or Contract. The same rule applies to a defense affecting the validity of the claim or contract in suit, as that it was founded on an illegal consideration, was contrary to public policy, or ultra vires, or was wrongfully acquired by plaintiff; these questions are concluded by the judgment if they might have been pleaded, whether they were or not.[98]

e. Agreement to Compromise. As a general rule an agreement to compromise a claim cannot be availed of if not pleaded in defense to an action on the claim.[99]

f. Payment. A defendant who omits to plead and prove a partial payment on the debt in suit is concluded by the judgment, and cannot afterward maintain where the blending of law and equity permits all defenses, of whatever character, to be set up in an action at law.[7]

3. Set-Off or Counter-Claim — a. Set-Off Barred by Former Judgment. One who brings suit on a claim, demand, or cause of action is estopped by the judgment therein from pleading the same matter as a set-off or counter-claim in a subsequent action brought against him by the former defendant, whether the former judgment was rendered against him, in which case it is conclusive,[8] or was in his favor, in which case the claim is merged in it,[9] or whether the former action was for a part only of a demand or claim not properly severable, in which case the rule against splitting causes of action applies.[10]

b. Set-Off Pleaded and Adjudicated. If a defendant, having a demand against plaintiff, pleads it as a set-off or counter-claim in the action, he must make the most of his opportunity and exhibit his whole damage, for the judgment in the action will prevent him from afterward using the same matter, or any part of it, as a separate cause of action against the former plaintiff,[11] or as a defense or Set-off improperly pleaded.—Where a claim is pleaded as a set-off which is not properly available as such, but is submitted to the jury and passed on by them on the evidence, it cannot be again brought up in a suit by the party so pleading it; and if it is, the former judgment may be pleaded in bar. Matter pleaded as defense only.— There is some authority for the statement that if a fact or state of facts be set up in the first action merely as a defense, and not as the foundation of a claim for affirmative relief, the judgment will not prevent the same matter from being used as a counter-claim in a subsequent suit. Osborne v. Williams, 39 Minn. 353, 40 N. W. 165. And see Gordon v. Van Cott, 38 N. Y. App. Div. 564, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 554. But the preponderance of authority is to the contrary. Part of claims withheld.— Some of the authorities countenance the view that some of the items of a counter-claim may be withheld from consideration, and afterward used as a cause of action or as a set-off. Smith v. Berry, 37 Me. 298.

Presumption.— It will be presumed that matters of set-off to a judgment, which occurred before its rendition, were included in the judgment, although such presumption counter-claim in any subsequent action between them,[12] and if a verdict is found against defendant on his plea of set-off, it finally disposes of the matters so pleaded for the purposes of all future actions between the same parties.[13]

c. Available Set-Off Not Pleaded in Former Action. As a general rule, where a defendant has an independent claim against plaintiff, such as might be either the basis of a separate action or might be pleaded as a set-off or counter-claim, he is not obliged to plead it in plaintiff's action, although he is at liberty to do so; and if he omits to set it up in that action, this will not preclude him from afterward suing plaintiff upon it.[14] But this rule does not apply where the subject-matter of the set-off or counter-claim was involved and adjudicated in the former action in such wise that the judgment therein necessarily negatives the facts on which defendant would have to rely in order to establish his demand.[15] And in several states the statutes now provide that if the demand or cross claim arises out of the transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of plaintiff's action, or is connected with the subject of the action, defendant must present it as a set-off, or forfeit his right to claim relief upon it;[16] and in some all matters available as a set-off or counter-claim must be presented by defendant, in answer to plaintiff's action, where the suit is before a justice of the peace,[17] except where

Exception as to ejectment.— In some states it is held that if defendant in ejectment has a claim against plaintiff for buildings or other improvements put by him upon the land, he must assert it in that action, and if he omits to do so, he cannot afterward bring an independent suit for the value of such improvements or be relieved in equity. Submission of all matters in difference.— In case of a submission to arbitration of "all matters in difference," both parties are required to bring forward all their claims or demands against each other, and neither is at liberty to reserve any available claim or demand to be afterward used as a set-off or cause of action. 15. "Where judgment goes against the defendant, and he afterwards sues the plaintiff on a cross-claim which he might have presented in the first suit but did not, if the facts which he must establish to authorize his recovery are inconsistent with the facts on which the plaintiff recovered in the first action, or in direct opposition to them, the former judgment is a bar. In other words, if the way to his own recovery lies through a negation of the facts alleged by the plaintiff, that negation must be made good when the facts are first set up. For afterwards he cannot deny what the judgment affirms to be true. But if, out of the same transaction or state of facts, each party may acquire a right of action,— so that the facts on which the plaintiff recovered may very well be true and yet the facts on which the defendant seeks to recover may be equally true,— then the former judgment is not a bar to the maintenance of the present suit." 2 Black Judgm. § 767. the cross demand would exceed the jurisdiction of the justice,[18] or consists in a claim for unliquidated damages.[19] But in any case where the nature of plaintiff's claim is such that defendant's affirmative matter could not properly be pleaded by way of set-off, the judgment will not preclude him from bringing a separate action.[20]

d. Counter-Claim Not Adjudicated. A party is not barred from suing on a claim or demand because he pleaded it as a set-off in a former action, if it was not adjudicated or allowed in such action in consequence of being excluded or rejected by the court,[21] or voluntarily withdrawn by defendant himself.[22]

e. Voluntary Allowance of Credit or Counter-Claim. If a plaintiff, in making up his case, voluntarily allows credit to defendant for claims or items which might be set up by way of set-off or counter-claim, and obtains a judgment by default, it does not prevent defendant from showing in a subsequent action that he was not credited with the full value of such items or claims, and recovering the excess;[23] otherwise if the action was contested or the judgment was settled by offer and acceptance.[24]

Grounds of rejection.— The rule stated in the text applies, not only where the set-off was excluded because not proper matter of set-off in such an action, but also where it was so ill pleaded that it could not be considered (Maillet v. Martin, 7 La. Ann. 635), where it was dismissed because defendant failed to present any proof in support of it (Jarvis v. New York House Wrecking Co., 84 N. Y. Suppl. 191), where he failed to appear at the trial (Litch v. Clinch, 35 Ill. App. 654; Anderson v. Rogge, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 28 S. W. 106), where the subject of his counter-claim was a debt not yet due (Crabtree v. Welles, 19 Ill. 55), and where he attempted to split up an indivisible claim into several portions, so as to bring a fragment of it within the jurisdiction of the court in which the action was brought (Lancaster Mfg. Co. v. Colgate, 12 Ohio St. 344). But if the set-off is well pleaded, is supported by evidence, and is submitted to the jury, and passed upon by them, the judgment will be a bar to any further prosecution of the same claim, although the jury decided not to allow it. f. Cause of Action in One Suit as Counter-Claim in Another. When a claim of defendant against decedent's estate was after litigation allowed in part and paid, such allowance is a complete bar to a claim for the same services, as a counter-claim in a mortgage foreclosure by such estate against defendant.[25]

4. Cross Actions — a. In General. Where separate causes of action accrue to the parties out of the same transaction or state of facts, cross actions may be maintained, and neither will bar the other, provided the facts necessary to authorize a recovery in one action are not contrary to or inconsistent with those required to sustain a judgment in the other.[26]

b. Action For Price of Goods and Cross Action For Breach of Warranty. The purchaser of goods, when sued for the price, has his election to plead a breach of warranty in reduction of damages, or to bring a cross action; and if he chooses the latter course his action will not be barred by the recovery of judgment for the price.[27] But if he sets up the breach of warranty as a counter-claim or ground of recoupment in the first action, he cannot afterward sue on it as an independent cause of action.[28] Conversely, where an action for the breach of warranty is first brought, the vendor has his option to claim the purchase-price by way of set-off or recoupment, or to reserve it as the basis of a subsequent action.[29]

c. Action For Services and Cross Action For Negligence. Although there are some decisions to the contrary,[30] the probable weight of authority is that a recovery of judgment for the value of services rendered is no bar to a subsequent action for damages for the negligent or unskilful performance of the same services; as credited with a certain amount as being due from him to a third person, is a bar to a subsequent action by the judgment creditor against the debtor to recover that amount, on the claim that it has not in fact been paid by the debtor.

Carriage of goods.— A judgment in favor of a carrier, in an action by him to recover freight, is a bar to an action by the owner of the goods shipped to recover damages for the destruction of the property, caused by a failure of the carrier to perform his contract of transportation; because if the goods were destroyed the shipper would not be liable for freight, so the facts authorizing recovery in the two actions would be inconsistent. Dunham v. Bower, 77 N. Y. 76, 33 Am. Rep. 570.

Recovery for work and labor.— A recovery of the price stipulated to be paid for certain work and labor is no bar to an action for damages for failure to complete the work within the limited time, or for negligent performance of it. where a physician or surgeon recovers for his professional services and is afterward sued for malpractice.[31] But if the negligence or want of skill is set up in defense to an action for the services, or as a counter-claim therein, a judgment for plaintiff will bar any subsequent action for damages,[32] and the defense of malpractice is barred by a judgment on the merits rendered for a surgeon in a suit against him by the patient for the same alleged malpractice.[33]

F. Who May Take Advantage of the Bar[34] — 1. In General — a. Parties and Privies. A former judgment can be pleaded as a bar only by those who were parties to the action in which it was rendered,[35] or who are in privity with such parties.[36] All persons who were parties of record, and participated in the prosecution or defense of the action, are estopped by the decision in the cause,[37] even though they are not personally included in the judgment.[38] But it is theoretically impossible that a defendant should be required to pay the same claim twice; and therefore he may defend an action against him by the creditor by showing that he had previously suffered judgment at the suit of one acting for or in behalf of such creditor, as an agent, a receiver, or a trustee.[39]

Community of interest in citizens of same municipality.— There is also a kind of privity which may subsist between citizens of the same municipal corporation, who have an equal and common interest in matters affecting the municipality, which may become the subject of litigation, although they do not in any sense claim through or under each other. Thus a decision on the merits, in a case involving the validity of an election for the location of a county-seat, instituted by one citizen, will bar all further proceedings by other citizens on the same question. with the parties, are not estopped by the judgment, nor can they take advantage of it as a bar;[40] and it is immaterial that they may claim under the same common source of title, if there is no privity in estate.[41] On the same principle a defendant cannot plead in bar of the action against him the fact that plaintiff has already recovered a judgment on the same cause of action against a stranger, not in privity with such defendant nor jointly bound with him, even though such

Recovery by stranger.— Notwithstanding the decisions supporting the rule stated in the text, there are some cases in which the recovery of a judgment by a stranger has been held no bar to an action by the rightful claimant. See Griffith v. Happersberger, 86 Cal. 605, 25 Pac. 137, 487; Mount v. Scholes, 21 Ill. App. 192 [affirmed in 120 Ill. 394, 11 N. E. 401]. In Kennedy v. Holman, 19 Ala. 734, it was ruled that in ejectment a plea of a recovery by a stranger puis darrein continuance is no bar to a recovery by plaintiff; for defendant, if not estopped from denying plaintiff's title by some peculiar relation existing between them, may protect himself against a recovery by showing a superior outstanding title in a stranger, and, if plaintiff's title is superior, he ought not to be prevented from recovering against defendant by reason of a recovery of the premises by one who would in turn become liable to him for damages on entering into possession. And see Cornell v. Donovan, 14 Daly (N. Y.) 295, 14 N. Y. St. 687, holding that, in an action on an undertaking given on obtaining an order for plaintiff's arrest, which order has been set aside, defendant cannot plead in bar a judgment in another suit on the same undertaking brought by plaintiff's attorney for his costs. But in an action by an execution debtor against an officer, to recover the balance of proceeds of sale left in his hands after satisfying the execution, it is competent for the officer to show in defense the recovery of a judgment against him by a third person, who was the actual owner of the property, for its value. Applications of rule.— A defendant cannot plead in bar to a suit for infringement a prior judgment, to which it was not nominally a party, on the ground that it in fact defended the action, where during its pendency, and until after the decision of the appellate court in favor of the defendant therein, it persistently refused to admit its connection therewith, and also during such time in another suit filed a sworn answer denying such connection. Westinghouse Electric, etc., Co. v. Jefferson Electric Light, etc., Co., 135 Fed. 365 [affirmed in 139 Fed. 385]. So an adjudication that a conveyance of real estate is fraudulent as against certain creditors of the grantor affects the title of the grantee only so far as concerns such creditors as were parties to the proceeding; and other creditors, not parties, cannot avail themselves of the adjudication. recovery was wrong in law, the stranger not being legally liable, and may result in giving plaintiff a double satisfaction.[42]

c. Diversity of Parties. The effect of a former judgment as a bar or estoppel is not altered by the fact that the action in which it was rendered included more parties than are joined in the suit in which it is pleaded,[43] or that additional parties are joined in the second action; in either case a party or privy to the first action is bound by the judgment and a stranger is not.[44]

jointly;[47] and conversely a judgment against all the joint contractors bars a subsequent suit against any one of them separately.[48] The effect of this principle cannot be avoided by consent of the parties.[49]

b. Non-Resident Joint Contractor. An unsatisfied judgment against one of two joint debtors does not bar a subsequent action upon the original claim against the other, where the latter, at the time the first suit was brought, was without the jurisdiction of the state and beyond the reach of legal service.[50]

c. Effect of Statutory Provisions. In several states statutes have been enacted which reverse the common-law rule just stated, either by declaring all joint contracts to be joint and several in legal effect, or by providing that plaintiff may have a separate action against defendants joined in a previous suit on a joint obligation but who were not served with process in that action. In either case the cause of action is not merged by a recovery against one of the joint debtors.[51]

Exceptions to rule.— Where one of the two joint debtors is dead, a judgment recovered against the survivor which remains unsatisfied is no bar to proceedings on the original claim against the estate of the other. Devol v. Halstead, 16 Ind. 287; Weyer v. Thornburgh, 15 Ind. 24; In re Hodgson, 31 Ch. D. 177, 55 L. J. Ch. 241, 54 L. T. Rep. N. S. 222, 34 Wkly. Rep. 127.

Fraud.— Where the creditor is induced by the fraudulent statements of some of the joint debtors to omit them from his action, and proceed against the other alone, a judgment recovered in such action, remaining unsatisfied, will not bar a suit against those guilty of the fraud. Ferrall v. Bradford, 2 Fla. 508, 50 Am. Dec. 293.

Judgment vacated as to one.— Where judgment is entered by default against all the joint debtors, and one of them, against plaintiff's objection, procures it to be set aside as to himself, with leave given him to plead, he cannot then set up the subsisting judgment against his co-defendant as a bar to the action against himself, there being in such a case no election on plaintiff's part to pursue his remedy against a part of the debtors only. Judgment on collateral.— Where the first suit is brought, not on the joint contract or obligation, but on a collateral security given by one of the joint debtors, it does not stand in the way of an action against the other debtors or all jointly, if it has not resulted in full satisfaction. Proof of claim in insolvency.— Where one of two obligors makes an assignment for the benefit of creditors, and the obligee files his claim on the bond with the assignee and obtains an adjudication thereof in his favor in the court having control of the assigned estate, this is not such a judgment as will merge the cause of action on the bond so as to release the other obligor. Schott v. Youree, 142 Ill. 233, 31 N. E. 591.

Burden of proof.— Where two joint makers of a note are sued, and one claims to be released because a former judgment rendered on such note is still subsisting against his co-maker, the burden is on him to establish the fact. Robinson v. Snyder, 97 Ind. 56.

49. Where an application was made, by consent of plaintiff and defendant, to set aside a judgment and add as a party to the suit another person alleged to be a joint contractor with defendant, it was held that plaintiff's rights against defendant's joint contractor having been extinguished by the judgment, the consent of the parties thereto could not be allowed to revive them, and that the application must be refused. d. Successful Defense by One Joint Debtor. A successful defense made by one of the joint debtors in an action against him, if it was not on a ground purely personal to himself, will bar a future action by the same plaintiff on the same obligation against another of the debtors.[52] But where plaintiff joins all the joint debtors in the first action and judgment is given in their favor, this will not bar a separate action against one of them.[53] Otherwise, however, where the statute provides that judgment may be rendered against one or more of several defendants sued on a join contract.[54]

4. Judgments Against Partners. The liability of partners for the firm debts is generally held to be joint, so that a judgment against one of the partners for such a debt will bar a subsequent action against another,[60] even where defendant in the second action was a dormant or secret partner, whose connection with the firm was unknown to plaintiff when the action was brought.[61] But in some states the liability of partners is joint and several.[62]

5. Joint Tort-Feasors[63] — a. General Rule. The rule generally followed in America is that the liability of two or more persons who jointly engage in the commission of a trespass, conversion, or other tort is joint and several, so that a judgment recovered against one of them, remaining unsatisfied, will not operate as a bar to an action against another for the same tort.[64] A contrary rule, how-

63. W was injured by the furious driving of defendant's servant. The driver was summoned by the police, and W attended as a witness. The driver was fined, and was ordered by the magistrate to pay to W £5 by way of compensation, under the provisions of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 86, § 28. He was asked by the magistrate if that sum would compensate him, and he said it would not, but nevertheless he took it. In a subsequent action for damages by W against the driver's employers it was held that the order of the magistrate was a bar to the action, inasmuch as W must be taken to have accepted the £5 in full satisfaction of his claims in respect of his injuries. Demand substantially the same.— A judgment recovered is a bar in another action, even of a different nature, if the demand in each action is substantially the same; and it is so, if the whole amount sought to be recovered in the second action was or might have been recovered in the first, even though the second action is against a different defendant, and is founded on a different matter of fact. And it makes no distinction that the sum sought in the second action is for a larger sum than was recovered in the first and the former recovery is a good bar even to the difference. sonal to defendant therein; in such a case the former judgment cannot be set up by the other tort-feasor as a bar.[69]

6. Satisfaction by One Jointly Liable. As a plaintiff can have but one satisfaction for a joint wrong, if he recovers a judgment against one of the tort-feasors and obtains satisfaction this operates as a discharge of the others.[70] If separate judgments have been recovered for the same tort against the different persons who participated in it, plaintiff will be required to elect de melioribus damnis, and the satisfaction of one judgment will satisfy the others.[71] Hence some cases hold that the issuing of execution on one of the several judgments, whether it results in satisfaction or not, will release the others.[72] But the prevalent opinion is that nothing short of actual satisfaction received will produce this result.[73]

XIV. Conclusiveness of Adjudication.[76]

A. General Principles — 1. Doctrine of Res Judicata — a. Rule Stated. A fact or question which was actually and directly in issue in a former suit, and was there judicially passed upon and determined by a domestic court of competent jurisdiction, is conclusively settled by the judgment therein, so far as concerns the parties to that action and persons in privity with them,[77] and cannot be again litigated in any future action between such parties or privies, in the same court or in any other court of concurrent jurisdiction, upon the same or a different cause of action.[78]

c. What Constitutes Estoppel. The force of the estoppel resides in the judgment itself; it is not the finding of the court or verdict of the jury which concludes the parties, but the judgment entered thereon.[81] The reasoning of the court in rendering a judgment forms no part of the judgment, as regards its conclusive effect,[82] nor are the parties bound by remarks made or opinions expressed by the court in deciding the cause, which do not necessarily enter into the judgment;[83] neither is it proper for the court to undertake to define the extent to which its judgment may or may not prejudice the rights of the parties in prosecuting other actions.[84]

2. Organization and Character of Court[85] — a. In General. To constitute a matter res judicata, it is necessary that the judgment should have been rendered by a legally constituted court, or a body known to the law as possessing the right to hear and adjudicate controversies.[86] Subject to this limitation the character of conclusiveness attaches to the judgments and decrees of courts of equity,[87] of admiralty,[88] and of bankruptcy,[89] and to the adjudications of probate courts,[90] courts-martial,[91] ecclesiastical courts,[92] and church judicatories;[93] and the governing bodies of voluntary societies, clubs, and fraternal orders.[94] The principle of res judicata is applied as between federal and state courts,[95] and different coördinate branches of the same court,[96] and to the awards of arbitrators,[97] and the rulings and decisions of the United States land-office.[98]

Dismissal because of adequate remedy at law.— Where a suit in equity was dismissed on the ground that it appeared from the facts found that complainant had an adequate remedy at law, the facts found and the court's conclusions of law thereon were not determinations estopping defendant from asserting otherwise in a subsequent action at law. Barnett v. Smart, 158 Mo. 167, 59 S. W. 235. d. Motions and Summary Proceedings.[17] A distinction is to be made between orders made on motions respecting collateral questions arising in the course of litigation, or on summary applications to the court, and final orders affecting substantial rights and from which an appeal lies. The former are not generally considered conclusive so as to prevent a reëxamination of the same questions in subsequent proceedings,[18] except so far as to bar a renewal of the same motion in the same case upon the same grounds;[19] but the latter are res judicata and binding upon the parties in all subsequent proceedings, unless reversed or modified by an appellate court.[20] As distinguished from motions and rulings thereon, judgments rendered in contested actions are none the less conclusive because the proceedings were summary.[21]

4. Form and Requisites of Judgment[22] — a. Essentials of Conclusive Judgment — (I) In General. In considering the effect of a judgment as res judicata, its form or style is not very material,[23] provided it embodies the essential features of an actual sentence or decision of the court;[24] nor is the date or time of the rendition of the judgment important,[25] except where it was entered too late to be pleadable in the suit at bar;[26] and although the judgment cannot be enforced as an obligation, for reasons not affecting its inherent validity, this will not affect its

Effect of verdict.— While a declaration and a verdict thereon in plaintiff's favor, on which no judgment was ever entered, are not admissible to show an adjudication of the matters set forth in such declaration, or as a conclusive estoppel against defendant therein as to such matters, they are competent for the purpose of showing, as between the parties and their privies in estate, the independent fact that such a verdict was rendered in the case in which that declaration was filed, and are admissible, if otherwise relevant, to show that the parties were at that time at issue on the particular facts therein pleaded, and as a circumstance, in connection with other and independent evidence, tending to show acquiescence in the verdict and its consequences, to be weighed by the jury in determining whether such acquiescence was attributable to the verdict itself, or to other and distinct causes. and valid,[48] and shows distinctly on what count or cause of action it was rested.[49] But a default judgment is not conclusive, in a subsequent suit on a different cause of action, against any defenses defendant may have, although the same defenses, if pleaded and proved in the former action, would have defeated plaintiff's recovery, because in the absence of a trial and hearing in the first suit, it cannot be said that such matters were adjudicated therein.[50] And where one of several defendants suffers default, the judgment is not conclusive upon the others.[51]

d. Judgment of Nonsuit or Dismissal.[52] A judgment of nonsuit is no bar to a second action upon the same claim or demand,[53] neither is it conclusive upon the parties as to the issues which were or might have been involved in the action;[54] and the same is true of a dismissal of the action, when brought about by the voluntary action of the party or ordered by the court on some preliminary or technical matter without a trial or hearing,[55] except that it is conclusive as to the

An unnecessary averment in a record that is neither pleaded to nor admitted cannot be used as an estoppel. Irish Land Commission v. Ryan, [1900] 2 Ir. 565. Dismissal for want of prosecution.— Where an action is dismissed because plaintiff has abandoned it, or for his failure to prosecute, it amounts to no more than a nonsuit and is not conclusive in a subsequent action. Chamberlain v. Sutherland, 4 Ill. App. 494; McQuesney v. Hiester, 33 Pa. St. 435. But it has been held that it is competent to give in evidence the fact that one of the parties to an action formerly instituted a suit in which the same subject-matter was involved and permitted it to abate, when this fact can be taken as an admission against his interest, although it does not operate as an estoppel unless it has been acted upon by the party who sets up the estoppel. Gwynn v. Hamilton, 29 Ala. 233. Dismissal without prejudice.— A suit dismissed without prejudice is not a bar to a second suit, nor conclusive of any issue joined in favor of the complainant. Robinson v. American Car, etc., Co., 135 Fed. 693, 68 C. C. A. 331 [affirming 132 Fed. 165]. See supra, XIII, C, 7, e. But where a bill was dismissed on the merits it was held that the insertion of a clause that the dismissal should be without prejudice to any question but that specifically put in issue by the pleadings was superfluous; for the dismissal of the bill without such reservation would only be a bar as to matters in issue in that suit between the same parties, and the court has no power to interfere with the effect which such a decree may have as a matter of evidence in any future proceeding in which it might without such reservation be legitimately used as evidence. Rochester v. Lee, 1 Macn. & G. 467, 47 Eng. Ch. 373, 41 Eng. Reprint 1346.

A decree in equity dismissing a bill on the ground that the complainant has an adequate remedy at law, and amounting to no more than a refusal by the equity court to interfere between the parties, is not conclusive in a subsequent action, although it was passed after a full hearing. action, although they may have been incidentally drawn in question on the trial of the plea;[60] nor is it a bar to a new action for the same cause.[61]

f. Judgment on Demurrer.[62] A judgment rendered on a demurrer is conclusive as to the facts confessed by the demurrer,[63] but not as to issues raised by new pleadings after the decision on the demurrer.[64] If the demurrer is directed against technical defects, or goes to the sufficiency of the declaration in point of form or to the sufficiency of its allegations, the judgment thereon is conclusive on the point thus raised,[65] but not on the merits of the action.[66] But if the objection raised by the demurrer goes to the sufficiency of the facts on which the declaration is based, it is as conclusive as a judgment on a verdict would be.[67]

g. Finality of Determination[68] — (i) In General. The character of conclusiveness, by way of estoppel, attaches only to final judgments, not to interlocutory judgments or orders, which remain under the control of the court,[69] except where

An interlocutory judgment by default, where the damages remain to be assessed, determines every fact alleged in the declaration which, but for such judgment, plaintiff would have to prove to establish his right to recover, and precludes the parties from introducing any evidence to enlarge, lessen, or defeat the right so determined. Morey v. King, 49 Vt. 304. And see supra, XIV, A, 4, c.

Judgment of court of claims.— Where an act of congress refers a claim against the United States to the court of claims for "adjudication according to law" and requires that court to "report the same to congress," it contemplates a complete and final judgment by the court of claims, and the requirement to report to congress does not affect the conclusiveness thereof. U. S. v. Irwin, 127 U. S. 125, 8 S. Ct. 1033, 32 L. ed. 99.

Where, in an action to quiet title, defendant's title rested on a deed, the validity of which depended on a judgment in divorce proceedings granting alimony, such deed and judgment were held admissible in evidence, although an appeal from the judgment was pending, since the judgment would in no way be enforced thereby. on appeal or error.[85] But persons adversely interested may take advantage of errors or irregularities in a judgment, where they were not made parties or not served with notice.[86]

B. Persons Concluded by Judgments[87] — 1. In General — a. Identity of Parties. To constitute a judgment an estoppel, there must be an identity of parties as well as of the subject-matter; that is, it is necessary that the parties as between whom the judgment is claimed to be an estoppel must have been parties to the action in which it was rendered, in the same capacities and in the same antagonistic relation, or else they must be in privity with the parties in such former action.[88]

b. Persons Collaterally Interested in Former Action. Persons having liens upon or claims to property which is the subject-matter of an action, or rights of action against one or more of the parties thereto, are not bound by the judgment

c. Mutuality of Estoppel. It is a rule that estoppels must be mutual; and therefore a party will not be concluded, against his contention, by a former judgment, unless he could have used it as a protection, or as the foundation of a claim, had the judgment been the other way; and conversely no person can claim the benefit of a judgment as an estoppel upon his adversary unless he would have been prejudiced by a contrary decision of the case.[90]

parties,[93] and upon each of them,[94] and even, according to the doctrine of one case, against persons who but for their own laches might have been parties,[95] without regard to their position on the record as plaintiffs or defendants,[96] and without regard to the fact that some persons were not made parties who should have been joined.[97] And generally third persons who are brought in as parties, on account of their claiming some interest in the subject-matter of the suit, are concluded by the result of the litigation, whether or not they set up their claims or titles.[98]

b. Who Are Parties. In the larger sense all persons are parties to an action who have a direct interest in its subject-matter and have a right to control the proceedings, make defense, examine witnesses, and appeal if any appeal lies.[99] In a stricter sense only those are parties whose names appear on the record as such,[1]

e. Nominal and Real Parties. The conclusive effect of a judgment is upon the real party in interest, and it makes no difference that there were nominal parties on the record, or that the action was prosecuted or defended by a nominal party.[9] Conversely a person who was a mere nominal party to the action, and against whom no relief was sought, and who made no defense, is not bound by the judgment.[10] And the same is true of parties who were improperly joined in the action and whose rights were not actually litigated.[11]

f. Use Plaintiff. Where a suit is prosecuted by one person for the use of another, the latter being the assignee or equitable owner of the claim and the real party in interest, it is the latter who is bound by the judgment.[12] But if plaintiff of record had no real interest in the subject-matter of the action, either personally or as trustee of the title for the benefit of the true owner, so that he was not entitled to represent the latter for the purposes of the action, the real owner will not be concluded by the judgment.[13]

g. Effect of Additional Parties.[14] Where both the party offering a judgment as an estoppel and the party against whom it is so offered were parties to the action in which the judgment was rendered, it is no objection that the action included some additional parties who are not joined in the present suit, or that there are additional parties in the present action.[15] But this does not make the judgment admissible as evidence either for or against parties to the pending action, who were not parties to the action in which it was rendered.[16] And the estoppel arising from a judgment does not apply in a subsequent suit where a new plaintiff comes in, seeking to litigate matters not determined in the former suit, although otherwise the parties are the same.[17]

h. Effect of Severance as to Parties. Where one of several plaintiffs or defendants in an action is put out of the case by a dismissal or discontinuance as to him, the judgment thereafter rendered is not conclusive on such party nor a merger of the cause of action for or against him.[18] And the same rule applies where a severance is had and separate trials as to the different parties,[19] where the action abates as to one,[20] or where one is permitted to withdraw from the case,[21] but not where a party merely abandons or neglects to present his case or defense.[22] Where one of two defendants in an action in a state court removes so much of the controversy therein as lies between plaintiff and himself into a federal court, he will not be bound by any adjudication made against his co-defendant in the state court after the removal.[23]

i. Personal and Representative Capacity. To raise an estoppel by judgment, it is not only necessary that the party sought to be bound should have been a party to both actions, but he must have appeared in both in the same character or capacity.[24] Hence a party is not bound by a former judgment where he sued or holder, a living person, is made a party, will conclude the rights of after-born remainder-men.[34]

c. One Plaintiff Suing For Class. Where one plaintiff belonging to a numerous class, as creditors, bondholders, beneficiaries, and the like, brings an action in behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, the judgment which may be rendered is binding on others of the class who accept the representation, and who connect themselves with the litigation, either by coming into the suit or seeking to share in the fruits of the judgment,[35] or by acquiescing in it.[36] But it can have no binding effect on those who do not participate in the proceedings, prove their claims, or otherwise join with plaintiff.[37]

d. Trustee and Cestui Que Trust. The general rule is that, in all proceedings affecting the trust estate, whether brought by or against third persons, the trustee and cestui que trust are so far independent of each other that the latter must be made a party to the suit in order to be bound by the judgment or decree rendered therein.[38] But it has been held that the beneficiary will be bound by the judgment in a suit prosecuted or defended by the trustee with his knowledge and con-

In equity, where one not originally a party

litigation in which the same questions are raised and the same parties concerned.[50] But in order that an intervener should be bound by the judgment it is necessary that he should make himself actively and substantially a party,[51] and he will not be concluded if he withdrew or abandoned his claim,[52] or if for any reason it was not considered or adjudicated.[53]

b. Stranger Promoting the Litigation. A third person who virtually makes himself a plaintiff in an action between other parties, by assuming the conduct of the litigation and actively prosecuting it, for the benefit or protection of interests of his own, is bound by the judgment, although not a party of record.[54] But no one is bound by a decree against another party, although acting in his behalf, unless he has a real interest in the subject-matter of the litigation.[55]

c. Person Assuming the Defense. A person who is not made a defendant of record may still subject himself to be concluded by the result of the litigation, if he openly and actively, and in respect to some interest of his own, assumes and manages the defense of the action.[56] But to bring about this result it is necessary that the person so intervening should do so for the assertion or protection of some

is permitted to file a petition in a pending suit, and to set up new and different rights from any involved in the original bill, such petition, at least as against a stranger to the suit, who, during its pendency and before the filing of the petition, has acquired possession of the property in litigation, must be treated as the commencement of a new suit; and such person must be brought in by process, or he will not be concluded by a decree in favor of the petitioner. c. Several Creditors of Same Debtor or Estate. There is in general no such privity between several creditors of the same debtor that proceedings taken by one against the fund, estate, or specific property to which all must look for satisfaction will raise an estoppel against the others,[74] unless such others were made parties to the action or were adequately represented therein.[75]

Executory contract of purchase.— One who is in possession of land under an agreement of another to sell it to him, and to convey it to him on payment of the purchase-price, is not bound by the decree in an action against his vendor to quiet title, if he was not a party to the suit. Steel v. Long, 104 Iowa 39, 73 N. W. 470. A party in possession of land under contract to purchase is not in privity with the party who contracts to sell, in the sense that he will be bound by a judgment affecting such property, where the action was commenced after the entry into such contract. Schuler v. Ford, 10 Ida. 739, 80 Pac. 219.

Purchaser under unrecorded deed.— It has been held that a purchaser of land to whom the deed has been delivered, although it has not yet been recorded, is not affected by a judgment in an action subsequently brought against his grantor by a third person, if he was not made a party. Administrator and probate purchaser.— There is no privity between an administrator and a purchaser under a sale by order of the probate court; and consequently a decree in a suit to which the administrator was a party is not available to estop the purchaser who was not a party. Crandall v. Gallup, 12 Conn. 365.

Sheriff and vendee.— A sheriff and the purchaser at his sale are so far in privity that, where a plaintiff has unsuccessfully sued the sheriff for seizing the property, he cannot afterward maintain an action against the purchaser of the same property at the sheriff's sale. Prentiss v. Holbrook, 2 Mich. 372. But compare Wilson v. Campbell, 33 Ala. 249, 70 Am. Dec. 586. But there is no such privity between a sheriff and plaintiff in an attachment as to render a judgment recovered against the sheriff by a keeper of attached property, for services as such keeper, a bar in favor of plaintiff in the writ, when sued on a contract to pay for another part of the same services. Hawley v. Dawson, 16 Oreg. 344, 18 Pac. 592.

Purchaser at tax-sale.— It has been held that a purchaser at a tax-sale of land is in privity with the title, if any, that is divested by the sale and passes to him; and hence he is bound by concurrent verdicts and judgments in prior actions of ejectment, to which his predecessors in title were parties, as to the location and title of the land in question.
