To

CHARLES WALTER DUMONT

more than to any other man is due the existence of the Cyclopedia of Law and Procedure. His was the idea; his was the plan; and his has been the business ability and energetic management, as organizer and president of The American Law Book Company, which have made possible the successful publication of these volumes which are therefore respectfully dedicated to him.

I. DEFINITION.

A motion in practice means an application to a court by one of the parties to a cause, or his counsel, in order to obtain some rule or order of court which he deems to be necessary in the progress of the cause, or to get relieved in a summary manner from some matter which would work injustice.¹ Properly a motion

means an application for a rule or order made viva voce to a court or judge; ² but the term is now generally employed with reference to all such applications, whether written or oral.³

II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF REMEDY.

The right to proceed by motion implies the pendency of a suit between the parties, and is confined to incidental matters in the progress of the cause.⁴

court." Low v. Cheney, 3 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 287, 288.

"An application for an order addressed to the court or judge by a party to a suit or proceeding, or one interested therein." Reid v. Fillmore, 12 Wyo. 72, 74, 73 Pac. 849.

"An application to a court, by one of the parties in the cause, in order to obtain some rule or order." Citizens' St. R. Co. v. Reed, 28 Ind. App. 629, 63 N. E. 770, 771.

Defined by statute see Cal. Code Civ. Proc. (1903) § 1003; Indian Terr. Annot. St. (1897) § 3409; Iowa Code (1897), § 3831; Kan. Gen. St. (1901) § 5009; Minn. Gen. St. (1894) § 5225; N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. (1899) § 768; Clark Code N. C. (1900) § 594; N. D. Rev. Codes (1899), § 5715; Bates Annot. St. Ohio (1904), § 5121; Oreg. Annot. Code & St. (1901) § 534; S. C. Code Civ. Proc. (1902) § 402; S. An application for a new trial on the judge's minutes is a motion. Cohen v. Krulwich, 81 N. Y. App. Div. 147, 80 N. Y. Suppl. 689. See NEW TRIAL.

Enumerated motions are motions arising on special verdict, issues of law, cases, exceptions, appeals from judgment sustaining or overruling demurrers, etc. Rogers v. Pearsall, 21 N. Y. App. Div. 389, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 551. See also N. Y. Gen. Prae. Rules No. 38 et seq.

"Collateral motion" see Thiehaud v. Tait, (Ind. 1892) 31 N. E. 1052.

"Motions of course" are those which are granted without the court being called upon to investigate the truth of any allegation or suggestion upon which they are founded. Merchants' Bank v. Crysler, 67 Fed. 388, 390, 14 C. C. A. 444.

"Special motions" are all of those applications, addressed to the chancellor, which he may or may not grant in his discretion, and which usually involve an investigation of the facts or circumstances on which the application is predicated. Special motions are subdivided into two kinds: those which may be granted ex parte, and those which require notice of their presentation and hearing. Merchants' Bank v. Crysler, 67 Fed. 388, 390, 14 C. C. A. 444.

2. People v. Ah Sam, 41 Cal. 645, 650; Reilly v. Wilkins, 67 Ill. App. 104, 106; Washington Park Club v. Baldwin, 59 Ill. App. 61, 63; Wallace v. Lewis, 9 Mont. 399, 403, 24 Pac. 22.

tions for relief by petition or complaint. People v. Ah Sam, 41 Cal. 645. A petition in common phrase is a request in writing; and in legal language describes an application to a court in writing in contradistinction to a motion which may be made viva voce. Shaft v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co., 67 N. Y. 544, 547, 23 Am. Rep. 138 [citing Bergen v. Jones, 4 Mete. (Mass.) 371; 2 Daniell Ch. Pr. pp. 1587, 1683]. See also State Bank v. Plainfield First Nat. Bank, 34 N. J. Eq. 450.

3. People v. Ah Sam, 41 Cal. 645; Wallace v. Lewis, 9 Mont. 399, 24 Pac. 22.

The careful practitioner will either prepare and file his motion in writing, stating the grounds thereof, or have the same entered in the minutes. This is not necessary, however. The motion may be made orally. Herrlich v. McDonald, 80 Cal. 472, 22 Pac. 299.

4. Junek v. Hezeau, 11 La. Ann. 731; Mielke's Succession, 8 La. Ann. 11; Thomas v. Bourgeat, 6 Rob. (La.) 435; Hyde v. Henry, 3 Mart. N. S. (La.) 179; In re Jetter, 78 N. Y. 601; Rensselaer, etc., R. Co. v. Davis, 55 N. Y. 145; Shuford v. Cain, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 12,823, 1 Abb. 302. See also White v. Merchants' Bank, 4 Rob. (La.) 363.

Thus on a naked motion the court will not decide a question which involves in it the whole merits of the cause (Howard v. Waldo, 1 Root (Conn.) 538), except where a summary proceeding for that purpose is expressly allowed by law (Thomas v. Bourgeat, 6 Rob. (La.) 435).

A motion, unless it be such a one as arises incidentally in the prosecution of a suit, is to all intents and purposes an action. It differs from other actions only in being conducted ore tenus. There must be in it, as well as in other actions, actor, reus, and judez. Richardson v. Talbot, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 382, 384.

Existence of other adequate remedy.—Where a motion presents difficult questions of law or material questions of fact, the court, in the exercise of sound discretion, should refuse to consider and decide them in that summary manner, but should leave the party to his remedy by action. People v. Calhoun Cir. Judge, 24 Mich. 408; Hill v. Hermans, 59 N. Y. 396; Dietz v. Dietz, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 339; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Belknap, 19 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 345; McLean v. Tompkins, 18 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 24; In re New York El. R. Co., 63 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 14; People v. Erie R. Co., 54 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 59; Iselin v. Port Royal R. Co., 6 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 130; Hauselt v. Vilmar, 3 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 31; Camp v. McCormick, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 641. See also Chapman v.

III. APPLICATION.

A. Jurisdiction and Venue—1. JURISDICTION—a. While Cause Pending. The rule is that a motion in a cause must be made in that court alone where such cause is pending.⁵

b. After Dismissal of Cause. After a cause is dismissed the jurisdiction of the court over it ceases, and the court, it has been held, cannot properly entertain any motion in relation to its subject-matter.⁶

2. VENUE. In New York the rule is statutory that a motion on notice in the supreme court must be made within the judicial district in which the action is triable, or in an adjoining county, except that where the action is triable in the first judicial district, the motion must be made in that district.⁷

B. Time For. Unless satisfactory reason is shown for the moving party's delay,⁸ a motion based on a mere irregularity,⁹ or a motion of a merely dilatory Blakeman, 31 Kan. 684, 3 Pac. 277; Goddard v. Stiles, 90 N. Y. 199; Causey v. Snow, 120 N. C. 279, 26 S. E. 775. But the mere pendency of an action is not a bar to a motion for the same relief, where it is discretionary with the court to grant relief upon the motion during the pendency of the action. Phillips v. Wheeler, 67 N. Y. 104. Nor will the fact that there also exists a remedy by action bar relief by motion, where the latter remedy is more speedy, economical, and efficacious. Moore v. Muse, 47 Tex. 210. See also Curtis v. Engle, 4 Edw. (N. Y.) 117.

5. Edwards v. Shreve, 83 N. Y. App. Div. 165, 82 N. Y. Suppl. 514; Parmenter v. Roth, 9 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 385; Thomas v. Raymond, 4 S. C. 347. See also Merritt v. Slocum, 3 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 309.

Failure to determine motion at term when submitted.—Where a motion is submitted for decision during the term or in vacation, the court, by failure to determine the motion until the next term, does not lose jurisdiction so as to require resubmission. Reed v. Lane, 96 Iowa 454, 65 N. W. 380.

6. Hill v. Richards, 11 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 194.

7. Delahunty v. Canfield, 106 N. Y. App. Div. 386, 94 N. Y. Suppl. 815; Matter of Haworth, 59 N. Y. App. Div. 393, 69 N. Y. Suppl. 843 (holding that under the statute alluded to in the text, where a decree awarding plaintiff a divorce was entered in C county, a motion to modify the decree cannot be entertained in E county, which is not in the same judicial district with, nor adjoining, C county); Dupignac v. Van Buskirk, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 45. See also Bangs v. Selden, 13 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 374.

A motion by a client to compel his attorney to surrender papers in a suit is not necessarily a motion in such suit, and may be made out of the district in which it is triable. Cunningham v. Widing, 5 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 413.

Motion to consolidate.—The statute providing that any motion in an action triable in the first judicial district shall not be made in any other district prohibits a motion in another district to consolidate an action triable there with one triable in the first district. Dupignac v. Van Buskirk, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 45.

After final judgment.—The statute prescribing the districts in which motions on notice must be made applies only to such motions as are made during the pendency of the action, and not to such as may be made in proceedings instituted for the entry of final judgment therein. Phillips v. Wheeler, 67 N. Y. 104; Curtis v. Greene, 28 Hun (N. Y.) 294.

Waiver.—When the question as to the proper venue of a motion is waived, it should appear by recitals in the order appealed from or in a stipulation to that effect, so that it will not come before the court on appeal to be disputed as a question of fact. Newhall v. Appleton, 46 N. Y. Super. Ct. 6.

8. O'Flynn v. Eagle, 7 Mich. 306; Gray v. Jones, 3 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 71; Ogdensburgh Bank v. Paige, 2 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 67; Rogers v. Bigelow, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 547.

Reason for not noticing appearing on face of record.—However, where the reason for not noticing a motion at the earliest opportunity appears on the face of the record, no affidavit of excuse need be made. Kane v. Scofield, 2 Cai. (N. Y.) 368.

What to be considered in determining laches.—Proper regard should be had to the just claim of other business or terms of court and other material facts, in determining whether a party has been guilty of laches in making a motion. Butler v. Mitchell, 17 Wis. 52.

What deemed sufficient excuse.—An affidavit by counsel, under whose direction an attorney of record is acting, showing that affiant had forgotten the day on which the term commenced, will be accepted as an excuse for not noticing a motion for the first day of the term. Bayard v. Malcom, 3 Cai. (N. Y.) 102. That a motion was previously noticed for a term which adjourned unexpectedly, and was thereafter noticed at the earliest practicable day of another term, is a sufficient excuse for not noticing it earlier. Whipple v. Williams, 4 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 28.

9. Beall v. Blake, 13 Ga. 217, 58 Am. Dec. 513; O'Flynn v. Eagle, 7 Mich. 306; Johnson v. Johnson, Walk. (Mich.) 309; Lawrence v.

nature,¹⁰ must be made at the first opportunity; but this rule does not apply to motions for relief affecting the substantial rights of parties.¹¹

C. Form and Requisites¹²—1. IN GENERAL. In the absence of statutory provisions or rules of court requiring it,¹³ a motion need not be reduced to writing,¹⁴ but may be made orally in open court.¹⁵ Reducing to writing and filing an application for a rule or order of the court is not sufficient; the attention of the court must be called to it, and the court moved to grant the relief asked for.¹⁶

2. ENTITLING. A motion required to be in writing will be denied for wrongfully entitling the application and motion papers.¹⁷ Thus unless it appears that an adverse party has been in no wise misled,¹⁸ it is a fatal defect that the papers are wrongly entitled as to the court,¹⁹ as to the suit,²⁰ or as to the parties.²¹ But an objection that the moving papers are not properly entitled cannot be based on opposing papers entitled in the same manner.²²

3. STATEMENT OF GROUNDS. The particular grounds of a motion should appear plainly either by the notice of motion or the affidavits accompanying the same.²³

Jones, 15 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 110; Persse, etc., Paper Works v. Willet, 14 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 119; Reddy v. Wilson, 9 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 34; Cagger v. Gardner, 1 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 142; Ogdensburgh Bank v. Paige, 2 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 67; Rogers v. Bigelow, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 547; Doty v. Russell, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 129; Anonymous, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 82; McEvers v. Markler, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 248; Cowman v. Lovett, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 559; Brasher v. Van Cortlandt, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 242.

Rule abrogated in New York.—The old rule requiring a party to move against an irregularity at the first special term is abrogated by the present system, by which special terms in a judicial district are held successively at different places in the district. Titus v. Relyea, 8 Abb. Pr. 177.

10. Clifford v. Eagle, 35 Ill. 444; Miller v. Metzger, 16 Ill. 390; Kinney v. Bauer, 6 Ill. App. 267.

11. Doty v. Russell, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 129.

Although an irregularity is such that it affects a substantial right, a delay of seven months in making a motion based on such irregularity is fatal. Patterson v. Graves, 11 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 91.

12. Necessity for notice of motion see infra, III, E, 1, a.

13. See the statutes of the several states and the rules of the various jurisdictions.

Under the Texas act of 1846, requiring the docketing of motions filed in the district court, all motions in that court must be in writing. Houston v. Jones, 4 Tex. 170.

14. Reilly v. Wilkins, 67 Ill. App. 104; Seidel v. Hurley, 1 Woodw. (Pa.) 352. See also Johnson v. Adleman, 35 Ill. 265; and supra, I, text and notes 1, 2.

Where a motion is founded on prior proceedings in the cause, the proper practice is to present the matter by written petition, so that the grounds on which the application is made can be made a matter of record. Holcomb v. Coryell, 12 N. J. Eq. 289.

15. People v. Ah Sam, 41 Cal. 645; Reilly v. Wilkins, 67 Ill. App. 104; Washington Park Club v. Baldwin, 59 Ill. App. 61; Wallace v. Lewis, 9 Mont. 399, 24 Pac. 22; Seidel v. Hurley, 1 Woodw. (Pa.) 352.

19. Clickman v. Clickman, 1 N. Y. 611.

But a motion to remove a cause from the common pleas to the supreme court is properly entitled in the common pleas. Miller v. Dows, 2 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 98.

20. Morrall v. Prichard, 11 Jur. N. S. 969, 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 425, 14 Wkly. Rep. 172.

A motion to amend a clerical error in the amount of an execution may be entitled in a suit for false imprisonment brought for an arrest under it. Holmes v. Williams, 3 Cal. (N. Y.) 98.

21. Williams v. Field, 1 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 214; Felt v. Hyde, 1 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 64; Parkman v. Sherman, 1 Cal. (N. Y.) 344, holding that when both notice and affidavit are wrongly entitled by reversing the parties the error is fatal.

A notice of motion which names the first defendant with the abbreviation et al. is sufficient where the adverse party was not misled by the failure to insert the names of all the defendants. Jerauld County v. Williams, 7 S. D. 196, 63 N. W. 905.

22. Atwater v. Williams, 2 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 274.

Notice of motion generally see infra, III, E.

In New York a rule of practice requires that when a motion is for irregularity the notice must specify the irregularity, and the courts hold that the rule is not satisfied by specifying the irregularity complained of in the moving affidavits alone. German-Ameri-

4. FILING OR ENTRY — a. Time. A notice of motion must be entered in court on the day the adverse party is notified to appear.²⁴ But failure to enter the notice on the day it was returnable is cured, if the parties appear, and no objection is made to the regularity of the notice.²⁵

b. Manner — (i) IN GENERAL. The usual manner of entering in court a notice of motion is by making an entry thereof in the motion docket, and marking the notice filed.²⁶

(ii) BY IMPLICATION. Where a party files a motion, inconsistent with a former motion which he withdraws, and the court thereafter entertains the second motion, it will be considered as having been refiled after the withdrawal of the other.²⁷

e. Parties Affected. A mere entry on the motion docket is not notice of what it imports, except as between the parties who, in legal contemplation, are in court.²⁸

5. OBJECTIONS — a. Time For. An irregularity in making a motion must, by proper objection, be taken advantage of at the first opportunity.²⁹

b. Waiver of. When parties appear and resist a motion on its merits, without objection, they will be deemed to have waived all previous irregularities.³⁰

D. Parties.³¹ It is always the right of a party to a suit to invoke the action of the court by a motion for proper cause;³² but the general rule, supported by the weight of authority, is that a stranger to the suit cannot appear therein and make a motion,³³ although he may be interested in the subject-matter of the

Pr. 108, 1 Code Rep. 406.

When grounds must be specified in notice. — The rule requiring that a notice of motion must specify the particular points intended to be insisted upon applies only to cases where the opposite party has a right to explain or answer the matters complained of by affidavit, and to cases where he has a right to amend defective proceedings on terms. Hanna v. Curtis, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 263.

24. Miller v. Boyd, 1 Dana (Ky.) 272; Trabue v. Tilford, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 142, holding that, where there is notice to appear and answer to a motion on a given day, and the motion is not entered on that day, it is error to take it up on the succeeding day, unless the adverse party appears.

Who may object to belated entry. — Mo. Rev. St. § 2558, requiring that motions filed in term shall be filed at least one day before they may be argued or determined, is for the protection of the adverse party; and when he does not claim the benefit of the statute, the party filing the motion cannot. State v. Underwood, 76 Mo. 630.

26. Wallace v. Cason, 42 Ga. 435, holding, however, that where a motion is properly docketed, failure to enter "Filed in office" by the clerk upon it, does not invalidate it.

Although not in his office at the time, a motion handed to the clerk, and by him indorsed "Filed," with his official signature, is properly filed. Hammock v. May, 38 Tex. 196.

Effect of failure to note entry on motion docket. — The clerk's failure to enter a motion on the motion docket upon filing of the motion, as required by law, should not be allowed to work an injury to the party filing the same. Hammock v. May, 38 Tex. 196.

The litigant or his attorney must bear the consequences of the non-filing, if they fail to see that the clerk actually files a motion placed in his hands therefor. Ford v. Brooks, 35 La. Ann. 151.

suit.³⁴ An exception to this rule is recognized, as where a motion made by a stranger is for the purpose of being made a party to the suit.³⁵ The objection that a stranger to the action who files a motion therein has no standing to present the motion is waived where the parties to the action voluntarily appear after notice of motion and resist the same solely on its merits.³⁶

E. Notice of Motion³⁷ — 1. GENERALLY — a. Necessity — (i) MOTIONS IN COURT IN CAUSES ON THE RECORD. The practice requiring motions to be made with the knowledge or in the presence of opposing counsel is a matter of courtesy and not of right,³⁸ and, in legal strictness, parties are bound to take notice of all motions made in court during the pendency of the action,³⁹ unless actual notice is required by statute,⁴⁰ or by the court rules,⁴¹ or by some express direction of the court made in the cause by decree or otherwise.⁴²

(ii) MOTIONS OUT OF COURT OR IN CAUSES NOT ON THE RECORD. Parties, however, are not bound to take notice of motions made out of court,⁴³ or after the action has been terminated by final judgment.⁴⁴ Motions in causes not on the record will not be heard without notice.⁴⁵

b. Authority to Give. A motion or notice of motion relative to a suit pending in a court of record, when required to be in writing, must be subscribed by the attorney of record for the moving party.⁴⁶

c. Requisites — (i) NECESSITY OF WRITTEN NOTICE. Where a statute requires notice of motion, it means written notice,⁴⁷ or notice in open court, of which a minute is made by the clerk.⁴⁸

(ii) EXPLICITNESS IN TERMS. Where the law only requires notice of a motion, and such notice is so explicit as to render a mistake impossible, it will be sustained, although liable to technical objections.⁴⁹

Statement of grounds of motion see supra, III, C, 3.

Filing and entry of notice of motion see supra, III, C, 4.

Surplusage disregarded.—Where a motion should be addressed to a judge of the court, and not to the special term, the words "at the next special term," in a notice of motion, after the name of the judge, may be rejected as surplusage. People v. Sessions, 10 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 192.

Motion descending to particulars.—Where

(III) DESIGNATION OF TIME AND PLACE—(A) Time. A notice of motion for the next term of a given court, without specifying any particular day, is sufficient;⁵⁰ and if it add a particular day for the motion, which is several terms afterward, this addition may be rejected as surplusage.⁵¹ But the notice must specify one certain time only,⁵² and cannot be in the alternative⁵³ or for a day when no court can, by any possibility, be sitting.⁵⁴

(B) Place. Where the place of a term of court is fixed by law, no place need be mentioned in the notice of motion to be heard at special term, and if a wrong place be mentioned it will be rejected as surplusage.⁵⁵

d. Service.⁵⁶ A notice of a motion may be served by delivering it personally to the attorney of the adverse party,⁵⁷ or leaving it at the attorney's office or place of business with his clerk.⁵⁸

e. Waiver—(i) IN GENERAL. It is competent for a party to waive want or irregularity of notice of motion⁵⁹ verbally⁶⁰ or in writing.⁶¹

(ii) *BY APPEARANCE*⁶²—(A) To Contest on Merits. The rule is that want⁶³

a notice of motion for summary relief is the act of the parties, and not of their counsel, and such notice is general, it is favorably expounded; but, if it descends to particulars, it must be correct as to them. Drew v. Anderson, 1 Call (Va.) 51.

50. Dye v. Knox, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 573; Jackson v. Brownson, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 51; Avery v. Cadogan, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 230.

Sufficient designation of term.—A notice that a motion will be made at the "next special or adjourned term" of the district court of Olmstead county to be held, "etc.," "on the 28th day of January, 1867," contains a sufficient designation of the term, where it appears that the party receiving the notice was in no wise misled or injured. Blake v. Sherman, 12 Minn. 420.

Subsequent change of time for holding term.—Notice was given that a motion would be made at a court to be held on the first Monday in May. The legislature in the meantime changed the time to the second Monday. It was held that the party receiving the notice must take notice of the change. Price v. White, 27 Mo. 275.

Cause not to be continued by notice from term to term.—A notice of motion for a particular term, and that, if not then made, it will be continued on the calendar from term to term until it shall be made is insufficient. Beekman v. Reed, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 23.

51. Jackson v. Brownson, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 51.

52. Crane v. Crofoot, 1 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 191.

Wrong day certain.—A notice which states that a motion will be made on Friday, the seventh, when Friday is the eighth of the month, is bad. Brown v. Williamson, 8 N. J. L. 363.

Noticing for holiday.—A notice of motion to be made on a day specified, which is a legal holiday, on which a court cannot sit, "or as soon thereafter as the court can attend to the same," is good for the day following the designated day. White v. Rockafellar, 45 N. J. L. 299.

57. Hoffman v. Rowley, 13 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 399, holding further that where an attorney for a party to an action has died, and due notice has been given to such party to appoint a new attorney, as provided by statute, notice of a motion is properly given to such party personally.

58. Jackson v. Yale, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 215 (holding further that an attorney need not be present in the office at the time of the delivery of the notice to his clerk); Jackson v. Giles, 3 Cai. (N. Y.) 88; Paddock v. Beebee, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 117 (two preceding cases holding, however, that service of a notice on the attorney's clerk is irregular unless made while the clerk was in the office); Rathbone v. Blackford, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 343.

Leaving notice at attorney's lodgings.—Service of a notice of motion on an attorney by leaving it at his lodgings instead of at his office or place of business is insufficient. Jackson v. Eacker, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 331; Anonymous, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 73.

or irregularity⁶⁴ of notice of motion is cured by voluntarily appearing, and, without objection, contesting the motion.

(B) To Take Objection. The rule, however, is otherwise where the appearance is made specially for the purpose of taking objection to want or irregularity of service.⁶⁵

2. BY ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE — a. Nature. An order to show cause is in effect a short notice of motion.⁶⁶

b. Requisites — (i) ENTITLING. Where the motion papers are entitled in the action, it is not necessary that the order to show cause shall be so entitled.⁶⁷

(ii) GROUNDS. An order to show cause cannot be properly granted unless the affidavits and papers upon which the same is asked show special reasons for shortening the regular and usual time for notice of motion.⁶⁸

(iii) DISCRETION OF COURT. The granting of an order to show cause is in the discretion of the court.⁶⁹

Order containing stay.— An order to show cause, if made by a judge out of court and returnable in less than two days, is irregular if it contains a stay of proceedings, where a court rule provides that no stay shall be granted by a judge out of court, except on a notice of at least two days. a notice of motion is necessary, it shall be served at least eight days before the time appointed for the hearing, unless the judge makes an order to show cause why the application shall not be granted, and directs that service thereof less than eight days shall be sufficient, the order to show cause may be returnable in more than eight days from the granting of the order.⁷⁰ An order to show cause is returnable before the judge who issued it.⁷¹

3. COUNTER NOTICE. It is proper for a party against whom a motion is made to give a counter notice that, if the motion against him prevails, he will ask such relief on his part as would be appropriate in that contingency.⁷²

F. Affidavits⁷³ — 1. SUPPORTING AFFIDAVITS — a. Necessity — (i) IN GENERAL. In many jurisdictions it is a rule of practice that a motion based on facts outside of the record,⁷⁴ or of which the court cannot take judicial notice,⁷⁵ must be supported by affidavits showing such facts.

(ii) AFFIDAVIT OF MERITS. A rule of practice, in one jurisdiction, at least, is that an affidavit of merits is necessary on motions by defendant before answer.⁷⁶

b. Sufficiency — (i) AS TO AVERMENTS — (A) In General. The affidavits in support of a motion should contain positive averments of the facts necessary to make out a case for the relief sought.⁷⁷

(B) Presumption Regarding. Where an affidavit in support of a motion does not state that which ought to be alleged, the presumption is that it could not be asserted.⁷⁸

(ii) AS TO LANGUAGE. The court may in its discretion refuse to consider an affidavit not written in the English language.⁷⁹

c. Service⁸⁰ — (i) NECESSITY. A copy of an affidavit on which a special motion is founded must be regularly served on the opposite party.⁸¹

(ii) TIME OF SERVICE AND NATURE OF COPIES. Copies of affidavits served with notice of motion must be true and complete.⁸² Copies of supplemental affidavits

Waiver of objection as to place returnable. — Where an order made by a judge is returnable in the alternative, as "before me or one of the justices of this court," the latter part thereof can be rejected as surplusage, and where the parties actually appear before the judge who makes the order the statute is complied with, and subsequent objections to the order should be overruled. *Rogers v. 82. Chesebro v. Chesebro, 21 Mich. 506.

Omission of jurat. — In one jurisdiction the omission of the jurat in the copy of the affidavit served is held to be fatal (Chesebro v. Chesebro, 21 Mich. 506), while in another jurisdiction the view obtains that the jurat may be dispensed with if the facts purportin support of a motion must be served the same length of time before the day for which the motion is noticed as is necessary for the service of principal affidavits.⁸³

(II) EFFECT OF FAILURE TO SERVE. Affidavits which have not been served cannot be read in support of a motion.⁸⁴

d. Amendments. The court may allow affidavits in support of a motion to be amended, so long as the motion is pending and undetermined.⁸⁵

e. Filing—(I) NECESSITY. It is the duty of the respective attorneys to file affidavits used by them on a motion.⁸⁶

(II) TIME FOR. Filing affidavits in support of a motion at the time the motion is made is sufficient, in the absence of statutory requirements as to the time of filing.⁸⁷

(III) COMPELLING. The court will order an attorney to file original affidavits used on motion, although the filing will subject the party who made them to prosecution for perjury.⁸⁸

f. Taking Affidavits For Use on Motion—(I) GENERALLY—(A) Necessity of Notice. Where the allowance of a motion is not a mere matter of course, the affidavits in support of it must be taken on notice.⁸⁹

(B) To Whom Notice Given. The notice of taking affidavits to be used on a motion should be given to the attorney, and not to the party himself.⁹⁰

(C) Service of Notice. Proof of service of notice of the taking of affidavits to be used on a motion may be made viva voce at the bar of the court where the affidavits are offered to be read.⁹¹

(II) *BY COMPULSION*⁹²—(A) In General. In a few jurisdictions it has been provided by statute that when any party⁹³ intends to make a motion or to oppose a motion in any court of record and it shall be necessary for such party to have the affidavit of any person or persons⁹⁴ who shall have refused to make the Reading of affidavits not served discretionary with the court.—Where affidavits to be used in support of special motions are not served on the opposite counsel a reasonable time before the motion is brought on, the court may reject the affidavits, or, in its discretion, allow the same to be read giving the opposite party the option to proceed with the hearing or to take time for the perusal and examination of the affidavits, and production of affidavits in reply, if they are competent and necessary. Sterrick v. Pugsley, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13,379, 1 Flipp. 350.

An affidavit containing new matter cannot be read in support of a motion, although the facts in it were not known until the day of hearing; but the party should serve copies and move the next day. Refusal to file.—The court may refuse to allow affidavits to be read on the hearing of a motion, where the party making the motion and producing affidavits declines to file them, after being notified in open court that objection would be made to the reading of them unless filed. Hubble v. Osborn, 31 Ind. 249.

Papers filed after the submission of a motion, and before its decision, without leave of court or the knowledge of the judge, will not aid a party in regard to the motion. Jacoby v. Mitchell, 19 Nebr. 537, 26 N. W. 225.

The practice of taking affidavits ex parte, to be used on the motion, is peculiar to the chancery court and does not prevail in law courts. Baldwin v. Flagg, 43 N. J. L. 495.

Effect of failure to give notice.—Where the rule of the court requires all depositions to be read on the hearing of all motions to be taken on notice to the adverse party, the court may reject ex parte affidavits offered in support of a motion. Fowler v. Colton, 1 Pinn. (Wis.) 331.

same,⁹⁵ such court may,⁹⁶ by order, appoint a referee to take the affidavit or deposition of such person or persons.⁹⁷

(B) Proceedings For—(1) NOTICE. Notice of application for an order authorizing the taking of an affidavit for the purposes of a motion need not be given to the adverse party.⁹⁸

(2) AFFIDAVIT TO OBTAIN ORDER. The affidavit to obtain an order for the taking of a compulsory affidavit for the purposes of a motion must show why and in what manner such affidavit is necessary,⁹⁹ that the affidavit is intended to be used in making or opposing the motion,¹ and that the third party has refused to make the affidavit.²

to make an affidavit for use on a motion therein. King v. Leighton, 58 N. Y. 383; Spratt v. Huntington, 4 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 551; Hodgskin v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 3 Daly (N. The relator in an application for mandamus is a "party" whose affidavit cannot be taken for use on a motion under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 885, authorizing the appointment of a referee for that purpose. People v. Paton, 20 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 172.

Strangers.—A third person, who refuses to make an affidavit for the purposes of a motion may be compelled so to do. Rogers v. Durant, 2 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 676, holding further that where a person was requested several times on successive days to make an affidavit for the purposes of a motion, but each time declined to make the affidavit until he had consulted his counsel, there was a sufficient refusal to authorize an order for a compulsory affidavit.

95. A refusal to make an affidavit for use on a motion is not shown where the witness merely declines to answer all questions on oath, in the presence of a stenographer, when no affidavit has been drawn and submitted to him. Erie R. Co. v. Gould, 14 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 279.

Subsequent tender of voluntary affidavit.—After a person has refused to make affidavit and a compulsory affidavit has been ordered, the court should not arrest his examination on the ground that an affidavit has been subsequently tendered, unless it clearly appears that such affidavit is full and frank. Fisk v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 430.

96. Discretion of court.—The granting of an order, under a statute providing for compulsory affidavits for use on motions, is in the discretion of the court. Dauchy v. Miller, 16 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 100; Hudson River West Shore R. Co. v. Kay, 14 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 191.

Applies only to civil cases.—The statute authorizing compulsory affidavits for use on motions applies only to civil cases. People v. Squire, 3 N. Y. St. 194.

An application made to the judge for an ex parte order to hold to bail is not contemplated by the statute authorizing compulsory affidavits to be used on a motion in a court of record. De Hart v. Hatch, 4 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 11.

Submitting affidavit to be verified.—Where the compulsory affidavit of a person is sought for the purposes of a motion, the proper practice is to draft an affidavit and submit it for verification before applying for an order. Erie R. Co. v. Gould, 14 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 279; Fisk v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 430; Pierie v. Berg, 7 S. D. 578, 64 N. W. 1130.

So too it has been held that the witness cannot be compelled to produce books or papers or to obey a subpoena duces tecum.⁶

(4) SETTING ASIDE ORDER—(a) IN GENERAL. An order for a compulsory affidavit will be set aside where there is nothing in the affidavit on which it was granted to show that the affidavit desired was material or necessary on the motion,⁷ or where it clearly appears that it was not obtained for the legitimate purpose of securing testimony for use on a motion.⁸ But an order will not be set aside at the instance of the adverse party for irregularity, unless he shows that he is injured by such irregularity.⁹

(b) AT WHOSE INSTANCE. An order for a compulsory affidavit to be used on a motion may be set aside on the application of the adverse party,¹⁰ or the person ordered to make the affidavit.¹¹

2. COUNTER AFFIDAVITS. Counter affidavits may be read in opposition to a motion, without having been served.¹² The moving party will not generally be allowed to read additional affidavits which are not in answer to new matter introduced by the adverse party, but merely corroborative of the facts set forth in the moving papers;¹³ but the court may in its discretion relax the rule where the facts ought to be more fully developed to enable the court to intelligently decide the motion.¹⁴

IV. WITHDRAWAL OR ABANDONMENT.

A. Withdrawal. A motion may be withdrawn by leave of the court,¹⁵ but only upon payment of the costs of the motion.¹⁶

B. Abandonment. If a motion was never called to the attention of the court, the right to make a motion under that notice will be presumed to have been waived.¹⁷ The moving party may, before the day of the hearing, also waive the motion by making an inconsistent motion in the cause.¹⁸ Similarly by taking

The fact that a person is in contempt for disobeying an order for taking his affidavit for use on a motion does not prevent him from moving to vacate such order on the ground that it is irregular. Spratt v. Huntington, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 341.

After a person has appeared and submitted to an examination in compliance with an order, he cannot move to vacate it on the ground of insufficiency of the affidavit on which it was granted. McCue v. Tribune Assoc., 1 Hun (N. Y.) 469; Errie R. Co. v. Champlain, 35 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 73.

Favorable to moving party.—Where the affidavits offered in opposition to a motion show the moving party to be entitled to the relief prayed, although on grounds not stated in the moving papers, he may take advantage of the grounds thus shown. Richards v. White, 7 Minn. 345.

V. QUASHING OR DISMISSING.

Although a motion to quash or dismiss another motion is not proper practice,²⁰ yet the granting of such a motion will be considered tantamount to overruling the original motion.²¹

VI. HEARING AND DETERMINATION.

A. Hearing — 1. PLACE. The place of hearing follows that fixed in the notice of motion.²²

2. TIME. The time of hearing the motion must follow the notice if the motion is noticed for a day out of an appointed term.²³

3. BURDEN OF PROOF. Upon the hearing of a motion the burden of proof rests with the moving party; but if the adverse party admits the principal allegations on which the motion is founded, and sets up new matter in avoidance, the burden of proof shifts to him.²⁴

4. RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE — a. Oral Testimony. In some jurisdictions it is the practice to receive oral testimony on the hearing of a motion;²⁵ while in other jurisdictions such practice is unknown.²⁶

b. After Submission of Motion. Parties have no right, after submission of a motion, to introduce additional affidavits or evidence, except by leave of court and upon notice to the other side.²⁷

5. ARGUMENT — a. Generally — (i) SUBJECTS OF CONSIDERATION. As to the proper subjects of consideration on the argument of a motion, the authorities are in conflict, it being held in one or more jurisdictions that the parties are confined to the grounds stated in the motion,²⁸ while in another jurisdiction the contrary view obtains.²⁹

(ii) RIGHT TO OPEN AND CLOSE. The moving party is entitled to open³⁰ and

So far as an enumerated motion is concerned, the only mode of procuring its denial or dismissal is to notice it for argument and bring it to a hearing, where a proper order to stay proceedings is in force. Everitt v. Wood, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 414.

The overruling of a motion to quash another motion does not necessarily pass upon the question whether the original motion was a proper one or was filed in season. German Sav. Bank v. Cady, 114 Iowa 228, 86 N. W. 277.

b. Reargument—(i) DISTINGUISHED FROM RENEWAL. A reargument or rehearing differs from a renewal in the following particulars: (1) It is not an independent proceeding, but is always to be heard on the same notice and the same papers upon which the original motion was heard;³² (2) although the time to move has elapsed and the court has no power to grant leave to renew, so as to enlarge such time, yet a motion for a rehearing may be entertained;³³ (3) it is not appealable.³⁴

(ii) GROUNDS. Where there has been a decision upon a motion, the doctrine of res judicata does not go so far as to preclude a further inquiry and a rehearing where there has been a misapprehension of the fact,³⁵ or where it appears that some decision or principle of law, which would have had a controlling effect, has been overlooked;³⁶ but the power to grant a rehearing or reargument cannot be arbitrarily exercised, and if the judge grants it on insufficient grounds his action constitutes reversible error.³⁷

(iii) DISCRETION OF COURT. A motion for reargument of a motion is generally addressed to the discretion of the court.³⁸

(iv) ON WHAT PAPERS GRANTED. On proper grounds a judge deciding a motion may grant a rehearing or reargument on the same papers only,³⁹ and it is in this respect that reargument differs from renewal which may be upon the same or new papers.⁴⁰

(v) MODE OF PROCURING. Where the argument of a motion for leave to reargue involves the reargument itself, the motion for leave to reargue may be combined with the notice of reargument.⁴¹

After expiration of time for appeal.—The power to grant a rehearing or reargument of a motion is not exercisable after the expiration of the time for appealing from the former decision for the purpose of correcting an error of law disclosed for the first time by a subsequent decision of a higher court. Klip-

Decision not palpably erroneous.—Where an assignor moved to set aside an ex parte order directing the sale of a trade-mark composed of his name which would prevent him from forever using his own name in retrieving his fortune and would permit a stranger to use it, although not associated with his own business, and especially where before the assignment the assignor had sold one half a million labels bearing the trade-mark to be used on the goods to be purchased of the assignee, a decision of a justice sustaining the motion was not so palpably erroneous as would permit a reargument on the ground that he had overlooked decisions inconsistent with his conclusion. Matter of Adams, 24 Misc. 6. CONTINUANCE OR POSTPONEMENT — a. For Cause. The granting of a postponement or continuance of the hearing of a motion for cause is within the discretion of the court.⁴²

b. As Matter of Course. Motions not heard on the day for which noticed, in consequence of the inability of the court to hear them, stand over as a matter of course.⁴³

B. Determination — 1. IN GENERAL. A party is entitled to have his motion heard and determined on the merits, if properly made.⁴⁴

2. DENIAL WHEN PROPER — a. Not Grantable in Form Demanded. Unless the moving party is entitled, as a matter of right, to the relief demanded, it is not error to deny a motion which cannot be allowed substantially in the form in which it is presented.⁴⁵

b. Unnecessary Motion. A motion may be denied on the ground that it is unnecessary.⁴⁶

3. QUESTIONS OF FACT. A question of fact involved in a motion must be decided, like any other fact, by the weight of evidence,⁴⁷ and whatever fact a court may inquire into on a motion, it can also determine, and its determination establishes the fact for all the purposes of the motion.⁴⁸

4. TIME OF DETERMINATION. A clearly frivolous motion may be overruled immediately, notwithstanding a statute requiring motions to be filed at least one day before they are determined.⁴⁹ Delay of the court in announcing its decision on a motion will not operate to the prejudice of the party in whose favor the decision is made, and the court must give effect to the decision as of the time when the motion was made.⁵⁰

5. DIVISION IN OPINION OF COURT. Where there is an equal division of opinion in the court, the motion fails.⁵¹

42. Gurney v. Steffens, 56 Kan. 295, 43 Pac. 241; Clouston v. Gray, 48 Kan. 31, 28 Pac. 983; Westheimer v. Cooper, 40 Kan. 370, 19 Pac. 852; Harlow v. Warren, 38 Kan. 480, 17 Pac. 159; Bliss v. Carlson, 17 Kan. 325; Davis v. Wilson, 11 Kan. 74.

Postponement to prepare or procure affidavits.—The court will not postpone the hearing of a motion to enable the adverse party to prepare his affidavits, unless he can show some reason why he was not prepared. Jackson v. Ferguson, 3 Cal. (N. Y.) 127. But where the adverse party was necessarily absent when motion papers were served upon his attorneys, reasonable delay should be granted, when the motion comes up for hearing, to enable him to prepare his affidavits. Ohly v. Ohly, 11 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 129.

Where a conclusive answer is given to a special motion, the motion may be denied, and will not be continued to a subsequent term to give the moving party an opportunity of replying. Standard v. Williams, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 599.

43. Hartman v. Viera, 113 Ill. App. 216; Com. v. McClelland, Hard. (Ky.) 28; Bronner v. Loomis, 17 Hun (N. Y.) 439; Mathis v. Vail, 10 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 458. But see Ireland v. Spalding, 11 Mich. 455, holding that where a motion is noticed for a certain day in a term, and is not then called up, or postponed by order of the court to a subsequent day, it cannot afterward be taken up without consent of the parties.

In passing on a conflicting state of facts, presented by motion papers, weight should be given to a construction in accordance with the probability of human action as seen in the actual dealings of men. Verastegni v. Luzunarez, 12 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 489.

Necessity of affirmative findings of fact.—The statute requiring findings to be made by the trial court upon issues of fact applies only to those issues which arise upon the pleadings, and not to issues arising upon motion, and a decision will not be reversed if there is evidence of facts upon which it can be properly based, although such facts are not affirmatively found. *McCoy v. 6. RELIEF AWARDED—a. To Moving Party. As to those interested in the subject-matter of the motion, who, being served with notice thereof, do not appear thereon, the relief granted must not go beyond the terms of the notice;⁵² but the rule is otherwise as between those who appear and take part in the hearing on the motion.⁵³ Where the notice of motion asks for specific relief, or for such other or further order as may be just, the court may, under the alternative clause, afford any relief compatible with the facts presented.⁵⁴ The court will see, however, that the adverse party is not in any respect taken by surprise or deprived of the privilege of being heard in argument and by proof as to the further relief to be granted.⁵⁵

b. To Adverse Party. It is irregular to grant affirmative relief to the adverse party upon matter appearing in the opposing papers which the moving party had no opportunity to answer.⁵⁶

VII. RENEWAL.⁵⁷

A. Leave Therefor—1. NECESSITY—a. On Same State of Facts. The general rule is that a motion once denied on the merits cannot be renewed on the same facts without leave of the court.⁵⁸ And if the relief sought is the same, the

See 35 Cent. Dig. tit. "Motions," § 53.

Where a party proceeds in a second motion upon a different property interest and right mere fact that the new motion is based on different grounds does not take the case out of the general rule.⁵⁹

b. On New State of Facts. If, however, a new state of facts arises after the denial of a motion, the motion may be renewed on such facts, although no leave therefor has been obtained.⁶⁰

2. WHAT CONSTITUTES. The fact of hearing a motion a second time is proof that the court has given leave to present the matter anew.⁶¹ However, the fact that the court, in denying a motion for the vacation of an order, orally stated on the hearing that another motion could be made to vacate the order on the merits, does not constitute leave to renew the motion.⁶²

3. WHEN GRANTABLE. It is quite usual in the practice of the several jurisdictions when a motion is denied to have the entry show that the motion was from that involved in the first motion, the doctrine that a motion once denied cannot be renewed as a matter of right, and without leave of the court, except upon facts arising subsequent to the decision, does not apply. Steuben County Bank v. Alberger, 83 N. Y. 274.

To a motion founded on irregularity, the rule stated in the text does not apply. Rondout First Nat. Bank v. Hamilton, 50 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 116.

Where the second motion asks for the exercise of the court's discretion as a matter of favor, after a first motion, made as one of right, has been denied because not made in time, the rule stated in the text does not apply. Hall v. Emmons, 9 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 370.

The rule in North Dakota is that where a motion has been once denied the right to apply for an order a second time, on the same grounds, is not a strict legal right, and leave to do so should be sparingly granted to prevent abuse and vexatious litigation. Clopton v. Clopton, 10 N. D. 569, 88 N. W. 562, 88 Am. St. Rep. 749.

Suppl. 519; Havana Bank v. Moore, 5 Hun (N. Y.) 624; Erie R. Co. v. Ramsey, 57 Barb. (N. Y.) 449; Belmont v. Erie R. Co., 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 637; Willet v. Fayerweather, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 72; German Exch. Bank v. Kroder, 14 Misc. (N. Y.) 179, 35 N. Y. Suppl. 380; Wentworth v. Wentworth, 51 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 289; Smith v. Spalding, 30 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 339; Fox v. Fox, 24 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 385; Bonnel v. Henry, 13 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 142; Butts v. Burnett, 6 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 302; People v. Mercein, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 399, 38 Am. Dec. 644; Ray v. Connor, 3 Edw. (N. Y.) 478; Jones v. Thorne, 80 N. C. 72; Steele v. Charlotte, etc., R. Co., 14 S. C. 324.

Erie R. Co., 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 637; Dollfus v. Frosch, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 493, 40 Am. Dec. 368; Clopton v. Clopton, 10 N. D. 569, 88 N. W. 562, 88 Am. St. Rep. 749.

New matter which will justify the renewal of a motion without leave must be something which has occurred or come to the knowledge of the moving party since the decision of the first motion. Havana Bank v. Moore, 5 Hun (N. Y.) 624; Willet v. Fayerweather, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 72; Smith v. Spalding, 30 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 339.

Statements impeaching the character of the adverse party may sometimes be considered as new and additional facts on which the motion may be renewed. Apsley v. Wood, 67 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 406.

Failure to state new facts in affidavit.— On a second ex parte application for the examination of parties, made after the order granting the first application had been vacated, the fact that the affidavit did not state what new facts were claimed to be shown on the second application, or whether there were any new facts to be shown, as required by general rule of practice 25, is only an irregularity and does not compel the court to refuse the application. Skinner v. Steele, 88 Hun (N. Y.) 307, 34 N. Y. Suppl. 748.

It is only where the facts remain the same that a party whose motion has once been denied is estopped from renewing it. Akerly v. Vilas, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 120, 3 Biss. 332. See also supra, VII, A, 1, a.

61. Clopton v. Clopton, 10 N. D. 569, 88 N. W. 562, 88 Am. St. Rep. 749. See also Harris v. Brown, 93 N. Y. 390, holding that the fact that no formal leave to renew a motion on additional papers was granted does not necessarily determine that a second motion made on an order to show cause is not a renewal, the granting of the order to show cause and hearing the second motion on the original and additional papers being in effect a grant of leave to renew and a renewal.

62. Sheehan v. Carvalho, 12 N. Y. App. Div. 430, 42 N. Y. Suppl. 222.

Granting an order to show cause, on a subsequent application to the judge who made an order denying a motion, does not of itself amount to leave to renew the motion. Amsinck v. Northrup, 12 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 573; Webster v. Oconto County, 47 Wis. 225, 2 N. W. 335.

denied without prejudice, but leave to renew may be given afterward as well as at the time of the denial.⁶³

4. POWER OF COURT — a. In General. The doctrine of res adjudicata, in its strict sense, does not apply to the decision of a motion,⁶⁴ and the court may, upon a proper showing, allow the renewal of a motion once denied.⁶⁵ But no judge has the power to grant a renewal or rehearing of a motion denied by another.⁶⁶

b. Discretion of Court. An application for leave to renew a motion, which has been denied, is generally addressed to the discretion of the court.⁶⁷

5. EFFECT OF LEAVE. An order allowing a motion to be renewed does not extend the time within which the statute requires the motion to be made.⁶⁸

B. Appeal From Order on Original Motion — 1. AFFECTING RIGHT TO RENEW. By taking appeal from an order granted on a motion, the appellant does not waive his right to renew the motion denied by the order appealed from.⁶⁹

2. EFFECT OF RENEWAL UPON THE APPEAL. After appeal taken from an order denying a motion, the renewal of the motion, under leave given in the order, precludes the appellant from prosecuting his appeal from such order.⁷⁰

MOTIVE.¹ That which stimulates or incites an action;² the mainspring of human action;³ some cause or reason that moves the will and induces action;⁴ the moving power which impels to action for a definite result;⁵ an inducement, or that which leads or tempts the mind to indulge a criminal act.⁶ (Motive: Affecting — Action or Right to Action, see ACTIONS; Damages, see DAMAGES; Fraudulent Conveyance, see FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES; Validity of Assignment, see ASSIGNMENTS FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS. 63. Bowers v. Cherokee Bob, 46 Cal. 279.

The rule in Wisconsin is, however, that leave to renew the motion must be granted by the court, if at all, at the time of its decision, and be a part and qualification of the order entered on the decision. Webster v. Oconto County, 47 Wis. 225, 2 N. W. 335.

I. DEFINITIONS.

A. Motor Vehicle. A motor vehicle is defined by statute as including all vehicles propelled by any power other than muscular power. Exception to the application of the statutes is usually made as to traction engines, road rollers, and such motor vehicles as run only upon rails or tracks.¹

B. Automobile. An automobile,² in the sense in which that term has come to be commonly understood, is a motor vehicle, usually propelled by steam, electricity, or gasoline,³ and carrying its motive power within itself.⁴ It falls within the appellation of "carriage"⁵ and "vehicle."⁶

II. PRINCIPLES OF LAW APPLICABLE.

The popular use of automobiles or motor vehicles is of recent origin and growth, being a new contrivance for transportation purposes,⁷ and so constructed

1. See the statutes of the several states. See also Emerson Troy Granite Co. v. Pearson, (N. H. 1906) 64 Atl. 582.

A road locomotive or traction engine used to draw cars is a motor vehicle within N. H. Laws (1905), c. 86. Emerson Troy Granite Co. v. Pearson, (N. H. 1906) 64 Atl. 582.

A motor is the motion-producing contrivance of a car, not the entire car. State v. Clinton, 54 N. J. L. 92, 98, 23 Atl. 281.

2. Automobile is defined as "self-propelling; self-moving; applied especially to motor vehicles, such as carriages and cycles of those types usually or formerly propelled by horses or men. An autocar or horseless carriage." Standard Dict. Addenda.

The word denotes primarily: A vehicle designed mainly for transportation of persons on highways or unprepared ground, equipped with an internal combustion, hydrocarbon-vapor engine, which furnishes the motive power and forms a structural portion of the vehicle. Secondly, it is used as synonymous with "motor vehicle," denoting a vehicle moved by inanimate power of any description, generated or stored within it, and intended for the transportation of either goods or persons on common highways. Americana.

The terms "automobile" and "motor cycle," as used in the statute, include "all vehicles propelled by other than muscular power, except railroad and railway cars and motor vehicles running only upon rails or tracks, and road rollers." Emerson Troy Granite Co. v. Pearson, (N. H. 1906) 64 Atl. 582.

"An automobile is not a work of art, nor a machine about which there can be any very peculiar fancy or taste but it is not a common, gross thing, like a road-wagon or an ox-cart." Walker v. Grout Bros. Automobile Co., 124 Mo. App. 628, 642, 102 S. W. 25.

Auto is an abbreviation of "automobile," used as a prefix with the meaning of self-moving, self-propelling; as an autocar, an autotruck, etc., and automobile car, carriage, truck, etc. Webster Int. Dict. Suppl.

Autocar is defined as an automobile vehicle especially for street travel. Standard Dict. Addenda.

Automotor is defined as a self-propelled machine (Standard Dict. Addenda), and as an automobile (Webster Int. Dict. Suppl.).

Autotruck is defined as a self-propelling or self-moving truck adapted for heavy grades. Standard Dict. Addenda.

An automobilist is "one who owns, rides in, or drives an automobile." Standard Dict. Addenda.

"Stage line," "railroad line," and "automobile line" are expressions which are ordinarily understood to mean a regular line of vehicles for public use operated between distant points, or between different cities, and do not include hacks, stages, and automobiles which merely operate from point to point in one city for the transportation of the public. *Com. v. as to go upon common roads at great velocity.⁸ While their use is new yet there is nothing novel in the principles of law to be applied with respect to their use on public highways. The difficulty is in applying the principles to the facts owing to their novelty.⁹ While the operation of a motor vehicle is attendant with dangers not common to the use of the ordinary vehicle, it cannot be placed in the same category as locomotives, gunpowder, dynamite, and similar dangerous machines and agencies, and the rules of law applicable to dangerous instrumentalities do not apply.¹⁰

III. RIGHTS AND DUTIES IN ABSENCE OF STATUTE.

A. Rights on Public Highways. The use of motor vehicles as a means of conveyance upon the public streets and highways is of itself neither a nuisance,¹¹ nor unlawful,¹² and when operated with due regard to the rights of others is not

"There is nothing dangerous in the use of an automobile when managed by an intelligent and prudent driver. Its guidance, its speed and its noise are all subject to quick and easy regulation, and under the control of a competent and considerate manager it is as harmless, or may soon become as harmless, on the road, as other vehicles in common use. It is the manner of driving an automobile on the highway, too often indulged in by thoughtless pleasure seekers and for the exploitation of a machine, that constitutes a menace to public safety." McIntyre v. Orner, 166 Ind. 57, 62, 76 N. E. 750, 4 L. R. A. N. S. 1130.

"It is not the ferocity of automobiles that is to be feared, but the ferocity of those who drive them. Until human agency intervenes, they are usually harmless. While by reason of the rate of pay allotted to judges in this state few, if any, of them have ever owned one of these machines, yet some of them have occasionally ridden in them, thereby acquiring some knowledge of them; and we have, therefore, found out that there are times when these machines not only lack ferocity, but assume such an indisposition to go that it taxes the limits of human ingenuity to make them move at all. They are not to be classed with bad dogs, vicious bulls, evil disposed mules, and the like." Lewis v. Amorous, (Ga. App. 1907) 59 S. E. 338, 340.

Y. Suppl. 999.

In Iowa the right to use an automobile as a vehicle of travel on the highways of the state is expressly conferred by Laws (1904), c. 53. House v. Cramer, (1907) 112 N. W. 3.

Any method of travel may be adopted by individual members of the public which is an ordinary method of locomotion or even an extraordinary method, if it is not of itself calculated to prevent a reasonably safe use of the streets by others. Chicago v. Banker, 112 Ill. App. 94.

"The law does not denounce motor carriages, as such, on the public ways. For so long as they are constructed and propelled in a manner consistent with the use of highways, and are calculated to subserve the public as a beneficial means of transportation, with reasonable safety to travelers by ordinary modes, they have an equal right with other vehicles in common use to occupy the streets and roads. Because novel and unusual in appearance, and for that reason likely to frighten horses unaccustomed to see them, is no reason for prohibiting their use. In all human activities the law keeps up with improvement and progress brought about by discovery and invention, and, in respect to highways, if the introduction of a new contrivance for transportation purposes, conducted with due care, is met with negligent.¹³ They have equal right thereon with other vehicles,¹⁴ the highways being open and free to all on equal terms, and their use must be extended to meet the modern means of locomotion,¹⁵ and cannot be appropriated to any particular class or classes of travel.¹⁶ The fact that automobiles have a tendency to frighten horses unaccustomed to seeing them is no reason for abridging their use upon the public highways.¹⁷ Although the general use of motor vehicles upon the highways is permissible, yet one might be so constructed or operated as to constitute a nuisance, in which event its use would be prohibited.¹⁸

B. Rights on Turnpikes. The rights of motor vehicles on turnpikes have not been authoritatively determined. It has in one state been held that they have no right thereon without payment of toll.¹⁹ It will, however, depend upon the terms of the particular franchise, and if it is not sufficiently broad to include such vehicles they are entitled to pass thereon free, and their rights, duties, and liabilities are the same as upon public highways.²⁰ inconvenience and even incidental injury to those using ordinary modes, there can be no recovery, provided the contrivance is compatible with the general use and safety of the road." Indiana Springs Co. v. Brown, 165 Ind. 465, 468, 74 N. E. 615, 1 L. R. A. N. S. 238.

New methods of travel may be adopted.—"When the highway is not restricted in its dedication to some particular mode of use, it is open to all suitable methods; and it cannot be assumed that these will be the same from age to age, or that new means of making the way useful must be excluded merely because their introduction may tend to the inconvenience or even to the injury of those who continue to use the road after the same manner as formerly. Right to exclude from highway.—"The managers of highways, owned by private corporations, have an undoubted right, in the exercise of a sound discretion, to prevent such use of the highway as will make it dangerous to the general public. Unless forbidden by legislative enactment . . . they may exclude from its highway a carriage or vehicle, the use of which is dangerous, where the safety of the general public demands such exclusion. The legislature has not seen fit to control the exercise of this discretion as to motor vehicles or automobiles." Bertles

C. Toll. The right to collect toll is fixed by the charters granted to the turnpike or bridge companies, and they have no right to collect except as therein provided. These charters generally fix the rate and enumerate the vehicles which are required to pay.²¹

D. Reciprocal Rights and Duties — 1. IN GENERAL. All persons using the highway owe reciprocal duties to each other. Each must exercise his right without interfering with the safety of others in the exercise of the same right.²²

2. RIGHT TO ASSUME OBSERVANCE OF DUTY. Persons using the highway, whether in motor cars or other vehicles, or as pedestrians, have a right to assume that every other person thereon will properly observe his duties and the laws in his use of the roads.²³

E. Care Required in Use of Highway in General. Persons operating motor vehicles have the same duties to perform as operators or drivers of other vehicles are subjected to,²⁴ and must be held to that degree of care which is commensurate with the dangers naturally incident to their use.²⁵ The exercise by

v. Laurel Run Turnpike Co., 15 Pa. Dist. 94, 95.

21. See, generally, BRIDGES; TOLL ROADS. In Mallory v. Saratoga Lake Bridge Co., 53 Misc. (N. Y.) 446, 104 N. Y. Suppl. 1025, it was held that a bridge company, incorporated under Laws (1854), c. 64, and authorized thereunder to collect tolls from certain animals and vehicles, could not demand toll from automobiles. An injunction was granted restraining the bridge company from exacting toll from the complainant.

Fixing amount of toll.—The court refused to grant a writ of mandamus to permit an owner of an automobile to use the road of a turnpike company where no rate of toll for automobiles had been fixed by the company and it was admitted that by reason of their character "no possible toll for automobiles over turnpikes would be adequate." *Bertles v. Every operator of an automobile has the right to assume, and to act upon the assumption, that every person whom he meets will also exercise ordinary care and caution according to the circumstances, and will not negligently or recklessly expose himself to danger, but rather make an attempt to avoid it. It is only when such an operator has had time to realize, or by the exercise of a proper lookout should have realized, that a person whom he meets is in a somewhat helpless condition, or in a position of disadvantage, and therefore seemingly unable to avoid the coming automobile, that the operator is required to exercise increased exertion to avoid a collision. The degree of care required in the use and operation of a machine or vehicle upon the streets of a city depends not only upon the condition of the streets, but also on the dangerous character of the machine or vehicle, and its liability to do injury to others, lawfully upon such streets. The more dangerous its character and the greater its liability to do injury to others, the greater the degree of care and caution required in its use and operation. In determining therefore the degree of care that the operator of an automobile should have used the jury may take into consideration its speed, size, appearance, manner of movement, the amount of noise it makes, and anything else that indicates unusual or peculiar danger. Reciprocal duties.—"The person having the management of the automobile and the traveler on foot are both required to use such reasonable care, circumspection, prudence, and discretion as the circumstances require; an increase of care being required where there is an increase of danger. And both are bound to the reasonable use of all their senses for the prevention of accident, and the exercise of all such reasonable caution as ordinarily careful and prudent persons would exercise under like circumstances." receiving injury, which care must be in proportion to the danger in each particular case.³⁴

I. Duty to Watch Road For Vehicles and Pedestrians. It is the duty of the operator to keep a vigilant watch ahead for pedestrians and other vehicles, and at the first appearance of danger to take proper steps to avert it.³⁵ There is no duty to keep on the lookout for vehicles which might be overtaking him, unless he has occasion to suddenly stop or slow up.³⁶

J. Speed³⁷—1. IN GENERAL. Irrespective of any statute or ordinance,³⁸ the rate of speed must not be so great as to prevent the operator from maintaining control of the machine,³⁹ and must be within such bounds as will not endanger others, considering the place and circumstances.⁴⁰

2. AT CORNERS AND CROSSINGS. At corners and crossings, the vehicle should be slowed down and in such control as to be able to be immediately stopped, if necessary.⁴¹

Duty to look and listen.—Failure to look and listen for motor vehicles upon a highway is not necessarily negligent. The rule that one who passes on to a railroad grade crossing without looking for approaching trains and is injured is guilty of contributory negligence does not apply to travelers in their daily and common use of our highways. The usual rule of ordinary care does not impose upon them the burden of being constantly on the lookout to see if their path is free from dangerous defects, or in a state of apprehension of personal injury from other travelers. The traveler not only has a right to presume that the way is reasonably fitted for his use but also that those who may be lawfully using it with himself will exercise a proper degree of care. Hennessey v. Taylor, 189 Mass. 583, 76 N. E. 224, 3 L. R. A. N. S. 345.

Vehicle in tow.—Plaintiff, a pedestrian, desiring to cross a street, asked permission of defendant, who was seated in an automobile which was being towed by another machine by means of a rope, both machines being stationary by reason of street blockade, to pass between the two machines. Upon receiving permission, she started to pass between them, when the chauffeur in charge of the forward machine started up, thereby causing the rope to rise and trip plaintiff. The blockade had not been removed and defendant had no reason to believe that the chauffeur would start. It was held that, conceding that the chauffeur was his servant, defendant was not guilty of negligence, as the chauffeur had no reason to believe that such a movement would be likely to injure plaintiff or any one else. Titus v. Tange-man, 116 N. Y. App. Div. 487, 101 N. Y. Suppl. 1000.

40. Simeone v. Lindsay, (Del. 1907) 65 Atl. 778.

The true test.—No matter how great the speed may be which the law and the ordinances permit, the motorist still remains bound to anticipate that he may meet persons at any point in a public street, and he must keep a proper lookout for them, and keep his machine under such control as will enable him to avoid a collision with another person also using proper care and caution. If necessary he must even slow up and stop. No blowing of a horn or of a whistle, nor the ringing of a bell or gong, without an attempt to slow the speed is sufficient, if the circumstances at a given point demand that the speed should be slackened or the machine be stopped, and such a course is practicable, or, in the exercise of ordinary care and caution proportionate to the circumstances, should have been practicable. The true test is that he must use all care and caution which a careful and prudent driver would have exercised under the same circumstances. Thies v. Thomas, 77 N. Y. Suppl. 276.

41. Buscher v. New York Transp. Co., 106 N. Y. App. Div. 493, 94 N. Y. Suppl. 798.

Going behind cars.—Where an automobilist, not being able to see a crossing which he was approaching, because of a passing street car, instead of stopping his machine, merely changed its direction so as to go around the car, and by so doing came suddenly upon and ran into a person who was running for the car, he was held to be guilty of gross negligence, and liable for the injuries. Gregory v. Slaughter, 99 S. W. 247, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 500, 8 L. R. A. N. S. 1228.

3. IN CITIES, ETC. A lower rate of speed will usually be required in cities and closely built sections than in the open country roads.⁴²

K. Racing. It may be stated as a general proposition that racing upon the public highway is unlawful unless specially authorized by the proper authorities, and all persons participating therein are liable in damages for injuries sustained by third persons lawfully upon the highway.⁴³ But as to one voluntarily present for the express purpose of witnessing a race or speed contest, the participants therein can only be held liable on proof of their negligence.⁴⁴

L. Lights.⁴⁵ At night an automobile should be equipped with lights to let others on the highway have reasonable notice of its presence.⁴⁶

M. Signals.⁴⁷ A motor vehicle should be equipped with some suitable device so as to give reasonable notice to others of its approach, which should be used as occasion demands.⁴⁸ It is unnecessary to use such signal where the person to be warned has already seen the vehicle or has knowledge of its presence.⁴⁹

N. Leaving Motor Vehicle Unattended. The fact that a motor vehicle is temporarily left unattended, in such condition that it cannot start of its own accord, does not render the owner liable if, by the act of a third person, the vehicle is set in motion and causes injury; the injury not being the proximate result of leaving the car unattended.⁵⁰

O. As to Horses and Draft Animals—1. IN GENERAL. The owners of motor vehicles are chargeable with notice of their tendency to frighten horses.⁵¹ The operator of such a vehicle must therefore exercise care in its movement so as

44. Johnson v. New York, 186 N. Y. 139, 147, 78 N. E. 715, 116 Am. St. Rep. 545. This was an action against a municipality for injuries to plaintiff from being hit by an automobile during a speed contest which the city of New York had, by her invalid ordinance, authorized, the court said: "Highways are constructed for public travel, and, as already said, the acts of the defendants were doubtless an illegal interference with the rights of the traveler. It may well be that for an injury to the traveler, or to the occupants of the lands adjacent to the highway, or even to a person who visited the scene of the race for the purpose of getting evidence against the defendants and prosecuting them for their unlawful acts, the defendants would have been absolutely liable regardless of the skill or care exercised. But the plaintiff was in no such situation. She was not even a casual spectator whose attention was drawn to the race while she was traveling in the vicinity. She went from her home, a distance of five miles from the scene of the race, expressly to witness it and to enjoy the pleasure that the contest offered. As to the elements which made the contest illegal she was aware of their existence. She knew it was to take place on a highway, and she knew it was to be a contest for speed, and that, therefore, the automobiles would be driven at the greatest speed of which they were capable." From these circumstances the court held that plaintiff could not recover.

to avoid frightening horses, and to prevent accident when horses become frightened.⁵² The mere fact that an automobile causes a horse to become frightened causing injury does not give the injured party a cause of action,⁵³ nor will the fact that the driver of a team frightened by a motor vehicle fails to give a signal to stop make him necessarily guilty of contributory negligence.⁵⁴

2. MOVEMENT, SPEED, AND NOISES. Care must be exercised both in the movement and speed of the vehicle,⁵⁵ and also in making unusual noises.⁵⁶

3. WHEN DUTY TO STOP. If the operator sees, or by the exercise of ordinary care ought to see, that a horse is frightened, he must exercise ordinary care and, if necessary to avoid accident, stop his automobile,⁵⁷ and should not start up again where it is apparent that by so doing it will cause the horse further fright and likely result in an accident.⁵⁸

IV. STATUTORY REGULATIONS.

A. In General. Since the advent of the automobile, most of the states have enacted statutes regulating in various particulars their use. These statutes are largely similar in their general scope, but it is not within the aim of this article to set forth in detail their numerous provisions.⁵⁹

B. Construction of Statutes — 1. IN GENERAL. It is the duty of the courts to construe the statutes pertaining to motor vehicles, like other statutes,⁶⁰ and to

"It is not pleasant to be obliged to slow down these rapid running machines to accommodate persons driving or riding slow country horses that do not readily become accustomed to the innovation. It is more agreeable to send the machine along, and let the horse get on as best he may, but it is well to understand, if this course is adopted and accident and injury result, that the automobile owner may be called upon to respond in damages for such injuries." Explosions from gasoline engine.—Where the operator of an automobile stopped it in the street near a blacksmith shop, and anticipating starting again shortly, he was not negligent in allowing the explosions from his gasoline engine to continue, unless he saw that they were frightening plaintiff's team, or in the exercise of ordinary care ought to have noticed it, and by ordinary diligence might have stopped the explosions in time to have avoided the runaway. House v. Cramer, (Iowa 1907) 112 N. W. 3.

^{58.} Knight v. Lanier, 69 N. Y. App. Div. 454, 74 N. Y. Suppl. 999. In this case defendant motorist, having noticed that plaintiff's horse had become frightened at his machine, came to a full stop. Plaintiff got out and took the horse by the head, and while the animal was still snorting and prancing the motorist started up again. The horse broke away, upsetting the carriage and throwing plaintiff down. It was held that defendant had violated the duty which he owed plaintiff to refrain from careless or heedless injury and was liable in damages.

sustain their validity if it is possible to do so and give due effect to their provisions so as to render effectual the purpose of the legislative body.⁶¹

2. APPLICATION OF OLD STATUTES. Statutes and regulations governing the operation of vehicles generally apply equally to motor vehicles, although passed prior to the time that their use had become general;⁶² but the statutes creating a special right or duty in relation to vehicles have been held not to apply to motor vehicles where the statutes were passed prior to the time such vehicles were known or in practical use.⁶³

C. Validity. Statutes regulating the registration,⁶⁴ licensing,⁶⁵ operating,⁶⁶ and speed⁶⁷ of motor vehicles are not invalid as special or class legislation simply because they do not affect or apply equally to all kinds of vehicles, and they constitute a proper exercise of the police power of the state.⁶⁸ The registration fee is not a tax on property but it is a license-fee.⁶⁹

D. Registration, etc., of Motor Vehicles⁷⁰ — 1. IN GENERAL. The registration and numbering of motor vehicles in communities where there are a considerable number of them is necessary to secure a proper observance of their duties on the highways and for the purpose of identification in case they fail to License to use highway cannot be required.

—"The speed of the automobile may be regulated, and reasonable safety appliances, such as gongs and brakes, may be required; but to compel one who uses his automobile for his private business and pleasure only, to submit to an examination and to take out a license (if the examining board see fit to grant it) is imposing a burden upon one class of citizens in the use of the streets, not imposed upon the others. We must therefore hold this ordinance, so far as it obliges appellee to take out a license before he can use his own automobile in his own business or for his own pleasure, is beyond the power of the city council and is therefore void." *Chicago v. observe such duties.⁷¹ Most of the statutes require, as a condition to the use of a motor vehicle on the public highways of the state, the registration or licensing of each motor vehicle by the owner with some state office or official,⁷² for which a fee is usually charged.⁷³ Upon the registration of the vehicle, a seal or certificate is issued and a distinctive number is assigned to the vehicle, both of which are required to be at all times thereafter conspicuously displayed in a certain manner upon such vehicle.⁷⁴ The size of the numbers and the character of the figures are also provided for.⁷⁵ Exceptions are sometimes made in favor of non-residents who have duly registered their machine in the state of their domicile.⁷⁶ In Pennsylvania other state registrations are not recognized and the motorist is prohibited from displaying numbers obtained in any other place or state while in that commonwealth.⁷⁷

2. BY MANUFACTURERS AND DEALERS. The provisions as to registration of motor vehicles is in most states somewhat relaxed in favor of manufacturers and dealers. Some states entirely dispense with such registration in such cases, at least as to machines not used upon the highway,⁷⁸ while others require the registration of one vehicle of each style or type manufactured or dealt in, or one registration to cover all vehicles.⁷⁹

3. REGISTRATION OF OWNER. Some states do not register the vehicle but the owner, thus permitting an owner of several such vehicles to make but one registration, and to have one number cover all of his vehicles.⁸⁰

E. Licensing of Chauffeur or Operator.⁸¹ The statutes generally require the operator of a motor vehicle to take out a license, but this is sometimes restricted to persons operating the machine as chauffeur.⁸²

F. Speed Regulations⁸³—1. IN GENERAL. There are usually special speed

This statute is not in conflict with a prior municipal ordinance providing for the licensing, etc., of motor vehicles within its corporate limits, and the numbers required by the ordinance must be used in addition to the state numbers while the vehicle is used in such municipality. *Brazier v. A partnership, corporation, or composite body is not entitled to a license as such under N. H. Laws (1905), p. 499, c. 86, requiring every operator to obtain a license, which he must have with him when operating his machine. regulations applicable to motor vehicles, and the statutes of the several states must be specially consulted in this regard, as they vary greatly even in different subdivisions of the states. A lower rate is usually required at corners, crossings, curves, and descents.⁸⁴

2. DO NOT ABROGATE MUNICIPAL REGULATIONS.⁸⁵ Park and municipal regulations affecting speed are not abrogated by the passage of a statute in regard thereto, unless a contrary intent appears from the enactment.⁸⁶

G. Equipment of Motor Vehicles.⁸⁷ Efficient brakes,⁸⁸ and also a suitable bell, horn, or other signal⁸⁹ are required, and, between certain hours, one or more lamps of a particular character are necessary.⁹⁰

H. Warning of Approach.⁹¹ On approaching pedestrians, horses, draft animals, or other vehicles, the operator of a motor vehicle is required to give reasonable warning of its approach.⁹²

I. Special Rules of the Road. The usual rules of the road⁹³ are sometimes in part reenacted in the motor vehicle statutes. The statute in New York, and in some other states, requires, on turning a corner at the intersection of public highways, if to the right, that the vehicle keep to the right of the intersection of the centers of such highways, and pass to the right of such intersection when turning to the left.⁹⁴

J. Stopping When Horse Is Frightened⁹⁵ — 1. UPON SIGNAL. Most of the motor vehicle statutes contain a provision that the operator of such a vehicle shall stop the same whenever it shall appear that a horse is frightened or is about to become frightened by its approach, or a signal to stop is given by the person driving the horse.⁹⁶ The duty to stop upon signal must be observed even though the signal comes from one not actually engaged in handling the reins.⁹⁷

2. WITHOUT SIGNAL. Under such statutes it has been held that there is a duty to stop whenever, by the exercise of reasonable diligence on the part of the driver, it would have appeared that a horse was frightened,⁹⁸ irrespective of any

Where horse's fright not apparent.—Under these statutes, where the driver of the horse does not make known his distress to the motorist by giving the prescribed signal, and the horse's fright or likelihood to become unmanageable is not apparent to the operator of the automobile as an ordinarily cautious and prudent man, or would not become seen or known upon the exercise of reasonable care, then the motorist is warranted in proceeding with due caution. Strand v. Grinnell Automobile Garage Co., (Iowa 1907) 113 N. E. 488.

signal to stop being given by the operator or any other person either in or out of the vehicle.⁹⁹

3. REMAINING STATIONARY. The duty to stop carries with it a duty to remain stationary until the horse passes the vehicle or it becomes reasonably safe to start up.¹

4. STOPPING MOTIVE POWER. Except, however, in those states where it is otherwise expressly provided,² there is no absolute duty to stop the motive power in addition to stopping the vehicle.³

K. Federal Regulations. The only federal regulation affecting motor vehicles which has, to the present time, been before the courts deals with the transportation of motor vehicles on passenger steamers, and consists of an amendment to the Revised Statutes relating to the carrying of explosive burning fluids upon passenger steamers, and makes an exception in favor of motor vehicles.⁴ By this amendment,⁵ motor vehicles using such fluids as a motive power were permitted to go upon passenger steamers provided all fire in them be extinguished before entering the vessel and not relighted until after they had left the vessel.⁶ The authority of the federal government to make such regulations falls within the admiralty clause of the federal constitution.⁷

V. LOCAL ORDINANCES.

A. Authority to Pass. The power to pass ordinances affecting the use of motor vehicles within the limits of a municipality or the like must be either granted in express words or necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to the powers expressly granted to such municipality or essential to its declared objects and purposes.⁸ The right to pass such ordinances has been deemed within a grant

Unless forward movement necessary.—Under Wis. Laws (1905), p. 469, c. 304, § 4, requiring the operator of an automobile to stop all motor power and remain stationary upon a signal of distress from the driver of a frightened horse "unless a movement forward shall be deemed necessary to avoid accident or injury," it is for the operator of the machine to determine whether a forward movement is necessary and his conclusion is controlling, unless he acts unreasonably or in bad faith. *McCummins v. A still further amendment is as follows: "Nothing in the foregoing or following sections of this Act shall prohibit the transportation by steam vessels of gasoline or any of the products of petroleum when carried by motor vehicles (commonly known as automobiles) using the same as a source of motive power: Provided, however, that all fire, if any, in such vehicles or automobiles be extinguished immediately after entering the said vessel, and that the same be not relighted until immediately before said vehicle shall leave the vessel: Provided further, that any owner, master, agent, or other person having charge of passenger steam vessels shall have the right to refuse to transport automobile vehicles the tanks of which contain gasoline, naphtha, or other dangerous burning fluids." 34 U. In Pennsylvania.—The municipalities through the powers delegated to them, by the legislature "have prescribed rules, the validity of which has been confirmed by numberless decisions, requiring the numbering of machines; licensing the driver; regulating the speed of vehicles; restricting the time of having parades and processions; setting aside certain parts [of the highways] for particular uses; signalling by bells and lights; etc." *Radnor Tp. v. to control and regulate streets and highways⁹ and to be within the police powers generally delegated to such bodies,¹⁰ notwithstanding the state legislature has passed a general statute covering the same subject-matter,¹¹ in which case both the ordinance and the statute must be complied with.¹² However, local ordinances regulating the use or operation of motor vehicles are sometimes prohibited by the general statutes covering this subject or their operation abridged.¹³

B. Construction of Provisions. The general rules governing the construction of ordinances apply with equal force to ordinances affecting motor vehicles.¹⁴

C. Must Be Reasonable. Where such local regulations are authorized and not prohibited, they must be reasonable in their terms.¹⁵

Speed regulations.—In Pennsylvania, since the act of April 19, 1905 (Pamph. Laws 217), no city, borough, or other municipality may legally fix a maximum speed limit within its boundaries less than the speed limits provided for in section 3 of the act. In re Automobile Acts, 15 Pa. Dist. 83. Where a state statute prohibited the passage of any ordinance imposing a penalty on any act punishable under any state law, and there existed a state statute imposing a fine upon every person riding or driving "faster than a common travelling pace," an ordinance restricting the speed of automobiles to fifteen miles per hour was held invalid. State v. Thurston, (R. I. 1907) 66 Atl. 580.

Posting signs.—Speed regulations adopted by park commissioners are valid, although signs are not posted on the roads affected at the points where they join other roads. Mass. St. (1903) p. 511, c. 473, § 14, requiring notices of special speed regulations to be so posted applies only to the regulations of boards of aldermen of cities and selectmen of towns. Com. v. Crowninshield, 187 Mass. 221, 72 N. E. 963, 68 L. R. A. 245. In New York to make effective an ordinance limiting the speed below that prescribed by the general law the city or village enacting it must comply with the provisions of the act with respect to posting notices on the streets. People v. Prison Keeper, 190 N. Y. 315, 83 N. E. 44.

Construction of ordinance generally see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, post.

Where streets named as boundaries in a speed ordinance do not meet, their lines will be considered as if extended to the meeting point; where a river in the west is mentioned without naming it the first river in that direction is meant. If a municipal speed ordinance takes in outside territory, the ordinance is invalid only as to the outside territory and is valid as to that portion within the corporate limits. Chittenden v. Columbus, 26 Ohio Cir. Ct. 531.

"Crossings" mean "highway crossings" and not railroad crossings within an ordinance requiring motor vehicles to slow down at crossings. Eichman v. Buchheit, 128 Wis. 385, 107 N. W. 325.

License invalid.—An ordinance of the city of Chicago was held invalid where it required the owner to submit to an examination and procure a license in order to operate his automobile on the streets of that city. Chicago v. Banker, 112 Ill. App. 94.

That two licenses are required by the operator of an automobile, one from the state and one under municipal ordinance, is not a conclusive objection to the ordinance or ground for holding that a general state law passed after such ordinance supersedes the latter. Brazier v. Philadelphia, 15 Pa. Dist. 14 [affirmed in 215 Pa. St. 297, 64 Atl. 508].

Prohibiting the use of certain country roads to automobiles between sunset and sunrise is not unreasonable. In re Berry, 147 Cal. 523, 82 Pac. 44, 109 Am. St. Rep. 160.

Public vehicles to carry all persons.—It is reasonable to require public motor vehicles to carry all persons applying for passage and tendering the fare, and to place a notice

VI. LIABILITY FOR INJURY TO PERSONS AND PROPERTY.

A. Necessity of Negligence. Liability for injury by a motor vehicle must be predicated upon some negligent act or omission on the part of the person to be held or his agent or servant.¹⁶ For injuries received from unavoidable accident there can be no recovery.¹⁷ The rules of law applicable to the care and protection of dangerous instrumentalities do not apply.¹⁸

B. What Constitutes Negligence. What constitutes negligence depends upon the facts and circumstances in each case. A failure to observe the rules as laid down for the government of oneself and vehicle upon the public highways and to have due regard for one's own safety and the rights of others is of itself negligent.¹⁹

C. Contributory Negligence and Its Effect—1. IN GENERAL. It is an almost universal rule that the contributory negligence of the person injured will bar any recovery for such injuries.²⁰ This applies equally to pedestrians and persons in vehicles. Every person is bound to exercise due care to prevent injury.²¹ Even though he is but a passenger in a vehicle, he must exercise such care.²²

2. ACTS IN EXTREMIS. Acts which may be done in extremis to avoid a peril in which plaintiff is placed by defendant's negligence cannot be held to constitute on the vehicle where it has already been engaged. Atlantic City v. Fonsler, (N. J. Sup. 1903) 56 Atl. 119.

Registration of motor vehicles and the displaying of a number furnished by the municipality is within the police power of a city to require. People v. Schneider, 139 Mich. 673, 103 N. W. 172, 69 L. R. A. 345. See also Brazier v. Philadelphia, 15 Pa. Dist. 14 [affirmed in 215 Pa. St. 297, 64 Atl. 508].

Speed.—The following rates of speed prescribed for motor vehicles by ordinances have been held to be reasonable: Ten miles an hour. Radnor Tp. v. Bell, 27 Pa. Super Ct. 1. Eight miles an hour. Com. v. Crowninshield, 187 Mass. 221, 72 N. E. 963, 68 L. R. A. 245. Seven miles an hour. Chittenden v. Columbus, 26 Ohio Cir. Ct. 531. 21. See cases cited supra, note 20.

No contributory negligence.—Where a pedestrian crossing a street has reached a point where he has a right to assume that an approaching auto will avoid him, he is not guilty of contributory negligence, if struck by the auto. Thus, where a person leaves the sidewalk to cross the road when an automobile is seventy-two feet away coming slowly, and has passed the middle of the road, and is in the act of looking back to the sidewalk when struck by the machine, negligence cannot be attributed to him. Benoit v. Miller, (R. I. 1907) 67 Atl. 87.

To remain in a carriage when the horse is frightened by a motor vehicle is not contributory negligence. McIntyre v. Orner, 166 Ind. 57, 76 N. E. 750, 4 L. R. A. N. S. 1130.

Passenger in vehicle driven at dangerous speed.—Where a passenger riding in an automobile going at a dangerous rate was injured the court stated that if he had urged the driver of the automobile to go at a high rate of speed, or if he had acquiesced in the demand of his comrades, who were also passengers, for a high rate of speed and the driver had thereby been induced to go at an unsafe rate and the accident happened by reason thereof, the passenger would have contributory negligence, simply because another course was open, and, if taken, the injury would have been avoided.²³

3. IMPUTED NEGLIGENCE. The negligence of the operator of a vehicle is not imputable to other occupants not in control of the vehicle;²⁴ but such occupants themselves must exercise due care for their own protection and, if their failure to do so results in their injury, no recovery can be had therefor.²⁵

D. Negligence Must Be Proximate Cause. The act or omission alleged to be negligent must always be the proximate cause of the injury in order to be actionable;²⁶ and so too must the alleged contributory negligence be, in order to bar recovery, such that the injury would not have been sustained except for such negligence.²⁷

E. Persons Liable — 1. OWNER — a. Having Control of Vehicle. Where an injury is inflicted by the use or operation of a motor vehicle upon the public highways, the owner thereof is liable to respond in damages therefor, if the vehicle was being operated by such owner or was under his control or was in the custody or control of his agent or servant acting within the scope of his employment and for the benefit of the owner. In all cases where the owner is present he will be responsible for injuries sustained by third persons unless the operator disobeys instructions as the owner is in law in control of the vehicle.²⁸

b. Vehicle in Charge of Third Persons — (1) IN GENERAL. The liability of the owner for injuries sustained by the operation of his vehicle by some third person depends upon the existence of the relation at the time of the injury,²⁹ of master and servant between the owner and the operator or person in charge of the vehicle.³⁰

(II) CHAUFFEUR OR SERVANT. Where the owner is not occupying the vehicle and it is being operated by or is in charge of his chauffeur or servant, he is liable for injuries sustained by third persons due to the negligent or tortious acts of the chauffeur or servant, provided such chauffeur or servant was acting within the

Negligence of both parties.—Where a person negligently injured by an auto is also guilty of negligence, he may recover damages, notwithstanding his negligence, "if it was the negligence of the defendant alone that was the proximate or immediate cause of the accident; in other words, if, notwithstanding the previous negligence of the plaintiff, the defendant could have prevented the

Liability of owner of vehicle being towed for negligence of chauffeur of towing vehicle.—An automobile, having broken down, the father of the owner directed his chauffeur to take it to the repair shop, and to use his own (the father's) machine for that purpose. The owner of the disabled machine occupied it for the purpose of steering it. Under these circumstances it was held that the father's chauffeur, who ran the forward machine, was not the servant of the son so as to render the latter liable for the chauffeur's negligence. Titus v. Tangeman, 116 N. Y. App. Div. 487, 101 N. Y. Suppl. 1000.

29. In order to establish liability, the persons must not only be general employees of the owner but must be in his business at the time the injuries are caused and not merely in their own recreation and pleasure. Clark v. Buckmobile Co., 107 N. Y. App. Div. 120, 94 N. Y. Suppl. 771.

Relation of master and servant generally see MASTER AND SERVANT.

Criminal liability of owner for violations

course of his employment.³¹ If the chauffeur or servant is using the vehicle contrary to the express direction of the owner,³² or for his own benefit or pleasure,³³ the owner is not liable. Neither is the owner liable where the servant or chauffeur, although originally taking the vehicle out for the owner's use, deviates from his owner's business and goes upon some independent journey for his own or another's pleasure or benefit.³⁴ If the actual operation of the vehicle while in charge of the chauffeur acting in the master's business is intrusted to another by the chauffeur and injury is sustained by a third person owing to the negligent operation of the vehicle, the owner is liable.³⁵

Law of master and servant applies.—“The acts of the chauffeur, in operating an automobile, within the authority of his employment, are the acts of a servant. The relation of master and servant exists between the chauffeur and his employer, and the rules of law applicable to that relation apply.” Hannigan v. Wright, 5 Pennew. Chauffeur held to have acted within scope of authority.—Where a chauffeur, upon informing his employer that oil was needed for the lamps of the auto, was instructed to go into the cellar of the hotel at which they were stopping and get the oil, and the chauffeur, instead of following these instructions, ran the machine to a near-by garage for the purpose of obtaining the oil, and collided with a wagon on the way, the employer was held liable for the damage. The court said: “From this recital of facts, it seems clear that, although the chauffeur in this particular instance made use of the master's machine in apparent disobedience of the latter's instructions, he was nevertheless engaged in the furtherance of his master's business, and the inference is legitimate at least that he was acting within the general scope of his authority, which was to care for the machine and keep it in order and to drive it on occasions.” Bennett v. Busch, (N. J. Sup. 1907) 67 Atl. 188, 189.

Where the vehicle is in charge of a member of the owner's family, for such member's own pleasure or benefit, and there is no relation of master and servant existing between the owner and operator there is no liability on the part of the owner for injuries sustained in its operation, the use being that of a licensee. Reynolds v. Luck, 127 Iowa 601, 103 N. W. 946; Doran v. Thomsen, (N. J. Sup. 1907) 66 Atl. 897.

Under the English Motor Car Act of 1903, a person causing or permitting a motor car to be used contrary to the regulation is held

(iv) TRESPASSER. The owner of a motor vehicle is not liable for injuries sustained by the operation of the vehicle by a trespasser.³⁷

2. OPERATOR. One who, by his want of care and attention, is the cause of injury to another is liable to respond in damages therefor. This general rule has special application to the liability of one operating a motor vehicle whether for himself, the owner of the vehicle, or for another person. For his own negligence he is always individually liable.³⁸

3. LESSEE. The liability of the lessee of a motor vehicle depends upon whether he was in control of its operation at the time of the accident or his acts contributed to the injury. Where a motor vehicle is hired together with the chauffeur and the hirer only directs the chauffeur as to where and when he shall go, there is no liability for the negligence of the chauffeur;³⁹ but if the lessee is in control of the vehicle or places one employed by him in control, he is then liable for injuries resulting from its negligent operation.⁴⁰ But the lessee is not liable where the injury results from a defect in the vehicle unknown to him.⁴¹

4. PERSONS OCCUPYING VEHICLE. An occupant of a motor vehicle is not liable for injuries sustained by its operation unless he was either the operator, the person in charge, or the owner of the vehicle.⁴² One in charge of the operation of a motor vehicle, although he is neither the owner nor the person actually operating it, is nevertheless liable for injuries sustained by third persons by reason of its negligent operation, as the person actually operating the vehicle will be deemed his servant irrespective of whether he employed him or not.⁴³

F. Injury to Motor Vehicles and Their Occupants — 1. IN GENERAL. The liability of third persons for injuries to motor vehicles and their occupants is, in respect to injuries from other vehicles, founded upon the duties and obligations which have heretofore been discussed.⁴⁴ In regard to the duties of a motorist in protecting himself and his vehicle from injuries, he is required to exercise the same care upon the highways as other vehicles. On approaching a railroad track he is bound before crossing to look and listen for trains.⁴⁵ This same duty extends usually to the passengers in the vehicle, especially where by so doing the injury could be averted; but negligence upon the part of the operator is not imputable to a passenger.⁴⁶

2. FROM DEFECTIVE HIGHWAYS. Motor vehicles having equal rights upon the public roads with other vehicles, it necessarily follows that municipalities and others charged with the duty of keeping the highways in repair and free from obstructions owe the same duties to motorists in regard thereto.⁴⁷

VII. CHAUFFEURS.

A. Definition. A chauffeur, as that term is used in connection with the law of motor vehicles, is any person operating a motor vehicle, as mechanic or employee for hire.⁴⁸

B. License. As already referred to, the statutes of the several states which have passed laws regulating the use of motor vehicles require a chauffeur to take out a license.⁴⁹

C. Qualifications. A chauffeur should possess the requisite understanding of the mechanism of the vehicle he is operating, and skill and sound judgment in regard to its management.⁵⁰

Age, condition, and attending circumstances must be considered.—In determining whether or not a failure on the part of a passenger riding in an automobile to look or listen before crossing the tracks of a railroad company constitutes contributory negligence, the age, condition, and situation of the passenger, the existing circumstances, and the condition in which the passenger approached the tracks are to be considered. It is not in every case that a failure to look or listen would be a negligence, as in the case of a passenger in a street car approaching a railroad track, where the car is entirely under the control and management of those charged with its management, or in the case of a very young child in a conveyance approaching the track. In other words it must not only appear that there was a failure to look and listen to constitute contributory negligence as a matter of law, but it must also appear that there was nothing in the age or condition of the person injured, or in the attending circumstances, which excused or would have rendered unavailing any knowledge that was acquired by the person injured. Noakes v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 121 N. Y. App. Div. 716, 106 N. Y. Suppl. 522. To the same effect see Sherwood v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 105 N. Y. Suppl. 547. A failure on the part of a man, thirty-six years old and in full possession of his faculties, riding as a guest or passenger in the rear seat of an automobile, to look or listen, before crossing a railroad track, to see if a train is approaching is negligence, where he had an unobstructed view of the track for a distance of two thousand feet, and where an injury results under such circumstances from a collision between a train and the automobile the railroad company is not liable. Read v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 107 N. Y. Suppl. 1068. To the same effect see Turck v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 108 N. Y. App. Div. 142, 95 N. Y. Suppl. 1100.

48. See the statutes of the several states. A chauffeur is "one who drives or operates an automobile." Standard Dict. Addenda.

"This term has recently come into use in the English language to designate at first the engineer or motorman of a steam-driven road carriage; but by extension it is now applied to any professional machinist who operates an automobile, electrically or otherwise propelled." Americana.

D. Duties. The usual duties of a chauffeur are to care for the vehicle, to keep it in proper running order, and to drive or operate it on such occasions as the owner may require.⁵¹

E. Liabilities. The chauffeur bears the same legal relation to his employer as other employees, and his liabilities to his employer and to third persons are fully treated elsewhere in this work.⁵²

F. Compensation. The compensation of a chauffeur is usually fixed by private agreement, but in the absence of any such agreement he will be entitled to recover for the reasonable value thereof.⁵³

VIII. GARAGES AND GARAGE KEEPERS.

A. Definitions. The public garage is the modern substitute for the livery stable,⁵⁴ and may be defined as a building or inclosure for the care and storage of motor vehicles and in which motor vehicles are kept for hire.⁵⁵

B. License and Regulation.⁵⁶ In some jurisdictions a special license is required in order to conduct a public garage, and where gasoline or other dangerous burning fluids are kept upon the premises, as is generally necessary in conducting a garage, the laws and ordinances pertaining to the storage of such fluids must be complied with.⁵⁷

C. Not Nuisances.⁵⁸ The maintenance of an automobile station or garage is not a common-law nuisance.⁵⁹ The conduct of such a business in a proper manner and in a suitable locality is perfectly lawful and legitimate.⁶⁰ If the locality is utterly unsuitable and amidst surroundings not fitted for such a business, it might constitute a nuisance;⁶¹ so too if the business be so conducted as to be dangerous to either property or health or to emit offensive odors, it might properly be designated as a nuisance and the continuance thereof abated.⁶²

South Side Railroad of Long Island." It was held that the restriction excepted from its operation the entire right of way of the railroad company and not merely that part of the right of way physically occupied by the track of the railroad. And where the owner of the property erected a building partly on the right of way and partly outside, the part on the right of way being used as a garage and the part outside being used as a kitchen, it was held that there was no violation of the restrictive covenant. Stein v. Lyon, 91 N. Y. App. Div. 593, 87 N. Y. Suppl. 125. A restrictive covenant in a deed providing that the property conveyed shall not be used for any business "offensive to the neighborhood for dwelling houses" is violated by the erection of an automobile garage designed to accommodate one hundred and twenty-five automobiles, one part of the garage being equipped with a portable forge and intended for use as a repair shop, it further appearing that demonstration cars would be kept in the building, with demonstrators to operate them and that from seventy-five to one hundred customers were expected to store automobiles there. *Evans v. D. Rights, Duties, and Liabilities of Garage Keepers — 1. IN GENERAL.

The rights, duties, and liabilities of garage keepers are quite analogous to the rights, duties, and liabilities of livery-stable keepers,⁶³ and, in the absence of a direct precedent upon any particular point, one will find the principles involved fully treated under that title.⁶⁴

2. AS TO PROPERTY LEFT IN THEIR CARE. As to motor vehicles and their accessories left in the care of a garage keeper, he is bailee of them for hire and as such is liable to the owner for any loss or injury thereto resulting from his or his servants' wrongful or negligent acts or omissions. In regard to such property he must exercise that degree of care which a prudent man would exercise over his own property under similar circumstances. In the absence of a special agreement, he is not, however, an insurer of such property, or liable for its loss or injury not occasioned by his default.⁶⁵

3. AS TO VEHICLES RENTED OUT. In furnishing motor vehicles for hire, the garage keeper must use ordinary care and skill in furnishing a vehicle free from defects and suitable for the purpose for which it is let.⁶⁶ He is not liable for injuries sustained by reason of latent defects not discoverable by the exercise of due diligence.⁶⁷ And where the garage keeper undertakes to supply a chauffeur to operate the vehicle during the period of hiring, he must exercise due care in selecting one having the requisite skill and experience ordinarily possessed by persons exercising such calling.⁶⁸

4. COMPENSATION. The compensation for the use of motor vehicles, where not fixed by ordinance, may properly be the subject of private agreement, and in the absence of such there will be an implied contract to pay the usual rate for similar services.⁶⁹

5. LIABILITY FOR INJURIES TO THIRD PERSONS. A garage keeper, where he lets out a motor vehicle, is under the same liability as to third persons as other owners of motor vehicles and, if the vehicle is in charge of one of his servants, acting within the scope of his authority, he is liable for the damages resulting from its negligent operation;⁷⁰ but, if the vehicle is turned over to the hirer and the latter takes full charge thereof, no liability for its negligent operation can fall upon the garage keeper.⁷¹

6. LIEN — a. In General. In the absence of a special statute or agreement, the garage keeper has no lien upon a motor vehicle which the owner keeps at the garage and takes out from time to time.⁷² This is in conformity with the common-law rule that to have a lien on personal property the lienor must have an independent and exclusive possession either actual or constructive.⁷³

b. Statutory Lien. The statutory lien of a livery-stable⁷⁴ keeper has been held not to extend to the keeper of a garage.⁷⁵

63. See Smith v. O'Brien, 46 Misc. (N. Y.) 325, 94 N. Y. Suppl. 673.

65. See BAILMENTS, 5 Cyc. 157 et seq.; LIVERY-STABLE KEEPERS, 25 Cyc. 1512 et seq.

A garage keeper is not liable for injuries to a motor vehicle where the owner thereof delivers it to an agent of the garage keeper without the latter's knowledge and where the agent was off duty and used the vehicle solely for his own benefit, even though the agent represented that he wished to exhibit it to a prospective purchaser. Evans v. A. L. Dyke Automobile Supply Co., 121 Mo. App. 266, 101 S. W. 1132.

75. Smith v. O'Brien, 46 Misc. (N. Y.) 325, 94 N. Y. Suppl. 673.

c. Warehouseman's Lien. If the vehicle is left with the garage keeper strictly for the purpose of storage without any agreement, either expressed or implied, that the owner shall have the right of continuous use of the vehicle during such period, it seems that the garage keeper may then have a warehouseman's lien thereon for his proper charges.⁷⁶

IX. SALES.

A. In General. The general rules governing contracts of sales are applicable to the contracts for the sales of motor vehicles.⁷⁷ These contracts frequently provide that the vendor will furnish a chauffeur to instruct the vendee to operate the vehicle, in which event the vendor is liable for injuries sustained by the vendee and third persons by the negligence of the chauffeur.⁷⁸ They also sometimes provide for the turning in of another vehicle in part payment.⁷⁹

B. Statutory Regulations. In many states the vendor of a registered motor vehicle is required, within a specified time after completing the sale, to return the registration seal or license of such vehicle to the state official from whom it was obtained.⁸⁰

C. Warranties. For a breach of warranty,⁸¹ the vendee has the right to rescind the contract and recover back the purchase-price or he may retain the vehicle and hold the vendor for his damages.⁸² A statement that a second hand vehicle is "as good as new," "all right," or "in first class condition" does not constitute a warranty that the vehicle is free from defects, but is merely an expression of opinion not affecting the contract, unless fraudulently made.⁸³

D. Sales Agents. An agent who succeeds in effecting the sale of a vehicle for the manufacturer or dealer is entitled to his commission thereon even though the contract is finally closed through another agent.⁸⁴

77. See, generally, SALES.

Terms too indefinite.—Where an automobile company manufactures three different styles of cars, at different prices, an order for fifty machines, which does not specify the style of machine desired, even if accepted, is too indefinite for enforcement by either party. Wheaton v. Cadillac Automobile Co., 143 Mich. 21, 106 N. W. 399.

Satisfactory to purchaser.—Where a contract stipulates that the vehicle will be satisfactory to the purchaser, the purchaser may return it and demand the repayment of the purchase-price if the vehicle is not satisfactory. Under such a contract, the purchaser is the sole judge as to the satisfactory character of the vehicle. Walker v. Grout Bros. Automobile Co., 124 Mo. App. 628, 102 S. W. 25.

Right to rescind.—Where the purchaser has the right to rescind, he must exercise that right within a reasonable time, and not conduct himself in a manner inconsistent with such right. Cunningham v. Wanamaker, 217 Pa. St. 497, 66 Atl. 748.

78. Burnham v. Central Automobile Exch. (R. I. 1907) 67 Atl. 429.

The adjusting and testing of the machine by the chauffeur until the lessons are completed is within the provision of defendant's contract of sale of an automobile to plaintiff that it will furnish a chauffeur to teach plaintiff to operate the machine. Burnham v. Central Automobile Exch., (R. I. 1907) 67 Atl. 429.

Construction of representation.—Plaintiffs' agent in the sale to defendant of a steam automobile for demonstrating purposes wherewith to sell others, by explaining to defendant the use and necessity of a fusible plug as an equipment of a steam automobile, and stating to him that all plaintiffs' automobiles were thus equipped, represented that the car sold defendant was a 1903 car, all plaintiffs' cars of that year having such an equipment, while their cars of the year 1902 were without such equipment, as was the case with the car they sent defendant. Grout v. Moulton, 79 Vt. 122, 64 Atl. 453.

84. Fredricksen v. Locomobile Co., (Nebr. 1907) 111 N. W. 845.

An agency within the meaning of the automobile trade consists in giving to the agent the exclusive right to purchase for cash from the manufacturer at a discount from the list price, and to retail them to consumers within specified territory at the full list price. In other words no commission as such is paid to an agent on the sale of a machine, but

X. ACTIONS.

A. Remedies. The same legal and equitable remedies are available by and against automobilists for the preservation and enforcement of their rights and duties as are afforded to others under similar circumstances.⁸⁵

B. Joinder of Parties⁸⁶—1. PLAINTIFF. A joint action by husband and wife may be maintained where the suit is for injuries sustained by the wife and damages sustained by the husband, growing out of defendant's negligence.⁸⁷

2. DEFENDANT. Where several persons contribute to the injury they may be sued jointly or severally, although there is no concert between their acts.⁸⁸

C. Pleading⁸⁹—1. DECLARATION, COMPLAINT, OR PETITION—a. In General. The manner of setting forth a cause of action growing out of the infringement of some right or breach of duty pertaining to motor vehicles is not different than in setting forth causes of action founded upon other similar rights and duties.⁹⁰

b. In Negligence Cases. Causes of action founded upon negligence should set forth the facts which it is claimed constitute such negligence,⁹¹ with proper averments as to damage⁹² as in other cases.

2. ANSWER. So too the rules governing the framing of answers in civil cases generally apply equally to cases involving the rights and duties of automobilists.⁹³

3. DEMURRER. The constitutionality of the motor vehicle law may be raised by demurrer,⁹⁴ but the particular article or section or provision of the constitution claimed to be violated should be pointed out or required in defendant's motion papers or in his brief.⁹⁵

4. MOTIONS IN REGARD TO PLEADINGS. The general rules as to motions affecting he has the exclusive right to certain territory and purchases on his own account for cash at a discount from the retail or list price. Fredricksen v. Locomobile Co., (Nebr. 1907) 111 N. W. 845.

Injunction.—Where a bridge or turnpike company wrongfully exact toll from automobilists the latter have a remedy by injunction. Mallory v. Saratoga Lake Bridge Co., 53 Misc. (N. Y.) 446, 104 N. Y. Suppl. 1025. So an injunction will issue to restrain the introduction of gasoline into the tanks of automobiles inside a frame building used as a garage, where by so doing it endangers adjacent properties. O'Hara v. Nelson, (N. J. Ch. 1906) 63 Atl. 836.

Mandamus.—A writ of mandamus will not issue to permit a person to run an automobile on a turnpike where it is admitted that by reason of the character of the vehicle no toll would be adequate. Bertles v. Laurel Run Turnpike Co., 15 Pa. Dist. 94.

A complaint to recover the purchase-price after the rescission of a contract to purchase an automobile was held to be sufficient in Walker v. Grout Bros. Automobile Co., 124 Mo. App. 628, 102 S. W. 25.

A petition for mandamus to compel a turnpike company to permit an automobilist to operate his car on its roads upon the payment of proper toll should aver that the petitioner has complied with the provisions of the motor vehicle law as to the licensing of the operator, posting of the numbers on the vehicle, the equipment of the vehicle with brakes, signal devices, etc. Bertles v. Laurel Run Turnpike Co., 15 Pa. Dist. 94.

An allegation, in a complaint for personal injuries sustained while defendant's automobile was being used by defendant's daughter, which averred that defendant negligently directed and allowed the vehicle to be propelled by his daughter, sufficiently charges the existence of the relation of master and servant between defendant and his daughter. Doran v. Thomsen, (N. J. Sup. 1907) 66 Atl. 897. Where the complaint merely sets forth that the operator of the automobile was the agent or servant of the owner, without explicitly or implicitly disclosing the scope of the employment, and then sets forth that the operator caused the injury, it is demurrable as there is no inference that the act was within the scope of the employment. Lewis v. Amorous, (Ga. App. 1907) 59 S. E. 338.

pleadings apply here,⁹⁶ and where a party desires a more particular statement of his opponent's claim he should apply for a bill of particulars and not move to have the pleading made more definite and certain.⁹⁷

D. Joinder of Causes of Action.⁹⁸ An action for the cost price of an automobile cannot be joined with an action for the conversion of another one, although both causes of action are founded upon one transaction which was for the sale of an automobile for which an old automobile was taken in part payment and retained by the vendor and his failure to deliver the new car.⁹⁹

E. Witnesses — 1. IN GENERAL. The general rules as to the competency of witnesses apply to cases involving the rights of motorists.¹

2. EXPERTS. An expert can only answer to a hypothetical question based upon facts which are in evidence.² In order to be competent to testify as to the speed at which a motor vehicle was traveling on a particular occasion it need not be shown that the witness has any expert knowledge on the subject.³ Simply a knowledge of time and distance is sufficient,⁴ coupled with a reasonable opportunity to judge.⁵

F. Evidence — 1. PRESUMPTIONS AND BURDEN OF PROOF. The burden of proof, as in other cases, is on plaintiff to establish each material fact constituting his cause of action, by a fair preponderance of the evidence.⁶ This rule applies to proof: That the chauffeur was about the owner's business at the time of the injury, where it is sought to hold the owner for injury occurring to some third person while the vehicle was in the hands of the chauffeur,⁷ although a presumption of that fact may arise from the circumstances in the particular case;⁸ that defendant was

An application for a bill of particulars which asks for more than the applicant is entitled to may be denied. An application calling for the precise hour of the accident, the direction plaintiff was moving, the number of the automobile with a description of it, including its make, color, size, kind of motive power, etc., and a description of its occupants at the time of the alleged accident was denied and such practice condemned as trifling with the court in Shepard v. Wood, 116 N. Y. App. Div. 861, 102 N. Y. Suppl. 306.

Value of vehicle.—The owner of an automobile and the person from whom the same was purchased are competent to testify as to its value in an action against a carrier for injuries to the vehicle. Paterson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 95 Minn. 57, 103 N. W. 621.

—In an action against a municipality for injuries sustained by an automobilist in running into an obstruction in the highway during the night-time and about which, at the time of the accident, there was no light, defendant proved that a light had been fastened above the obstruction in the evening but the next morning it was found to have been removed. It was held that the burden was upon plaintiff to show that defendant had actual knowledge that the light had been removed. Gedroice v. New York, 109 N. Y. App. Div. 176, 95 N. Y. Suppl. 645.

A prima facie case is made out by showing that defendant was the owner of the automobile and that the chauffeur was in his employ to operate it and was operating it at the time of the injury complained of, but this is not conclusive. Long v. Nute, 123 Mo. App. 204, 100 S. W. 511; Stewart v. Baruch, 103 N. Y. App. Div. 577, 93 N. Y. Suppl. 161. There is a presumption that the chauffeur is acting within the scope of his authority and this is not overcome by proof of the fact that he made a detour from the direct route of the journey which he was on for the owner at the time of the accident. Long v. Nute, supra.

The fact of defendant's ownership of the automobile does not warrant the inference that the person in charge thereof was his servant and acting within the scope of his authority. Lotz v. Hanlon, 217 Pa. St. 339, 66 Atl. 525.

negligent;⁹ and usually that plaintiff was free from contributory negligence.¹⁰ And where an automobile ordinance is attacked on the ground that it is unreasonable the burden is on the party attacking it to show that it is unreasonable.¹¹

2. JUDICIAL NOTICE. The courts will take judicial notice of the fact that automobiles on highways, especially where they are infrequent, have a tendency to frighten animals,¹² and their other characteristics and consequences of their use;¹³ and also that such vehicles may be driven at a great speed.¹⁴ But the court will not take judicial notice of municipal ordinances regulating the use of motor vehicles.¹⁵

3. ADMISSIBILITY AND SUFFICIENCY— a. In General. Testimony as to the comparative amount of noise made by different makes of motor vehicles, based on comparisons made by the witness, is incompetent where there is no proof of the condition of the machines with which the test was made.¹⁶ And in an action on a contract to reshoe automobile tires evidence as to whether or not the tires needed reshoeing is immaterial.¹⁷

b. To Establish Ownership. Proof that an automobile in which a person was riding was registered in the name of such person is sufficient to warrant a finding that he was the general owner thereof or had such a special property therein as to give him control of the vehicle.¹⁸

c. To Show Relation of Master and Servant. Evidence that a person sued for an injury caused by the operation of his motor vehicle fails to deny, when served with the summons and complaint, that the chauffeur who operated the vehicle was acting within the scope of his authority is not competent to prove that the agent was acting within his authority.¹⁹ And where the chauffeur is called as a witness by plaintiff for the purpose of showing that he was employed by defendant, it is competent on cross examination to show that he was operating the machine for his own benefit, without the knowledge or authority of his employer.²⁰

G. Variance. The proof should conform to the pleadings, but a substantial conformance is all that is necessary.²¹

H. Measure of Damages²² — 1. IN GENERAL. Damages based upon expert testimony as to the value of the use of a motor vehicle are not recoverable where it is not shown that the vehicle was used for any business purpose or that the owner hired another to take its place while it was being repaired.²³

2. BREACH OF WARRANTY. The measure of damages for the breach of a warranty on a sale of an automobile where the contract is not rescinded is the difference between the value of the car, had it been as warranted, and the actual value.²⁴

3. FOR DEATH OF PERSON.²⁵ Damages which are recoverable for the death of a person by the negligent operation of a motor vehicle are limited to those which are pecuniary and compensatory.²⁶ Exemplary or punitive damages are not recoverable.²⁷

4. FOR INJURY TO PERSON. Damages for personal injuries²⁸ may include moneys expended in effecting a cure,²⁹ the reasonable value of time lost,³⁰ earnings,³¹ compensation for the pain and suffering in the past and such as may come to plaintiff in the future,³² and probable loss from impairment of ability to earn a living.³³ In addition thereto a sum may be allowed as punitive damages where the negligence is gross.³⁴

5. FOR INJURY TO ANIMAL.³⁵ For injuries to a horse there may be recovered amounts necessarily expended in endeavoring to heal the same and the value of the horse's services while disabled.³⁶ But deterioration of a horse due to fright is not a proper element of damage.³⁷

I. TRIAL³⁸ — 1. QUESTIONS FOR COURT AND JURY. It is the province of the court to determine questions of law, and that of the jury to weigh the evidence and ascertain the facts.³⁹ Unless it is established beyond fair debate and there is an absence of contradictory evidence it is for the jury to determine whether a particular road was defective,⁴⁰ whether a chauffeur was acting within the scope of his authority,⁴¹ the rate of speed at which an automobile was traveling, and whether such speed was negligent,⁴² whether it is negligent to run a motor vehicle in dark without a headlight,⁴³ whether under the particular circumstances it was negligent for a passenger in an automobile to fail to look and listen for trains before crossing a railroad track,⁴⁴ and whether the fact of a child playing in the street constitutes

MOVE.²⁰ A term sometimes used as meaning to propel;²¹ to remove.²²

MRS. An abbreviation for MISTRESS, q. v., generally made use of to distinguish the person named as a married woman.²³

MUCH. A term sometimes used as synonymous with "many."²⁴ (See MANY.)

MULATTO. Every one who is not of white blood;²⁵ a person begotten between a white and black;²⁶ a person having one-fourth or more of negro blood in his veins;²⁷ the middle term between the extremes, or the offspring of a white and a black.²⁸ (See COLORED PERSONS, and Cross-References Thereunder; CREOLE.)

MULCT. A fine imposed for an offense; a penalty.²⁹ (See, generally, FINES.)

MULE. See ANIMALS.³¹

MULIER AMISSA PUDICITIA HAUD ALIA ABNUERIT. A maxim meaning "When a woman has lost her chastity she may be suspected of not refusing any thing else of crime."³²

MULTA CONCEDUNTUR PER OBLIQUUM, QUÆ NON CONCEDUNTUR DEDIRECTO. A maxim meaning "Many things are allowed indirectly which are not allowed directly."³³

MULTA FIDEM PROMISSA LEVANT. A maxim meaning "Many promises lessen confidence."³⁴

MULTA IGNORAMUS QUÆ NOBIS NON LATERENT SI VETERUM LECTIO NOBIS FUIT FAMILIARIS. A maxim meaning "We are ignorant of many things which would not be hidden from us if the reading of old authors was familiar to us."³⁵ 20. "Movement" and "stroke" see U. S. Peg-Wood, etc., Co. v. B. F. Sturtevant Co., 125 Fed. 378, 379, 60 C. C. A. 244.

25. People v. Hall, 4 Cal. 399, 403.

Not embracing a free negro see Scott v. Raub, 88 Va. 721, 727, 14 S. E. 178, as used in a statute.

26. Thurman v. State, 18 Ala. 276, 278; Johnson Dict. [quoted in State v. Scott, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 270, 273].

The term includes every one coming within the definition, whether the taint in the blood be derived from the father or the mother. Thurman v. State, 18 Ala. 276, 278; State v. Scott, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 270, 273. But see Medway v. Natick, 7 Mass. 88, 89, where it was said that the term does not include a person whose father was a mulatto and whose mother was a white woman.

In legal as well as common parlance the term is understood to be a mixture of the white and negro race. State v. Hayes, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 275, 276.

As used in the Spanish and French West Indies, the term applies to persons who are an intermixture of a white person with a negro. Daniel v. Guy, 19 Ark. 121, 131.

27. Gentry v. McMinnis, 3 Dana (Ky.) 382, 385; Anderson v. Millikin, 9 Ohio St. 568, 570, 574; Scott v. Raub, 88 Va. 721, 727, 14 S. E. 178.

28. Williams v. Whitewater Tp. School Dist. No. 6, Wright (Ohio) 578, 579 [cited in Jeffries v. Ankeny, 11 Ohio 372, 375].

The definition of the term seems to be vague, signifying generally a person of mixed white, or European, and negro descent, in whatever proportion the blood of the two races may be mingled in the individual; but it is not invariably applicable to every admixture of the African blood with the European, nor is one bearing all the features of the white to be ranked with the degraded class, designated by the laws of this state "persons of color," because of some remote taint of the negro race. State v. Davis, 2 Bailey (S. C.) 558, 559.

MUNICIPAL.⁵² Pertaining to a municipality;⁵³ of or pertaining to a town or city;⁵⁴ that which belongs to a corporation or a city;⁵⁵ pertaining to local self-government;⁵⁶ pertaining to corporate or local self-government,⁵⁷ or the corporate government of a city or town;⁵⁸ pertaining to a city or corporation having the right of administering local government;⁵⁹ belonging to a city, town or place having the right of local government;⁶⁰ self-governing;⁶¹ belonging to or affecting a particular state or separate community.⁶² The term is sometimes used in contradistinction to INTERNATIONAL,⁶³ q. v.; it may also mean LOCAL, q. v.; particular; INDEPENDENT,⁶⁴ q. v. Strictly, this word applies only to what belongs to a city;⁶⁵ and is usually applied to what belongs to a city; but it has a more extensive meaning, and is in legal effect the same as public or governmental as distinguished from private.⁶⁶ (Municipal: Aid—Generally, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS; To Agricultural Society, see AGRICULTURE; To Charity, see CHARITIES; To Irrigation Company, see WATERS; To Railroad, see RAILROADS; To Turnpike or Toll-Road, see TOLL-ROADS; To Water Company, see WATERS. Corporation, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.)

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS. Affairs relating to or involved in the local government of the inhabitants of any locality.⁶⁷ (See MUNICIPAL; and, generally, MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.)

MUNICIPAL AUTHORITIES. As applied to a town, a term which refers to its selectmen.⁶⁸ (See MUNICIPAL; and, generally, MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.)

The word has a double meaning, one a narrow, confined meaning as relating to a municipium or free town, or as we should say in the present age, relating to cities, towns, and villages; and another broader and more usual signification relating to the state or nation. State v. Leffingwell, 54 Mo. 458, 465.

67. Charlotte v. St. Stephen, 32 N. Brunsw. 292, 297, where it is said: "Such as are generally managed and controlled by a local governing administration, illustrated practically every day in and by our county and city councils, consisting of presiding officers and councillors or aldermen, in whom are vested both legislative and executive authority in relation to and affecting the local affairs of the locality."

68. State v. Hellman, 56 Conn. 190, 192, 14 Atl. 806, where it is said that the term does not mean justices of the peace, constables, or the grand jury, since they do not represent the town as such, or have any agency in its corporate affairs, but are the agents of the law. Neither can the words appropriately refer to town-clerks, treasurers, or registers, whose duties are special and limited, without any agency representing the municipality.

MUNICIPAL BOND. In its ordinary commercial sense, a negotiable bond⁶⁹ issued by a municipal corporation, to secure its indebtedness.⁷⁰ (See, generally, MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.)

MUNICIPAL CLAIMS. Lawful claims in favor of, or against, a municipal corporation.⁷¹ (See, generally, MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.)

Other cases defining municipal corporations see Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 220, 222;

2. "MUNICIPALITY," A MODERN SYNONYM. A municipal corporation is commonly called a "municipality," a word formerly employed to designate only the body of officers of the corporation,¹³ but now by judicial recognition and common use enlarged to a synonym of the corporation in its entirety.¹⁴ When such an intention on the part of the legislature appears, the term "municipality" will be construed in a broad sense so as to include counties and other quasi-municipal corporations.¹⁵

3. ANALYSIS OF DEFINITION. The foregoing definition presents the logical and practical view of a municipal corporation. It is a brief formula embracing the essential elements and excluding other kindred bodies called quasi-corporations.¹⁶ It expressly includes: (1) The body of individuals; (2) the sanction of the sovereign; (3) the definite public purpose; (4) the necessary powers; (5) the charter; and (6) the primary incidents of name and succession. These are the elements generally recognized as essential to a municipality.¹⁷ It impliedly excludes par-

An incorporated village is a municipal corporation. State v. Chichester, 31 Nebr. 325, 47 N. W. 934, 11 L. R. A. 104; Wahoo v. Reeder, 27 Nebr. 770, 43 N. W. 1145; Broking v. Van Valen, 56 N. J. L. 85, 27 Atl. 1070; Matter of Lansingburgh Bd. of Health, 43 N. Y. App. Div. 236, 60 N. Y. Suppl. 27. Compare Camden v. Camden Village Corp., 77 Me. 530, 1 Atl. 689.

13. Bouvier L. Dict. This definition of "municipality" correctly described the borough or city with royal charter before the reform of 1835. The charter of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries generally conferred municipal privileges and powers, not upon the people of the borough but upon a favored few, the mayor and common council, the officiality of the corporation. Eastman v. Meredith, 36 N. H. 284, 291, 72 Am. Dec. 302.

14. Black L. Dict.; Encycl. Brit.; Standard Dict. This change in definition is the natural outcome of the radical change in the British municipal corporations wrought by the Reform Act of 1835.

A "municipality" has been defined as "an organization for the self-government of a city or town by means of a corporation empowered generally to maintain peace and order, and to manage the affairs of the inhabitants." Encycl. Brit. tit. "Municipality." "A state agency for governmental purposes." Lexington v. Thompson, 113 Ky. 540, 547, 68 S. W. 477, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 384, 101 Am. St. Rep. 361, 57 L. R. A. 775. "A subdivision of the State for the purpose of local self government." State v. Elliott, 158 Ind. 168, 172, 63 N. E. 222. "A public corporation created for governmental purposes, and having local powers of legislation and self-government." Memphis Trust Co. v. St. Francis Levee Dist., 69 Ark. 284, 286, 62 S. W. 902. "A body formed by the incorporation of the inhabitants of a particular place or district, established to assist in the civil government of the state by the exercise of subordinate specified powers of legislation and regulation with respect to local and internal concerns." Reid v. Wiley, 46 N. J. L. 473, 474. "A public corporation as distinguished from a private trading corporation." Guarantee Trust, etc., Co.'s Petition, 3 Pa. Dist. 205, 208. "A city, a municipal corporation." Anderson L. Dict. [quoted in Fitzgerald v. Walker, 55 Ark. 148, 156, 17 S. W. 702]. "A municipal district, a borough, a city, town or village." Webster Dict. [quoted in In re Werner, 129 Cal. 567, 573, 62 Pac. 97]. "A town or city possessed of corporate privileges of local self-government; a community under municipal jurisdiction." Century Dict. [quoted in In re Werner, supra]. "The city or town councils, through which municipal action is expressed and had." Rittman v. Payne, 68 Ark. 338, 340, 58 S. W. 350. "The body of officers, taken collectively, belonging to a city, who are appointed to manage the affairs, and defend its interests." Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in Root v. Erdelmyer, Wils. (Ind.) 99, 105].

The term "municipality" does not include a joint senatorial district. State v. Elliott, 158 Ind. 168, 172, 63 N. E. 222.

15. Union Stone Co. v. Hudson County, (N. J. Ch. 1906) 65 Atl. 466, 467. As to inclusion of such bodies see infra, I, C, 3, b, (III), (B).

ishes, counties, townships, and districts, which are almost municipalities and yet are deficient in some of the essential attributes of a municipal corporation;¹⁸ while it expresses the complex nature of the corporation, whereby it acts as a municipium, and also as a local agency for administering and enforcing the laws of the state.¹⁹ The legal fictions of personality and citizenship and the abstractions of invisibility and intangibility, commonly applied to other corporations,²⁰ are rarely attributed to a municipal corporation, which embraces and embodies the territory of its situs, as well as the inhabitants, in its corporate entity, and cannot be divorced therefrom, either in fact, thought, or law.²¹

4. DEFINITION EXPLAINED — a. "Legal." A municipal corporation is a "legal" institution because dependent upon law for its existence and faculties.²²

b. "Institution." It is an institution because it is a system of laws establishing an organization, ordaining legal relations and promoting civilization.²³

c. "Charter." The charter is a prominent feature, distinguishing the municipal corporation proper from other public corporations or agencies of government, such as counties, townships, and districts, sometimes called municipal, but better denominated quasi-corporations, which are created and governed by general law.²⁴ The community is erected or converted into a municipality by means of the charter, which is the foundation of every complete corporation.²⁵

d. Popular Assent. The organization is generally effected by the action of the inhabitants in conformity to the charter or to general law, signifying some measure of popular assent to the incorporation.²⁶

e. Source of Charter. A municipal charter can emanate only from sovereign power, which alone can delegate faculties and functions of government. In England it may be granted by the king or by parliament; in the United States it is solely an act of sovereign legislative power.²⁷

f. Territory and Population. A municipal corporation, being a part of the state, must, like it, embrace both territory and population.²⁸ Efforts to incorporate a rural area without population in order to exercise therein certain peculiar municipal privileges, such as liquor selling, have been frustrated by judicial denunciation as corporate frauds on the ground, among others, that population and even popular corporate action is an essential condition of a municipal corporation.²⁹ And schemes to bring farming lands under corporate jurisdiction, solely for the purpose of taxation, have likewise fallen under judicial condemnation.³⁰ So also have miscarried plans to incorporate into a single municipality separate districts or areas which were non-contiguous; the territory and inhabitants must form a single community.³¹ Pertaining to a populous community of limited area, as distinguished from the state or a large district thereof,³² is the present technical and legal, as well as popular, meaning of "municipal" as distinguished from the national or governmental sense in which it was used by Blackstone.³³ Indeed "municipal" is now generally employed as the antithesis of "governmental" to designate the property and functions of an incorporated city or town, pertaining to it as a local community, as distinguished from those belonging to it as an agency of the state for general public purposes.³⁴

g. Body Politic and Corporate. It is called a "body corporate" because the persons are made into a body and are of capacity to take, grant, etc., by a particular name,³⁵ and a "body politic" because framed as to this capacity by policy.³⁶

h. Name. The corporate name is a means of identification of the body and an essential incident to the corporate life and action, since without a name it cannot take or alien title, sue or be sued, or exercise any of its powers as a body.³⁷ son L. Dict. tit. "Charter"; Bouvier L. Dict. tit. "Charter." See also infra, II, A, 1, 13, 14.

26. The legislative power to charter a municipal corporation at discretion may be practically nullified by the unanimous refusal of the inhabitants to organize under the charter; but unless the constitution or general law or charter so provides, the assent of a majority is not required. Sufficient citizens legally qualified to vote and hold office might in pursuance of the charter proceed to choose officers and set the municipal machinery in motion. Morford v. Unger, 8 Iowa 82; People v. Butte, 4 Mont. 174, 1 Pac. 414, 47 Am. Rep. 346. But there are judicial opinions stressing the legislative power to the extent of holding the incorporation complete without any popular action whatever under the charter; thus making a mere paper municipality an actual corporation. *People v. i. Continuous Succession. Perpetual or continuous succession is the peculiar attribute of a corporation, whereby its life is continued indefinitely, notwithstanding the death of its members, an event terminating ipso facto the existence of natural persons and partnerships.³⁸

j. Purpose and Powers. The purpose of incorporation is a fundamental test of character and powers; and the authority consequent upon the delegation of powers, adequate and appropriate to the exercise of municipal functions, is the very life-blood of the corporation.³⁹

k. Self-Government. Self-government, subordinate to the imperial power of Rome, was the distinguishing quality of the municipium and still inheres as an essential attribute of the modern municipal corporation.⁴⁰

l. Improvement. The improvement of the municipality, local and general, not only in parking, grading, paving and sewerage, but in providing light, water, carriage, and other utilities through municipal ownership has in modern times come to be of as much importance and difficulty to the corporation as all the ordinary functions of government, and ever demands special legal consideration.⁴¹

m. Governmental Agency. The municipal corporation, formerly an object of royal jealousy, is now quite generally employed in Europe, as well as in America, as a local agency of the state for administering general laws within its boundaries, thus giving it special sovereign power and exemption.⁴²

5. INTEGRAL PARTS. The integral parts of the municipal corporation are:

"For all the individual members that have existed from the foundation to the present time, or that shall ever hereafter exist, are but one person in law, a person that never dies; in like manner as the river Thames is still the same river, though the parts which compose it are changing every instant." 1 Blackstone Comm. 468.

(1) The territory; (2) the inhabitants;⁴³ and (3) the charter, the loss of any one of which would be fatal to the municipality as a living organism. The other elements included in the definition may be denominated incidents or inherent faculties.⁴⁴

B. History.⁴⁵ The complex and peculiar nature of a municipal corporation is obviously due to its origin, its vicissitudes and evolution under various political conditions. The municipium was a town out of Rome, particularly in Italy, which possessed the right of Roman citizenship, but was governed by its own laws.⁴⁶ Under the dominion of Rome by conquest, it yet enjoyed and exercised the power of local self-government and cherished with pride the idea of being a free city.⁴⁷ The name and right were preserved through the decadence of the Roman empire and extended to the cities of western Europe.⁴⁸ The municipium survived the dark ages and even the tyrannies of the houses of Hapsburg, Bourbon, and Stuart, although not in pristine vigor. Many English cities were

A political power.—A municipal corporation, while nominally a person, is virtually a political power, a constituent element of one sovereignty, and its local legislation and administration are the legislation and administration of the state. Wooster v. Plymouth, 62 N. H. 193. See also Byrne v. Chicago Gen. R. Co., 169 Ill. 75, 48 N. E. 703; Louisville v. Com., 1 Duv. (Ky.) 295, 85 Am. Dec. 624.

During the Tudor and Stuart dynasties, the integral parts of a municipal corporation were: (1) The mayor; (2) the aldermen; (3) the commonalty, practically an insignificant element. These three classes constituted the municipality and the presence of each class or some representative thereof was essential to the validity of corporate action. In earlier times the charter did not incorporate the town or city but the persons whom the king chose to govern it together with a few of the inhabitants, whose power was nominal and fatuous. Glover Mun. Corp. 16; 3 Hallam Const. Hist. 52; Willcock Mun. Corp. 8. The royal charter of those days was multiform; some being to "the Mayor and Cominalty"; some to the "Mayor and Aldermen"; some to the "Mayor and Burgesses"; some to the "Mayor, Aldermen and Cominalty"; some to the "Mayor and Bailiffs," etc., etc. Shepherd Corp. 10. Schedule 1 to Municipal Corporations Reform Act (1835).

The modern view developed under the Municipal Corporation Reform Act both in England and America and expressed in the text is more consistent with the logical idea of a corporation as well as the spirit of modern civilization. *Baumgartner v. Ancient municipalities.—Ancient Italy and Gaul each had twelve hundred cities and Spain three hundred and sixty; while Asia contained five hundred and Africa three hundred. In Gaul were Marseilles, Arles, Nismes, Narbonne, Toulouse, Autun, Bordeaux, Lyons, Langres, and Treves; in Britain were York, Bath, and London. Gibbon Rom. Empire, c. 2. A thousand years later were developed worthy successors of the city states of Italy in the famous free cities of Germany, which did so much to curb the power of the haughty barons, promote manufactures and commerce, and increase the comfort and health of urban living. 2 Janssen Hist. Germ. People 34; Zimmern The Hanse Cities. Closely following these in time came the growth and development of the cities of the low countries to first importance in western Europe. 1 Motley Rise Dutch Rep. 81-96. Municipal extravagance, incompetence, and corruption in the fourth century A. D. invited imperial interference to the curtailing of local autonomy by the appointment of curatores, a sort of imperial mayor, who exercised most of the municipal functions until, after the establishment of christianity under Constantine, they were generally succeeded by the bishops, and in many cities ecclesiastical succeeded municipal government for a time. Guizot Civilization Europe 52-3. 1 *Mommsen Rom. despoiled of their charters by Jeffreys under forms of law,⁴⁹ and by surrender made to placate the royal tyranny. These were, however, reënf franchised after the revolution of 1688 by act of parliament.⁵⁰ The early American municipalities were formed in the likeness of their British archetype.⁵¹ Some changes in these were wrought by the spirit of the American Revolution; but it was left to the nineteenth century to develop the existing municipal corporation among English-speaking people. The Municipal Corporation Act of the British parliament (1835) is among the greatest achievements of that era of reform.⁵² It resulted in the abolition of the "rotten boroughs"; the substitution of popular election for self-perpetuation in the governing bodies of municipalities; the establishment of a uniform fiscal policy; and the erection of municipal courts administering justice rather than granting favors and exemptions.⁵³ Municipal offices were converted from personal perquisites into public trusts; democracy succeeded oligarchy; and the whole municipal system of the kingdom was thoroughly reformed, both in law and morals.⁵⁴ The Municipal Reform Act of 1835 remains to this day the basis of municipal government in the United Kingdom; and most of its provisions have been copied in so many of the United States that it may not inappropriately be styled the basis also of the American system of municipal government.⁵⁵ In the nineteenth century the United States began to extensively employ existing municipalities as public local agents to enforce the state laws in the municipal boundaries. Thus these corporations have become important parts of the state government, as well as self-governing communities. They often collect state taxes, maintain highways and bridges, conduct the public schools, and perform other functions of local administration for the state.⁵⁶ The cities and villages of the United States have also quite generally assumed the function of providing public utilities for themselves and their inhabitants. Many have thus become 52. 5 & 6 Wm. IV, c. 66, entitled "An act to provide for the regulation of municipal corporations in England and Wales," passed Sept. 9, 1835, comprising one hundred and forty-two sections.

53. Importance of Reform Act.—The thoroughness of this long act of more than eighty pages may be inferred from the fact that section one repealed so much of the charter of one hundred and seventy-eight boroughs as were inconsistent with its provisions; but a reading of it and of the report of the commission on which it was framed is requisite to an appreciation of its scope and effect. In fifty boroughs the corporators numbered less than thirty, while in one hundred and sixty others the average number was one hundred and fifty; and they acted independently of their respective communities. Some had no criminal jurisdiction and some had power to punish capitally. In some instances the corporate powers were exercised by non-residents. Many corporations were preserved and perpetuated solely as political engines to maintain party ascendancy or family influence. The councils were generally self-elected and held office for life and conducted all corporate affairs in secret. The conclusion of the commission was that "the municipal corporations of England and Wales neither possess nor deserve the confidence or respect of British subjects." The coöperation of the king and Brougham effected the reform. Glover Hist. Summ. Corp. System 39-45.

54. For a comprehensive survey of the extent of this movement to which is traceable the growth, improvement, and prosperity of the British boroughs during the last six decades of the nineteenth century see Roebuck Reform Mun. Corp. 30 Westminster Rev. 48.

55. The legislation in the United States embodying the principles of the Municipal Corporation Reform Act and providing by general law for the creation of municipalities resembling those erected by that act seems to have begun in Missouri in 1845. Then followed Tennessee (1849), Pennsylvania (1851), Ohio (1852), Indiana (1857), and many others at later dates. In some states this method of incorporation is exclusive. In others it is concurrent with the old mode of special statutory charter. See infra, II, A, 6, 13, 14.

56. In this character the municipality loses its generic and historic faculty of self-government and becomes, like the quasi-corporation, "an agency of the state through which it can most conveniently and effectively discharge the duties which the state, as an organized government, assumes to every person, and by which it can best promote the welfare of all." Galveston v. Posnainsky, 62 Tex. 118, 126, 50 Am. Rep. 517. See also Oliver v. Worcester, 102 Mass. 489, 3 Am. Rep. 485; People v. Bennett, 29 Mich. 451, 18 Am. Rep. 107; Darlington v. New York, 31 N. manufacturers and distributors of light, heat, and power, and furnishers of water and transportation in their limits and to their suburbs. These civic utilities and conveniences are usually furnished at fixed prices and rates to such as use and consume them. The municipality thus comes to be also an organization for business as well as for government, incidentally making profit out of these municipal necessities and comforts, and thus performing the functions of a stock corporation organized for profit.⁵⁷

C. Nature and Status—1. DUAL NATURE—a. In General. The modern municipality, although it has but a single organization and affords the best example of a complete public corporation, has developed into a highly complicated legal institution, performing a variety of functions, some governmental,⁵⁸ some gainful, and others purely municipal.⁵⁹ The nature of a municipal corporation, corresponding with these functions, although apparently threefold, is generally regarded by authors and judges as dual.⁶⁰

b. In Its Governmental Aspect. The municipality, being recognized as an appropriate instrumentality for the administration of general laws of the state within its boundaries and appointed and empowered for that purpose, thereby becomes an agent of the state for local administration and enforcement of its sovereign power. This is the governmental aspect of the municipal corporation.⁶¹

Municipal corporations "possess a double character, the one governmental, legislative, or public; the other in a sense proprietary or private. In its governmental or public character, the corporation is made by the state one of its instruments, the local depository of certain limited and prescribed political powers to be exercised for the public good on behalf of the state, and not for itself. . . . But in its proprietary or private character the powers are conferred on the municipal corporation, not from considerations connected with the government of the state at large, but for the private advantage of the particular corporation as a distinct legal personality." Safety Insulated Wire, etc., Co. v. Baltimore, 66 Fed. 140, 143, 13 C. C. A. 375. See also Coyle v. McIntire, 7 Houst. (Del.) 44, 30 Atl. 728, 40 Am. St. Rep. 109; Snouffer v. Cedar Rapids, etc., R. Co., 118 Iowa 287, 92 N. 60. Modern municipal complications.—During the last half century judges and authors have been wont to speak of the "dual nature" or "two-fold aspect" of this complex organism, corresponding to its governmental and municipal functions. The introduction of new methods into municipal life has established new relations demanding recognition and regulation, and requiring logically and practically the addition of the business aspect to the municipal and governmental, and the application of appropriate legal formulas to it, thus converting the body of dual nature into one three-fold. But the courts, while recognizing the new methods and their consequences, have not generally concurred in following this to its logical result and adding the private feature to the municipality. *Ingersoll Pub. "Municipal corporations are parts of the State government exercising delegated political powers, for public purposes." Baltimore v. Root, 8 Md. 95, 102, 63 Am. Dec. 696. It is not only a representative of the state, but is a portion of its governmental

c. In Its Municipal Aspect. Being devised and preserved as an institution to supply the wants and regulate the conduct of congested populations by allowing them respectively to preserve and maintain their own peculiar traditions, customs, and habits of life, by ordinances of their own making and officers of their own choice, the municipality is peculiarly an organization for local self-government, subordinate to the state. This was its primary object, and in this respect it is purely municipal according to history and etymology.⁶² When the municipality undertakes to supply, to those inhabitants who will pay therefor, utilities and facilities of urban life, it is engaging in business upon municipal capital and for municipal purposes but not in methods hitherto considered municipal. It is a public corporation transacting private business for hire. It is performing a function, not governmental, but often committed to private corporations or persons, with whom it may come into competition. The function may be municipal but the method is not. It leads to profit, which is the object of the private corporation. Some courts and authors therefore term the municipality in this aspect a quasi-private corporation.⁶³

power. It is one of its creatures, made for a specific purpose, to exercise within a limited sphere the powers of the state. U. S. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 17 Wall. (U. Ancient and modern municipal utilities compared.—The municipal purveyance of public utilities and conveniences for urban life is not entirely modern. In ante-Christian times Antioch, Athens, and other oriental cities were supplied with water by aqueducts of great size and cost erected at public expense, some of which are still in use; and Syracuse is yet supplied with drinking water by conduits mentioned by Thucydides. The aqueducts of ancient Rome had a total length of three hundred and sixty miles and a capacity to supply simultaneous bathing for more than fifty thousand persons. And at Constantinople, Segovia, Nismes, Mayence, and Metz are remarkable monuments to the Roman structural skill and municipal organization for water-supply. Encycl. Brit. tit. "Aqueduct." The necessity for this new phase of the municipal corporation comes chiefly from the commercial methods of modern life, applied to municipal affairs, whereby have been issued multiplied millions of dollars of municipal bonds to build plants providing public utilities of various kinds, which are often claimed and sometimes held as securities to the bondholders; and from the sale or hire of these utilities to individual consumers rather than the free use thereof by all citizens. As to rights of creditors see Mobile v. Watson, 116 U. S. 289, 6 S. Ct. 398, 29 L. ed. 620. See also Adams v. Rome, 59 Ga. 765; Middleton Sav. Bank v. Dubuque, 15 Iowa 394; *Edey v. ous acts, and different relations to those whom these acts affect. Different rules of law control the courts in determining liabilities asserted against it, and the powers claimed by it, depending upon the character in which it acts. As a governmental agency, the municipality is, like its principal, the state, entitled to sovereign respect and duty from the citizen; and like other public agents it is subject to visitation and punishment from the state for failure to perform its duty. It may be indicted for neglecting to repair a bridge,⁶⁴ or creating a public nuisance,⁶⁵ but is not subject to civil action for tort committed in the exercise of the police power, or other sovereign function.⁶⁶

b. When Subject to General Law. As a quasi-private corporation, exercising its powers for profit, it is subject to the same measure of liability both in contract and tort as private corporations.⁶⁷

c. Conflicting Doctrines as to Municipium. In its strictly municipal character, the rules of law are not certain or uniform, on account of the dual nature of the municipality in the exercise of municipal functions. Certain of its powers are recognized to be held and exercised solely or specially for the general good, and others for the peculiar benefit of the corporation or its citizens. Logically, the rule of sovereign exemption from liability would seem to apply to the former class, and personal liability be incurred in the latter. But the decisions are discordant upon this phase of liability and cannot be reconciled with the rules of logic, nor with each other.⁶⁸ Thus it is generally held that a city is liable to one injured for negligence in failing to keep its streets in repair, which would appear to be a breach of duty to the general public; while it is not liable for negligence in failing to furnish water, firemen, or apparatus to extinguish a fire, which is obviously a breach of duty to its own inhabitants and not to the general public; and the same rule of exemption applies to cases of injury resulting from municipal negligence to properly construct and repair municipal buildings, such as town halls and school-houses.⁶⁹

Gen. v. Salem, 103 Mass. 138. In this phase the charter powers of the municipality, whether conferred by general or special legislative act, are considered, like the charter of a private corporation, contractual and protected by the contract clause of the federal constitution. *Walla Walla v. ^{69.} See infra, XIV. The general doctrine of the law would, from this, seem to be that the inhabitant has no right of action against the municipality for neglect to perform a municipal duty, which it owes peculiarly to its own citizens; but that in common with other persons he may recover damages from it for injury suffered by its negligence to perform a duty to the general public. But this is notoriously not the law in regard to

d. Contractual Relations. In regard to municipal contracts the rules of law are more fixed and certain, the general doctrine being that a municipal corporation may make such contracts as its charter expressly authorizes or as are appropriate to execute powers expressly conferred or necessarily implied therefrom, or incidental to the corporate existence;⁷⁰ and a municipal corporation may, in the absence of restriction or prohibition, express or implied, use the same means to accomplish a municipal object that might be employed by a private corporation or person in the transaction of business.⁷¹

e. Community Rights and Liabilities. So intimate are the relations of the municipality and its territory and citizens that, in case of dissolution, the inhabitants and proprietors of the territory of the dissolved corporation are regarded as having an interest in the municipal property acquired and held for local uses;⁷² and, on reincorporation of substantially the same territory, the new municipality, as successor to the old, takes and holds this property in public trust for the inhabitants,⁷³ and also becomes liable for the just indebtedness of the predecessor, and especially that incurred in the purchase of municipal implements and utilities.⁷⁴

3. DISTINGUISHED FROM OTHER BODIES — a. In General. Although in respect of certain property rights, municipal corporations have the same attributes as private corporations,⁷⁵ they are in general distinguished from them in the fact that they are public corporations.⁷⁶

b. Corporations Classified — (i) IN GENERAL. All corporations are divisible into two classes, public and private, according to their objects.⁷⁷

(ii) PRIVATE CORPORATIONS. Private corporations include all those corporate bodies created specially for the benefit of private persons, in which the public has only an indirect or incidental interest.⁷⁸ Such are all corporations whose object is profit-making, commonly called stock corporations or business corpothe exercise of the police powers, neglect of which gives no right of action against the municipality. See infra, XIV, A.

77. Classification as public and private peculiarly American.—This classification of corporations, now the most common and useful in the United States, is not made by Coke or Blackstone. Nor indeed is it mentioned in Bacon's Abridgment or Baron Comyns' Digest of later date. By all these writers the legal classification is recognized as that stated by Mr. Justice Blackstone (Comm. 469, 471), who, after vaunting the English refinement and improvement of the Roman collegia and universitates, "according to the universal English genius," marshals corporations under the following classification: (1) Aggregate and sole; (2) ecclesiastical and lay; (3) civil and eleemosynary. In view of the recognition of the corporation sole in several American cases it is worthy of note that Blackstone's immediate successor at Oxford had rejected this archaic anomaly (1 Woodes System 471, 2), and it has received scant tolerance from any American author. Our tendency is strongly toward the old Roman maxim, "Tres facit collegium." See CORPORATIONS, 10 Cyc. 148; Thompson

Corp. 9; Taylor Corp. 13; 2 Kent Comm. 273. Nor has the ecclesiastical corporation any better standing in the United States. The importance of this division of corporations into public and private became apparent during the pendency of the great Dartmouth college case, the decision of which was made to turn on the character of the corporation. The supreme court of New Hampshire held that the college was a public corporation, and therefore the act of the assembly amending the charter was not contrary to the contract clause of the federal constitution. Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 1 N. H. 111. The United States supreme court declared the corporation private and the charter a contract and reversed the judgment. Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. ed. 629. Since this date (1819) the primary and chief classification of corporations in the United States has been public and private.

78. Dr. Adam Smith's view that private corporations should be created only for the public welfare found response not only in England, but also in the constitutional convention of New York (1821) by which a two-thirds majority was required for any bill creating a corporation; and also in court decisions, that there was implied in every charter of incorporation a consideration of service or benefit to the state. Mills v. Williams, 33 N. C. 558; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 518, 4 L. ed. 629.

rations;⁷⁹ all those organized for the pleasure, comfort, improvement, or convenience of the members, such as social or athletic clubs, societies, libraries, fraternities, and the like;⁸⁰ also all those erected for charitable, religious, or educational uses, provided the foundation be private as was illustrated in the celebrated Dartmouth College case.⁸¹ None of these classes can embrace municipal corporations, whose fundamental objects are the public welfare and municipal government,⁸² while its quasi-private rights and obligations are purely municipal.⁸³ The fact that a corporation otherwise public is made subject to a statute which for the most part is applicable to private corporations does not make it a private corporation.⁸⁴

(III) PUBLIC CORPORATIONS—(A) In General. Public corporations are all those created specially for public purposes as instruments or agencies to increase the efficiency of government, supply public wants, and promote the public welfare.⁸⁵ This class includes not only municipal corporations but also all other incorporated agencies of government of whatever size and form or degree of organization.⁸⁶

(B) Quasi-Corporations—(1) IN GENERAL. There are also many public bodies which are not corporations in the full sense but resemble them in that they have some of the attributes of a corporation, and which are therefore called quasi-corporations.⁸⁷ Some of these, like the New England towns, are almost perfect in "Public corporations are those which are founded with public means, and for public purposes. Their criterion is, that no individual has any interest in their foundation, except as a member of the general body politic. To this class belong all municipal corporations, beginning with the United States, and descending down through States, Counties, Townships, school districts, and the like.

These are for the most part denominated quasi corporations, since, with the exception of cities and boroughs, they require no special act of incorporation. They possess scarcely any other corporate properties than those of holding property, and being parties to suits." Walker Am. L. [quoted in Root v. Erdelmyer, Wils. (Ind.) 99, 106].

(2) DISTINGUISHING FEATURES. These public quasi-corporations, notwithstanding the variety of their functions and modes of organization and operation, possess in common certain attributes and characteristics, and are lacking in others which distinguish them from the municipal corporation. (1) They are created solely as governmental agencies for the purpose of administering the general laws of the state.¹⁴ (2) They are involuntary organizations "superimposed by the sovereign and paramount authority" of the state of its own supreme will and discretion, without consideration of the wishes of the community.¹⁵ (3) They are not chartered corporations.¹⁶ (4) They do not have the incidental powers or inherent attributes of a corporation, but only such as are expressly granted or necessarily implied from the express powers.¹⁷ The use of the municipal corporation as a convenient and effective instrument for the local administration of public governmental affairs, although now common in the United States, is only a secondary and inferior object of its creation and existence, which primarily was and is local self-government, subordinate to the state.¹⁸

20. Mode of obtaining royal charters, and their effect.—This was for centuries the only method of creating a municipal corporation in England. A populous community desiring definite rights and self-government, through its chief men would offer to pay the crown a fixed annual revenue to be exempt from royal levies of uncertain and arbitrary amount. The sum being adjusted, the king, of his royal prerogative, would grant the charter to said chief men and (nominally also) to the commonalty of the borough or city, conferring upon them and their successors in perpetuo certain jura regalia and other rights, franchises, powers, and privileges, such as exemption from royal levies, power to enact by-laws for their local government and to collect from the inhabitants taxes sufficient to pay the crown the municipal quota and to bear the expenses of self-government. Their charters were not uniform but were adapted to meet the traditions and customs of the several communities. By changes conformed to the demands of the most powerful class they were later granted to the prosperous merchant guilds of the commercial towns, and still later to the more numerous and powerful craft guilds. Green Short Hist. English People, § 6, p. 93, c. 4, § 4, pp. 193, 201. Finally by royal tyranny of the Stuarts and commercial complaisance of the burghers and citizens, the old charters were forfeited or surrendered and new charters given to royal favorites whereby to insure support to the crown in its struggle for absolute power. Stephen English Const. c. 7, p. 455. The act of parliament after the Revolution, restoring the former charters to the cities and boroughs, did not impair the royal prerogative, which to this day remains as the ancient source of municipal charters. Rutter v. Chapman, 8 M. & W. 1-117.

21. The theory of royal assent to the constitution of municipal corporations is fully recognized in their creation by act of parliament, which is composed of the king, lords, and commons, and thus represents the supreme sovereignty of the realm. 1 Blackstone Comm. 147.

22. See infra, II, A, 13. This was the sole method of constituting a municipal corporation for the first seventy years of the republic; and many cities and towns still retain their charters in the form of special legislative acts with the frequent amendments required by the ever-increasing complications of modern urban life. Those special acts of legislation are called charters, not because they conform to the documents of that name granted by the British crown, but because they operate to effect the same result, viz., the creation of a municipal corporation with all its common-law incidents. Ingersoll Pub. Corp. 171.

23. See infra, II, A, 14. Many of the United States, by their constitutions, now confine their legislatures to this mode of creating municipal corporations. Some are using both special and general legislation for the purpose. A few still pursue only the early mode of special acts. Ingersoll Pub. Corp. 129, 137, 187. See infra, I, A, 6, 13, 14.

the sovereign. He who has no sovereign power can confer none.³⁰ The functions performed by courts and commissioners in the incorporation of cities, towns, boroughs, and villages are purely ministerial. They act only as instruments of the sovereign.³¹ The basis of all this action is, in England, the royal prerogative or the omnipotence of parliament;³² in America the sovereign power of legislation.³³ No court, commission, governor, or other officer of the state in America may endow a community with municipal functions, except when and as empowered by law.³⁴ Then it is not the ministerial acts of the officer or court, but the sovereign will expressed in a solemn act of legislation that speaks the municipal microcosm into being and gives it life and power.³⁵

2. WHAT BODIES POSSESS THE POWER—a. In England. From the Norman Conquest down to the Revolution (1688) the English kings were wont to allow this "flower of the prerogative,"³⁶ to be exercised by certain great lords of the realm, both temporal and spiritual, by chartering boroughs and cities in their respective counties palatine, some of which charters existed till the period of reform, in 1835.³⁷ And it is recorded that even the pope once claimed and exercised this sovereign power.³⁸ But since the Reformation the power has been recognized as existing only in the crown and parliament, which alone can now speak municipal corporations into being.³⁹ The king holds this power to grant a charter of incorporation of a city or borough as a common-law prerogative of the crown,⁴⁰ which was not materially increased or diminished by the famous act of parliament for the reform of municipal corporations.⁴¹ But by a later act⁴² the crown was empowered by royal charter to extend to any corporation created thereby in addition to the common-law municipal powers, the powers given to existing corporations by the Municipal Corporations Reform Act aforesaid.⁴³

The apparently contrary view expressed in State v. Weir, 33 Iowa 134, 11 Am. Rep. 115, and in *People v. 37. The English counties palatine were Durham, Chester, and Lancaster. Sometimes the great lords claimed the right to exercise this function without royal authority; and it was permitted in periods of uncertain and insecure sovereignty. Four charters were granted by bishops of Durham to their see city in the twelfth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries, under the last of which it was governed until the Municipal Corporations Reform Act of 1835. *Encycl. And this power was confirmed by the Municipal Corporations Act of 1882,⁴⁴ which is now the municipal code of the kingdom regulating the creation and constitution of municipalities.⁴⁵ It results that the crown now has the option of creating by royal charter a municipal corporation having only common-law powers; or, on petition of the inhabitants and advice of the privy council, one having not only these but also the powers conferred on municipal corporations by the acts of parliament.⁴⁶ The royal charter requires the assent of the inhabitant householders to give it effect and validity;⁴⁷ while it is within the supreme power of parliament to create and constitute a municipal corporation with the consent or even against the wish of the inhabitants, and confer or withhold such franchises as to it seems fit.⁴⁸

b. In the United States — (i) IN GENERAL. In the United States there exists no method of incorporation analogous to the royal charter. Here only a sovereign act of legislation can constitute a municipality.⁴⁹ Such act may be special or general.⁵⁰ It may be enacted by (1) a state legislature,⁵¹ (2) the federal congress,⁵² or (3) a territorial legislature thereunto empowered by congress.⁵³

(ii) STATE LEGISLATURES. Most American municipalities have been incorporated by state legislation. All sovereign powers in domestic affairs not ceded to the federal government are reserved to the states and the people thereof.⁵⁴ A state legislature may perform any function of local legislation which is not forbidden by state or federal constitution,⁵⁵ and the creation of a municipal corporation is obviously an act of local legislation and within its power.⁵⁶ Nobody

except the legislature of a state has authority to incorporate a municipality within its borders.⁵⁷

(III) CONGRESS. The federal congress is invested with "power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States,"⁵⁸ and to exercise exclusive legislation over such district as may become the seat of government of the United States.⁵⁹ Under this authority congress has erected the District of Columbia into a municipal corporation, and has organized territories and chartered cities and towns within their boundaries.⁶⁰ Its authority to incorporate municipalities in any territory of the United States is obviously beyond question.⁶¹ It has plenary power to govern the territories in any mode not forbidden by the federal constitution.⁶² It might govern any territory exclusively by congressional legislation.⁶³

(IV) TERRITORIAL LEGISLATURES. In most of the territories, however, a local government has been constituted, and empowered with certain legislative functions.⁶⁴ The measure of these powers is the organic act constituting the government of the territory.⁶⁵ It may or may not confer the power to erect municipal corporations according to its terms. Power over all rightful subjects of legislation has been construed to confer upon territorial legislatures authority to incorporate municipalities,⁶⁶ while power to pass general laws enabling persons in the legislature and implies the power to create it with such limitations as that body may see fit to impose, and to impose such limitations at any stage of its existence. *Redell v. Congress has rarely exercised its undoubted power to charter municipalities in other territories than Alaska, for the same reason perhaps that restrains parliament from exercising its paramount power to charter municipal corporations, namely, such power is a "flower of the (territorial) prerogative."

Ct. 891, 38 L. ed. 808.

62. This is a corollary of the express grant of power "to make all laws . . . necessary and proper for carrying into execution . . . powers vested . . . in the government of the United States." U. S. Const. art. 1, § 8, cl. 18.

This is within the express grant of power to make all needful rules and regulations respecting any territory of the United States, and is the method of governing the territory of Alaska which has no territorial legislature but is governed by codes enacted by congress in 1899 and 1900. U. S. Const. art. 4, § 3, cl. 2.

64. The only exception to this rule on the continent of North America is to be found in the territory of Alaska. In Massachusetts under Const. Amendm. art. 2, authorizing the general court to erect and constitute city governments in towns of to associate themselves together as bodies corporate for mining, manufacturing, and other industrial pursuits does not authorize the creation of municipal corporations.⁶⁷ This delegation of the sovereign power is a peculiar feature of the American territory, which has been sustained as constitutional on repeated challenge.⁶⁸ As to municipal charters it finds precedent in the regal power of incorporation exercised by certain great nobles during the periods of royal dependence; ⁶⁹ but this incorporating power of the territory is not inherent; and, like any other delegated legislative function, it may be withdrawn by congress at pleasure.⁷⁰

3. DELEGATION OF POWER. A legislature cannot delegate the power of legislation to the judicial or executive departments, but it may delegate the power to determine some fact or state of things upon which it makes or intends to make its own action depend.⁷¹ It follows that the power to create municipal corporations cannot be delegated to the courts or other bodies; ⁷² but the legislature may and frequently does confer upon the courts or upon some officer or board the power and duty to perform judicial or ministerial acts in the formation of municipal corporations, or to determine the existence of conditions prescribed by the statute as a prerequisite to the corporation.⁷³ The legislature cannot constitutionally leave it to the vote of the people whether an act for the incorporation of twelve thousand inhabitants, or over, and to grant to the inhabitants thereof such powers, privileges, and immunities as the general court shall deem necessary and expedient for the government thereof, it is the duty of the general court to act on each application, and grant or withhold a charter according to its judgment, and, if it grant one, to grant such powers and privileges as may be expedient and necessary in that particular case; and it has no power to pass an act authorizing the inhabitants of towns containing the required population to become cities, according to articles prescribed in the act, at the will of a majority of the inhabitants voting at a meeting held for the purpose. *Larcom v. The mistaken inference has followed that the legislature could delegate and had delegated this power of incorporation to the courts; whereas the effect of the legislation has been merely to confer upon the courts the ministerial functions necessary to organize municipal corporations and set them in motion. The matter of difficulty and of difference in the cases upon this subject is not the delegability of legislative power, on which there is general consensus of opinion; but rather the determination of what is and what is not a legislative function. See People v. Fleming, 10 Colo. 553, 557, 16 Pac. 298; People v. Bennett, 29 Mich. 451, 18 Am. Rep. 107; Kayser v. Bremen, 16 Mo. 88; and other cases above cited.

municipalities shall take effect and become a law; ⁷⁴ but in most states it is not an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power to pass a law for the incorporation of municipalities and leave it to the vote or other action of the people whether they will organize and become incorporated thereunder. ⁷⁵

4. MUNICIPAL ASSENT TO INCORPORATION. The arbitrary erection of a municipality in any community regardless of the will of the inhabitants, although within the competency of the sovereign legislative power in the absence of constitutional restriction, ⁷⁶ is utterly antagonistic to the Anglo-Saxon spirit and foreign to the genius of American institutions. ⁷⁷ It would operate to deprive the people of that home rule which is a peculiar characteristic of the American system of self-government, and commonly regarded as a bulwark of civil liberty. ⁷⁸ It would assimilate our municipalities to cities and communes of centralized governments and make them the abject instruments of imperial authority. ⁷⁹ A corporation thus arbitrarily created and operated by external power or sovereign deputies, although it might have the legal body or form of a municipal corporation, would be lacking in its essence and spirit. ⁸⁰ It would not be the Roman municipium, nor the Anglo-Saxon municipality exercising the power of self-government in all matters peculiarly local and municipal, ⁸¹ but rather a public quasi-corporation constituted to enforce the imperial will or centralized authority of the state. ⁸²

79. The houses of Bourbon, Hapsburg, and Romanoff well nigh accomplished on the continent of Europe what the Stuarts temporarily effected in England; and scarce the semblance of municipal freedom was to be found in their domains at the beginning of the nineteenth century. The story in them all is that told of France by Guizot in his History of Civilization, Lecture XIX. The cities of Europe for four centuries were generally ruled, not by the citizens and burghers, but by imperial and royal governors called mayors by courtesy only. See also Hallam Middle Ages, c. 11, pt. 2.

80. Montesquieu Spirit of Laws, bk. 2, c. 2.

81. The Roman municipium was "a community of which the citizens are members of the whole nation, all possessing the same rights and subject to the same burdens, but retaining the administration of law and government in all local matters which concern not the state at large." Liddell Rome, c. 27, § 8.

82. For an example of such a corporation see Perkins v. Slack, 86 Pa. St. 270, wherein is recounted the erection by the state of Pennsylvania for the city of Philadelphia of its magnificent city hall by forced levies on the protesting citizens.

83. Regal rights. In England especially those royal powers delegated to the Earl of Chester, the Bishop of Durham, and the Duke of Lancaster to be exercised by them powers, or privileges of sovereign nature, to grant which was the peculiar office of a charter;⁸⁴ nor any of the common-law incidents of a corporation inhering in it as a body politic and corporate.⁸⁵ But no municipal corporation is created without a charter, whatever may be its form or source, which endows it with some measure of sovereign power, especially of taxation, legislation, and eminent domain;⁸⁶ and in it inheres those incidental qualities of a corporation mentioned by Coke, Blackstone, and Kent, such as corporate name for purchase and alienation, suing and being sued, perpetual succession, having a common seal, and making by-laws.⁸⁷

6. CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS. The inherent and inalienable power of the legislative department to create corporations⁸⁸ is limited in many of the United States by provisions in their respective constitutions.⁸⁹ Some of these limitations, in general terms, include all corporations, public and private;⁹⁰ some specially respectively in those several counties, which were therefore given the German name "Counties Palatine," so-called a palatio. 1 Blackstone Comm. 117. In the United States the term is by analogy peculiarly applicable to such sovereign rights or powers as may be delegated by the state or federal union to the municipal corporation.

84. By immemorial usage, antedating magna charta, the word "charter" has been made the sacred vehicle for transferring from the sovereign to the subject or citizen the dearest human rights, franchises, and immunities, and especially those delegated to boroughs, cities, and colonies. 1 Blackstone Comm. 108; 8 Coke 1a, 5b; Encycl. Brit. tit. "Charter"; 1 Story Com. Const. 145.

89. The power to create corporations, although expressly conferred and enjoined in a few American state constitutions, is a sovereign function of the legislative department of government to be exercised freely according to its discretion, except only as restricted or directed by the constitution.

Nev. Act, Feb. 25, 1875 (St. (1875) p. 87), to incorporate Carson city, is not repugnant to Const. art. 8, § 8, requiring the legislature to restrict a city's power of loaning its credit, although the act makes no provision for such a restriction, since it grants to the city no such power. State v. Swift, 11 Nev. 128.

N. J. Act, March 12, 1890 (Pub. Laws, p. 58), authorizing the holding of an election for the acceptance of a scheme of municipal government by the electors of an area of given size and value, upon which resides for any period of the year a population of two hundred, is unconstitutional, since the temporary presence of two hundred persons, not required to be possessed of any element of citizenship or residence, is a purely figmentary characteristic and can in no way be germane to the exercise of local municipal franchises by the inhabitants who are possessed of the constitutional and legislative requirements of electors. Atty.-Gen. v. Anglesea, 58 N. J. L. 372, 33 Atl. 971.

The recognition in the New York constitution of the established division of the state into counties, cities, and towns does not take from the legislature the power of establishing additional civil divisions for general and permanent objects of government, not inconsistent with the usefulness of existing divisions for the purposes contemplated by the constitution. People v. Draper, 15 N. Y. 532.

Constitutional provision for apportionment of senators and representatives.—The power of the legislature to organize counties, towns, and cities is not limited or restricted by the constitutional provisions concerning the apportionment of senators and representatives once in every five years. *Slauson v. rations in Tennessee.¹⁶ In this state therefore, as well as in those states where there are no constitutional limitations, the legislature still exercises the power to create municipalities by special act;¹⁷ thereby giving to each corporation its own peculiar powers, privileges, and franchises, and presenting a confusing panorama of varied features of municipal law.¹⁸ In the rest of the foregoing states the prohibition is applied to all corporations and in them the creation of municipalities is effected under general legislation only.¹⁹ In some states there are special provisions giving authority to charter cities in towns of sufficient population.²⁰ In others the right of local self-government is fully recognized and established by express constitutional authority to cities of certain population to frame and adopt their own charters, in like manner as the people of a state in the exercise of inherent sovereignty frame their own constitution.²¹ In some states constitutional pro-

16. See supra, this section, note 92.

17. Beside the states named supra, note 91, those exercising this power are Connecticut, Delaware, Georgia, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Tennessee, Texas, and Vermont.

Under the former Missouri constitution (art. 8, § 4), prohibiting the creation of corporations by special acts except "for municipal purposes," it was held that this contemplated that no corporation independent of a city government should perform any of the functions thereof; and that a corporation "for municipal purposes," which the constitution permitted to be created by a special act, was either a municipality, such as a city or town, created expressly for local self-government with delegated legislative powers, or a subdivision of the state for governmental purposes, such as a county, a school-district, or road district, etc.; but that it must embrace some of the functions of government, local or general. State v. Leffingwell, 54 Mo. 458.

18. This lack of uniformity in municipalities of the same class and grade in the same state has caused all recent state constitutional conventions to forbid special legislation for the creation of municipal corporations. See supra, notes 94-14.

19. See supra, note 90 et seq.

20. Massachusetts.—"The general court [assembly] shall have full power and authority to erect and constitute municipal or city governments, in any corporate town or towns in this commonwealth . . . provided, that no such government shall be erected or constituted in any town not containing twelve thousand inhabitants, nor unless it be with the consent, and on the application of a majority of the inhabitants of such town, present and voting thereon, pursuant to a vote at a meeting duly warned and holden for that purpose." Const. Amendm. art. 2.

Pennsylvania.—"Cities may be chartered, whenever a majority of the electors of any town or borough, having a population of at least ten thousand, shall vote, at any general election, in favor of the same." Const. (1874) art. 15, § 1.

Rhode Island.—"Hereafter the general assembly may provide by general law for the creation and control of corporations," etc. Const. art. 4, § 17.

Texas.—"Cities and towns having a population of ten thousand inhabitants or less, may be chartered alone by general law." Const. (1876) art. 11, § 4. "Cities having more than ten thousand inhabitants may have their charters granted or amended by special act of the legislature," etc. Const. (1876) art. 11, § 5.

West Virginia.—"The Legislature shall not pass local or special laws . . . incorporating cities, towns or villages, or amending the charter of any city, town or village, containing a population of less than two thousand." Const. (1872) art. 6, § 39.

Wisconsin.—See State v. Lammers, 113 Wis. 398, 86 N. W. 677, 89 N. W. 501.

21. In California "any city containing a population of more than three thousand five hundred inhabitants may frame a charter for its own government, consistent with and subject to the Constitution and laws of this State," etc. Cal. Const. art. 11, § 8 (Am. ed. 1902). In Missouri there is the same provision for a "city having a population of more than one hundred thousand inhabitants." Mo. Const. art. 9, § 16. See Kansas City v. Marsh Oil Co., 140 Mo. 458, 41 S. W. 943. And in Washington there is the same provision for a "city containing a population of twenty thousand inhabitants or more." Wash. Const. art. 11, § 10. In Minnesota "any city or village in this state may frame a charter for its own government as a city consistent with and subject to the laws of this state." Minn. Const. Amendm. (1897) art. 4, § 36. See State v. St. Louis County Dist. Ct., 90 Minn. 457, 97 N. W. 132. Minn. Const. art. 4, § 36, authorizing a city to frame a charter for its own government, to be submitted "at the next election thereafter," authorized such submission at either a general or special election. State v. Kiewel, 86 Minn. 136, 90 N. W. 160.

Extent of power under such provision.—The power and authority conferred by the constitution upon cities to frame their own charters extends to and embraces any subject appropriate to the orderly conduct of municipal affairs. State v. St. Louis County Dist. Ct., 90 Minn. 457, 97 N. W. 132; State v. O'Connor, 81 Minn. 79, 83 N. W. 498. Within this rule the matter of the presentation of claims against the city, the auditing and al-visions are to the effect: (1) That the legislature shall not pass a special or local bill incorporating villages;²² that no special act shall be passed "to create corporations for municipal purposes";²³ and (3) requiring notice of application for special legislation.²⁴ In most states the legislature has the same power to increase or diminish the powers of or dissolve corporations as it has to create new ones and define their powers.²⁵ In some states there is a provision for a uniform system of county, town, and municipal government.²⁶ The powers of congress in this particular are unlimited by the constitution, and it may charter municipalities in the territories either by general or special act.²⁷ Acts partially repugnant to these constitutional provisions have in some cases been held void in toto,²⁸ and in some cases valid except as to those parts in conflict with the constitution.²⁹ Some constitutional provisions in relation to the incorporation of municipalities are self-executing, while others are not.³⁰

7. CLASSES AND GRADES OF CORPORATIONS. The classification of corporations is not general and uniform, but a matter peculiar to each state and sovereignty. It is usually based upon population, and the various classes are called cities, towns, boroughs, villages, and hamlets.³¹ City is the name in common use in all states to describe a municipality of the higher grade and greater population.³² Town is used in New England to define the political unit which is almost a municipality;

lowing of the same, and the manner and proceedings for reviewing the action of the auditing body, are appropriate subjects for charter supervision and regulation. State v. St. Louis County Dist. Ct., supra. So also is the condemnation of land for public use. State v. Ramsey County Dist. Ct., 87 Minn. 146, 91 N. W. 300. See also Kansas City v. Marsh Oil Co., 140 Mo. 458, 41 S. W. 943.

Effect of charter as superseding general statutes.—The special charter and amendments framed and adopted by a city under such a constitutional provision supersede the general statutes, where the two conflict as to a mere municipal regulation; and condemnation proceedings to acquire lands for streets, parks, waterworks, sewers, etc., are mere matters of municipal regulation within this rule. Kansas City v. Marsh Oil Co., 140 Mo. 458, 41 S. W. 943.

Cal. Const. art. 11, § 8, providing for the framing of charters by cities of more than one hundred thousand inhabitants, is self-executing and requires no legislation to give it effect. People v. Hoge, 55 Cal. 612.

Wash. Const. art. 11, § 10, authorizing a city of more than twenty thousand inhabitants to frame a charter, is not self-executing, so as to invalidate an act prescribing the manner of exercising such power. Reeves v. Anderson, 13 Wash. 17, 42 Pac. 625.

Wyo. Const. art. 13, § 2, declaring that "no municipal corporation shall be organized without the consent of the majority of the electors residing within the district proposed to be so incorporated, such consent to be ascertained in the manner and under such regulations as may be prescribed by law," is not self-executing, and did not, without legislation to carry it into effect, by implication repeal the then existing law authorizing the incorporation of towns on the application of thirty electors. State v. Lamoureux, 3 Wyo. 731, 30 Pac. 243.

but in other portions of the United States it describes a county-seat or other populous community, usually incorporated and next to a city in grade and importance.³³ Boroughs exist in New Jersey and Connecticut and are numerous in Pennsylvania.³⁴ This word, used in England to designate an ancient town, corporate or not, that sent burgesses to parliament,³⁵ is employed in a few American states to describe a part of a town or township having a municipal charter.³⁶ "Village" is the common term used to describe the lowest grade of corporations in Illinois,³⁷ Kansas,³⁸ Michigan,³⁹ Nebraska,⁴⁰ New York,⁴¹ Vermont,⁴² and some other states.⁴³ In Ohio a hamlet may be incorporated as part of a township, the very least of municipalities.⁴⁴ In many states cities are by constitution or general law classified according to population into cities of the first, second, third, and even fourth class,⁴⁵ and certain additional powers and franchises are conferred upon each higher class or grade not granted to those in the lower class, for example,

As including borough.—The word "town" as used in N. J. Pub. Laws (1895), p. 551, § 1, providing that the inhabitants of any district lying wholly in one county and having a certain population may become incorporated as a city, but that such district shall not include any territory already within the limits of any "incorporated city or town," means any municipal corporation above the grade of township, and below that of city, and therefore includes an incorporated borough. Stout v. Glen Ridge, 59 N. J. L. 201, 35 Atl. 913.

As including village.—Under Ida. Const. art. 12, § 1, providing that the legislature shall by general law provide for the organization of cities and towns, and the act of Feb. 2, 1899, § 1, providing for the issue and sale of municipal bonds by cities or towns, a village organized under the general laws is included within the word "town." Brown v. Grangeville, 8 Ida. 784, 71 Pac. 151. Where, on the organization of a village, the statute in regard to the organization of villages was followed, it was held that the fact that in some of the proceedings it was designated as a town, and that the name adopted was "The Town of —," did not invalidate the organization. People v. Pike, 197 Ill. 449, 64 N. E. 393.

As including city.—The word "town" is often used to embrace cities as well as villages, and when the expression "incorporated town" is used in an act it may include cities, unless the contrary appears from the whole statute to have been the intent of the legislature. Smithville v. Lee County Dispensary Com'rs, 125 Ga. 559, 54 S. E. 539.

Effect of classification as creating corporation.—The Kentucky act of Sept. 30, 1892 (St. § 2744), classifying cities and towns, did not create towns, but applied only to those already established; and the fact that it classified as a town territory which was not incorporated as such, but was a civil district only, did not constitute such territory a town. Stephens v. Felton, 99 Ky. 395, 35 S. W. 1116, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 248.

Constitutionality of statute.—The Pennsylvania act of May 23, 1874, dividing cities into classes, etc., with a clause making it optional with the cities whether or not they would become subject to its provisions, was held unconstitutional as in violation of Const. art. 3, § 7, prohibiting specified local legislation. In re Sixteenth St. Opening, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. 124.

Estoppel of city to assert unconstitutionality.—The adoption of said act by a city council will not estop the city from asserting its unconstitutionality on exceptions to the reports of viewers assessing damages to a landowner for land taken by the opening of a street in the city. In re Sixteenth St. Opening, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. 124.

Power of courts.—Under Ky. Const. § 156, providing that the general assembly shall assign the cities and towns of the state to the classes to which they belong and change assignments as the population varies, but that no city or town shall be transferred from one class to another, except in pursuance of a law previously enacted and providing therefor, where the general assembly has assigned a city to a certain class, it cannot be taken out of such class by a court because it has not the requisite population to entitle it to be so classified. Green v. Com., 95 Ky. 233, 24 S. W. 610, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 161.

Statutes violating constitutional provision as to classification.—Mo. Act, April 1, 1893, empowering every city organized under Const. art. 9, § 16, to establish a system of parks and boulevards, providing the methods for condemning land therefor, and declaring that the act shall take effect, "any provisions in the charter of any such city to the contrary notwithstanding," is in violation of Const. art. 9, § 7, providing that the general assembly shall provide for the classification of cities and towns, but that the number of such classes shall not exceed four, and that the power of each class shall be defined by general laws, so that all municipal corporations of the same class shall possess the same powers and be subject to the same provisions, it appearing that the assembly had previously created four classes, since the effect of such statute is to create another class. Kansas City v. Scarritt, 127 Mo. 642, 29 S. W. 845, 30 S. W. 111. The said section 7 of the constitution, however, does not prevent the application of general laws to cities having special charters; and therefore it was held that such provision was not violated by the act of March 28, 1881, authorizing a sewerage system in cities of a certain size and acting under special charter. *Rutherford v. number of inhabitants;⁵⁴ and it may also prescribe the area of the territory.⁵⁵ While the legislature may provide by general law for the incorporation of any community or territory, however insignificant, the body seeking incorporation must show itself to be substantially within the terms of the legislative requirement.⁵⁶ Thus, where provision is made for the incorporation of a village or town on petition of a majority of the taxable inhabitants, such privilege cannot be obtained by the people of a rural district without compact center or nucleus of population or plotted lands, for they do not constitute a village or town in the ordinary sense of the term.⁵⁷ But where the borough system prevails, two contiguous villages which practically adjoin each other and are connected by a common system of streets may be joined into a single incorporated borough;⁵⁸ as may also a town needing drainage, lights, streets, and police protection, which cannot be procured through township government.⁵⁹ The question of necessity or expediency of incorporating a village and adjacent territory into a borough in Pennsylvania does not depend so much upon the will of a majority of the freeholders residing outside the limits of the proposed borough, or upon the unanimous consent of those residing within the proposed lines, as it does upon the lets, was passed for the purpose of allowing part of a township to become incorporated because its needs are different from adjacent territory; and, while it cannot be said to be fraudulent, it is against public policy to defeat the purpose of the statute by allowing a whole township to become a hamlet for the sole purpose of keeping the smaller territory from forming itself into a hamlet, especially where it desires to retain the smaller part because of the revenue arising from taxes. *State v. Incorporation of town or village into borough.—Under Pa. Act (1834), § 1 (Pub. Laws 163), conferring power upon the court of quarter sessions with the concurrence of the grand jury to incorporate "any town or village within their jurisdiction," the locality sought to be incorporated into a borough must possess the character of a town or village, but if a proposed borough contains a small assemblage of houses, collocated on the plan of streets and lanes, it is a village, within the meaning of the statute. In re Edgewood Borough, 130 Pa. fact that the advantages to the whole people as a community will overbalance the disadvantages.⁶⁰

9. TWOFOLD INCORPORATION. The axiom of physics that two bodies cannot occupy the same space at the same time finds general application in the law of municipal corporations and prevents the inclusion of the same territory within the boundaries of two distinct corporations.⁶¹ Confusion, repugnancy, and strife would certainly result from the attempted exercise of the same sovereign functions over the same territory and people by separate authorities.⁶² But this rule does not prevent the state from establishing and maintaining both county and municipal government over the same territory by separate governmental officers and agencies, and in a number of states this has been done.⁶³ So too a municipal

It has been held therefore that the fact that the people within the proposed lines of the borough are peaceable and law-abiding citizens, and do not require such incorporation for their benefit or protection, is no ground for its denial (In re Millville Borough, supra); and that the fact that creating such territory into a borough may not be immediately advantageous to a few property-owners is insufficient ground for denying incorporation, where the advantages as to the entire community will greatly exceed the disadvantages (In re Prospect Park Borough, supra). But where two thirds of the land proposed to be incorporated in a borough was evidently included only for purposes of taxation, and the greater part of the balance was irregular and rough and difficult of municipal improvement, and the town itself was small, consisting of houses along one street only, it was held that an application for incorporation of the proposed borough should be refused. In re Wall Borough, 30 Pittsb. Leg. J. N. S. (Pa.) 308. It is no objection to the incorporation of a borough that it will necessitate a rearrangement of school-districts and polling places, and that the financial burdens of the rest of the township may be slightly increased. In re Smithville Borough, 23 Pa. Co. Ct. 583. In determining whether a borough should be incorporated the court will consider the subject broadly, having in view the highest interests of all concerned, and not only the present situation, but the needs and growth of the locality for the future. In re Smithville Borough, supra.

Under Pa. Act, May 8, 1855, and Act, May 20, 1857, providing for the creation of independent school-districts, and forbidding the carving out of the wealthier from the poorer portions of the townships, to the prejudice of the rights and interests of the latter, it was held that a petition could not be maintained to incorporate certain territory into a borough, on the ground that it would enable the inhabitants to run better schools both inside and outside the proposed borough, where it would prejudice the rights and interests of the remaining portion of the district. In re Lehman Borough, 4 Pa. CORPORATE NAME.⁶⁵ Every corporation must have a name by which it is known and identified.⁶⁶ The name is usually conferred by charter and is as unchangeable as the name of a man given at baptism.⁶⁷ If the name is not expressly given in the charter it may appear by implication therefrom.⁶⁸ Lacking both these sources the name may be conferred by usage.⁶⁹ The name may be changed by a new charter,⁷⁰ or by statute.⁷¹ If, as sometimes happens, an existing corporation is empowered by statute to perform a particular act by a name other than its proper name, it must act in the special name or suffer the penalty name and in fact, by the name of the City and County of San Francisco," such corporation, in matters of government, must be regarded as a city. Kahn v. Sutro, 114 Cal. 316, 46 Pac. 87, 33 L. R. A. 620.

The city of St. Louis was prior to the constitution of 1875 clothed with powers of both municipal and county government, but as constituted by the scheme of separation it is now a city proper, and not a county; and the provisions of law which were in force before its adoption, requiring the election of a county collector and county marshal for the county of St. Louis, are not applicable to the city. *State v. Where the municipality of C was organized as a town under a general law providing that a town so organized should be known by the name of "The inhabitants of the town of —," and a later act changed all towns of less than two thousand inhabitants into cities of the third class, and provided that the corporate name of such cities should be "The City of —," it was held that this did not change the name of such cities to "The City of the Inhabitants of the Town of —." West v. Columbus, supra.

In Pennsylvania the court of quarter sessions will not approve of a change of the name of a borough under the act of April 1, 1834, section 4, where it will be misleading and confusing. In re East Stroudsburg Borough, 9 Pa. of loss or misnomer.⁷² A corporation which derives its name from usage may have more than one name derived from that source,⁷³ and, being equally well known by each name, it may sue or be sued, receive, purchase, alien, or contract by any one of them.⁷⁴ And this, it seems, may be done when by usage and conduct it has acquired and employed a name different from that given it by charter.⁷⁵ A corporation may have one name by prescription and another name by grant.⁷⁶

11. EFFECT OF INCORPORATION. Incorporation is the term used to describe the result of the entire course of legal proceeding whereby a municipality is brought into existence de jure and de facto.⁷⁷ Both legislation and organization are essential to this end.⁷⁸ The former may theoretically create a corporation by special charter, but until action by the inhabitants is taken thereunder, the corporation is but a legal potentiality.⁷⁹ And so under a general law all the material steps prescribed for incorporation must be taken before the municipality becomes a body corporate and politic.⁸⁰ Pending the process of incorporation the political status quo remains in full force and virtue, and acts of local officers and boards affecting the territory of the proposed municipality are valid and binding.⁸¹ When, however, the organization is completed, the corporation is endowed instantly with all the powers, privileges, and franchises conferred by the charter, former powers are superseded, and former officials supplanted by those of the new corporation.⁸² It succeeds without judicial decree or investiture to the property held in public trust for the community; and it assumes immediate possession and control of the public utilities and improvements theretofore made and (held by the state or county within the corporate limits.⁸³ So also corporate obligations of a predecessor in the same territory are generally cast upon it.⁸⁴)

12. WHAT TERRITORY MAY BE INCLUDED— a. In General. It is within the scope of legislative power, unless forbidden by the constitution, to incorporate by special act any inhabited district within its sovereign jurisdiction, be it large or small.⁸⁵ And where forbidden to incorporate by special acts, the legislature may by general law declare what area and what population shall be requisite for any class of municipality;⁸⁶ and any community wishing to be incorporated under these laws must possess these essential statutory requisites.⁸⁷ Lacking any of these essentials, the process of incorporation will be vain and the charter void; and the community will remain as before, in the eyes of the law, unincorporated.⁸⁸ Thus, where the law requires a population of three hundred in a proposed village corporation of one square mile and provides that the territory in excess of one square mile shall contain three hundred persons for each additional square mile, a proceeding showing only four hundred and twenty-seven persons in a total of one and one-fourth square miles is void on its face.⁸⁹ Likewise separate bodies not contiguous may not be included in a single corporation under general law.⁹⁰ Nor may a large rural district be incorporated under the statute authorizing the incorporation, as a village, of platted lands and those adjacent thereto.⁹¹ Nor will the bisection of a village by a railroad authorize the separate incorporation of either side.⁹² But the inclusion of certain unplatted adjacent lands will not render the incorporation of the platted portion void.⁹³ And it seems that unplatted lands may properly be included in a municipality when they are closely suburban and identified in interest with the urban property; but not where they are a wilderness.⁹⁵ General laws providing for the formation of municipalities sometimes expressly exclude from their operation territory included within the limits of any incorporated town, village, or city.⁹⁶

b. Farming Lands. The rules of law in respect to farming lands included within municipal boundaries are not uniform but depend upon the peculiar policy of the state as manifested in its constitution and statutes. In some states

Under Mo. Rev. Under the act of April 1, 1863 (Pub. Co. Ct. 262. The limits of a proposed borough should not be so contracted as to afford no room for street and building improvements; and the symmetry of the borough should not be destroyed by excluding lands for no other purpose than to escape opposition from such landowners. The individual preference of the landowner is not the true criterion by which his exclusion should be determined. The applicants should not resort to irregular lines for no other purpose than to impose undue burdens upon the township or to escape the repair of public roads which properly fall within the proposed borough. In re Schwenksville, 18 Montg. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 208. In carrying out the request of the owners of farm lands to have the same excluded from a proposed borough, the court has power to make such change or modification of the boundaries as may be necessary

13. SPECIAL CHARTERS OR ACTS — a. In General. The legislature unless forbidden by the constitution may incorporate municipalities in its discretion either by special act or by general legislation authorizing the erection and organization of corporations by popular initiative and referendum.⁸ The former method was the one in general use in the United States during the last century and is still employed in several states.⁹ In some states, as has been seen,¹⁰ constitutional provision has been made for the framing and adoption of a charter by the inhabitants of large cities.¹¹ In whatever method the charter of a municipality is enacted, it becomes, when lawfully provided, the fundamental law of the corporation just as the constitution is the fundamental law of the state.¹² The organic act, if special, names a certain community or territory, constitutes it a municipal corporation and declares its corporate name;¹³ specifies the offices and names the first officers, providing for the election of their successors by the corporation;¹⁴ enumerates the powers, privileges, and franchises of the corporation;¹⁵ and fixes the municipal boundaries and the limits of its jurisdiction.¹⁶ No particular form of words is necessary to create the corporation provided the legislative intention to incorporate the place is evident.¹⁷ The usual words employed in a royal charter to constitute a municipal corporation were, "Creamus, erigimus, fundamus, incorporamus," signifying, we create, erect, found, incorporate;¹⁸ but words of similar import have been held sufficient both in royal charters,¹⁹ and in legislative

Super. Ct. 118. But where a large part of the territory within the boundary lines of a proposed borough consists of farm land, not connected by lines of buildings or improvements with either of two villages also within such boundary lines, and the landowners of such village are opposed to the new borough, the court will not be justified in confirming the report of a grand jury establishing a borough. In re Larksville, 13 Pa. 11. This has been true for years past of Missouri and California. Under the unique provisions of the constitutions of these two states, the great cities of St. Louis and San Francisco framed and adopted their own charters in much the same manner as a state orders its own constitution, thus affording practical examples of municipal home rule without precedent in modern times. Mo. Const. art. 9, § 16; Cal. Const. art. 11, § 8. In San Francisco in 1856 the two governments were consolidated, and the consolidated governments now consist of a mayor, twelve supervisors, and regular city and county officers. As to the dual nature of the government of San Francisco see Kahn v. Sutro, 114 Cal. 316, 46 Pac. 87, 33 L. R. A. 620. See also supra, II, A, 9.

Nearly all the large American cities exist under special charters. St. Louis is in no county, but was formerly embraced in St. Louis county. The city now levies and collects city and state taxes within its municipal limits and manages its own affairs free from all outside control except that of the state legislature. Voters of the city have the right to amend the charter at intervals of two years at a general or special election, provided the proposed amendments have been duly sanctioned and submitted to the people by the municipal council. St. Louis v. Russell, 9 Mo. 507.

acts.²⁰ It is enough that there is a clear manifestation of legislative intention to constitute a corporation;²¹ to invest a place with corporate powers and franchises;²² or to recognize an existing body as having the essential franchises and powers of a corporation, such as perpetual succession, name, right to sue and be sued, power to contract, receive, purchase, and convey property, enact and enforce laws and the like.²³ If the special act of legislation either expresses these things or employs words from which they may fairly be implied, then the courts, ut res magis valeat quam pereat, sustain the charter of the corporation.²⁴ Being a legislative enactment, a special charter is subject to the fixed canons of statutory construction to determine its meaning and effect.²⁵ It is a familiar and unvarying rule of law that the charter of a corporation is not a contract between the municipality and the state,²⁶ and therefore not protected by the contract clause of the federal constitution.²⁷ And this rule applies to all kinds of municipal charters, special as well as general; those voluntarily accepted by the community as well as those imposed upon it by sovereign power.²⁸ There are instances in which a special act provides for the organization of a particular corporation under the existing

The right of a state to repeal the charter of a municipality cannot be questioned. Municipal corporations are mere instrumentalities of the state for the more convenient administration of local government. Their powers are such as the legislature may confer, and these may be enlarged, abridged, or entirely withdrawn at pleasure. This is common learning found in all adjudications on the subject of municipal bodies. There is no contract between the state and the public that the charter of a city shall not be at all times subject to legislative control. See infra, II, C, 2, e.

Townships and incorporated towns are created, altered, and abolished at the pleasure of the legislature, and have no vested rights, and hence they have no legal right to complain of the manner in which changes therein are allowed by law to be made. Cicero v. Chicago, 182 Ill. 301, 55 N. E. 351.

general law, in which case the corporation, when so organized, is a corporation under and governed by the general law, and not one created solely by the special act.²⁹ A special charter cannot take effect if it is so indefinite, uncertain, and incomplete that the legislative intent cannot be ascertained.³⁰

b. Approval and Publication. Two methods of special legislative action providing special charters for municipalities exist in the United States: (1) The common method whereby the legislature, assuming the initiative, takes the first formal action by enacting the law under which the corporation is organized;³¹ and (2) the special method whereby the community first formulates its charter and it is then submitted to the legislature for adoption or rejection as a whole.³² Under the first the act does not become operative as a law until all the constitutional conditions of legislation have been complied with, including publication of the act.³³ Under the last method a formal act of legislation is not necessary; but a resolution of approval is sufficient unless otherwise required by the constitutional provision.³⁴

e. Acceptance or Consent. Sometimes by constitutional provision a municipal corporation cannot be created without the consent of a majority of the inhabitants or voters of the territory affected; but in the absence of such a provision their consent or acceptance is not necessary unless required by the statute.³⁵ Being an act of legislation it is within the plenitude of legislative Belleview*, 1 Ky. L. Rep. 168 (holding that where an act amending the charter of a municipal corporation declared that the charter of another municipal corporation should be adopted by the former "so far as applicable," but failed to specify how far the charter was applicable, it was abortive as a charter of the second municipality, and conferred no municipal powers on the officers thereof).

Location of corporation.—Although Tex. Act, May 22, 1871, incorporating the town of Yorktown and defining its limits by metes and bounds, does not situate it in any county, yet, as the act provides that the first election shall be held "under the direction of the presiding justice of De Witt county," and a village with that name, and with surveyed boundaries, corresponding with the metes and bounds set out in the act, had been in existence in De Witt county since 1848, it was held that the act applied to Yorktown, in De Witt county, and was not void for uncertainty. *State v. power;³⁶ and whenever constitutionally enacted, the special charter becomes a law binding upon all persons and things within its scope and purview.³⁷ The unanimous refusal of the inhabitants to accept the charter and assume corporate functions thereunder might partially nullify the statute,³⁸ but would not affect its validity. The dormant corporation might at any time be inspired with vitality by a minority of the inhabitants of the place assuming corporate functions and official positions under the charter and thus become an active agent and potent instrumentality of government with authority to compel respect and obedience from all the inhabitants within the scope of its charter powers and jurisdiction.³⁹ But a corporation thus imposed upon an unwilling people is not in the true sense municipal; and generally acceptance of the charter is expressly required.⁴⁰ Acceptance of a charter may be implied, as from acts done under it, unless it is required to be manifested in some particular way.⁴¹ It cannot be partially accepted, but must, if accepted at all, be accepted as offered and in toto.⁴² must be done to bring the corporation into existence.⁴³ When charters are voluntarily assumed or adopted by communities the consummation of the incorporation is generally manifested by some formal act or record, which must be made by the officers or authorities thereunto appointed by law and in substantial compliance with its requirements.⁴⁴

14. GENERAL LAWS — a. Construction and Operation — (i) IN GENERAL. Provision for the self-incorporation of communities by the voluntary action of the inhabitants thereof, being in accord with the genius of self-government, has been enacted in most of the United States, either as the exclusive method of municipal incorporation under constitutional mandate, or as a convenient method of conferring upon local communities the initiative and referendum concerning matters of government especially affecting themselves, and such provision is constitutional.⁴⁵ These general laws are far from uniform in the several states, but generally they provide for the incorporation of unorganized communities of sufficient population, and also, in some states, for the elevation of existing municipalities into a higher grade of corporation on compliance with the statutory requirements.⁴⁶ The interpretation given to these statutes by the state courts is likewise necessarily varied and dissonant,⁴⁷ according to the peculiar phraseology of each statute and the general canons of construction which usually guide the courts in ascertaining their operation.⁴⁸ Where a special law provides that certain territory "be, and the same is hereby, incorporated as the village of Pine Island, pursuant to" a general law for the incorporation of villages, the village is to be organized under the general law, no other organization being provided for, and it is not a special corporation independent of the general law, but is governed by such law.⁴⁹

(1) EFFECT AS TO EXISTING CORPORATIONS. Statutes providing for the incorporation of towns and cities do not always embrace those already incorporated,⁵⁰ and where such is the case proceedings to incorporate a city or town already incorporated are void and abortive.⁵¹ A statute may, however, provide for acceptance of its provisions and reincorporation by an existing municipal corporation into a new corporation of the same or a different kind, or acceptance by an existing corporation of different or additional powers conferred by the statute.⁵² And a general law may authorize reincorporation under its provisions of a city incorporated after its enactment by special charter.⁵³

b. Proceedings For Incorporation—(i) IN GENERAL. Under a general law for the incorporation of municipalities all the material steps prescribed by the statute must be taken, and the statute must be substantially complied with, before the municipality can become a de jure body corporate and politic, and the failure to comply with the statute may be such as to prevent its becoming even a corporation de facto.⁵⁴ Under such statutes prescribing the method for incorporation, the required number of citizens usually initiate the proceeding for incorporation by a petition or some other appropriate document filed in the designated office; with the result that an enumeration of the inhabitants within the proposed precincts of the corporation is made, and an election held by the officer appointed by the statute to determine whether a majority of the inhabitants favor an incorporation.⁵⁵ This being determined in the affirmative and duly recorded,⁵⁶ the court, board, or officer thereunto authorized, in the performance of ministerial functions,⁵⁷ either formulates the charter of the corporation or approves the one proposed for it by the initiators of the movement for the incorporation.⁵⁸ In some states in lieu of an election the favor of a majority is manifested by the signing of a petition.⁵⁹ And in some the court or board hears proof to show that the proposed incorporation is within the requirements of the statute, and thereupon orders or decrees that the corporation is constituted and exists henceforth as such with the powers, functions, and duties prescribed by law for such a body.⁶⁰ The boundaries set forth are necessarily peculiar to the particular corporation; but otherwise the charter is substantially a transcript from the general law under which the corporation is created,⁶¹ with the result that all cities and towns of the same grade in any state have identical charters, when constituted under the general law.

The petition need not state facts not required by the statute, as that there is a town within the proposed boundaries. People v. Loyalton, 147 Cal. 774, 82 Pac. 620.

A miscitation of the section of the general law under which a corporation is formed in the petition for incorporation will not make the petition fatally defective or the incorporation void, where the incorporation is otherwise in substantial compliance with the statute. *Wardner v. 65. See infra, II, A, 14, b, (II), (B).

66. People v. Linden, 107 Cal. 94, 40 Pac. 115. The requirement of the Pennsylvania act of June 2, 1871, that a petition for incorporation of a borough shall be signed by the petitioners within three months immediately preceding its presentation to the court does not require that fact to be stated in the petition, but the fact must appear in the record. In re Summit Borough, 114 Pa. 67. People v. Linden, 107 Cal. 94, 40 Pac. 115; Indiana Imp. Co. v. Wagner, 138 Ind. 658, 38 N. E. 49.

Date of affidavits.—Although affidavits accompanying a petition for incorporation of a city were dated March 13, while the petition was filed April 7, they were held sufficient, where they showed that a certain number of electors had signed the petition on March 13, the presumption being that the state of facts shown continued, and it being for the opponents of the incorporation to show in the hearing that, by death or departure from the district, the number had been reduced below that required. Borchard v. Ventura County, 144 Cal. 10, 77 Pac. 708.

Affidavit nunc pro tunc.—As it is merely necessary that the record of proceedings for incorporation of a borough shall affirmatively show somewhere that the application for incorporation has been signed by the petitioners, whose names are attached thereto, within three months before presentation, an affidavit to that effect filed nunc pro tunc before decree was held sufficient. Re La Plume, 8 Pa. Cas. 51, 4 Atl. 455.

Affidavits as evidence.—Under Ind. Rev. St. (1894) § 4317 (Rev. St. (1881) § 3296), providing that the petition for incorporation of a town shall be subscribed by the applicants, and verified by affidavits, such affidavits are admissible to prove the facts stated in the petition. *Indiana Imp. Texas.—Furrh v. State, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 221, 24 S. W. 1126.

Sufficiency of description.—State v. Young, 61 Mo. App. 494; In re Edgeworth Borough, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 554; Ewing v. State, 81 Tex. 172, 16 S. W. 872. A petition for incorporation of a city alleging that it states the population "as nearly as the same can be stated by your petitioners" is sufficient under a statute requiring it to state the population is required by the statute;⁶⁹ (5) show what grade of corporation is expected or sought;⁷⁰ and (6) be seasonably filed with the appointed tribunal.⁷¹ Publicity is provided for in some states by publication;⁷² in others by delay and reference to some arm or branch of the tribunal.⁷³

(B) Requisites as to Petitioners. The courts have generally inclined to a strict construction and rigid enforcement of the requirements of the law as to the number and qualifications of the signers of petitions for the incorporation, on the ground of jurisdiction.⁷⁴ "Residents" must be actual bona fide residents, and

"as nearly as may be." Borchard v. Ventura County, 144 Cal. 10, 77 Pac. 708. Where applicants for the incorporation of a new borough have adopted boundaries which are plainly not the best that can be made, and have not presented any good reason for the incorporation, it is not expedient to incorporate the borough. In re Circleville Borough, 28 Pa. Co. Ct. 508. Under the Pennsylvania act of April 1, 1834 (Pamphl. Laws 163), requiring that the courses and distances of the boundaries of a proposed borough be set forth in words at length, a petition setting forth boundaries along the course of a well-known and considerable stream is in substantial compliance with the statute when the distance along such a stream is given at length. In re Moosic, 12 Pa. Super. Ct. 353. The middle of a township road may be a boundary. In re Edgewood Borough, 130 Pa. St. 348, 18 Atl. 646; In re Ridley Park Borough, 1 Pa. Dist. 308, 4 Del. Co. 597. A petition for the incorporation of a borough which gives as a boundary for the proposed borough the low water line of a river between two points, stating the distance, is sufficient, it not being necessary to give the river's courses and distances. In re Duquesne Borough, 147 Pa. St. 53, 23 Atl. 339. It is insufficient to describe by bounding properties. In re Ridley Park Borough, supra.

Power of legislature to authorize designation of boundaries see infra, II, B, 2, a, (I), text and note 34.

Boundaries stated binding on court.—In an application for incorporation of a borough the court cannot direct that certain territory be taken in or omitted, but is limited to the determination of accepting or rejecting the application as it stands. In re Munhall, 25 Pa. Co. Ct. 287.

Amendment.—The court may, while the matter is pending and all the parties are represented, permit an amendment of the petition so as to set out the courses and distances in words at length. In re Edgeworth Borough, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 554.

69. State v. Mitchell, 22 Ohio Cir. Ct. 208, 12 Ohio Cir. Dec. 288; In re Jeannette Borough, 129 Pa. St. 567, 18 Atl. 557. Sayles Civ. St. (1897) art. 580, requiring an application to a county court for an election to decide on the incorporation of a city to be accompanied by a map or plat of the territory to be incorporated, is mandatory, and an election granted on an application accompanied only by a boundary of such territory is illegal. Huff v. Preuitt, (Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 53 S. W. 844.

Supplemental map.—A defective map filed with a petition for the creation of a hamlet with township trustees may be supplemented by a more perfect one before action is taken by the trustees. State v. Mitchell, 22 Ohio Cir. Ct. 208, 12 Ohio Cir. Dec. 288.

Sufficiency of filing.—The clerk of a township is also the clerk of its board of trustees, and when the board is not in session papers should be filed with the clerk in order to constitute a legal filing with the trustees; and where the petition for the creation of a hamlet and map are filed with the township clerk under such circumstances, it is a legal filing; and it is none the less so because it is returned by the clerk to the person filing it as a mere convenience in carrying it to the township trustees. State v. Mitchell, 22 Ohio Cir. Ct. 208, 12 Ohio Cir. Dec. 288.

Marking "Filed" nunc pro tunc.—Where a plan or plot was filed with an application for the incorporation of a borough, but was not attached to the application or marked "Filed" at the time of presentation, it was held that it was not error for the court to permit counsel to certify to the fact that the plot was filed as stated, and to direct the clerk to mark the same filed nunc pro tunc as to the time of filing the petition. In re Jeannette Borough, 129 Pa. St. 567, 18 Atl. 557.

70. Wardner v. Pelkes, 8 Ida. 333, 69 Pac. 64. See supra, II, A, 7.

The class of corporation sought need not be specially named in the petition, if from the facts stated the class can be easily inferred. People v. Riverside, 70 Cal. 461, 11 Pac. 759.

Under Tenn. Code, § 1667, relating to the organization into taxing districts of towns or cities whose charters have been repealed, and providing for a "petition of a majority of the voters within the limits of any such town or city, at the time of the repeal or surrender of its charter," the words "at the time of the repeal" merely define the limits of the town and do not qualify the word "voters," and limit the right of petition to those persons who were then voters. Pepper v. Smith, 15 Lea 551.

78. In re Pine Hill, 33 N. Y. Suppl. 181, ownership of land by wife of one signing the petition is not enough to qualify him.

(c) Withdrawal of Petitioners. After a petition for incorporation has been presented and jurisdiction has attached, a petitioner cannot withdraw his name.⁸⁰

(d) Alteration of Petition. Unauthorized alterations of a petition for incorporation after it has been presented or filed may render the subsequent proceedings void.⁸¹

(iii) NOTICE AND OBJECTION THERETO. The notice of the application for incorporation, or of the hearing thereon or election, as the case may be, must be given substantially as required by the statute.⁸² Notice of the filing of a petition for incorporation of a municipality is not necessary, however, except as required by the statute;⁸³ and even when notice is required the courts seem to incline to a liberal construction of the statute.⁸⁴ Thus "for a period of not less than thirty days" does not mean thirty full days, but the first or last day may be included in the count and the election had on the last day.⁸⁵ Persons appearing to contest an

From the time that two thirds of the residents of a locality have signed a petition asking for the incorporation of territory as a village municipality the county council has jurisdiction of the petition, and the fact that certain of the signatures are withdrawn therefrom so that the names of two thirds of the residents do not remain does not take away the jurisdiction of the council and its subsequent proceedings are not ultra vires. Martin v. D'Arthahaska County Corp., 21 Quebec Super. Ct. 119 [reversing 20 Quebec Super. Ct. 329].

81. Thus under Mo. Rev. St. (1889) § 977, permitting a city or town to incorporate when a majority of the inhabitants should present a petition to the court, setting out the metes and bounds, it was held that the action of the court in allowing three of the petitioners to strike off the names of six petitioners, and to alter the boundaries in the petition, after its filing, avoided the incorporation. *State v. The provisions of the Pennsylvania act of June 26, 1895, requiring advertisement for thirty days immediately before the next regular term following the presentation and filing of an application for the incorporation of a borough are mandatory, and neglect to comply therewith is a fatal defect; and the fact that the exceptants had notice, and appeared and were heard on the merits, does not deprive them of their right to raise the question of want of regularity. In re Pyne Borough, supra. Prior to the act of June 26, 1895, it was required that the notice of an application for incorporation of a borough should state the time and place when and where the petition would be presented (In re

The notice required by the act of 1895 takes the place of the notice prescribed by the act of June 2, 1871, and both notices are not necessary. In re Emsworth Borough, 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 29.

(iv) CENSUS OR ENUMERATION OF INHABITANTS. Statutes relating to municipal incorporation sometimes provide for the taking of a census of the population resident within the territory affected, or an enumeration of the inhabitants, and substantial compliance with such provision is necessary;⁸⁷ but no census or enumeration of inhabitants is necessary when it is not required by the statute.⁸⁸

(v) ACCEPTANCE OR CONSENT—(A) In General. Unless prevented by a constitutional provision,⁸⁹ it is within the power of the legislature to create municipal corporations by a general law without the consent of the inhabitants;⁹⁰ but as a rule general laws for the creation of such corporations are merely enabling and require consent of the inhabitants or voters of the territory affected, or a majority of them, to be manifested in some way prescribed by the statute, as by a vote at an election to be held for the purpose, and in such case the statutory conditions must be complied with.⁹¹

(B) Election.⁹² The election on the question of incorporation of a municipality must be had and conducted substantially as required by the statute;⁹³ the required notice therefor must be given;⁹⁴ and the vote required by the statute must be in favor of the incorporation.⁹⁵ So also the result of the election must be submitted to the court, judge, or other body or officer for action, as required by the statute.⁹⁶

Sufficiency of notice see People v. Riverside, 70 Cal. 461, 11 Pac. 759.

Publication or posting.—Under a municipal incorporation act calling for an election notice, either by publication or by posting, it is sufficient, where it is given both ways, if it is given properly either way. Borchard v. Ventura County, 144 Cal. 10, 77 Pac. 708.

Monthly magazines or journals are not included in the words "all newspapers published in the town" in a statute relating to the publication of notice. York Borough Case, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. 514.

The class of corporation sought need not be specially named in the notice, if from the facts stated the class can be easily inferred. People v. Riverside, 70 Cal. 461, 11 Pac. 759.

Posting notices of election.—Where the law only requires four notices of election to be posted within the boundaries of the proposed corporation, an error in the order of the supervisors in requiring the posting of a fifth notice at a place afterward discovered to be outside of the boundaries does not vitiate the notice, it appearing that a literal compliance with the order resulted in a compliance with the law. People v. Loyalton, 147 Cal. 774, 82 Pac. 620.

Notice of second election.—Under N. Y. Laws (1870), c. 291, § 13, as amended by Laws (1878), c. 59, providing that where an election to incorporate a village has been set aside by the county judge, and another election ordered, it "shall be held on notice of such election signed by some one or more of the persons designated as inspectors of election for the previous election as to incorporation," the provision that the first election shall be called by at least twenty electors resident within the bounds of the proposed village does not apply to the calling of a second election after the first one has been set aside by order of the judge, and the authority for that election is the order of the judge and the statutory notice for that election. People v. Snedeker, 30 N. Y. App. Div. 1, 51 N. Y. Suppl. 768.

Number of votes required.—If the proposition to vote upon city organization under the general law is submitted at a special election held for that purpose, a majority of the votes cast for the purpose is sufficient to carry it; but if it is submitted at a general election a majority of all votes cast at the election is essential, unless the statute providing for its submission provides that a majority of the votes cast upon the particular proposition submitted shall be sufficient to adopt it. People v. Weber, 222 Ill. 180, 78 N. E. 56. See ELECTIONS, 15 Cyc. 389. Pa. Const. art. 15, § 1, and Pa. Act, May 23, 1874, providing that cities may be chartered whenever a majority of the electors of any town or borough having a population of at least ten thousand shall vote at any general election in favor of the same, are complied with when the majority of those voting shall vote to that effect, although not a majority of all the electors of the borough. York Borough Case, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. 514. See also infra, II, B, 2, d, (XIII).

Illegal votes will not render the election invalid, if it appears that the result was not affected thereby. People v. Loyalton, 147 Cal. 774, 82 Pac. 620. See also infra, II, B, 2, d, (XIII); and ELECTIONS, 15 Cyc. 416, 430.

A certificate of the inspectors of an election to determine the question of incorporation of a village, which states that ninety-one qualified electors residing in the territory voted, and that the canvass showed that eighty ballots were cast, of which forty-four were in favor of incorporation, and thirty-six against it, shows that a majority of the votes were cast in favor of the incorporation, as required by Wis. Rev. St. (1898) § 865, as it will be presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that the excess of votes over eighty were rejected for valid reasons. State v. Lammers, 113 Wis. 393, 86 N. (vi) HEARING AND DETERMINATION. The statutes variously provide for a hearing and determination by some court or board on an application for incorporation of a municipality;⁹⁷ and compliance with the statute in this respect is essential.⁹⁸ Under some statutes a court or board determines whether the conditions as to population, area, character of the territory, etc., exist, or as to whether the petition is signed by the required number of inhabitants of the required qualifications, and then decrees or orders an election to determine whether there shall be incorporation.⁹⁹ In Pennsylvania the propriety of the proposed incorporation of a borough is determined, on an application duly presented to it, by the court of quarter sessions.¹ Formerly the application was required to be first submitted to the grand jury for their consideration and report to the court,² but this is no longer necessary.³ Where two applications affecting the same territory are made for incorporation, the one first presented should be first acted upon.⁴ Regular adjournments of a hearing from time to time do not oust the court or board of jurisdiction.⁵

Declaring result of election.—Where on the same day the inhabitants of a town voted to incorporate under the general law as a city and also to become an independent school-district, the incorporation as a city was valid although the result of the school district election was first declared by the county judge. *State v. (VII) ORDER OR DECREE.⁶ After the hearing of an application for municipal incorporation the statutes sometimes require the court or board having jurisdiction in the matter to make an order or decree incorporating the municipality.⁷ The order or decree must, when so required by the statute, show the existence of the prescribed conditions to incorporation,⁸ and it is sometimes required to designate the metes and bounds of the municipality.⁹ The order or decree will not be vitiated by immaterial errors or irregularities.¹⁰ The order or decree of a court incorporating a municipality may be corrected at the same term or, it has been held, even at a subsequent term;¹¹ or it may be vacated at the same term;¹² and an order of a board of supervisors defining the boundaries of a proposed municipality, and providing for an election therein, may be rescinded at any time before the election is held.¹³

(VIII) RECORD. Although municipalities may exist by prescription,¹⁴ none are created in modern times under general law without record evidence of the incorporation.¹⁵ It is of prime importance that the record shall show the facts essential to give jurisdiction to the tribunal appointed to conduct the incorporation;¹⁶ and it is essential that the order or decree of incorporation, or the charter, shall be properly entered or recorded as provided by the statute.¹⁷ This being satisfactorily shown, every presumption is indulged in favor of the regularity of the proceeding.¹⁸ Mere irregularities will not invalidate the incorporation.¹⁹ It is sufficient that there has been substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute.²⁰ So long as the proceedings are still open, the court or board, as the case may be, may allow a nunc pro tunc entry showing the action taken and compliance with the statutory conditions.²¹

(IX) REVIEW. Provision is sometimes made by statute for a review of proceedings for municipal incorporation under general laws;²² but since incorporation is not a judicial, but a ministerial proceeding, and a court conducting the proceeding exercises the special ministerial function conferred on it by legislation, rather than the judicial powers derived from the constitution,²³ a proceeding for incorporation or the order or decree therein is subject to review on appeal, writ of error, or otherwise, only when and in the manner specially provided by law.²⁴

Certificate of officer holding election.—An attempted organization of a municipal corporation is void in Tennessee, under Acts (1877), c. 121, § 8, where there has been a failure to comply with the requirement that the certificate of the sheriff holding the election be indorsed on the application for the charter and that both the application and the certificate be registered. *Woodbury v. Hearing and disposition of appeal.—Under the Indiana statute (Rev. St. (1894) § 4313 et seq.; Rev. St. (1881) § 3293 et seq.), providing for the incorporation of towns and directing that the returns of the election shall be made to the county commissioners, and that, if satisfied of the legality of the election, they shall declare the town incorporated, where persons appear before the commissioners and move to dismiss the proceeding, it is an appearance, and sufficient to raise an issue as to the validity of the election, and on appeal by objectors to the circuit court, after a denial of their motion, such issue, or the sufficiency of the objections, should be decided on the merits, and not on motion to dismiss the appeal. *Harris v. 24. California.—Borchard v. Ventura County, 144 Cal. 10, 77 Pac. 708.

Colorado.—Velasquez v. Zimmerman, 30 Colo. 355, 70 Pac. 419; Eldred v. Johnson, 18 Colo. App. 384, 71 Pac. 891, holding that 2 Mills Annot. St. § 4364, authorizing incorporation of a town on petition of a certain number of electors and landowners, and section 4365, providing for appointment by the county court, on presentation of the petition, of commissioners to hold an election and report the result to the court, and section 4366, requiring a certified copy of all papers and record entries relating to the matter on file in the office of the clerk of the county court to be made and filed in the recorder's office, do not vest the county court with judicial power to hear objections and render a judgment.

Where the statute vests the court or board with discretionary power to determine all questions of fact and expediency on an application for municipal incorporation, its determination cannot be reviewed on certiorari or appeal in the absence of abuse of discretion.²⁵

Missouri.—Hall v. De Armond, 46 Mo. App. 596, holding that no appeal would lie from the action of the county court incorporating a town, under Rev. St. (1889) § 977, as such action was not a judgment or judicial order within the meaning of the statute allowing appeals.

New Jersey.—Certiorari will lie to review an order of the court of common pleas directing a special election for the incorporation of a borough before the election and the filing of the certificates of the officers of election in the county clerk's office. Long Branch v. Sloane, 49 N. J. L. 356, 8 Atl. 101. But after the certificate of the officers of election has been so filed, a corporation exists which cannot be defeated by certiorari, but must be dissolved, if at all, by quo warranto. Campbell v. Wainright, 50 N. J. L. 555, 14 Atl. 603.

Ohio.—Since under Rev. St. §§ 1651a-1651c, providing for a petition to township trustees for the establishment of a hamlet and proceedings thereunder, the same remedy is given as when proceedings are brought before the county commissioners for the establishment of hamlets out of "allotted territory," such proceedings are subject to review, and, for proper cause shown, to reversal. Lawrence v. Mitchell, 10 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 265, 8 Ohio N. P. 8.

Pennsylvania.—Prior to the act of 1889, hereinafter referred to, the supreme court had power by certiorari to review the proceedings of courts of quarter sessions incorporating boroughs (In re Quakertown, 3 Grant 203. See also In re Osborne, 101 Pa. St. 284; In re Sewickley, 36 Pa. St. 80; Re La Plume, 8 Pa. Cas. 51, 4 Atl. 455); but an appeal would not lie from the decree of incorporation (In re Osborne, supra; In re Sewickley, supra). Under the act of May 9, 1889 (Pamphl. Laws 174), however, an appeal will lie from a decree incorporating a borough, if taken by not less than three persons aggrieved thereby. In re Taylor Borough, 160 Pa. St. 475, 28 Atl. 934; In re Swissvale Borough, 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 212. This act was not impliedly repealed by the act of June 26, 1895 (Pamphl. Laws 389). In re Swissvale Borough, supra. An appeal taken by less than three persons is not authorized and must be quashed. In re Wilkinsburg Borough, 131 Pa. St. 365, 20 Atl. 381; In re Swissvale Borough, supra. And the appeal must be taken out within the time prescribed by law. In re Morton Borough, 15 Pa. Super. Ct. 466 [affirming 8 Del. Co. 47]. See also In re Wayne Borough, 12 Pa. Super. Ct. 363.

Texas.—State v. Goowin, 69 Tex. 55, 5 S. W. 678 (holding that the findings of a county judge under Rev. St. art. 508, that the territory sought to be embraced within a contemplated municipal corporation had the population required by statute, was conclusive, since the law provided no means whereby his findings might be revised); Word v. Schow, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 120, 68 S. W. 192 (holding that under Rev. St. art. 581, declaring that, when satisfactory proof is made that a town or village contains the requisite number of inhabitants, it shall be the duty of the county judge to make an order for an election on the question of incorporation, the decision of the county judge on the sufficiency of the proof that the territory contains the requisite number of inhabitants is final and not subject to review).

West Virginia.—In re Union Mines, 39 W. Va. 179, 19 S. E. 398, holding that the circuit court in the discharge of its duties under the code, chapter 47, in relation to the incorporation of municipalities, acts in a legislative capacity only, and the supreme court has no power to review its decision.

Wisconsin.—In re Schumaker, 90 Wis. 488, 63 N. W. 1050, holding that under Rev. St. § 3069, as amended by Laws (1895), c. 212, providing that appeals should lie only from final orders in special proceedings, an order of reference of the issues in a proceeding for the incorporation of a village was not appealable.

¹See 36 Cent. Dig. tit. "Municipal Corporations," § 32.

The writ of review lies to correct errors of the board of county supervisors in proceedings for municipal incorporation in excess of jurisdiction, but cannot be used to correct errors or irregularity within their jurisdiction, or to review a purely legislative or executive act. Borchard v. Ventura County, 144 Cal. 10, 77 Pac. 708. The action of a board of supervisors of a county in the matter of an incorporation of a city in determining the boundaries is legislative, and, in canvassing the returns and announcing the result, is ministerial, and therefore cannot be reviewed under a writ of review. Borchard v. Ventura County, supra.

In Pennsylvania, on application for borough charters, the court of quarter sessions (formerly the court of quarter sessions and the grand jury) have discretionary power to determine all questions of fact and expediency, and their discretion cannot be reviewed on certiorari (In re Osborne, 101 Pa. St. 284; In re Sewickley, 36 Pa. St. 80), or on appeal under the act of 1889, which has the same legal effect as a certiorari (In re Narberth Borough, 171 Pa. (x) ORGANIZATION. Incorporation of a municipality is completed by organization under the charter.²⁶ This is effected by the election and qualification of the officers provided for by the charter and putting in operation a municipal government.²⁷ Until this is done the corporation is only initiate;²⁸ but with the installation of officers sworn to execute the law, and perform the functions of the corporation, the municipality becomes consummate and its charter, powers, and duties previously potential become vital and actual.²⁹ The general laws in relation to the incorporation of municipalities usually contain express provision for the calling and holding of the first meeting or election of a newly created municipality.³⁰

(xi) PROHIBITION AND INJUNCTION. A writ of prohibition will not issue to stay a special proceeding for the incorporation of a municipal corporation on the ground that the statute authorizing the incorporation of such municipality is unconstitutional, since such a writ is issued only in cases of extreme necessity, and not for grievances which may be redressed by ordinary proceedings at law or in equity.³¹ An injunction will doubtless lie in a proper case;³² but it has been held that an injunction will not be granted to restrain proceedings to

Ct. 623; In re Alliance Borough, 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 178. A decree of incorporation of a borough is not reviewable on appeal, unless illegality in the proceedings is manifest on the record, or abuse of discretion by the court is distinctly charged and clearly established. In re Narberth Borough, 171 Pa. St. 211, 33 Atl. 72. Whether the required number of freeholders have signed the petition for borough incorporation is a question of fact, and where the court of quarter sessions determines the same, their action is an adjudication which will not be disturbed where the record shows no error. In re Old Forge, 12 Pa. Super. Ct. 359 [affirming 7 Del. Co. 462, 5 Lack. Leg. N. 185]. And the same is true of the question whether or not the signers of the petition are freeholders. In re Moosic, 12 Pa. Super. Ct. 353. Delegation of power to fix place of meeting.—The county commissioner to whom application is made for the organization of a municipal corporation (a plantation, under Me. Laws (1870), c. 121) cannot delegate the power to fix the place of meeting for that purpose to the person to whom his warrant is addressed. State v. Shaw, 64 Me. 263.

Notice of the meeting or election must be given as prescribed by the statute. State v. Shaw, 64 Me. 263.

Provision directory as to time.—The provision in a town charter that the first election of officers shall be held upon a certain day has been held to be merely directory, so that failure to elect on that day will not prevent the organization of the town under the charter. Coles County v. Allison, 23 Ill. 437.

Statute applicable to private corporations only.—R. I. Pub. St. c. 152, § 4, providing that the first meeting of all corporations shall be called by a notice signed by one of the persons named in the act of incorporation, which shall be delivered to each member thereof, or published, etc., does not apply to municipal corporations, since, as no person is named as a corporator in the charter of a public corporation, and as there are no members of such a corporation within the meaning of the statute, compliance is impossible as to such corporations. Wood v. Quimby, 20 R. I. 482, 40 Atl. 161.

incorporate a municipality because of the mere fact that some part of the territory does not contain the population required by the statute, or because the parties applying for the injunction will be subjected to burdens of local government disproportionate to the benefits accruing to them therefrom.³³

15. DEFECTIVE CORPORATIONS — a. In General. The failure to comply substantially with the essential requirements of the law of incorporation makes the body defective, but not necessarily invalid and void.³⁴ It is to the interest of the public that government shall be stable, and that existing institutions shall not be easily destroyed, and the courts therefore in obedience to the maxim ut res magis valeat quam pereat are slow to declare a municipal corporation utterly null and void, unless required to do so by the positive mandates of the law.³⁵ Failure to comply with provisions of the statute which are merely directory will not render the corporation invalid;³⁶ and substantial compliance with the law is generally held sufficient.³⁷ The fact that the legislature has created a municipality without bestowing upon it all the powers necessary for its government will not authorize the court to declare that the municipality has not a legal existence.³⁸

b. Classification Based on Defects. The result of this policy has been to divide municipal corporations with reference to their defects in creation or organization into three classes: (1) Corporations de jure; (2) corporations de facto; and (3) void corporations; the first, being strictly legal and impregnable to assault in the courts from any source,³⁹ the second, being subject only to attack by the state in a direct proceeding to forfeit franchises,⁴⁰ and the last subject to legal challenge by any party in any judicial proceeding.⁴¹

A judgment against a pretended municipal corporation having no legal existence as such is a mere nullity. Colton v. Rossi, 9 Cal. 595.

Contradicting recitals in order or decree.—One not a party to proceedings to incorporate a town is not prevented, by a recital in the order appointing commissioners to call an election, that the proceedings were had before the court, from showing that they were had before the judge and therefore void. State v. Council, 106 Iowa 731, 77 N. W. 474.

class of corporations as not to be reconcilable, varying in doctrine from those of the theorists who deny the existence of such a corporation, and admit only two classes, the valid and the void,⁴² to those who hold any actual organization in ostensible possession of municipal powers to be a de facto corporation.⁴³ There is a general consensus of judicial opinion on the middle ground between these extremes to the effect that de facto corporations should be recognized upon the basis of the following essentials of existence: (1) A valid statute authorizing incorporation; (2) an organization in good faith under it; (3) a colorable compliance with the law; and (4) an assumption of corporate powers.⁴⁴ Some states require only the last three, holding that an unconstitutional statute is sufficient basis for a corporation de facto;⁴⁵ but in other states the cases are to the contrary.⁴⁶ Such corporations and contracts made or acts done by them may be validated by legislation,⁴⁷ and even without validation of the corporation its contracts are binding upon it.⁴⁸

d. Validating Acts. Where a municipality undertakes to incorporate under a general or special law, but by reason of failure to comply with the requirements of the law the corporation is defective or invalid, the legislature may by subsequent legislation, subject to constitutional limitations as to general and special laws, validate the incorporation and the acts already done or contracts already made.⁴⁹

Acts not validating defective corporations.—It has been held, however, that a place once incorporated by an act of the legislature as a town will not become one of the cities of the state until there is a legislative enactment expressly declaring it to be a city, and that the mere fact that in different legislative acts referring to such towns it is sometimes designated as a "city" will not make it a municipal corporation of the character indicated by that term, and that where the act incorporating it as a town has never been repealed its existence as such is not affected by subsequent acts of the legislature referring to it as a city. Savannah, etc., R. Co. v. Jordan, 113 Ga. 687, 39 S. E. 511. So in Texas it has been held that where the incorporation of a town is invalid because seventy-five per cent of the lands included in its boundaries were agricultural lands, the defect is not cured by Rev. St. art. 616c, validating attempts to incorporate which are defective because of failure to comply with all the requirements of the law, since the statute has no application to the incorporation of municipalities in violation of law. *Judd v. See, generally, QUO WARRANTO.

51. State v. Leatherman, 38 Ark. 81 (holding that the state may by long acquiescence and continued recognition of a municipal corporation, through her officers, state and county, be precluded from an information to deprive it of franchises long exercised in accordance with the general law); State v. Mansfield, 99 Mo. App. 146, 72 S. W. 471 (holding that where a municipality was organized as a city by decree of a county court, and acted as such for eight years, and in quo warranto to oust it from its franchises for illegality in its incorporation there was no evidence that a judgment in favor of relator could serve any useful purpose, but on the contrary it appeared that it might result in great injury, the state was barred by laches from obtaining such relief).

52. Thus in Missouri it is held that neither the state nor its attorney-general or prosecuting attorney can by quo warranto, or by any other writ or independent process known to the law, question the validity of the incorporation of a city by the county court, acting within the scope of its constitutional and statutory authority, unless fraud and collusion on the part of such court has been charged and proven, or unless fraud has been so practised upon it in the matter of procuring the order that for that reason it might be treated as fraudulent. Unless this is shown, such judgment is final and conclusive, and binding on all courts. State v. Fleming, 158 Mo. 558, 59 S. W. 118. Compare State v. Mansfield, 99 Mo. App. 146, 72 S. W. 471. So in California, under the statute relating to the creation of municipal corporations, which provides that the board of county supervisors shall, on the hearing of a petition for incorporation, determine how many inhabitants reside within the proposed boundaries and whether the petition is signed by a sufficient number of electors of the district, it is held that in quo warranto by the state attacking the validity of the corporation, the finding of the board on those questions is conclusive, in the absence of a law providing for an appeal, and in the absence of a showing that the decision was induced by fraud. People v. Loyalton, 147 Cal. 774, 82 Pac. 620; People v. Los Angeles, 133 Cal. 338, 65 Pac. 749. But in Alabama under Code (1896), §§ 2938, 2941, providing that on the filing of a petition, which, under Acts (1900-1901), p. 965, amending Code, § 2937, must be signed by fifty or more qualified electors residing within the boundaries of the proposed town, and who are also householders and freeholders, the probate judge must direct an election to be held to determine

b. By Private Individuals — (1) DIRECT ATTACK. A private individual cannot institute quo warranto proceedings to contest the validity of the existence of a municipal corporation,⁵³ unless such a proceeding is authorized by statute.⁵⁴

(2) COLLATERAL ATTACK. The existence and growth of municipalities is a matter of interest to the state, and the general rule is that, so long as the state does not see fit to forfeit the charter of a de facto municipality, or to oust it from the exercise of corporate powers, its existence is not subject to collateral attack at the private suit of any person.⁵⁵ Suits by owners of property to enjoin the collection of taxes, or to recover taxes paid under protest, or to remove a tax cloud from the title, or to replevy or recover for the conversion of personalty distrained for taxes, or defenses in an action by the municipality, cannot be maintained on the ground of defect of incorporation or organization, unless such defect is so fatal as to render the incorporation absolutely void.⁵⁶ It is held in some jurisdic-

whether the town shall be incorporated, and, when the result is certified to him, must make an order of record that the inhabitants of the town are incorporated, it is held that the action of the probate judge on the petition is merely ministerial, as there is no provision whereby he can judicially ascertain the qualification of the petitioners, and that it does not preclude inquiry into the validity of the petition by proper and direct attack by quo warranto. West End v. State, 138 Ala. 295, 36 So. 423.

tions that the existence of a pretended municipal corporation may be collaterally attacked by a private individual if the attempted incorporation is an absolute nullity and there is neither a corporation de jure nor de facto;⁵⁷ but this does not apply in those states which recognize any municipal organization, whether chartered or not, whether bona fide or mala fide, as a de facto corporation.⁵⁸ A judgment against a pretended municipal corporation having no existence de jure or de facto has been held a nullity.⁵⁹

(iii) ESTOPPEL. An individual may be estopped by his conduct to attack the validity of the incorporation of a municipality, even though, but for such estoppel, he might do so.⁶⁰ Thus it has been held that one who files a specific objection to the inclusion of his land in a proposed borough cannot attack the decree incorporating the borough on the ground that his land was excluded.⁶¹ So it has been held that the obligors on a bond given to a municipal corporation, by making and signing the instrument, admit the corporate capacity of the obligee, and cannot plead nul tiel corporation in an action on the bond.⁶² One who deals with a corporation in its corporate capacity cannot afterward collaterally assail the legality of its corporate existence.⁶³

17. *PRÉEXISTING RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES*⁶⁴ — a. In General. The law, to a certain extent, and equity fully, recognizes the property rights and liabilities of an organized community and preserves and enforces them through all the changes of class and grade of municipal corporation by the application of the doctrine of succession, wherever it is applicable.⁶⁵ The few apparent exceptions to this rule

Property held in trust.—A municipal corporation succeeds without judicial decree or investiture to property held in trust for the community by its predecessor under a devise. Girard v. Philadelphia, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 1, 19 L. ed. 53. A town or other municipality does not lose its identity by being incorporated as a city; and property held by the inhabitants of the town in trust passes to the city on the same trust, and no action of any court is necessary to vest the title to such property in the city. ment between the original debtor and its successor.⁶⁹ And even where, after dissolution, only a portion of the territory of the dissolved corporation became reincorporated a pro rata liability has been adjudged and enforced against the new municipality as a pro tanto successor to the old.⁷⁰ Under this doctrine the creditors of a town or township or other quasi-corporation are allowed an efficient remedy for the collection of their debts from the municipality into which it is incorporated;⁷¹ a city succeeding a village, town, or borough becomes liable for the debts of the latter;⁷² and also a city of higher grade for one of lower grade.⁷³ But a newly created city or other municipality does not become liable for the debts of a purely voluntary association, contracted for public improvements falling within the limits of the municipality, or otherwise,⁷⁴ unless such liability is imposed by the legislature.⁷⁵

Special legislation.—A statutory provision for payment by a village corporation of the debts and liabilities contracted by a provisional municipal organization to which it has succeeded is not special legislation, within the act of congress (24 U. S. St. at L. 170), prohibiting the legislatures of territories from passing any local or special laws incorporating or amending the charter of any city, town, or village, or granting to any city or town any special or exclusive privilege, immunity, or franchises. Guthrie v. Territory, 1 Okla. 188, 31 Pac. 190, 21 L. R. A. 841.

tory or charter power therefor, the successor to such liability has ex necessitate rei power under general law to levy and collect taxes to discharge the legal obligation.⁷⁶

18. EVIDENCE OF INCORPORATION⁷⁷—a. In General. The proper evidence of incorporation is a charter of the municipality or the record thereof made under general law and proof of organization by the exercise of corporate power thereunder.⁷⁸ In the absence of the best evidence secondary proof may be admitted on this as well as on other issues under the general rules of evidence;⁷⁹ and admissions in an action by or against a municipal corporation may render the introduction of its charter or other proof of its incorporation unnecessary.⁸⁰

b. Implication. Incorporation is often implied from sovereign or official recognition of a municipality,⁸¹ as where the legislature has expressly or by necessary implication recognized a place as a corporation by annexing other municipal territory to it,⁸² by conferring additional municipal powers upon it,⁸³ by granting to it borough or town representation in the legislature,⁸⁴ by empowering it to issue municipal bonds,⁸⁵ by granting to it land for town commons,⁸⁶ or by enacting any other legislation, affecting its powers, franchises, functions, obligations, or liabilities which is inconsistent with the idea of its being unincorporated.⁸⁷

Effect of statute limiting amount of indebtedness.—The statute (24 U. S. St. at L. 171), providing that no municipal corporation shall become indebted in excess of four per cent of the value of the taxable property, is a limit on the municipal authorities, but does not limit the power of the legislature to levy assessments on the property within the corporation by proper legislation. Guthrie v. Territory, 1 Okla. 188, 31 Pac. 190, 21 L. R. A. 841.

Where a city and town covering the same territory are consolidated so that "the powers vested in such town shall be exercised by the city council," the council has no power to levy taxes for roads and bridges, since town highway commissioners cannot levy taxes for the construction or maintenance of city streets. *People v. Recognition of a place by state officers as a municipal corporation has been ruled on proper plea to preclude the state from proceeding by information in the nature of quo warranto to question its legal incorporation.⁸⁸ Indeed there are cases in which it has been ruled that the fact of existence and user of corporate powers is prima facie evidence of incorporation, and places upon the challenger the burden of proving the contrary.⁸⁹

c. Prescription. This method of proving incorporation which has long been recognized and practised in England in the cases of cities that have existed as municipal corporations "time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary,"⁹⁰ also obtains in the United States.⁹¹ It has been adjudged sufficient proof of incorporation that a municipality has exercised corporate powers without challenge for a long time, as for fifty years;⁹² for thirty years;⁹³ and even for twenty years.⁹⁴ Some of these municipalities in England were doubtless self-constituted, having assumed the privileges of other towns without grant or authority.⁹⁵ If such a corporation be once dissolved, a new corporation chartered in its place and endowed with all its powers, privileges, immunities, and property cannot claim by prescription of the former body.⁹⁶ The old common-law rule being that the franchise to be a corporation can subsist only in those to whom it is granted, when the corporation is dissolved homage ancestral is gone.⁹⁷ An act of incorporation of a town does not raise any conclusive presumption that the town was not before a corporate town.⁹⁸

d. Surrender of Charter and Reincorporation. A petition to change the charter of an incorporated town, signed by two thirds of the inhabitants of the corporation, and a second order of incorporation by the county court in pursuance of the petition, together with a subsequent election of town officers under the charter as changed by the county court, was held evidence upon which a jury might presume a surrender of the first, and an acceptance of the second, charter.⁹⁹

The consent of the feudal sovereign was absolutely necessary to their erection, inasmuch as many of his prerogatives and revenues were thereby considerably diminished. And so in England Blackstone tells us the king's consent, either impliedly or expressly given, was absolutely necessary to the erection of any corporation. 1 Blackstone Comm. 472. The methods by which this consent was expressly given were by act of parliament or by charter. Where the corporation existed by prescription, as in the case of the city of London, the consent of the king was conclusively presumed. Back v. Carpenter, 29 Kan. 349; Cooley Const. Lim. part of a state not already within a municipality may be incorporated if it contains the requisite number of legal voters, being freeholders and residents of the territory to be incorporated.¹ From their nature and the objects for which they are created it is necessary that the territory included in a municipal corporation should be clearly defined and well bounded;² and whether or not certain territory is included in a particular municipality must generally be determined by its charter, including amendments.³ The supreme control of municipalities by the legislature includes the power to prescribe the territorial lines.⁴ But the questions whether the boundary is definite and what it is are for the courts and not the legislature to determine.⁵ The general incorporation acts make provision for determining the boundaries of municipalities created under such acts;⁶ and in case of incorporation by special act the boundaries of the city or town are designated in the act of incorporation.⁷ A misdescription of a boundary of a proposed municipality is not a fatal defect, if other courses, distances, and descriptions show with reasonable certainty the boundary intended.⁸ The petition for incorporation setting forth the metes and bounds of the intended municipality may be regarded as a part of the order of incorporation, if the latter refers to the former as its basis.⁹ In determining the boundaries of municipalities it has been judicially declared that fixed monuments govern courses and distances;¹⁰ that the true lines of a township are meant, although others be marked on the ground;¹¹ that the description must give a definite location;¹² that a call for a turnpike road means the middle of the road and not its margin;¹³ that the description must be such as to include territory within certain lines;¹⁴ that the description, however, is sufficient if a surveyor can ascertain the boundaries with reasonable certainty;¹⁵ that lands covered by railroad tracks will not be included within the limits unless required in express terms;¹⁶ that the territory bounded by a railroad does not include any portion of its right of way or premises;¹⁷ and that the word "westerly" in describing a boundary means due west.¹⁸ A petition for an adjustment of boundaries need not generally be verified.¹⁹ Notice of an application for the appointment of commissioners to establish boundaries is usually unnecessary.²⁰

b. Boundaries on Waters. Municipal corporations situated upon a river and bounded by such river usually have jurisdiction to the middle thereof.²¹ Sometimes the charter or act of incorporation denotes that the boundary is the margin of the stream;²² but even then the jurisdiction, for the service of process and the enforcement of the law, may extend, by ancient and unvarying usage, to the middle of the river.²³ Acts of incorporation which make a fresh water and running stream the boundary of a town are to be construed in the same manner as deeds which make such a stream the boundary between coterminous proprietors; that is, if the stream be non-navigable, the boundary follows the thread of such stream;²⁴ and if it be navigable the low water mark will constitute the boundary.²⁵ But the middle of a navigable stream may be constituted the boundary of a municipality by statute.²⁶ statutory restriction as to the boundaries of municipal corporations, it is proper that their jurisdiction and limits should extend over the harbor and navigable water of the shore front; and all ships and vessels are under the jurisdiction of a city when at its wharves or within its harbor.²⁷ An act extending the boundaries of a town over the adjacent navigable waters does not thereby grant to the town the land covered by such water.²⁸

d. Territory Included by Usage or Acquiescence. Monuments and plain lines of location must generally, in determining the extent of territorial limits, prevail over any mere acts of user or attempted jurisdiction by the municipal authorities.²⁹ But when the boundary of a city has been acquiesced in by all persons interested for a period of twenty years or longer, such boundary will be considered the correct one, although its situation is a matter of uncertainty.³⁰ Although the charter of a municipality does not expressly include a certain place supposed to be within the corporate limits, yet if the inhabitants of such place have considered themselves residents thereof and have exercised and enjoyed the same municipal privileges and benefits as the other inhabitants for a long time, they will be amenable to police regulations.³¹ But the payment of taxes on lands erroneously assessed by a city is not such acquiescence on the part of the owner thereof as will prevent him from asserting that such land was not within the city.³²

And see Luke v. Brooklyn, 43 Barb. (N. Y.) 54 [affirmed in 1 Abb. Dec. 24, 3 Keyes 444, 3 Transcr. App. 305]. Even if the city of Brooklyn extended to low water mark only of the Long Island shore, it included all piers and other artificial erections below low water mark, and such piers in Gowanus bay were within the jurisdiction of the city assessors. *Tebo v. Where the boundaries of a village were by its charter described as "commencing at a point on the shore of the bay of New York," and running thence "in a due south-easterly line to the lower bay of New York; and thence along the lower and upper bay of New York north-easterly and northerly to the place of beginning," it was held that the intention of the legislature was to give, not an absolute and fixed boundary at the shore as it then existed, but a shifting terminus at the shore as it might exist either by changes in the natural banks or by artificial improvements. Bechtel v. Edgewater, 45 Hun (N. Y.) 240 [affirmed in 122 N. Y. 649, 25 N. E. 957]. See also supra, II, B, 1, b.

In Massachusetts the report of the harbor and land commissioners purporting to define the boundary line of tide-water between Hull and Boston is not evidence as to the jurisdiction of the city of Boston over islands situated in said tide-water, since the duty of the commissioners was to make an equitable division of the tide-water for purposes of municipal jurisdiction, and they had no power to define the boundaries on land between municipalities. Russ v. Boston, 157 Mass. 60, 31 N. E. 708.

Oakland, California.—Lands under the navigable waters of the bay of San Francisco, below the line of low tide in front of the Oakland water front, belong to the state, and are not within the boundaries or under the jurisdiction of the town of Oakland, as described in the freeholders' charter of 1889, and are therefore not subject to the provisions of such charter. *Southern Pac. exercise jurisdiction, a subsequent act of the legislature recognizing the town as a corporate body will operate to confirm such claim of boundaries as well as other matters of jurisdiction.³³

2. ALTERATION AND CREATION OF NEW MUNICIPALITIES — a. In General —

(i) POWER TO MAKE CHANGE. The power, in the first place, to determine the boundaries of a municipality and subsequently to alter them, resides, in the absence of constitutional restriction, in the legislature.³⁴ Its sovereign powers include the power to change the boundaries of municipal corporations at discretion and without consent of the municipality or its inhabitants.³⁵ Towns and cities mentioned by name in the state constitutions do not thereby acquire a constitutional fixity of boundary which will prevent the legislature from altering such boundary.³⁶

(ii) CHANGES IN GENERAL. The courts of this country have been inclined to restrict the scope of legislative power in changing the territory of municipal corporations.³⁷ They have declared that a municipality is a single body, and that its territory must be included within a single boundary.³⁸ Conceding the power of the legislature to create municipal corporations, and to alter them according to its own judgment of the public welfare, the courts have nevertheless held that

A statute enacting that when the selectmen of different towns disagree in renewing and establishing the boundaries and lines of such towns the court of sessions for the county in which such town is situated are authorized to settle and establish such disputed lines and renew the bounds and marks of the same does not give the court of sessions authority to alter existing lines and establish new ones. Gorrill v. Whittier, 3 N. H. 265.

Change of boundary of assembly district.— A statute altering the boundary of a city or other local division of the state is unconstitutional, if its incidental effect would be to alter the boundary of an assembly district at any other time than on the decennial enumeration of population. *Kinne v. this right must be exercised in accordance with the facts of nature.³⁹ Slight injustice to a part of the inhabitants will not be good ground for a court to enjoin a change in the boundaries of a municipality, where the public welfare requires such change;⁴⁰ and the courts are slow to declare acts changing the boundaries of a municipality void for indefiniteness.⁴¹

43. Right of people to representation.—Mass. St. (1854) c. 433, for abolishing Charlestown and annexing the territory included within its limits to Boston, providing that the territory of Charlestown, for the purposes of electing representatives to the general court, should, until otherwise provided by law, be a distinct representative district, entitled to the same number of representatives, and with the same rights and duties in their selection, as it would have possessed under the laws if the act had not been passed, was held unconstitutional and void, as creating and conferring on an anomalous representative district rights and duties conferred by Const. (1780) c. 1, art. 2, § 3, only upon corporate towns. Warren v. Charlestown, 2 Gray (Mass.) 84. And under Mich. Const. art. 4, § 4, providing that representatives in the state legislature shall be apportioned with reference to the population, and once an apportionment is made it shall not be changed until another enumeration, it was held that an act detaching portions of certain adjoining townships, and attaching them to a city as parts of existing wards, and in the formation of a new ward, which also had the effect of transferring such portions from one representative district to another, was unconstitutional. People v. Holihan, 29 Mich. 116. But it was held that the fact that Ga. Act, Aug. 12, 1903, providing for the enlargement of the boundaries of the city of Macon, did not provide for representation of the two wards created out of the new territory until the next election of members of the council did not render the act void. Toney v. Macon, 119 Ga. 83, 46 S. E. 80. See also Atty.-Gen. v. Springwells Tp. Bd., 143 Mich. 523, 107 N. W. 87; Smith v. Saginaw, 81 Mich. 123, 45 N. W. 964.

Right to local self-government.—Mich. Local Acts (1905), p. 1068, No. 627, providing for the annexation of certain territory to the city of Detroit, is not unconstitutional as depriving the people of the annexed territory of their right to local self-government in their village and school matters. Atty.-Gen. v. Springwells Tp. Bd., 143 Mich. 523, 107 N. W. 87. See as to the right of local self-government infra, IV.

Due process of law.—Nor is such statute unconstitutional as depriving the residents of the annexed territory of their property without due process of law by means of taxation. Atty.-Gen. v. Springwells Tp. Bd., 143 Mich. 523, 107 N. W. 87.

Withholding advantages.—A statute withholding absolutely for the period of ten years from newly added territory the advantages of police, light, and fire protection enjoyed by the old city, is unconstitutional, and this is true, although it further provides that the new territory shall be exempt from taxation for these purposes during such period. *Jones v. Laws (1888), p. 330, establishing a scheme for practical effectuation of annexation of territory to cities, which requires the annexed territory to be divided into wards in election districts by a commission which shall also appoint election officers, under whom a special election shall be held, when called on a notice to be given by the city clerk, is operative equally everywhere and at all times, and does not violate the constitutional prohibition against special legislation in regard to cities. Miller v. Camden, (N. J. Sup. 1899) 44 Atl. 961. See also Miller v. Camden, 64 N. J. L. 201, 44 Atl. 882. The act annexing the town of Stockton to the city of Camden (Pub. Laws (1899), p. 355) does not violate the amendment of the N. J. Const. (1875) limiting to general laws the power of regulating internal affairs of towns and counties. This constitutional provision does not apply either to the creation of municipal corporations or to the change of boundaries or political divisions, as this is not a regulation of internal affairs. Miller v. Greenwalt, 64 N. J. L. 197, 44 Atl. 880.

Classification.—The annexation of territory to cities relates to their "organization and government," within Ky. Const. § 156, providing for the classification of cities for that purpose, and the laws in relation to the annexation of territory to cities of the various classes may differ. Lewis v. Brandenburg, 105 Ky. 14, 47 S. W. 862, 48 S. W. 978, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1011.

Partial unconstitutionality.—A scheme for adding territory to a city, embodied in several statutes passed contemporaneously, providing among other things, for sewers and waterworks, and which would not have been passed had an unconstitutional provision not been inserted exempting the added territory from taxation of a certain kind for a certain period, must fail with such unconstitutional provision, the statute being void in toto. Jones v. Memphis, 101 Tenn. 188, 47 S. W. 138.

Provisions as to courts and pending causes or proceedings see Stone v. Charlestown, 114 Mass. 214.

Constitutional limitations as to the power to create municipal corporations only do not restrict the power of the legislature with respect to the annexation of territory to existing municipalities. Chandler v. Boston, 112 Mass. 200 (holding that the provisions of the second amendment of the Massachusetts constitution providing that no municipi-pal or city government should be erected or constituted in any town not containing twelve thousand inhabitants had no application to the annexation, by the authority of the legislature, of a town to a city already existing); Carbondale Tp.'s Appeal, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 339 (holding that the Pennsylvania act of May 24, 1887, providing for the annexation of territory adjacent to a city on petition of three fifths of the taxable inhabitants thereof, and ordinances of the city council pursuant thereto, were not in violation of Const. art. 15, § 1, providing that cities may be chartered whenever a majority of the electors of any town or borough having a population of at least ten thousand, shall vote at any general election in favor of the same).

burdens may be thereby imposed upon them.⁴⁵ The charter of a municipality is not a contract with the state, and the legislature may therefore enlarge its territorial extent, at its discretion.⁴⁶ Some limitations, however, have been placed by the courts upon this general power, particularly with respect to the territory which may be annexed.⁴⁷ The legislature may take territory from one municipal corporation and add it to another without the consent of either;⁴⁸ or may extend the limits of a municipality, or authorize the municipality to extend the same, so as to include the territory of another municipality;⁴⁹ and territory may be annexed to an existing municipality without direct legislation.⁵⁰ Usually general laws are enacted authorizing annexation of territory, and applying to existing as well as to subsequently created municipalities,⁵¹ and to municipalities created by special act as well as to those organized under general laws;⁵² but sometimes the statutes are more or less restricted in their application.⁵³ The legislature cannot delegate the power to annex territory to a municipality;⁵⁴ but it may by general laws authorize and provide for annexation and place the matter in the hands of the municipality or some appropriate board;⁵⁵ and it may vest in a court or other special tribunal power to determine when the conditions exist

In Missouri a city of over one hundred thousand inhabitants, organized under a freeholders' charter, by authority of Const. art. 9, § 16, providing for such organization, can extend its limits, by amending its charter, so as to include another municipality, under Rev. St. (1889) § 1880, as amended by Laws (1895), p. 55, providing a general law whereby such cities may extend their limits. Kansas City v. Stegmiller, 151 Mo. 189, 52 S. W. 723.

Cal. St. (1883) p. 97, classifying municipalities according to population, and providing a charter for each class, and authorizing the consolidation of contiguous municipal corporations, does not authorize the annexation of an incorporated sanitary district, or a part thereof, to an incorporated city or town. People v. Oakland, 123 Cal. 598, 56 Pac. 445.

Annexation by de facto corporation.—Whether a municipal organization was in all respects strictly legal or not in its inception is not for the authorities of an adjacent city to determine in proceedings to annex the same. If a corporation exists and exercises governmental powers the state, and not a rival corporation, must determine the question of its legality. Kirkpatrick v. State, 5 Kan. 673. Provisional municipalities established by Fla. Laws (1885), c. 3606, 3607, for cities whose charters were repealed for indebtedness, appointing commissioners with certain general powers, and declaring the defunct cities to be municipalities, "the boundaries of which shall be coextensive with the boundaries of such defunct cities and towns," and giving to the officers thereof the same powers vested in the officers of such defunct cities under the act of 1869, were held to have the power to extend their territorial limits, under the act of Feb. 4, 1869 (McClellan Dig. p. 255, § 44), as amended by Laws (1879), c. 3163, § 2, giving municipal authorities the power to extend their territorial limits and defining generally the powers and duties of municipalities. Saunders v. Leebrick, 43 Iowa 252, holding that Iowa Code (1873), § 411, providing that cities may institute proceedings in the circuit court for the annexation of contiguous territory under certain conditions, is not controlled, with respect to its operation upon cities acting under special charters, by Code, § 551; and its provisions apply as well to cities organized under special charters as to those incorporated under the general law.

under which municipal territory may or may not be extended.⁵⁶ It is not a delegation of legislative power to leave the annexation of territory to the option of the municipality, or provide for submission of the question to the vote of the people.⁵⁷ The corporate authorities can in no case annex territory without the authority of the legislature.⁵⁸ The authority to annex territory to a city does not rest on the same ground as the power to take property by eminent domain.⁵⁹ The powers with respect to the annexation of territory must always be exercised by the authority to whom such powers are delegated and in accordance with the provisions of the statute.⁶⁰ The presumption is always in favor of a legal annexation.⁶¹

Crittenden*, 70 S. W. 183, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 899. Where, subsequent to the building of a railroad depot some eight hundred yards from the center of a town containing not to exceed two hundred and fifty people, and outside of its corporate limits as then established, an addition was platted, adjoining such depot, and an unincorporated village, containing a population of about one hundred and forty persons, sprung up in such addition, it was held that an order sustaining objections to the extension of the limits of the original town to include such village should be reversed on appeal, if the court was satisfied that a failure to annex would materially retard the prosperity of the town. Fredonia v. Rice, 115 Ky. 443, 73 S. W. 1125, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 2331.

Tucker*, 36 Mich. 474, 24 Am. Rep. 601. An order of annexation is not invalid because it includes in the territory annexed land which is vacant, wet, and covered with timber, and which is not platted, although the platted territory of an incorporated town touches it upon two sides to its entire extent, unless it also appears that the land was not needed for any proper town purposes, as the extension of the street, sewer, gas, or water system, or to furnish needed places of abode or business for its residents, or for the extension of needed police regulation. Vestal v. Little Rock, 54 Ark. 321, 329, 15 S. W. 891, 16 S. W. 291, 11 L. R. A. 778. A petition by a city council to the board of county commissioners for annexation of contiguous unplatted territory, assigning as reasons therefor that the territory is a portion of the right of way of a railroad company, which needs better police surveillance than can be given without municipal control; that the company and its employees enjoy police protection without paying taxes therefor; that a number of the city streets and alleys are intercepted by such territory, and could be opened across it if a part of the city, and that such opening is needed for travel; that drains, sewers, and water-pipes should be constructed across such territory, which cannot be done by the city without annexation; and that the city is in need of increased revenue which would accrue from the taxation of such territory for purposes of police, water, and fire service, and the repair of streets, sets forth sufficient reasons for such annexation to warrant the board in annexing the territory and the circuit court in affirming such action. Lake Erie, etc., R. Co. v. Alexandria, 153 Ind. 521, 55 N. E. 435.

Drainage and police purposes.—The extension of the limits of a city is not unreasonable when the territory annexed thereby is nearly all improved, and necessary for drain-or for more adequate school facilities.⁶⁹ It is not a valid excuse for refusing annexation of territory that the taxes of such territory will be increased.⁷⁰ But on the objection of owners, sparsely settled outlying territory which would receive no substantial advantage from municipal government should not be annexed.⁷¹ And it seems that either the territory to be annexed must receive a material benefit or the annexation must be required by justice and equity; otherwise the proceedings are invalid.⁷²

Nebr. Comp. Sts. (1895) c. 14, § 99, art. 1, authorizes the boundaries of a village to be extended so as to include adjacent lands, where either they will be materially benefited from the annexation, or justice and equity require that it be done. Syracuse v. Mapes, 55 Nebr. 738, 76 N. W. 458; Hartington v. Luge, 33 Nebr. 623, 50 N. W. 957. Under said section the corporate limits of a village may be extended so as to embrace contiguous territory which is in such close proximity to the platted portion as to have some unity of interest therewith in the maintenance of municipal government. Syracuse v. Mapes, supra; Wahoo v. Tharp, 45 Nebr. 563, 63 N. W. 840; State v. Dimond, 44 Nebr. 154, 62 N. W. 498. Contiguous territory may be annexed, although it may not have been subdivided into tracts of ten acres or less, the statute providing for annexation "whether such territory has been subdivided into tracts or parcels of ten acres or less, or has not been so subdivided, in case the same would receive material benefits or advantages by its annexation to the corporation, or justice and equity require such annexation to be made." Syracuse v. Mapes, supra.

Effect of remonstrances.—Under a statute which authorizes the court to approve the annexation of territory to a town if satisfied "that less than seventy-five per cent of the freeholders of the territory to be annexed have remonstrated, and that the adding of the territory to the town will be for its interest, and will cause no material injury to the persons owning real estate in the territory sought to be annexed," the fact that less than seventy-five per cent of the freeholders have remonstrated is not conclusive in favor of annexation. Latonia v. Hopkins, 104 Ky. 419, 47 S. W. 248, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 620.

In Pennsylvania where the lands sought to be excluded from the annexation of a village to a borough manifestly constituted a part of the village, and could not be excluded without leaving a portion of the township in which the village was located lying between the ends of a principal street of the borough as it would be after annexation, it was proper not to exclude such lands. Glade Tp.'s Petition, 168 Pa. St. 441, 32 Atl. 37.

In Texas Rev. St. art. 503, which provides the means whereby a designated class of inhabitants of any territory adjoining the limits of a city "to the extent of a half mile in width" may procure the addition of such territory to the city, the words quoted were not intended to confine the authority to make an annexation of territory to an area neither more nor less than half a mile wide, but it was intended to limit the area which might be added to a city to half a mile wide. *East Dallas v. St. (1901) §§ 1179–1183, relating to the organization of such cities from territory lying in different counties, empowers a city lying in one county to extend its boundaries into another. It has been said, however, that the extension of a city across a county boundary is so unusual and is attended with such manifest practical inconveniences growing out of the relation of the municipal and county governments that an intention to authorize such an act should not be lightly inferred from the use of general language, but should be evidenced by express terms or by the clearest implication. Portsmouth Sav. Bank v. Smith, supra. See Tabor, etc., R. Co. v. Dyson, 86 Iowa 310, 53 N. W. 245, holding that an incorporated town situated on the border of a county cannot, by proceedings under chapter 10 of the code, annex contiguous territory in an adjoining county.

also been held that an unoccupied tract of country or farming land cannot be made a part of a municipality for the mere purpose of increasing the municipal revenue; ⁸⁴ that lands occupied by the owner exclusively as a florist and farmer, to which no streets or municipal improvements extend, and which the lines of settlements have not reached, cannot be annexed. ⁸⁵ Nor can two square miles of territory containing two settlements of people separated by unoccupied farming lands, not connected by lines of buildings or other improvements, be annexed to a municipal corporation; ⁸⁶ and a city comprising two square miles of territory cannot annex a territory of ten square miles including farms and unoccupied land. ⁸⁷ The mere fact that lands are contiguous is never a sufficient ground alone to justify annexation; nor is the fact that such lands are greatly enhanced in value unless it is due to their adaptability for town uses. ⁸⁸ But when the legislature exercises the power of direct legislation it may annex to a municipal corporation any territory which it deems proper to be included in the municipality. ⁸⁹ Difficult questions have poses, densely populated, and already receiving many advantages of a city, is reasonable and cannot be successfully resisted.¹ It has been held that the council or board having authority to annex land contiguous to a city cannot annex land separated from it by the right of way of a railroad;² but under some statutes lands occupied by a railroad company may be annexed.³ An uninhabited tract of land nowhere adjoining an existing village, and in which the existing corporation has no special interest, cannot be made, even by an act of the legislature, a part of such a village merely for the purpose of increasing the corporate revenues.⁴

St. Ohio*, §§ 1536-1560, authorizing a proceeding in a court of common pleas for the detachment of unplatted farm lands from a municipality and attachment thereof to the adjacent township, is not unconstitutional on the ground that it violates public policy, or on the ground that it takes away the power of local self-government existing prior to the adoption of the constitution and preserved therein. Grover Hill v. McClure, 27 Ohio Cir. St. (1903) § 3483*, authorizing the changing of the boundaries of cities by reducing the limits thereof, etc., is not invalid because only the taxpayers in the territory proposed to be stricken off can make a defense, and because the defense is limited to a showing that the change will impose unjust burdens on them; the legislature having the power to reduce the limits of municipalities and to limit the defense to a proceeding therefor. Miller v. Pineville, 89 S. W. 261, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 379. But Ark. Act, March 9, 1877, "to define the boundary of the city" of Little Rock, was held unconstitutional, in that it operated to suspend a general law, so that the attempt made therein to cut off an addition to the city of Little Rock failed. *Little Rock v. done without consulting the municipality, or that portion of its inhabitants thus summarily detached, unless forbidden by constitutional limitations,⁶ although sometimes the statute provides for submission of the question to the voters.⁷ This power of increase and diminution of municipal territory is plenary, inherent, and discretionary in the legislature, and, when duly exercised cannot be revised by the courts.⁸ The statutes generally provide for the detachment or excision of territory on application to some officer or board,⁹ or to the courts,¹⁰ and such

Construction of statute.—W. Va. Act, Feb. 28, 1872, "for the relief of Samuel W. Johnston," providing "that the farm of Samuel W. Johnston, on which he now resides, be, and the same is hereby, excluded from the corporate limits of the city of Huntington," did not exclude any portion of the farm sold and conveyed by Johnston before the act was passed. Phillips v. Huntington, 35 W. Va. 406, 14 S. E. 17. Where plaintiff's land was within the limits of a town as originally incorporated, but a subsequent act of incorporation included the section as originally laid out, "bounded therein by lands now belonging to" plaintiff, it was held that the act excluded from the incorporation the lands of plaintiff. *Winter v. But under Fla. Acts (1877), c. 3025, authorizing county commissioners to prescribe new boundaries for incorporated towns when it appears that the boundaries are extended beyond necessary and useful limits, and include an undue quantity of vacant farming lands, it was held that the power to sever a part of a town in order to annex it to another was not conferred. *Jacksonville v. Discretion.—Under Hurd Rev. St. Ill. (1897) p. 289, c. 24, par. 206, providing that whenever the owners, representing a majority of the area of any land embraced in any village, and on the borders thereof, shall petition the trustees of the village to detach such territory, the trustees may, by ordinance, to be passed by a majority of the members elected to the board of trustees, detach the territory described in the petition, the trustees have no discretion to refuse to detach, if a petition signed by the requisite number of property-owners, owning property on the borders of a village, shall be presented to them. *Young v. In the absence of a statutory provision therefor, a court of equity has no jurisdiction of an action to detach territory from a municipality at the suit of property owners. Hastings v. Hansen, 44 Nebr. 704, 63 N. W. 34.

Discretion of court or jury.—Whether outlying property within the territorial limits of a town shall be severed therefrom, as authorized by Code, § 622 et seq., is a matter within the judicial discretion of the court or jury hearing the application for severance. Johnson v. Forest City, 129 Iowa 51, 105 N. W. 353, holding that where the entire tract of outlying property within the boundaries of a town was desirable and suitable for residential purposes, and although there were no streets or alleys, except certain roads crossing the tract, and it had no fire protection, it had been policed by the town laws apply to municipalities existing under special charter as well as to those organized under a general law, unless they are excepted.¹¹ Territory extended by ministerial authority beyond necessary and useful limits and including an undue amount of farming land may be detached;¹² but territory within a city's limits and been subject to sanitary regulations, and by reason of the rapid growth of the town would shortly be needed for residences, it was not an abuse of the trial court's discretion to refuse to grant a petition for severance thereof.

Mandatory statutes.—In Colorado the statute providing for the disconnection of territory from a town or city is mandatory, and, when the facts required to be established by the statute have been shown by competent proof, the court must disconnect the territory, without regard to its views concerning justice or equity. Anaconda Min. Co. v. Anaconda, 33 Colo. 70, 80 Pac. 144.

When application should not be granted.—Cal. Act, March 19, 1889 (St. (1889) p. 356), entitled "An act to provide for changing the boundaries of cities and municipal corporations, and to exclude territory therefrom," was not intended as a means by which a city might be practically disincorporated, and a petition for a special election thereunder should not be granted when the contemplated change of boundaries will exclude nearly the whole of the city's territory, nine tenths of its population, and four fifths of its trustees, and the population left will be less than one half that necessary to form a municipal corporation of the lowest class. Wiedwald v. Dodson, 95 Cal. 450, 30 Pac. 580.

Maintenance of streets precluding detachment.—Under an act authorizing the disconnection of territory from a town or city, and making it a condition precedent that the city shall not have maintained streets, lights, and other public utilities for the period of three years, the maintenance of one street precludes disconnection. Anaconda Min. Co. v. Anaconda, 33 Colo. 70, 80 Pac. 144.

Platted territory.—Under Colo. Sess. Laws (1901), p. 386, c. 106, § 2, relative to disconnecting territory from a town and providing that it must appear that no part of the territory has been platted into lots and blocks as a part of the town, where the territory in question constitutes a portion of a subdivision of the town included in the town site at the time of the incorporation, and the plat of the subdivision shows the streets of the town running east and west, and each alternate street running north and south laid out through the subdivision, and the spaces between the streets divided into parcels of various dimensions, the parcels being numbered, the territory cannot be disconnected, as it is platted into lots and blocks. Fruita v. Williams, 33 Colo. 157, 80 Pac. 132.

Rival villages.—Where a small village became incorporated, and included territory two miles long and one mile wide, and a rival village afterward sprang up in another portion of the territory so included, and the interests of the villages, whose centers were about a mile apart, were antagonistic, and the land lying between them was not platted or used for town purposes, it was held that a petition by the people of the new village, under Iowa Code, §§ 440–446, for a severance of their territory from the corporation, was properly granted. Ashley v. Calliope, 71 Iowa 466, 32 N. W. 458.

Cities not included in statute.—Nebr. Comp. St. (1893) c. 14, § 101, relating to the change of municipal limits, and detaching territory included therein, by proceedings in the district court, does not apply to cities of the first class having less than twenty-five thousand inhabitants. Hastings v. Hansen, 44 Nebr. 704, 63 N. W. 34.

In Pennsylvania the court of quarter sessions has no authority on petition of a single landowner to exclude his land from the borough after the borough has been duly incorporated, since the act of 1863 (Pamph. Laws 300), giving a landowner the right to object when he finds his property included within the limits of a proposed borough, can only be taken advantage of when a borough is about to be incorporated. Lark's Petition, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. 479. Where farming lands have been included within the boundaries of a borough, without objection at the proper time on the part of the owner, the court, upon an application to erect a new borough out of the old one, has no jurisdiction to grant a petition to exclude such lands from the new borough, to which they properly belong by reason of their location. In re Collingdale Borough, 11 Pa. Co. Ct. 105.

12. Jacksonville v. L'Engle, 20 Fla. 344. Where an incorporated city included within its limits four sections of land, only eighty acres of which were platted, and the rest was cultivated land, and the owners received no benefit from its being within the city limits and were subjected to increased taxation thereby, and the land was not necessary for any public purpose, except to increase the city's revenue, it was held that such land was properly excluded by the circuit court after the city council had refused so to do. Pelletier v. Ashton, 12 S. D. 366, 81 N. W. 735. Where lands included within the limits of a city are used wholly for cultivation, and are not needed for city purposes, and are not benefited by being within the corporation, they should be severed from the city upon the petition of the owners; and where the lands have never been liable for municipal taxes, such severance should not be conditioned upon payment by the owners of any portion of the indebtedness incurred by the city while the lands were attached thereto. Evans v. Council Bluffs, 65 Iowa 238, 21 N. W. 584.

cannot be severed on the ground that it receives no benefits from the municipal improvements, and is not needed for present municipal purposes, where it is manifest that it will soon be required for such purposes in the extension of the city in that direction.¹³ The vacation by the owner of a plot of addition to a city within the corporate limits does not ipso facto disconnect the platted lands from the municipality.¹⁴ A person whose land has been improperly included within municipal boundaries may be estopped to ask that it be detached or excluded;¹⁵ but the mere fact that the petitioner may have received benefits from the city while his lands were within city limits will be no reason for refusing detachment of such territories when sufficient grounds are shown.¹⁶ The state immediately assumes full control of detached territory previously embraced in a city.¹⁷

(II) CONSOLIDATION.¹⁸ The legislature may also consolidate or authorize the consolidation of two separate corporations into a single one, this being but another illustration of the inherent and plenary power possessed by the legislature to create, control, and dissolve all municipal corporations.¹⁹ Since the legislature

In an action to strike certain territory from out the limits of a city, evidence that the land is not needed for any possible increase of the population, that it is taxed higher, and the owners are deprived of school advantages which they would enjoy if severed therefrom, was held insufficient to warrant a verdict in favor of the city being set aside. Christ v. Webster City, 105 Iowa 119, 74 N. W. 743. Under Miller Code Iowa, § 443, authorizing a severance of land included within the limits of a town or city, if the court or jury shall be "satisfied that the prayer of the petitioner should be granted," it is not an abuse of discretion for the court to refuse a severance, where the land in question is within a block of the business portion of the town, and it appears that portions of such land are desirable for residences. *Monk v. Facts not constituting an estoppel.—But it has been held that the fact that the owner of unplatted land, used exclusively for agricultural purposes for years, tacitly submitted to its inclusion in the incorporated limits of the village, does not estop him from proceeding under the statute to have it disconnected therefrom. *Barber v. Representative districts.—Mich. Local Act (1889), No. 455, consolidating the cities of Saginaw and East Saginaw, which comprised distinct representative districts, does not contravene Const. art. 4, §§ 3, 4, which provides for the division of the state into representative districts, and enacts that such division shall remain unaltered until the return of another enumeration, which is to be had every ten years, as the act expressly by one act might dissolve an existing corporation and by two succeeding acts charter two other contiguous municipalities comprising the same territory in the exercise of its conceded powers it may of course effect the same result by a single act without circumlocution. It is usual to submit the question of consolidation by legislative enactment to a vote of the people of the several corporations to be thus united; but unless the constitution so requires, it is competent for the legislature to make a consolidation without consulting the wishes of the people.²⁰ The legislative power to unite two cities is not affected by the existence of charitable trusts for the schools and for the poor of one of the cities.²¹ Under a statute providing for the consolidation of cities "lying adjacent to each other, and not more than three fourths of one mile apart," the consolidation of three cities is not illegal because one of them is not contiguous to the other two; the distance separating them being less than three fourths of a mile.²²

(III) DIVISION.²³ The legislature also has the power to divide a municipal corporation, such special power being a part of that general authority which the legislature possesses over all municipal corporations as agencies of the government.²⁴ There can be no division by the municipal authorities except under legislative authority.²⁵

d. Proceedings—(i) IN GENERAL. The proceedings for annexation or detachment of territory to or from a municipality are prescribed by statute, and to be provides (tit. 16, § 31) that it shall not change in any respect the boundaries of the existing representative districts, or the manner of electing representatives, and preserves the old voting precincts intact. Smith v. Saginaw, 81 Mich. 123; 45 N. W. 964.

Partial unconstitutionality.—The fact that an act consolidating two cities authorizes and makes it the duty of the council of the consolidated city to issue bonds to raise money to purchase a site for and erect a city hall, and provides that this requirement shall not be abrogated without the assent of a majority of the aldermen, and shall be construed as in the nature of a contract between the two cities, if unconstitutional, does not affect the validity of the balance of the act. Smith v. Saginaw, 81 Mich. 123, 45 N. W. 964.

Construction of statutes.—Under Nebr. Comp. St. c. 12a, § 3, providing that a city of the metropolitan class may include within its corporate limits an area not to exceed twenty-five square miles, including any township or village organization within such limits, and that such organization shall thereupon cease and terminate, such a city cannot divide the territory of a village and annex a portion thereof, but it must include the entire village. Omaha v. South Omaha, 31 Nebr. 378, 47 N. W. 1113. Such statute does not authorize a city of the metropolitan class to extend its limits so as to include a city of the second class. Omaha v. South Omaha, supra. The existence of a natural boundary line between two villages, such as a deep, wooded ravine, is not such division of territory as requires separate corporate existence; and where a majority of the landowners on each side of the ravine demand incorporation with one of the villages into a borough, it cannot be said that the limits of that village would be unduly extended, or adjacent territory of the neighboring village invaded, by granting the application. In re Edgewood Borough, 130 Pa. St. 348, 18 Atl. 646.

Application to existing corporations under special charters.—Wash. Act, March 27, 1890 (Acts, p. 138), providing that "two or more contiguous municipal corporations may become consolidated into one corporation after proceedings had as required in this section," and authorizing a special election to be held on the question of consolidation, applies to preëxisting corporations, created by special charter, as well as to those organized under general incorporation laws. *State v. Strict construction of statute.—An act providing that if any city desires to annex contiguous territory not laid off in lots, and the owner will not consent to it, the common council shall present to the board of county commissioners a petition setting forth the reasons of such annexation, and at the same time present to such board an accurate description, by metes and bounds, accompanied with a plat of the lands desired to be annexed; that the common council shall give thirty days' notice by publication in some newspaper of the intended petition, describing said lands; that such board, on reception of the petition, shall hear the testimony, and if, after inspection of the map, etc., it is of opinion that the prayer should be granted, they shall cause an entry to be made in the order book specifying the territory annexed, etc., according to the survey, and cause a copy to be filed with the county recorder, is not one against private right, nor in derogation of the common law, but should be strictly construed. Stiltz v. Indianapolis, 55 Ind. 515.

In Pennsylvania, where borough limits were changed by annexing new territory by proceedings of the borough council under the act of April 30, 1851, and the required plan of the territory annexed was filed with the clerk of the court, as directed by the act of June 2, 1871, the matter might be laid before any subsequent grand jury; and, if in other respects there was no violation of the statutory requirements, the proceedings would not be set aside after their approval by a grand jury and the court. In re Edwardsville Borough, 18 Pa. In Indiana, where territory not platted is sought to be annexed to a city to which it lies adjacent, the board of county commissioners has exclusive original jurisdiction over the matter, and the city must by petition secure from that body the proper order. Delphi v. Startzman, 104 Ind. 343, 3 N. E. 937.

The legislature may constitutionally pass a general law providing for the annexation of territory to a municipal corporation and providing for such annexation on petition to a court, requiring the court to determine whether justice and equity require such annexation, and authorizing it to enter a decree accordingly; the question being so far of a judicial character that the courts may be vested with jurisdiction to determine the same. Wahoo v. Dickinson, 23 Nebr. 426, 36 N. W. 813. See also Ford v. North Des Moines, 80 Iowa 626, 45 N. W. 1031; Burlington v. Leebrick, 43 Iowa 252; *Blanchard v. Laws (1886), c. 69, § 1, providing for the extension of the limits of a city and conferring upon the district courts power to hear and determine the municipal council, take proceeding for the change of municipal territory.²⁸ The question whether annexed territory immediately adjoins the limits of the town is a question of fact for the board or court to determine upon a proper hearing for that purpose.²⁹ The proceedings necessary to effect a change in the limits of a borough are usually the same as those required to be taken in the original incorporation.³⁰ In some states unplatted lots contiguous to a city can, in the absence of the owner's consent, be annexed only on petition to the commissioners or court.³¹ The courts will order the exclusion of farming lands upon petition if satisfied that no public or private right will thereby be injured.³² Under some statutes a city council has no discretion in the matter of detaching territory when the petition for such purpose conforms to the law, while under others it has such discretion.³³

(1) ORDINANCES. Ordinances annexing or detaching territory must be passed as required by statute, otherwise the proceedings are void.³⁴ A city cannot, by an ordinance purporting to define the boundary lines, disconnect territory legally whether a proposed ordinance of a city extending its limits will be to the interest of the city, and will cause no manifest injury to the persons owning the land, is not unconstitutional as delegating legislative power to a judicial officer; the findings of fact made by a judge of the district court by virtue of the statute being the exercise of judicial power. Callen v. Junction City, 43 Kan. 627, 23 Pac. 652, 7 L. R. A. 736.

In Illinois, where the charter of a city existing at the time of the adoption of the constitution of 1870 provided that any tract of land adjoining such city, laid off into city or town lots, a plat of which being duly recorded, etc., should be and form a part of said city, provided the city council should so declare, and in 1875 the city council declared a tract of land, which came within the requirements of the charter, a part of the city it was held that the action of the city council was lawful, and that such territory thereby became a part of the city. Covington v. East St. Louis, 78 Ill. 548.

In Pennsylvania in proceedings for annexation of a borough by a city under the act of May 23, 1889, the petition invoking action by the quarter sessions for election purposes, jurisdiction is vested upon petition filed by the presidents of councils. The mere filing of the petition does not complete the disconnection, but the passing and filing of the ordinance are the consummation of the act. People v. Binns, 192 Ill. 68, 61 N. E. 376.

Time of determining reasonableness of ordinance.—Under Miss. Rev. Code (1892), §§ 2912a, 2913, as amended by Acts (1902), p. 154, c. 103, permitting the annexation by cities of adjacent unincorporated territory by ordinance, and providing that appeal from the ordinance shall be to the circuit court on an issue to be made up there, and that the question shall be whether the proposed extension be or be not unreasonable, the reasonableness of the extension is to be tested by the circumstances existing at the time of the enactment of the ordinance. Jackson v. Whiting, 84 Miss. 163, 36 So. 611.

Ordinance pending protesting suits.—The fact that suits protesting against the annexation of territory to a city were still pending when the final ordinance providing for annexation was passed does not render the ordinance invalid; it being sufficient that the right of the city to make the annexation had been determined in one action already decided, the judgment therein being binding upon all residents of the territory. Specht v. Louisville, 58 S. W. 607, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 699.

Construction of ordinance.—An ordinance to extend town limits "one-third of a mile from the public well on the corner of T. and M. streets" calls for addition of a square. Hardesty v. Mt. Eden, 86 S. W. 687, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 745.

Failure of mayor to issue proclamation.—The failure of the mayor, immediately after an election to determine whether a town incorporated under a special law shall become annexed. That can be done only by a proceeding in compliance with the statute;³⁵ and an ordinance annexing territory, part of which is subdivided into lots, and part not so subdivided, is void in toto where the statute provides that only subdivided territory may be annexed in this manner.³⁶ An ordinance annexing or detaching territory from a municipality passed before the repeal of the statute authorizing the same is not necessarily affected by the repeal,³⁷ but an ordinance passed after the repeal is ineffective.³⁸ Mandamus will lie in a proper case to compel the council or board of trustees to investigate the facts and pass an ordinance if the statutory conditions exist.³⁹

(iii) *NOTICE AND APPEARANCE.*⁴⁰ The statutes providing for the annexation of territory to municipal corporations usually require notice to be given of the annexation or the application therefor or the hearing thereon and such requirement must be observed.⁴¹ No part of a specified territory can be annexed to a city incorporated under the general laws, to issue his proclamation extending the city limits, as required by the ordinance, is immaterial, where an ordinance is subsequently passed, recognizing the added territory as a part of the city. State v. Westport, 116 Mo. 582, 22 S. W. 888.

Showing as to passage of ordinance see Carbondale Tp.'s Appeal, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 339.

Ordinance as evidence of annexation.—An ordinance defining the boundaries of a city cannot be accepted as evidence of the annexation of contiguous territory, not included in the corporate limits prior to the passage of such ordinance. Hall County School Dist. No. 30 v. Grand Island School Dist., 63 Nebr. 44, 88 N. W. 120.

Repeal of ordinance.—Where an ordinance proposing the annexation of territory to a city of the first class, as provided by section 2761 of Kentucky statutes, was repealed after a petition had been filed by residents of such territory objecting to the annexation, it was held that the refusal of the court to sustain the city's motion to dismiss the proceeding at its cost was prejudicial error, as a judgment adverse to annexation precludes the city from making another effort to annex the territory for two years thereafter. Louisville v. Crescent Hill, 52 S. W. 1054, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 755.

Franklin*, 40 Ohio St. 340, holding that a city ordinance for the annexation of contiguous territory, passed while the act of March 1, 1877 (74 Ohio Laws, p. 36) was in force, continued in force until annexation was finally effected, or a final decision was rendered on the merits, although that act was repealed before a third application was finally granted by an act continuing in force all existing ordinances "not inconsistent with this title."

38. Phœnix Nursery Co. v. Seibert, 101 Ill. App. 147, holding that the disconnection of territory from a village under the act of 1879 was not consummated by the filing of a petition containing the statutory requirements, and the repeal by the legislature of the enabling act of 1879 prior to the pas-

39. Young v. Carey, 184 Ill. 613, 56 N. E. 960 [reversing 80 Ill. App. 601], holding that upon the filing of a petition to disconnect territory from a city or village, under the act of 1879, the only questions for the council or board of trustees to determine are whether the territory is located and the petition signed as required by the statute, and mandamus will lie to compel an investigation of such facts, and the passage of an ordinance if they are found to exist. See also Roberts v. People, 93 Ill. App. 645. Under Ky. St. § 3483, providing a method for striking territory from the boundaries of cities, and requiring the city council, on petition, to pass an ordinance defining the boundary to be stricken, and also requiring, after publication of such ordinance, a petition to be filed in the circuit court for a judgment for the relief demanded, it was held that, in mandamus to compel a city council to pass the ordinance provided for in such section, that an answer averring that the city had a large bonded indebtedness incurred for waterworks, and that many of the petitioners for the ordinance received special privileges therefrom, etc., was demurrable. *Lebanon v. without public notice of the hearing, as required by statute.⁴² This has been held to be true notwithstanding a majority of the property holders are present at the hearing and consent to the annexation.⁴³ Notice is sufficient, if it accurately describes the territory by metes and bounds, and an additional allegation professing to give the names of the landowners is surplusage and the omission to name all the landowners is of no consequence;⁴⁴ but the notice must always be such as to give the landowners notice that their lands are involved.⁴⁵ Annexation proceedings are not invalidated by erroneous statements of the names of owners of land to be annexed in the notice, where such lands are described accurately by metes and bounds.⁴⁶ In reckoning time the first day is excluded and the last day included.⁴⁷ The following have been held requisite and sufficient notice in the several jurisdictions: Notice signed by the city clerk and attested by the city attorney, as sufficiently showing that the common council authorized the giving of the notice;⁴⁸ personal service on all landowners of the territory sought to be annexed;⁴⁹ notice posted on the territory proposed to be annexed;⁵⁰ publication of the ordinance in two newspapers;⁵¹ a notice stating the day when the petition will be presented.⁵² In one state at least it is held, under the general rule of the effect of appearance, that there is a waiver of objection to notice by all the interested parties being present in court.⁵³ Where an owner, whose land a town begins proceedings to annex, moves to quash the service on him because the petition does not set out sufficient reasons for annexation, he makes a general appearance notwithstanding his motion recites that he enters a special one, and he thereby waives defects in the service.⁵⁴

A petition for the disconnection of territory from a town, alleging that the town had not maintained any streets, alleys, "or" other public utilities within the tract in question, was not insufficient on the theory that, as the statute requires land shall not be disconnected when it is shown that the town has maintained streets, lights, "and other public utilities," the use of the word "or," instead of "and," rendered the petition insufficient. *Fletcher v. The corporation attorney of a city is its agent, and such attorney is the proper party to sign a petition in a proceeding instituted by a city for the annexation of territory;⁶⁶ and a petition by a city for the annexation of territory, purporting to be that of the common council and mayor, is sufficient, at least as against a collateral attack, although signed by the mayor only,⁶⁷ or by two thirds of the city council.⁶⁸

(v) PLAT, MAP, OR PLAN OF PROPERTY TO BE ANNEXED. A plat, map, or plan must be attached to or accompany a petition for annexation of territory, when it is so required by the statute.⁷⁴ It need not, however, be filed at the same time with the petition, but may be filed afterward and before the petition is considered.⁷⁵ In Pennsylvania the omission of the filing of a plan of an intended extension in the office of the court of quarter sessions, as required by statute, is fatal to the proceedings, even though the exceptors may have had actual knowledge;⁷⁶ but such plat need not show which roads are opened, what portion of the lands is built upon, or what improvements exist.⁷⁷

under a statute requiring the city council, on receiving a petition for the annexation of territory to the city, to submit the question whether such annexation shall be made without delay to a vote of the electors of the city and of the territory to be annexed, it was held that the city council had jurisdiction of a petition for the annexation of territory, even though it had not yet taken final action on a prior petition for the annexation of the same territory, where the second petition included all the territory covered by the first, and everyone entitled to vote on the first was also entitled to vote on the second.⁷⁹

(vii) PARTIES. The statutes providing for annexation or detachment of territory to or from a municipal corporation usually prescribe who may apply therefor,⁸⁰ and who shall be made parties to the proceeding.⁸¹ Under some statutes the application can only be made by the municipal authorities,⁸² while under others it is made by the legal voters or a majority of them, or by the owners of the property affected.⁸³

(viii) OBJECTIONS AND REMONSTRANCES. (ix) HEARING AND EVIDENCE. Where a town has voted for annexation the burden is upon the remonstrants to show sufficient cause against it.⁸⁶ Statutes authorizing the annexation of unplatted contiguous territory not laid out in lots render the fact that such lands are unplatted "jurisdictional," and it must be not only alleged but proved in a proceeding to annex such territory.⁸⁷ Evidence that a tract of land is occupied as a homestead for agricultural purposes does not show it to be unplatted for purposes of annexation to a city.⁸⁸ Any evidence is proper which tends to show the location of the town, its improvements and surroundings, its institutions and advantages as a trading point, the various kinds of industries carried on in the town and territory to be annexed, the business relations between the owners of the land in the territory to be annexed and the mutual benefits between the remonstrant and the town.⁸⁹ That persons signing the petition were taxable inhabitants of the territory to be annexed may be shown by other evidence than the assessment rolls.⁹⁰ Where the territory sought to be annexed is connected, although upon different sides of the town, the residents of the territory are not entitled to have the questions of annexation of territory on different sides of the town considered as separate propositions.⁹¹ Statutes sometimes provide for submission of an application for annexation of territory by the court to the grand jury for an investigation and report by them.⁹²

(x) *ORDER OR DECREE.*⁹³ The order or decree of the board or court vested with jurisdiction in proceedings for the annexation or detachment of territory to or from a municipal corporation must, to be valid, be in compliance with the statutory requirements.⁹⁴ Unless authorized by the statute a county board

It was held that the statute contemplates that the notice should be published in each of the four succeeding weekly issues of the newspaper, and that, where a city did not publish such notice four weeks consecutively, but published the same irregularly, taking two months therefor, a remonstrance filed thirty days before the enactment of the second or annexing ordinance, although more than thirty days after the first ordinance, prevented the city from taking further action in the matter until the circuit court determined the questions arising on the petition. *Bardstown v. Certificate of grand jury.—In a proceeding under this act to annex land to a borough it is necessary that the certificate of the grand jury should set forth substantially that, after a full investigation of the case, they find that the conditions prescribed by law have been complied with, and that it is expedient to grant the prayer of the petitioners. A mere certificate that the application is "approved" is insufficient. In re Freeland, 7 Kulp (Pa.) 107.

Petitions not evidence.—Petitions remonstrating against annexation of land to a borough, under Pa. Act, June 11, 1879, §§ 2, 3 (Pamphl. Laws 150), are not evidence and therefore are properly excluded by the court from the grand jury which has the matter of annexation under investigation. Glade Tp.'s Petition, etc., 168 Pa. St. 441, 32 Atl. 37.

Disqualification of grand juror.—A grand juror is properly excluded from participation in proceedings to annex territory to a borough, where it appears that he has interests in the borough, and where he states to the court under oath that he is opposed to the annexation, and that he had previously declared that he would do all that he could against it. In re Plymouth Borough, 167 Pa. What order must show.—Under W. Va. Code (1887), c. 47, §§ 48, 49, providing that the corporate limits of towns containing a population of less than two thousand inhabitants shall be changed by vote ordered by the council, the result of which vote, if in favor of the change, shall be certified to the circuit court, and that the circuit court shall enter an order approving and confirming the change, and directing a copy certified to the council, etc., it is not necessary to the validity of the order approving such change that it should show on its face that the town contained less than two thousand inhabitants. Point Pleasant Bridge Co. v. Point Pleasant,

(xi) RECORD. The record of proceedings for the annexation of territory to a municipality must affirmatively show compliance as to jurisdictional matters with the statute authorizing the same; ⁹⁶ but the proceedings will not be invalidated by immaterial omissions or by omissions which may be afterward supplied or corrected.⁹⁷ The record need not contain the notices of election, unless this is required by the statute, but it is sufficient if it appears that the notices were given.⁹⁸

(xii) *REVIEW ON APPEAL, WRIT OF ERROR, OR CERTIORARI*⁹⁹—(A) In General. Whether proceedings for the annexation or detachment of territory to or from a municipal corporation may be reviewed on appeal or writ of error depends upon the statute and the nature of the proceedings.¹ Generally the proceedings may be so reviewed.² Under some statutes an appeal can only be taken

32 W. Va. 328, 9 S. E. 231; Davis v. Point Pleasant, 32 W. Va. 289, 9 S. E. 228.

Passage of ordinance or resolution see Seward v. Conroy, 33 Nebr. 430, 50 N. W. 329; Carbondale Tp.'s Appeal, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 339.

Showing as to determination of board.—Under Cal. St. (1889) p. 358, c. 247, providing that the board of trustees of a town, on receiving a petition signed by one fifth of the voters of the town and of territory sought to be annexed, shall call a special election and submit the question of annexation to a popular vote, it is not necessary that any record of the determination of the board as to the sufficiency of the petition be made other than the order submitting the proposition, which order implies a finding that the petition was sufficient to give the board power to act; and even if it were necessary for the record to show that the board had passed on the sufficiency of the petition, a recital in the order calling the election that the petition was signed by one fifth of the voters would be sufficient for that purpose. People v. Ontario, 148 Cal. 625, 84 Pac. 205.

2. Colorado.—Martin v. Simpkins, 20 Colo. 438, 38 Pac. 1092, holding that the writ of error being a constitutional writ of right from the supreme court to every final judgment of the county court, it cannot be abolished as to such judgments, nor its scope of office materially impaired; and that the proceeding required to be instituted, carried on, and consummated in the county court as the means of dissolving one municipality and annexing the same to another under the act of April 11, 1893, is a judicial proceeding, and the approval of the report of the annexation proceedings by such court is a judgment to which the writ of error will lie from the supreme court; and holding further that resident citizens and taxpayers of a municipality sought to be annexed to another under said act have such an interest in the subject-matter of the annexation proceedings that they are entitled to a writ of error from the supreme court to review the judgment of the county court approving such proceedings. Under Sess. Laws (1885), p. 158, authorizing appeals to the district court from final judgments of the county court, an appeal lies to it from the finding of the county court, under the act of 1893, section 8, declaring that the county court shall examine the report of annexation proceedings, and hear evidence concerning the regularity or irregularity of the proceedings, and, if satisfied that the proceedings are regular, shall approve the report. Phillips v. Corbin, 8 Colo. App. 346, 46 Pac. 224.

Florida.—The proceedings by petition on by a resident freeholder.³ The action of village trustees in annexing territory by ordinance on petition is not reviewable by certiorari, since the act is legislative rather than judicial, and involves a decision only of the questions of fact whether the petition has been properly signed and whether the territory is contiguous to the village.⁴

(B) Review. On appeal or writ of error to review proceedings for the annexation or detachment of territory to or from a municipal corporation the decision of the lower court or board will be reversed, if it does not appear from the record behalf of one desiring to have his land excluded from the corporate limits of a town, authorized by Rev. St. § 720, as amended by Laws (1897), c. 4601, is one at law, and the judgment can be reviewed only by writ of error, and not by an appeal. Heebner v. Orange City, 44 Fla. 159, 32 So. 879.

Indiana.—Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Indianapolis, 147 Ind. 292, 46 N. E. 641; Forsythe v. Hammond, 142 Ind. 505, 40 N. E. 267, 41 N. E. 950, 30 L. R. A. 576, holding that the action of the board of county commissioners in passing on a petition of a city council for annexation of territory to the city, which must give the reasons why, in the opinion of the council, annexation should take place, and which must be on notice to parties interested, is judicial, and therefore courts are properly given jurisdiction of an appeal therefrom.

Nebraska.—The annexation of adjacent territory by municipal corporations under Comp. St. (1891) c. 14, § 99, is a judicial proceeding in which landowners are entitled to all the rights of contravention and appeal. Gottschalk v. Becher, 32 Nebr. 653, 49 N. W. 715.

Pennsylvania.—Under the act of April 30, 1851, providing for the change of borough limits by annexing new territory by proceedings of the borough council, any person affected could appeal from the ordinance to the court. In re Edwardsville Borough, 18 Pa. Co. Ct. 475, 8 Kulp 339. An appeal under section 27 of said act against an annexation ordinance was determined by testimony before the court. An appeal under the act of June 2, 1871, is determined in the same manner as proceedings under the act of 1834, which must be submitted to the grand jury. In re East Pittsburgh Borough, 19 Pa. Co. Ct. 102. Where a township is attached to a borough under the acts of 1851 and 1871, under the provision giving a right of appeal to "citizens of a borough or of the territory annexed," a school-district cannot appeal. In re Braddock Tp., 27 Pittsb. Leg. J. N. S. (Pa.) 198. An appeal from the supplementary proceedings before the quarter sessions in annexation of a borough is in the nature of a certiorari, and the appellate jurisdiction is limited to a review of the proceedings below for the purpose of determining the extent and limits of the power of the quarter sessions, and the regularity of its exercise. In re Morrellville Borough, 7 Pa. Super. Ct. 532 [affirming 20 Pa. Co. Ct. 257]. Under the act of May 23, 1889, providing that the action of a city council in annexing territory shall be conclusive, unless an appeal is taken to the quarter sessions, and on such appeal the clerk shall certify all the papers and proceedings in the case, where a citizen presents a petition to the court of quarter sessions praying for an appeal from an ordinance of a city of the third class annexing territory, and leave is given to file appeal, the petition may be considered as an appeal sufficient to support an order directing the city clerk to certify to the court all the papers and proceedings in the case. Logan Tp. Case, 24 Pa. Co. Ct. 541.

3. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Indianapolis, 147 Ind. 292, 46 N. E. 641 (holding that the charter of Indianapolis (act of March 6, 1891) authorizing it to annex territory and providing (section 38) that an appeal may be taken from such annexation by one or more "resident freeholders, in the territory sought to be annexed," limits the right of appeal to those persons who are citizens and freeholders of the territory); Taggart v. Claypool, 145 Ind. 590, 44 N. E. 18, 32 L. R. A. 586.

Constitutionality of statute.—Ind. Rev. St. (1894) §§ 3808, 3809, giving a city council power by ordinance to annex contiguous territory and providing that, if it be unplatted ground, an appeal may be taken by resident freeholders thereof, etc., do not, because granting appeal to resident freeholders only, violate Const. art. 1, § 23, providing that the legislature shall not grant to any citizen or class of citizens privileges or immunities which on the same terms shall not equally belong to all citizens, or U. S. Const. Amendm. 14, providing that no state shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of its laws. Taggart v. Claypool, 145 Ind. 590, 44 N. E. 18, 32 L. R. A. 586.

Who are resident freeholders.—A railroad company owning land in a tract annexed to a city is not a "resident freeholder in the territory sought to be annexed," within the meaning of a statute providing for an appeal by such freeholder, although it has railroad property and a master mechanic's office, together with its construction and repair shops, in such territory, where its office and place of business is in the city, outside of such territory. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Indianapolis, 147 Ind. 292, 46 N. E. 641.

that the statute was complied with in jurisdictional matters;⁵ but the court will not control or interfere with the discretion of the lower court or board in the absence of an abuse thereof,⁶ and findings on questions of fact are conclusive where there is any evidence to sustain them.⁷ A judgment of the district court in a proceeding to detach territory from a municipal corporation will not be impeached on appeal, in the absence of a showing that the trial judge made an important mistake of fact or an erroneous inference of fact or of law.⁸

(c) Trial De Novo. Under some statutes on appeal to the circuit court from a judgment of a county court or decision of a board of commissioners annexing or refusing to annex territory to a municipal corporation, the case is triable de novo.⁹

(d) Costs. In Pennsylvania all costs of appeal by citizens of the territory to be annexed are to be paid by the city, notwithstanding the decision is in favor of the city.¹⁰ An appellant is the agent for others who have agreed to share the costs of appeal and notices served on the actual appellant are binding on all for whom he acts.¹¹

(XIII) SUBMISSION OF QUESTION TO INHABITANTS AND CONSENT—(A) Necessity of Submission or Consent. In many states it is provided by the constitution that the territory of a municipality shall not be increased without the consent of a majority of the qualified voters expressed in a public election for that purpose.¹² In

5. Oehler v. Big Stone City, 16 S. D. 86, 91 N. W. 450. Under Nebr. Comp. St. (1881) c. 14, § 99, prescribing the method of annexation of contiguous territory to cities or villages, requiring a resolution favoring such annexation to be passed by a two-thirds vote of the city council, and then providing for the commencement by the city of an action in the district court having for its object the annexation of such territory, it was held that where the record on appeal in such action, which is certified to contain all the evidence, contains no proof of the passage of the resolution by the city council, a decree in favor of the annexation of the territory must be reversed, as such a resolution is necessary to confer jurisdiction on the district court. Seward v. Conroy, 33 Nebr. 430, 50 N. W. 329.

6. Windfall Mfg. Co. v. Emery, 142 Ind. 456, 41 N. E. 814 (holding that the sufficiency of the reasons for the annexation of a territory to a town, as set forth in the petition, is within the discretion of the authority passing on the petition, and the exercise of such discretion will not be controlled by the supreme court); Johnson v. Forest City, 129 Iowa 51, 105 N. W. 353; Monk v. George, 86 Iowa 315, 53 N. W. 240 (holding that under Mills Code, § 443, authorizing a severance of land included within the limits of a town or city, if the court or jury shall be "satisfied that the prayer of the petitioner should be granted," it is not an abuse of discretion for the court to refuse a severance, where the land in question is within a block of the business portion of the town, and it appears that a portion of the land is desirable for residences); Ashley v. Calliope, 71 Iowa 466, 32 N. W. 458.

7. Phillips v. Corbin, 8 Colo. App. 346, 46 Pac. 224 (holding that whether a bias on the part of the trustees of a town and their appointees existed and was carried to the extent of preventing a declaration of the wishes of the majority in the election on the question of annexation, which, if a fact, would vitiate the election, is a question for the district court on appeal from the finding of the county court on the question of the regularity of the annexation proceeding); Orlando v. Orlando Water, etc., Co., 50 Fla. 207, 39 So. 532 (holding that where there is evidence to support an order of the circuit court, under Rev. St. (1892) § 722, that objections to annexation of territory to a city be sustained, and that such territory be not annexed, the order will not be disturbed on appeal). See also Williamstown v. Walkerton, 150 Ind. 565, 50 N. E. 725 (holding that the Indiana statute providing for an appeal to the circuit court by either party from the final decision of the board of commissioners in a proceeding to annex contiguous territory to a town, conferred the power to hear and determine such causes de novo and to render final judgment annexing or refusing to annex such territory to the municipality, without regard to the judgment of the board of commissioners).

these states the legislatures sometimes refuse to take any action whatever until the election has been held and the popular will expressed;¹³ but frequently the statute authorizing annexation is first passed and the popular consent given afterward.¹⁴ In the absence of constitutional provision to the contrary the legislature may extend the limits of municipalities, or detach territory, or consolidate or divide municipalities, without the assent of the inhabitants of either the municipality or of the part to be annexed or detached;¹⁵ but the statutes providing for or authorizing such changes may and generally do provide for submission of the question to the vote of the inhabitants of the municipality or the territory to be affected.¹⁶

Texas.—Graham v. Greenville, 67 Tex. 62, 2 S. W. 742; Lum v. Bowie, (1891) 18 S. W. 142.

Under Mo. Rev. St. (1889) § 1580, which empowers the mayor and board of aldermen of a city of the fourth class, with the consent of a majority of the legal voters of the city voting at an election therefor, to extend the corporate limits over adjacent territory, it is immaterial whether the vote is taken be-

In proceedings to annex a village to a city, the municipality voting first, and in favor of annexation, will retain its separate corporate existence until a majority of the voters of the other municipality shall also have voted in favor of annexation.¹⁷ If the act is unconstitutional, an election thereunder cannot be ordered, or, if it is had, it can have no effect.¹⁸

(B) Requisites and Sufficiency of Submission. The rules governing the requisites and sufficiency of submission of the question of annexation to the inhabitants of the territory to be added to the town are statutory and the statutes must be followed;¹⁹ but an ordinance failing to state that territory to be annexed is contiguous is not thereby rendered invalid.²⁰ Notice of the election must be given substantially as required by the statute;²¹ but it has been held that the fore or after the passage of the ordinance extending the limits; and the ratification of such an ordinance by a majority of the qualified voters at an election provided for therein is a substantial compliance with the statute. State v. Westport, 116 Mo. 582, 22 S. W. 888.

Under the Texas statute (Sayles Civ. St. art. 343), enacting that the limits of a city shall remain as fixed by the act of incorporation, except that they may be extended by additional territory whenever the majority of the qualified electors of said territory shall indicate a desire to be included within the limits of the corporation, it was held that the limits of a city could not be extended by vote of the electors thereof, without the consent of the voters of the territory to be annexed. Lum v. Bowie, (Tex. 1891) 18 S. W. 142. The act of April 14, 1883, which amends and is a part of Rev. St. tit. 17, and provides for elections to withdraw territory from corporate limits, but does not direct the manner thereof, is not therefore invalid, but the election in question should be held as other elections provided for in the title. Sansom v. Mercer, 68 Tex. 488, 5 S. W. 62, 2 Am. St. Rep. 505.

Westport*, 116 Mo. 582, 22 S. W. 888. Where the statute authorizing annexation of territory to a city requires an election by the electors of the territory proposed to be added, and another election by the electors in the city to which the addition is to be made, and but one election is held, and that by the electors of the city, the addition being treated as a part of it, the annexation is invalid. Dees v. Lake Charles, 50 La. Ann. 356, 23 So. 382.

Time of holding elections.—Mansfield Dig. Ark. § 922, providing that "when any municipal corporation shall desire to annex any contiguous territory thereto, lying in the same county, it shall be lawful for the council to submit the question to the qualified electors at least one month before the annual election," does not contemplate that the election to determine the annexation shall be held at least one month before the annual election, but that the council shall make an order at least a month before such election, for the submission of the question at that election. Vogel v. Little Rock, 55 Ark. 609, 19 S. W. 13. An election to determine the question of the annexation of a village with an adjoining city is not required to be held in both municipalities on the same day, unless the statute so provides, but the same may be held on different days if so fixed by the court. North Springfield v. Springfield, 140 Ill. 165, 29 N. E. 849.

Judges of election.—Under Gen. St. § 1272, declaring that "all judges of election shall on being appointed hold their office for one year or until their successors are appointed, and shall serve at all special elections during their term of office," special judges cannot legally be appointed while the regular judges are in office, to hold a special election on the question of annexation of territory, and an election held by special judges so appointed is void. Phillips v. Corbin, 8 Colo. App. 346, 46 Pac. 224.

Provision as to ballots.—A provision of an ordinance for election on the question of annexation of a town to a city, that the ballots be prepared according to the provisions of the Colorado Australian ballot law, conflicts with section 2 of such law, providing that it shall not apply to "any special election at which no persons are to be voted for," and also with Colo. Act (1893), § 6, in regard to annexation, declaring that "all ballots cast in pursuance of this act shall be 'For annexation' or 'Against annexation' and shall be deposited in a separate ballot box and for that purpose only." Phillips v. Corbin, 8 Colo. App. 346, 46 Pac. 224.

20. Woodruff v. Eureka Springs, 55 Ark. 618, 19 S. W. 15.

21. Under Cal. St. (1889) p. 358, c. 247, providing that on presentation of a petition for the annexation of territory to a town, the board shall call a special election and cause notice to be given, a notice signed by the acting president of the board, attested by the town-clerk, and published by order of polling of a large vote where the proof of notice is defective authorizes the conclusion that the notice was duly given.²² It has also been held that so long as a majority of the qualified electors voted for annexation, the others cannot complain that the proceedings were kept secret and put through in haste.²³ Unless so required by statute, the vote need not be by ballot, but may be by any method satisfactory to the voters and the council.²⁴

(c) Who Are Qualified Voters. In determining who are legal voters on questions of annexation the word "citizen" has been held to mean resident or inhabitant,²⁵ and "freeholders" are only those who hold in their own right.²⁶ The qualification prescribed by statute for a voter at an election for annexation that he be a "duly qualified voter in the election precinct" does not require that he be registered.²⁷ Payment of taxes is sometimes required.²⁸

e. Curative Statutes. Defective annexation may be cured by subsequent legislation,²⁹ but it has been held that a curative act cannot make valid annexation proceedings which are absolutely void for want of jurisdiction;³⁰ and that, where territory has under general law been illegally annexed to an existing municipality a subsequent special statute cannot validate the first proceedings.³¹

f. *Preventing or Attacking Annexation, Detachment, Consolidation, Etc.*³²—

(1) IN GENERAL. The validity of proceedings to annex or detach territory to or from a municipal corporation, or of the consolidation of corporations, may be attacked by the state in quo warranto;³³ and passing an ordinance of annexation, taking steps preparatory to levying a tax on the new territory, and recognizing it as a ward of the city are a sufficient indication of the purpose of the city to sustain quo warranto to determine the validity of the annexation.³⁴ Taxpayers of the territory sought to be annexed to a municipal corporation may maintain a suit in their own behalf and on the behalf of others to prevent the consummation of an illegal annexation;³⁵ and injunction is a proper remedy in these cases.³⁶ In the same action in which the legality of the annexation is attacked the question of the board, is sufficient. People v. Ontario, 148 Cal. 625, 84 Pac. 205.

the city's power of taxation cannot be raised.³⁷ In some jurisdictions provision is expressly made by statute for proceedings to test the validity of the annexation of territory or other changes.³⁸

(11) COLLATERAL ATTACK. If annexation or other like proceedings are absolutely void, as for want of jurisdiction, or for failure to comply with jurisdictional requirements of the statute, they are subject to collateral attack;³⁹ but as a rule before an election can be held to annex property to a city the petition of one third of the bona fide owners, in number and value, of the property to be annexed, must be filed with the mayor and council, have not been complied with, the owner of property within the area to be annexed may enjoin the execution of an ordinance for such an election. Layton v. Monroe, 50 La. Ann. 121, 23 So. 99.

Stay of execution of governmental functions pending appeal.—But pending appeal from a judgment declaring territory annexed to a city, the supreme court will not stay the exercise, by the city, of governmental functions over the annexed territory and restrain consideration of the judgment of annexation in the elections, taxation, and internal improvements of the city; the exercise of none of such acts being alleged to be imminent, except that of the voting by the residents of the annexed territory at an approaching election, and there being no immediate and imperious necessity for interference as to the other acts. Forsythe v. Hammond, 137 Ind. 426, 37 N. E. 537.

Effect as to homestead.—In an action to enjoin a city from extending its corporate limits over a rural homestead of more than one acre of land, the question whether the incorporating of such homestead in the city will reduce such homestead to one acre cannot be litigated. Eskridge v. Emporia, 63 Kan. 368, 65 Pac. 694.

Sufficiency of complaint see Windman v. Vincennes, 58 Ind. 480. Where the complaint states facts sufficient to show a right to have a municipal corporation restrained from exercising corporate powers over a territory not legally annexed to a city, the pleading is not bad because it fails to aver that the treasurer had the tax duplicate in his hands. The case is not like that of a proceeding simply to enjoin a treasurer from levying taxes, nor is it like the case of an officer seeking to defend a seizure of goods for taxes. Delphi v. Startzman, 104 Ind. 343, 3 N. E. 937.

38. In Iowa, under Miller Code, § 3348, providing that, on the refusal of the county attorney to bring proceedings to test the validity of the annexation of territory to a city, any person interested may apply to the district court for leave to do so, and on obtaining such leave may prosecute the action to final judgment, the authority of an owner of land annexed to bring such suit cannot be questioned after leave granted by the court on the ground that his interest

In Nebraska the provision of Comp. St. c. 14, § 101, authorizing a majority of the legal voters of any territory within the corporation of any city or village to petition for the disconnection of the territory therefrom, is available only to legal voters of the territory sought to be detached; but this statute does not preclude the owner of agricultural lands included within the boundaries of any village, although not a voter therein, from maintaining a suit to have such lands detached from a municipality. Osmond v. Matteson, 62 Nebr. 512, 87 N. W. 311; Osmond v. Smathers, 62 Nebr. 509, 87 N. W. 310; State v. Dimond, 44 Nebr. 154, 62 N. W. 498.

Williamson*, 91 Ind. 541 (holding that personal service on those whose lands are sought to be annexed to a town is necessary to give jurisdiction, and that the want thereof renders the proceedings void, although attacked collaterally); Windman v. Vincennes, 58 Ind. 480; Dees v. Lake Charles, 50 La. Ann. 356, 23 So. 382; Lum v. Bowie, (Tex. 1891) 18 S. W. 142. See also Hyde Park v. Chicago, 124 Ill. 156, 16 N. E. 222.

The municipal record is not conclusive proof where the statute has not been complied with. Windman v. Vincennes, 58 Ind. 480.

A city council's jurisdiction in annexation proceedings may be attacked collaterally where the conditions prescribed by the statute for jurisdiction do not exist, notwithstanding recitals in the record of the council that they do exist. Forsythe v. Hammond, 142 Ind. 505, 40 N. E. 267, 41 N. E. 950, 30 L. R. A. 576.

Injunction against taxation.—Where an attempted annexation of territory to a municipality is illegal and void for want of jurisdiction, or for failure to observe jurisdictional requirements, the annexation may be attacked in a suit to enjoin the collection of taxes. Delphi v. Startzman, 104 Ind. 343, 3 N. E. 937. A citizen sued for taxes by a municipal corporation claiming the power to levy taxes on the territory embracing his property under proceedings by which such territory is alleged to have been annexed to the city may resist the collection of the taxes by injunction, where there is no law to authorize the asserted proceeding or when at a later period the requisite law is enacted but the record shows no substantial compliance with the statute in the proceedings on the regularity of the proceedings for annexation, etc., of a tribunal having jurisdiction cannot be attacked collaterally.⁴⁰ The question of the validity of an act extending the territorial limits of a city so as to include farming lands, contrary to the owner's wishes, cannot be raised by quo warranto as to the authority of the city officers to exercise their functions as such within the extended territory.⁴¹ The motives which a city had in annexing territory cannot be taken into account in an action to restrain the collection of taxes levied on the same by the city;⁴² and the informality of the proceedings of the trustees of the town is not subject to collateral attack.⁴³ Nor will the fact that the petition or notice does not show the names of the owners of lands to be annexed or particularly describe their lands render the proceedings subject to collateral attack.⁴⁴

(iii) ESTOPPEL. Taxpayers or inhabitants may be estopped to question the validity of annexation or detachment of territory to or from a municipal corporation,⁴⁵ as by acquiescence in the annexation or delay in attacking the

which the corporation relies. Dees v. Lake Charles, 50 La. Ann. 356, 23 So. 382. Where a city has voted to extend its limits, without the consent of the electors of the territory sought to be annexed, an injunction will lie to restrain collection of taxes levied by the city on such territory. Lum v. Bowie, (Tex. 1891) 18 S. W. 142.

Where a city of the second class has attempted by ordinance to annex certain territory, and in pursuance thereof has exercised authority over the same for eighteen years, treating it in all respects as a part of the municipal organization, the validity of the ordinance cannot be attacked in a collateral proceeding by a private person seeking to recover taxes levied on property in such territory, on the ground that it is not a part of the city. *Atchison, etc., R. Even if the vote or method of ascertaining the will of the majority of the inhabitants as to the annexation of territory to a municipality is not expressed in accordance with the constitution and laws, the action of the city council in admitting the territory is not void. The state alone can annul their act in a proceeding begun for that purpose, and its legality cannot be questioned by a taxpayer living in the annexed territory, in a proceeding to enjoin a tax on his property levied by the city authorities. *Graham v. same,⁴⁶ or by failure to exercise the rights of contravention and appeal given them by statute.⁴⁷ So also a municipality may be estopped;⁴⁸ and there may be an estoppel against an individual to attack an annexation of territory by quo warranto proceedings under a statute.⁴⁹ One who delays a long time, as for eight months, in filing a petition to amend an order of annexation and offers no excuse for the delay cannot question its legality.⁵⁰ A property holder is not estopped from contesting the validity of annexation proceedings by voting and offering himself as a candidate for office;⁵¹ but long acquiescence without protest, paying municipal taxes and several times voting for municipal officers or holding office, will bar his right to contest;⁵² and he is also estopped if he allows the annexed territory to be improved without objection.⁵³

47. Gottschalk v. Becher, 32 Nebr. 653, 49 N. W. 715, holding that the forcible annexation of adjacent property to cities and villages, which Comp. St. (1891) c. 14, § 99, provides may be done when the court shall find that the property would receive material benefit, or that justice and equity require it, is a judicial proceeding, in which the landowner is required to be summoned, and in which he is entitled to all the rights of contravention and appeal; and where his land has been so annexed, and becomes under section 113, liable to subdivision into lots and blocks with streets and alleys, and subject to taxation for the city's antecedent debts, and no appeal has been taken, the landowner cannot afterward, in another action, complain that the law authorizing the annexation was unconstitutional in that it authorized the taking of private property for public use without compensation.

48. People v. Maxon, 139 Ill. 306, 28 N. E. 1074, 16 L. R. A. 178 [affirming 38 Ill. App. 152]. In this case a village ordinance disconnected part of its lands whereby they became part of the township. The ordinance was invalid, but the commissioners of highway in such town acted thereon and improved the highways on the land so disconnected, and built a bridge thereon at a cost of three thousand dollars to the town. For seven years the village exercised no jurisdiction over such land and expended no money thereon; and the voters residing on such land exercised no rights in the village government. Under these circumstances it was held that the village was estopped from claiming a right to tax such land.

49. State v. Des Moines, 96 Iowa 521, 65 N. W. 818, 59 Am. St. Rep. 381, 31 L. R. A. 186, holding that where an annexation resulted in the abandonment of municipal incorporation in the territory annexed, and the city had for four years levied taxes and made improvements, for which warrants were issued, and assumed jurisdiction over the territory, without objection, the annexation would be sustained in quo warranto by an individual to attack its validity, under the doctrine of estoppel, although the act annexing the territory was unconstitutional as special legislation.

Under the provisions of the charter of the city of St. Paul imposing on the municipality the duty to keep in good repair for public use all streets, highways, and bridges within its limits, such duty and obligation extend to the bridge across the Mississippi river at Ft. Snelling, the city limits having been subsequently extended to include such bridge, notwithstanding the fact that the bridge, when constructed, was not within the limits of the city, and that the statute under which it was constructed (Sp. Oregon act of Feb. 18, 1891, entitled "An act to authorize the cities of Portland, East Portland, and Albina to construct, purchase, and acquire by condemnation or other means, of one municipality is annexed to another, the annexed municipality is destroyed.⁶¹ And where existing corporations are consolidated and a new corporation thereby created, the new corporation takes the place of the old corporations and they cease to exist and can no longer exercise any corporate power unless their existence is expressly continued for some purpose.⁶² In Illinois, where a village lying within the limits of an incorporated town is annexed to an adjacent city, whose limits are coterminous with those of another town, such annexation does not cause the village territory to become part of the latter town.⁶³

(b) Extent of Annexation. The extent of the annexation of territory and the question whether particular territory is included depend of course upon the proceedings for annexation and the statute authorizing them,⁶⁴ or, where the annexation is by special act, upon the terms of the act.⁶⁵ In construing such an act, however, the courts are not confined to the literal meaning of the words used, but may so construe it as to carry out the manifest intention of the legislature.⁶⁶

(c) When Annexation Takes Effect. Annexation by statute takes effect at the time of the passage of the act, except in so far as it provides otherwise.⁶⁷ Where the annexation is by an election under a general law, it takes effect and the jurisdiction of the annexing municipality over the annexed territory commences when the result of the election is declared, and does not relate back to the time when the election was ordered.⁶⁸

(d) *Laws and Ordinances.*⁶⁹ When territory is annexed to a municipality it thereby becomes subject to all the laws and ordinances by which the municipality is governed, without the necessity of express legislative or municipal action to give them such application,⁷⁰ unless there is some statutory provision to the contrary;⁷¹ and where one municipality is annexed to another and ceases to exist, its ordinances have no further force, unless the statute continues them in force, as it may do.⁷² An act consolidating two municipal corporations and providing that all

(E) *Officers and Employees.*⁷⁴ As a rule the officers within annexed territory whose tenure is not expressly saved by the statute become at once functi officio.⁷⁵ Usually, however, the matter is the subject of express statutory regulation;⁷⁶ and provision is sometimes made by the legislature for the devolution of official powers upon officers of the new municipality as successors of those of the annexed territory.⁷⁷ The statutes sometimes contain express provision as to the police, nexation Act of 1889, section 18, providing that when one municipality is annexed to another, the ordinances of the annexed municipality regarding licensing of dramshops shall continue until repealed by popular vote, where the ordinances of Hyde Park in force at the time of its annexation to Chicago regulated the whole liquor traffic, including the sale by wholesale quantities in single packages, there were preserved to Hyde Park all the liquor ordinances in force at the time of annexation for all time, except as they should be changed therein, and hence a wholesale malt dealer could not be licensed under a subsequent Chicago ordinance, which conflicted with those of Hyde Park. (F) *Property and Assets.*⁸⁰ A change in the limits of a municipality by annexing territory thereto does not change the identity of the corporation or affect the title of property which it holds at the time of such annexation.⁸¹ As a general rule, on the consolidation of municipal corporations or the annexation by one municipality of the territory of another under legislative authority, the property and assets of the old corporations or the corporation whose territory is annexed becomes, in the absence of provision to the contrary, the property and assets of the consolidated or annexing corporation.⁸² In such cases it is within the

N. Y. Laws (1897), c. 525, authorizing the mayor and controller of the city of Brooklyn and another person to ascertain and determine certain claims against the late town of Flatlands, the intent was to confer this authority upon the mayor and controller as such, and not as individuals; and therefore, when the city of Brooklyn passed out of existence, it devolved upon the mayor and controller of the new city of New York, who for that purpose were to be considered as their successors.

Liability for tort.—Under N. Y. Laws (1900), c. 665, annexing the village of Lansingburgh to the city of Troy, section 4 of which provided that upon the taking effect of the act the municipal and public corporation of Lansingburgh should cease and its power should devolve upon the city of Troy, section 8 of which made all the outstanding indebtedness of the village a charge on the city of Troy, and section 10 of which provided that, to pay a maturing indebtedness of the village, a sufficient sum should be levied by tax on the real and personal property of the village, it was held that the liabilities contemplated by said sections 8 and 10 included liabilities arising ex delicto as well as those arising ex contractu, and therefore, where an action for negligence was pending against Lansingburgh at the time the consolidation act took effect, the city of Troy was properly substituted as defendant therein. Tyler v. Lansingburgh, 76 N. Y. App. Div. 165, 78 N. Y. Suppl. 433 [affirming 37 Misc. 604, 76 N. Y. Suppl. 139]. See also Huffmire v. Brooklyn, 162 N. Y. 584, 57 N. E. 176, 48 L. R. A. 421 [affirming 22 N. Y. App. Div. 406, 48 N. Y. Suppl. 132]. So, under Texas Act, April 3, 1889, repealing the charter of East Dallas and annexing its territory to the city of Dallas and providing (section 4) that the latter should pay all the lawful debts of the former, it was held that the word "debts" included a liability for damages resulting from the tortious acts of the municipal officers in removing a private dwelling and tearing down a fence preparatory to taking land for a public street. *Barber v. App. 315, 55 S. W. 762, holding the city of Dallas liable for damages to plaintiff's land caused by the wrongful digging of a ditch through it by the city of East Dallas.

Bonds of municipalities annexed to New York city.—Greater New York Charter, § 172 (Laws (1897), c. 378), providing that bonds of the annexed municipalities may be converted into registered bonds, authorizing the controller to issue registered bonds therefor, and providing that when the bonds shall have coupons attached, the controller may, on the registration thereof, detach all the coupons, and indorse the fact of such registration, does not give a holder of the coupon bonds of villages annexed the right to compel the controller to issue in place thereof registered stock of the city, but only the right to have such registration indorsed on the bonds, making the city thereafter liable for the interest. People v. Coler, 26 Misc. (N. Y.) 327, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 1072.

Power of city auditor to pass on claims.—Under N. Y. Laws (1874), c. 304, consolidating the city and county of New York and making all charges against the county charges against the city, and Laws (1873), c. 335, whereby the voucher for a claim against the city was required to be examined and allowed by the auditor, and approved by the controller, it was held that where a valid claim against the county had been duly audited and approved by the board of supervisors, there was nothing for the city auditor to do before allowing such claim but to examine the voucher and see that it was in proper form, and he had no right to revise the action of the supervisors. Lanigan v. New York, 70 N. Y. 454.

Retroactive statutes.—Where a school-district adjoining a city issued bonds for the purchase of a site for a school-house and for the erection of the building, and in 1889 the city annexed a part of the territory of the school-district, including the school-house and a statute subsequently enacted (Kan. Laws (1893), c. 128) provided for a settlement between the school-district and the city, it was held that the law, although retroactive, was valid, as a moral obligation rested on the city after the annexation to assume payment of the bonds, and the act changed this into a legal obligation. Topeka Bd. of Education v. State, 64 Kan. 6, 67 Pac. 559. See also Orvil Tp. v. Woodcliff, 61 N. J. L. 107, 38 Atl. 685, holding that a statute which imposed upon a borough a proportionate part of the liabilities of a township from which it had been set off, and assigned to it a proportionate part of the assets of such township, was valid, although not passed until after the formation of the borough.

Temporary annexation.—This rule does not apply when the annexation is merely for a temporary purpose, as until the electors can organize a town government for the election of officers. Schriber v. Langlade, 66 Wis. 616, 29 N. W. 547, 554.

On the dissolution of a municipal corporation and the transfer of its territory to others, where the legislature does not apportion its indebtedness between such others, they will be severally liable in proportion to the value of the taxable property of the dissolved corporation which falls within their boundaries respectively. Mt. Pleasant v. Beckwith, 100 U. S. 514, 25 L. ed. 699; Pepin Tp. v. Sage, 129 Fed. 657, 64 C. C. A. 169.

Illegal amendment of charter.—Where a city charter is amended so as to extend its limits and the new corporation succeeds to the old corporation, it is liable for legitimate debts contracted in furnishing water and light to the city within the old limits to the extent furnished, although the amendment is illegal, since such amendment does not have the effect of placing the city in a situation to deny its indebtedness. ⁸⁹ Georgia.—Cash v. Douglasville, 94 Ga. 557, 20 S. E. 438. The obligation resting on territory annexed to a city to pay taxes for the purpose of paying a prior indebtedness of the city is supported by the equitable consideration that the values have been increased by proximity to the city, and the further consideration that the newly incorporated inhabitants acquire an interest in the public property purchased by previous bond issues and taxation. ⁹¹ Vacheron v. New York, 34 Misc. (N. Y.) 420, 69 N. Y. Suppl. 608, holding that where plaintiff in 1897 made a ten years' contract with Queens county for sprinkling roads at a certain amount per mile per season, such contract was valid only for the year 1897, since the charter of New York taking effect Jan. 1, 1898, deprived the board of supervisors of the power over such roads after that date; and therefore plaintiff could not recover from the city of New York for services afterward performed under such contract. See also Hendrickson v. New York, 160 N. Y. 144, 54 N. E. 680 [affirming 38 N. Y. App. Div. 480, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 580]. However, where plaintiff sued the city of New York under a contract made in December, 1897, with the trustees of an incorporated village for sprinkling streets from May 1, 1898, to October 1, and the village, under the Greater New York Charter, became merged in the city of New York on Jan. 1, 1898, and it appeared that under the New York Charter the village authorities had prepared a budget which included the contract in question, and that taxes had been accordingly levied, and that plaintiff had performed the contract to defendant's knowledge, it was held that it was error to dismiss the complaint on the ground that the village trustees had no authority to make a contract extending beyond their term of office, and that plaintiff should have been allowed to solidated or annexing municipality depends primarily upon the statute. Under some statutes an action at law will lie.⁹² Otherwise the remedy is by a suit in equity.⁹³ Whether the annexing or consolidated municipality can maintain actions on contracts or bonds made with or to the annexed or old corporations depends upon the terms of the statute.⁹⁴ Attorneys cannot recover from the annexing city for their services in contesting the annexation.⁹⁵

(H) *Taxes and Assessments.*⁹⁶ When the corporate limits of a municipality are extended the annexed territory will become subject to taxation for its proportion of all municipal indebtedness then existing as well as for such as is subsequently contracted, unless it is otherwise provided by statute.⁹⁷ Generally, however, this is the subject of express statutory provision and regulation, and such statutes have been sustained.⁹⁸ So also, in the absence of provision to the contrary, where municipal corporations are consolidated or territory is annexed, the

Exemption from taxation.—Carpenter v. Central Covington, 119 Ky. 785, 81 S. W. 919, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 430. Under Nebr. Comp. St. (1891) c. 14, § 95, which provides for the voluntary annexation of adjacent territory to cities and villages, and exempts such property from taxation for the antecedent debts of the city or village, and section 99, which provides for the involuntary and forcible annexation of property when the court shall find that it "would receive material benefit," or that "justice and equity require it," but neither exempts such territory from taxation for such antecedent debts, nor provides for such taxation, it was held that the two sections are not in pari materia, to be construed together, so as to exempt from such taxation territory forcibly annexed under section 99. Gottschalk v. Becher, 32 Nebr. 653, 49 N. W. 715. The New Jersey act (Pub. Laws, p. 402) annexing a portion of Weehawken township to Hoboken, exempting the territory annexed from any tax for prior indebtedness incurred by said city, excepting certain bonds, after assent filed by a majority of the property-owners of said territory and payment of a certain sum of money, is, when executed by them, in the nature of a contract, and these lands cannot be assessed by ordinance for the principal or interest of bonds thereafter issued for satisfaction of such prior indebtedness. Under such act improvement certificates issued under the charter for work done in the streets of Hoboken before annexation are within the exemption; and bonds afterward issued by added territory becomes liable to assessment for streets and other local improvements.⁹⁹ On the consolidation of municipal corporations or annexation of territory it is competent for the legislature to provide for the disposition of the municipal taxes uncollected at the date of consolidation or annexation.¹ In the absence of provision to the contrary, taxes assessed on the annexed territory, but not collected at the date of annexation, belong to the annexing city.² When, in the progress of proceedings by a village to make improvements by special assess-authority of an act passed before annexation, to pay judgments reserved on such certificates, are not chargeable by taxation on the lands annexed. Hoboken Land, etc., Co. v. Hoboken, 43 N. J. L. 96.

"Debts" contracted prior to annexation.—Where a person made a contract with the city of Memphis before the passage of the act of Dec. 3, 1867, whereby certain new territory was annexed to the city, but the work under the contract was, for the most part, performed after the annexation of said territory, and the act of Dec. 1, 1869, exempted the annexed territory from taxation for any debt contracted prior to annexation, it was held that the word "debt" was not to be construed in its technical sense, and that the city's liability on the above contract was a debt contracted prior to annexation, within the meaning of the act. U. S. v. Memphis, 97 U. S. 284, 24 L. ed. 937.

Unconstitutional exemption.—Tenn. Act (1898), c. 6, § 3, which provides that certain territory annexed to the city of Memphis shall be exempt from taxation for police, fire, and light purposes for a period of ten years, is in violation of Const. art. 2, § 28, providing that taxation must be equal and uniform throughout the state, and section 29, empowering the legislature to authorize the several counties and incorporated towns to impose taxes for county and corporation purposes respectively, on principles established in regard to state taxation. Jones v. Memphis, 101 Tenn. 188, 47 S. W. 138.

99. Ladd v. Portland, 32 Oreg. 271, 51 Pac. 654, 67 Am. St. Rep. 526. Where a village, while making a street improvement, is annexed to a city, which completes the improvement, the city can assess the annexed proprietors to the same amount that it could other citizens, and is not limited to the amount that the village could assess. Andrews v. Felton, 4 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 168, 1 Clev. L. Rep. 85. Where a village was annexed to a city pending proceedings by the village for a special assessment, and after the annexation the proceedings were still carried on in the name of the village, as directed by Ill. Laws (1889), p. 71, § 7, it was held that the fact that some of the orders in the proceeding recited that the city appeared therein was immaterial. McChesney v. Hyde Park, 151 Ill. 634, 37 N. E. 858, (1891) 28 N. E. 1102. It was also held that it was immaterial whether that part of the cost of the proposed assessment which was found to be of public benefit was assessed to the city or the village, so far as the validity of the assessment on the lands specially benefited by the improvement was concerned. McChesney v. Hyde Park, (Ill. 1891) 28 N. E. 1102.

Effect of statutory exemption from further improvement and assessment.—The charter of East Portland, Oregon (Laws (1870), p. 156, art. 6), providing that the trustees may improve a street within the city limits at the expense of abutting property-owners, and section 27, providing that, when a street has been once improved under the charter, it shall not be again improved, but may be repaired, are not a contract between a property-owner on a street so improved and the public that his property shall for all time thereafter be exempt from special assessment; and the passage of a charter for the city of Portland, which had been consolidated with East Portland by Laws (1891), p. 796, providing (Laws (1893), p. 810, c. 9) that the council may improve any street thereof and assess the cost on abutting property, is not in conflict with U. S. Const. art. 1, § 10, par. 1, providing that no state shall pass any law impairing the obligations of contracts. Ladd v. Portland, 32 Oreg. 271, 51 Pac. 654, 67 Am. St. Rep. 526. Nor did the provision in the said consolidation act that no rights previously vested should be lost or impaired prohibit the legislature from authorizing the city of Portland to tax street improvements to abutting property-owners who had paid a tax for an improvement of the same street before the consolidation under the charter of East Portland, providing that a property-owner should be required to pay tax for the improvement of the same street but once. Ladd v. Portland, supra.

Proceedings carried to finality before annexation.—Where a special assessment for street improvements in a town, part of which was subsequently annexed to an adjacent city, had been levied and collected in full, the proceedings had been "carried to a finality," within Hurd Rev. St. Ill. (1899) p. 302, c. 24, providing that, when part of a town is annexed to a city, street improvement proceedings instituted prior to such annexation may be carried to a finality; and the annexed portion of the town was not liable to a supplemental assessment, levied after the annexation, to pay a deficiency in the prior assessment. *Cicero v. ment, the village becomes annexed to a city, the city has the same power in respect to the street improvement and assessment as the village had prior to such annexation, and it may discontinue the proceedings, abandon the improvement, and refuse to collect the assessment.³

(II) DETACHMENT OF TERRITORY AND DIVISION—(A) In General. A statute dividing a municipal corporation as originally chartered and incorporating out of its territory two new municipalities abolishes the corporate and municipal existence of the original municipality.⁴ But such is not the effect of merely detaching a part of the territory of one municipality and annexing it to another or erecting it into a separate municipality.⁵

(B) Property, Rights, and Privileges. The general rule is that, on the division of a public corporation into separate communities, each becomes entitled to hold in severalty the public property which falls within its limits, in the absence of provision to the contrary;⁶ but where a part of the territory of a municipality is set off and incorporated as or annexed to a new municipality, the original municipality still retains all its property, rights, powers, and privileges.⁷ Legisla-

In Indiana, however, it has been held that the rule does not apply to money, choses in action, or other kindred property, in existence at the time of the division, but that in such case, in the absence of an express provision as to that class of property, the respective claims of the two corporations become a matter of equitable jurisdiction, and must be adjusted on equitable principles. *Towle v. Where the new corporation attempts to interfere by ordinance with such property, the appropriate remedy in New Jersey is by certiorari to set aside the ordinance. Bloom-

tion is not necessary to apportion the real property upon division;⁸ although in many instances there is such legislation.⁹ The legislature may make such a division of the common property as in its opinion is for the public welfare, or may make provision for such division, and this is generally done.¹⁰

(c) Contracts and Indebtedness. On the division of a municipality the legislature may provide for apportionment of the burden of the indebtedness between the two new municipalities or the old and new, as the case may be, or itself determine the portion to be borne by each.¹¹ In the absence of such legislative apportionment, the old municipality if still existing, and it alone, must bear the

Under Pa. Act, June 1, 1887, relating to municipal indebtedness in case of the formation of a new borough by detaching part of the territory of another borough, making it the duty of the court to appoint an auditor, who shall ascertain and report to it the existing liabilities, with the form of a decree adjusting the liabilities for all indebtedness, and providing that the court may direct a special tax to be levied on the property so detached from such borough, for the payment of so much of the indebtedness as may be awarded against it, and direct how it shall be assessed and collected, such new borough cannot levy a special tax to meet its part of the debts of the old borough, in the absence of direction therefor in such decree. But where a special tax has been levied by the new borough to meet such debts without authority, because not directed to do so by such decree, the court may amend its decree nunc pro tunc, and thus legalize the prior ordinance providing for the tax; and this should be done where the court finds that the special thereof being left to the discretion of the council.²³ If, however, no discretion is given by the statute, its provisions must be strictly conformed to.²⁴ In some states the legislature in providing for such division must observe the principle of equality of representation.²⁵ In others the division must be made with regard to equality of population.²⁶

b. Proceedings to Divide. The subdivision of the wards of a city is a legislative act which should be done by ordinance or resolution.²⁷ The procedure is purely statutory and varies in the different states.²⁸ In Pennsylvania the act providing for the division of boroughs into wards²⁹ enacts that upon the petition of freeholders resident in the borough,³⁰ the court of quarter sessions shall appoint commissioners to inquire into the propriety of making such division,³¹ and report

In Iowa under Code, tit. 5, § 641, authorizing the creation and changing of city wards, without providing whether the power shall be exercised by ordinance or resolution, and section 680, providing that cities may make ordinances "for carrying into effect or discharging the powers and duties conferred by this title," it was held that a change of the wards of a city must be by ordinance, and not by resolution. Cascaden v. Waterloo, 106 Iowa 673, 77 N. W. 333. An ordinance fixing the wards of a city can be amended or repealed only by another ordinance, and not by resolution. Cascaden v. Waterloo, supra. Where an ordinance divides a city into four wards, a resolution changing two of them, and creating a fifth, is void under Code, § 681, where it does not contain "the entire ordinance or section revised or amended," as required by such section. Cascaden v. Waterloo, supra.

In a proceeding to divide a borough into wards, it is not necessary for the petitioners to ask for division into a different number of wards and suggest the boundaries thereof. The proper practice is to ask for a division, leaving the details as to the number of wards and the boundaries thereof to the judgment of the commissioners under the supervision of the court. In re Gettysburg, 90 Pa. St. 446, 6 Atl. 706, holding that an order for the appointment of commissioners to divide a borough into wards, under the act of May 14, 1874 (Purdon Dig. p. 201, § 2, pl. 30), which contains no direction to them to inquire into the propriety of making such division, nor any equivalent for it, is fatally defective.

A proper notice of the proceedings should be directed by the court on the filing of the petition, and the character of the notice to be given should be embodied in the order. In re Columbia Borough, 163 Pa. St. 259, 30 Atl. 6; Brown v. Fowzer, 114 Pa. St. 446, 6 Atl. 706; In re Shamokin Borough, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. 573; In re Exeter Borough, 8 Kulp (Pa.) 115.

Meetings outside of borough.—Where commissioners appointed to inquire into the propriety of dividing a borough into wards held three meetings, all outside the borough, and did not visit the borough or examine the territory, their report should be set aside. In re Sharpburg Borough, 30 Pittsb. Leg. J. N. S. (Pa.) 267, 13 York Leg. Rec. 156.

Notice of adjourned meeting.—Commissioners before whom a petition to divide a borough into wards is tried need not give notice of an adjourned meeting, when the adjournment is public and a matter of convenience, of which all the parties must take notice. In re Lansford Borough, 141 Pa. St. 134, 21 Atl. 503.

to the court at its next term,³² which shall make such order thereupon as shall appear just and reasonable.³³

c. Review. In some states citizens whose domiciles have been changed by a resolution of the common council altering the ward limits of a city may bring certiorari to test the validity of the action of the council.³⁴ In Pennsylvania it is provided that when a report has been made by the commissioners on petition to divide a borough into wards, etc., it shall be conferred nisi by the court, and that such confirmation shall become absolute, unless exceptions are filed not later than the third day of the next term, and that, if exceptions are filed as aforesaid, they shall be disposed of on such evidence as shall be deemed just, provided that, if desired, a review may be had if, in the opinion of the court, it may be necessary to secure a fair adjudication.³⁵

4. PLANS, PLATS, AND SURVEYS. Generally speaking the proceedings under this head are statutory and the statutes must be substantially followed.³⁶ As soon as a plat of an addition to a town has been duly acknowledged and recorded, such

32. In proceedings under the act of March 14, 1874 (Pamphl. Laws 159), to divide a borough into wards to "suit the convenience of the inhabitants," a report of the commissioners stating "that the necessities of the petitioners require the division" is insufficient. In re Borough, 3 Lanc. L. Rev. (Pa.) 179.

Notice of proceedings.—The report of the commissioners should specify particularly what notice was given, so that it may appear on the face of the proceedings that the order of court has been complied with. In re Columbia Borough, 163 Pa. Time for making report.—A report by commissioners after the time in which they are required to report, when their authority has elapsed, is of no force, and cannot be confirmed. In re Jermyn Borough, 3 C. Pl. (Pa.) 39. Compare In re Fifteenth Ward, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 406.

33. The report will be confirmed absolutely unless exceptions be filed to the same not later than the third day of the next term after that to which the report is presented and confirmed nisi. In re Strasburg Borough, 2 Lanc. L. Rev. (Pa.) 175.

A petition for review in a proceeding to divide into wards under the above statute need not be signed by freeholders, as is required by section 2 with respect to a petition for such division. In re Freeland, 9 Kulp (Pa.) 387. Nor need a petition for review state, as in the case of the petition for division into wards, the number of wards desired. In re Freeland, supra.

Time of filing petition for review.—Where the report of commissioners appointed to divide a borough into wards is confirmed absolutely, exceptions not having been filed to the same within the time allowed, a petition for review filed thereafter is too late, and will be dismissed. In re Strasburg Borough, 2 Lanc. L. Rev. (Pa.) 175.

Discretion.—Whether there shall be a review under the above mentioned statute is purely a matter of judicial discretion. In re Freeland, 9 Kulp (Pa.) 387.

36. State v. Head, 34 Kan. 419, 8 Pac. 722, holding that under the act of March 13, 1879, making provision for changing the fronting of lots in cities, the proceeding, being a statutory one, must be substantially followed; and that the certificate must follow the statute, and is fatally defective in not describing the lots to be changed, or in making such references as to enable them to be ascertained. See People v. Carpenter, 1 Mich. 273, plan of old town of Detroit.

Substantial compliance with statute sufficient see Gebhardt v. Reeves, 75 Ill. 301, holding therefore that the fact that a plat and survey were made by one not a county surveyor did not invalidate the proceedings, as it was the acknowledging and recording of the plat that vested the fee of streets and alleys in the corporation; and also that the fact that no corner stone was designated on the plat, as required by statute, did not render the plat inoperative to pass the title to streets and alleys, where other monuments were designated from which the location of the lots, streets, and alleys could be ascertained with equal certainty.

Construction and application of particular statutes see Taylor v. Ft. Wayne, 47 Ind. 274 (holding that a plat of lots, not purporting to be the plat of a town or of an addition to a town or city, but simply of out lots in a congressional section of land, was not such a plat as was recognized and entitled to record by Gavin & H. St. Ind. § 632); Giltner v. Albia, 128 Iowa 658, 105 N. W. 194 (holding that under Code, § 915, providing that the plat of an addition to a city shall be approved by the city council as a condition precedent to its record, and that all plats shall be considered by the council, and, if the plat conforms to the statute, the council shall direct its approval, it is only necessary, to entitle a proprietor to an approval of his plat, that he comply with the addition becomes an integral part of the town.³⁷ Under some statutes a plan of a municipality is complete on approval by the court and before it is recorded,³⁸ although the statutes generally require recording.³⁹ The municipal board having delegated authority to reject plans, or revisions of plans and surveys, may order a general rearrangement of the streets or a street may be blotted out or vacated and others substituted.⁴⁰ A city in accepting and approving a plat performs a discretionary act which the courts will not revise so long as no legal rule is statute, and the city council can consider it for no other purpose); Rice v. Highland Imp. Co., 56 Minn. 259, 57 N. W. 452 (holding that the city of Duluth, the charter of which (Spec. Laws (1889), c. 19, § 3) provides for the official supervision of town plats by the board of public works and the common council, is excepted from the operation of Gen. Laws (1889), c. 56, requiring town plats to be certified by the county surveyor, but excepting plats of cities "having a duly constituted officer or officers with jurisdiction over said plats for the purposes above mentioned"); Kissell v. St. Louis Public Schools, 16 Mo. 553 (survey of St. Louis under Act Cong. June 13, 1812).

Finality of confirmation by board.—The confirmation of a plan of survey by the board of surveyors of Philadelphia under the Pennsylvania act of June 6, 1871, sections 1, 2, is final, and no appeal lies to the court of quarter sessions. In re Plan No. 166, 93 Pa. St. 221. Compare Ferree v. Board of Surveyors, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 518.

Resurvey.—Under Tex. Laws (1893), p. 176, § 1, limiting the area of towns containing less than two hundred thousand inhabitants to two square miles, and section 2, making it the duty of existing towns with more than that territory to cause a resurvey within ninety days after the passage of the act, and Laws (1895), p. 17, reënacting the above statute for the purpose (section 4) of extending time to towns that had failed to make a survey within the time limited, the time for making a resurvey was extended by the latter act to ninety days from its passage. State v. Broach, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 35 S. W. 86. See also Wilson v. Bristley, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 200, 35 S. W. 837.

Time of performance of duty see Ripka's Appeal, 21 Pa. St. 55, holding that under the act of 1842, by which the road committee appointed by the burgess and council of a borough were enjoined to survey the roads, streets, and alleys already laid out and within the borough, and to lay out such others, or to widen those already laid out, as they should deem necessary, and to make a draft or plan thereof and return it to the court, the making and confirmation of surveys and plans of the streets, etc., in parts of the borough at different times, was regular, since, as no time was prescribed for the performance of the duty, part could be discharged at one time and the residue at another.

A statement at the foot of a town plat, that certain real estate contained therein was reserved for a public square did not indicate an intention to part with the property, but rather the opposite. Scantlin v. Garvin, 46 Ind. 262.

An explanatory note on a town plat which is inconsistent with the plat, including courses and distances marked thereon, will not control the other facts appearing, when a question of the location of a lot is in controversy. Hunter v. Eichel, 100 Ind. 463.

Effect of plan, plat, or survey as evidence.—A survey made by the county surveyor, as provided by statute, conclusively binds the parties thereto unless an appeal be taken. Hunter v. Eichel, 100 Ind. 463. Where the legislature, in granting a charter to the city of St. Paul, provided for a new and accurate survey of streets, etc., and required an accurate plat thereof to be made and recorded, and made such map prima facie evidence, it was held that if, in the making of such survey and map, stakes were removed and the contour of lots changed, it would be presumed that the prior survey was the erroneous one. Wilder v. St. Paul, 12 Minn. 192.

Reservations in plat by landowner.—Where a city possesses certain rights and powers over property added to its territory and the streets therein, such rights cannot be controlled by reservations in a plat of the addition made by the original proprietor, which are against public policy. Ward v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 62 Mich. 46, 28 N. W. 775, 785; Riedinger v. Marquette, etc., R. Co., 62 Mich. 29, 28 N. W. 775.

39. Winona v. Huff, 11 Minn. 119.

Effect of failure to record.—Where, however, the city of Omaha was laid out in lots, blocks, streets, and squares, and the same were recognized, used, and enjoyed, and the lots taxed as such, but through someone's neglect of duty no map or plat of the city was ever filed or recorded, it was held that after twenty-five years inquiry would not be made as to whether as the result of such neglect the lots had no legal existence, as a decision to that effect would be against public policy. Bryant v. Estabrook, 16 Nebr. 217, 20 N. W. 245.

Legislative recognition.—An act of the legislature distinctly recognizing the fact of the record of a particular town plat is admissible as evidence of the fact of the record of the plat, the presumption being that the statutory requisites to entitle the plat to record were complied with. Winona v. Huff, 11 Minn. 119.

violated.⁴¹ In the absence of a statute there is no power on the part of the common council, the city surveyors, or any one else to divide up the land of a citizen into lots, and to make and record, or to cause to be made and recorded, plats or maps thereof, without his privity, knowledge, or consent, or in like manner to change the numbers, designation, or description of his lots contained in a legally recorded plat, so as to authorize taxation according to the plats or maps so made,⁴² and statutes providing for a platting of land in a municipality usually give such right to the owners only.⁴³ In some jurisdictions the owner of a lot or lots platted as an addition to a municipality is authorized by statute to vacate the plat by an instrument in writing, duly executed and recorded, and without the concurrence of the municipal authorities.⁴⁴ The owner of land may plat it into Laws, c. 32, providing that the owner of land might plat the same and lay out streets thereon, and that he was not authorized to make such plat by a license from the probate court to sell the decedent's land); Merton v. Dolphin, 28 Wis. 456.

44. Littler v. Lincoln, 106 Ill. 353, holding that Rev. St. (1874) c. 109, §§ 6, 7, authorizing the owner or owners of lots platted as an addition to a town to vacate the plat, or any part thereof, by a written instrument, etc., does not require the concurrence or joint action of the municipal authorities with the owner of the premises, but allows him of his own volition alone to vacate the plat or part of it, by his deed declaring that fact, subject only to the restrictions named in the statute, that it shall not abridge or destroy the rights or privileges of other proprietors in such plat, and shall not authorize the closing or obstructing of any public highway laid out according to law. This statute only requires that the owners of lots or blocks within the part of a town plat sought to be vacated shall execute the deed for that purpose, and does not prescribe what the deed shall contain further than that it shall declare the plat or part thereof vacated. Littler v. Lincoln, supra. The party vacating must be the exclusive owner of the lots and blocks, but it is not required that the deed shall make an exhibit of his title nor recite how he became the sole owner. Littler v. Lincoln, supra. A deed vacating a part of the plat of an addition by one person is prima facie valid and conclusive of his right to make such vacation; but it may be impeached by showing that the party making it did not possess the capacity for want of ownership of all the lots in the part of the plat attempted to be vacated. The prima facie case made by the adjudication of such deed must be overcome by the satisfactory evidence of the disability of the person to make it. Littler v. Lincoln, supra. A petition to the city council by the owner of a plat for leave to vacate the same, stating that he is the owner of all the lots except two, will not overcome the presumption of his entire ownership arising from a subsequent deed of vacation of the whole plat. Littler v. Lincoln, supra. Under the provision of section 7 of said statute that "any part of a plat" may be vacated, subject to the conditions in the preceding section relative to the vacation of an entire plat, which are that the vacation shall be before any lots are sold or, if any lots are sold, all the owners of lots in the plat shall join in the deed of vacation, no person need join in the vacation of part of a plat other than the owner of such part. Chicago Anderson Pressed Brick Co. v. Chicago, 138 Ill. 628, 28 N. E. 756. Under the proviso of said section 7 that such vacation shall not abridge or destroy any other rights or privileges of other proprietors, there can be no such abridgment or destruction where no other lots in the plat face on the street whereon the part of the plat vacated lies. Chicago Anderson Pressed Brick Co. v. Chicago, supra. The further proviso of said section 7, that nothing contained therein shall authorize the closing or obstructing of any public highway "laid out according to law" does not apply to a street designated on a plat, but with regard to which the proper officers have taken no action. Chicago Anderson Pressed Brick Co. v. Chicago, supra. The vacation of a plat under this statute does not prevent the city from a subsequent laying out of streets across the territory affected, such vacation being merely a withdrawal of the proposed dedication. Littler v. Lincoln, supra. Under the Illinois act of 1874, giving power to vacate town plats or parts thereof, and providing that the execution and recording of a certain writing should operate to destroy the force and effect of the plat vacated, and to divest all public rights in the streets, alleys, commons, and public grounds therein laid out or described, a plat of land named in the act incorporating a town could be vacated without withdrawing the land from the town limits. Johnson v. People, 42 Ill. App. 402.

Under Iowa Code, §§ 563, 564, authorizing the vacation of the whole of a town plat by the proprietors at any time before sale of any of the lots, by a certain instrument of writing, or of any part of a plat, provided such vacation does not abridge or destroy any of the rights and privileges of other proprietors lots without submitting the plan for approval of the municipal authorities or to a court, unless there is a statutory provision to the contrary.⁴⁵

C. Amendment, New Charter, Repeal, and Forfeiture of Charter or Dissolution⁴⁶ — 1. AMENDMENT OR NEW CHARTER — a. Power to Amend in General. The legislative control of municipal corporations in the United States is inherent, plenary, and exclusive,⁴⁷ subject only to constitutional limitations.⁴⁸ As the legislature has the inherent power to create a municipal corporation,⁴⁹ so likewise it has power to destroy it,⁵⁰ and of course the lesser power to amend its charter, not only in respect of its territory,⁵¹ but also in respect of its powers, privileges, and franchises, and this power may be exercised without the consent of the municipality or its inhabitants.⁵² This is a corollary of the inherent and sovereign power of the legislature over all agencies of government, wherein it is not restricted by in the plat, it was held that the term "proprietors," as used in these sections, indicates the owners of the land, and not merely the persons who originally platted the land; and therefore such owners who have acquired title from such original proprietors may exercise the power of vacation conferred by the sections. McGrew v. Lettsville, 71 Iowa 150, 32 N. W. 252. Under said section 564, providing that any part of a town plat may be vacated, but not so as to close or obstruct any public highway laid out according to law, etc., where the right to vacate is exercised, it does not affect the authority of the corporation over the part so vacated or take such part out of the boundaries of the corporation. McGrew v. Lettsville, supra. Although the vacation of a portion of a town plat by an agreement of the owners thereof will, by the closing of certain streets, diminish the number of ways of access to the property of other parties, such an agreement is valid, where there remain one or more ways which are reasonably convenient, so that no substantial right is abridged. Lorenzen v. Preston, 53 Iowa 580, 5 N. W. 764. When the owner of lots laid out on a plat vacates alleys and streets, under said section 564, a city council has no authority to make an ex parte judicial determination that such vacation is void, although the section prescribes the condition that the vacation "shall not abridge or destroy the rights of the other proprietors in said plat." Conner v. Iowa City, 66 Iowa 419, 23 N. W. 904.

St. § 2614, providing that where a change in an addition to a city is to be made, a regular suit must be brought in the courts, and all the property-owners to be affected by the change must be made parties to the suit, refers only to changes in plats affecting streets and alleys, and the owners of lots may subdivide them without any application to the court. *Huling v. constitutional limitations.⁵⁵ In this respect a municipal charter is not a contract within the constitutional prohibition of laws impairing the obligation of contracts.⁵⁴

b. New Charter and Reorganization—(I) IN GENERAL. The ingenuity of citizens and statesmen has devised a mode of change in the constitution of municipalities, differing from amendment and repeal, and yet possessing some of the elements of both, which the courts have recognized and upheld under the name of reorganization.⁵⁵ The two elements of territory and population remain substantially the same, but a new charter is introduced under which occurs a reorganization of the corporation, whereby in law is created a new body which is in fact identical with the old.⁵⁶ Out of this double aspect of the new municipality have arisen many questions of relation and obligation, which have been generally decided one way in the courts of law, and another way in equity.⁵⁷ Because the charter is a sine qua non of municipal life, the law logically treats the body established under the new charter as a separate municipality;⁵⁸ but since the same community continues to exercise and enjoy municipal privileges, franchises, property, and improvements, the same under the new as under the old organization and charter, equity inclines to treat the two bodies as identical, or at least the new as the successor to the old.⁵⁹ Under the automatic municipal provisions of some of the states, whereby cities are allowed to frame their own new charters, the identity of the municipality is preserved at law as well as in equity, the new charter being thus treated as an amendment to the old.⁶⁰ Legislative authority is essential to enable a municipality to adopt a new charter or to reincorporate.⁶¹

(II) REINCORPORATION AFTER DEFECTIVE OR VOID INCORPORATION. A municipality acting under a supposed incorporation which is void because of a valid and existing charter previously obtained cannot procure a new charter by proceedings as for an original incorporation.⁶² But a statute may provide for reincorporation or reorganization of a municipality defectively incorporated or which has attempted to incorporate under a void act.⁶³

It can neither devolve these duties permanently on other public bodies, nor permanently suspend or abandon them itself, without being usually regarded as unfaithful, and, indeed, attempting what is wholly beyond its constitutional competency. It is bound, also, to continue to regulate such public matters and bodies, as much as to organize them at first."

c. Constitutional Limitations. The power of the legislature to amend municipal charters or provide a new charter for a municipality is subject of course to constitutional limitations,⁶⁴ such as provisions in relation to the enactment of laws,⁶⁵ the title and the unity of the subject-matter of legislative acts,⁶⁶ amendment of laws by reference to the title only,⁶⁷ provisions prohibiting amendment by special or local laws and requiring general laws,⁶⁸ and provisions for amendment only by certain action of the municipal authorities or inhabitants.⁶⁹

d. Mode of Amendment or Reorganization and Proceedings—(i) IN GENERAL. The constitution sometimes prescribes the mode in which municipal charters may be amended, and in such case it is usually held that the constitutional mode is exclusive, at least except with respect to details, and that a failure to comply

"Extension" of charter.—Increasing the privileges of municipal corporations, or assigning to them new duties, is not an "extension" of their charters within the meaning of a constitutional provision. To extend a charter is to give one which exists a greater or longer time in which to operate than that to which it was originally limited. Moers v. Reading, 21 Pa. St. 188.

Majority or two-thirds vote.—The provision of the New York constitution, requiring the assent of two thirds of the members elected to each branch of the legislature to every bill creating, continuing, altering, or renewing any body corporate or politic, does not apply to public corporations, but to private corporations only, and therefore laws affecting public corporations, such as cities and villages, may be passed by mere majority vote. People v. Morris, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 325.

In Pa. Const. (1838) art. 1, § 25, providing that no corporate body shall be created, renewed, or extended with banking or discounting privileges, without six months' previous public notice of the intended application for the same, and that "no law thereafter enacted shall create, renew, or extend the charter of more than one corporation," the clause quoted does not apply to municipal corporations, but is limited to at least to private corporations, if not to private corporations for banking. *Moers v. See, generally, STATUTES.

67. David v. Portland Water Committee, 14 Oreg. 98, 12 Pac. 174. See, generally, STATUTES. But an act of the legislature which purports to be an amendment of the charter of a municipal corporation and confers upon it important additional powers, but which does not change existing authority or present any different mode of exercising it, is not such an amendment as is prohibited by the constitutional provision that "no act shall ever be revised or amended by mere reference to its title; but the act revised or section amended shall be set forth and published at full length." Sheridan v. Salem, 14 Oreg. 328, 12 Pac. 925. The clause of the constitution which says, "no law shall be revised or amended by reference to its title only, but the law revised, or the section amended, shall be inserted at length in the new act," cannot be held to embrace every enactment which in any degree, however remotely, affects the prior law on a given subject. An act complete in itself is not within the mischief designed to be remedied by this provision, and is not prohibited by it. People v. Wright, 70 Ill. 398. The mere fact that an act does not, in its title, profess to amend a city charter, is unimportant; it is an amendment if it professes to, and does, enact that which makes new organic law for the city government. People v. Wright, supra.

Power to amend charter framed by city.—The Missouri act of April 1, 1893, by which the legislature sought to amend the charter framed by the freeholders of Kansas City under Const. (1875) art. 9, § 16, in respect to a matter of local municipal government, was held unconstitutional and void because substantially with the mandatory requirements is fatal.⁷⁰ So also mandatory statutory provisions as to the mode of amendment by the municipality must be observed.⁷¹ A municipal charter may be amended or in part repealed by adoption of a constitutional provision,⁷² unless there is a saving clause.⁷³

(ii) GENERAL AND SPECIAL LAWS. In the absence of constitutional provision to the contrary, the legislature may amend the charter of a municipal corporation either by a special act,⁷⁴ or by a general law whether the corporation exists under a special charter or under a general law.⁷⁵ In some states, however, the constituin violation of the grant in the constitution to such cities of power to frame their own charters, and permitting amendments thereto by the action of the people of the city "and not otherwise." Kansas City v. Scarritt, 127 Mo. 642, 29 S. W. 845, 30 S. W. 111.

Wash. Act, March 4, 1895, authorizing cities of the first class to make "new" charters by altering, adding to, or repealing their existing charters, is sanctioned by Const. art. 11, § 10, which provides that a city with a population of twenty thousand or more shall be permitted to "frame a charter" for its own government. Reeves v. Anderson, 13 Wash. 17, 42 Pac. 625. The constitution, in providing that the legislative authority of any city containing a population of twenty thousand or more "may," for the purpose of framing a new charter, cause an election to be held, etc., does not vest in the city council the exclusive right to determine whether such election shall be called; and hence the act of March 4, 1895, § 1, declaring that upon the petition of one fourth of the qualified voters of a city of the first class the council "shall" call an election for that purpose, is not unconstitutional. Reeves v. Anderson, supra.

General laws not prohibited.—Cal. Const. art. 11, § 8, which provides that the charter of a city "may be amended at intervals of not less than two years, by proposals therefor, submitted by the legislative authority of the city to the qualified electors thereof," refers to amendments made only at the instance of the officers and electors of the city, and does not prevent the legislature from passing general laws affecting the powers of corporations, such as a general law providing for changing the boundaries of municipalities and excluding territory therefrom, since the constitution plainly declares that all charters of cities framed or adopted by its authority shall be subject to and controlled by general laws, and there is no limit of time as to when such laws may be passed and take effect. People v. Coronado, 100 Cal. 571, 35 Pac. 162. See also Kansas City v. Stegmiller, 151 Mo. 189, 52 S. W. 723.

Denny*, 4 Wash. 135, 29 Pac. 991, 16 L. R. A. 214; Wade v. Tacoma, 4 Wash. 85, 29 Pac. 983. And see infra, II, C, 1, d, (iv).

Constitutional provision not self-executing.—Wash. Const. art. 11, § 10, providing that any city of a certain population shall be permitted to frame a charter for its own government, and for such purpose the legislative authority of such city may cause an election to be had for freeholders to frame such charter, etc., is not self-executing in the sense that it renders invalid an act of the legislature pointing out the manner in which the right so conferred may be exercised and prescribing rules for the guidance of the city council in relation thereto. Reeves v. Anderson, 13 Wash. 17, 42 Pac. 625.

Constitutional method for proposing and submitting amendment not exclusive.—The mere fact that a constitutional provision that cities shall be permitted to frame a charter for their own government prescribes a method for proposing and submitting amendments to a vote of the people does not necessarily exclude every other method, so as to prevent the legislature from prescribing a method. Reeves v. Anderson, 13 Wash. 17, 42 Pac. 625. See also Martin v. San Francisco Election Com'rs Bd., 126 Cal. 404, 53 Pac. 932.

But under Const. art. 11, § 6, declaring that cities and towns heretofore or hereafter organized, and all charters thereof framed or adopted by authority of this constitution, except in municipal affairs, shall be subject to and con-

tion prohibits local or special laws changing or amending municipal charters.⁷⁶ The prohibition does not affect amendments made by special act prior to the adoption of the constitution;⁷⁷ and in some jurisdictions it does not prevent amendment, by special act, of city charters granted prior to the adoption of the constitution.⁷⁸ An amendatory law is not local or special, within the meaning of the prohibition, where it is applicable to all municipalities of a certain character trolled by general laws, it was held that a town incorporated by special act passed prior to the adoption of the constitution is not subject to the control of general laws in municipal affairs. Ex p. Helm, 143 Cal. 553, 77 Pac. 453.

General laws.—La. Const. (1898) art. 48, in prohibiting the amendment by local or special laws of the charters of municipal corporations, with the exception of those having a population of not less than two thousand five hundred inhabitants, did not abridge the power of the general assembly to enact general laws affecting the charters of the class of municipal corporations excepted. Lake Charles v. Roy, 115 La. 939, 40 So. 362.

Amendment of general law adopted by municipality.—Where a city, under the provisions of a general law for the incorporation of cities, adopts such general law, it does so subject to the power of the legislature to repeal or amend the same; and whenever the city takes any steps or institutes any proceedings under such law, after it has been amended, it will be regulated and governed therein by the law as amended, and not by the law as it was when adopted by the city. *Guild v. Constitutional prohibition applicable to private corporations only.—Tenn. Const. art. 11, § 8, providing that "no corporation shall be created, or its powers increased or diminished, by special laws," applies to private corporations only and does not prevent amendment of municipal charters by special act. Williams v. Nashville, 89 Tenn. 487, 15 S. W. 364; Ballentine v. Pulaski, 15 Lea (Tenn.) 633; State v. Wilson, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 246.

Extent of amendment by general law.—Amendments of the charters of cities, towns, and villages must be by general law, which must apply alike to all cities, towns, and villages desiring to amend their charters in that particular respect, so that one city, town, or village may not amend its charter by adopting one provision, and another city, town, or village amend its charter by adopting another and different law on the same subject, but whether the amendment to be adopted shall extend to a single or many subjects is not within the regulation of the constitution. Its mandate is observed where the amendment, whether extensive or limited, is by general law. Guild v. Chicago, 82 Ill. 472.

77. Covington v. East St. Louis, 78 Ill. 548.

78. In Colo. Const. art. 14, § 13, providing that the legislature shall provide by general laws for the organization and classification of cities and towns, and that the powers of each class shall be defined by general laws, so that all municipal corporations of the same class shall possess the same powers and be subject to the same restrictions, and section 14, providing that the legislature shall also make provision by general law whereby any city, town, or village incorporated by any special or local law may elect to be subject to and be governed by the general law relating to said corporation, do not prohibit a special act amending a city charter, like that of Denver, granted by a local act prior to the adoption of the constitution, when such city has not elected to become subject to and governed by the general law. People v. Londoner, 13 Colo. 303, 22 Pac. 764, 6 L. R. A. 444; Darrow v. People, 8 Colo. 426, 8 Pac. 924; Carpenter v. People, 8 Colo. 116, 5 Pac. 828; Brown v. Denver, 7 Colo. 305, 3 Pac. 455. So in Idaho, where there is now a constitutional prohibition against special legislation, the legislature nevertheless has power to amend special municipal charters granted prior to or class, as in the case of an act conferring certain powers upon all municipalities incorporated under special charters.⁷⁹

(III) AMENDMENT BY IMPLICATION. Subject to constitutional limitations, the amendment of a municipal charter may be effected either expressly or by necessary implication from subsequent general or special legislation.⁸⁰ The general doctrine, however, is that a special charter or act or amendment thereof is not to be construed as changed by implication from general legislation, unless a proper construction manifests an unmistakable intention on the part of the legislature to make such change.⁸¹ As a rule statutes of a general nature do not by implication repeal charters by special acts passed for the benefit of particular municipalities.⁸² A special act conferring additional powers upon a municipality existing under a special charter does not impliedly repeal any part of the original charter, except the adoption of the constitution in matters germane to the object and purpose of the charter. Butler v. Lewiston, 11 Ida. 393, 83 Pac. 234.

(IV) ADOPTION OF AMENDMENT OR NEW CHARTER BY MUNICIPALITY—

(A) In General. In some jurisdictions a general statute or constitutional provision authorizes municipal corporations generally, or corporations of a particular class, to adopt an amended or new charter in a prescribed mode, as by action of the corporate authorities⁸⁵ or vote of the people, or both, or to come under the operation of a general municipal incorporation law or particular sections thereof;⁸⁶ and such a statute is not unconstitutional as a delegation of legislative powers to Rescinding action.—Where the municipal authorities have formally resolved to accept the provisions of the general incorporation act the city becomes bound thereby, and subsequent action of the authorities purporting to rescind the resolution of acceptance, although within the time limited by the statute for acceptance or rejection, is ineffectual. Jackson v. Shlomberg, 70 Miss. 47, 11 So. 721.

Mandamus to compel submission of charter amendment to vote see Hindman v. Boyd, 42 Wash. 17, 84 Pac. 609.

In Louisiana it has been held that a statute conferring upon incorporated towns the power of amending their charters only confers upon them the power to regulate their internal organization and the modes and agencies by which the powers and privileges conferred upon them by law may be exercised, and that it does not authorize them, by such amendments, to extend or enlarge their powers and privileges or to alter or destroy the existing authority of the state over their inhabitants. Cook v. Dendinger, 38 La. Ann. 261. To the same effect see Nelson v. Homer, 48 La. Ann. 258, 19 So. 271.

Mo. Const. art. 9, § 16, authorizing a city of a certain population to frame a charter "for its own government" consistent with and subject to the constitutional laws of the state, gives the city the power, in framing a charter, to assume such powers only as appertain to the city government. It does not authorize them to assume other powers which the state has for the protection of the rights and regulation of the duties of the inhabitants in the city, as between themselves. Nor does it confer unlimited power on the city to regulate by its charter all matters that are strictly local, for there are many matters local to the city, requiring governmental protection, which are foreign to the scope of municipal government. Therefore it has been held that such a constitutional provision does not authorize the city in framing its charter to assume the power to regulate prices to be charged by the municipality or its inhabitants,⁸⁷ nor as violating a constitutional prohibition against the imposition of taxes upon a municipal corporation for municipal purposes, although adoption of the amendment may occasion expense to the municipality.⁸⁸ Nor is a state constitutional provision for the submission of new municipal charters or amendments to the voters for ratification in violation of the guarantee, by the federal constitution,⁸⁹ to every state of a republican form of government.⁹⁰ Under a statute authorizing a municipality to adopt an amendment of its charter, but prohibiting any amendment contravening or repugnant to the constitution or statute laws of the state, an amendment repugnant to a statute is void.⁹¹ A special charter may be amended by the adoption by a municipality of a general law.⁹²

(B) Proceedings and Elections to Adopt. Where the constitution prescribes the mode of adoption of an amended or new charter by a municipality, such mode is generally exclusive and must be strictly pursued.⁹³ So when the mode of municipal action to amend or reorganize is prescribed by statute, an amendment or reorganization attempted in any other mode or without substantial compliance

a telephone or other like corporation intrusted with a franchise of a public utility character. State v. Missouri, etc., Tel. Co., 189 Mo. 83, 88 S. W. 41. Nor is such power conferred by the enabling act of 1887, enacted for the purpose of enabling cities to avail themselves of such constitutional provision, and providing that they may frame a charter for their own government and regulate the same. State v. Missouri, etc., Tel. Co., supra.

Successive amendments.—The power conferred by Wash. Const. art. 11, § 10, upon a city containing a population of twenty thousand or more, to "frame a charter" for its own government, subject to general laws, is a continuing right vested in the electors, and does not become exhausted because once exercised. *Reeves v. But the constitutional requirement that all elections by the people shall be by ballot is no restriction upon the power of the legislature to provide that the will of persons desiring amendment of a municipal charter may be ascertained in some other manner than by public election. Graham v. Greenville, 67 Tex. 63, 2 S. W. 742. See also supra, II, C, 1, d, (I), text and note 70.

Notice.—If the constitution requires a particular notice, a different notice, although it may be, in the opinion of the court, equally or even more efficacious, will not be sufficient. Wade v. Tacoma, 4 Wash. 85, 29 Pac. 983.

Number of votes.—Since Wash. Const. art. 11, § 10, provides that proposed amendments shall be submitted to the electors at any general election and ratified by a majority of the qualified voters "voting thereon," a majority in favor of the amendments of the voters voting for or against the same is sufficient to ratify them, notwithstanding that the city charter provides that they shall be with mandatory requirements of the statute is null and void.⁹⁴ Substantial compliance with the statute is all that is necessary, and a failure to comply with provisions which are merely directory does not affect the validity of the amendment or reorganization.⁹⁵ The proceedings to reincorporate, if conducted by a tribunal having jurisdiction, are valid if in substantial accordance with the requirements ratified by a majority of the voters "voting thereat." State v. Denny, 4 Wash. 135, 29 Pac. 991, 16 L. R. A. 214. See also Santa Rosa v. Bower, 142 Cal. 299, 75 Pac. 829. See also infra, this section, text and note 97.

Particular election prescribed.—Where a statute amending the charter of a municipality provides that it shall not take effect until adopted by a majority of the voters, and authorizes such adoption at a particular election, an adoption thereof at a different election is of no effect. Foot v. Cincinnati, 11 Ohio 408, 38 Am. Dec. 737. A regular annual election provided by law for the election of municipal officers, although no state or county officers are chosen, is a "general election" within the meaning of a statute. People v. Berkeley, 102 Cal. 298, 36 Pac. 591, 23 L. R. A. 838.

Petition by qualified voters see Hindman v. Boyd, 42 Wash. 17, 84 Pac. 609. Under Cal. St. (1883) p. 93, § 4, providing for submission to a vote at the next general election, of a proposition to organize a town as a city whenever a petition shall be presented to the board of trustees of the town, signed by one third of the qualified electors, a petition to which are attached the required number of signatures cut from other petitions, identical in form, gives the board no jurisdiction to submit such proposition. People v. Berkeley, 102 Cal. 298, 36 Pac. 591, 23 L. R. A. 838.

Who are qualified voters see Hindman v. Boyd, 42 Wash. 17, 84 Pac. 609, holding that under Acts (1903), p. 393, c. 186, requiring submission to the voters of an amendment of a city charter on petition of a certain proportion of the qualified voters of the city, it lies with the city council in the first instance to pass on the qualifications of the signers, and, holding further, that registration is not necessary. When the qualifications of voters on a proposed reorganization is not prescribed all voters of the existing corporation may vote. Matter of Sag Harbor, 32 Misc. (N. Y.) 624, 67 N. Y. Suppl. 574.

Publication of proposed amendment see Wolfe v. Morehead, 98 Minn. 113, 107 N. W. 728; State v. Denny, 4 Wash. 135, 29 Pac. 991, 16 L. R. A. 214.

Submission to and passage by city council see Pierce v. Spokane City Clerk, 7 Wash. 132, 34 Pac. 428; State v. Denny, 4 Wash. 135, 29 Pac. 991, 16 L. R. A. 214.

Resolution or ordinance.—In a city having power to amend its charter, the proceeding for submission to the electors may be inaugurated in the council by resolution unless the statute requires an ordinance therefor. Ehrhardt v. Seattle, 33 Wash. 664, 74 Pac. 827.

Notice of election and sufficiency thereof see State v. Doherty, 16 Wash. 382, 47 Pac. 958, 58 Am. St. Rep. 39; State v. Denny, 4 Wash. 135, 29 Pac. 991, 16 L. R. A. 214.

Ballots see State v. Denny, 4 Wash. 135, 29 Pac. 991, 16 L. R. A. 214. Where a proposed amendment to a city charter consisted of several sections, all relating to the same subject, a description of the amendment on the ballots which required the voter to vote for or against the entire amendment was held not to be objectionable for failure to submit in such a form that each section of the amendment might be voted on separately. State v. Riplinger, 30 Wash. 281, 70 Pac. 748. Fraudulent ballots, ballots with unintelligible marks, expressing no effective vote upon any subject of choice, as well as ballots upon which no markings have been made by the voter, should be excluded from the aggregate number upon which the requisite four sevenths required by the constitutional amendment is to be estimated, in determining the ratification of the proposed charter. Hopkins v. Duluth, 81 Minn. 189, 83 N. W. 536.

95. State v. Riplinger, 30 Wash. 281, 70 Pac. 748; State v. Doherty, 16 Wash. 382, 47 Pac. 958, 58 Am. St. Rep. 39; Pierce v. Spokane City Clerk, 7 Wash. 132, 34 Pac. 428; State v. Denny, 4 Wash. 135, 29 Pac. 991, 16 L. R. A. 214.

Words added to the statutory form of the submission, which extend the real meaning but do not change the sense thereof, do not vitiate such submission. Hopkins v. Duluth, 81 Minn. 189, 83 N. W. 536 [following State v. Stearns, 72 Minn. 200, 75 N. W. 210].

Omissions of clerk as to notice of election.—Where a statute relating to amendments of a city charter provided for notice in each election district by publication in the daily newspapers and by "causing the same to be posted at each polling place in the several election districts thereof," and the city ordinance submitting proposed amendments provided for the posting of a certified copy of each amendment at each of the polling places within the city, it was held that failure of the clerk to discharge his full duty in that he did not post certified copies as provided by

of the statute authorizing the reorganization.⁹⁶ Where the constitution or statute providing for submission of an amendment or new charter to the people at an election requires assent by a majority of the electors "voting thereat" it is generally held to refer to all persons voting at the election, while "voting thereon" means a majority of those voting on the question of amendment or reorganization.⁹⁷ Whether a new charter or amendment has been legally and constitutionally adopted is not determined by the requisite legislative vote of approval, but is open for decision by the courts on proper proceedings.⁹⁸ The courts, however, can review proceedings for reincorporation only in the mode prescribed by law for such cases.⁹⁹ They have power to revise the discretion of the trustees on a legal application to have an election on the question of reincorporation and to compel them to perform a plain official duty.¹

e. Effect of Amendment or New Charter²—(1) IN GENERAL. The amendment of a municipal charter supersedes the original charter in so far as it is inconsistent therewith or substitutes new provisions on a particular subject, and the imposition or adoption of a new charter repeals the original charter, although there are no express words of repeal;³ but adoption by a municipality of the provisions of a general law does not affect the provisions of a former special charter the ordinance, did not render the election invalid, where newspaper clippings containing copies of the proposed amendment were duly posted in the voting booths, and the pendency of the election was a matter of public notoriety throughout the city. State v. Doherty, 16 Wash. 382, 47 Pac. 958, 58 Am. St. Rep. 39.

Failure of a city clerk to record amendments to the city charter in the charter book, as required by statute, does not affect the validity of the amendments. State v. Doherty, 16 Wash. 382, 47 Pac. 958, 58 Am. St. Rep. 39.

Const. art. 11, § 6, authorizing towns to organize under the general laws relating to municipal corporations "whenever a majority of the electors voting at a general election shall so determine," a majority of all the electors voting at such elections, and not merely a majority voting on such proposition, is required. *People v. See 36 Cent. Dig. tit. "Municipal Corporations," § 123 et seq.

Compare Reading v. Keppleman, 61 Pa. St. 233.

Pa. Act, May 23, 1874, providing for a surrender of the charters of all municipal corporations accepting its provisions, is not supplemental to prior acts, but a substitute for them, notwithstanding rights of property and officers' rights, powers, etc., theretofore existing, are expressly preserved, such preservation being for the time being to prevent not inconsistent with or repugnant to the provisions of the general law.⁴ The amendment of a municipal charter will impliedly repeal the general law within the city limits, in so far, but only in so far, as it is inconsistent therewith.⁵ The adoption by a city existing under a special charter of a part of the general charter pro tanto amends the former and renders it to that extent subject to further amendment by legislative action alone to change the part so adopted.⁶ Where a provision in an amendment to a city charter is but a reenactment of a provision which refers to the general statutes, the amendment will not be deemed to refer to amendments of the general statutes made after the enactment of the original charter.⁷ In the case of reorganization or reincorporation, it is within the legislative power to determine when it shall take effect and what shall be the operation and effect of the reorganization or reincorporation.⁸ It may declare or indicate that the reorganized municipality is merely a continuation of the former body and thus preserve its municipal identity through all the changes wrought by the disorder and confusion. Erie v. Flint, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. 482.

Where a town was reincorporated as a city by an act which repealed all conflicting laws, the territory embraced within the town thereafter became a city, although the act granting the charter to the town was not specially repealed. Wright v. Overstreet, 122 Ga. 633, 50 S. E. 487.

Prior annexation of territory.—Since a description of the territory whose inhabitants are incorporated is an essential part of the charter, an amendment of such description by proceedings to annex additional territory is an amendment of the charter, which is wholly superseded by a new charter under Cal. Const. art. 11, § 8, providing that when a charter has been presented to the legislature and approved it shall become the charter and organic law of such city, and shall supersede any existing charter and all amendments thereof, and all special laws inconsistent therewith. People v. Oakland, 92 Cal. 611, 28 Pac. 807.

Schools and school-districts.—A common school-district created by a special charter continues under its provisions, notwithstanding the community reorganizes under a general law containing no school-district provisions. Smith v. People, 154 Ill. 58, 39 N. E. 319. The city of Chicago, by incorporating under the general law for the incorporation of cities, did not abrogate any of the provisions of its special charter relative to schools, since such law contains no provisions as to schools and provides that all laws and parts of laws not inconsistent therewith and applicable to such cities shall continue in force. Brenan v. People, 176 Ill. 620, 52 N. E. 353. See also School Trustees v. Peoria School Inspectors, 115 Ill. App. 479. And see, generally, SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL-DISTRICTS.

Prior public improvements and assessment of damages.—Where a special act incorporating a city authorized it to straighten a certain creek within its limits, and subsequently a general corporation act, which was adopted by the city, was passed, authorizing cities to alter the channels of watercourses, and providing for proceedings for the assessment of damages, it was held that the latter did not repeal the former, as to work done in straightening said creek and proceedings for damages. Harrisburg v. Sheek, 104 Pa. St. 53.

5. Tierney v. Dodge, 9 Minn. 166 (holding that a provision in a city charter that no appeal should be allowed from the judgment of a city justice in cases of assault, where the judgment or fine imposed exclusive of costs was less than twenty-five dollars, prevailed over the general statute allowing appeals in all cases of convictions before justices of the peace); State v. De Bar, 58 Mo. 395 (holding that an amendment of a city charter, authorizing it to "regulate or suppress" bawdy-houses, operated to repeal within the city limits a general law prohibiting the keeping of such houses); *State v. Where a charter has been prepared and submitted under Minn. Const. (1898) § 36, art. 4, authorizing such submission, and providing that, if four sevenths of the qualified voters voting shall ratify the charter, it shall, at the end of thirty days thereafter, become the charter of such city, etc., and has been actually ratified, it takes effect, and becomes the charter, of the city or village at the end of thirty new charter;⁹ or it may manifest its intention that the new corporation shall be a separate and distinct corporation,¹⁰ and the legislative intention will be given full effect in the courts of law.¹¹ If the latter intention appears, pending suits at law by or against the old corporation are abated.¹² If the former, they remain in statu quo or may be revived.¹³ The date of the reincorporation is also generally appointed by the legislature. In some states this is determined by the date of the registration of the new charter;¹⁴ but usually the new corporation goes into operation and effect on the day of the completion of the actual reorganization under the new charter.¹⁵ An amendment adopted by a municipality under constitutional or statutory authority takes effect from the day of its approval, in the absence of provision to the contrary.¹⁶

(11) ORDINANCES, BY-LAWS, ETC. Amendment of a municipal charter or reorganization under a new charter will operate to repeal all ordinances, by-laws, etc., or parts of the same, in so far as they are in conflict therewith,¹⁷ unless they

days after the day of election; and it is immaterial that such ratification is not judicially determined, on appeal from the decision of the canvassing board, until after the thirty-day period has expired. Davis v. Hugo, 81 Minn. 220, 83 N. W. 984.

Mo. Rev. St. (1879) § 4386, which provided that upon the reorganization of a city, none of its rights or liabilities, and no suit or prosecution of any kind, should be affected by such change, was not meant to retain previous forms of remedy, so as to enable a city, after its reorganization, to bring suit for taxes in its own name, as it was previously empowered to do. *Jefferson v. Transfer of powers of old corporation.—Upon the reorganization of a municipal corporation, which is essentially changed thereby, in order to transfer to the new the particular powers of the old corporation, there must be an enabling clause empowering the new corporation to act in the particular case, or a general clause embracing the particular case. Savannah v. Georgia Steam Boat Co., R. M. Charl. (Ga.) 342. are continued in force by the act of amendment;¹⁸ but in so far as existing ordinances are not inconsistent with the amendment or new charter, there is as a rule no repeal.¹⁹

(iii) PROPERTY RIGHTS, PRIVILEGES, AND OBLIGATIONS OR LIABILITIES. The mere amendment of a municipal charter does not destroy the identity of the municipality or its right to property, nor as a rule are its property rights affected by reorganization under a new charter, even though it thereby becomes technically a new corporation.²⁰ Nor is a municipal corporation relieved from its pre-existing obligations or liabilities, either by an amendment of its charter or by the imposition or adoption of a new charter, the general doctrine being that a municipal liability or obligation binds the community through all changes so long as the territory and property retain substantial identity.²¹ Indeed, since the legislature

Inconsistent ordinances.—But where a new city charter expressly repeals the old charter and all laws in conflict with the new charter, and provides that all existing by-laws, resolutions, and ordinances of the town shall remain in force until repealed or modified by the city council, only such by-laws, resolutions, and ordinances as are in consonance with the provisions of the new charter are preserved. Baader v. Cullman, 115 Ala. 539, 22 So. 19. See also Quinette v. St. Louis, 76 Mo. 402 [affirming 8 Mo. App. 583].

Effect of continuance.—The Greater New York Charter (Laws (1901), c. 466, § 41), providing that the ordinances in force Jan. 1, 1902, not inconsistent with the charter, were continued in full force and effect, did not continue such ordinances as part of the statutory law incorporated in the provisions of the charter. New York v. Knickerbocker Trust Co., 104 N. Y. App. Div. 223, 93 N. Y. Suppl. 937.

Recording.—A provision in a statute erecting a borough into a city that the existing borough ordinances should remain in force, provided they should be recorded within four months thereafter, was merely directory, so that a failure to comply therewith did not affect the validity of such ordinances. *Erie Academy v. The lots were within a city of the third class, which was then a part of the township, and was subsequently organized as a city of the second class, parts of the township having been detached and included in other townships. It was held that, by operation of law and by the express terms of the conveyance, the city was the owner of the property, and that in Laws (1889), c. 62, passed while a suit to quiet title was pending, the legislature exceeded its authority in providing for the sale of its property and division of its proceeds between the city and the township.

Water company privilege.—Where a corporation is granted the privilege of supplying a village with water, the subsequent incorporation of a city as a legal successor of such village does not destroy or abridge the privilege conferred. *Grand Rapids v. Taxpayer's consent.—Under a Texas stat-such provision is not unconstitutional as an unlawful interference with vested rights, a taking of property without due process of law, or for any other reason.²⁴

(iv) TAXES AND ASSESSMENTS. The revenue due to the old municipality may be collected by its successor, and all liens and remedies therefor pass to it unless otherwise provided by law.²⁵ Where a new municipal corporation is liable for the debts of the old, it has the same powers of taxation to pay them which existed at the time of their creation, and which entered into the contracts.²⁶ So also it may assess benefits and appraise damages for public improvements.²⁷

(v) OFFICERS. The statutes providing for reorganization usually contain specific provision for officers; but lacking such provisions the courts hold that the officers of the old corporation hold their offices and exercise their powers until the officers of the succeeding corporation are elected and qualified.²⁸

(vi) DUTIES PENDING REORGANIZATION. During the reorganization of a municipal corporation it is not released from its obligation to exercise the power

ute providing that the reorganized city shall be liable for the debts of its predecessor, if the taxpayers vote to take over its property, a special taxpayer's election after reorganization is necessary to impose this burden upon the reorganized corporation. Quanah v. White, 88 Tex. 14, 28 S. W. 1065.

Mandamus to compel payment of judgment see Lee v. Thief River Falls, 82 Minn. 88, 84 N. W. 654.

Remedy under new charter.—Under Kansas City Charter (1889), art. 17, § 10, providing that such charter "shall not in any manner affect any right, lien or liability accrued, established, or subsisting under and by virtue of the previous charter or any amendment thereto," one having a right or lien existing under the old charter may avail himself of the remedy accruing under the new charter. *Kansas City v. Assessments for previous years.—Under Ky. St. § 3258, which is a part of the charter of cities of the third class, and which provides that any right, lien, or liability acquired or accrued under a former charter shall continue and be enforced, a city, which at the time of the enactment of such new charter had the right under its former charter to assess property for previous years, its assessment having been omitted, may still exercise such right, although under the new statute (Rev. St. § 3403) the right to make such assessment would be barred by limitation. Frankfort v. Mason, etc., Co., 100 Ky. 48, 37 S. W. 290, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 543.

to assess the benefits and appraise the damage caused by the change of grade of a highway by the borough, such action not having been taken by the borough, and no change in respect to such action being made by its charter, except as to its method of procedure.

Nebraska.—State v. Babeock, 25 Nebr. 709, 41 N. W. 654, holding that a city created by the act of March 1, 1879, out of a village having a president and board of trustees, might, until the election of a mayor and council, exercise the ordinary powers of a city, including the order of an election to vote the bonds and the issue of bonds duly voted, through the instrumentality and agency of the said president and trustees.

New York.—People v. Hull, 19 N. Y. Suppl. 536. But compare Watervliet v. Colonie, 27 N. Y. App. Div. 394, 50 N. Y. Suppl. 487, holding that where a statute dissolves a town as a municipal corporation and re-with which it is invested to keep its streets and sidewalks in a safe condition, or perform other like duties imposed upon it by law.²⁹

f. Void or Defective Reorganization. Mere irregularity in the proceedings does not invalidate the reorganization;³⁰ but attempted reorganizations of municipalities have been declared void on account of the following substantial defects: Want of jurisdiction in the board or officer assuming to determine the question of reorganization;³¹ want of power in the tribunal assuming to warrant or conduct the proceedings;³² want of approval of the step by the inhabitants;³³ want of approval by the council;³⁴ and because the body attempting the reorganization was not within the purview of the statute.³⁵ The legislature may validate a defective corporation,³⁶ or the corporation may be estopped to deny the validity of its reorganization;³⁷ and even though an act under which a municipality attempts to reorganize is afterward declared void, acts done during its de facto existence under the statute are valid.³⁸ An invalid reorganization of a municipality cannot affect its corporate existence under its original charter, the attempted reorganization being a mere nullity.³⁹

g. Repeal of Amendment. The repeal of an act amending a municipal charter does not revive, within such municipality, a general statute expressly or impliedly repealed within such limits by the amendatory act.⁴⁰

2. FORFEITURE AND DISSOLUTION — a. In General. The American doctrine in regard to municipal corporations seems to be that they can be dissolved only as the direct result of legislative action.⁴¹ This may be effected either by repeal of the places it by a city, the new corporation succeeds to the governmental property of the old, and hence the former officers of the town do not exist for the purpose of winding up its affairs.

charter⁴² or by express provision contained in the charter or general law that the corporation shall cease and determine for failure to comply with certain conditions therein prescribed;⁴³ or by the expiration of the time limited for the existence of the corporation.⁴⁴ This is a distinct departure from the English doctrine and practice under which a municipality might be dissolved, not only by act of parliament,⁴⁵ but also by loss of an integral part,⁴⁶ by a surrender of franchises,⁴⁷ or by forfeiture of its charter in proceedings by scire facias or quo warranto.⁴⁸ Neither of these three last-named methods have received general recognition in America, and the last two have generally been rejected as contrary to the genius and spirit of our institutions.⁴⁹ Under the common law the several classes of officers and the class of persons named in the charter were denominated the integral parts of a municipal corporation, for example the mayor, aldermen, and commonalty.⁵⁰ The loss of its mayor by failure to elect at the appointed time, or by death at such time that the office could not be filled, operated to dissolve the corporation.⁵¹ So likewise the loss of all or a majority of the aldermen or of all the commonalty, whereby the corporation became incapacitated to perform its functions.⁵² But this has been provided against by statute and it may well be doubted whether dissolution can now be effected by this method even in England.⁵³ In America, if indeed this method of dissolution ever was recognized, the life of the municipality does not hang by such a slender thread. There are no classes of persons to form integral parts.⁵⁴ The charter incorporates the inhabitants and territory into a municipality; and these three constituent elements, charter, territory, and inhabitants, may be regarded as its integral parts, the loss of any one of which might well be held to work dissolution, since without all the corporation could not exist.⁵⁵ Certainly the loss of the charter, by repeal or in any other lawful way, would disincorporate the municipality.⁵⁶ And if the people should entirely abandon the territory embraced within its boundaries the wilderness remaining would not constitute a municipal corporation; for inhabitants are essential to municipal life and operation.⁵⁷ So also if all the territory within the boundaries of the municipality should be washed away by flood or otherwise destroyed, the former inhabitants, even with their charter preserved, would no longer be a municipal corporation, for the integral territory would be wanting.⁵⁸

b. Surrender of Charter. Although it was otherwise in England,⁵⁹ a municipal charter cannot be surrendered in the United States without legislative sanction. The legislature, being the sole judge as to the public necessity for the existence of a public corporation, may, unless forbidden by the constitution, determine when and where one shall exist and what powers and franchises it shall have independent of the wishes of the inhabitants, and without legislative authority therefor the citizens may not surrender their charter and thereby nullify the legislative will.⁶⁰ Municipal corporations, however, may be authorized by statute to surrender their franchises and powers by disincorporation by popular vote or other municipal action.⁶¹ This is not in strictness a dissolution by surrender of the charter, but a dissolution by operation of law consequent upon the condition expressed in the statute; or in other words, it is a repeal of the charter in the mode prescribed by law.⁶²

e. Non-User or Misuser. Where the legislature creates a municipal corporation, refusal of the inhabitants to accept the charter or organize thereunder, or to carry on the organization after completion, would render the corporation dormant, but would not dissolve it.⁶³ Non-user or misuser may subject the corporation to penalty; but the generally prevalent doctrine in America is that it does not work municipal dissolution;⁶⁴ and at any time before repeal of the charter even a minority of the citizens may revive the corporation with all its lawful powers, privileges, and franchises.⁶⁵ Non-user by failure to elect officers, or otherwise, for however long a period of time, does not of itself operate to forfeit the charter or dissolve a municipal corporation.⁶⁶ It has been held, however, that if the charter contains a clause that on failure to elect officers annually all municipal powers, immunities, and franchises shall cease, the failure to elect municipal officers, as required, will operate to repeal the charter and dissolve the corporation, according to the legislative will.⁶⁷ Other decisions are to the contrary.⁶⁸

d. Forfeiture by Judicial Proceedings. Forfeiture is herein used in that sense whereby is expressed the judgment of a court ousting a municipality from its charter powers, privileges, and franchises, and thereby dissolving the corporation.⁶⁹ Formerly in England this judgment might be pronounced in scire facias and quo warranto proceedings, against public as well as private corporations.⁷⁰ It was the legal weapon employed by the servile judiciary of the Stuart dynasty to punish the cities for their participation in the popular resistance to absolutism,⁷¹ as well as to deprive the American colonies of their charter rights and franchises.⁷² It is the familiar judgment used in the United States at the instance of the state to inflict capital punishment upon a private corporation for culpable misuser or non-user of its franchises,⁷³ and in a few cases it has been recognized in our state courts as a proper proceeding against a municipal corporation;⁷⁴ but the great weight of judicial opinion is to the effect that the courts have no power to dissolve a municipal corporation.⁷⁵ That power belongs exclusively to the legislative department of the government.⁷⁶ This departure from the course of the common law is explained and justified upon the ground that the American municipality, unlike its English prototype, is strictly a public corporation, an instrumentality and agency of the state for the performance of governmental functions for the public welfare; and that the propriety of its existence as such public agency is not a judicial but exclusively a political question solely within the discretion of the legislative department, so that, while the courts may adjudge and enforce legal penalties against them and their officers for misuser or non-user of powers and franchises, they have no right to destroy a public agency which the legislature has created and in its plenary discretion sees fit to continue for the administration of affairs of the commonwealth.⁷⁷ To permit this would perniciously disturb the balance of powers essential to the welfare and proper existence of the American state and menace the perpetuity of our system of government.⁷⁸ The cases in which American courts have exercised jurisdiction to pronounce judgment of forfeiture do not assail this apparently impregnable position of the great majority of our courts on the subject of the proper balance of legislative and judicial powers, but assume the power in the judiciary to adjudge forfeiture, for non-user of franchise, against municipalities whose charters ought long before to have been repealed.⁷⁹ Such judgments, however meritorious in themselves and consonant with the English cases, manifest such indifference to fundamental principles of constitutional limitation, that they cannot be considered as disturbing the general American doctrine that courts do not possess the power to dissolve a municipal corporation by judgment of forfeiture of its charter powers and franchises.⁸⁰

e. Repeal of Charter—(1) POWER TO REPEAL. The inherent power of the legislative department to abolish or dissolve a municipal corporation by a repeal of its charter has been settled by repeated adjudication,⁸¹ subject of course to fail for one year to keep its streets, sidewalks, etc., in repair, it should thereby forfeit its charter and all rights thereunder, such forfeiture could not be ascertained and declared in an action to restrain the collection of taxes imposed by a municipality.

constitutional limitations;⁸² and this power is not affected by the fact that the corporation is the trustee of a public charity.⁸³ A municipal charter is not a contract within the constitutional prohibition against laws impairing the obligation of contracts;⁸⁴ and municipal consent is not required, unless required by the constitution.⁸⁵ The dissolution may be enacted, even against the protest of the inhabitants;⁸⁶ nor can the legislative motive be questioned judicially.⁸⁷ Of course a municipal charter may be repealed by the adoption of a constitutional provision.⁸⁸

(II) METHOD—(A) In General. pality existing under a general act may, unless the constitution forbids, be dissolved by a special act.⁹³ Sometimes, however, the constitution prohibits repeal as well as amendment,⁹⁴ by special act, so that a municipal charter can only be repealed by the municipality under a general law enacted for that purpose.⁹⁵

(B) Repeal by Implication. A municipal charter may be repealed either expressly or impliedly by subsequent legislation.⁹⁶ A special charter may be impliedly repealed by a special act,⁹⁷ or by a general law which embraces such special charter.⁹⁸ The repeal of a general statute authorizing the incorporation of communities by their own political choice is a legislative withdrawal of the sovereign permission to such communities to continue the enjoyment of municipal franchises and necessarily operates as a repeal of the charters of all corporations organized under such general statute.⁹⁹ But mere inconsistency in the two acts will not necessarily operate to effect a repeal.¹ Repeal of municipal charters by implication is a doctrine which meets with special disfavor in our courts, because of its destructive effect upon public institutions; and municipal life will be declared to be terminated by statute only when the later statute is wholly irreconcilable with the former.² The act relied on for repeal by implication must, by its terms, plainly manifest the legislative intention that such shall be its effect on the former statute; otherwise it will remain in force and the corporation will still stand.³ Adoption of a constitutional prohibition against the incorporation of municipalities or amendment of their charters by special act does not operate to repeal charters previously granted by special act, but the provision refers to future legislation only.⁴

f. Operation and Effect of Repeal or Dissolution—(i) IN GENERAL. The primary effect of the dissolution of a municipal corporation by legislative repeal of its charter or otherwise, without provision for reincorporation, is to destroy the corporation.⁵ Its life is ended, its franchises withdrawn, its powers abrogated, and its functions cease.⁶ It is no longer a public institution. It can neither sue nor be sued; receive nor convey property; make contracts; nor commit torts or crimes.⁷ The corporation is defunct, and naught remains but to administer on its effects.⁸ The repeal of a special charter of incorporation, which had been accepted by the town in lieu of a previous charter under general laws, does not operate to revive the first charter, but wholly disincorporates the community.⁹

(ii) OFFICERS. The absolute repeal of a charter destroys all offices under it and puts an end to the functions of the incumbents.¹⁰

(iii) PROPERTY. The strictly public property of a defunct municipality may be disposed of by the legislature as other state property.¹¹ That encumbered for creditors will be subject to their liens.¹² Other property which has been purchased by the inhabitants for other than governmental purposes, such as parks, lighting plants, waterworks, and street railways, owned by the municipality are subject to peculiar considerations and regarded diversely in various states. In Michigan it is treated as private property held for the people of the locality,¹³ while in Pennsylvania it is treated as public property subject to absolute legislative control.¹⁴ The judicial views in other states are various, but on the middle

In a quo warranto proceeding against a municipal corporation requiring it by its officers to show by what warrant it acted as such, such a proceeding being authorized by statute, a judgment has the effect to dissolve the corporation, whether it existed de facto or de jure, and is a good defense in a suit on the bond of a tax-collector by the village, or by the state for the use of the corporation. *Dodge v. On the dissolution of a municipal corporation by a judgment in quo warranto, as permitted by statute, the authority of its treasurer to demand or recover money from the collector or any one else, on behalf of such corporation, is absolutely revoked, and the corporation cannot sue on the bond of the collector. Dodge v. People, 113 Ill. 491, 1 N. E. 826. After such dissolution the state cannot maintain an action on the tax-collector's bond for the use of the defunct municipality, and the money held by him should be kept until someone having a right thereto demands it. Dodge v. People, supra.

ground between these two extremes.¹⁵ Where the corporation is the trustee of a public charity, the legislature may provide for a substitute trustee.¹⁶

(iv) OBLIGATIONS. Creditors of the defunct corporation can enforce their claims against it at law only in the manner and to the extent specially provided by law.¹⁷ Judgment cannot be recovered, as there is no one to sue; the debt remains, but the remedy is gone.¹⁸ The doctrine of the Dartmouth college case affords no protection in this particular, for this was a private corporation.¹⁹ The common-law doctrine that the debts are extinguished prevails in the courts of law, and therein the creditor is without remedy, except as specially provided by statute.²⁰ In equity, however, the liability of a municipal corporation to creditors is not extinguished by a repeal of its charter. The obligation to perform its contracts rests upon a municipal corporation as it does upon a natural person, and a legislative act which deprives such a corporation of its charter cannot be construed as relieving it from its liability to its creditors.²¹ Legislation having such effect would be unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of contracts.²² A court of equity therefore will afford relief by enforcing against municipal property liens which survive the corporation.²³ Strictly, public property is not subject to such liens, since, being held for public uses only, it could not be encumbered in favor of private persons;²⁴ but property held by the municipality in its quasi-private character is subject to encumbrance;²⁵ and such encumbrance will be enforced in equity even on revenue and after the corporation is extinct.²⁶

(v) TAXES. With the corporation, its offices and officers also become defunct, and no taxes can be thereafter either levied or collected by them.²⁷ However, taxes levied for any special public purpose may be collected by the agency succeeding to that function,²⁸ and those pledged to secure any municipal obligation may be collected in equity and applied to the obligation.²⁹ But the courts cannot exercise the sovereign power to assess and levy taxes.³⁰

legal faculty or authority to do an act,³¹ and "function," the proper activity or duty of the municipality.³² Considered together, they mark and define the relation of the municipal corporation to the state, county, township, and other instrumentalities of government, and also to natural persons, and the boundary of its rights and duties as a corporate being.³³ The extent and operation of these functions and powers are always to be considered with reference to the purpose and object of the creation and existence of the corporation, toward which all powers and functions are assumed to operate.³⁴ It must, however, be borne in mind that the modern municipality is not the medieval corporation, called a "franchise," and given to a favored few to promote commerce and guarantee liberty and exemption from royal burdens,³⁵ but a public institution for self-government and improvement and local administration of the affairs of state.³⁶

ferred upon municipal corporations, and which are elsewhere treated, are eminent domain,⁴⁵ improvement,⁴⁶ police power,⁴⁷ and taxation.⁴⁸

2. CLASSIFICATION OF POWERS — a. In General. All the powers of a municipal corporation, as well as of other corporations, are considered and treated by judges and authors by common consent as apparently divisible into two great classes — express powers and implied powers; and by some it has been said that there are no other;⁴⁹ while others have preferred to classify these powers as (1) express, (2) implied, and (3) incidental, indispensable, or inherent.⁵⁰ This classification seems more consistent with the derivation and history of powers and is adopted in this article.

b. Inherent Powers. Inherent powers are such as are necessary and inseparably incidental to every corporation, and as soon as the municipality is duly erected they become its faculties and are a part of its life as matter of course.⁵¹ They are sometimes described as the common-law incidents or the common-law powers of a corporation, and are enumerated by Blackstone as follows: (1) To have perpetual

Municipal corporations possess the following powers, and no others: (1) Those granted in express words; (2) those necessarily or fairly implied in, or incident to, the powers expressly granted; (3) those essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation, not simply convenient, but indispensable. Any fair, reasonable doubt concerning the existence of the power is resolved against the corporation. Los Angeles City Water Co. v. Los Angeles, 88 Fed. 720. A municipal corporation can exercise only those powers that are granted in express words, those necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to the powers expressly granted, and those indispensable, as distinguished from convenient, to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation. Cleveland School Furniture Co. v. Greenville, 146 Ala. 559, 41 So. 862. They can exercise only the powers granted in express words, those necessarily or fairly implied, and those essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation. Joplin v. Leckie, 78 Mo. App. 8. Their powers are limited to those expressly granted and those fairly implied therefrom or incidental thereto. Ft. Scott v. W. G. Eads Brokerage Co., 117 Fed. 51, 54 C. C. succession; (2) to sue and to be sued, implead or to be impleaded, grant and receive by its corporate name, and do other acts as natural persons; (3) to purchase, hold, and sell property, real and personal, for the benefit of the municipality; (4) to have a common seal alterable at pleasure; and (5) to make by-laws and ordinances for the government of the corporation.⁵² Some courts have spoken of other powers as inherent in the very nature of the corporation because essential to enable it to accomplish the end for which it is created.⁵³ These essential powers are sometimes denominated incidental, because they are, not simply convenient, but indispensable to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation.⁵⁴ The safer nomenclature seems to limit "inherent" to those congenital powers recognized at common law as inhering in the corporation from the date and fact of its creation.⁵⁵ Customary powers, being those which the boroughs and cities of England had, without express grant, been wont severally to exercise according to their respective local customs, "time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary,"⁵⁶ are not recognized in America as valid, and cannot be embraced in the class of inherent powers.⁵⁷ Such of these as are essential to the normal life of the corporation may be sustained as implied or incidental powers by liberal construction;⁵⁸ but those which are merely convenient or useful cannot under our law be maintained and exercised.⁵⁹

c. Express Powers. This class of powers includes such only as are granted in express words by the special charter or the general law under which the corporation is organized.⁶⁰ In states where special charters are inhibited by the constitution, these powers are of course uniform in municipalities of the same class; but the general policy is to distinguish the various classes of municipal corporations by a grant of additional powers to each advanced class or grade.⁶¹ Special charters do not allow any orderly classification of powers. Every municipality asks for such powers as its location or conditions suggest, or its population or promoters may desire, and gets all which legislative complaisance may yield, with the result that an array of municipal charters of the United States present to legal view at once an amusing exhibition and a perplexing problem.⁶² The legislative attempt often seems to be to enumerate all the powers intended to be granted; and then, recognizing the futility of such effort, the legislature supplies omissions with a clause known as the general welfare clause, granting to the corporation power to do all such acts and pass such ordinances as may conduce to the public welfare.⁶³ This residuary grant of municipal power, in whatsoever phrase it may be couched, although obviously intended to add to the enumerated powers of the municipality, has been thought in some cases to be nugatory under the constructive limitations of the preceding specific enumeration.⁶⁴ The better view seems to be that the "general welfare clause" alone amounts to a grant of all usual and necessary municipal powers, and the enumeration of particular powers grants all others therein specified.⁶⁵ The enumeration usually contains legislative, judicial, and executive powers, corresponding to the three recognized departments of government in America, with a specific statement of the amount or extent of each granted to the municipality.⁶⁶ What is the measure of these powers opens the broad field of statutory construction, which with all its diversified phases and incongruous illustrations belongs within the domain of implied powers, wherein it will receive treatment.⁶⁷ The express powers granted under general statutes providing for the organization of a municipal corporation in accordance with their terms are more uniform and consistent, and lend themselves much more readily to doctrine and rule.⁶⁸ These general statutes in the various states, if not copies or imitations of each other, all bear strong resemblance, their differences being attributable to varied social, industrial, economical, and constitutional conditions in the several states; and even these under legislative and judicial tendencies are gradually vanishing.⁶⁹ General statutes, like special charters, also contain a "general welfare clause."⁷⁰ The particular express powers will be hereafter treated under appropriate headings.⁷¹

than inherent and express powers, and is employed to designate those powers which arise by natural implication from the grant of express power, or by inevitable inference from the purpose or functions of the corporation.⁷² It has often been judicially declared that a corporation claiming a right or power as against the public must be prepared to prove its title;⁷³ and that the courts incline against any presumption of power being granted which is not of common right, or in other words treat charters with the rules of strict construction;⁷⁴ yet it seems to be also well established by repeated adjudications that municipal corporations may exercise all powers within the fair intent and purpose of their creation, which are reasonably proper to give effect to the powers expressly granted;⁷⁵

and that in so doing they have the choice of the means adapted to the ends and are not confined to any one mode of operation.⁷⁶ The latter view seems much more consistent with reason, since the grant of power to a municipality is a grant not to a private company for personal use and profit, but to a public institution for the public welfare.⁷⁷

(II) ILLUSTRATIONS. In accordance with these principles it is held that a municipal corporation has by implication the power to purchase, and to take and hold property, real or personal, for the purposes of its incorporation,⁷⁸ to sell or dispose of property,⁷⁹ to make contracts generally,⁸⁰ to create indebtedness,⁸¹ and to issue warrants and certificates of indebtedness⁸² or bonds and other securities⁸³ for a legitimate municipal purpose; to compromise claims and suits,⁸⁴ submit claims to arbitration,⁸⁵ employ attorneys to defend or prosecute actions,⁸⁶ and to indemnify or reimburse an officer for losses sustained on behalf of the corporation.⁸⁷ Power to remove from streets all obstructions and encroachments implies power to employ any appropriate means to ascertain and locate the street lines and boundaries and the existence and extent of such encroachments and obstructions,⁸⁸ and power to erect bridges and approaches implies power to acquire the right to swing a bridge over private property and grant in consideration thereof the use of a vault under a street.⁸⁹ Power to enumerate population endows the municipality with power, when necessary to the ascertaining of its status or rank, to make and publish a census of its population.⁹⁰ Power to assess, impose, and

3. GENERAL RULES OF CONSTRUCTION. The following general rules for the construction of statutes in regard to municipal power in the United States are established by the weight of authority: (1) Where a particular power is claimed for a municipal corporation, and particularly where private right is infringed or imperiled by a power claimed, any fair, reasonable doubt as to the existence and possession of the power will be resolved against the corporation and the power denied to it.¹¹ (2) But the possession of the power being established, a generous measure of its exercise will be permitted to the end that it may effectuate its pur-power expressly granted, and the absence of legislative provision regarding enumeration required to enable a municipal corporation to enforce a grant of power, it is competent for the municipal authorities, by regular methods, to ascertain and make public the number of persons resident in the municipalities.

The municipality has no more control over such matters in the city than commissioners have in the several counties of the commonwealth.

ent upon and subservient to the objects of their creation.¹⁷ They are faculties of the organism which it may or must exercise to continue its existence and fulfil its purpose.¹⁸ They may, like powers, be specially declared, or may be implied from the express nature and objects of the institution.¹⁹ Municipal corporations are designed ultimately for no other end but the welfare of the public and especially of the communities where they are established, and to this end their functions must be exercised.²⁰

2. CLASSIFICATION — a. In General. The functions of municipal corporations, although all of a public nature, are properly divisible into two great classes, according to the double nature and purpose of the institution; namely, (1) governmental, which are those conferred or imposed upon it as a local agency of limited and prescribed jurisdiction, to be employed in administering the affairs of the state, and promoting the public welfare generally;²¹ and (2) municipal, being those granted for the special benefit and advantage of the urban community embraced within the corporate boundaries.²²

b. Governmental Functions. This class of functions includes all those which are usually performed by the state in rural communities under general laws, and were so performed within the municipal boundaries before the organization of the corporation, and which the state would resume on disincorporation.²³ These functions are served by the police power²⁴ and power of eminent domain;²⁵ and also by those promoting public education,²⁶ those maintaining and operating a fire department,²⁷ those furthering the administration of justice,²⁸ and such other powers as are to be exercised by the corporation for the public weal, in or for the exercise of which the municipality receives no compensation or particular benefit.²⁹ This class of functions are not franchises or privileges, to be exercised or ignored by the municipality at discretion,³⁰ but rather legal duties imposed by the state upon its creature, which it may not omit with impunity but must perform at its peril.³¹

They may be imposed in the charter or by general laws, which the corporation must obey, as must any natural person, or suffer the consequences of violated law.³² They cannot be indicted for offenses which derive their criminality from evil intention, or from breach of social duty, pertaining to human beings; nor can they be guilty of treason, felony, or offenses against the person, or be imprisoned; but they may be indicted and suffer fine or penalty under judicial sentence;³³ and in some states even forfeiture of charter,³⁴ for omission to perform governmental duty imposed by law. These governmental functions are of comparatively recent imposition upon municipalities, being nearly or quite all the development of the nineteenth century.³⁵ They are all imposed by statute, and are necessarily mandatory or peremptory functions, and subject to increase or diminution at the pleasure of the state.³⁶ In the performance of governmental duties the municipality represents the state, uses its power, and is often permitted to use its name.³⁷ The officers performing these duties and exercising these powers are rather officers of the state than of the municipality, and as such are liable to state control.³⁸ Accordingly it has been repeatedly held by the courts that the state may create and appoint officers for the performance of these governmental functions, such as fire and police commissions, and even city hall commissions.³⁹ And in the functions of taxation, administration of justice, and enforcement of the criminal law, the state often operates through the media of its own general officers, within as well as without the municipal boundaries.⁴⁰ Whether the function of caring for and keeping in repair the public highways within the municipality is governmental or municipal has been often mooted and diversely decided.⁴¹

private, just as the governmental are called public; but this terminology is unfortunate, since all municipal functions are public, as pertaining to the public nature of the corporation.⁴³ Under this class of functions are included, in most jurisdictions, the proper care of streets and alleys,⁴⁴ parks and other public places,⁴⁵ and the erection and maintenance of public utilities and improvements generally.⁴⁶ Logically all these are strictly municipal functions which specially and peculiarly promote the comfort, convenience, safety, and happiness of the citizens of the municipality, rather than the welfare of the general public.⁴⁷ This class of functions was almost the sole possession of the English municipalities before the nineteenth century, and were called municipal franchises,⁴⁸ by which was generally understood royal privileges granted to a municipality, and not duties imposed upon it.⁴⁹ Under modern judicial opinion, however, this kind of functions is properly divisible into two classes—imperative and discretionary.⁵⁰ The use of municipal powers to furnish public utilities to citizens for hire does not make the municipality a private corporation.⁵¹

(II) IMPERATIVE FUNCTIONS. Imperative functions, often called “mandatory,” are such as the state has imposed upon the municipality, and may compel it to perform under legal penalty.⁵² The state, leaving no option to the corporation, has enacted by its legislature that the act is proper and must be done; wherefore the municipality may not refuse or abdicate this function with impunity.⁵³ It must proceed to perform the duty or take legal consequences for its dereliction.⁵⁴ Usually the mandatory functions are imposed by words of or feature of government is wholly foreign to American ideals.⁶⁶ Our complicated political system is one of checks and balances from turret to foundation; and nowhere so much as in the municipality does this dominant idea of limitation of power find expression and illustration. The corporation being a mere creature of the state for subordinate self-government and local administration, and having only granted powers subject to legislative control and revocation, is the most dependent and unstable of all our political institutions.⁶⁷ From above the state, and from below the citizen is constantly challenging the authority of the corporation to perform some municipal function, and it must therefore be in frequent contention before the courts over alleged limitations upon its powers. The physical limitations of boundary present easy problems for solution; not so, however, may we speak of those limitations to municipal action set by constitution, by statute, and by the charter of the corporation, for against them all the municipality must be able to assert and maintain its corporate authority before the courts.⁶⁸ Contention generally arises over contracts and ordinances, under which topics special questions will receive consideration.⁶⁹ Here only certain general phases will be noticed.

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LIMITATIONS.⁷⁰ Municipal powers are subject to limitations of both the federal and the state constitutions. Restrictions imposed upon the state legislature by these supreme expressions of the sovereign will apply with equal force to all subordinate agencies and instrumentalities of the state that exercise any of its political functions.⁷¹ A municipality therefore may not pass any ex post facto ordinance;⁷² nor any ordinance which violates the obligation of contracts.⁷³ Nor may it coin money or make anything but gold and silver a legal tender, or impose duties on either imports or exports except for necessary inspection.⁷⁴ Nor may any municipality by ordinance or otherwise do any of the acts forbidden or encroach upon any of the liberties guaranteed or rights safeguarded by the first eight amendments to the federal constitution, often called the Federal Bill of Rights,⁷⁵ deny or abridge any of those rights protected by amendments thirteen, fourteen, and fifteen,⁷⁶ or regulate interstate commerce.⁷⁷ For example a city council may not authorize a railroad company to take or injure private property;⁷⁸ or issue general search warrants;⁷⁹ or exercise inquisition upon any one under arrest;⁸⁰ or deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law;⁸¹ or require excessive bail;⁸² or take private property for public use without just compensation.⁸³ All these things are forbidden by the paramount law of the United States. So also, whatever private rights of person or property the people of the state have specially guaranteed or protected by their bill of rights or state constitution against infringement by any power are beyond the reach of municipal authority;⁸⁴ and whatever acts they have prohibited the state government from doing are equally prohibited to municipal government.⁸⁵ For example it has been held that a city council has no power to punish for contempt where the constitution restricts such power to the legislature and the courts;⁸⁶ that it cannot enact a penalty for a misdemeanor, with imprisonment in default of payment, on summary conviction by the mayor or an alderman;⁸⁷ and that it cannot repeal the criminal laws of the state;⁸⁸ or impose a license in violation of constitutional rights;⁸⁹ or prescribe qualifications of voters.⁹⁰

municipal corporation can exercise no power which is repugnant to the common or statute law of the state.⁹¹ It cannot without express legislative authority legalize a common nuisance.⁹² The municipality has such measure of power as the legislature thinks it wise to grant for the public good, either by special charter or general laws. But this power, not being protected from impairment by the contract clause of the federal constitution, is subject to the legislative will and discretion.⁹³ The general assembly has undoubted authority to prescribe the limits of municipal powers, and to add to or subtract from them at pleasure.⁹⁴ Nor can its motives be questioned.⁹⁵ This diminution or increase of power may be effected directly by an amendment of a special charter or the general law under which the corporation was organized.⁹⁶ The corporate powers may also be diminished by a repeal of certain sections of the general law.⁹⁷ This change may likewise be indirectly effected by the enactment of a law repugnant to charter provisions, whether special or general.⁹⁸ Whether the enactment has such effect depends upon the rules of statutory construction in regard to repeal by implication, prescribed and applied to ascertain and effectuate the legislative intention.⁹⁹ They will be considered under the head of charter limitations. Suffice it here to say that whenever the repeal of a charter clause giving power is effected, the particular power therein granted is taken away from the corporation, whether the power was granted by general law or special charter; and henceforth it cannot be exercised by the municipality.¹ All ordinances enacted under that power are thus repealed, and henceforth have no effect;² nor may the corporation thereafter enact any by-law or ordinance in assertion of the power or in conflict with the existing law.³ Valid contracts theretofore made or rights vested in the exercise of that power are of course not impaired by this statutory limitation of municipal power.⁴ Such limitations are not retroactive, and never so construed or applied as to impair the contractual obligation of the municipality.⁵

4. CHARTER LIMITATIONS. Since the municipality is a creature of granted powers only, including all classes of powers, whether styled express, implied, inherent, common-law, indispensable, or incidental, the primary limitation of municipal powers is naturally to be found in the charter, under the maxim expressio unius, exclusio alterius.⁶ The charter is the source of all municipal powers, and to it we must look to ascertain under established rules of construction what is the extent and measure of the powers conferred upon the corporation.⁷ By charter the corporation is created, and by the mere fact of creation it receives the inherent or congenital powers, called also common-law powers.⁸ An enumeration of powers is inserted in the charter, and thus the municipality receives its express powers.⁹ But they cannot be efficiently exercised for the objects of the corporation; all appropriate functions cannot be performed without other powers, which are therefore implied from the charter.¹⁰ And beside these three classes of powers, all obtained from the charter, municipalities can have none other.¹¹ The ever present problem of municipal life, in all its varied activities, is to decide what power the charter has conferred on the corporation.¹² This depends upon judicial construction under the recognized canons of interpretation, of which the one receiving most frequent mention in opinion and treatise is that one described by the hackneyed phrase "strict construction," and with this ample shield the rights of the individual and the welfare of the public are often protected from the greedy assaults of graft and the more ambitious aspirations of tyranny.¹³ But a wise and patriotic judge, who, as author, inculcated this doctrine in a treatise of wide acceptance and generally recognized authority, judicially repudiated it, "when the power conferred in its exercise concerns only the municipality and can wrong or injure no one."¹⁴ In determining the effect of subsequent inconsistent statutes relied upon to amend municipal charters or repeal certain power-giving clauses of the charter, the courts, in harmony with the general doctrines of statutory construction have commonly adopted and applied the following rules: The intention of the legislature as expressed in the statute must be ascertained and effected.¹⁵ Such construction will be adopted as if possible to allow both acts to have full force; and the charter will be considered amended, or a particular clause repealed only when the subsequent act is so obviously repugnant to it that no reasonable interpretation will permit both acts to stand together.¹⁶ Particular stress is to be given to the latter rule when a general law is invoked to effect a limitation of peculiar power conferred upon a municipality by special act or charter.¹⁷

E. Mode of Exercising Powers. If the statute conferring a municipal power prescribes the manner in which it shall be exercised, this is generally mandatory and exclusive of other methods, so that any attempt to exercise it in a different manner will be void;¹⁸ and this rule is especially applicable where there are negative words in effect prohibiting the doing of the thing unless it is done in the manner prescribed.¹⁹ Thus authority granted to a city council to prescribe regulations by ordinance does not empower it to regulate the subject by mere resolution, and a resolution adopted for that purpose is null and void.²⁰ So also bonds have been declared void for want of a resolution of the council authorizing their issuance, when the terms of the act required such resolution as authority for issuance.²¹ If the mode of exercise is not prescribed in the act or charter conferring the power or in some other statute, the corporation may exercise the power in any usual and appropriate manner, according to its own discretion.²² But the mode of exercising the power chosen by the corporation must be reasonable and customary; otherwise it may be enjoined.²³ The courts, however, are averse to substituting their own discretion for that of the municipal authorities, and will do so only in case of a manifest abuse of discretion.²⁴

F. Surrender of Powers.²⁵ The power of governing is a trust committed by the people to the government no part of which can be granted away; and this doctrine, usually announced in regard to a sovereign state is equally true of a municipality in regard to its governmental functions, which are committed to it by the state for the public weal.²⁶ The rule is generally applied to such municipal functions as are regarded as mandatory.²⁷ The trust must be faithfully performed for the benefit of the public, and any attempt to barter or surrender it is unauthorized and void.²⁸ The maxim on which these rulings are made seems applicable also to those municipal powers which are merely discretionary, and it has been so ruled.²⁹ On the contrary other courts have sustained contracts whereby the governing body has assumed to barter away municipal rights and apparently surrender sovereign power, on the ground that their invalidation would impair the obligation of contracts, in violation of the federal constitution.³⁰ This constitutional provision, however, is applicable only when the repudiation of the contract is attempted by legislation.³¹

G. Delegation of Powers³² — 1. IN GENERAL. Since all governmental power is held in trust by the state for the benefit of the public, it has been generally denied that such power can be delegated by the state to any body.³³ But repeated adjudication has settled that the maxim potestas delegata non est deleganda does not preclude the legislature from conferring sovereign powers on municipalities in such measure as to it seems wise and proper.³⁴ More important and difficult is it now to ascertain whether the governing body of the municipality may delegate its powers to another; and if so which powers, and to what extent delegation may be made by the council. It has repeatedly been held that the municipality had no such power of delegation.³⁵ But it is now the recognized rule that the state may expressly authorize delegation of certain powers by the corporation.³⁶ In the absence of such express authority the council must itself exercise all discretionary powers;³⁷ but this does not forbid the delegation of ministerial or administrative functions to subordinate officials.³⁸

2. POWERS DELEGABLE.³⁹ The general rule seems to be that powers which are not imperative may be delegated by the common council to some subordinate body or officer.⁴⁰ Thus, supplying gas not being a municipal duty, the lease of the city gas-works is not an unlawful delegation of municipal power.⁴¹ A city council may by ordinance adopt a city code compiled by the city attorney, as the adoption, not the compilation, is the legislative act.⁴² The distribution of a pension fund may be committed to the fund association.⁴³ The street committee may be vested with the power of granting a license for a temporary obstruction of streets with materials.⁴⁴ The mayor may be authorized to designate the place in the existing water-pipe system, where connection shall be made by contractors to furnish the water-supply,⁴⁵ or to determine whether a license to sell cigarettes shall issue to an applicant,⁴⁶ or to issue valid warrants on the treasury in lieu of irregular or invalid ones.⁴⁷ So also a park board has been authorized to determine within fixed limits the amount of tax to be levied for park purposes;⁴⁸ to recommend to the council plans for a municipal park system;⁴⁹ and to take possession of land purchased by the city on approval and executing of title by the city solicitor.⁵⁰ And it seems that the council may authorize the city auditor, in lieu of the board of public works, to execute its order for the removal or destruction of a city building.⁵¹ And water commissions may empower their chief engineer to determine certain technical questions as to the details of construction of city water works.⁵² The board of aldermen of a city authorized to regulate the numbering of houses and lots in streets may, by resolution, authorize a borough president to renumber buildings on a street.⁵³

3. POWERS NOT DELEGABLE.⁵⁴ Illustration of the non-delegability of municipal powers is found in decisions to the effect that a city attorney may not be authorized by the council to employ an assistant and fix his compensation;⁵⁵ that the mayor cannot be empowered to fix license-fees,⁵⁶ to sell city bonds at his discretion as to price,⁵⁷ or to contract for the collection of delinquent taxes;⁵⁸ that the city clerk cannot be authorized to appoint a superintendent and janitors for the city hall,⁵⁹ or to appoint dates for the hearing of cases before the council;⁶⁰ and that the council cannot devolve upon a board the power to regulate the sale, price, and use of city water,⁶¹ to elect a fire engineer and assistants,⁶² to cancel statutory licenses,⁶³ or to make street improvements.⁶⁴ Nor has it power to authorize a magistrate to affix penalties at his discretion, without limit;⁶⁵ or to delegate to a committee its discretionary power as to the construction of sewers,⁶⁶ of bicycle paths,⁶⁷ or contracting for electric lighting of the city.⁶⁸

H. Ultra Vires — 1. CONTRACTS. Much confusion and discord appears in the decisions and text-books on corporations upon the doctrine of ultra vires, resulting chiefly from the use of this phrase in different senses. It has been used to characterize not only acts which are repugnant to or beyond the corporate powers, but also acts done by a majority of stock-holders in disregard of the rights of the minority.⁶⁹ To avoid, if possible, this confusion, the phrase ultra vires is here used in the sense declared to be proper by a distinguished federal judge in the following lucid and comprehensive statement: "Two propositions are settled: One is that a contract by which a corporation disables itself from performing the functions and duties undertaken and imposed by its charter is, unless the state which created it consents, ultra vires. . . . The other is that the powers of a corporation are such, and such only, as its charter confers; and an act beyond the measure of those powers, as either expressly stated or fairly implied, is ultra vires. . . . These two propositions embrace the whole doctrine of ultra vires. They are its alpha and omega."⁷⁰ To escape the apparent injustice of enforcing this doctrine in regard to the dealings and doings of private corporations, the courts have apparently in many instances either ignored or evaded its full force and meaning, and have thus shown "how hard cases can make bad law."⁷¹ This has not been so, however, with regard to contracts of public corporations.⁷² Generally the courts have recognized as a truism that what a municipality has no power to do it has not done merely because it tried to do it, and have accordingly refused to give legal effect to ultra vires contracts.⁷³ And so it has been declared that contracts by which a municipality gave away or exchanged city streets for other property,⁷⁴ offered a reward for the apprehension of a person,⁷⁵ borrowed money to pay the expenses of an election contest over the removal of a county-seat,⁷⁶ or made loans and donations to colleges,⁷⁷ are ultra vires, and not enforceable at law. So likewise of a purchase by a city of a right of way for a railroad;⁷⁸ a contract granting a monopoly of the streets to a water company;⁷⁹ promising money to aid in the erection of a county court-house, or to donate its real estate for that purpose;⁸⁰ county bonds issued without legislative authority,⁸¹ and a promise not to extend a street in a city.⁸² These and many other similar contracts the courts have refused to enforce or recognize because they were illegal restrictions of the public power and duty of the municipality or because they were beyond the scope of the municipal powers. Some earlier cases were not in accord with these decisions, but supported the unlawful contract upon the doctrine of estoppel, so often applied formerly to the contracts of private corporations.⁸³ But there is at present general concurrence in the doctrine that the law will not recognize or enforce a municipal contract which it does not authorize.⁸⁴ Parties therefore seeking recompense for money loaned, material furnished, or labor done for a municipal corporation under an ultra vires contract do not sue for breach of the contract or seek specific performance thereof, but seek recompense either upon the theory of an implied contract and assumpsit, or under some doctrine of equity.⁸⁵ On the other hand, however, it has been held that persons or corporations accepting and exercising rights and franchises from a municipality on certain conditions are estopped to avoid their obligations on the ground that the conditions imposed were ultra vires.⁸⁶

2. TORTS. The same rules of law are also applicable to torts sought to be imputed to a municipal corporation. A municipal corporation cannot confer upon its agents or officers lawful authority to represent it beyond the scope of its charter powers.⁸⁷ For acts not governmental, but strictly corporate or municipal within the scope of the municipal power exercised for a municipal purpose, the municipality may be liable for misfeasance; as in the negligent construction by officers of a sewer not authorized or directed by the municipal council,⁸⁸ or in the forcible and irregular taking of private property without pursuing the legal and authorized procedure for exercising eminent domain and compensating the owner.⁸⁹ Or it may be liable for non feasance in failing to perform a municipal duty whereby individuals are injured either in person or property.⁹⁰ But for the malfeasance of agents or officers of the corporation in assuming to do acts which are entirely beyond the municipal powers and purposes, and cannot therefore be lawfully authorized by the municipality, the corporation cannot be held liable in damages to persons suffering injuries therefrom.⁹¹ This logical doctrine based upon elementary principles of the common law received general, if not universal, recog-

tion in America by the concurrent decisions of the courts for almost a century.⁹² It was applied in all civil actions for torts caused by the malfeasance of corporate officers or agents when pursuing any undertaking not within the scope of municipal purposes or powers, express, inherent, or implied; and it still remains the general doctrine of the courts, although not so firmly established and universally recognized as formerly.⁹³

I. Judicial Supervision.⁹⁴ The increase of urban population, the creation and extension of numerous municipalities causing schemes of improvement often ill-advised, and involving the pledging of municipal credit, and the increase of burdens of taxation sometimes amounting to confiscation, have given rise to much complaint at municipal action and frequent challenge of municipal power which

The acts of city authorities in cutting a ditch along the side of a lot outside the city limits are ultra vires, and hence the city is not liable for injuries resulting therefrom to the lot owner. Loyd v. Columbus, 90 Ga. 20, 15 S. E. 818.

93. The stability of this doctrine of the law is supposed to be shaken by the decision of the supreme court of the United States in the unique case of Salt Lake City v. Hollister, 118 U. S. 256, 260, 6 S. Ct. 1055, 30 L. ed. 176, where Mr. Justice Miller, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The truth is that, with the great increase in corporations in very recent times, and in their extension to nearly all the business transactions of life, it has been found necessary to hold them responsible for acts not strictly within their corporate powers, but done in their corporate name and by corporation officers who were competent to exercise all the corporate powers. When such acts are not founded on contract, but are arbitrary exercises of power in the nature of torts, or are quasi criminal, the corporation may be held to a pecuniary responsibility for them to the party injured." Concerning this a recent author says: "The effect of this decision is to broaden materially the view of liability of municipal corporations for torts, and it is a strong authority in support of the contention that these bodies should be liable for negligence in respect to their ultra vires acts. Such an act of the corporation is made doubly wrongful by the fact that it is in excess of the corporate power, and for the damages resulting from it the corporation should respond." Jones Negl. Mun. Corp. § 47. An examination of this case shows the foregoing language of Mr. Justice Miller to be an obiter dictum. Salt Lake City, having erected a distillery, proceeded without authority to engage in the business of distilling spirits, and while so doing, in violation of the United States revenue laws, made fraudulent returns of the quantity of spirits produced. Its fraud was detected, and a lawful assessment made upon the city as a distiller for the gallon tax upon the liquor actually produced and fraudulently omitted from the required report. To enforce the collection of this tax and penalty, the government was about to seize municipal property, whereupon the city, to save its property, paid the tax under protest, and then brought action against the collector to recover the amount so paid. The ground of its action was that the business of distilling spirits by Salt Lake City was ultra vires. The very impudence of the contention provoked the court to pungent ridicule of plaintiff's action; and, naturally, strong language was used in refuting its absurd contention and denying its demand. But the question in the case was not whether a municipality is liable in a civil action to an individual injured by the tortious acts of its agents or officers ultra vires, but only whether it could recover from the government a sum of money paid under protest to avoid seizure of its property for a lawful tax and penalty. And accordingly the digest syllabus thus accurately expresses the decision in the case: "A municipal corporation engaged in the business of distilling spirits is subject to internal revenue taxation under the laws of the United States, whether its acts in that respect are or are not ultra vires." The gist of the decision is found in the following excerpt from the opinion: "A municipal corporation cannot, any more than any other corporation or private person, escape the taxes due on its property, whether acquired legally or illegally, and it cannot make its want of legal authority to engage in a particular transaction or business a shelter from the taxation imposed by the government on such business or transaction by whomsoever conducted." The fundamental rules of law upon which a person or corporation becomes liable for a tax are so widely different from those which declare liability for a tort that even these cogent words of Justice Miller, used arguendo in the decision of a revenue case, are not likely to unsettle the logical rule as to torts to private individuals established by the concurrent decisions of courts of last resort through scores of years in the United States.

have resulted in decisions as to judicial supervision of municipal conduct which are conflicting and not easily reconciled.⁹⁵ By the weight of authority, however, as well as by the logic and reason of the matter, the following doctrines of law with regard to the power of the courts to review and supervise the exercise of municipal functions may be regarded as established: (1) The acts of a municipal body within the scope of the powers conferred upon it are conclusive upon the courts and cannot be reviewed or enjoined unless they are so unreasonable, oppressive, and subversive of individual rights as to clearly indicate an abuse rather than a lawful use of a power.⁹⁶ (2) If the legislature has expressly conferred upon the municipality power to do a certain act the courts cannot question, except upon constitutional grounds, the right of the municipality to exercise the power.⁹⁷ (3) If the legislature has expressly conferred upon the municipal body discretionary power to decide whether certain municipal acts or undertakings shall be done or entered upon, the courts have no jurisdiction to substitute their judgment for that of the municipal body or interfere with the act or undertaking because it is not consistent with the judicial reasoning or policy.⁹⁸ (4) Courts of equity have no general supervisory jurisdiction over municipal affairs. The redress of injuries for transgressing municipal powers or violating fundamental rules of procedure belongs to the courts of law, except in those cases falling under some recognized head of equitable jurisdiction.⁹⁹ (5) Courts have undoubted jurisdiction to determine whether a municipal act or undertaking is ultra vires and void, and if so, to enjoin or prohibit the municipality from engaging therein.¹

IV. LEGISLATIVE CONTROL.

A. In General. During the existence of the municipality it is subject to a large measure of legislative control. The sovereign power which has created it, and which may alter or dissolve it at pleasure, may likewise supervise and direct its conduct in all public matters. The state thus acts as general guardian of the person and property of the municipal corporation; and the only limitation upon its supreme legislative power in this particular will be found in the state or federal the plenary power of the state over all public matters and concerns.³ It is the sovereign; and wherein not restrained by the supreme law of the land, the legislature, as trustee of the public for the general weal, has power and duty not only to interpose its arm for protection, but to show its might in positive and affirmative acts of government in particular matters over which it had conferred general charter power upon the corporation.⁴ The courts cannot pass upon the motives of the legislature.⁵ This paramount power of the state manifests itself over the municipality in acts changing boundaries,⁶ regulating municipal powers,⁷ appointing public officers,⁸ imposing public burdens and obligations,⁹ diverting or appropriating municipal revenues,¹⁰ revoking franchises,¹¹ prescribing and modifying public improvements,¹² and converting and appropriating municipal property.¹³ The power extends to the validation of defective and voidable obligations,¹⁴ and the control of municipal trusts.¹⁵ The constitutional limitations upon this legislative power are those protecting private property,¹⁶ preventing the impairment of contractual obligations,¹⁷ prescribing uniformity, and forbidding special legislation.¹⁸ Thus are protected the rights of creditors who have lent money on contracts pledging municipal revenues or property;¹⁹ and in some instances, it is claimed, the rights of the community whose contributions have erected public utilities for local use and purchased other municipal property.²⁰ The fundamental basis of this power, instances of the exercise of which seem oppressive, is that governmental powers conferred upon a municipality cannot ripen into vested rights.²¹ But the dual character of the municipality palpably affects this power of legislative control. In its governmental aspect the corporation is completely subject to the legislative will.²² The power which gave may take away, and may alter, vary, or amend at pleasure.²³ It was law which gave all life, power, and authority;²⁴ and the law may diminish or totally withdraw it.²⁵ It appointed the agent and clothed it with power; and it may limit the power or revoke the agency.²⁶ Whatever is within the proper scope of legislation, that may be effected in a municipality by the legislature.²⁷ But there are many elements in a municipality which were not given to it by legislation, and these things cannot be taken away or controlled. The legislature did not create the community, or give the population; or the municipal buildings, parks, water and light plants, and other improvements. These things pertain to the locality and not to the public at large; they are for the community and not for the state; and the legislative control of this property therefore is not absolute.²⁸ The corporation in this aspect is municipal rather than governmental, and has been held to be entitled to the same measure and character of protection as private corporations and persons.²⁹ In some jurisdictions, even in the absence of express constitutional provision, legislative acts interfering with a municipal corporation in matters of purely local concern are condemned and held invalid as an unauthorized interference with the right of local self-government,³⁰ but in other jurisdictions this doctrine is not recognized or else is recognized only to a limited extent.³¹

B. Boundaries. The physical features of the corporation are subjects of legislative control, and the legislature may therefore contract or expand the territory of the municipality, and may thus give it shape, size, and character, according to legislative discretion,³² subject only to the limitations and restrictions found

A municipal corporation possesses two classes of powers and two classes of rights, public and private.—In all that relates to one class it is merely the agent of the state, and subject to its control. In the other, it is the agent of the inhabitants of the place, the corporators, maintains the character and relations of individuals, and is not subject to the absolute control of the legislature, its creator. Among this latter class is the right to acquire, hold, and dispose of property, to sue and be sued, etc., just as certain rights are conferred on private corporations and persons, not sui juris, such as minors and married women, but are not afterward, as long as they exist, under legislative control. D. Ordinances. An ordinance is the product of legislative power conferred upon the municipality. One essential to its validity is that it shall not conflict with the laws of the state.⁵⁵ It is obvious therefore that it is competent for the legislature specially to authorize or even require the enactment of a particular ordinance;⁵⁶ or to prevent it by the passage of a law so repugnant to its provisions that both cannot stand together;⁵⁷ or by directly forbidding its enactment.⁵⁸ It is likewise within legislative power to repeal an ordinance by enacting a general law absolutely inconsistent with its letter and spirit.⁵⁹ So also may the legislature validate an ordinance which is void for lack of due form or procedure in its passage.⁶⁰ The power of the legislature to repeal existing ordinances by express intentment depends upon its constitutional power to pass any special law affecting municipal corporations.⁶¹ Obviously in those states where such legislation is forbidden by the constitution an ordinance cannot be expressly repealed by a legislative act;⁶² but where no such constitutional limitation exists, no reason appears why the legislature may not pass an act expressly to amend or repeal a municipal ordinance.⁶³ Indeed it would seem that the legislature unless prohibited by some constitutional limitation might in the plenitude of its power enact an entire code of laws as ordinances for a single municipality, or for all of a certain class of municipal corporations, which, although not ordinances or by-laws in the usual sense of these words,⁶⁴ because not enacted by the corporation, and therefore not subject to repeal and amendment by it, would yet serve as local laws for the regulation of municipal affairs and conduct.⁶⁵ The exercise of such a power, however, to this extent would be inconsistent with the idea of self-government, inherent in a municipality, according to the history and etymology of the word,⁶⁶ and would convert the municipal into a public corporation,⁶⁷ or a commune,⁶⁸ for the execution of state law. And in some states such an exercise of central power to the exclusion of self-government would be considered unconstitutional.⁶⁹

E. Offices and Officers — 1. IN GENERAL. The favorite American doctrine of home rule finds expression and illustration in the provision found in nearly all municipal charters that the corporation shall choose the municipal officers, provided for by the charter for the execution of the municipal powers.⁷⁰ In some states this popular local right to choose officers is secured by express constitutional guaranty;⁷¹ and even when there is no such constitutional provision, it is held in Suppl. 941)] (holding that Laws (1905), pp. 1533, 1548, 1550, cc. 629-631, simply imposing additional duty on the board of estimate and apportionment, which had theretofore been performed by the board of aldermen, was not in violation of this home-rule provision of the constitution, as the statute did not assume to appoint any one to a local or other office); In re New York, 99 N. Y. 569, 2 N. E. 642 [affirming 34 Hun 441]; Pettit v. McClellan, 110 N. Y. App. Div. 390, 97 N. Y. Suppl. 320 (to the same effect). The legislature also has the power to abolish a local office, unless it is a constitutional office (Allison v. Welde, 172 N. Y. 421, 65 N. E. 263; Koch v. New York, 152 N. Y. 72, 46 N. E. 170 [affirming 5 N. Y. App. Div. 276, 39 N. Y. Suppl. 164]), or to lessen or extend the term of officers to be subsequently elected or appointed (People v. McKinney, 52 N. Y. 374. And see Long v. New York, 81 N. Y. 425); and it has the power to distribute the powers of local government as between the city and county governments, as by changing a county office, like that of the commissioner of jurors, to a city office, and vice versa (Allison v. Welde, supra; People v. Dunlap, 66 N. Y. 162). It has been steadfastly held, however, that this power is subject to the limitation that no essential or exclusive function belonging to the office can be transferred to an officer appointed by the legislature or otherwise than by the electors or authorities of the municipality. People v. State Tax Com'rs, supra; and other cases cited infra, this note. Laws (1883), c. 354, § 8, requiring that the mayor of a city shall prepare general rules under which city officers are to be selected, which shall go into effect when approved by the state civil service commission, does not subordinate the power of the local authorities to that of the state officers in such manner as to be in conflict with the constitution. Rogers v. Buffalo, 123 N. Y. 173, 25 N. E. 274, 9 L. R. A. 579 [affirming 3 N. Y. Suppl. 674]. And it was held that the constitution did not forbid the legislature to interfere with the percentage to be charged or the emoluments to be received by the chamberlain of the city and county of New York. People v. Devlin, 33 N. Y. 269, 88 Am. Dec. 377.

Appointment of officers, extension of terms of office, etc.—Under the above-mentioned constitutional provision the legislature cannot directly or indirectly appoint local officers or authorize their appointment by state officials, or extend the terms of local officers already elected or appointed, or limit the power of local authorities in the appointment of local officers. People v. State Tax Com'rs, 174 N. Y. 417, 67 N. E. 69, 105 Am. St. Rep. 674, 63 L. R. A. 884 [reversing 79 N. Y. App. Div. 183, 80 N. Y. Suppl. 85, 1145]; People v. Dooley, 171 N. Y. 74, 63 N. E. 815 [affirming 69 N. Y. Suppl. 625 (holding that Laws (1896), c. 448, giving to humane societies in certain cities the right to collect a license on dogs and to kill or confiscate unlicensed dogs, vested in a private corporation the execution of certain police powers, and in effect made it a public officer, and was therefore in violation of the constitutional provision); Kelly v. Van Wyck, 35 Misc. (N. Y.) 210, 71 N. Y. Suppl. 814; Warner v. People, 2 Den. (N. Y.) 272, 43 Am. Dec. 740. Compare People v. Batchelor, 22 N. Y. 128; People v. Stevens, 51 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 103. City magistrates of New York are within this provision. They must be either elected or appointed as therein provided, and the legislature cannot provide both for their election and appointment; nor can it extend their term while in office. People v. Dooley, supra; Kelly v. Van Wyck, supra.

Powers and functions not peculiarly or exclusively local and municipal.—The constitution does not prevent the legislature from transferring from local officers to state officers or boards powers and functions not the office, or limit its functions and salary, or prescribe qualifications therefor or the manner of election or appointment by the people or municipal authorities, peculiarly or exclusively local or municipal, but which concern the state at large. People v. State Tax Com'rs, 174 N. Y. 417, 67 N. E. 69, 105 Am. St. Rep. 674, 63 L. R. A. 884 [reversing 79 N. Y. App. Div. 183, 80 N. Y. Suppl. 85, 1145], holding therefore that the constitution does not prevent the legislature from conferring upon state officers the right to assess the special franchises of street railroad companies who occupy the streets of a municipality, and also to assess the tangible property connected therewith, which was formerly exercised by the local board of assessment. See also cases cited infra, this note. But a statute absolutely overthrowing a local assessor and transferring all of his functions to a state official has been held unconstitutional. People v. Raymond, 37 N. Y. 428.

Police, fire, sanitary, and excise districts, etc.—The constitution does not prevent the legislature from establishing police districts including the territory of a municipal corporation and appointing a board of commissioners with power to appoint and control all policemen, etc. In such case the members of the board of commissioners are state and not local officers. People v. Draper, 15 N. Y. 532 [cited to this effect in People v. State Bd. Tax Com'rs, 174 N. Y. 417, 67 N. E. 69, 105 Am. St. Rep. 674, 63 L. R. A. 884]. Similar acts creating a new system by erecting a metropolitan fire or sanitary district, a metropolitan board of excise, and a capital police district, each embracing the territory of two or more municipal divisions of the state, have also been sustained, although functions formerly belonging to the local officers were thereby transferred to state officers. Metropolitan Bd. of Health v. Heister, 37 N. Y. 661 (sanitary district); People v. Shepard, 36 N. Y. 285 (capital police district); Metropolitan Bd. of Excise v. Barrie, 34 N. Y. 657 (metropolitan board of excise); People v. Pinckney, 32 N. Y. 377 (fire district). It is held, however, that the legislature cannot appoint or control the local power of appointment or election of the police department and officers in a city only. Rathbone v. Wirth, 150 N. Y. 459, 45 N. E. 15, 34 L. R. A. 408 [affirming 6 N. Y. App. Div. 277, 40 N. Y. Suppl. 535]. And an act which established a police district consisting of a city, with a police force already organized, and three small patches of sparsely settled territory, in all less than a square mile, was held unconstitutional as an obvious attempt to evade the constitutional restriction relating to home rule, because it was designed for the city only. People v. Albertson, 55 N. Y. 50.

Public buildings, parks, highways, etc.—Acts authorizing state officials to construct public buildings, parks, and highways, the expense of which is to be paid locally, have been sustained, although the power to make such improvements had been previously vested in the local authorities, and it was urged that the transfer of the power was an encroachment upon the right of local self-government guaranteed by the constitution. People v. Oneida County, 170 N. Y. 105, 62 N. E. 1092 (board of commissioners to erect a courthouse); People v. McDonald, 69 N. Y. 362 (highways); Astor v. New York, 62 N. Y. 567 (parks and highways); People v. Flag, 46 N. Y. 401 (highways). See also In re New York, 99 N. Y. 569, 2 N. E. 642 [affirming 34 Hun 441], parks. A statute extending the jurisdiction of the department of public parks of New York created by the legislature over that portion of the land authorized to be acquired under it outside of the city and within the limits of Westchester county was held not to be violative of the constitutional preservation to counties, cities, towns, etc., of the right to elect their own local officers, as the park police did not become Westchester county officers, and no officers of that county were legislated out of office. In re New York, 99 N. Y. 569, 2 N. E. 642.

Judicial officers.—Local judicial officers, like city magistrates, are within Const. art. 10, § 2, above referred to. People v. Dooley, 171 N. Y. 74, 63 N. E. 815 [affirming 69 N. Y. App. Div. 512, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 350]; Kelly v. Van Wyck, 35 Misc. (N. Y.) 210, 71 N. Y. Suppl. 814. They are also within the special provision of art. 6, § 17, that all judicial officers in cities, whose election or appointment is not otherwise provided for in the constitution, shall be chosen by the electors of such cities or appointed by some local authorities thereof. This applies to city magistrates and prevents the legislature from appointing them or authorizing their election or appointment otherwise than as therein provided. People v. Dooley, supra. But the act of May 10, 1895 (Laws (1895), c. 601), abolishing the office of police justices in the city and county of New York and terminating the powers and jurisdiction of such justices and their courts, was held constitutional. Koch v. New York, 152 N. Y. 72, 46 N. E. 170 [affirming 5 N. Y. App. Div. 276, 39 N. Y. Suppl. 164]. Compare People v. Howland, 155 N. Y. 270, 49 N. E. 775, 41 L. R. A. 838 [affirming 17 N. Y. App. Div. 165, 45 N. Y. Suppl. 347]; Gertum v. Kings County, 109 N. Y. 170, 16 N. E. 328; Coulter v. Murray, 4 Daly 506.

Colo. Const. art. 5, § 35, providing that the legislature "shall not delegate to any special commission, private corporation or association any power to make, supervise or interfere with any municipal improvement, money, property or effects, . . . or perform any municipal function whatever," does not prevent the legislature from creating a board of public works for the city of Denver, the boards of which are to be appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the senate, charged with duties and endowed with etc.,⁷² it may not choose or designate the person to hold the office and discharge its duties or provide for their appointment by other agency than the electorate or authorities of the municipality.⁷³ This principle has been applied for example to powers relating to the expenditure of city funds, the payment and cancellation of outstanding city warrants and the making of public improvements, as such board is not a "special commission," but a department of the city government. In re Senate Bill, 12 Colo. 188, 21 Pac. 481.

In Kentucky the former constitutional provision for the "election" of municipal officers for such terms and in such manner as might be prescribed by law was held to exclude any power of appointment which might otherwise exist in the legislature or executive officers of the state. Speed v. Crawford, 3 Metc. 207.

La. Const. art. 319, providing that the electors of the city of New Orleans shall have the right to choose the public officers who shall be charged with the exercise of police power and of the administration of the affairs of the corporation in whole or in part, and article 320, excepting from the operation of said article 319 those boards whose powers extend beyond the limits of the parish and two thirds of whose members are chosen by the city council or appointed by the mayor, are not violated by La. Acts (1902), p. 106, No. 79, as amended by Acts (1904), pp. 214, 369, Nos. 96, 179, requiring the parish of Orleans to erect a court-house, providing that the state shall contribute toward the erection of the building and be a part-owner thereof, and confiding the detail of the construction to a board, three members of which are to be chosen by the city, since the acts do not affect the police power of the city or its power of administration. Benedict v. New Orleans, 115 La. 645, 39 So. 792.

Wis. Const. art. 13, § 9, providing that all city officers shall be elected by the electors of such cities or appointed by such authorities thereof as the legislature may designate, was violated by Laws (1889), c. 35, providing that the term of office of the then incumbent of the office of city attorney of Milwaukee should be extended two years, as this was an appointment of such incumbent to that office for the term of two years. *State v. Compensation.—It has also been held that the fixing of the compensation of the officers and members of a city fire department, devised for the benefit of the local community, is not governmental in its nature, but is a matter for the municipality in its private corporate capacity, and therefore Ky. Act (1900), § 4, attempting to fix such compensation, is void as violative of the city's right to control its local affairs. Lexington v. Thompson, 113 Ky. 540, 68 S. W. 477, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 384, 101 Am. St. Rep. 361, 57 L. R. A. 775.

The constitutional provision that "all officers whose appointments are not otherwise provided for in this constitution shall be chosen in such manner as now is, or hereafter may be, prescribed by law," is not a surrender of the right of the people of the municipality to local self-government, including the right to select their own officers. State v. Denny, 118 Ind. 449, 21 N. E. 274, 4 L. R. A. 65.

Removal.—But it was held in Michigan that Howell Annot. St. § 653, authorizing the governor in certain cases to remove officers chosen by the electors of cities and villages, including the mayor, was valid, under the appointment by a municipality of a board of public works,⁷⁴ of park commissioners,⁷⁵ of water commissioners⁷⁶ or trustees of waterworks,⁷⁷ and of a board to take charge and control of the fire department.⁷⁸ In other jurisdictions this doctrine as to the right of local self-government free from legislative control is not recognized, but it is held or assumed that the legislature has the power to appoint or provide for the appointment of, and to control, all municipal officers, whether their offices are governmental or purely municipal,⁷⁹ except in so far as such power is limited by express constitutional provisions.⁸⁰ It is perhaps agreed that if the functions of the office are governmental rather than municipal, if they concern the general public more than the local community, although confined to the municipal limits, the officers are state officers and as completely under the control of the legislature as are the general officers of the state.⁸¹ The legislature may therefore municipality,⁸⁸ although this may be dependent upon the scope of their official duties and the functions of the office.⁸⁹ But boards of public works are generally regarded as municipal officers and not subject to state control,⁹⁰ and the same is true of the fire department and the officers thereof.⁹¹

3. EMINENT DOMAIN. The legislature has power also to control officers whose duty it is to exercise the sovereign power of eminent domain, and may therefore constitutionally appoint officers within a municipality to lay off streets and assess damages, even though the city must pay the same out of the municipal treasury.⁹²

4. COURTS AND JUDICIAL OFFICERS. In the absence of constitutional restrictions,⁹³ the legislature has the power to abolish or alter the courts and judicial officers in a municipal corporation whenever it shall deem such change to be for the benefit of the inhabitants.⁹⁴

5. TEST OF CONTROL. Much of the apparent confusion and discord on the subject of legislative control of officers is dissipated by a critical examination of the functions assigned to the office. Many officers are charged with the performance of both governmental and municipal duty, and may therefore be assigned to either class, and therefore held to be within a constitutional inhibition applicable to that class.⁹⁵ It is the function rather than the officer that is within the constitutional provision and therefore either within or without the legislative control.⁹⁶ And so generally it may be accepted as law in all the states that if the function of the office is purely governmental the legislature may control it, despite municipal wish to the contrary.⁹⁷ In those states where self-government is constitutionally granted to municipal corporations, the legislature has no control over officers with municipal functions.⁹⁸ In other states the law of legislative control over municipal offices seems to be largely a question of public policy; and since this is within the legislative competency, the judicial power can interfere to check the legislative will only when it transgresses constitutional limitation.⁹⁹

F. Property and Franchises — 1. IN GENERAL. The property, real and personal, of a municipality, including profitable franchises owned and exercised by it, may be either (1) governmental, that is, such as is held by the corporation in trust for the use and benefit of the general public; or (2) municipal, that is, such as has been acquired by the corporation in the course of administration and is held by it for the special benefit of its citizens, rather than the general public; and the character in which property or franchises are thus held by a municipality determines the extent of the legislative control over the same.¹

2. PUBLIC PROPERTY. The public property of a municipal corporation, real and personal, or in other words such property as is held in trust for the public generally,² is subject to the control of the legislature.³ It has been so held, for example, of public streets, squares, parks, and promenades;⁴ public buildings;⁵

denied by the courts upon the ground that such property is private, or at least quasi-private, in its nature, and therefore entitled to constitutional protection against sovereign power.¹⁸ Thus Judge Cooley in an important Michigan case said: "It is immaterial in what way the property was lawfully acquired, whether by labor in the ordinary avocations of life, by gift or descent, or by making profitable use of a franchise granted by the state; it is enough that it has become private property, and it is then protected by the 'law of the land.'"¹⁹ In other states, where the doctrine of private property in a public corporation is not so favorably regarded, municipal property, held for other than strictly governmental or public purposes, is declared to be impressed with a trust, of which the community or its creditors are cestuis que trustent,²⁰ so that, although the municipality, as trustee, be dissolved, the trust will be maintained and enforced by the courts, even against legislative effort to ignore or violate it.²¹ What property is thus protected by constitutional limitations upon the sovereign power has been much mooted, and it cannot be said that the line of demarcation between public and quasi-private municipal property is definitely established.²² Obviously private property would include all stocks, bonds, or other interest in private corporations held by the municipality;²³ and logically and by the weight of judicial opinion it also includes all other property which is not useful or necessary to the performance of some governmental function, such as waterworks,²⁴ gas-works,²⁵ electric light and power

4. FRANCHISES. Such franchises as are granted to a municipality to engage in business, which might be transacted by a private corporation, such as supplying light, power, or water to the city, are obviously contractual in their nature,³² and, although held by a public corporation, are protected by the constitutional guaranty against summary revocation.³³ But other public franchises, such as one to control and operate a ferry,³⁴ or build and maintain a toll-bridge,³⁵ or wharf or landing,³⁶ are held to be merely administrative and revocable at any time in the legislative discretion.³⁷

Colo. Const. art. 5, § 35, providing that the legislature "shall not delegate to any special commission, private corporation or association, any power to make, supervise or interfere with any municipal improvement, money, property or effects, . . . or perform any municipal function whatever," does not prevent the legislature from creating a board of public works for the city of Denver, the members of which are to be appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the senate, charged with duties and endowed with powers relating to the expenditure of city funds, the payment and cancellation of outstanding city warrants and the making of public improvements, as such board is not a "special commission," but a department of the city government. In re Senate Bill, 12 Colo. 188, 21 Pac. 481.

Ill. Const. art. 9, § 9, providing that the general assembly may vest the corporate authorities of cities, towns, or villages with power to make local improvements by special assessment or special taxation or otherwise, is a limitation upon the power of the legislature to confer such power upon any bodies other than corporate authorities, and "corporate authorities," within the meaning of the provision, are the authorities of the municipality who are either elected directly by the people to be taxed or appointed in some mode to which they have given their assent; but this provision of the constitution is not violated by Local Improvement Act, June 14, 1897, authorizing the corporate authorities of cities to make such local improvements as are authorized by law by special assessment on contiguous property, and creating an improvement board, and providing that no ordinance for an improvement shall be passed by the council unless recommended by such board, since the legislative intention in creating such board was to form a municipal agency to determine preliminary questions, and not to vest in the board the power to make the improvement and levy the special tax to pay for it. Givins v. Chicago, 188 Ill. 348, 58 N. E. 912.

N. Y. Const. art. 10, § 2, providing that all city officers whose appointment or election is not provided for by the constitution shall be elected by the electors of the city, or appointed by authorities thereof as designated by the legislature, does not prohibit the legislature from clothing officers appointed by it to carry out a public improvement with power to perform acts having an essential relation to and connection with such improvement, simply because the power to perform such acts was vested in local officers elected by the people at the time of the adoption of the constitution. Astor v. New York, 62 N. Y. 567.

Field*, 58 Pa. St. 320 (sustaining the acts of April 5, 1866, and April 5, 1867, appointing commissioners to build a free bridge over the Schuylkill river within the city of Philadelphia, and to create a loan for that purpose, and requiring the councils of Philadelphia to provide for the payment of the loan and its interest). 42. Prince v. Crocker, 166 Mass. 347, 44 N. E. 446, 32 L. R. A. 610, sustaining St. (1894) c. 548, authorizing the construction of a subway in Boston, against the objection that it imposed a heavy debt upon the city, and to a certain extent took away from the city the control of its streets, and that the work was not put in charge of the street commissioners of the city, since the legislature could provide for doing the work at the expense of the city, but through other agents than those regularly appointed by the city, and might impose liability on the city, waterworks,⁴³ sewers,⁴⁴ a park or park system,⁴⁵ docks, wharves, etc.,⁴⁶ or a court-house.⁴⁷ The legislature in such cases may appoint commissioners or other officers to carry out the improvement and to assess the damages and benefits,⁴⁸ or otherwise regulate and control the mode of the improvement and the assessments therefor.⁴⁹ The legislature may regulate the making of contracts for public incur the expenses, and require payment by the city.

43. David v. Portland Water Committee, 14 Oreg. 98, 12 Pac. 174, holding that the legislature had the power to appoint a water committee or board for the purpose of constructing and maintaining waterworks for a large city, or to provide for the appointment of such commissioners by the governor; the court saying that while public parks and the supply of gas, water, or sewerage in towns and cities may ordinarily be classed as private objects, they often become matters of public importance, and whether they are the one or the other is a fact which may be decided by the legislature, and that, in considering an act to supply a city with water the court may take judicial notice of the fact that the city is the metropolis of the state, having important business relations with all its citizens, and that the entire community have a direct interest in the city's welfare.

44. Thus in Massachusetts it was held that the legislature could constitutionally, for the promotion of the public health, provide for the construction of sewers and the disposition of sewage from a number of cities and towns including an area of one hundred and thirty square miles and a large population, and impose the expense upon the cities, towns, and counties in the district; and further that an objection on behalf of one town that such system of sewage would not benefit it because it had no sewage system, and an objection on behalf of another that it had a system of its own, were not material to the constitutionality of the act providing for the construction of such sewage system, and the appointment thereunder of commissioners to determine the proportion which the several towns were to be assessed. Kingman, Petitioner, 153 Mass. 566, 27 N. Assessment by legislature.—In New York it is held that an assessment for a municipal improvement is a species of tax which the legislature, under the taxing power, may impose; and where the assessment is irregular, the legislature may make an assessment itself, instead of authorizing a reassessment. In re Van Antwerp, 56 N. Y. 261 [affirming 1 Thomps. & C. 423]. But in California it has been held that the legislature cannot directly exercise the power of assessment within an incorporated city, although it may empower the municipal authorities to do so. People v. Lynch, 51 Cal. 15, 21 Am. Rep. 677. The legislature cannot by special act deprive the city council or other proper local authority of the municipal corporation of all discretion with respect to a local improvement, where by the charter of the city the matter of such improvements is left to the judgment and discretion of such local authority. People v. Lynch, supra.

Equality and uniformity.—The legislature has no power to levy for a municipal improvement an assessment which is not uniform and equal, nor can it validate an assessment which has been made by the municipal authorities for such purpose, and which is void for want of uniformity and equality. People v. Lynch, 51 Cal. 15, 21 Am. Rep. 677. A bill providing for public improvements by special taxes levied upon districts having territorial limits different from the municipal corporation levying the tax, and without limiting the rate of taxation or amount of indebtedness for such purposes, was held unconstitutional. In re House Bill No. 165, 15 Colo. 595, 26 Pac. 141.

Relieving property improperly assessed.—Where a municipal corporation, in exercising the power of assessment to pay for a public improvement, levied the assessment upon property which was not subject to be charged therewith, and, in a suit brought to enforce the assessment, the property thus charged was ordered to be sold to pay the same, it was held that it was competent for the legislature to relieve the property thus ordered to be sold, and to require the amount improperly charged thereon to be paid out of the funds of the corporation. State v. Hoffman, 35 Ohio St. 435.

50. Parker-Washington Co. v. Kansas City, 73 Kan. 722, 85 Pac. 781, holding that it was competent for the legislature to require that persons contracting for the improvement of streets should give bonds for the faithful carrying out of their contracts executed by

St. (1901) §§ 7055, 7055b), enacting that unskilled labor employed on any public work of the state, counties, cities, and towns shall receive not less than twenty cents an hour, which may be enforced in a proper action, and that any contractor whose duty it is to pay the unskilled labor, and who shall violate the statute, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, etc., is invalid, because:

(1) The power to confiscate the property of taxpayers by forcing them to pay an arbitrary price for labor on public works is not one of the powers of the legislature over municipal corporations as agencies of the state; (2) because the statute is obnoxious to the objection that through its operation a citizen may be deprived of his property without due process of law; and (3) because inasmuch as the statute merely attempts to fix a minimum rate of wages to be paid "unskilled labor," it is an unnatural classification, rendering the statute invalid as class legislation); People v. Coler, 166 N. Y. 1, 59 N. E. 716, 82 Am. St. Rep. 605, 52 L. R. A. 814 [affirming 56 N. Y. App. Div. 98, 67 N. Y. Suppl. 701 (reversing 32 Misc. 78, 66 N. Y. Suppl. 163)] (holding that the labor law (Laws (1897), c. 415, as amended by Laws (1899), cc. 192, 567), providing that laborers on public work shall be paid the prevailing rate of wages; that contracts for such work shall stipulate that they shall be void unless complying with the act; and that the contractor shall not be entitled to receive any sum, and no public officer shall pay the same, for work done on a contract which in form or manner of performance violates the statutory requisites of such contracts, and section three providing that public officers violating the act shall be guilty of malfeasance, and that any citizen may maintain proceedings to suspend him, or to avoid or cancel contracts violating the act, or to restrain payment on such contracts, is unconstitutional, since it takes away the liberty of freely contracting both from municipalities and those contracting therewith, and contravenes the provision of the constitution that no person shall be deprived of his property without due process of law).

constitutional limitations, the courts have held that the legislature has control over municipalities with respect to public improvements of purely local concern,⁵⁴ so that it may compel the municipality at its expense to erect a public building,⁵⁵ and may appoint commissioners or other officers to carry out the improvement.⁵⁶ In some states, however, this power with respect to matters of purely local concern is restricted by express constitutional provision, and in others it is held independently of any express constitutional provision, that the legislature cannot constitutionally interfere with the power of local self-government by controlling the city with respect to municipal improvements of a purely local character and concern.⁵⁷ The legislature cannot compel a municipal corporation to make or aid in improvements or works of a private character, or works which, although public in some respects, are private in others.⁵⁸ A statute appointing or providing for appointment by the governor of a board of public works for a city, with power merely to take preliminary steps with relation to local improvements, is not unconstitutional as depriving the city of control of its local officers, where such preliminary steps are not binding on the city, but the making of the improvements recommended and the assessments therefor are finally left to the city authorities.⁵⁹

A. 79 (holding that the act of March 8, 1889 (Acts (1889), p. 247), assuming to give the exclusive control of streets, alleys, sewers, lights, water-supply, etc., in cities of more than fifty thousand inhabitants, to boards of public works to be chosen by the legislature from residents of the cities affected, was void as denying the right of local self-government); People v. Detroit, 29 Mich. 343 (holding in effect that the legislature cannot compel a municipal corporation to contract a debt for local purposes against its will, as for the acquisition and improvement of land as a park); People v. Detroit, 28 Mich. 228, 15 Am. Rep. 202 (to the same effect); People v. Lothrop, 24 Mich. 235; People v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. App. Div. 98, 67 N. Y. Suppl. 701 (reversing 32 Misc. 78, 66 N. Y. Suppl. 163)] (holding that the legislature of a state has no right to interfere and control by compulsory legislation the action of municipal corporations with respect to property and contract rights of purely local concern). 58. People v. Batchellor, 53 N. Y. 128, 13 Am. Rep. 480, holding that the legislature cannot compel a municipal corporation to aid in the construction of a railroad by subscribing for its stock and issuing bonds therefor, since railroads owned and operated by corporations for the benefit of their stock-holders are not public highways in the same sense as streets and common roads, and a railroad corporation, while public as to its franchises, is private as to the ownership of its property and its relation to its stock-holders, and a municipal corporation in subscribing for its stock acts as a private corporation. Other statutes not open to such objection.—Cal. Act, March 24, 1876, providing that the board of supervisors, if they should deem it expedient to continue the construction of the new city hall in San Francisco, in the mode and manner prescribed in the act, were thereby authorized and empowered to express such judgment by resolution or order, in such form as they might deem proper, was held not to be open to the objection that it was an attempt by the legislature to deprive the supervisors of their discretion in matters of local improvement. People v. Bartlett, 67 Cal. 156, 7 Pac. 417. The same is true of a statute providing for the widening of a street and declaring what district is benefited by the improvement, and providing for assessments by a commission, where it is left to the city council to say whether the work shall be done or not and to levy the assess-

H. Contracts and Obligations — 1. CANNOT IMPAIR OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS.

A municipality, as will be seen in another place, has the power within the scope of its charter to enter into contractual relations and assume legal obligations with other corporations and with natural persons, for breach of which it will incur liability just as an individual;⁶⁰ and such contracts, when not ultra vires or otherwise invalid, are protected by the prohibition in the federal constitution against laws impairing the obligation of contracts.⁶¹ Legislation producing this result, says the federal supreme court, not indirectly as a consequence of legitimate measures taken, as will sometimes happen, but directly by operating upon those means, is prohibited by the constitution, and must be disregarded — treated as if never enacted, by all courts recognizing the constitution as the paramount law of the land.⁶² This doctrine has been repeatedly asserted by this court, and also expressed by the state courts, when attempts have been made to limit the power of taxation of a municipal body, upon faith of which contracts have been made, and by means of which alone they could be performed.⁶³ So long as the corpora-

Bond*, 10 Cal. 563 (holding that the act of May 1, 1851, authorizing the funding of the floating debt of San Francisco, was substantially a trust deed, whereby she agreed, on a valuable consideration, to place in the hands of certain trustees so much of her revenue and property, to be applied by the trustees to the redemption of her obligations in the mode and according to the terms of her agreement, and as the act was of this character, it was not competent for the legislature to substantially change its terms without the sanction of the creditors); *People v. Rep. 70, holding that where bonds have been issued and used to raise funds to pay for land acquired by a city for a public park, under legislative authority, the terms of the issue of the bonds constitute a contract between the bondholder on the one part and the city and state on the other, specifically pledging the land taken for the payment of the bonds, the statute so providing, and a subsequent act authorizing a sale of any portion of the park free of all liens existing by virtue of the original act, is void as impairing the obligation of contracts.

S.) 510, 17 L. ed. 305. If a municipal corporation is authorized to contract debts, no subsequent tion continues in existence, the courts have said that the control of the legislature over the power of taxation delegated to it is restrained to cases where such control does not impair the obligation of contracts made upon a pledge, expressly or impliedly given, that the power should be exercised for their fulfilment.⁶⁴ However great the control of the legislature over the corporation while it is in existence, it must be exercised in subordination of the principles which secure the inviolability of contracts.⁶⁵

2. POWER TO REGULATE OR VALIDATE CONTRACTS OR IMPOSE OBLIGATIONS.⁶⁶ In the various state constitutions are to be found other restrictions upon the inherent legislative control over municipal contracts and obligations, which forbid the state to impose pecuniary obligations upon a municipality without its consent.⁶⁷ And in many of the states the courts recognize the right of a municipal corporation to determine for itself what contracts it will make and what pecuniary obligations it will assume for purposes purely local.⁶⁸ Subject to these limitations the legislative control over municipal contracts and obligations seems to be plenary and undisputed.⁶⁹ It is well settled that the legislature may prescribe the mode by which municipalities shall enter into contracts and the limit of their power of contracting.⁷⁰ It may forbid municipal contracts with such of its officers as exercise the municipal power of contracting.⁷¹ It may prescribe the terms upon which the corporation may make contracts,⁷² and the objects for which alone it may con-legislation can impair them, and therefore where an act incorporated a borough and other territory into a city and directed a tax of two per cent to be levied on property lying in what was the borough "until the present debt of the borough" should be paid, and the subsequent act directed that after advertising the trustees should four times a year offer all the money in the treasury publicly, and award the same to the creditor or creditors who would release the greater sum of indebtedness therefor; and no interest should be computed on said indebtedness, after the borough charter was annulled, the latter act was held unconstitutional. Williams' Appeal, 72 Pa. tract.⁷³ It may validate contracts or acts made or done ultra vires and such as are void or voidable for informality or irregularity in their execution.⁷⁴ And it may by statute compel the making of any contract by the municipality essential to enable it to discharge its public functions and perform its governmental duties.⁷⁵ As to the extent of legislative power in the imposition of pecuniary burdens upon the municipality, there is such variety of judicial views as to render the law rather uncertain and elastic. Thus it has been decided that the legislature may impose a debt upon a city, without its consent, to construct a railroad subway;⁷⁶ to provide for sewers;⁷⁷ to reimburse the state for moneys paid out for public improvements;⁷⁸ to discharge obligations not cognizable either at law or in equity;⁷⁹ to pay for property appropriated to public use under the tiguous towns contributing to a joint public improvement;⁹² to expend money for docks, wharves, and levees,⁹³ or for schools;⁹⁴ or to pay for the support of paupers.⁹⁵ But it has also been held that it rests exclusively with the people of the municipality to decide whether or not a debt shall be incurred for purely municipal purposes;⁹⁶ whether it will subscribe for stock in a railroad company;⁹⁷ and whether it will pay for public parks which it has not voluntarily purchased.⁹⁸

I. Revenues and Fiscal Management — 1. IN GENERAL. This topic embraces rules and powers for the collection and appropriation of public funds raised by the exercise of the sovereign function of taxation and is closely connected with the subject of municipal obligations, treated in the preceding section.⁹⁹

2. PUBLIC FUNDS AND REVENUES. The ordinary revenues of a city are not its property in the sense in which private property is held by an individual.¹ Such revenues belong to the public, and the collection and appropriation thereof by a city is the exercise of a trust function by the municipality for the benefit of the public.² The legislature is the representative of the public in this as well as other matters, and it may change these public revenues from one public object to another at its discretion.³ The doctrine is generally recognized that no municipal corporation can have any vested right in the powers conferred upon it for governmental purposes.⁴ Therefore revenues raised by taxation, although levied for specific public purposes, are so far subject to the legislative will that by it they may be applied to other uses of the municipality.⁵ In an early Illinois case it was decided that the legislature had authority to repeal the power it had given to cities to grant licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors, the fees of which were directed to be appropriated to the support of city paupers, Judge Caton, in the opinion, remarking that the charter power to license "gives the city no more a vested right to issue licenses because the legislature specified the objects to which the money should be applied, than if it had been put into the general fund of the city."⁶ When the city of Lafayette was consolidated with New Orleans it was provided that the respective obligations of the two cities should rest upon and be borne by the former territory of the two cities severally; but this just and equitable arrangement was, over the protest of the people of Lafayette, whose burden had been light, soon changed by a statutory provision requiring all portions of the consolidated city to bear equal parts of taxation. The supreme court of Louisiana answered the complaint of the citizens of Lafayette with a repetition of the fundamental doctrine that public corporations are wholly under the control of the legislature, and it may provide in what manner taxes shall be levied to support them and pay their debts.⁷

3. AUTHORITY IN PUBLIC MATTERS ONLY. The power of the legislature to control municipal funds applies only to the strictly public or governmental revenues of the city,⁸ and rests obviously upon the sovereign legislative power of the state in all public matters. This power of control does not exist with regard to property in which the municipality has a private interest or creditors have a vested right.⁹ Public revenues, however, are not regarded as private property;¹⁰ nor has any one a vested right in them until after their actual appropriation.¹¹ The legislature cannot authorize or compel a city to give any of its money or property, or to loan its credit for any private purpose, or to expend any of its money, directly or indirectly, for any other than city purposes.¹²

4. EXAMPLES OF POWER. This is the general rule with regard to public property owned and controlled by the municipality as trustee or representative of the public for public use, which could not be held by private individuals for such use.¹³ As a consequence the legislature has full power over the revenues of a corporation, the source of which it may prescribe and alter at its pleasure.¹⁴ It may give or it may withhold, for example, the power to grant and tax licenses for various occupations; ¹⁵ also the power to levy and collect wharfage or ferriage,¹⁶ or penalties for breach of law or of contract.¹⁷ In the exercise of this sovereign power by the legislative authority over municipal funds and revenues limitations are found along the same uncertain boundary line between strictly governmental and purely municipal functions, noticed hitherto,¹⁸ which in several states has been run on different constitutional courses, and by different local rules of variation, and is therefore difficult to be followed, as will appear from the following instances: In California the imposition of a license-tax on a business or occupation is a municipal affair.¹⁹ In Illinois a city may be burdened by statute with the expense of caring for delinquent children.²⁰ In Kentucky the legislature may prescribe the purpose and fix the maximum rate of municipal taxation; but the assessment and collection of taxes for such purposes are in the discretion of the municipality.²¹ It has power to impose local taxation to carry out local enterprises, such as the construction of a railroad.²² In Louisiana the legislature has no power to compel a municipality to levy a tax for school purposes.²³ In Maryland for the use of Washington county. After action brought to recover the penalty, the legislature repealed that clause of the charter which imposed the penalty, and thereupon, under a plea puis darrein continuance, it was held that the county could not recover, since the penalty was released. Here again it was declared that the corporation had no vested right in such a fund as this, but that the same was under the sovereign control of the legislature.

land a law allowing certain commissioners in lieu of the municipality to levy municipal taxes may be valid.²⁴ In Michigan the legislature may require a municipality to pay money to the credit of the board of health;²⁵ but not to expend money for purely local improvements.²⁶ In Missouri a city's proportion of revenues for the maintenance of a state road through it may be raised by legislative levy;²⁷ and the same is true of the salary of an officer of a court required to be held in a certain city.²⁸ In Montana the legislature cannot compel a municipality to purchase or condemn for its use any existing local water-plant, owned by a private corporation or person, or forbid the erection by the municipality of any public utility.²⁹ In New Jersey the expense of swamp drainage may be imposed by the legislature upon the municipalities benefited thereby.³⁰ In New York the legislature may designate persons to audit certain ultra vires municipal liabilities, which the municipal auditor was by charter forbidden to approve.³¹ In Ohio the legislature may relieve property ordered to be sold under an assessment levied for a public improvement, and charge the amount so levied to the municipality.³² In Oklahoma the legislature may impose special municipal levies in excess of the four per cent maximum levy permitted by general law.³³ In Washington the legislature may impose upon a municipality its fair portion of the cost of county road improvement, fixed by the county commissioners without municipal consent.³⁴ In Wisconsin the legislature cannot, without municipal assent, divert municipal funds raised for erecting a city high school building, to the purchase of a site for a state normal school in the city;³⁵ but it may withdraw power to collect revenues in a municipality from municipal officers and confer it upon county officers.³⁶ In the federal courts the decisions scrupulously and consistently support the legislative power to enforce, and deny its authority to impair the obligation of municipal contracts by any legislation in regard to the municipal revenues or fiscal management.³⁷ The legislature has such control over the revenues of a municipal corporation that it may pass an act rendering the municipal corporation liable to persons whose property may be destroyed in consequence of mobs or riots.³⁸

There is general concurrence in the doctrine that the legislature has no power to divert municipal funds devoted to a charitable trust from the trust object and apply or appropriate them to any other object,³⁹ although it may effect a change of trustee for the administration of the trust.⁴⁰

can cities it often happens that municipal appropriations for improvements are inconsiderately and irregularly made, and far outrun municipal revenues; and thus by fiscal mismanagement affairs become involved in confusion from which neither municipal nor judicial action can lawfully extricate the corporation.⁴¹ In such cases resort is often had to the legislature for relief; and not infrequently the general assembly passes curative acts for the purpose of validating assessments and obligations which are void because ultra vires, illegal, informal, or irregular.⁴² Such curative acts of legislation are generally held to be valid, as acts of ratification or approval by the state of unauthorized acts of its governmental agent, whenever it would have been competent for the legislature to authorize them originally to be done, as they were actually done by the municipality.⁴³ But if such municipal action were beyond the power of legislative authorization by reason of constitutional limitation, then the curative acts are unconstitutional and void.⁴⁴ The doctrine of the law upon this subject is based upon the familiar rule of agency that subsequent ratification is equivalent to original authorization;⁴⁵ and this has been applied in some instances to pending judicial proceedings.⁴⁶

J. Acceptance of Statute by Municipality. While it is thus within the power of the legislature, subject to the limitation stated, to control municipal corporations by compulsory legislation,⁴⁷ it does not always exercise such control, but frequently, in enacting a statute affecting municipalities, leaves it for them to say, by vote or otherwise, whether the act shall apply to them.⁴⁸ So where

A statute which provides for its adoption at a legal meeting of the city council of a city, or of the inhabitants of a town, called for that purpose does not contemplate a special meeting of a city council; but adoption at a regular meeting is sufficient. Quinn v. Lowell Electric Light Corp., 140 Mass. 106, 3 N. E. 200.

Failure to comply with statutory provision as to rejection.—Under Miss. Code (1892), c. 93, § 3035, providing that any municipality preferring its existing charter might elect not to come under the code provisions, by resolution of its corporate authorities "entered of record and certified to the secretary of state within twelve months" after the charter became operative, a resolution so adopted within the twelve months, but not certified to the secretary of state until after the twelve months, was held ineffectual to prevent the operation of the code chapter as to such municipality. State v. Govan, 70 Miss. 535, 12 So. 959.

Cure by legislature of defective or illegal vote.—Where the legislature enacts, subject to adoption by vote of a municipality, a statute which it might impose upon the municipality without such vote, such as a statute imposing liability for the support of paupers, it may by subsequent retrospective legislation cure any defective or illegal vote, under the principle that if a defect in an act or proceeding by a municipality consists in doing or omitting something which the legislature might have made immaterial by prior law, it may be made immaterial by subsequent law. Fox v. Kendall, 97 Ill. 72.

Special legislation.—An act of the legislature providing that, where municipalities have voted for the support of paupers, and have acted in good faith for the period of five years under the authority of such vote, the law is such that the legislature cannot by compulsory legislation control a municipality in a particular matter, it may pass an act having such effect, subject to its adoption by the municipality.⁴⁹ Where a public act has been legally adopted by a municipality in accordance with its provisions, a subsequent amendatory act needs no such adoption unless its provisions expressly require it.⁵⁰

V. GOVERNING BODIES AND THEIR PROCEEDINGS.

A. Nature and Powers of Such Bodies — 1. IN GENERAL. Such is the nature of a corporation that it cannot be seen, felt, or touched by the senses, but can act, and be recognized and identified only by means of its human agencies.⁵¹ Its impersonality as a legal entity with powers, duties, and liabilities is apprehended and held to account in law through responsible officers, boards, and agencies, duly constituted and authorized to represent it in its dealings and conduct affecting the state and other corporations and persons.⁵² In this respect municipalities share the common lot of all corporations of whatever kind or nature.⁵³ In all its numerous and diverse activities, whether as a depository of public power, or a self-centered community working for its own interest, the municipal corporation must exercise its powers and perform its functions through those agencies which the state has appointed for it, or empowered it to appoint in a manner prescribed by law.⁵⁴ These agencies, howsoever constituted, are necessarily of widely differing their acts shall be deemed legal and binding, notwithstanding any informality in the time or manner of holding such election, is not a special act, within the constitutional prohibition. Fox v. Kendall, 97 Ill. 72. See, generally, STATUTES.

Revocation of consent.—Under Miss. Code (1892), c. 93, § 3035, declaring that after the chapter became operative every municipality should be governed by its provisions, but that any municipality might, within twelve months, "elect not to come under the provisions thereof," power was given to municipalities to affirmatively accept the provisions of the chapter and to be governed thereby; and where the proper corporate authorities formally resolved to accept the provisions of the chapter the city became bound thereby, and subsequent action of the authorities purporting to rescind the resolution of acceptance, although within the twelve months, was held ineffectual. Jackson v. Shlomborg, 70 Miss. 47, 11 So. 721.

The power to charter a street railroad was not withdrawn from the legislature by Tex. Const. (1876) art. 10, § 7, providing that "no law shall be passed by the legislature granting the right to construct and operate a street railway within any city, town or village, or upon any public highway, without first acquiring the consent of the local authorities having control of the street or highway proposed to be occupied by said railway," but such power still exists, provided the consent of the local authorities is first obtained. San Antonio Traction Co. v. Altgelt, 200 U. S. 304, 26 S. Ct. 261, 50 L. ed. 491 [affirming (Tex. Civ. App. 1904) 81 S. W. 106].

⁵⁰ Sweet v. Sprague, 55 Me. 190. Where, by a vote of the people under the original act relating to the park in West Chicago, the park commissioners became corporate authorities for the purpose of constructing and maintaining certain public improvements, it was held that the legislature might regulate and modify their powers and duties without submitting the supplemental act to a popular vote. Andrews v. People, 83 Ill. 529. See also West Chicago Park Com'rs v. McMullen, 134 Ill. 170, 25 N. E. 676, 10 L. R. A. 215.

⁵² "A municipal corporation may act through its mayor, through its common council, or its legislative department by whatever name called, its superintendents of streets, commissioner of highways, or board of public works, provided the act is within the province committed to its charge. Nor can it in principle be of the slightest consequence by what means these several officers are placed in their position,—whether they are elected by the people of the municipality, or appointed by the President or a governor." Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U. S. 540, 545, 23 L. ed. 440.

powers and authority, according to their respective functions, extending through all the grades of corporate activity from the lofty vocation of law-giving and administration down to the humble labors of street-cleaning and sewer-digging; and, although all are subject to the same general doctrines of the law of agency, yet the difference in degree of authority and in nature of functions requires careful discrimination in the application of these doctrines to the different agencies.⁵⁵ In every municipality, whether created under general or special law, there is and necessarily must be a body or board, constituted and empowered to exercise the sovereign powers of government delegated to the corporation by the state; and in the larger cities may be found separate boards, each authorized to exercise distinct powers of government, as boards of education, of public works, of assessment and equalization, of fire and police, etc., all in addition to the council and distinct from it.⁵⁶ The name, number, and character of these boards and their respective functions depend upon the charter of each corporation.⁵⁷ Whether a corporation has one or more of these bodies, they are properly called governing bodies, and are all subject to the same legal rules and regulations.⁵⁸

2. THE COMMON COUNCIL. There is a governing body common to all municipalities, great or small, generally called the common council.⁵⁹ It may be a single body or may be composed of two bodies resembling state legislative bodies.⁶⁰ Its members are called councilmen or aldermen, or both, if the council is bi-cameral.⁶¹ But, howsoever constituted, the council is the general agent of the municipality for all purposes, and exercises all the corporate powers, not expressly committed by law to other boards or officers.⁶² It is the depository of the most important power of legislation, conferred by the charter, and by its action the municipal ordinances and by-laws are enacted for the local government of the corporation.⁶³ In towns and smaller cities the council also performs most of the administrative duties of the corporation, through the mayor, who is usually the presiding officer, as well as the chief executive of the municipality.⁶⁴ same source to wit: The legislature. The whole municipal authority emanates from the legislature. Its legislative charter indicates its extent, and regulates the distribution of its powers as well as the manner of selecting and compensating its agents. Howsoever these agents or boards get their authority, the corporation must act through them. Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U. S. 540, 23 L. ed. 440.

Under a city charter granting the mayor and aldermen the right to adopt necessary ordinances for the government, police interest, and welfare of the city, and to provide for the punishment of criminal offenses, and conferring upon the mayor jurisdiction to try and punish violation of laws, and providing that the mayor and aldermen may adopt by-laws and ordinances necessary to carry out the powers conferred, it is within the province of the mayor and aldermen, in council, to direct where the mayor's court shall be held, and not the right of the mayor alone. Mitchell v. Gadsden, 109 Ala. 390, 19 So. 808.

Council not the "corporation."—It is the citizens of a city, and not the common council, who constitute the "corporation" of the city. The aldermen and the other charter officers are only officers of the corporation. Clarke v. Rochester, 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 446, 5 Abb. Pr. 107, 14 How. Pr. 193; Lowber v. New York, 5 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 325.

But much of this work is effected through the instrumentality of committees of the council, of which the mayor may be ex-officio chairman.⁶⁵ The elective functions of the corporation, when not expressly given to the people, are exercised by the council, which chooses all municipal officers, unless the law constitutes another and different electorate.⁶⁶ Some judicial functions of the municipality are also conferred upon the council as a body, especially such as pertain to impeachments, and other trials of municipal officers for official delinquencies.⁶⁷ But the ordinary judicial functions of the corporation are exercised by the recorder, mayor, or some other judicial tribunal created by the law for this purpose.⁶⁸ Indeed it will be found that whenever and however a power of any kind is conferred upon the municipal corporation either by charter or general law, and no officer or body or other person is expressly clothed with such power, then such municipal function is to be exercised by the common council as the general agent of the municipality, just as the board of directors, the general agency of a private corporation, exercises its corporate functions.⁶⁹ The constitution of the common council is determined by the municipal charter, which is the supreme law of the corporation.⁷⁰ When the council is bi-cameral the relation of the two bodies is very like that of the senate and house of representatives in the federal government; and its mode of transacting official business generally resembles that of the congress or state legislature.⁷¹ A single body is generally presided over by the mayor and has a much simpler modus operandi.⁷² Whether composed of one or two bodies, the common council must act as one in effect — if double, both bodies must concur in their conclusions in order to make their actions that of the corporation.⁷³ The exception to this requirement may be

Power to punish for violation of ordinances.—Where, under the act incorporating a town, each member of the town council is invested with authority as a magistrate, within the corporate limits of the town, to impose fines and to imprison for violation of a municipal ordinance, the power to imprison cannot be exercised until there has been a judicial ascertainment of the fact that such ordinance has been violated. Craig v. Burnett, 32 Ala. 728; Ex p. Burnett, 30 Ala. 461. The town council as a judicial body has no power to adjudge fines and imprison under such an act, although each individual composing the council is constituted virtute officii a magistrate, before whom a recovery of fines for violation of ordinances may be had. Craig v. Burnett, supra.

In Canada municipal councils have no rights or prerogatives other than are conferred upon them by the municipal code. Vallières v. St. Henri de Lauzon, 14 Quebec K. B. 16 [reversing 26 Quebec Super. Ct. 447].

Power to censure mayor or members.—Municipal councils have no right or power to sit in judgment upon or censure the conduct of their members, where no such power is given them by their charter or the general law. Vallières v. St. Henri de Lauzon, 14 Quebec K. B. 16 [reversing 26 Quebec Super. Ct. 447], holding also that no such power was given by the municipal code of Canada, and that a resolution of a municipal council censuring the conduct of the mayor was unlawful and should be rescinded, and to this effect the judgment of the court declaring the illegality of the resolution should be inserted in the minute books of the council on the margin of the resolution; and further that the corporation was to be held liable for the act of its council and should be condemned to pay nominal damages.

found in those municipalities, wherein, after the analogy of the federal government, the mayor is given power to appoint officers with the consent of the upper body of the council, which, in such case, exercises this function after the manner of the senate of the United States.⁷⁴ Moreover the members of the council cannot act separately, but must assemble in meetings regularly called, to the end that there may be conference and discussion of measures proposed for corporate action.⁷⁵ The citizens of a municipality cannot, by vote or otherwise, confer upon the common council any powers or functions not conferred by the charter or general law; ⁷⁶ nor can they control the action of the council in matters within its powers, although they may by statute be authorized to meet and advise or recommend action.⁷⁷ The mayor, aldermen, and council of a municipality are not trustees for the citizens in the technical sense of the words in courts of equity, and are not like proper trustees subject to chancery control.⁷⁸ They are "civil officers" within the meaning of that term as used in the constitution.⁷⁹ Where a continuing power is vested in the common council, such as the power to appoint to a certain office, one common council cannot by enactment of an ordinance or regulation on the subject defeat or materially interfere with the exercise of the power by succeeding councils.⁸⁰

3. OTHER BOARDS. In the charters of many of the larger cities of the United States there is a segregation of the complicated functions of municipal government, and a designation of separate bodies for the exercise of the different classes of powers. Thus, while the general powers of the corporation are wielded by the common council, a board of education controls the city schools; a board of public works looks after the streets, sewers, and public buildings; a fire and police board manages these departments of city government; a park-board has supervision of parks and other places of public resort; and commissioners care for municipal docks and wharves, and for the municipal improvements.⁸¹ The extent and degree of power exercised by these several boards or departments depends of course upon the provisions of the municipal charter.⁸² In some cities they are only, or chiefly, boards of administration to execute the plans and designs enacted by the common council.⁸³ In others they possess power to enact rules and regulations for the government of their respective departments, and to enforce the same.⁸⁴ Some municipal boards have been given such measure of power and independence of action as to be declared separate corporations, or quasi-corporations, with power to contract, sue and be sued, and even to exercise the sovereign powers of taxation, eminent domain, and the police power.⁸⁵ The powers wielded by these boards and departments are of course conferred upon them by the state through legislative bodies, subject to revision and withdrawal at their discretion, and must be exercised by them in subordination to the superior powers of the state, as expressed in its constitution and laws;⁸⁶ and sometimes subject to the general supervision and control of the common council.⁸⁷ The meetings and proceedings of these bodies are controlled by the same general rules and regulations as those governing the council.⁸⁸ They are municipal agencies, and must act solely within their respective spheres and for the municipal welfare.⁸⁹

B. Organization, Meetings, Rules, and Proceedings—1. IN GENERAL—

a. Constitution of Body. The powers of a municipal corporation must be exercised by the proper governing body, and in the manner prescribed by the constituent act or charter.⁹⁰ The governing body is composed of members chosen by the electors of the corporation to the number and in the manner provided by the charter, or by general law; and, although they are usually chosen as representatives of the several wards of the corporation, the legislature may provide for their election by general vote of the municipality at large, unless the state constitution imperatively requires ward representation.⁹¹ At the organization of

87. This relation of other boards to the common council is fixed by the charter, which may make them coördinate, in which case no such supervision is exercised by the council, as general agency, over the other municipal boards; or it may confer upon these boards only subordinate powers, or purely administrative functions, in which event the council, being endowed with the local legislative authority, may by virtue thereof prescribe regulations and enact by-laws which shall control and direct their course of action. Elliott Mun. Corp. 218.

88. Boards are ex vi termini bodies of officials, invested with powers which may be exercised only by the members in session collectively; and for the orderly and lawful performance of these functions there are rules to govern the members in meeting assembled, either adopted formally or recognized as established by long usage for all such bodies. In Pennsylvania the state census of 1870, being the latest list of "taxable inhabitants" made preceding the organization of the Philadelphia city government in 1872, determined the number of members of the common council which each ward was entitled to elect in October, 1872. Com. v. Omensetter, 9 Phila. 489. The act of 1874, limiting the number of aldermen in cities of the third class to the corporation, or the creation of a new board, the new officers may be designated for temporary service by an act of assembly.⁹² Under most state constitutions permanent members of governing boards must be chosen by the inhabitants to the number provided for by the charter, either specifically or on the basis of population.⁹³ The council when duly organized becomes a continuous body, even though the terms of its members should all expire at the same time; and a new city council may take up proceedings where they were left by the old council.⁹⁴ In municipalities where two wardens are ex-officio members of the council, a charter amendment, increasing the council to seven members, authorizes the election of only five councilmen, who, with the wardens, constitute the new council.⁹⁵

b. Mayor or Other Chief Officer as Member of Body. The nature and function of the chief executive, whether called mayor, Burgess, reeve, or warden, are declared in the charter, or in general statutes.⁹⁶ He may be a member of the body, and as such an integral part of the legislative department;⁹⁷ he may be its presiding officer as is almost universally the case in towns and smaller cities;⁹⁸ or he may be entirely separate from the legislative department, as the head of the executive department, after the manner of a state governor.⁹⁹ In his absence the one for each ward, was held applicable to all cities of that class, whether incorporated under such act or under the act of May 23, 1889, which is silent upon the question of aldermen. Com. v. Hastings, 16 Pa. Co. Ct. 425.

In Rhode Island the provisions of the city charter of Newport, in so far as they withhold from registered voters the right to vote for aldermen and common councilmen, or do not extend such right to the registered voters, were held unconstitutional and void. In re Newport Charter, 14 R. I. 655.

In California the Consolidation Act of 1856, section 68, requiring certain ordinances of the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco to be presented to the mayor for approval before they should take effect, did not make the mayor a member of the board of supervisors as a "governing body." Jacobs v. San Francisco, 100 Cal. 121, 34 Pac. 630.

In Pennsylvania there have been numerous conflicting decisions in the lower courts throughout the state on the question whether the act of April 1, 1834, section 8, providing inter alia that "the Burgess shall be president of the town council, and shall have and exercise all the rights and privileges of a member thereof," was impliedly repealed by the act of April 3, 1851, known as the "General Borough Law," and the supplementary act of June 2, 1871. See Com. v. Kemp Smith, 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 667; Caroline v. Shellenberger, 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 145; Darrach v. Kenney, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 391; Price v. Beale, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 491; *Kittel v. But the question was set at rest in 1893 by the decision of the supreme court in Zane v. Rosenberry, 153 council may have charter authority to elect a mayor pro tem, with all the powers of the office, or its power may be limited to the choice of one of its members as temporary chairman, who will possess only the authority of a presiding officer.¹ Cases have also arisen wherein, under the peculiar language of the charter, the mayor, or mayor pro tem, has been authorized to vote as a member of the council, and cast another vote in case of a tie, and also to exercise the veto power of a municipal executive.² When the president or chairman of the council vacates his seat and refuses further to act in the office, then even though he remains in the council chamber, the council may elect a president pro tem to perform the functions of the office.³

c. Organization. The organization of a common council must be effected in conformity to the provisions of the municipal charter, and of the general law.⁴

Pa. St. 38, 25 Atl. 1086 [affirming 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 382], wherein it was held that the said act of 1834, section 8, was repealed by the act of 1871, section 2, fixing the number of councilmen at six and giving power to the courts to "change the charter of any borough so as to authorize the burgess" to serve as a member of the town council, so that, where the charter is not so changed, the burgess is not entitled to act as a member of council. It was further held that the right of the burgess as a member and presiding officer of the council is not recognized by the said act of April 3, 1851, providing (section 6) that "it shall be the duty of the chief burgess to sign the several by-laws, rules, regulations, and ordinances adopted after they shall have been duly and correctly transcribed by the secretary," and (section 8) that "the secretary shall transcribe the by-laws, rules, regulations and ordinances, adopted into a book, kept for that purpose, and when signed by the presiding officer shall attest the same." Zane v. Rosenberry, supra. The act of March 23, 1893 (Pamphl. Laws 113), providing that the voters of "every borough in the commonwealth" should in February, 1894, etc., elect a burgess who should not be a member of nor preside at the meetings of the council, and that all inconsistent acts were repealed, operated to repeal special charters of boroughs providing that the burgess was a member and presiding officer of the council. Bridgeport v. Schneipp, 15 Pa. Co. Ct. 150.

Injunction.—It has been held that where the burgess of a borough undertakes to act as president of councils without any color of right to do so, equity will assume jurisdiction to prevent confusion and delay, as well as danger to the public interests, and an injunction will issue. Carline v. Shellenberger, 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 145; Zane v. Rosenberry, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 382 [affirmed in 153 Pa. St. 38, 25 Atl. 1086].

And in details for which there is no provision made by the charter or statute the common council must conform its proceedings for organization to the laws and usages of the body, or, lacking these, to rules and customs of similar bodies in analogous cases.⁵ Members holding over are entitled to have their names first enrolled, after which the new members elected should be required to present their certificates to be passed upon, and have their names enrolled, if they are approved.⁶ Existing boards in a public corporation about to be merged into a municipality of a different class under a law providing for their continuance in office until their successors are elected and qualified become instantler the council of such new corporation directly the merger is effected as required by law.⁷ But such merger under general law can be effected only by corporate action or valid election, and ordinances passed by the old board under the new charter or corporation are wholly invalid.⁸ The question of the validity of two rival municipal organizations cannot be tried and determined in an action of assumpsit against the corporation for breach of contract by one of them.⁹

d. Mode of Action in General. Where the method of exercising the corporate powers is specially prescribed by charter, or by general law, such method must be pursued in order to give validity to the action taken thereunder.¹⁰ If no mode is prescribed the council may exercise the power in any appropriate method.¹¹ Thus, in the absence of a specific method designated by charter, an order or resolution may be employed as effectively as an ordinance to make a contract, order a special Filing certificate of election of members.—Burns Annot. St. Ind. (1901) § 4331, requiring a certificate of the election of town trustees to be filed in the office of the clerk of the circuit court before any valid ordinance can be passed by them, applies, in view of section 4333, providing for the election of only a part of the trustees at any one time, only to the first election of town trustees, which is held upon the incorporation of the town, and has no application to subsequent elections. *Low v. Lots to determine short and long terms.—Where five members of the city council were chosen at an election, and by an oversight it was not indicated which of them was to fill an unexpired term, it was held that the proper way of settling the dispute as to which should take the short term was to cast lots. Hobbs v. Uppington, 89 S. W. 128, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 131.

Failure to organize vacating offices.—In Pennsylvania by statute, if the councilmen in any borough fail to organize for the transaction of business within ten days after the time fixed by law for such organization, the court of quarter sessions, upon proper complaint and on rule to show cause, as provided in the statute, may declare the seats of the delinquent councilmen vacant and appoint others in their stead. Pa. Act. March 27, 1897 (Pamph. Laws 8). See In re Lemoyne Borough Councilmen, 15 Pa. Dist. 241, where, on refusal of part of the members declared elected councilmen to attend meetings, so that it was impossible to organize, the court declared the seats of all the councilmen vacant under this statute.

2. QUALIFICATIONS OF MEMBERS — a. In General — (1) IN THE UNITED STATES. The qualifications for membership in governing bodies, being prescribed by each state for its own municipalities, are necessarily far from uniform in the United States. Indeed there is diversity in the several corporations of each of those states wherein special charters are allowed to be granted.¹⁶ Usually, no doubt, members are required to be resident voters owning real estate in the corporation and ward they represent.¹⁷ In some states they are prohibited from holding another public office under authority of the state or of the United States, the statutes varying in the different states, and are disqualified as councilmen if they do so.¹⁸ of the exercise of such power is not limited by the charter, it may exercise it in any manner most convenient, and may act by its officers or properly authorized agents, and contract like an individual. Beers v. Dalles City, 16 Oreg. 334, 18 Pac. 835.

12. Chicago v. McKechney, 91 Ill. App. 442; Crawfordsville v. Braden, 130 Ind. 149, 28 N. E. 849, 30 Am. St. Rep. 214, 14 L. R. A. 268; McGavock v. Omaha, 40 Nebr. 64, 58 N. W. 543; Brady v. Co., 47 N. J. Eq. 380, 20 Atl. 859. Where a statute authorized a city corporation to elect commissioners, and the corporation appointed them by resolution, it was held that, as no mode of election was prescribed by the statute, this was a good exercise of the power. Low v. Pilotage Com'rs, R. M. Charlt. (Ga.) 302. A special election may be called by an order of the council instead of by ordinance, in the absence of statutory or charter provision to the contrary. O'Laughlin v. Kirkwood, 107 Mo. App. 302, 81 S. W. 512. A charter provision that the city shall not be liable on "any contract unless the same is authorized by ordinance, and made in writing," etc., was held to be limited to those cases in which the power of the corporation must be exercised by ordinance and the work let to the lowest bidder after notice, so that it did not apply where the council was directly authorized to do the work, without the formality of an express contract. Beers v. Dalles City, 16 Oreg. 334, 18 Pac. 835. See also infra, VI, A, 1.

13. Thus it has been held that a city council empowered to fix the compensation of city officers must fix the same by ordinance, and not by resolution; and a city officer cannot recover salary fixed by resolution only. Central v. Sears, 2 Colo. 588. As a general principle, an ordinance by a city council to pay a municipal officer his salary should be founded upon another ordinance fixing the salary of the office, for public officers ought to have a fixed compensation so as not to be dependent upon councils, who are but trustees of public functions and ought not to vote money as a matter of grace or favor. Smith v. Com., 41 Pa. St. 335.

Assumpsit on implied contract.—Under an act for the incorporation of cities, providing that the salaries of all city officers must be fixed by ordinance by the common council, it has been held that a city officer cannot sue in assumpsit as on an implied contract to recover an alleged balance on salary as such officer. Brazil v. McBride, 69 Ind. 244.

14. Paterson v. Barnet, 46 N. J. L. 62. See also Brazil v. McBride, 69 Ind. 244. In the absence of an affirmative showing that a resolution is passed with the same formalities, and notified to the public in the same manner, as an ordinance, an act which a municipal charter requires to be done by ordinance cannot be done by resolution; nor can a general ordinance authorize it to be done. Cape Girardeau v. Fougou, 30 Mo. App. 551. See also infra, VI, A, 1.

Resolution or ordinance as to improvements see infra, XIII, B, 8, a, (11).

Contracting "pecuniary liability."—Under La. Rev. St. § 2448, forbidding cities to contract any "pecuniary liability," except by ordinance, it was held that the prohibition did not extend to a debt for gas-lighting of streets, which was for the city's current expenses, and payable out of the current revenues of the several years in which it was contracted. Laycock v. Baton Rouge, 35 La. Ann. 475.

16. Illustration of this was found in the state of Ohio in the days of special charters, when the peculiar preferences of the settlers of the western reserve from Connecticut, of the eastern counties from Pennsylvania, and of the Scioto valley from Virginia, found diverse expression in the charters given to the towns and cities in these several sections.

(ii) IN ENGLAND AND CANADA. In England the qualifications for burgess are prescribed by the Municipal Corporations Act;¹⁹ and in Canada municipal corporations follow more closely the British model; and the requirements for membership of the municipal council are more uniform as well as more exacting than in the United States. He must be not only an inhabitant freeholder owning an unencumbered estate of fixed value, but must actually have been assessed on the roll,²⁰ and have paid his taxes thereon;²¹ and he must not be an innkeeper or dealer in spirituous liquors.²² Moreover he must have made and published a declaration of essential qualifications in announcing his candidacy.²³

b. Determination of Qualification and Election. A person having the required certificate of election to membership in a city council is presumably a member elect thereof, and has the right to have his name placed on the council roll and to participate as a member.²⁴ But those lacking such certificate, even though duly elected, must bide their time until competent authority has made due declaration of their election.²⁵ The certificate of election is the only evidence admissible at the organization of the board;²⁶ and it is conclusive for that occasion and purpose.²⁷ The legislature has the power, in some states by express constitutional provision, to declare what tribunal shall determine the qualifications of members of governing boards and councils, and what effect shall be given to the decision.²⁸

In Indiana, however, it was held that the office of city councilman, to which compensation is attached, although it is a "lucrative office," is not within Ind. Const. art. 2, § 9, which provides that "no person holding a lucrative office or appointment, under the United States, or under this State, shall be eligible to a seat in the General Assembly; nor shall any person hold more than one lucrative office at the same time, except as in this constitution expressly permitted," since such office is an office purely and wholly municipal in its character, and such officer has no duties to perform under the general laws of the state. State v. Kirk, 44 Ind. 401, 15 Am. Rep. 239.

Notwithstanding the use of the word "estate," in the declaration of a candidate under the Consolidated Municipal Act of 1873, he is nevertheless qualified, if the rating of the value on the roll is sufficient in amount. No change has been made in the law that encumbrances are not to be considered in ascertaining the amount of qualification. Reg. v. McLean, 6 Ont. Pr. 249. Where the declaration of qualification had not been made, leave was given to defendant to make the same within ten days, otherwise leave was granted to file an information on the ground that defendant illegally exercised the franchises of the office. *Reg. v. The common council of a city sitting as a board of canvassers under the charter have power only to canvass or count the number of votes given at elections, as returned from the different wards, and to declare elected the persons appearing to have the highest number of votes as members of council. Usually the council or board is itself vested by charter or statute with exclusive power to decide the election and qualifications of its members, and such decision is in most jurisdictions final and conclusive, at least except on review as to questions of law.²⁹ In some states, however, such statutes do not oust the courts of law of their inherent or statutory power to issue a quo warranto to determine qualifications or, by certiorari or other appropriate process, prevent the usurpation

Carroll*, 92 Ill. App. 495. Under the Cities and Villages Act, art. 3, § 6, and art. 11, §§ 8, 9, giving the village board of trustees the power to pass upon the qualifications of its members, the county court has no jurisdiction of a proceeding to contest the election of such trustees. *Foley v. Constitutionality.—An act providing that the city council shall be judge of the election of mayor and recorder, and of its members, is not unconstitutional as vesting a judicial power in the council. New Orleans v. Morgan, 7 Mart. N. S. (La.) 1, 18 Am. Dec. 232.

Operation of amendment conferring power.—Where an amendment of a city charter provided that the board of councilmen should be the final judge of the election returns, and of the validity of elections and qualifications of its own members, whereas prior to the amendment the superior court had jurisdiction of the matter, it was held that the board of councilmen had jurisdiction in the case of an election held prior to the passage of the amendment. Selleck v. South Norwalk, 40 Conn. 359.

Extent of power.—The power given to the mayor and aldermen by a provision in the city charter to judge and decide as to the election and qualifications of their own members applies only to a contest between two or more members claiming membership by election to the same board, and it does not enlarge the power and duty conferred by other sections of the charter to act as supervisors in the elections of their successors in counting the votes and declaring the result. *Hudmon v. Election and qualification of mayor.—Where the charter of a municipality makes the common council the judge of the election and qualifications of its members, and gives it the power to determine contested elections, and the mayor is a member of the council, it has the power to determine his election and qualifications. Booth v. Arapahoe County Ct., 18 Colo. 561, 33 Pac. 581; People v. Harshaw, 60 Mich. 200, 26 N. W. 879, 1 Am. St. Rep. 498.

Forfeiture of office.—Although under a city council's charter authority to judge of the election and qualifications of its members and determine contested elections of city officers, the council may "refuse the seat" to one claiming to have been elected mayor, because of disqualification, or "may remove him because of continuing disqualification," its action in declaring him elected and installing him into office cannot oust the courts of their constitutional jurisdiction to inquire into the forfeiture of the office, as by accepting another office under the state or the United States. State v. De Gress, 53 Tex. 387.

In New Jersey, section 26 of the charter of the city of Camden, enacting that the city council should be the sole judge of the election returns and the qualifications of its own members, was not repealed by the act entitled "An act to regulate elections," which gives jurisdiction generally to circuit courts to hear and determine contested elections of city officers. Henry v. Camden, 42 N. J. L. 335.

Mandamus.—Where the common council are by charter given the right, in effecting their organization, to judge of the election and qualifications of their members, it is their duty to execute the power, and if they refuse, mandamus will lie to compel them to perform the duty. Henry v. Camden, 42 N. J. L. 335.

Necessity for determining qualifications.—A charter or statute providing that the city council shall judge by a majority vote of the qualifications of its members has application only where a seat is contested, and does not require determination of the quali-of office without legal election thereto, or review the determination of the council or board.³⁰ It has been held that charter power in a council to judge of the election returns and qualification of its members authorizes it by ordinance to provide for contesting the election and to make the contest triable before itself.³¹ In Canada quo warranto seems to be the usual proceeding for determining the election and qualification of councilmen.³² Proceedings by a council to determine the election and qualifications of a member must of course be conducted in accordance with its charter and with the law.³³ Whenever the council is judge of the election and qualification of its own members, the action of a council assuming to determine such matters for its successor is null and void; ³⁴ the power rests in the incoming not the outgoing council.³⁵ On the other hand, where the charter makes the common council judges of the election and qualifications of its members, a subsequent council cannot review the action of its predecessor.³⁶ fications of members as to whom there is no contest. Jobson v. Bridges, 84 Va. 298, 5 S. E. 529.

30. Missouri.—State v. Fitzgerald, 44 Mo. 425, holding that a charter provision that the board of councilmen should judge of the qualifications, elections, and returns of the members thereof did not, in the absence of express words to that effect, make their judgment final and conclusive or exclude the common-law jurisdiction of the courts therein.

New Jersey.—Meachem v. New Brunswick, 73 N. J. L. 121, 62 Atl. 303 (holding that the common council of New Brunswick, in declaring vacant a seat of one of its members under the charter provision that the common council should be the sole judge of elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members, was subject to the supervisory jurisdiction of the supreme court, which could set the proceedings aside on certiorari on its appearing that the action of the council was not justified by any evidence whatever); Henry v. Camden, 42 N. J. L. 335.

New York.—McVeany v. New York, 80 N. Y. 185, 36 Am. Rep. 600, 59 How. Pr. 106 [reversing 1 Hun 35, 3 Thomps. & C. 131]; People v. Hall, 80 N. Y. 117 [reversing a judgment of the general term which affirmed 58 How. Pr. 147]; People v. Hull, 64 Hun 638, 19 N. Y. Suppl. 536.

Pennsylvania.—Auchenbach's Contested Election, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 153, holding that the Municipal Act of May 24, 1887, section 4, providing that each branch of councils shall judge the qualifications of its members, and contested elections shall be determined by courts of law, does not make councils the exclusive judges of such qualifications; but they are prima facie judges until the courts of law determine the question, and then the decision of the court must prevail. See also Com. v. Bumm, 31 Leg. Int. 340. Compare Snyder v. Smith, 1 Leg. Gaz. 35.

Washington.—State v. Morris, 14 Wash. 262, 44 Pac. 266, holding that the jurisdiction to entertain quo warranto to determine who is entitled to the office of councilman of a city under Const. art. 4, § 6, providing that the superior court shall have original jurisdiction of all proceedings in which jurisdiction shall not have been by law vested exclusively in some other court, is not ousted by Gen. St. § 634, providing that the city council shall judge of the qualifications of its members and of all election returns, as the latter statute affords merely a cumulative remedy.

See 36 Cent. Dig. tit. "Municipal Corporations," §§ 189, 190.

An injunction will not issue against a person about to vote as a city alderman on questions affecting the property of plaintiff, although he is without lawful authority to do so, plaintiff's remedy being by quo warranto. Lewis v. Oliver, 4 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 121. And see INJUNCTIONS, 22 Cyc. 888.

Voting by person interested.—Under a statute empowering the board of aldermen to judge of qualifications of its members, a vote determining a certain alderman duly qualified during a certain year, which was taken while the alderman in question was holding over as an officer de facto, and which would not have been carried without his vote, cannot be considered in determining his right to the office. *Winters v. In Michigan, under Grand Rapids City Charter (1877), tit. 10, § 4, making the common council judge of the election and qualification of its members and authorizing it to determine contested elections, such duty falls on the new body; tit. 2, § 20, providing that the council of the preceding year shall meet after election and determine what persons are duly elected, refers only to officers, the determination of whose election is not vested elsewhere. Hilton v. Grand Rapids, 112 Mich. 500, 70 N. W. 1043.

3. MEETINGS — a. Time and Place in General. Meetings of municipal bodies are of two kinds: (1) Regular or stated; and (2) called or special.³⁷ The former are held at the time and place appointed by charter, ordinance, or regulation, or by general law, for the assemblage of the body for the transaction of all municipal business intrusted to it by law.³⁸ They are usually held weekly or monthly, according to the extent of the municipal business, and at the council room, or other room in the city hall or town hall assigned to the use of the body.³⁹ As a rule a meeting held at an unauthorized time or place is illegal.⁴⁰

b. Special Meetings. Special meetings are those called for other than the regular dates of meetings, or at another place than the usual room or hall.⁴¹ It is well settled that municipal affairs may be transacted and valid obligations assumed by the corporation at a special as well as a regular meeting.⁴² Two things only are essential to validity: (1) That authority exists to call such a meeting;⁴³ (2) that it is called pursuant to such authority.⁴⁴ Then if all members are duly notified or present,⁴⁵ a valid meeting may be held and corporate business may be legally transacted.⁴⁶

Meeting of old council after time for organization of new.—Under a city charter providing that the council should meet for organization at a certain time, and that officers should hold their respective offices until election and qualification of their successors, it was held that the old council had no authority to hold a meeting after the time set for the organization of the new council, except to act in an emergency in case the new members did not qualify. Fitzgerald v. Pawtucket St. R. Co., 24 R. I. 201, 52 Atl. 887.

Unauthorized place.—Where a city council has designated by ordinance the place at which meetings of the council shall be held, a meeting held in another place, unless a cogent reason may be shown why it was not held at the regular place, is unauthorized, under Ky. St. (1903) § 3633, providing that all meetings of the council shall be held at such place as may be designated by ordinance. Shugars v. Hamilton, 92 S. W. 564, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 127.

Statement of object by mayor on assembling.—Under St. Louis Charter, art. 4, § 18, providing that the mayor shall state to the council, when assembled in special session, the objects for which they have been convened, and their action shall be confined to such objects, it was held that the mayor could not enlarge the scope of legislation by stating in his message calling such session that he was not averse to submitting any measure during the session, if deemed of public interest, and that an ordinance passed at the submission of the mayor during the session was void. St. Louis v. Withaus, 90 Mo. 646, 3 S. W. 395 [affirming 16 Mo. App. 247].

43. Provision for special meetings and the method of calling them is usually found in the charter; but if not, it seems that they may be provided for by ordinance of the corporation (State v. Kantler, 33 Minn. 69, 21 N. W. 856), and they may be held at any time by the consent and presence of all members of the body (Lord v. Anoka, 36 Minn. 176, 30 N. W. 550; Willcock Mun. Corp. §§ 79, 80). A charter provision requiring a council to meet at such a time and place as they by resolution may direct is mandatory and directory, but not prohibitory, and will not prevent a valid special meeting being held at other times and places. State v. Smith, 22 Minn. 218. Under the Kansas City charter provision that the common council shall meet on certain specified days and not oftener, unless especially convened by the mayor in pursuance of law, and that the mayor shall call special sessions by proclamation, which shall be published as may be provided by ordinance, it was held that, in the absence of such ordinance, special meetings of the council called by proclamation of the mayor and all acts of the council at such meeting was illegal. Forry v. Ridge, 56 Mo. App. 615.

44. Forry v. Ridge, 56 Mo. App. 615. At common law a meeting can be summoned only by the mayor; and it was an indictable offense to convene and elect a presiding officer in his absence, and without his permission. Willcock Mun. Corp. § 94. But modern American charters usually provide for a call to be made by the clerk on the authority of a specified number of members of the body. See infra, V, B, 3, d.

c. Adjourned and Continued Meetings. Meetings of the council or board on a day other than the stated one for regular meetings, assembled pursuant to adjournment of the regular meetings, are not special meetings, nor a distinct class of meetings, but according to the great weight of authority are regular meetings with all the power and authority for municipal affairs possessed on the stated day for assembling, and all municipal action taken at such meeting is as valid as if taken on the first day of the session.⁴⁷ A possible exception to this general rule may be found in municipal action taken at the adjourned meeting on new matter not introduced on the first day of the session.⁴⁸ But even in such case legislation has been sustained, although introduced at the adjourned meeting, because it was germane to a general subject under consideration at the first meeting.⁴⁹ Nothing contrary appearing of record, the adjournment is presumed to have been regular.⁵⁰

New Hampshire.—Kimball v. Marshall, 44 N. New Jersey.—Stiles v. Lambertville, 73 N. J. L. 90, 62 Atl. 288 (holding that the session of a city council convened in pursuance of a special motion adopted at a regular meeting to adjourn the meeting to a stated time is a continuation of the regular meeting, and at such session the council can do anything that it could have done at the early session); Hudson County v. New Jersey R., etc., Co., 24 N. J. L. 718.

Pennsylvania.—Com. v. Fleming, 23 Pa. Super. Pittston*, 7 Kulp 470 (to the same effect).

See 36 Cent. Dig. tit. "Municipal Corporations," § 194.

Adjournment or continuance in absence of

quorum.—Under the charter of the city of Bridgeport giving the aldermen present at any meeting of the board, if less than a quorum, power to require the mayor to issue a warrant to arrest and bring in the absent members, it was held that where less than a quorum met pursuant to the call of the mayor for the meeting, and a majority of those present remained continuously in the aldermanic chamber for nearly two days, to keep the meeting alive, while an effort was being made to arrest and bring in the absent members, the meeting was legally continued to the end of such time, and business then transacted by a quorum was legal. State v. Pinkerman, 63 Conn. 176, 28 Atl. 110, 22 L. R. A. 653. So, under the Portland City Charter, § 66, providing that a majority of the members of a council shall constitute a quorum to do business, but a less number may meet and adjourn from "time to time," and under an ordinance of the council providing that in case a quorum is not present, the chief of the police shall inform the absent members that their presence is required, and that in case they fail to appear on such notice, the members present shall adjourn to the next "regular" meeting, it was held that where there is no quorum present, and the chief of police does not notify the absent members to attend, the members present may adjourn to a day specially set, under said section 66, and need not adjourn to the next regular meeting in accordance with the ordinance. Duniway v. Portland, 47 Oreg. 103, 81 Pac. 945.

48. By the common law it seems that adjournment could be had only for a reasonable cause, as, that the meeting occurred on Christmas day, or that the business of the session could not all be transacted on one day. Willcock Mun. Corp. § 60. In such cases obviously no exception like this would apply. But under the wide discretion now allowed to bodies to adjourn at will, it is questionable whether at an adjourned meeting return can be made in the order of business to a section completed at the original meeting and action taken upon matters pertaining thereto not mentioned on that day.

d. Call and Notice. Regular or stated meetings require no other call or notice than the charter or by-law gives, as every member is assumed to be thus duly notified by law of the time and place for assembly; ⁵¹ and this rule applies to an adjourned meeting duly held after a regular or stated meeting; ⁵² but it is essential to the validity of special meetings and of action taken thereat either that all members be voluntarily present, ⁵³ or that all within the city be duly notified to attend at the time and place appointed; ⁵⁴ and also of the business to be transacted if it be special or unusual. ⁵⁵ The call for special meetings is usually authorized Sufficiency of call.—A call for a special session of a city council "in the council chamber in the City Hall, for the purpose of considering communications, petitions, resolutions, committee reports and ordinances on first, second and third reading and passage," properly recorded in the journal, with the

to be made by the mayor, or by two or more members of the board, by writing filed with the clerk or recorder as authority for notice or publication.⁵⁶ No proof of call is necessary when all members are present at the special meeting.⁵⁷ And it has been held that, although the call was not made in writing as required by statute, the meeting was valid, actual notice to all members being proven, and all being present except one.⁵⁸ And a copy of a resolution passed by the board and issued by the clerk notifying the mayor of a special meeting to elect officers will be presumed to have been passed by a majority of the board.⁵⁹ But a tax levy or special assessment at a special meeting is invalid, when it is made to appear that it was not called in the manner prescribed by law.⁶⁰ Notice required to be given personally or by leaving a copy at the usual place of abode is not properly given by leaving a copy at the place of business;⁶¹ but when every member has actual personal notice, this is equivalent to written notice left at the residence.⁶² Meetings adjourned to assemble at the call of the mayor or reeve are not regular or adjourned meetings, but are special meetings, and the proceedings are not valid unless the required notice is given or waived.⁶³

4. CONDUCT OF BUSINESS — a. Quorum — (1) IN GENERAL. The majority rule prevails in all municipal bodies, unless the charter or some statute otherwise provides.⁶⁴ The entire membership of the body need not be present to validate the transactions of the body, but only a quorum thereof, which under the common law is a bare majority of all the members.⁶⁵ This quorum of the council, when duly assembled in a corporate meeting, is clothed with the powers of the municipal proceedings of the council when assembled, was held sufficient to enable the council to introduce, read, and pass ordinances at such special meeting. Richardson v. Omaha, (Nebr. 1905) 104 N. W. 172.

pality, and may perform all municipal functions, not expressly conferred on some other officer or agency.⁶⁶ If conferred upon another board, then a quorum of that body may exercise the power, unless legislation requires a greater number.⁶⁷ In reckoning a quorum, the total number of all members of the body authorized to be elected to it is usually taken as the basis.⁶⁸ The mayor, burgess, or reeve is to be included in the count, when the charter makes him a constituent member of the body.⁶⁹ If he is only a presiding officer, and not a component member, he is not to be reckoned in the count.⁷⁰ In some states the rule seems to be to count as the basis of the quorum only the number of members actually elected and holding membership at the time of the meeting.⁷¹ The actual presence of the quorum in the meeting is sufficient, although some members refuse to vote, or even though they be present under compulsion or arrest.⁷² When the two component parts of a bi-cameral council are authorized to elect an officer or perform any other act in

One who has a right to vote only in case of a tie cannot be counted in determining whether there is a quorum present. State v. Porter, 113 Ind. 79, 14 N. E. 883.

In the New England towns, where the corporate power is primarily exercised by citizens at large, any number, although less than a majority of the whole, then assembled at a legal meeting, have the power to act for the whole unless otherwise provided by law. Com. v. Ipswich, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 70. See, generally, TOWNS.

In Pennsylvania, under the act of April 1, 1834 (Pamphl. Laws 163), providing for the election of five councilmen and a burgess upon the organization of a borough, and declaring (section 8) that four of them, including the burgess, if present, shall be a quorum, it has been held that, although the number of councilmen was increased to six by the act of June 2, 1871, and to seven by the act of May 22, 1895, yet, as there has been no other legislation fixing the number which shall constitute a quorum, nor any repeal of that provision in the act of 1834, a quorum of council is still four. And therefore, where seven councilmen were to be elected for a borough and only five were declared elected, there being a tie as to the other two, it was held that three of the five councilmen declared elected could not hold a meeting and fill the two vacancies, even if a council had authority to appoint in such a case, since three members would not constitute a quorum. In re Lemoyne Borough Councilmen, 15 Pa. 69. People v. Harshaw, 60 Mich. 200, 26 N. W. 879, 1 Am. St. Rep. 498, holding that a provision in a charter that "the mayor, recorder, and aldermen, when assembled together and organized, shall constitute the common council" makes the mayor a member of the council. So, in People v. Wright, 30 Colo. 439, 71 Pac. 365, it was held that where, in a city council composed of eight aldermen and a mayor, the terms of four aldermen expired, the council then consisted of the remaining four aldermen and the mayor, three of whom constituted a quorum, and an election to fill a vacancy by the unanimous vote of such three was valid under Sess. Laws (1901), pp. 384, 385, requiring such election to be made by a majority vote of all the members. Under Ky. St. (1903) § 3634, providing that at meetings of a city council a majority of the members shall constitute a quorum, and that the mayor shall preside at the meetings, four members of the council of a city of the fifth class constitute a quorum, although the mayor may not be present, and a member of the council chosen as mayor pro tem may be counted as a councilman for the purpose of a quorum. *Shugars v. joint convention, a majority of the total number of members of both bodies constitute the quorum, although only a minority of one body is present.⁷³ When, however, the power is conferred upon the council in general terms, then each body must act separately, and a quorum of each is essential to a valid meeting for the exercise of the power.⁷⁴ A corporate body may not fix its own quorum, that being a subject of charter regulation.⁷⁵ If the charter is silent, and there is no general law fixing a statutory quorum, then the common-law rule of majority will govern, notwithstanding there may be a municipal by-law, rule, or order prescribing a greater or less number for a quorum.⁷⁶ A de facto member is to be counted in reckoning a quorum.⁷⁷

(II) NON-QUALIFIED MEMBERS. In reckoning for a quorum where actual membership is the basis, the rule is not to count as members those who are not at the date of the meeting legal members of the body.⁷⁸ Those therefore are omitted from the count of members who, by reason of resignation or removal from their respective wards, are out of office;⁷⁹ and also those whose terms of office have expired by law.⁸⁰ And a quorum cannot be forced by members of the council, less than a majority, electing persons as members to fill vacancies, whether real or declared by such minority.⁸¹ But the presence of ineligible members or the existence of vacancies in the body does not vitiate its action, when a majority of the whole number are present participating in the meeting.⁸²

officer refuses to put a motion before the body, then any member may do so;⁹³ and if the mayor declare adjourned a body which votes not to be adjourned, those remaining may organize and lawfully proceed to transact business, and make elections which will be valid and binding.⁹⁴

c. Mode of Voting. As a general rule, regulations which prescribe the manner in which a vote of the body shall be taken are mandatory, and failure to comply with them is fatal to any action taken.⁹⁵ Thus when a vote is required to be by ballot, a viva voce vote is ineffectual.⁹⁶ So when it is required that the vote shall be by yeas and nays, which shall be recorded, any other mode of voting on the question is vain and futile;⁹⁷ and a record which fails to show the votes of the members on a measure thus prescribed is fatally defective, and incompetent to support the action taken.⁹⁸ But it seems that a record showing what members were present, and that the vote was unanimous in favor of the measure, is a substantial compliance with this requirement, and supports the action taken.⁹⁹ A rule requiring yeas and nays on the passage of ordinances is not to be applied to mere resolutions.¹ Under a nay and yea rule ordinances cannot be adopted in a bunch, but a separate vote must be had on each one proposed.² When the mode of voting is not prescribed, any reasonable mode may be adopted.³ A vote by yeas and nays complies with a requirement for a viva voce vote, and is sufficient in any case when the mode of voting is not specially prescribed.⁴ A vote put by the clerk, on the mayor's refusal to put it to the body, is fatally irregular, when the charter vests the municipal affairs in a mayor and councilmen.⁵

d. Number of Votes Required ⁶—(1) IN GENERAL. In the absence of charter or statutory provision to the contrary the rule is well established that a majority of a quorum is all that is required for the adoption or passage of any ordinance, resolution, or order properly arising for the action of a municipal council or other municipal body.⁷ Sometimes, however, the charter or statute requires for particular action a majority of all the members elected,⁸ or the concurrence of Unauthorized vote excluded.—Where, on counting the votes put into the ballot box in an election of an officer by a municipal council, it appears that thirteen votes were put in, when the members present were entitled to give twelve votes only, and that seven were in favor of plaintiff and six in favor of another person, there is no election. Labourdette v. New Orleans First Municipality, 2 La. Ann. 527.

Validity of charter.—A city charter which vests the administration of all municipal affairs in a mayor and board of aldermen, to be called the city council, is not invalid because it fails to specify whether the council must act by a majority of the members or may act by a majority of a quorum. *State v. two thirds of all the members,⁹ or even a unanimous vote.¹⁰ Whether or not a particular matter is within a charter or statutory provision or rule of council requiring a certain vote is a question of construction.¹¹ The number of votes necessary to effect the passage or adoption of a measure by a governing body have been ruled in various cases as follows: When a majority or other specified number of all members elected is required, the requisite number is not diminished by the resignation of a member.¹² A majority of all is not required to change the boundaries of a city, because such majority is required for the appropriation and section 493, providing that all appointments of officers by any council should be made viva voce, and that the concurrence of the majority of the whole number of members elected to the city council should be required, a majority of all the members of the city council, and not simply the majority of a quorum, was necessary to the validity of all appointments to fill vacancies.

West Virginia.—Wherever the words "the council for the time being shall by a majority vote of all the members elected," or words of like import, occur in the charter of a municipal corporation, relative to the members of the common council thereof, they will be construed to mean a majority of the whole number of members to which the common council is entitled under the charter. See also Mills v. Gleason, 11 Wis. 470, 78 Am. Dec. 721. or payment of money.¹³ It has been held that where the mayor is only entitled to vote in case of a tie and a majority of all the "members elect" of the council is required to pass a measure, the mayor cannot vote, when the members are equally divided, so as to give such majority,¹⁴ and is not to be counted in determining whether the measure has been passed;¹⁵ but it is otherwise when the language is "all the members."¹⁶ When the board consists of a mayor and five aldermen, authorized to employ counsel for the city, the vote of two out of three members present is sufficient to allow the account of an attorney employed by the mayor for the city.¹⁷ When the words employed in designating the body of which a certain portion are required to pass a measure are "the council" or some phrase of similar import, it is generally construed to mean the members present at a valid meeting.¹⁸ A resolution requiring only a majority vote, attached to a tax budget requiring a five-sevenths vote, and voted on at the same time, is passed, although the budget is defeated, four sevenths of the members only voting for the measure.¹⁹ A common council having power to elect by a majority vote an officer removable at pleasure, may remove him by a majority vote, although two thirds are required to dismiss him for an offense in office.²⁰ In the absence of provision to the contrary, in choosing the officers necessary to effect the organization of a city council, the members being present and voting for candidates therefor, a plurality of the votes cast is sufficient to elect.²¹

(11) DISQUALIFICATION FROM INTEREST. There is a general rule of law that no member of a governing body shall vote on any question involving his own character or conduct, his right as a member, or his pecuniary interest, if that be immediate, particular, and distinct from the public interest.²² This rule has been

A mayor of a city may decide a tie vote of the council on the question of an appropriation of money to pay the fees of an attorney employed by him to bring mandamus proceedings to compel the clerk of the council to record his veto of a resolution, since his interest in the question is not such a pecuniary or personal one as to disqualify him held to disqualify members from voting under the following conditions: When the member is directly and pecuniarily interested in a disputed claim before the board for action;²³ when the question is on the increase of their salaries;²⁴ when the question is as to the qualifications of the member voting;²⁵ or when the member is a stock-holder in a street railway company, which is asking for a street franchise,²⁶ in a bridge company coöperating therewith,²⁷ or in a corporation to which it is proposed to convey lands.²⁸ But they are not disqualified from voting on measures because they would receive personal benefits as part of the community or of the locality to be improved.²⁹ Nor is one disqualified to vote to award a contract to a company by having acted as counsel for it, jointly with the city;³⁰ nor to vote to issue bonds, voted by the people, to a company with which he is a construction contractor.³¹ And it seems that the mayor may issue the bonds, although he is president of the company.³² An alderman, who is also a commissioner of police, may vote against the confirmation of one nominated to succeed him as commissioner.³³

Informality in vote or concurrence of presiding officer.—It has been held that where the validity of the action of the common council depended on the concurrence of four members, the affirmative vote of three members upon a proposition and the announcement by the president, who was a member with the right to vote in every case and a casting vote in case of a tie, he may vote on a question and give an additional vote if there is a tie.³⁵ So great is the force of the general rule that the mayor is permitted to give the casting vote, even when the tie vote is on confirmation of his own nominees.³⁶ An equal vote for each of three candidates for two positions creates a tie authorizing the mayor to cast the deciding vote;³⁷ but where an equal number of votes was cast for each of two candidates and there was also a blank vote, and the law required a majority vote of all the members present and participating, it was held that the blank vote must be counted, and therefore there was not a tie so as to entitle the mayor to give a casting vote.³⁸

f. Determination of Result of Vote. As a general rule, the number of lawful votes actually cast decides the question; so that it is generally held that, if a quorum is present, an election or measure is determined by the majority of the votes actually cast, although an equal or even a greater number refuse or fail to vote.³⁹ of the council, that the same was carried, showed the concurrence of the presiding member with his associates as expressed in their vote. State v. Armstrong, 54 Minn. 457, 56 N. W. 97. And where, by a city charter, the mayor was allowed a casting vote in the council, in accordance with a statute, it was held that his act was sufficiently formal for that purpose, where he determined and declared which of two candidates was elected, although he did not go through the formality of casting a ballot. Small v. Orne, 79 Me. 78, 8 Atl. 152. Compare, however, Lawrence v. Ingersoll, 88 Tenn. 52, 12 S. W. 422, 17 Am. St. Rep. 870, 6 L. R. A. 308, holding that where, at a meeting of the mayor and aldermen of a city, complainant received four votes for a certain office, and three votes were scattering and one was blank, the action of the mayor in declaring complainant elected was not equivalent to a vote for him.

Ohio.—State v. Green, 37 Ohio St. 227, holding that where all the members of a city

It has been held, however, that those voting blank ballots are to be counted as present and not concurring.⁴⁰ The majority rules, and when that has been ascertained in a lawful method the result cannot be defeated by the arbitrary ruling of the presiding officer.⁴¹ After a valid election by ballot no resolution declaring the party elected is necessary, nor after announcement of the result of the vote can the lawful result be defeated by a resolution declaring a different result.⁴²

g. Reconsideration and Rescission. Ordinary measures before a municipal body are subject to reconsideration under parliamentary rules, unless forbidden by special regulation.⁴³ And it seems that before any action has been taken by council are present and engaged in holding an election, members cannot, by refusing to vote when their names are called, defeat the election or divest the body of the power to elect; and that in such case the legal effect of refusing to vote is an acquiescence in the choice of those who do vote, even though those refusing to vote object to the mode of voting, and on the ground that no quorum voted.

England.—Oldknow v. Wainwright, 2 Burr. 1017.

Statements of rule.—"After an election has been properly proposed whoever has a majority of those who vote, the assembly being sufficient, is elected, although a majority of the entire assembly altogether abstain from voting because their presence suffices to constitute the elective body; and if they neglect to vote it is their own fault, and shall not invalidate the action of the others; and such election is valid, although the majority of those whose presence is necessary to the assembly protest against any election at the time, or even the election of the individual who has the majority of votes." Willcock Mun. Corp. § 546. "Those who are present, and who help to make up the quorum, are expected to vote on every question, and their presence alone, is enough to make the vote decisive and binding, whether they actually vote or not. The objects of legislation cannot be defeated by the refusal of any one to vote when present. If eighteen are present, and nine vote, all in the affirmative, the measure is carried, the refusal of the other nine to vote being construed as a vote in the affirmative so far as any construction is necessary." Horr & B. Mun. Pol. Ord. § 43.

Contrary rule under special provisions.—This rule may of course be changed by special provisions. See Collopy v. Cloherty, 39 S. W. 431, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 1061, holding that under a city charter providing that a majority of the board of councilmen should constitute a quorum, and a rule of the council that a majority of the quorum elected and voting should be necessary to choose an officer elected by the board, a quorum of the members elected must vote, and a majority of that quorum could elect when such quorum was voting.

Limitation of rule to cases of elections.—It seems that in England this rule is limited to cases of elections and does not extend to the transaction of other corporate business, and that in the latter case a majority of those present must vote for a proposition to carry it. Gosling v. Veloy, 1 C. L. R. 950, 4 H. L. Cas. 679, 17 Jur. 939, 10 Eng. Reprint 627. In the United States, however, the rule seems to be otherwise. Launtz v. People, 113 Ill. 137, 55 Am. Rep. 405 (holding that the rule applied to the approval of an officer's bond); Rushville Gas Co. v. Rushville, 121 Ind. 206, 23 N. E. 72, 16 Am. St. Rep. 388, 6 L. R. A. 315 (applying the rule to a resolution for the purchase of an electric light plant under statutory authority).

Illegible ballots.—Where, at an election for an office by a joint convention of a city council, one ballot was so illegibly written that it could not be read, it was held proper to count the same as a scattering vote. Keough v. Holyoke, 156 Mass. 403, 31 N. E. 387. And where the mayor decided that one ballot was illegible, the result of which decision was that no candidate received a majority, and the convention, without objecting to the mayor's decision, proceeded to a second ballot, at which all the members voted, and at which one of the candidates received a majority, such candidate was held legally elected, since the mayor's decision as to the illegible ballot, when thus acquiesced in by the convention, was conclusive. *Keough v. the other party under a contractual measure the body may rescind its action thereon.⁴⁴ But after a contract has been closed and performance begun, no matter how slightly, a vote of rescission is vain and futile; it amounts only to a breach or renunciation of the contract.⁴⁵ Nor can a reconsideration be effected after a conclusion has been reached by a final vote.⁴⁶ Thus after a veto has been sustained or overruled by vote of the council its power is exhausted and the matter is concluded, and further action thereon is void.⁴⁷ So, under a charter provision for the appointment of a city officer by the mayor, with the consent of the common council, who shall hold the office for two years, the confirmation by the council of the mayor's appointment of such officer exhausts its power in the matter, and therefore it cannot reconsider its action therein.⁴⁸ And where a city council is the sole judge of the election and qualifications of its members, it cannot, after having seated a member on investigation, at a subsequent meeting order a second investigation.⁴⁹ The same effect is produced by an adjournment or rescission is lawful, as large a vote is required therefor as for the original action.⁵¹ Where a council passes an ultra vires and void ordinance or resolution, reconsideration and rescission thereof is not necessary to the validity of a new and valid ordinance or resolution on the subject.⁵² any action deprive their presiding officers of charter authority to appoint committees.⁵⁵ And it seems that they cannot appoint a committee to investigate charges of corruption against one of their number, although they have power to expel.⁵⁶

b. Authority. In the absence of provision to the contrary, a majority of a committee to whom a matter is referred constitute a quorum and are competent to act.⁵⁷ When composed of only two members, both must act together.⁵⁸ A committee whose report on a proposed measure is essential to the action of the council has the right to the possession of documents laid before its predecessor touching the same matters.⁵⁹ A governing body may confer its power of examination and inquisition upon a committee and authorize it to require the attendance of witnesses and the production of documents,⁶⁰ and the refusal to appear or produce books or papers or to answer pertinent questions within the scope of the inquiry delegated to the committee will constitute a contempt for which the delinquent may be punished under charter or statutory provision therefor.⁶¹ The rep-

Propriety of questions.—A witness before an investigating or other committee of a city council cannot be compelled by process for contempt to answer an irrelevant question. Simon's Case, 16 Pa. Co. Ct. 353. Under a statute (N. Y. Act, 1855) which authorizes an attachment against a witness subpoenaed before a committee of the common council and refusing to "answer any proper question," those only are proper questions which are pertinent to the investigation and connected with the subject referred, and which relate to matters about which it is within the power of the common council to inquire. Van Tine v. Nims, 3 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 39, 12 How. Pr. 507. A special committee of the common council of a city, appointed to investigate the action of a committee on streets, who had under consideration the widening and improving of a certain street, have no power to inquire of a witness before it in reference to his own acts with individuals other than the committee whose action is being investigated. Van Tine v. Nims, supra. A resolution of a city council, appointing a committee to look after all bills from the various departments of the city government, and to send for papers, and to employ counsel and experts, does not authorize it to ask a witness summoned before it whether he has seen any gambling in the city or any places where liquor was sold without a license, and he is therefore not punishable for contempt in refusing to answer such questions. Matter of Cole, 16 Misc. (N. Y.) 134, 38 N. Y. Suppl. 955. A witness is not in contempt for resentation of a committee to a third person touching matters with which it is charged are binding upon the corporation.⁶² But members of a board or committee created by a city to act as its agent in a particular matter cannot bind the city by their actions as individuals.⁶³

c. Irregularities. Irregularity in mode of action by a committee, or unauthorized participation therein by the mayor will not vitiate ultimate action taken by the council on its report.⁶⁴

d. Expenses. The corporation is liable for necessary expenses of a committee,⁶⁵ including the pay of a stenographer employed, under authority from the council, to take testimony.⁶⁶ Each member may maintain his separate action for expenses against the municipality.⁶⁷

6. MINUTES AND RECORDS⁶⁸—a. In General. The minute books and records of a municipal corporation are of a public nature and open to inspection by all citizens of the municipality.⁶⁹ The entries in them show the proceedings of the governing body and are made by the clerk or recorder,⁷⁰ who usually has custody of the books, and must keep them at a public office open to lawful inspection at all proper times.⁷¹ Possession of them may be restored by action of replevin or detinue;⁷² or a mandamus may be obtained to compel their production.⁷³ They are properly authenticated by the signature of the presiding officer attested by the clerk.⁷⁴ They are the best and sometimes the only evidence of the corporate action;⁷⁵ but they do not, after the manner of judicial records, import absolute verity.⁷⁶ The failure of the body, however, to keep proper minutes cannot be made a means of escape from liability for corporate action duly taken;⁷⁷ for such action may be proven dehors the record, and by parol evidence.⁷⁸ Minutes made refusing to answer the questions of an investigating committee of the city council which may tend to incriminate him. Van Tine v. Nims, supra.

An attachment will not be granted against a witness subpoenaed to attend and testify before a committee of the common council, unless it satisfactorily appears to the judge to whom application is made: (1) That the witness refused to obey the subpoena issued by the clerk; (2) that on appearing he refused to be sworn as a witness; (3) or that after being sworn he refused to answer some question, which, in the opinion of the judge, was a question proper to be put. Therefore, where the witness attended pursuant to the subpoena, and submitted to be sworn, and then stated that he declined generally to answer any questions, and none were put to him by the committee, an attachment was refused. *Briggs v. b. Requisites and Sufficiency. It is a fundamental requisite of municipal minutes that they shall be kept in such form as to be legible and intelligible to others than the scribe,⁸⁰ and that they shall by fair and natural construction have reasonable certainty of meaning.⁸¹ But if defective or ambiguous they may be supplemented or explained.⁸² What matters shall be recorded is often provided by statute and such provision, if mandatory, makes omissions fatal;⁸³ but if it is directory only, omissions will not invalidate the record.⁸⁴ Under these general rules municipal minutes of the following form have been held sufficient compliance with the requirement that ayes and nays shall be called and recorded: "Upon the ballot being spread for its approval and adoption, the votes stood as follows: (six members naming them) aye; noes none."⁸⁵ So also minutes showing what members were present and that the vote was unanimous.⁸⁶ A fortiori where the law does not require ayes and nays to be recorded.⁸⁷ Even a requirement to this effect has been held to be directory only.⁸⁸ It seems that "adopted" is a sufficient minute to show favorable action by the council upon the report of a committee.⁸⁹ A requirement of the record of ayes and nays in a general statute does not apply to cities having special charters,⁹⁰ or to motions to adjourn in any municipal council.⁹¹ The following minutes have been held insufficient compliance with the yeas and nays requirement: "New ordinances Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 10 were adopted and passed by the board;"⁹² "adopted unanimously on call;"⁹³ and "all voting aye."⁹⁴ It seems indispensable in some states that in some form the names of those voting for the measure shall appear of record.⁹⁵ Action required to be taken at a stated meeting is not established by a record of an "adjourned meeting";⁹⁶ and the adoption of a resolution is not proven by minutes showing merely that it was introduced and read, that a motion was made that the vote upon it be by ballot, and that this motion was put and carried.⁹⁷

c. Presumptions and Effect. Defective minutes of municipal proceedings in councils or boards are often materially aided by judicial presumptions in favor of the regularity and legality of the conduct of sworn officials of the corporation; indeed the inclination of the courts seems general to apply the maxim ut res valeat quam pereat.⁹⁸ Where it was shown that the records of a city council had been destroyed or lost, it was presumed that an order of the council allowing the salary of a certain officer was made pursuant to a previous order conferring authority to make the allowance.⁹⁹ But it was held that a recital in the minutes

The same presumptions obtain that a city ordinance was legally passed as in the case of an act of the legislature; and hence, where the record fails to show that the necessary formalities were omitted, it will be presumed that they were all complied with. Duluth v. Krupp, 46 Minn. 435, 49 N. W. 235.

Illustrations.—Thus where a motion to dispense with the second and third readings of an ordinance was adopted at a town council at a meeting at which six out of seven members were present, but the record failed to show the vote on such motion, and the ordinance was passed by a vote of five members, it was held that it would be presumed that the motion received the vote of three fourths of the council as required by statute. State v. Vail, 53 Iowa 550, 5 N. W. 709. Where the council record recites that the rule requiring an ordinance to be read three times was suspended, without showing the number of votes on the proposition, it will be conclusively presumed in a collateral action that it is correct. Eldora v. Burlingame, 62 Iowa 32, 17 N. W. 148. Under a statute providing that "all ordinances of the city shall be read and considered by sections at a public meeting of the council, and the vote on their final passage shall be taken by yeas and nays, which shall be entered on the journal by the clerk," where the journal shows the full vote adopting the ordinance as a whole on its final passage, it will be presumed that it was read and adopted by sections. Downing v. Miltonvale, 36 Kan. 740, 14 Pac. 281. An ordinance which appears by the records to have been passed may be presumed to have been passed by the full number of votes required by the charter, where such fact does not affirmatively appear on the records. Lexington v. Headley, 5 Bush (Ky.) 508.

of the proceedings of a council that on motion a certain change in licenses was made, and that the mayor was instructed to prepare an ordinance covering such changes, did not show a complete legislative act, and did not change the existing law, although the minutes were kept by the clerk and signed by the mayor, as required by the charter, which also declared that they should have "the force and effect of a record."¹ And a two-thirds majority was not presumed in favor of a resolution from a record showing its adoption.² Nor was a meeting presumed to have been held from proof of an advertised call for it.³ A town cemetery actually laid out and occupied was not limited to an acre, by a recital on its minutes, "the town have one acre at the burial place."⁴ The approval of minutes of a special meeting at a following regular meeting cannot have the effect of a ratification of the action taken.⁵

d. Approval and Amendment. It is the right and duty of the body to approve and verify its minutes of proceedings, to the end that there may be true record of the corporate actions and proceedings.⁶ The minutes made by the clerk or recorder are therefore subject to correction and amendment by the body at the ensuing meeting, so as to show the proceedings actually taken by the body.⁷ But after they have been duly approved and verified by the signatures of the presiding officer and clerk, they are not subject to change by the clerk;⁸ and where a city charter required the city clerk to keep a record of the proceedings of the council, and the clerk made a record of certain proceedings at a meeting of the council, which the council, at a subsequent meeting, attempted to amend by a vote, it was held that an amendment could be made only by the clerk or by order of the court upon a mandamus, and that the attempted amendment was of no effect.⁹ But a nunc pro tunc entry may be made on minutes of a succeeding meeting.¹⁰ And it has even been held that the clerk of a municipal corporation may amend its records according to his own knowledge of the truth, so long as he has the custody of them.¹¹

As to voting.—Where the minutes of the meeting at which an ordinance was passed gave the names of the councilmen present

7. DECISIONS AND REVIEW.¹² Decisions made by a governing body in the exercise of its legislative functions, or of discretionary powers conferred by charter or general law, are in their nature conclusive and not subject to review by the courts except in cases specially provided for by law.¹³ But the courts will exercise judicial supervision over the actions, decisions, and proceedings of municipal bodies where they are in palpable violation of law, and will restrain their execution by appropriate process.¹⁴ Thus a general order of the council to investigate newspaper charges of corruption in appointments and promotions on the police force, and assuring impunity to witnesses confessing crime, was enjoined as ultra vires and unauthorized.¹⁵ So of an ultra vires ordinance requiring a railroad company to provide and maintain at its own expense lights at crossings,¹⁶ and an ordinance passed in violation of a rule of order of the body.¹⁷ The same process was also used to prevent a burgess from usurping the office of president of the council;¹⁸ but it was refused against a disqualified alderman to prevent his voting in council, because quo warranto was the proper remedy,¹⁹ and also in cases of irregular proceedings, which had been cured by subsequent legislative action.²⁰

Provision for appeal.—R. I. Pub. St. c. 38, § 35, providing that any person aggrieved by the judgment or decree of a town council may appeal within forty days after the entry of such judgment or decree, and not thereafter, amounts simply to a general limitation of the time within which an appeal may be taken from the appealable doings of a town council, and does not of itself confer any right of appeal. *Walsh v. corporation.² In modern municipal parlance, ordinance and by-law are convertible terms, meaning the local law of the municipality.³ "By-law" is the general term applicable to the self-adopted rules of all classes of corporations; "ordinance" is used to describe the self-governing rule of a municipality.⁴ It is not so comprehensive as "regulation" and is more solemn and formal than "resolution."⁵ "Ordinance" is a continuing regulation, while "resolution," although sometimes held to enact a law,⁶ is usually declared not to be the equivalent of an ordinance, but rather an act of a temporary character, not prescribing a permanent rule of government.⁷ Authority granted to a city council to prescribe regulations by ordinance does not empower it to regulate the subject by mere resolution; and a resolution adopted for that purpose is null and void.⁸ A resolution is the appropriate form of corporate action for the removal of an officer, the acceptance of a dedication, the levying of a tax for a specific purpose, the purchase of corporate property, the making of corporate contracts, and the ratification of acts of agents. It is employed to express a view or opinion, a purpose or intention, and sometimes to formulate the proposition or acceptance of a contract by the body.⁹

2. ORIGIN. A by-law or bye-law, is a law of the by or bye, a word of Norse derivation signifying town or place, brought into England by the Angles or Danes, and is peculiarly appropriate to municipal phraseology,¹⁰ although now used more commonly, and in the United States, almost exclusively, to describe the subordinate regulations of private corporations, companies, and societies.¹¹ In Great Britain and Canada, however, it is still the common word employed in reference to that kind of ordinances which every corporation has an incidental power of making for the regulation of their municipal affairs.¹² From time immemorial the municipal corporations of England have exercised this power, not only when expressly granted in the charter, but as an inherent right necessarily pertaining to all corporations for their proper self-government.¹³ "Ordinance" from long usage in ecclesiastical law suggests sanctity or importance.¹⁴ It was formerly used to include, besides by-laws, all local laws of the corporation, whether customary, statutory, or charter regulations.¹⁵ But later usage confines it to such laws as are enacted by the corporation.¹⁶

3. AUTHORITY.¹⁷ The authority of a municipal corporation to exercise the legislative function of government seems to have gone unquestioned in England for centuries; an early case¹⁸ having necessarily included that power in its quaint definition of such a body: The investing of the people of a place with the local government thereof.¹⁹ Not so, however, in America, for there is scarcely a state in which the authority of a municipal corporation to exercise the governmental function of legislation has not been challenged; and the familiar maxim of agency in the Roman law, "Delegata potestas non potest delegare,"²⁰ has been made to do valiant service in argument to support our democratic constitutions.²¹ This contention has received scant favor in our courts, and the power of a community, duly invested with the function of local self-government, to enact municipal by-laws or ordinances has been irrevocably established by repeated and concurring decisions throughout the United States.²²

4. NATURE AND REQUISITES — a. Nature. Municipal ordinances being established by the exercise of a delegated function of legislation, for a limited locality and particular purposes, subordinate to the general government of the state, are obviously subject to many restrictions and limitations, which confine them to a comparatively narrow field.²³ A community, although incorporated and invested with the power of local self-government, is none the less an integral part of the state, and its inhabitants are subject to the same general laws as the rural population, and their ordinances cannot regulate civil rights and liabilities.²⁴ As such inhabitants cannot be deprived of their personal or property rights except by due process of law,²⁵ so neither can they, in the exercise of municipal functions, renounce their allegiance or repudiate their civic obligations.²⁶ They are incorporated for public purposes only, and may not pervert public powers to private purposes.²⁷ The common weal of the community is the pole star of its organiza-

21. A common formula whereby the people confer legislative power upon the department of government, intrusted with that function, is substantially that found in the federal constitution: "All legislative Powers . . . shall be vested in a Congress of the United States." U. S. Const. art. 1, § 1. For further illustrations see the following constitutional provisions: Miss. (1868) art. 4, § 1; Mo. (1875) art. 4, § 1; Nebr. (1866) art. 2, § 1; N. H. Power of legislature to delegate its functions to subordinate body.—Treating this delegation of legislative power by the people of the states to the legislative department as absolute and final, the power of that department to delegate any portion of its legislative function to any subordinate body has been repeatedly and strenuously challenged in the courts of nearly every state of the American Union in cases involving the power of municipalities to enforce ordinances of their own enactment. But the courts have consistently and uniformly responded that logic is not law; and the common-law power of municipal corporations to legislate in matters of local self-government has been uniformly sustained as peculiarly consistent with the democratic doctrine of home rule. tion and to it the corporate course must always be directed, and all municipal legislation must subserve that end.²⁸ All ordinances must be enacted in respect of the sovereign powers of the state, which cannot tolerate departure from its public policy or defiance of its supreme authority.²⁹ In fine, municipal ordinances are local laws to preserve the peace, order, health, and comfort of the people, and to give the corporation remedy for their violation.³⁰ construction convey a reasonable certainty of meaning.³⁸ (9) It must not be unequal, unfair, or discriminating.³⁹

B. Enactment⁴⁰ — 1. IN GENERAL. The common-law power to enact by-laws, inherent in a municipal corporation, belongs to the body at large.⁴¹ If the power is conferred upon the corporation by charter, the modern doctrine is that the power belongs to the council, unless some other body is specially designated therefor.⁴² An ordinance or by-law enacted by any other than the authorized body is null and void.⁴³ Ordinances imposing extraordinary pecuniary obligations upon municipalities are now commonly required to be enacted or specially authorized by popular vote of the citizens.⁴⁴ Lacking this, the enactment of an ordinance by the council is vain and futile, and bonds issued thereunder are void.⁴⁵ A de facto board or council may enact a valid ordinance.⁴⁶ And, since the council is a continuing body, an ordinance, requiring three readings and votes, may be passed by a single reading and vote of a new council, provided its predecessor had given it the two previous readings and votes required.⁴⁷ The minutes of the council must show with reasonable certainty a compliance with the statutory requirements for enacting an ordinance or by-law.⁴⁸

2. PARLIAMENTARY LAW. Municipal governing bodies usually adopt or recognize parliamentary law as their rules of order and proceeding.⁴⁹ Yet the courts, unless positively required by express statutory provision, will not annul or invalidate an ordinance enacted in disregard of parliamentary rule, provided the enactment is made in the manner required by statute.⁵⁰

3. FORMAL REQUISITES — a. In General. Non-compliance with merely formal requirements in the manner of enacting an ordinance is generally considered by the courts as no ground for declaring it void.⁵¹ Indeed any form of words signifying clearly the will of the governing body that a by-law exists which the corporation was competent to enact has been held to be sufficient.⁵² But this will not be so held when matters of substance are ignored or disregarded by the body.⁵³ Yet every reasonable intendment of record will be made by the courts

b. Enacting Clause. Defects in the form of the enacting clause have often challenged the attention of the courts with an almost unanimous modern tendency to support the ordinance, "ut magis valeat quam pereat."⁵⁵ In a few cases judgment has gone against an ordinance because the enacting clause was wholly lacking or fatally defective in recitals.⁵⁶ But the very great weight of authority favors the ignoring of formal defects, and the sustaining of by-laws wherever implication and presumption will permit, without violating any recognized rule of law.⁵⁷

c. Reading, Referring, and Time For Passing. It is well settled that when there is no constitutional or statutory provision as to the mode of enactment or conditions precedent thereto, the municipal body may then prescribe its own rules, or pursue its own method.⁵⁸ But what effect is to be given to rules prescribed by the legislature for the conduct of municipal business seems to be an insoluble problem, the cases presenting an interesting array of rulings pro and con that are irreconcilable.⁵⁹

4. SUSPENSION OF RULES. There seems less discord in the rulings where rules of order have been suspended by the council and the ordinance passed speedily or summarily, the courts inclining to uphold all legal suspensions and ordinances passed thereunder, but refusing recognition to emergent action taken in apparent ignorance or defiance of wholesome rules of reading, reference, and time for passing ordinances and by-laws.⁶⁰

5. PASSAGE BY BOTH HOUSES OR BRANCHES. Rules to insure considerate municipal action in case of a bi-cameral governing body usually require a delay of one day after introduction before voting on an ordinance, or forbid passage by both bodies on the same day, although in some cases the rule seems to have required action of both bodies at the same session.⁶¹ The decisions in the cases seem to ignore breach of merely formal requirements;⁶² and to denounce action taken in violation of the spirit of the regulation.⁶³

6. CURING DEFECTIVE ENACTMENTS. The courts do not uphold mere makeshifts of the council with a view to remedy defects in the prescribed mode of enacting an ordinance; and therefore it was held that the substantial defects of want of signature by the presiding officer, and attestation by the clerk, and recordation of a by-law cannot be cured by subsequent motion adopted by the body to validate the by-law notwithstanding the defects.⁶⁴ Nor will a subsequent approval of minutes by a full meeting operate to ratify the void enactment of an ordinance by a minority.⁶⁵ But it seems that actual ratification of each defective action by a valid meeting will cure the defect resulting from passage by less than a quorum.⁶⁶

2. AS TO PENALTY OR LICENSE-FEE. Some American rulings, especially in the early cases, denounce as void a police by-law which instead of fixing a sum certain as penalty gives discretion to the magistrate to vary the penalty within prescribed limits.⁶⁸ The prevailing modern doctrine, however, is that an ordinance or by-law is not rendered void by the magisterial discretion conferred by it to vary the fine, within express limits, according to the enormity of the offense.⁶⁹ But a police ordinance providing no penalty for its violation is void,⁷⁰ and so likewise are all amendments thereto.⁷¹ The penalty, however, may well be prescribed in another section than the one declaring the offense.⁷²

D. Approval or Veto⁷³—1. IN GENERAL. Acts of legislation, whether of state or corporation, are not valid unless they receive the concurrent approbation of all the elements constituting the legislative department of government.⁷⁴ Whenever therefore the charter of a municipal corporation makes the mayor a constituent element of its legislature, either directly or indirectly, by positive expression or necessary implication, his approval is essential to the validity of

Reason for rule.—This view was derived doubtless from the common law that the form of action for recovery of such penalty was debt. Meaher v. Chattanooga, 1 Head (Tenn.) 74. Where the charter authorizes the municipality to enforce its ordinances by penalties, not exceeding a certain amount, to be recovered by "an action of debt," it has been held that the council must prescribe a precise penalty for each offense, for the reason that the action of debt can only be maintained for a sum capable of being ascertained at the time the action is brought. State v. Zeigler, 32 N. J. L. 262. In New Jersey the distinction is made between ordinances imposing penalties which must be recovered by action of debt and those not so recoverable, the former being bad within the rule, and the latter being upheld as valid. See the New Jersey cases cited supra, this note.

Option between fine or imprisonment.—A town ordinance requiring the removal of all signs projecting or suspended over the sidewalks, and providing that any person violating such ordinance "shall, upon conviction before the Mayor, be fined fifty dollars, or imprisoned thirty days," is not void for uncertainty, because it gives the mayor the discretion to impose the penalty of either fine or imprisonment. State v. Higgs, 126 N. C. 1014, 35 S. E. 473, 48 L. R. A. 446. See State v. Clinton, 53 N. J. L. 329, 21 Atl. 304, holding that where a municipal charter authorizes the common council to prescribe a penalty for violation of its ordinances, to be recovered by action of debt, the ordinance must fix the precise penalty.

any ordinance enacted by the council.⁷⁵ And this approval must be active, direct, and formal, showing his positive official concurrence in the measure.⁷⁶ It may not be presumed or inferred from other kindred acts, or from silence, except in the manner, under the conditions, and to the extent expressed in the charter or the general law.⁷⁷ If he does not approve he may veto, which is a formal non-concurrence in the measure, with his reasons therefor, which the council may generally overrule by a two-thirds or three-fourths vote.⁷⁸ This important legislative function does not reside in the mayor as a part of the council or its presiding officer; but only when it is manifest from the charter that he is a distinct factor of the legislative department, like the federal president or a state governor.⁷⁹ This power is generally confined to purely legislative acts and does not apply to elections or mere matters of an administrative character.⁸⁰ But to determine its exact scope and limitation, particular regard must be had to the charter of the municipality.⁸¹

2. NECESSITY FOR APPROVAL.⁸² Whatever acts are required by law to have the executive approval are invalid unless they receive it.⁸³ And while generally only acts of the council which are of a legislative character are supposed to require approval, yet the language of the charter or the general law may be such as to include other than legislative acts. Thus, it has been decided that a charter requirement that every ordinance or resolution of the common council shall be approved by the mayor, or returned with his objections, extends to all acts of the council, legislative or otherwise.⁸⁴ So likewise where the language is "every legislative act of the common council shall be by resolution or ordinance, and every ordinance or resolution shall, before it shall take effect, be presented, duly certified, to the mayor for his approval."⁸⁵ And where the charter provided that the council might make "by-laws, ordinances, resolutions, and regulations," and the mayor's approval was required only of "by-laws and ordinances" it was held that "resolutions and regulations" must also be approved by the mayor.⁸⁶ And generally the character of a measure passed by the council is to be determined, not by its name or form, but by its nature and effect; and thus resolutions are classed as ordinances, and motions as resolutions requiring the executive approval.⁸⁷ But it seems that where separate functions are devolved upon the board of aldermen, distinct from those vested in the "mayor and aldermen," the approval of the mayor is not required to acts passed or done in this exceptional character.⁸⁸ And the necessity for approval cannot be obviated by the termination of the council's term or session before the expiration of the period allowed the mayor for action.⁸⁹

3. NECESSITY FOR SIGNING. Laws and charters providing that the mayor shall sign ordinances and resolutions are of such variant tenor or have received such different construction that they can scarcely be reconciled or harmonized.⁹⁰ In some cases where signing seems to be treated as the equivalent of approval, the rules stated in the preceding section are followed.⁹¹ In others, where the signing seems to be for the purpose of verification rather than approval, the provisions are held to be directory rather than mandatory, and lack of signature does not vitiate the measure,⁹² although in some jurisdictions lack of signature invalidates a by-law.⁹³ In some cases, where the ordinance has been copied at length into the minutes, signature of the minutes has been considered a compliance with the requirement and the ordinance has been thus sustained.⁹⁴

4. REQUISITES AND SUFFICIENCY. The general rules with regard to approval or veto of municipal ordinances seem to be that the ordinance after adoption by the council shall be duly presented to the mayor for his official action thereon;⁹⁵ that if he approves he shall plainly indorse his approval in writing over his official signature;⁹⁶ that if he disapproves he shall set forth in writing over his official signature the reasons for his veto;⁹⁷ that he shall make due return to the clerk or recorder, within the period limited by law, of the ordinance or resolution with his official action thereon;⁹⁸ and that no previous recommendation or suggestion of the mayor, or any words spoken, or signature to any other records or documents can be a substitute for the official approval or veto.⁹⁹

Applications of rule.—Where a resolution was vetoed by the mayor and returned to the council, who altered it to meet one of the objections set out in the veto, and again passed it, the resolution as last passed could not become effective until again submitted to the mayor for his approval, since by the alteration it became a new resolution. Pada-

council is official and personal and cannot be delegated.¹ It must be performed by the mayor, burgess, or reeve in office at the date of the enactment if present in the city.² If the law authorizes the election of a mayor pro tem with full powers, it seems that the function may be performed by him.³ But the council can neither confer nor defeat the lawful power of approval or veto.⁴ And where a city charter provides that if the mayor be disabled or absent, the president of the council may sign ordinances, the latter cannot sign an ordinance during a vacancy in the office of mayor.⁵

6. PASSAGE OVER VETO. Under the authority usually conferred upon the common council to pass an ordinance by sufficient majority notwithstanding a veto, it is necessary to the validity of the ordinance that action shall be taken at the very meeting specified by the charter;⁶ that the required majority shall vote in favor of the ordinance;⁷ and that this shall be shown at the first vote taken, and not upon a second vote after the veto had been sustained.⁸

E. Record and Filing—1. RECORD. The kind of municipal ordinance sometimes called the customary ordinance arising out of and perpetuated by local usage, "time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary," supported and enforced in England as part of the lex non scripta,⁹ has received scant recognition in America where general rules require all ordinances to be reduced to writing before passage and to be preserved and perpetuated by solemn record of the municipality.¹⁰ The form and nature of this record is specified in some of the recent charters.¹¹ In some instances the courts have ruled that the statutory requirement of recordation of by-laws is mandatory, and failure of record evidence of the corporation ordinances is fatal to their validity.¹² In others such statutes have been construed as directory only, and omission to comply with their provisions has been refused any vitiating effect upon ordinances duly and legally enacted.¹³ In some other cases, even where the statute seems mandatory, informal compliance with its provisions has been held sufficient, and liberal presumptions have been made in favor of the validity of ordinances impeached.¹⁴ In some cases authority to enact ordinances has been held to import the function and duty of recordation.¹⁵ Where an ordinance has been recorded as required by law when originally passed, a subsequent revision of ordinances which does not affect it does not make it necessary to record it again.¹⁶

2. FILING. In a case where an ordinance was required to be filed before taking effect, it was ruled that depositing it with the proper officer was sufficient even though he had failed to mark it "filed."¹⁷

F. Publication¹⁸—1. NECESSITY FOR PUBLICATION. The courts of America, hesitating between the common-law doctrine that neither writing nor publication is necessary to the validity of a municipal ordinance, and the intuitive and reasonable aversion of a free people to considering as law anything not generally known or officially formulated and promulgated, have brought the law on publication of ordinances into confusion and discord that seems irreconcilable. In the absence of any statutory requirement, the prevailing doctrine seems to be that publication is not an essential requisite of a valid ordinance, but that it may be enforced before publication or without it;¹⁹ but not without vigorous dissent and protest from courts of repute, especially where the ordinance is penal.²⁰ And even when publication is prescribed it has been held that the statutes are merely directory,²¹ although the weight of authority is that they are mandatory.²² In some instances this difference of holding is attributable to the phraseology of the statutes;²³ while in others the severity of the penalty seems to have influenced the courts.²⁴ In ordinances providing for special assessments the publication is often required to be before their enactment, so that interested persons may be heard in objection to their passage.²⁵ Mere orders of the council to the board of public works to execute existing ordinances are not legislative but administrative in their nature and therefore not within a statutory or charter provision requiring publication of ordinances, resolutions, and by-laws.²⁶

2. REQUISITES AND SUFFICIENCY — a. In General. When the legislature has prescribed the nature and mode of publication, none other is sufficient to give validity to the ordinance,²⁷ although this does not preclude additional publication in other ways at the discretion of the council.²⁸ The publication must show that the matter printed is an ordinance passed by the municipal council.²⁹ But it need not include the provisions of law authorizing it;³⁰ nor maps and books;³¹ nor the original ordinance amended by a published amendatory ordinance.³² Mere verbal inaccuracies do not vitiate the publication;³³ and this may be proven prima facie in the manner in common use in the state for proving legal publication.³⁴

b. Newspaper in Which Published. The publication must be made in a newspaper of the kind prescribed in the statute requiring publication,³⁵ and in a regular edition thereof.³⁶ After an official paper has been designated for the municipality, publication in any other will be invalid.³⁷ While publication in a village newspaper is usually upheld,³⁸ it is equally valid to publish an ordinance in any other paper of general circulation within the municipality.³⁹ Failure to contract in writing, for the publishing, as required by the charter, will not affect the validity of the publication.⁴⁰

c. Language of Publication. Publication must be made in the language of the country, unless otherwise prescribed or permitted by the law.⁴¹ In the United States English is the language to be used, and publication made in another language cannot be charged against the municipality without special statutory authority.⁴²

d. Time and Number of Times. Publication is a matter fixed by law, and its time cannot be prescribed by any merely administrative officer,⁴³ although it may be regulated by ordinance under express charter authority.⁴⁴ Publication made before the introduction or passage of the ordinance avails nothing.⁴⁵ When the requirement is merely that the ordinance shall be published in some newspaper, a single publication in a Sunday edition is sufficient.⁴⁶ An ordinance of the kind requiring publication before the third reading, if amended on third reading, must be again published as amended, before another reading.⁴⁷ If no special time is limited as the period for publication, then it will be sufficient if made within a reasonable time after passage of the ordinance.⁴⁸ Requirement for publication in a newspaper or in a pamphlet is complied with by publishing in either.⁴⁹ Where an ordinance has been published in accordance with the legal requirements, a subsequent revision of ordinances which does not affect it does not make a second publication necessary.⁵⁰ Under special requirements of a peculiar nature, publications made as follows have been ruled to be sufficient: Five successive week days, where the requirement was five successive days, the official journal having no Sunday edition;⁵¹ fourteen consecutive days satisfies, "at least two weeks";⁵² publication once ten days before adoption satisfies "at least as many as ten days" before adoption;⁵³ once a week for two weeks satisfies "at least once a week";⁵⁴ three successive weekly editions satisfies a requirement for twenty days;⁵⁵ and as many times a week as the official journal is issued complies with for "at least one week";⁵⁶ but not a less number.⁵⁷

3. OPERATION AND EFFECT. Publication not only validates that which unpublished is null and void, but, when purporting and appearing to be made under the municipal authority, estops the municipality as against strangers from asserting that the published ordinances were not duly enacted.⁵⁸ A publication of a proposed ordinance not finally passed and approved will not operate as publication of a similar one subsequently enacted.⁵⁹

G. Validity⁶⁰ — 1. INTRODUCTORY STATEMENT. By-laws and ordinances, although duly and lawfully enacted and approved, recorded and published, and conformable to all technical requirements, may yet be null and void, because of fatal defects in substance or in their relation to other laws or to human reason.⁶¹ The general rules now prevalent in England⁶² seem to be that a municipal corporation may make by-laws for the regulation of its internal affairs, of the con-

61. Elliott Mun. Corp. 192. "A by-law must be consonant with the law of the land, and if not so it is void, although the charter contain an express power of making such a by-law. No unreasonable by-law is warranted by a general custom to make by-laws. The rule may be laid down generally, that neither a power conferred by charter, nor a general custom to make by-laws, will give an ordinance any greater claim to validity, than if it had been made under the incidental power in every corporation." Willecock Mun. Corp. § 159.

duet of its members, of the reasonable exercise of a right, or of the mode by which a person, with an inchoate title, may be admitted to membership.⁶³ But a by-law cannot be made to take away an existing right, or impose any unreasonable restraint in the exercise thereof.⁶⁴ And it is a general rule that any by-law that is unreasonable, unjust, or uncertain is bad.⁶⁵ The spirit of these rules pervades American jurisprudence; and English cases of the last century are generally speaking of more interest to the American lawyer than those antedating our independence.⁶⁶ The body of American law upon the validity of municipal ordinances is of great and rapidly increasing volume, and because of the growth of urban population, and the enlarged sphere of municipal action in recent times, is coming to be of first importance in our jurisprudence.⁶⁷ The challenge of validity is heard in every court; their authority being invoked to hear and determine contentions over the legal effect of a municipal by-law.⁶⁸ The grounds of chal-

sion to the corporation, and concerning the government of the place, frequently arose in England, the opinions in which make a voluminous body of common law on the subject of by-laws. Willcock Mun. Corp. 108-146. These decisions, although of great interest to the historical student, as illustrating the royal methods in overawing judges to maintain and increase prerogative, to diminish popular power in the municipalities, and to vest the corporate franchises in a select body of complaisant courtiers, are of little practical use since the Municipal Reform Act of 1835 revolutionized the English municipalities and rendered uniform and consistent their constitution and operation. See Municipal Reform Act 1835. This act followed the report of a committee of barristers, which on a tour of the kingdom had personally examined into the condition of nearly two hundred and fifty municipalities. This report showed utter absence of uniformity in municipal government, except that it was uniformly bad. The rights and interests of the people were wholly ignored. Offices were treated not as public trusts, but as private "grafts." The governing bodies were self-perpetuating and kept their own incompetent and worthless favorites in the offices, or dismissed them at will to make place for choicer ones. There was no equitable, uniform, fiscal policy, or reputable judicial system. Magistrates and constables were ignorant, base, and reckless, and juries were appointed from favor, and to render prescribed verdicts. There was no civic conscience, and the corporations were perverted by corruption and oppression to private gain and partisan success. The report started the English people, lords, and crown. Under Brougham's lead, parliament declared there was urgent and imperative need of immediate reform; and addressing its best energies to the subject, formulated and passed the Municipal Corporations Reform Act, establishing uniformity in municipal government, restoring the power to inhabitants, and punishing official misconduct. The barristers' report concluded with the expression of the committee's opinion that the municipal corporations of England and Wales neither possessed nor deserved the respect or confidence of the people. The Reform Act was so appropriate and thorough in its plan and details that it remains to this day the basis of the municipal system not only of the United Kingdom, but also by adoption of the states of the American Union. Ingersoll Pub. Corp. 124 note.

lenge are numerous, as that they are unreasonable, oppressive, partial, and unfair, unconstitutional, inconsistent with public policy, contrary to statute, prohibitory of trade, in contravention of common right, and enacted by an unqualified body or from corrupt motives.⁶⁹ All these objections, with the possible exception of the last one,⁷⁰ are vital in character, and demand due consideration; and first in importance, and in natural order are those based upon constitutional inhibition.⁷¹

2. UNCONSTITUTIONAL ORDINANCES — a. Federal Constitution. The constitution of the United States as the paramount law of the land, nullifying state legislation and even constitutions⁷² in conflict with its inhibitions, must of course receive obedience from municipal bodies of all grades of importance.⁷³ Whatever the state is forbidden to do is of course equally prohibited to its creature, the municipal corporation.⁷⁴ The state may not authorize its agent to perform acts interdicted to itself.⁷⁵ These inhibitions in the federal constitution upon the power of the states are of two kinds, those preserving the national supremacy,⁷⁶ and those protecting individual rights.⁷⁷ By-laws contravening a provision of either class are of course equally invalid.⁷⁸ To the first class belong the following: Ordinances to coin money, emit bills of credit, or make anything a legal tender except gold or silver coin;⁷⁹ ordinances laying imposts or duties upon imports or

The power of municipal corporations to make by-laws is controlled by the constitution of the United States.—The restrictions imposed by this instrument, and which directly limit the legislative power of the state, rest equally upon all the instruments of the government created by the state. If a state cannot pass an ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligations of contracts, neither can any agency do so which acts under the state with delegated authority. By-laws therefore which in their operation would be ex post facto, or violate contracts, are not within the power of municipal corporations; and whatever the people by the state constitution have prohibited the state government from doing, it cannot do indirectly through the local governments. Cooley Const. Lim. 198.

b. State Constitutions. Many of the guarantees of personal and property rights contained in the federal constitution are likewise found in the bills of rights of the state constitutions, thereby affording double protection to the citizen against the use of tyrannical power by a municipality.⁸⁹ Beyond these most of the state constitutions contain other inhibitory provisions which operate to restrain the municipality in the exercise of the legislative power delegated to it by the state.⁹⁰ Ordinances and by-laws therefore made in violation of these constitutional provisions are void.⁹¹ Of this class of void ordinances are those creating monopolies or perpetuities;⁹² those making irrevocable grants of special privileges and

3. ORDINANCES CONTRAVENING STATUTES—a. Charter. A municipal charter in whatever form is a statute of the state, and the organic law of the corporation.⁴ It gives the municipality its power to enact by-laws, just as the federal constitution gives the congress its power of legislation;⁵ and it is too plain for argument

c. Public Policy. It often happens that a municipal ordinance, although not in verbal conflict with the language of any state statute, seems to contravene the public policy of the state as set forth in its general laws; such an ordinance, unless specially authorized by charter, is invalid.¹⁷ The creature must be obedient to the will of the creator.¹⁸ not only annul ordinances and by-laws, because they contravene the higher laws of constitutions and statutes, but they do not hesitate to declare them void and inoperative because they appear to the judicial mind unreasonable or oppressive.²⁰

other words, what the legislature distinctly says may be done cannot be set aside by the courts because they may deem it to be unreasonable or against sound policy. Where the power to legislate upon a given subject is granted, and the mode of its exercise and the details of such legislation are not prescribed, the ordinance passed pursuant thereto must be a reasonable exercise of the power or it will be pronounced invalid.²¹ This the courts will do notwithstanding the unquestionable power of a legislative body to consider and decide upon the reason and justice of any proposed measures of legislation,²² and even where the by-law has been indorsed on referendum.²³ The English judges found abundant warrant for exercising this control over municipal legislation, in the fact that the making of by-laws, being the inherent right of every municipal corporation,²⁴ and unrestrained by the terse royal charter, merely creating the municipality without specifying or limiting its powers,²⁵ was liable to gross abuse in the hands of the royal favorites thus incorporated, and that unless the courts did intervene to protect the rights and liberties of the subjects of the crown, they would be without remedy against the petty tyranny of the municipalities.²⁶ These English precedents the American courts followed as part of the common law,²⁷ apparently ignoring the fundamental difference in royal and legislative charters,²⁸ and the numerous constitutional limitations upon all oppressive and discriminating legislation;²⁹ and although by-laws may not contravene constitution or statute and may be within the scope of charter powers, yet if they seem to the court oppressive, unfair, partial, or discriminating they are declared unreasonable and void,³⁰ whether this appear from their face or from proof aliunde.³¹ Although this often seriously disturbs the self-government of the municipality, it is a power too well established by a long line of concurring decisions to be doubted or challenged.³²

c. Ordinance in Derogation of Common Right. So ordinances in derogation of common right are void and unenforceable.³⁴ Ordinances to the following effect have been declared invalid: One imposing a license-tax for selling lemonade and cake at a temporary stand on the sidewalk;³⁵ one requiring a license-fee of three hundred dollars from an auctioneer;³⁶ two hundred dollars from butchers,³⁷ or twenty-five dollars from a peddler;³⁸ one prohibiting hotel runners from going within twenty feet of a railroad train, although permitted to do so by the railroad company;³⁹ one forbidding the renting of private property to lewd women;⁴⁰ and one preventing a licensed cab-driver from stationing himself on the private property of an innkeeper with the latter's consent.⁴¹ And yet where a right is not protected by constitutional guaranty, and the legislature has conferred police power on a municipality, many courts have followed the lead of the supreme court of South Carolina in an early case on the "common right" of shopkeepers to keep spirits in their shops and secret back rooms, in holding that a previously common right may be taken away by "a legal restraint imposed on a few for the benefit of the many."⁴²

Applications of rule.—Within the rule stated the following ordinances have been held invalid: One requiring certain water consumers to put in expensive meters under penalty of cutting off the water-supply (Red Star Line Steamship Co. v. Jersey City, 45 N. J. L. 246); one requiring a certain individual named to do certain acts in respect to a building, and imposing a penalty for non-compliance (New Orleans First Municipality v. A. 522); one requiring particular individuals by name to construct local improvements in front of their lots (Whyte v. Nashville, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 364); one forbidding the repairing, altering, or rebuilding of any frame building within fire limits, the cost of which should exceed three hundred dollars (Mt. Vernon First Nat Bank v. Sarlls, 129 Ind. 201, 28 N. E. 434, 28 Am. St. Rep. 185, 13 L. R. A. 481); one prohibiting dairies within certain designated limits without the consent of the city council (State v. Mahner, 43 La. Ann. 496, 9 So. 480); one which fixed one rate of license fee for selling goods which are within or in transit to the city, and another, and much larger, rate for goods which are not within or in transit to the city (Ex p. Frank, 52 Cal. 606, 28 Am. Rep. 642); one requiring municipal licenses from non-residents driving interurban carriages or omnibuses into the city (Com. v. Stodder, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 562, 48 Am. Dec. 679); one placing a burden upon some of the members of a municipality while others engaged in similar business are exempt (Simrall v. Covington, 90 Ky. 444, 14 S. W. 369, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 404, 29 Am. St. Rep. 398, 9 L. R. A. 556); one prohibiting any person bringing second-hand clothing into a city or town, or exposing it for sale therein without proof of its non-infection (Kosciusko v. Slomberg, 68 Miss. 469, 9 So. 297, 24 Am. St. Rep. 281, 12 L. R. For other illustrations see infra, XI, A, 8, j.

5. EFFECT OF PARTIAL INVALIDITY⁴³—a. In General. The rule is well settled that municipal ordinances, like statutes, may be valid in some of their provisions and invalid as to others.⁴⁴ Where the portion of an ordinance which is invalid is distinctly separable from the remainder, and the remainder in itself contains the essentials of a complete enactment, the invalid portion may be rejected and the remainder will stand as valid and operative.⁴⁵ Nevertheless the part that is good hibited by law, no one has a right to do. If there was no law interfering, the butcher might kill his heeves and his hogs in the street. If the butcher could do it any man might, and it might, therefore, be said to be a common right; but when the law prohibited it, it was no longer a common right.—Before the Ordinance . . . it was the common right of every citizen to keep spirituous liquors in his retail shop or any where else at his pleasure; but when it was found by experience that this was an easy method of violating the law prohibiting shop keepers from selling spirits to slaves and cab loafers about town; and an Ordinance was passed to prohibit such shop keepers from keeping it in their shops and in secret back rooms adjoining, it was no longer a common right, but a legal restraint imposed on a few for the benefit of the many.” *Charleston v. Restatement of rule.—It is well settled that a municipal ordinance, like a legislative statute, may be good in part and upheld, while part thereof may be adjudged to be illegal and void, provided the void parts thereof are not so connected with or essential to the completeness of the valid parts as that must be clearly distinguished from the part that is bad so that if the invalid portion is eliminated that which stands remains a distinct and complete ordinance capable of being enforced.⁴⁶ Where a municipal ordinance is entire, each part being essential to and connected with the balance, the invalidity of one part renders the whole invalid.⁴⁷

b. Conflicting With Charter or Statute. The general rules stated in the preceding section apply in the case of ordinances, some provision or provisions of which are in contravention of the general statutes of the state or the charter of the municipality.⁴⁸ Thus where a by-law consists of several distinct and independent parts, some of which are void because not authorized by the charter, this does not affect the validity of other independent provisions.⁴⁹ It has accordingly been held that where an ordinance affixes a larger penalty than allowed by charter, it may be enforced to the charter limit;⁵⁰ and that where several acts the latter cannot stand alone or be carried out independently of and without the void provisions, or unless the different parts of the ordinance are so interdependent or blended together that it cannot fairly be said that the legislature would not have adopted the one without the other. Tampa v. Salomonson, 35 Fla. 446, 17 So. 581.

Applications of rule.—If there are several prohibitions in an ordinance, some of which are void and others valid, if a penalty is provided applying to each offense separately, the ordinance may be enforced as to offenses in respect to which it is valid, as if the void parts had been omitted. Poyer v. Des Plaines, 123 Ill. 111, 13 N. E. 819, 5 Am. St. Rep. 494. Where an ordinance of a city grants an exclusive use of its streets for thirty years for laying water-pipes, etc., to supply the city with water, and fixes the compensation the city shall pay for the use of water supplied to it, the ordinance may be void as to the grant of an exclusive use, and as to the indebtedness incurred thereby, it being in excess of the constitutional limit, yet valid as to the right of the grantee to construct the waterworks and lay his mains and pipes in the streets for the purpose of supplying water for private use. Quincy v. Bull, 106 Ill. 337. The provision in a municipal ordinance that, when a judgment for a fine shall be less than ten dollars, a fee of two dollars and fifty cents for the city attorney shall be taxed as costs, is severable from the provisions that he shall receive a percentage on judgments for fines rendered for the benefit of the commonwealth, and the invalidity of the former provision does not affect the validity of the latter. Moody v. Williamsburg, 88 S. W. 1075, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 60.

North Carolina.—State v. Webber, 107 N. C. 962, 12 S. E. 598, 22 Am. St. Rep. 920.

Application of rule.—Where that part of an ordinance requiring a telephone company to relocate its poles is void, the part imposing a penalty on the company if it does not make the relocation is also void. Hannibal v. Missouri, etc., Tel. Co., 31 Mo. App. 23. So an ordinance otherwise valid providing illegal penalties will be wholly inoperative. Omaha v. Harmon, 58 Nebr. 339, 78 N. W. 623.

are forbidden by the same ordinance, part of which are ultra vires, it may be enforced as to all the prohibitions which are intra vires.⁵¹ On the other hand, where the provisions of an ordinance, some of which are valid and some in contravention of the charter or general laws, are inseparably connected with each other, the entire ordinance is void.⁵²

c. Conflicting with Constitution. An unconstitutional provision in an ordinance does not vitiate the whole ordinance, unless the two provisions are so closely connected in object and meaning that the one cannot exist without the other.⁵³ Accordingly by-laws forbidding certain acts within the scope of charter powers, but affixing unconstitutional as well as constitutional penalties, are sustained in all features except the unconstitutional penalty.⁵⁴ And an ordinance is not void in toto because retrospective in part, if in so far as it is prospective it is in no way connected with or dependent on such void part.⁵⁵

d. Unreasonable Ordinances. The fact that a portion of an ordinance is void because unreasonable does not invalidate the whole ordinance, where such portion is distinctly separable from the remainder which in itself contains the essentials of a complete ordinance.⁵⁶

6. INVALIDITY OF DEPENDENT ORDINANCES. From reference to a prior ordinance or treatment of the same subject-matter it often happens that an ordinance becomes dependent upon its predecessor for its operation and effect; in which case, although possessing no inherent defects in itself, it loses validity because of some fatal defect in the previous ordinance: Thus, where an ordinance providing for the opening of a street is void because not registered as required by law, a subsequent ordinance appropriating funds for the cost of opening the street is also invalid.⁵⁷ So also an ordinance forbidding sales of meat elsewhere than at the public market unless authorized by the council was held invalid because the ordinance authorizing private meat-markets was declared void.⁵⁸

7. CONFLICT WITH PRIOR ORDINANCE. Power to enact implies power to repeal

W. 148 (as if the charter authorizes the prohibition of the sale of malt and vinous liquors only and the by-laws forbid the sale of all intoxicating liquors); Bostock v. Sams, 95 Md. 400, 52 Atl. 665, 93 Am. St. Rep. 394 (holding that an ordinance extending the fire limits in a city which forbids the creation of any wooden structures within such limits, or any building inferior in character to those already standing therein, although void as to the last clause, may be enforced as to the first).

52. New Orleans Second Municipality v. Morgan, 1 La. Ann. 111; Ramsey v. Field, 115 Mo. App. 620, 92 S. W. 350 (holding that under Kansas City Charter, art. 9, p. 137, authorizing the city council to construct sidewalks of such dimensions and under such regulations as may be provided by ordinance, where an ordinance for the construction of a sidewalk contains no provision for the width or location of the walk, except that embraced in an invalid section, the rejection of the invalid section leaves no authority for the construction of the walk, and renders the ordinance and tax bills issued thereunder unenforceable); Landis v. 56. Lamar v. Weidman, 57 Mo. App. 507; Rahway Gaslight Co. v. Rahway, 58 N. J. L. 510, 34 Atl. 3.

Applications of rule.—An ordinance applying the same rule as to moving trains or cars on all streets alike was enforced on all except two, where it would be unreasonable to enforce it (Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Jersey City, 47 N. J. L. 286), and an ordinance forbidding the keeping of a dram-shop without license, and affixing a penalty therefor to every sale, was enforced as to a single penalty only, and refused enforcement as to the other sales because the penalty would be unreasonable and excessive (Eureka Springs v. O'Neal, 56 Ark. 350, 19 S. W. 969).

an ordinance; and unless prohibited by constitution, charter, or statute, a municipal council may repeal by implication.⁵⁹ But under a charter prohibiting repeal by implication, any special or general ordinance, in conflict with a prior general ordinance, unrepealed by express provision to that effect, is void and inoperative.⁶⁰

8. MOTIVES FOR ENACTING ORDINANCE. It is a settled rule of conduct prescribed by the courts for their own government that they will not inquire into the motives of members of the legislature in enacting laws.⁶¹ And by analogy to this rule it is very generally held that the courts cannot inquire into the motives of members of a municipal council for the purpose of determining the validity of ordinances enacted by them.⁶² And this rule has been repeatedly applied in cases, wherein allegations of fraud and corruption were made and proof offered to show that an ordinance or by-law had been enacted by a council whose members had been bribed or were influenced by other corrupt motives.⁶³ And yet in some cases

Applications of rule.—An ordinance prohibiting the sale of spirituous liquors under a penalty is repealed by a subsequent ordinance prohibiting their sale without a license. Barton v. Gadsden, 79 Ala. 495. A subsequent ordinance revising the whole subject of selling or delivering any spirituous liquors will be held to be a substitute for all prior regulations on the same subject, although words of repeal are not used. Booth v. Carthage, 67 Ill. 102.

Rule governing statutes applied to ordinances.—The general rule governing the construction of statutes, that the later statute clearly intended to prescribe the only rule which shall govern the case provided for should be construed to repeal the earlier, has been applied to ordinances. *Roche v. "Although the circumstances surrounding and accompanying the passage of the order may be given in evidence, it does not by any means follow that the motives, reasons and considerations which operated upon the minds of the members of the council to induce them to vote for an order which partakes so much of the character of legislation, are competent or proper." Paine v. Boston, 124 Mass. 486, 490.

proof has been admitted to establish corrupt motives, and ordinances have been nullified by the courts, when this charge was established.⁶⁴ Much safer and wiser, however, appears the rule declared by the supreme court of the United States, which refuses to consider legislative motives "except as they may be disclosed on the face of the acts, or inferrible from their operation and effect."⁶⁵ To the general rule, however, there is a well-recognized exception in the case of ordinances, by-laws, or resolutions of a contractual character.⁶⁶ Such proceeding, of whatever form, being the municipal expression of assent to a contract is not legislative, but ministerial or administrative, and must in the very nature of the case be subject to judicial investigation in the same manner and for the same purpose as the contracts of private corporations;⁶⁷ and when proven to be procured by fraud, such contracts will be annulled or rescinded just as those of natural persons.⁶⁸

9. DISQUALIFICATION OF MEMBERS OF BOARD OR COUNCIL. There are some cases holding an ordinance or by-law void because the enacting council was not lawfully constituted de jure, or some of its members were disqualified to act.⁶⁹ But the great weight of authority opposes this view and maintains the general doctrine that the acts of a de facto officer are valid, and ordinances are not invalidated by the fact that some of the members or even all are not de jure members, provided it is a de facto council.⁷⁰

10. VALIDATING VOID ORDINANCE. A void municipal ordinance may be validated (1) by act of the general assembly, or (2) by act of the common council. Legislative control over municipal corporations, mere creatures of law, comprehends all matters of local legislation not under constitutional interdiction.⁷¹ The general assembly, having conferred upon the municipality all legislative power

65. "The rule is general with reference to the enactments of all legislative bodies that the courts cannot inquire into the motives of the legislators in passing them, except as they may be disclosed on the face of the acts, or inferrible from their operation, considered with reference to the condition of the country and existing legislation. The motives of the legislators, considered as the purposes they had in view, will always be presumed to be to accomplish that which follows as the natural and reasonable effect of their enactments. Their motives, considered as the moral inducements for their votes, will vary with the different members of the legislative body. The diverse character of such motives, and the impossibility of penetrating into the hearts of men and ascertaining the truth, precludes all such inquiries as impracticable and futile." *Soon Hing v. possessed by it, may of course aid in the defective execution of the power; and if the legislature might originally have conferred the power to pass an ordinance, it may legally ratify such an ordinance after its passage.⁷² It is important, however, that the legislative intent to cure the particular defect, or confer the necessary retroactive power, shall be manifest;⁷³ it cannot be inferred from general and comprehensive provisions evidencing no such intent.⁷⁴ So also to render subsequent proceedings of a common council evidence of the ratification of an invalid ordinance, it must appear that such proceedings were had with full knowledge of the invalidity of the ordinance, and with manifest intention to cure it thereby.⁷⁵ And the curative act must be passed in the manner essential to the valid enactment of the original.⁷⁶ If an ordinance enacted by a municipality is beyond its powers, no subsequent action in relation thereto can give it validity.⁷⁷

11. PROCEEDINGS TO DETERMINE VALIDITY. Divers modes of challenging the validity of municipal ordinances and by-laws prevail in different jurisdictions: In Canada the primary method is, by statute, to move the superior court, on due notice, to quash the by-law.⁷⁸ In Kentucky there is a statute providing that the validity or constitutionality of an ordinance shall be tried by writ of prohibition,⁷⁹ or by injunction;⁸⁰ and in Missouri also it has been held that the validity of an ordinance may be determined in a proceeding to enjoin its enforcement.⁸¹ In New Jersey recourse is had to the common-law writ of certiorari.⁸² In other states resort has been had to quo warranto, and even habeas corpus.⁸³ And in general the law permits a defendant in an action by the municipality to challenge the validity of the ordinance because unconstitutional, unlawful, ultra vires, or unreasonable.⁸⁴

Louisiana.—Conery v. New Orleans Water-

H. Subjects and Title⁸⁵ — 1. PLURALITY OF SUBJECTS IN TITLE AND BODY OF ORDINANCE — a. Effect of Constitutional Provisions. The provision commonly found in the legislative article of recent state constitutions that no bill shall be passed containing more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in the title, has been consistently construed by the courts to have no application to municipal ordinances and by-laws.⁸⁶ Unless therefore there is some charter or statutory provision requiring it, no title need precede an ordinance;⁸⁷ or if a title is superscribed, an error in it will not vitiate the ordinance;⁸⁸ nor will duplicity in the body of the ordinance invalidate it.⁸⁹

b. Effect of Provisions in Statute or Charter — (i) IN GENERAL. It is of course competent for the legislature to prescribe to municipalities the method and mode by which they shall exercise their legislative functions; and the violation of mandatory legislative requirements will render the ordinance null and void.⁹⁰ Such charter provision may obviously be repealed or suspended by the legislature.⁹¹

(ii) PLURALITY OF SUBJECTS IN BODY OF ORDINANCE. Many statutes and charters forbid the passage of an ordinance embracing more than one subject; and they are generally held to be mandatory.⁹² Ordinances have been held invalid under such laws, which extend the city limits and appropriate funds to build a bridge,⁹³ grant a franchise to an electric light and power company to use the streets and alleys of a city, and make a contract for municipal lighting;⁹⁴ grant a license to a water company to lay its pipes and mains, and also provide for annual rental for hydrants, for an annual levy to pay the same, and for the purchase of the waterworks;⁹⁵ provide for letting franchises to supply the city with light, heat, and power by means of gas alone, or of gas and hot water, or of gas, hot water, and steam;⁹⁶ and prohibit animals from running at large, forbid any one to keep a dog without paying a tax, direct the marshal to kill unlicensed dogs, and make the owner liable to criminal prosecution for keeping dogs without license.⁹⁷ But under such statutes and charters of inhibition ordinances and by-laws have been held valid in the following cases, as not containing more than one subject: An ordinance defining and prescribing the punishment for twenty-six different offenses;⁹⁸ one licensing and regulating various trades and occupations, among which were auctioneers, second-hand dealers, bill-posters, hotel-runners, pawnbrokers, and persons engaged in the temporary sale of goods;⁹⁹ one incurring bonded indebtedness for ten distinct species of municipal improvements;¹ one vacating an alley and granting the land formerly occupied by it;² one granting a franchise for electric light and power, and a privilege to conduct water from an artesian well to the light and power plant;³ one providing for both grading and paving an alley;⁴ a license-tax for both regulation and revenue;⁵ and "an ordinance to prevent the operation of poolrooms," punishing the operator and his employees, the owner or agent knowingly leasing it for the purpose, the company transmitting messages to or from it, and the person buying or having possession of its tickets.⁶

(iii) PLURALITY OF SUBJECTS IN TITLE. Many statutes and charters provide that no ordinance shall embrace more than one subject in the title, and a violation of this requirement renders the ordinance void.⁷ It has been so held in respect of an ordinance whose title embraces the two distinct subjects of extending the limits of the city and of appropriating funds to build a bridge.⁸ On the other hand it has been held that ordinances entitled as follows are not bad as embracing more than one subject in the title: "An ordinance to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, except . . . and to regulate the manufacture and sale thereof for said excepted purposes;"⁹ "An ordinance regulating the keeping, storing and handling and licensing the removal of garbage . . . and to repeal a prior ordinance on the same subject and prescribing penalties for the violation thereof;"¹⁰ "An ordinance providing for the licensing of telegraph, telephone, and electric light poles and wires, and collecting an annual license tax therefor;"¹¹ "An ordinance relative to misdemeanors, breaches of the peace, and disorderly conduct;"¹² an ordinance to authorize the purchase of waterworks or, failing in this, to erect a new plant;¹³ and an ordinance requiring removal of screens in saloons, and forbidding sale of spirituous liquors during a certain period, and closing saloons and coffee houses during such period.¹⁴

2. SUFFICIENCY OF TITLE TO INDICATE SUBJECT-MATTER. The requirement of law that the subject of an ordinance shall be "clearly expressed" in the title has been much mooted in the courts on ordinances of divers kinds, especially those regulating or licensing various acts and occupations, with the result of establishing by general recognition the following rules: (1) The expression of subject in the title of an ordinance is sufficient if it calls attention to the general subject of the legislation.¹⁵ (2) It is not necessary that the title refer to details within the general subject, nor those which may be reasonably considered as appropriately incident thereto.¹⁵ The crucial test of sufficiency of title is generally found in the answer to the question: Does the title tend to mislead or deceive the people or the council as to the purpose or effect of the legislation, or to conceal or obscure the same? If it does then the ordinance is void; if not, it is valid.¹⁷

I. Amendment¹⁸ — 1. POWER TO AMEND. Power to enact ordinances and by-laws necessarily implies power in the same body to amend its enactments.¹⁹ But power conferred by charter upon a court of record to "repeal" a by-law because unreasonable or contrary to law or constitution, being a judicial power to annul, does not empower the court to legislate an amendment.²⁰ A constitutional prohibition of amendment of laws by reference to their titles does not prevent the common council from making amendment, in that manner, of municipal ordinances.²¹ Neither is the council deprived of its inherent power to amend any pending bill, before passing it into an ordinance, by a statute requiring advertisement of an offered by-law before its passage.²² But ordinances embodying contracts cannot be amended so as to impair their obligation, or deprive any one of a right acquired and vested thereunder, unless power to amend is reserved in the ordinance so amended.²³

Nebraska Tel. Co.*, 127 Iowa 194, 103 N. W. 120. All the provisions of an ordinance being germane to the one subject of regulating the business of selling milk and cream, the charter provision that the subject-matter be expressed in the title of an ordinance is satisfied by the title, being an ordinance to license and regulate the sale of milk and cream, to provide for the inspection thereof, and prescribe the penalties to prevent the sale and distribution of any but pure milk and cream. St. Louis v. Liessing, 190 Mo. 464, 89 S. W. 611, 1 L. R. A. N. S. 918. An ordinance of a city of the second class, entitled "An ordinance to regulate and prohibit the running at large of animals," and containing therein provisions for the taking up and impounding of cattle running at large within the corporate limits of the city, contains a title sufficiently extended to embrace also a section prohibiting any person from breaking open the inclosure established by the city as a pound, and forbidding the unlawfully taking and driving therefrom of animals impounded therein. *Smith v. by-law or ordinance is to be exercised in the same mode as power to enact.²⁴ But many states have by law or constitution limited this liberty of amendment by prescribing the manner for effecting it; as for example by requiring that the ordinance or section amended be set forth in the amending ordinance.²⁵ And in other states there is a general statute to the same effect.²⁶ Many special charters also contain the same provision, with special inhibition against amendment by striking out certain words, or inserting certain words, or substituting certain words in lieu of others.²⁷ Obviously the object of such provisions, whether in constitution, statute, or charter, is to prevent the confusion likely to result from the inept efforts at legislation made by bodies of men unskilled in this noble art.²⁸ But since a literal construction and severe application of the law would operate to nullify many well-meant and fairly executed attempts at amendment of defective by-laws, the courts have adopted liberal rules of construction in cases challenging the validity of amendments to ordinances, and in effect decided that whenever the method employed avoids the evil in view and the result attains the object, the amendment is valid and effectual, as is illustrated by the following rulings of sufficient compliance with these requirements. An ordinance attempting to amend by adding new sections, which are fully expressed, need not recite any part of the ordinance amended.²⁹ An amending ordinance need not contain the entire section amended, but only that provision thereof sought to be amended.³⁰ Repeal by implication is effected when a subsequent ordinance, without purporting to amend a former one, contains a provision repugnant to it.³¹ However, an ordinance cannot be amended by mere resolution or motion, but only by another ordinance enacted with like formality as the original ordinance,³² especially where it does not contain Amendment held sufficient.—An amended ordinance which does not attempt to amend the old by adding to or taking from one of its sections, but contains in full the section as it was designed to be when amended, sufficiently complies with a charter which requires that an amended ordinance shall contain the ordinance or parts thereof which it attempts to revise or amend. Larkin v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 85 Iowa 492, 52 N. W. 480.

is not sufficient to say that certain words are stricken out or certain words are inserted, but the section as amended must be set out in full; however, in addition to setting out the section in full, as amended, it is not required that the amendatory act should recite the designated words stricken out, or the others inserted, or both. *State v. “the entire ordinance or section revised or amended.”³³ It has been held that one prosecuted for violation of an ordinance with a severe penalty cannot impeach the ordinance as unreasonable, when, pending the suit, the penalty has by amendment been reduced to a reasonable amount.³⁴ And it seems that a valid revision of the ordinances of a city receiving a new charter may be made after the expiration of the period therefor prescribed by the law.³⁵

3. AMENDMENT OF VOID ORDINANCES. Attempts made by councils to amend void ordinances have uniformly been nullified by the courts.³⁶ But when a single section only of an ordinance, separable from the other sections, has been declared void, it is competent and lawful for the council to amend the ordinance by striking out the void section and substituting a valid one in lieu thereof.³⁷

J. Annulment and Repeal³⁸ — 1. DEFINED AND DISTINGUISHED. Annulment is the judicial act of annulling or declaring invalid and void, and can be performed only by the court.³⁹ Repeal is the legislative act of repealing or revoking by competent authority an existing law, and can be performed only by a legislative body.⁴⁰ The former nullifies the ordinance ab initio.⁴¹ The latter abrogates it in futuro.⁴² Both alike terminate its operation as a living law.⁴³

2. ANNULMENT. The judicial act of nullifying an ordinance or by-law, known indifferently as annulling, avoiding, quashing, or vacating is evoked in various ways. In Canada any person interested may, on due notice, make summary application before the superior or circuit court to quash a municipal by-law for illegality.⁴⁴ And in British Columbia if no application to quash is made within a

When jurisdiction to quash exercised.—The jurisdiction to quash on motion conferred by section 378 of Can. Mun. Act (1903) ought, generally speaking, to be exercised in every case of an illegal by-law which cannot be validated; but in the case of one which can be validated, it should be exercised only, generally speaking, when the irregularities in question affected or might have affected the passing of it. Cartwright v. Napanee, 11 Ont. L. Rep. 69.

Annulment of ordinance providing for conditional obligation.—An action to annul a municipal by-law will lie, although the obligation thereby incurred may be conditional and the condition has not been and may never be accomplished. Where a resolutive condition precedent to the payment of a bonus under month after publication the by-law is held valid.⁴⁵ In other provinces three months are allowed to make the motion to quash; after which time it seems that challenge of validity may be made by action or petition.⁴⁶ Under the latter proceeding special interest in plaintiff must be shown;⁴⁷ the summary proceeding by motion is invited in the publication of the enactment of the by-law, and the door left open for a limited period to any one to challenge the validity of the same.⁴⁸ Courts have clear power to annul municipal legislation, not only when it is illegal or unconstitutional, but also when unreasonable or oppressive.⁴⁹ But to allow annulment on this latter ground, the evidence must be clear and satisfactory in order to overcome the presumption of the good faith of the council in its local legislation.⁵⁰

3. REPEAL ⁵¹—a. In General. Power to enact implies power also to repeal ordinances, unless the right is limited or abrogated by a higher law.⁵² All ordinances too are subject to repeal except such as are contractual in their character.⁵³ Ordinances contractual in nature or effect may not be repealed by the municipia municipal by-law in aid of the construction and operation of a railway has not been fulfilled within the time limited on pain of forfeiture, an action will lie for the annulment of the by-law at any time after default, notwithstanding that there may have been part performance of the obligations on the part of the railway company and that a portion of the bonus may have been advanced to the company by the municipality. Toronto Bank v. St. Lawrence F. Ins. Co., [1903] A. C. 59, 72 L. J. P. C. 14, 87 L. T. Rep. N. S. 462; Sorel v. Quebec Southern R. Co., 36 Can. Sup. Ct. 686.

When application considered made.—A summary application to quash a municipal by-law is "made" when notice of the motion is served, the affidavits in support of it having been already filed. Re Shaw, 18 Ont. Pr. 454.

47. Prevost v. St. Jerome, 5 Rev. de Jur. 395.

48. Kane v. Kaslo, 4 Brit. Col. 486.

Recognizance.—A condition precedent to the entertaining of a motion to quash a municipal by-law is the entering into, allowance, and filing of a recognizance, and a bond, even though allowed by a county court judge, cannot be effectively substituted for a recognizance. Re Burton, 16 Ont. Pr. 160.

Proof of by-laws.—A by-law is sufficiently authenticated for the purpose of a motion against it, by an affidavit of the relator that the copy produced was received by T from the clerk of the council, and delivered by him to the deponent (Fisher v. Vaughan, 10 U. C. Q. B. 492); by a copy of the by-law, authenticated by the seal of the corporation, and certified by the township clerk to be a true copy of a by-law passed on, etc. Bessey v. Grant-ham, 11 U. C. Q. B. 156; where the seal of the corporation is not mentioned in the clerk's certificate, but is on the same page with the certificate, just above it, and opposite to the signatures of the reeve and clerk (Baker v. Paris, 10 U. C. Q. B. 621); where the copy of the by-law filed is under the seal of the municipality and sworn to have been received from the clerk, and opposite the seal is the signature, "M. Flanagan, City Clerk," with the words "a true copy," above (In re Kinghorn, 26 U. C. Q. B. 130); where no seal is affixed to the by-law, but an impression of the seal is made thereon (Re Coome, 6 Ont. 188).

A. 460, in which case it was said that it is an elementary doctrine of constitutional law that the question of just compensation is a judicial question, to be determined in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings; and we find no difficulty in holding that, whenever the rates fixed by the council are grossly and palpably insufficient to furnish such a revenue as will afford just compensation within the rules above declared, redress may be had in the courts.

Administrative ordinance.—An ordinance fixing the fiscal year of a municipal corporation is an administrative measure and pality, without consent of the other party,⁵⁴ unless power to repeal is reserved by the original ordinance;⁵⁵ for such repeal would impair the obligation of the contract.⁵⁶ But when the municipality, in the body and as part of the ordinance, reserves the power of repeal, this is equivalent to the rescission clause in a private contract, under which either or both parties may rescind the contract; and, although the other party has begun work under such a contract, yet, inasmuch as he agreed beforehand that the contract ordinance might be repealed at any time, the ordinance of repeal does not impair any contractual obligation, but is entirely consistent with the repeal clause thereof, and operates according to the contract.⁵⁷ And an ordinance may be repealed at any time before compliance with the steps necessary to render it effective, because in such case no one is deprived of any vested right.⁵⁸ The entire ordinance may be repealed;⁵⁹ also any separable part thereof, without affecting the rest.⁶⁰ Improvement ordinances until accepted, or even after acceptance but before the beginning of operations thereunder, may be repealed.⁶¹ But such repeal, or any other, must be subject to the vested rights of the parties acquired under the repealed ordinance.⁶² Unless otherwise provided by statute the common-law effect is given to the repeal of an ordinance, and the penal jurisdiction of the court in pending cases is terminated,⁶³ unless the council, is subject to repeal. Du Quoin First Nat. Bank v. Keith, 84 Ill. App. 103.

Express repeal required.—Under St. Louis city charter, providing that no special or general ordinance which is in conflict with general ordinances of prior date shall be valid until such prior ordinance, or the con-as it may do, provides otherwise by the repealing ordinance.⁶⁴ But repeal will not validate a transaction which was unlawful at the beginning.⁶⁵

b. Methods of Repeal—(i) IN GENERAL. The repeal may not be effected by mere resolution or motion⁶⁶ or by a void ordinance,⁶⁷ but must be enacted in the manner required for passing a valid ordinance.⁶⁸ There are two methods of repeal: Express, that is, by positive expression in the repealing legislation;⁶⁹ and implied, that is, by subsequent valid legislation incompatible with the existing ordinance.⁷⁰

(ii) EXPRESS REPEAL—(A) By Common Council. The simple and direct mode of effecting repeal of an ordinance is by a later ordinance passed by the common council, enacting that the former ordinance, describing it, is hereby repealed.⁷¹ But this may be inserted in an ordinance containing other legislation also.⁷² A resolution, however, that a certain ordinance "be reconsidered" does not amount to a repeal.⁷³ Indeed as already shown a repeal cannot be effected by mere resolution or order, not passed and published as an ordinance.⁷⁴ But a later ordinance, containing a general repealing clause, repeals a former one, when the first two sections of each are the same, and all other matter of the first is supplied by adequate provisions in the second.⁷⁵ The courts have no power to inquire into the motives of the council, or any member in enacting a valid repealing ordinance, even when the ordinance repealed had granted license to use the streets.⁷⁶

flicting parts thereof, be repealed by express terms, a general ordinance imposing a license on real estate agents, and not in express terms repealing a prior general ordinance imposing a license on such agents, is invalid. St. Louis v. Sanguinet, 49 Mo. 581.

An ordinance cannot be repealed by mere verbal motion to that effect without reference to the title, number, or date of passage of the ordinance to be repealed. State v. Swindell, 146 Ind. 527, 45 N. E. 700, 58 Am. St. Rep. 375, 35 L. R. A. 50.

(B) By General Assembly. Although the power of express repeal of a municipal ordinance is seldom exercised by the general assembly, yet, since it confers upon the municipality its power of legislation, and may at any time in its discretion revoke that power wholly or in part, in states where special municipal legislation is not forbidden by constitution it is competent for the supreme legislative power of the state to pass a statute, expressly repealing an ordinance.⁷⁷

(iii) IMPLIED REPEAL—(A) By Ordinance. A later ordinance may operate to repeal a former one, although it contain no words of repeal.⁷⁸ An implied repeal is effected whenever the later ordinance is so incompatible with or repugnant to the former that both cannot stand together in a system of laws.⁷⁹ In such case the later ordinance is adjudged to express the legislative intention as to the subject-matter, and the former from its irreconcilable conflict therewith is held to be repealed.⁸⁰ It is of course essential to the repeal that the later act shall contain all the requisites of a valid ordinance.⁸¹ The repeal thus effected may be total, affecting the whole of the former ordinance; ⁸² or it may be partial and affect only such separable parts of it as are essentially repugnant to the later ordinance.⁸³

Applications of rule.—A special ordinance, granting to a particular person permission to store refined oils within the city limits, is repealed by a subsequent general ordinance applicable to all persons making such storage of oils a criminal offense. Crowley v. Ellsworth, 114 La. 308, 38 So. 199, 108 Am. St. Rep. 353, 69 L. R. A. 276. So where an ordinance amending a section of a former ordinance provides that such section "shall read as follows," stating the provisions, the section as amended becomes for all future purposes the entire section, and anything which was in the original section, but is omitted from it as amended, is repealed. Jacksonville v. Ledwith, 26 Fla. 163, 7 So. 885, 23 Am. St. Rep. 558, 9 L. R. A. 69.

ten per cent of all sums of money collected for the city is not repugnant to a subsequent ordinance giving him a salary and fees in addition in specified cases and is not impliedly repealed thereby. Austin v. Walton, 68 Tex. 507, 5 S. W. 70. And the mere change of a district to a city with the same boundaries does not repeal an ordinance of the district. Ferrell v. Opelika, 144 Ala. 135, 39 So. 249. For other decisions in which it was held that there was no implied repeal see Greensboro v. Mullins, 13 Ala. 341; Smyrk v. Sharp, 82 Md. 97, 33 Atl. 411; Des Moines v. Hillis, 55 Iowa 643, 8 N. W. 638; Martineau v. Rochester, R. Co., 81 Hun (N. Y.) 263, 30 N. Y. Suppl. 778 [affirmed in 146 N. Y. 376, 41 N. E. 90]; New York v. Wood, 15 Daly (N. Y.) 341, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 657; Eidemiller v. Tacoma, 14 Wash. 376, 44 Pac. 877.

Repeal by revision.—Where the general ordinances of a city were revised and consolidated for publication, and were thus adopted and reenacted and an ordinance under which a prosecution had been begun was reenacted in substantially the same language, without any words of repeal, or any clause saving pending prosecutions, the effect of the reenactment was to continue in force the provisions of the original ordinance, and the pending prosecution was not thereby abated or affected. Junction City v. Webb, 44 Kan. 71, 23 Pac. 1073.

80. Naylor v. Galesburg, 56 Ill. 285; Grand Rapids v. Norman, 110 Mich. 544, 68 N. W. 269; Von der Leith v. State, 60 N. J. L. 46, 37 Atl. 436 [affirmed in 60 N. J. L. 590, 40 Atl. 1132]; Burlington v. Estlow, 43 N. J. L. 13; Roche v. Jersey City, 40 N. J. L. 257; Schmalzried v. White, 97 Tenn. 36, 36 S. W. 393, 32 L. R. A. 782.

(B) By Statute or Constitution. A valid ordinance with which the aldermen and citizens of a municipality are entirely satisfied may without their consent or knowledge even be repealed by an enactment of the general assembly on the same subject, utterly repugnant to it.⁸⁵ And a fortiori, whenever the provisions of a new constitution come into force any repugnant by-law must yield to the mandate of paramount law.⁸⁶ So it seems that the repeal of a statute which gives authority to the towns to pass a particular by-law will in general annul the by-law.⁸⁷ But a change made in the organic law under which cities of a designated class are organized does not repeal existing ordinances while the power to pass the same ordinances continues to exist,⁸⁸ and an ordinance remains in force after adoption of a new charter, authorizing such an ordinance and providing that existing ordinances shall remain in force until repealed.⁸⁹

K. Suspension, Expiration, and Revival⁹⁰—1. SUSPENSION. Where an ordinance has been duly enacted the council has no authority to set aside or disregard it except in some manner prescribed by law.⁹¹ While the operation of an ordinance may for a time be suspended by another ordinance,⁹² it cannot be suspended by a mere resolution.⁹³

Rhode Island.—State v. McCulla, 16 R. I. 196, 14 Atl. 81.

See 36 Cent. Dig. tit. "Municipal Corporations," § 272. And see supra, II, C, 1, e, (II).

Application of rule.—A charter of an incorporated village authorizing it to "regulate" its victualing houses repeals by implication the general law authorizing the selectmen of a town to license persons to keep such houses, and confers upon the village power to license. St. Johnsbury v. Thompson, 59 Vt. 300, 9 Atl. 571, 59 Am. Rep. 731.

Ordinances not repugnant to statutes.—"An ordinance for the government and regulation of the police of North Providence" is not repealed by a statute entitled "an act authorizing the town of North Providence to establish bridewells and for other purposes." State v. Pollard, 6 R. I. 290. So an ordinance authorizing persons engaged in building to deposit materials for such building in any of the streets of the city for a reasonable time, occupying not to exceed one third of the street, is not inconsistent with the general act for cities of June 18, 1852, which provides that ordinances not inconsistent with the act shall remain in force, and therefore is saved from repeal by section 57 of that act which gives the common council exclusive power over the streets of the city. Wood v. Mears, 12 Ind. 515, 74 Am. Dec. 222.

87. Lishon v. Clark, 18 N. H. 234, holding, however, that the Revised Statutes, in repealing the laws which gave such authority, and in reenacting them at the same time in the same forms, do not convey an expression of the legislative will to abrogate the by-laws passed under the preëxisting laws; they having been passed by towns in the exercise of a municipal power, which the legislature plainly intended to leave intact.

2. EXPIRATION. Like a state law, an ordinance may become unpopular, and its violation may be ignored for years consecutively, or it may, like Sunday laws, be enforced by the police authority against one class and not against another, and yet it remains the law of the municipality, which the citizen is bound to obey, until repealed by lawful authority; for desuetude has no legislative authority in state or municipality, and statutes and ordinances do not expire or lose their vital force from neglect of the governmental agency to enforce their mandates.⁹⁴ If an ordinance contains a clause prescribing a definite period for its operation, then it will expire of its own limitation.⁹⁵ Where ordinances are shown to have been passed prior to a certain day they will be presumed to have been still in force upon that day in the absence of evidence to the contrary.⁹⁶

3. REVIVAL. Ordinances and by-laws are also subject to another rule of statutory construction and operation of equal importance. Like statutes they are not only subject to repeal, but when the legislative authority of the municipality repeals a repealing ordinance, such repeal operates to revive the original ordinance and give it full force.⁹⁷ This operation, however, is not retroactive, but gives the original ordinance new force and effect only from the date of the repealing ordinance.⁹⁸

L. Construction — 1. RULES APPLICABLE TO ORDINANCES GENERALLY. Municipal ordinances and by-laws are construed by the same rules as statutes of the general assembly.⁹⁹ Among the rules of construction well established and recognized in such cases are the following: Every part of the law or ordinance should if possible be given operation and effect;¹ the construction should be reasonable and not strained;² punctuation must yield to manifest intention;³ of two possible constructions, one consistent with and the other repugnant to law, the former is to be preferred;⁴ private encroachments upon public rights are not to be favored

Every intendment is to be indulged in favor of its validity, and all doubts resolved in a way to uphold the law-making power, and by construction;⁵ a doubt as to whether an ordinance is invalid as conflicting with individual rights should be resolved against the municipality;⁶ ordinances on the same subject-matter must be construed together;⁷ ordinances which may be defective alone if in regard to the same subject-matter may be given effect and operation by construing them together;⁸ legislative construction and understanding contemporaneous with the passage of the ordinance or by-law are not to be lightly disregarded;⁹ ordinances, when so intended by the council and acted upon by others, will be construed so as to operate as a contract;¹⁰ presumption favors the validity of ordinances and by-laws passed in pursuance of competent statutory authority.¹¹

2. POLICE ORDINANCES. Police ordinances being penal in their nature are subject to strict construction.¹² Such ordinances more than any other municipal regu-

a contrary conclusion will never be reached upon slight consideration. It is the province and the right of the municipality to regulate its local affairs, within the law of course; and it is the duty of the courts to uphold such regulations, unless it manifestly appears that the ordinance or by-law transcends the power of the municipality, or contravenes the rights secured to the citizens by the constitution. *Ex p. W. 1, holding that where a village ordinance in one section provided that every assemblage of persons in any street or public place of said village, engaged in boisterous language or conduct, should be deemed a disorderly assemblage, and in the next section provided that any such assemblage in "any" place in said city should be deemed a disorderly assemblage, the scope of the latter section was not limited to the places enumerated in the former section.

Retroactive effect applied.—Rushville v. Rushville Natural Gas Co., 132 Ind. 575, 28 N. E. 853, 15 L. R. A. 321; Willow Springs v. Withaupt, 61 Mo. App. 275. Compare New York Fire Dept. v. Wendell, 13 Daly (N. Y.) 427, holding that under a statute requiring buildings to be kept provided with metallic leaders for conducting the water from the roof, and providing that in no case shall the water from the leaders be permitted to flow upon the sidewalk, an owner of a building erected prior to the act, who permits water from the roof to be discharged from the mouth of the leader upon the public highway, is liable to the penalty imposed for a violation of the act. See also St. Louis v. Fischer, 167 Mo. 654, 67 S. W. 872, 64 L. R. A. 679, holding that where a municipal ordinance provides that no dairy stable shall thereafter be established within the city limits without first having obtained permission from the municipal assembly by a proper ordinance, the fact that prior to the passage of such ordinance certain premises within lations, and more than state statutes, being domestic and intimate and commonly believed to interfere with the personal liberty of the citizen and to deny the enjoyment of his constitutional right and inherent privileges, and that too by a mere creature of the state assuming to exercise a sovereign power, are the frequent subjects of resentful and contemptuous challenge based upon any and sometimes many or even all of the following grounds: Not within the police power of the state; non-delegable power; not conferred upon a municipality; not duly enacted; contrary to constitution or statute; in contravention of common right; unreasonable. Illustrations of these contentions will be seen in the cases cited below.¹³

3. PROVINCE OF COURT OR JURY. Generally the construction of ordinances is matter of law for the court;¹⁴ and in all cases where the contention is over the constitutionality or legality of an ordinance or by-law this rule seems to be without exception.¹⁵ So the reasonableness or unreasonableness of a municipal ordinance is ordinarily a question for the decision of the court, in the light of all existing circumstances and conditions, the objects sought to be obtained, and the necessity or want of necessity for its adoption.¹⁶ Where, however, the facts which may or may not make an ordinance unreasonable are controverted,¹⁷ or are of such nature that the court has no judicial knowledge thereof,¹⁸ the question the city were occupied for dairy purposes by third persons did not authorize defendant to start a new dairy there without the necessary permission; the old dairy, after the passage of such ordinance, having been abandoned.

Two clauses connected by "and."—In an ordinance declaring that it shall be unlawful for any person or corporation to do a certain act, a second clause, connected therewith by "and," will be presumed to bind the class of persons mentioned in the first. So held as to the ordinance of Chicago prohibiting the sale of coal oil that will not bear a fire test of one hundred degrees Fahrenheit, proceeding, "and it shall be unlawful to keep," etc., "excepting a cellar," five feet below the grade of the adjacent streets. Wright v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 7 Ill. App. 438.

M. Operation and Effect—1. IN GENERAL. Ordinances authorized by the charter of the municipality enacting them and not in contravention of organic or statutory law have the same force and effect within the municipal territory as acts of the legislature¹⁹ so long as they stand unrepealed.²⁰ They have the local force and authority of a state statute, whether originally authorized or subsequently ratified by the general assembly.²¹ And where the legislature by charter confers on a municipality exclusive control over certain subjects ordinances enacted in accordance with such authority supersede within the limits of such municipality general laws on the same subject.²² Without such special authority, however, no ordinance can have this effect.²³

2. APPLICATION TO PERSONS AND PLACES. Municipal ordinances and by-laws can have no extraterritorial force, unless specially provided by the empowering statute for particular purposes, such as sanitation or police.²⁴ But they will operate throughout the boundaries of a municipality irrespective of any change made in them.²⁵ And it is competent for the legislature in providing for the annexation of the territory of one municipality to another to continue in force in the municipality annexed designated ordinances operative in such municipality before annexation.²⁶ They are operative with all the force and effect of statutes both against residents and non-residents within the limits of the municipality,²⁷ and also against the property of non-residents within the limits of the municipality.²⁸ Persons and corporations within the corporate territory are bound to take notice of their provisions, when duly enacted and promulgated,²⁹ and to obey them on their own private property as well as elsewhere within the municipal boundaries.³⁰

3. TIME OF TAKING EFFECT. Usually the time when ordinances or by-laws take effect is prescribed by the municipal charter or general law,³¹ which date is usually a fixed time after passage, or promulgation, or publication.³² In some states by constitutional interdiction no ordinance prescribing a penalty or forfeiture can be enforced until it has been duly published.³³ In these states even actual knowledge by the violator will not be a substitute for the publication required by the constitution.³⁴ And generally no ordinance or by-law can take effect till the lapse of the constitutional or statutory period after publication.³⁵

But it is competent for the common council by a provision in an ordinance to fix a date in the future beyond such period when it shall become operative, or provide for its becoming operative on the happening of a certain contingency.⁸⁶ Administrative ordinances not penal in their nature may take effect immediately after passage or approval.⁸⁷ So where by express statutory provision an ordinance becomes a law on receiving the approval of the mayor, another provision requiring publication does not postpone the operation of the ordinance till after publication has been made,⁸⁸ and if a charter provides that ordinances shall take effect from the time therein respectively limited, they will go into effect at such time, notwithstanding statutory provisions requiring publication.⁸⁹

fail no matter how notorious the ordinance may have been.⁴³ The general rule, however, is held not to apply to proceedings brought in a municipal court, for here the ordinance is the peculiar law of that forum, of which the court is bound to take judicial notice, and this obviates any necessity for pleading the ordinance.⁴⁴

2. SUFFICIENCY — a. In General. As respects the enactment of an ordinance, it is sufficient to allege generally that it was duly passed or enacted.⁴⁵ It is not necessary to allege power in the municipality to enact the ordinance,⁴⁶ or to refer to the charter or general law conferring the power.⁴⁷

b. Provisions of Ordinances. In pleading the provisions of an ordinance it is of course sufficient to set them out in hæc verba,⁴⁸ and in a few decisions this has been held necessary.⁴⁹ These latter decisions are, however, against the great weight of authority, which is to the effect that it will be sufficient to set forth the provisions of the ordinance in substance.⁵⁰ Nevertheless in the absence of some statute providing otherwise, the provisions of the ordinance relied on must be set out either in totidem verbis or in substance.⁵¹ But when this is done it is not

Relation which municipal court holds to ordinances.—To ordinances a municipal court holds the same relation that the superior courts hold to the laws enacted by the legislature, and may notice their provisions because they are among the things which, as to it, are established by law. Ex p. Davis, 115 Cal. 445, 47 Pac. 258.

Appeal from municipal court — Effect.—In misdemeanor cases, where an appeal is taken from the police court of a city to the district court, the latter will take judicial notice of the ordinance under which defendant is being prosecuted. In such cases the district court is pro hac vice the police court. Downing v. Miltonvale, 36 Kan. 740, 14 Pac. 281; Smith v. Emporia, 27 Kan. 528; Olathe v. Thomas, 26 Kan. 233; *Solomon v. necessary to set out the title of the ordinance or the date on which the ordinance was passed.⁵²

c. Pleading by Number, Title, and Date. Where it is expressly so provided by statute, in pleading an ordinance it will be sufficient to refer to it by its title and the date of its passage.⁵³ There is no question, however, that this method is insufficient in the absence of a statute authorizing it.⁵⁴ And under a statute making it sufficient to plead an ordinance by its title and the day of its passage, a mere reference to the number of the ordinance is insufficient.⁵⁵ So a statute declaring sufficient a complaint for violation of a municipal ordinance by describing it by section and title was held unconstitutional, where the section embraced several distinct offenses.⁵⁶

O. Evidence — 1. PRESUMPTION AND BURDEN OF PROOF — a. In General. When an action or defense is predicated upon a municipal ordinance, it is necessary to show that such an ordinance exists, for if there is no law there can be no infraction thereof.⁵⁷ And inasmuch as municipal corporations exercise only delegated and limited powers, the general rule is that courts can indulge in no presumptions in favor of the validity of ordinances, in the absence of statutory authorization.⁵⁸ If defendant relies on the repeal of an ordinance offered in evidence as a defense, the burden is on him to prove such repeal.⁵⁹

b. Authority to Enact. Authority of a municipality to enact an ordinance will not be presumed but must be proved.⁶⁰ To prove authority, production of the charter, or a copy thereof, is necessary.⁶¹ Defendant may, however, by demurrer, or other pleading, estop himself to question the validity of an ordinance by admitting its validity.⁶²

c. Due Enactment. That an ordinance or by-law was duly enacted is presumed in the following instances: When its adoption is certified by the clerk;⁶³ where it appears that it was adopted "by the mayor and council";⁶⁴ where it has been in force for fourteen years;⁶⁵ where it is published in the ordinance book required by law;⁶⁶ where it appears that it was made "in pursuance of an act amending the charter."⁶⁷ But this presumption is not as strong as that of the regularity of a published act of the general assembly.⁶⁸ And it seems that in certain cases oral proof of regularity may be heard.⁶⁹

d. Publication. Ordinarily when publication of an ordinance or by-law is required to give it force, such publication must be proven,⁷⁰ but where for many years an ordinance has been treated and acted on as a valid and subsisting one, proof of publication is unnecessary. Due publication will be presumed.⁷¹ Under the provisions of some statutes proof of publication is not required until denied under oath.⁷² And by express provision of other statutes publication is presumed until the contrary is shown.⁷³ So the burden is on defendant to show failure to publish where the statute makes printed copies of ordinances published by the authority of the municipality, and manuscript copies of the same, copied by the proper officer and having the seal of the municipality attached, evidence of the existence of the ordinances and their contents, and makes the failure to publish a sufficient defense to any suit or prosecution for the fines or penalties imposed by the ordinances.⁷⁴ Where ordinances have been duly recorded in the book of ordinances in accordance with a statute making such book prima facie evidence that the ordinances appearing therein have been published, the burden is on the one setting up invalidity of an ordinance for want of publication to show such facts.⁷⁵

e. Reasonableness. It will be presumed that an ordinance is reasonable.⁷⁶

a copy of an ordinance or sections thereof need not be filed with the complaint, if defendant claims that particular sections are invalid he must bring their invalidity forward by way of defense. Frankfort v. Aughe, 114 Ind. 77, 15 N. E. 802.

And it is incumbent on one who claims that an ordinance is unreasonable to prove the facts that make it so.⁷⁷

2. ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE — a. In General. What evidence of or pertaining to ordinances or by-laws is admissible in any action must obviously depend upon the nature of the action and the issues made by the pleadings; for ordinances and by-laws may become material and competent evidence not only in actions by the city to enforce penalties, but also in suits on contracts of which they form a part,⁷⁸ and for torts committed in violation of them.⁷⁹ Of the numerous vehicles of proof of ordinances and by-laws the following have been held to be admissible: The minute-book of the corporation;⁸⁰ the municipal record book in which are copied all the ordinances promulgated by the corporation;⁸¹ certified copies from these books;⁸² a printed book of municipal ordinances purporting to be published by corporate authority;⁸³ proven copies of ordinances lost or destroyed;⁸⁴ original drafts or sheets containing the ordinances as adopted, kept, and filed by the clerk in lieu of a book, with the memoranda of action thereon;⁸⁵ and oral evidence in extreme cases.⁸⁶ But a book or pamphlet purporting to contain the ordinances or by-laws of a municipality is not admissible if it does not also purport to be issued by corporate authority.⁸⁷

b. Publication. According to some decisions parol evidence to show the publication of an ordinance is admissible as primary evidence thereof,⁸⁸ especially where there is no charter or other provision requiring proof in a particular way;⁸⁹ and it has also been held admissible as secondary evidence where it is shown that the files of the paper in which the ordinance was said to be published cannot be obtained.⁹⁰

3. WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY — a. In General. The weight of evidence in case of conflict is a practical matter for the jury, for which the law does not furnish scales.⁹¹ But certain rules in regard to the sufficiency of proof to make out a prima facie case are well recognized by the courts, among which are the following: The production of the authorized record book of ordinances, containing the ordinance in question is prima facie proof of its due enactment.⁹² So likewise of a printed book of ordinances purporting to be published by municipal authority.⁹³ So of the city clerk's certificate to an ordinance, that it was a copy of an ordinance passed by the council and deposited in his office.⁹⁴ So also of a recorder's certificate to an ordinance that it was a true copy of one passed by the town council at a meeting held at a certain date.⁹⁵ So too of an original ordinance produced by a village clerk.⁹⁶ It has also been ruled that the passage of an ordinance on a certain date did not disprove the existence of a previous ordinance to the same effect.⁹⁷ And the validity of an ordinance lacking record of approval was established by the parol testimony of the mayor that it has not been the uniform practice for the mayor to record his approval, and that as a matter of fact he did approve it, and it has been officially promulgated and acted upon by the municipality.⁹⁸ So also of an ordinance approved by a mayor pro tem, although it was not proven that the mayor was absent from the city.⁹⁹ Proof that an ordinance was in force at a specified date is prima facie proof that it is in force at a subsequent date.¹

b. Publication. Publication is sufficiently proved by certificate under oath of the publisher or foreman of the paper in which publication was made,² by certificate of the clerk of the city or village clerk under his official seal,³ by duly attested copies of ordinances,⁴ by a printed pamphlet or book of ordinances purporting to be published by authority of the village trustees,⁵ by the ordinance book of the municipality with the original affidavit of publication attached

Proof that affiant was foreman or publisher.—Where a charter provides that the publication of ordinances shall be proved by the affidavit of the foreman or publisher of such newspaper, the statement in the affidavit that the person making it was the foreman or publisher of the newspaper is sufficient evidence of that fact. Faribault v. Wilson, 34 Minn. 254, 25 N. W. 449.

Evidence insufficient to rebut evidence of publication.—When a city officer makes affidavit that he posted a notice of a resolution on September 12, and the same day caused a like notice to be published for one insertion in a certain weekly newspaper, such publication is not disproved by production of all the numbers of the paper of that year except that of September 17, the first issue after the notice was posted, and showing that it is not in such numbers. *Vincent v. thereto, if such evidence identifies the ordinance,⁶ or by the record of an ordinance with a note appended thereto stating that the ordinance was duly published, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary.⁷ And where an ordinance is certified by the recorder as having been passed by the council on a certain day, and he testifies that it was published in a certain newspaper on a day named, the publication is sufficiently proved.⁸ It cannot be inferred, however, that a city ordinance was published because it was passed, and if the city charter makes the publication prima facie evidence of the ordinance, and a copy of the published order alone presumptive evidence of the facts therein recited, the mere statement of a witness that the ordinance was published creates no presumption that it was published by authority.⁹ Under a statute which provides that a book of ordinances purporting to be published by authority shall after a designated time be conclusive evidence of publication, there must be some declaration in, on, and as a part of a book that its publication is by reason of some competent authority, to make the book conclusive evidence of publication.¹⁰ And it has been held that the authority to reprint and publish a city charter is not authority to publish ordinances in a book therewith so as to make it conclusive of publication under such statute.¹¹

VII. OFFICERS, AGENTS, AND EMPLOYEES AND MUNICIPAL DEPARTMENTS.¹²

A. Municipal Officers in General — 1. TERMINOLOGY.¹³ A municipal officer is one who holds for a time a permanent municipal position of trust and responsibility, with definite municipal powers, duties, and privileges.¹⁴ At common law an office was defined to be "a right to exercise a public or private employment, and to take the fees and emoluments thereunto belonging . . . whether public . . . or private."¹⁵ In America office, unlike the offices known to the common law, which lying in grant, were deemed incorporeal hereditaments, has in it no element of property. It is not alienable or inheritable.¹⁶ Public offices are created for the purpose of effecting the ends for which government has been instituted, which are the common good, and not the profit, honor, or private interest of any man, family, or class of men. In our form of government it is fundamental that public offices are a public trust, and that the persons to be appointed

2. WHO ARE MUNICIPAL OFFICERS. The mayor is a municipal officer.²³ He is the official head of the municipality, and its chief executive officer;²⁴ the president of the corporation and specially identified with the local interests centering in the municipality.²⁵ Councilmen or aldermen are municipal officers,²⁶ and so are city treasurers.²⁷ Whether officers of a department of a municipality are state or municipal officers depends on the nature of the duties which they perform. This question will be considered in another part of this title.²⁸

3. CREATION AND ABOLITION OF OFFICE²⁹ — a. Creation. Municipal offices can only be created by legislation.³⁰ This creative act may be either immediate, when done by the general assembly, which possesses all inherent creative power for corporations; or delegated, when the corporation is expressly empowered by charter or general law to create the office for itself.³¹ Creation by the municipality can only be effected by means of ordinance or by-law.³² Offices may be created not only by express and positive act of legislation, but also by implication, as where an office is referred to as existing, and the duties of the officer are prescribed; ³³ but the implication must be plain and certain. ³⁴

b. Abolition—(1) IN GENERAL. It is well settled that the absolute and unconditional repeal of a municipal charter, ³⁵ or the substitution of another charter with inconsistent provisions, without any saving clause as to the rights of officers under the former charter, ³⁶ abolishes all offices thereunder. It is for this reason that there is no such thing as a vested right in a municipal office. ³⁷ The power creating such an office has, in the absence of statutory or constitutional restraint, the right to abolish it, ³⁸ if done in good faith; ³⁹ and a constitutional provision that the compensation of no municipal officer shall be changed during his term of office does not impair such right. ⁴⁰ But a city office created by the legislature cannot be abolished by the city. ⁴¹

By the weight of authority the existence of a fundamental right of municipal local self-government is necessarily dependent upon some constitutional provision or manifest implication,⁴⁵ and in the absence of such a provision, municipal officers are appointed by the legislature, or chosen or appointed in the mode prescribed by charter or by general law.⁴⁶ In such case, the principle of local self-government is recognized to a certain extent, and the selection of officers is generally intrusted to the electors of the respective municipalities, or their appointment committed to the authorities thereof;⁴⁷ and it is competent for the legislature to delegate to the municipality the power to ordain whether an office shall be elective or appointive.⁴⁸ In many state constitutions a provision exists to the effect that all city officers whose election is not otherwise provided for shall be elected by the electors of the city, or be appointed by such authorities thereof as the legislature may designate for that purpose.⁴⁹ Such a constitutional provision has been held not to be violated by an act incorporating a city and making provisional appointments to certain offices until they can be filled by election⁵⁰ or by a power given to the governor to remove.⁵¹

(B) Civil Service Restrictions—(1) IN GENERAL. The civil service statutes constitute a general system of statute law, applicable to appointments and promotions in every department of the civil service, with such exceptions only as are specified in the statute itself.⁵² The restrictions placed upon the appointing power by these laws, and by the rules prescribed by commissioners appointed under such laws, have been quite generally held to be constitutional.⁵³ Thus it has been held that these laws are not violative of constitutional provisions, by creating a different tenure of office;⁵⁴ as requiring an illegal test of applicants for office;⁵⁵ or depriving the municipal authorities of the power of appointment,⁵⁶ except in so far as they compel the appointment of the person graded highest on the eligible list;⁵⁷ delegating to civil service commissioners the exercise of judicial func-

City magistrates are within the provision of the constitution, requiring existing city officers to be elected or appointed by authorities which the legislature shall designate, although their duties have been transferred to officials under a new name. *Kelly v. The right to fill an office by a new selection at the expiration of each term thereof is secured to the people of the locality specially concerned, the same as the power to fill the place in the first instance, and any attempt to interfere with that right, working a continuance of an incumbent in office, under the general rule that his incumbency shall continue until a successor is elected and qualified, is held to be as much a legislative appointment and usurpation of power as an express appointment to the place. O'Connor v. Fond du Lac, 109 Wis. 253, 85 N. W. 327, 53 L. R. A. 831.

An act is not unconstitutional because it provides for the "election" of the president of a village by the trustees instead of an "appointment" by them, as prescribed by N. Y. Vesting appointment in governor.—The act of the legislature of New York (Laws (1867), c. 410, § 1) vesting the appointment of commissioners of taxes of the city of New York in the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, is unconstitutional, inasmuch as the same functions were performed by similar officers at the time of the adoption of the constitution, which provides that such officers shall be elected by the electors of cities, etc., or appointed by such authorities thereof as the legislature shall designate. *People v. (2) THE VETERAN ACTS.⁶² Civil service regulation has been attempted in the so called "Veteran Acts" of many of the states, giving preference of appointment to honorably discharged soldiers of the Civil war.⁶³ These acts have been sustained by the courts where they do not discriminate as to eligibility or qualification for office,⁶⁴ but they have been held unconstitutional so far as they require that certain offices shall be filled by veterans in preferment to all other persons without regard to actual fitness.⁶⁵ In all examinations, competitive and non-competitive, veterans have no preference over other citizens of the state; but when as a result of these examinations, a list is made up from which appointments can be made, consisting of those whose merit and fitness have been duly ascertained, then the veteran is entitled to preference without regard to his standing on that list,⁶⁶ provided he seasonably claims his preference.⁶⁷

(ii) TIME—(A) In General. The time for holding municipal elections and making appointments to office is usually fixed by charter or statute,⁶⁸ and if made upon an antecedent day they are void.⁶⁹ Statutes fixing the time for holding an election have, however, been held directory merely, and not mandatory, to the extent of permitting and authorizing an election or appointment at a later day than that named in the law, where the body whose duty it is to elect or appoint upon a day certain neglects to perform the duty, and the obligation still remains.⁷⁰ Where no date is fixed by the charter or statute, the mayor and council may fix it by ordinance.⁷¹ When the commencement of a term is fixed by law, the election to such office should take place at the last election held before the time such term commences.⁷²

(B) Change. The officer or body having authority to fix the time for holding an election or making an appointment may change it;⁷³ but where the time is fixed by statute, the council has no power to alter it by ordinance.⁷⁴

(iii) MODE—(A) Popular Election. If there is no constitutional right of election to a municipal office the legislature may make it appointive.⁷⁵ Certain offices, however, are usually made elective by constitution,⁷⁶ and the right so conferred cannot be evaded by any legislative subterfuge, such as a change in the Appointment after time limited.—Persons appointed by the controller of the city and county of New York to the office of commissioner of taxes and assessments, after the expiration of the time fixed by the act conferring on him such authority, derive no authority from such appointment; and if they attempt to exercise the functions and powers of such office they will be guilty of an unlawful intrusion into the same. People v. Woodruff, 32 N. Y. 355, 29 How. Pr. 203.

Where a city council passes an ordinance restricting the city into wards, a special election thereunder is specifically prohibited by Rev. St. § 1632, and hence, where a special election is attempted to be held for the selection of members of the council under such ordinance, such special election is inoperative. *State v. Default of duty necessary.—The occasion for holding a law directory in its terms cannot arise until there has been an omission or neglect from some cause to obey its provisions until there has been a default of duty, with a continuing obligation to perform. State v. Murray, 41 Minn. 123, 42 N. W. 858.

A constitutional provision fixing the date for holding municipal elections is not self-operative, and without further legislation previous laws on the subject remain in force. State v. Patton, 32 La. Ann. 1200.

The amendment of the charter of the city of St. Augustine passed in 1891 does not change the time of election of municipal judges under the original charter of said city. State v. Philips, 30 Fla. 579, 11 So. 922.

Police justices not included.—The provision of the constitution of New York (art. 6, § 18), declaring that "justices of the peace and District Court justices shall be elected in the different cities of this State," etc., does not include police justices in the city of New York; but these officers may rightfully be appointed as provided by the act of 1873, entitled "An act to secure better administration in the police courts of the city of New York" (Laws (1873), c. 538). Wensler v. People, 58 N. Y. 516.

The word "electors" in a constitutional provision that all city, town, and village officers shall be elected by the electors of such cities, etc., means residents therein who have the qualifications of electors prescribed in another article of the constitution. State v. Tuttle, 53 Wis. 45, 9 N. W. 791.

name of an office, or a division of its duties between two appointive officers.⁷⁷ Authority for the election of an officer may as well be drawn by necessary implication from an act of the legislature as from its express terms,⁷⁸ but the inference must be a legitimate one.⁷⁹

(B) *Appointment*⁸⁰—(1) AUTHORITY TO APPOINT—(a) IN GENERAL. The power of appointing municipal officers need not be given by direct and exclusive legislation;⁸¹ an act conferring upon a particular officer sole power to supervise a municipal function gives him power to appoint the officers necessary to perform the function.⁸² Power of appointment is usually conferred upon the mayor,⁸³ the city council,⁸⁴ or the mayor with the confirmation of the council.⁸⁵ An ordinance which assumes to transfer the power of appointment to persons other than those upon whom it has been committed by charter is invalid;⁸⁶ but a statute transferring all executive powers from the council to the mayor has been held to confer on him the power to appoint officers heretofore chosen by that body.⁸⁷

(b) CONCURRENT ACTION OF BODIES OR OFFICERS—aa. Branches of City Council. It is frequently provided by statute or ordinance that city officers shall be elected by joint ballot or concurrent vote of both branches of the city council. Election by joint ballot is the act of a single body formed from two bodies convened together, and it is only necessary that a quorum be present.⁸⁸ Election by concurrent vote

Under statutory power conferred a city may, by ordinance, empower the mayor to make appointments to office. Sales v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 166 Mo. 671, 66 S. W. 979.

A mayor pro tem may be given the same power of appointment that the mayor possesses. Mills v. State, 2 Wash. 566, 27 Pac. 560. Authority conferred upon the president of the common council to perform the duties of the mayor during the latter's absence from the city gives such president the power to make appointments to office (People v. Van Anden, 116 Mich. 654, 74 N. W. 1009; State v. Byrne, 98 Wis. 16, 73 N. W. 320); provided an emergency exists requiring immediate action (Watkins v. Mooney, 114 Ky. 646, 71 S. W. 622, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1469); but proof of appointment by the president of the council is not sufficient without showing the facts upon which the right to exercise such power depends (Clarke v. Trenton, 49 N. J. L. 349, 8 Atl. 509).

An outgoing mayor, whose term of office expired at twelve o'clock noon, Jan. 1, 1902, could, at any time before that hour, make an appointment to any position which the mayor had a legal right to fill. Bakely v. Nowrey, 68 N. J. L. 95, 52 Atl. 289.

Department subordinates.—A statute granting to the mayor the right to appoint and remove "officers and persons employed by the city" does not apply to assistants employed in any of the departments, who are employed by the chief of the department, and not directly by the city, through its mayor or other authorized officer. *Peters v. Existing council.—Under a statute providing for certain new executive officers in cities, "which shall be chosen by city councils." it was held that the existing council at the time of the change should choose such officers. Com. v. Wyman, 137 Pa. St. 508, 21 Atl. 389.

It is not a valid reason for refusing to obey the law, on the part of a majority of the select council of a city, by meeting with the common council and appointing the heads of departments, that members of the common council may have been fraudulently excluded, since each branch is the sole judge of the election and qualification of its own members; nor that they are about to propose a change of the law, for while the law remains they are bound by it, and must obey its requirements. Lamb v. Lynd, 44 Pa. St. 336.

requires the separate act of two or more distinct and independent bodies, each of which must have a quorum of its own, and each has a veto upon the other.⁸⁹ But it has been held that where the law requires an election to be by joint ballot of two branches, an election by the separate action of each branch is sufficient to give color of title to the office.⁹⁰

bb. Mayor and Council. City charters often provide for the appointment of certain officers by the mayor, with the consent and approval of the council.⁹¹ In such a case an ordinance cannot authorize the appointment by either alone,⁹² or by joint convention of the two branches of the council.⁹³ But where power is given to the mayor to appoint officers to serve during his will and pleasure, confirmation by the council is unnecessary.⁹⁴ A charter requirement that ordinances and resolutions of the council must have the approval of the mayor has been held not to apply to elections by that body,⁹⁵ but there are cases to the contrary.⁹⁶

(2) MANNER OF APPOINTMENT—(a) IN GENERAL. The course of procedure to be followed by a municipal council in the election of officers is usually prescribed in the charter of each respective town or city,⁹⁷ and when so prescribed cannot be changed by ordinance or by-law.⁹⁸ If the particular method is not prescribed, then it is left to the discretion of the council, subject to the proviso that the election must be conducted in harmony with the fundamental principles recognized by the common law to be applicable.⁹⁹ So where the appointment is directed to Appointment void without confirmation.—An appointment by the city council requires confirmation by the city council and gives the appointee no right to the office without such confirmation. People v. Weber, 89 Ill. 347.

An appointment by the mayor without the concurrence of the aldermen is not justified by the fact that the mayor and board of aldermen might fail to agree upon the person to fill such a vacancy, and that the office would in consequence remain vacant. *Brumby v. be made by ballot, the manner of taking the ballot is within the discretion of the council.¹

(b) VOTE NECESSARY TO A CHOICE. The general rule, in the absence of specific provision, is that a majority of the members of a municipal council will constitute a quorum for the election of officers, and when duly met, a majority of the quorum may act.² A quorum being present, it is not necessary that all, or even a majority, of those present should vote. Members by refusing to vote cannot defeat the election, or divest the body of the power to elect.³ In such case the legal effect of refusing to vote is an acquiescence in the choice of those who do vote;⁴ and this is so, although those refusing to vote object to the mode of voting, and on the ground that no quorum voted.⁵

(c) RIGHT OF MAYOR TO VOTE. When a choice has been made it is not essential that the mayor, as the presiding officer, shall declare the result.⁶ In such case the mayor has as a general rule no duty whatever to perform as to the election. He can take part only in case of a tie vote.⁷ It has been held, however, that the

(3) EVIDENCE OF APPOINTMENT. Except where a verbal appointment is permitted by the terms of the act conferring the appointing power, an appointment to a municipal office must be in writing,⁹ or in the form of a resolution of the appointing board duly entered in its records.¹⁰ There must be a commission, that is, a formal writing signed by the official with whom the power of appointment rests, showing clearly his intention to appoint the person named, his belief that such writing is that required by the statute, and his intention to make it the final act on his part to perfect the appointment.¹¹ The commission need not be in any particular form. The written appointment signed by the officer, or any paper signed by him, showing that he has made the appointment, is sufficient, and the commission need not be delivered.¹²

(4) RECONSIDERATION OR RECALL OF APPOINTMENT. council to change the result by changing his vote.¹⁵ An appointment duly completed is beyond the power of recall.¹⁶

(IV) *CONTESTS AND PROCEEDINGS TO TRY TITLE*¹⁷—(A) In General. In the absence of any remedy prescribed by law,¹⁸ the right to a municipal office can be determined only by quo warranto, or an information in the nature thereof.¹⁹ Such right cannot be determined upon a bill for an injunction;²⁰ nor is a writ of certiorari the appropriate remedy, even though the appointee has not entered upon the office so as to be liable to an information in the nature of quo warranto.²¹

(B) Collateral Attack. It is a generally recognized doctrine that the right of a municipal incumbent to hold an office or the validity of his title cannot be attacked collaterally, although he be only an officer de facto.²² Such question can be examined and determined only in a proceeding to which the officer is a party with the right to defend his title.²³

(V) RESTRAINING OFFICER FROM ACTING. As a general rule a suit to restrain a claimant of a municipal office from attempting to exercise its powers and duties cannot be maintained, as the question of title to such office is involved, and can only be tried in an action of quo warranto;²⁴ but it has been held that an

b. Vacancies — (r) IN GENERAL. In the absence of any express provision the power of filling vacancies in appointive offices is in the original appointing power.²⁶ Frequently power is expressly conferred upon the mayor²⁷ or the city council²⁸ to fill vacancies in such offices. But while a regularly appointed and qualified officer continues in office, no power exists to appoint another.²⁹ Provision is usually made for filling vacancies in elective offices by election.³⁰ Where a considerable time will elapse before the next regular election at which such vacancy can be filled, a special election may be authorized,³¹ or the vacancy may be filled by appointment until the next election and then by election.³² Sometimes, however, vacancies in elective offices are authorized to be filled by the council upon nomination by the mayor.³³

The mayor has no power to fill a vacancy by his individual appointment, although the council is not in session. Brumby v. Boyd, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 164, 66 S. W. 874. The fact that the mayor and board of aldermen might fail to agree upon the person to fill such a vacancy, and that the office would in consequence remain vacant, cannot operate to permit, on the ground of public policy or

(II) WHAT CONSTITUTES. In case of the death, removal, or resignation of an officer a vacancy occurs which may be filled in the usual way;³⁴ but the bare expiration of the term of an office does not create a vacancy, when the law declares that the incumbent must continue to discharge the duties of his office until his successor is elected and qualified.³⁵ So a vacancy exists where an officer fails to qualify within the time limited,³⁶ or where, by reason of any casualty, an office is without an incumbent.³⁷ The creation of new city wards entitled to aldermen may also be said to create vacant offices.³⁸

5. ELIGIBILITY³⁹ — a. In General. To be eligible to office, one must possess such qualifications as may be prescribed by the constitutional and statutory provisions.⁴⁰ No qualifications, however, other than those imposed by constitution or statute are necessary.⁴¹ Qualifications in addition to those prescribed by charter cannot be imposed by ordinance.⁴² Where the constitution does not prescribe the qualifications of municipal officers the legislature may do so,⁴³ but statutory provisions as to eligibility and qualifications in contravention of constitutional provisions are void.⁴⁴

b. Residence. In the absence of any constitutional or statutory provision prohibiting it, municipal officers may be elected from non-residents of the corporation,⁴⁵ or from those who have not been residents for a period sufficient to enable them to qualify as voters.⁴⁶ The rule is otherwise of course where there is an express statutory requirement that municipal officers must be residents of the corporation.⁴⁷ So in the absence of some constitutional or statutory requirement to that effect the officer need not continue his residence to hold his office, if a resident

Statute held not to require residence.—The charter of the town of Flora, section 2, provided that the board of aldermen shall consist of two members from each ward, and by section 3 it was provided that no person should be elected alderman unless he shall have previously resided in the town for one year, etc. It was held that a residence in the ward for which he was elected was not a necessary qualification of one elected to the board of aldermen. *Jones v. at date of election.⁴⁸ It is otherwise, however, where there is a charter provision that a municipal officer shall reside in the ward from which he is elected and that the office shall become vacant on the incumbent ceasing to be a resident thereof.⁴⁹ Where the constitution provides that every person entitled to vote at any election shall be eligible to any office elective by the people in the district where he resides, a statute providing that members at large of the assembly shall reside in specified parts of the city is void.⁵⁰ When so provided by the constitution a non-resident of the state cannot hold municipal office.⁵¹ Municipal candidates are within a constitutional provision making any elector of thirty days' residence qualified for office in his ward or district.⁵² And a statute providing that no person shall be eligible to the office of alderman, unless a resident of the ward where elected "for at least one year preceding such election," means one year next preceding the election.⁵³ Residence in an annexed territory for the statutory period immediately preceding annexation is equivalent to residence in the city.⁵⁴ In some cases "residence" has been held to be the equivalent of domicile.⁵⁵ Temporary absence for a transient object animo revertendi does not render one ineligible.⁵⁶

c. Right to Vote. Some statutory provisions make it a requisite of eligibility to municipal office that one seeking such office shall be an elector.⁵⁷ A secretary of a town council is not within the general borough law requiring that electors only shall be eligible to be borough officers.⁵⁸ And an employee at will, although holding a responsible position, is not a municipal officer, required to be a registered voter.⁵⁹ Under a charter providing that all persons qualified to vote shall be eligible for any municipal office a qualified voter is eligible to the office of city attorney, although not admitted to practice as an attorney at law.⁶⁰

d. Property. The legislature, when not restricted by any constitutional provision to the contrary, may impose a property qualification, on the right to hold municipal office.⁶¹ The requirement that an officer shall be a freeholder is satisfied where the wife is the owner of an estate in fee, the husband having a freehold jure uxoris.⁶² Where actual occupation of real estate of a certain value is required as a qualification it has been held sufficient that the candidate occupies land of the required value, as a copartner.⁶³ Ownership of property, even though purchased for the purpose of satisfying a statutory requirement as to ownership, will be sufficient,⁶⁴ and it is immaterial that the deed was not registered until after election.⁶⁵ If one owns property at the time of the election this will satisfy a requirement that he must at the time of the election be the owner of property assessed upon the last preceding assessment roll, even though the property be assessed thereon as that of the former owner; ⁶⁶ and under a statute which requires the mayor of a city to be a "taxpaying freeholder," a person who, at the time of his election, owned and paid taxes on personalty, and owned realty on which he was not liable for taxes for that year because acquired since the date of assessment, is eligible.⁶⁷

e. Delinquency or Misconduct. A statute designating the payment of taxes as a necessary qualification of membership in the board of aldermen is not in conflict with a constitutional provision that no person except a qualified elector shall be elected to any office in the state.⁶⁸ Under a statute making payment of taxes a qualification for office-holding, it is sufficient if the candidate pays his taxes while the election is in progress,⁶⁹ and even after election but before induction into office.⁷⁰ The office of mayor is one of profit and trust under a statute making ineligible for office any person who is in default as collector and custodian of public money and property.⁷¹ Under a statute rendering members of a council ineligible to succeed themselves or each other in case of an unauthorized increase of municipal indebtedness, the indebtedness meant is one created by contract or ordinance participated in or voted for by the members of the council whose eligibility is in question. One who voted against the indebtedness is not within the statute.⁷² The electors of a city, the mayor of which has been ousted for official misconduct, cannot in a special election limit the effect or the enforcement of the judgment of ouster by electing the unfaithful officer for the remainder of the forfeited term.⁷³

f. Conviction. Charter provisions disqualifying persons convicted of crime have been held not to include persons convicted in the federal court of an offense created by act of congress.⁷⁴ And one convicted of selling lottery tickets is not disqualified from holding office under a charter providing among other qualifications for a member of the municipal assembly that he shall not have been convicted of malfeasance in office, bribery, or other corrupt practices or crimes.⁷⁵ Expulsion from the council for disorderly conduct does not disqualify the expelled member from reelection, there being nothing in the charter conferring power of expulsion, which makes expulsion operate as a disqualification to hold office.⁷⁶

g. Holding Other Office or Employment. In the absence of any statutory or constitutional restrictions, one holding a municipal office is not for that reason ineligible for election or appointment to another municipal office.⁷⁷ And where the constitution does not prescribe the qualifications of municipal officers, nor declare who shall be eligible, the legislature may do so.⁷⁸ Where a constitutional provision forbids the enactment of special laws in conflict with general statutes on the same subject, and declares void a statute passed in violation thereof, a special statute, in conflict with a general statute providing that certain municipal officers shall not hold more than one municipal office, is void.⁷⁹ Within constitutional or statutory prohibitions against holding two offices the following have been held officers: Health inspectors;⁸⁰ a member of the board of health;⁸¹ deputy marshals;⁸² the mayor of a town;⁸³ a superintendent of the bureau of water;⁸⁴ members of school-boards;⁸⁵ and a poor director of a district of which the city was a part.⁸⁶ The following have been held not to be officers within the rule: An employee at will, although his duties require skill and his functions are of high character;⁸⁷ a sergeant at arms to the council of the municipal assembly;⁸⁸ a night-watchman of a federal post-office building appointed by the treasury department;⁸⁹ one appointed to print the laws of the United States in his newspaper;⁹⁰ and a master commissioner is not a state officer within constitutional inhibition against holding state and municipal office at the same time.⁹¹ So the office of councilman in a city, although a lucrative office in the ordinary sense of the words, has been held not a lucrative office within a constitutional provision that no person shall hold more than one lucrative office at the same time.⁹² It has also been held that a mayor is not a councilman or alderman within a statute making them ineligible, during their term of office, to any other office;⁹³ and although required by charter to supervise municipal elections, he is not a commissioner of election, so as to render him ineligible for reëlection.⁹⁴ A mayor, however, is a judicial officer and therefore ineligible to any other judicial office.⁹⁵ A retired officer of the United States army who has not been assigned to any duty after retirement does not hold a federal office within the meaning of a statute providing that certain municipal officers shall hold no other federal, state, or municipal office.⁹⁶ If a person already holding an office is elected or appointed to another incompatible with the one which he holds, and he accepts and qualifies as to the second, such acceptance and qualification operate ipso facto as a resignation of the former office.⁹⁷

h. Removal of Disability. Where the disability concerns the holding of the office, and is not merely a disqualification to be elected to an office, a person who is ineligible at the election will be entitled to enter upon and hold the office, if his disability be removed or cured before the issuance of the certificate, and before entering upon the discharge of the duties of the office for which he is elected.⁹⁸ This rule has been applied in the case of aliens,⁹⁹ and to persons who are in arrears for city taxes;¹ and it seems would be applicable to minors or persons who have not resided one year in the state.²

i. Civil Service Laws and Rules — (1) COMPETITIVE CLASS — (A) In General. Under the civil service laws and rules of several states, appointments and promotions are required to be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained so far as practicable by examination, which so far as practicable shall be competitive; provided, however, that honorably discharged soldiers from the army and navy of the United States in the late Civil war, who are citizens and residents of the state, shall be entitled to preference in appointment and promotion, without regard to the standing on any list from which such appointment or promotion may be made.³ The examination should properly be for both merit and fitness, but where the character of the examination certified to be for merit only is such as to cover the field of both merit and fitness, and is so regarded by the civil service board, their action in doubling the rating in lieu of holding a separate examination for fitness has been held not to contravene the principle of competitive examination.⁴ After the qualification of a candidate for office, the board should certify his name to be placed upon the eligible list,⁵ but they have no power to certify that he is entitled to be appointed to the office.⁶ Mandamus will lie against civil service commissioners to compel them to certify to the eligible list the name of a duly qualified applicant for office,⁷ and also to replace a name which they have unlawfully removed therefrom.⁸ The commissioners cannot arbitrarily strike the name of a qualified applicant for office from the eligible list;⁹ nor can they annul their decision as to a person's eligibility for appointment to office without meeting as a body to determine the question.¹⁰

(B) Promotions. Under the New York civil service law, the commission has power to require applicants for examination for promotion to have served a stated period in the next lower grade.¹¹ Such a rule is reasonable and proper,¹² and does not violate a constitutional provision that promotions in the civil service shall be made according to merit and fitness to be ascertained, so far as practicable, by examinations,¹³ or that promotions shall be based on merit and competition, as the section further provides that promotions shall be based on the superior qualifications of the person promoted as shown by his previous service.¹⁴

(c) Limitation as to Age. Honorably discharged soldiers and sailors are not disqualified from holding any position in the civil service on account of age, nor by reason of any disability, providing such disability does not render them incompetent to perform the duties of the position applied for.¹⁵

(ii) NON-COMPETITIVE CLASS. In the non-competitive class the appointing power may name or indicate to the civil service board the person whose appointment is desired, and, if the board finds that such person is qualified and fitted for such position, and so certifies, such appointment may then be made, and not until then.¹⁶ An appointment made before certification by the board as to qualification and fitness is void.¹⁷

j. Miscellaneous. The office of treasurer of a municipality is not a "civil office in this state" within a constitutional provision excluding the clergy from civil office.¹⁸ Having, as agent for an insurance company, contracts to insure municipal property does not disqualify from holding municipal office.¹⁹

6. *QUALIFICATION AND COMMISSION*²⁰ — a. In General. Qualification in this section is used, not with reference to the attributes and faculties necessary in a candidate for office, but to describe the post-election acts to be done by the successful candidate before assuming office, so that it may be alleged of him that he was duly elected and qualified.²¹ These qualifying acts are prescribed by law, and if the statute is mandatory they are essential conditions precedent to the assumption and performance of official functions and the enjoyment of the privileges and emoluments pertaining to the office;²² not so, however, if the statute is directory only.²³ These qualifying acts are almost invariably the taking of an official oath, and the giving of an official bond.²⁴ The failure of an officer elect to comply with these requirements within the time prescribed by law by express provision of some statutes operates as a waiver or surrender of right and title, and vacates the office,²⁵

and also forfeits all right to official salary or compensation.²⁶ But under others failure to qualify is at most only a ground of forfeiture in proceedings had for that purpose.²⁷ And the municipal authorities may waive the default and permit qualification after the expiration of the time fixed by statute therefor.²⁸ In case of a tie vote on the face of the returns the duty to qualify does not arise until the result of an election shall be finally determined in some mode provided by law; failure to qualify before such determination works no forfeiture and creates no vacancy.²⁹ So no forfeiture or vacancy ensues from the failure of others to perform their official duties in connection with the precedent acts to be performed by the candidate elect, if the officer elect has done what the law requires of him.³⁰

b. Official Oath. The nature of the oath, and its scope and contents, together with the time, place, and officer to administer, are prescribed by statute; and the omission of any material part of the oath is fatal to the whole.³¹ But defect in form or irregularity in mere formal matters are immaterial if there is substantial compliance with the statute.³² Although municipal charters prescribe who may administer the oath of office to municipal officers, the title of an officer will not be invalidated because the oath was administered by some other officer having power to administer oaths.³³ By the express provisions of some statutes failure to take the oath³⁴ or to take it in the prescribed time³⁵ operates to create a vacancy. Under others failure to take the oath does not create a vacancy but at most only furnishes a ground for forfeiture, and a vacancy can only be created by a direct Oaths held insufficient.—An oath “faithfully to discharge their duties” does not fulfill a prescribed form to discharge their duties “impartially, and to the best of their judgment.” In re Cambria St., 75 Pa. St. 357. So under a statute requiring councilmen to take oath faithfully and impartially to discharge the duties of their office, an oath as follows, “I hereby accept the office . . . and obligate myself to perform the duties of such office required by the constitution and by-laws of said borough, to the best of my ability,” not being in the form required, and not assuming obligation of statutory duties other than those of the borough constitution and by-laws, was in-

Time of taking oath.—A statute providing that any person theretofore elected to any office in any borough who shall, prior to the commencement of his term of office, have taken and subscribed and filed his oath of office, shall be deemed to have fully and properly qualified as such officer, fully qualifies a mayor of a borough who has been elected and has taken his oath of office more than ten days after his election, even though Pub. Laws (1897), p. 285, requiring him to take his oath of office within ten days after his election he still in effect, and although the act of 1906 was passed after the commencement of proceedings to determine the right to the office. *Atty.-Gen. v. Application of rule.—Under a general statute requiring the invoice and assessment to be signed and sworn to by the selectmen and assessors, where the selectmen of a town, in making an assessment for taxes, have been sworn to faithfully discharge all the duties of their office, it is immaterial that they were not sworn as assessors. *Odiorne v. proceeding for that purpose.³⁶ The refusal of the officer named therefor to administer the official oath, or his failure to certify, will not prejudice the officer elect, provided he has done or offered to do all the laws require of him to qualify.³⁷

c. Official Bond — (i) NECESSITY FOR GIVING BOND AND APPROVAL THEREOF. In the absence of some statute requiring bond the giving thereof is not a prerequisite of qualification to office.³⁸ If required by statute or ordinance the execution of the official bond is commonly held to be a condition precedent to assuming office, and such bond must be approved by the prescribed authority;³⁹ and the default of the officer in giving it will prove fatal to his claim to the office and its emoluments.⁴⁰ Nevertheless if a sufficient bond is tendered by one chosen to office mere neglect or failure of the proper authority to approve it will not defeat his right to the office.⁴¹ So there are some decisions in which the courts have held the statutes to be merely directory, and that failure to comply with the requirements does not vacate the office but is merely ground for forfeiture, and that the municipal authorities may waive the default and permit qualification after expiration of the time fixed.⁴² And under a statute providing that a village council may declare an office vacant for failure to give a bond, an office is not vacated by such failure until action by the council.⁴³

(ii) GROUND FOR REFUSAL TO APPROVE. It is no ground to refuse approval of a bond tendered by one appointed to office by the mayor that the latter attempted to recall the appointment and appoint another. An appointment once made by the mayor is beyond his power to recall.⁴⁴ Nor can the council refuse to approve the bond on the ground that it may prejudice the rights of the one occupying the office without his being heard, as any rights of his will be considered in quo warranto proceedings.⁴⁵ So the fact that the person attempted to be appointed city counselor by the mayor, after he had already appointed a person to the office, is occupying the position of city counselor, furnishes no ground for the council's refusal to approve the bond of the person first appointed.⁴⁶ And it has also been held that it is no ground to refuse approval of a bond that a contest of the election is pending.⁴⁷

(iii) REQUISITES AND SUFFICIENCY OF BOND AND APPROVAL. When the terms and conditions of the bond have been fixed by statutory or charter provision, the municipality cannot add others thereto, and the statutory bond is sufficient;⁴⁸ but it is necessary for the bond to comply with such requirements.⁴⁹

Although an ordinance provides that sureties on the bond of an officer shall be responsible for fines imposed against him, this is merely declaratory of the legal effect of the bond, which need not be so conditioned, the charter prescribing its form, not requiring it.⁵⁰ Validity of a bond given by the officer of a city subsequently consolidated with another, whose charter continues the office, is not impaired by the fact that the bond was given before the date when the charter took effect, the breach arising after such date.⁵¹ Acknowledgment of the bond is not essential to its validity,⁵² and the mere failure of the sureties to justify is not sufficient to invalidate the bond or work a forfeiture of the office.⁵³ Where the names of the sureties are written in the body of the bond and they signed the justification attached thereto, followed by the official oath of the officer, although they did not sign on the blank lines for that purpose at the end of the stipulations and conditions, the bond is valid.⁵⁴ And where a charter provides that the bond "shall be approved by the mayor and common council," and also that the mayor and aldermen shall constitute the common council, the bond must be approved by the mayor independently of the common council, and approval by the council does not include approval by the mayor, although he was a part of it.⁵⁵ Approval of a bond by a justice of the supreme court does not satisfy a requirement that before filing the bond the city clerk shall indorse and certify thereon "the resolution of the common council approving the same."⁵⁶ The doctrine of estoppel, as applied to official bonds, often cures irregularities and informalities of all kinds, and holds sureties liable whenever, on faith of their bond, their principal has assumed office, and performed its functions, and defaulted in duty.⁵⁷

d. Commission. While it is the fact of due election or appointment and qualification that entitles one to office, the inducting officer may require production of a commission or due certificate as the best proof of these facts.⁵⁸ But, after the officer has been inducted into and assumed his office, neither himself, his sureties, nor any other person can challenge his official right, title, or liability for want or informality of commission.⁵⁹ It is not essential that a written appointment to office should use the word "appoint." Either of the words, "nominate," "select," "designate" or "choose," may answer the same purpose, if used in the sense of "appoint."⁶⁰

7. DE FACTO OFFICERS. An officer de facto is one who exercises the duties of an office under color of an appointment or election to that office,⁶¹ or who has acted as such with the acquiescence of the public for a sufficient length of time to permit the presumption of an election or appointment, which presumption arises from the reputation he thus acquires as an officer from such acts, and the acquiescence of the public therein.⁶² There must, however, be a de jure office to be filled before there can be a de facto office.⁶³ He differs from an officer de jure, who is in all respects legally appointed and qualified to exercise the office.⁶⁴ A mere usurper or intruder is not an officer de facto.⁶⁵ He lacks the color of title and the public reputation and acquiescence essential to a de facto officer,⁶⁶ and his actions are always subject to collateral attack.⁶⁷ The acts of officers de facto in regard to public matters affecting the public interests are to be regarded as valid and binding; as much so as if the same acts had been performed in the same manner by an officer de jure.⁶⁸ Offices are created for the benefit of the public, Assessment for fire protection.—Under N. Y. Village Law (Laws (1897), pp. 377, 386, c. 414), §§ 43, 68, declaring that the board of water commissioners shall be appointed by the board of trustees, and that all offices, except certain specified ones, not including water commissioner, shall be appointive, a water commissioner verbally appointed by the board of trustees is an officer de facto for the purpose of making an assessment for and private parties are not permitted to inquire into the titles of persons clothed with the evidence of such offices, and in apparent possession of their powers and functions.⁶⁹ For the good order and peace of society their authority is to be respected and obeyed, until in some regular mode prescribed by law their title is investigated and determined.⁷⁰ Within these general rules the following have been held officers de facto: Councilmen irregularly elected by call of the sheriff instead of by their predecessors;⁷¹ persons not possessing the qualifications to hold office who have been elected and have qualified as officers;⁷² acting officers who have taken no oath and filed no bond,⁷³ or who were not freeholders as required by law and had not taken the oath;⁷⁴ officers holding over whose terms have expired;⁷⁵ officers continuing to act after moving beyond the corporate limits;⁷⁶ officers whose offices have been vacated by reason of the section in which they reside being detached from the village;⁷⁷ officers of a city under military government;⁷⁸ an officer elected by de facto aldermen;⁷⁹ officers elected by illegal votes;⁸⁰ and one erroneously counted into an office and holding the same.⁸¹

8. DEPUTIES AND ASSISTANTS. Where the charter so provides, the appointment of deputy officers cannot be made without the consent of the city council.⁸² And a charter providing that the city attorney "shall receive such compensation as the city council by ordinance or the order of appointment shall allow" and authorizing it "to audit and allow all just claims against the city, and direct the payment of such as are allowed" does not authorize the enactment of ordinances authorizing the city attorney "to appoint as many assistant attorneys as the mayor may deem necessary."⁸³ The duties of deputies are coextensive with the duties of their principals and their official acts as valid in all respects as the acts of the principals when appointed in accordance with charter provisions authorizing it.⁸⁴ A deputy tax commissioner does not hold a confidential relation to the tax commissioner and is not a "deputy" within the meaning of a statute prohibiting the removal except for cause after a hearing of a veteran soldier holding an appointive position in a city, provided this shall not apply to the position of "private secretary" or chief clerk or deputy of any official of department or to any other person holding a confidential relation to the appointing officer.⁸⁵ A statute providing that every officer who shall receive any money to be paid over to the city shall, before he shall be entitled to receive any salary, make a return to the controller showing the amount thereof, has been held

Enjoining exercise of functions.—De facto officers cannot be enjoined from performing the duties of their offices merely because they are such; it must also appear that they are abusing or about to abuse their possession of official power to the public injury, and that the public will sustain no damage by the suspension for an indefinite time of all city government. *State v. 9. TERM OF OFFICE⁸⁷ — a. Definition. "Term of office" is a phrase used to describe the period of time during which one regularly chosen by election or appointment and inducted into an office is entitled to hold the same, perform its functions, and enjoy its privileges and emoluments.⁸⁸

b. Commencement of Term. The time when a term of office commences is usually fixed by law.⁸⁹ When no date for beginning a term of office is fixed by law, the term usually begins on the day of appointment.⁹⁰ But when the appointee or person elected is allowed a designated time wherein to qualify by oath or bond, or both, the term begins from the date of qualification.⁹¹ Statutes fixing the time of commencement of a term in contravention of constitutional provisions are of course void.⁹²

c. Duration — (1) IN GENERAL. While the phrase "term of office" is usually understood to apply to a fixed and certain term established by law for the performance of certain official duties,⁹³ it may also be used with reference to a period uncertain in its duration depending upon the performance of the duties prescribed, or upon the favor of the appointing power.⁹⁴ The duration of the term may be fixed by the constitution.⁹⁵ If not so fixed, then it may be prescribed by

California—Who are officers within constitution.—The commissioners appointed under the act to fund the floating debt of the city of San Francisco, and to provide for the payment of the same, are not officers, within the meaning of Const. art. 11, § 7, which provides that no officer shall hold office for more than four years. People v. Middleton, 28 Cal. 603. The provisions of Const. art. 22, § 10, that the term of all officers elected at the first election, under the constitution, shall be one year shorter than the regular term, etc., refer only to the officers mentioned in section 20 of article 20, "as provided for by this Constitution," and not to municipal or county officers. Barton v. Kalloch, 56 Cal. 95.

Kentucky.—Const. § 160, providing that when certain city officers, including treasurer, assessor, and civil engineer, shall be appointed or elected as the general assembly may by a general law provide, their term of office shall be four years, and until their successors are appointed, does not apply to officers elected under a city charter before the passage of any general law regarding the election of such officers. Lexington v. Wilson, 97 Ky. 707, 31 S. W. 471, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 435. Under Const. § 167, providing that city officers shall be elected as provided in their charters, until the general election in 1893, and until their successors shall be qualified, at which time the terms of all such officers shall expire, and at that election all officers shall be elected, etc., the term of a mayor elected in October, 1892, expired at the general election in November, 1893. Jones v. Wilshire, 98 Ky. 391, 33 S. W. 199, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 989 [following Johnson v. Wilson, 95 Ky. 415, 25 S. W. 1057, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 852].

Appointment during good behavior.—A provision of a city charter placing the police and fire departments under a civil service commission, and declaring that the appointees thereof shall hold their positions during good behavior, is not invalid as violative of a constitutional provision declaring that the duration of offices not fixed by the constitution shall never exceed two years; the provision meaning that the appointee shall hold office during good be-the legislature, either in the charter or by general law,⁹⁶ or authority to prescribe it may be expressly or impliedly delegated to the municipality.⁹⁷ But a municipality cannot by ordinance fix a term for an office that has been placed by the legislature at the pleasure of the appointing power.⁹⁸ If no definite term be fixed, the office is held at the will of the authority which conferred it,⁹⁹ provided the term so conferred does not extend beyond that of the appointing power.¹

(11) CURTAILING FUTURE POWER OF APPOINTMENT. Except where the legislature has committed to the city the power to pass ordinances regulative of the office in question,² a municipal body in which the appointing power is lodged cannot, by appointing for a specific term, create a condition that curtails the power of appointment otherwise possessed by its successors.³

Elective and appointive offices.—Under statutes providing for a different tenure of office for elective and appointive officers, the word "appointment" generally means the designation of a person to hold an office by an individual, or a limited number of individuals to whom the power of selection has been delegated, while the word "election" is properly applied to the choice of an officer by the votes of those upon whom the law has conferred the right of electing such officer. 4. People v. Erie County, 42 N. Y. App. Div. 510, 59 N. Y. Suppl. 476 [affirming 26 Misc. 233, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 318], holding that a charter provision that the term of office of a ward supervisor elected by the common council to fill a vacancy shall continue until the next 31st day of December of an odd-numbered year, violates Const. art. 10, § 5, providing that "in case of elective officers

The formalities required by statute for filling vacancies must be strictly complied with.⁵ And an election to fill a supposed vacancy is of course of no effect where no vacancy exists.⁶ Where a statute provides that all vacancies in the office of councilman shall be filled by appointment by the common council, when a new ward is created, the common council has power to fill the vacancies thereby made in the common council.⁷ As a general rule one appointed to fill a vacant office holds only until the expiration of the regular term.⁸ And if by mistake of law he is elected before this unexpired term for a full term, he can hold only for the unexpired term for which he is appointed.⁹ Where, by constitution or statute, the officer appointed ad interim holds only till the next municipal election, the vacancy is filled by election for the rest of the regular term.¹⁰ But an ad interim appointee holds until a lawful election, and cannot be displaced by a second appointee.¹¹ Under a statute providing that an officer shall hold over after the expiration of his term until his successor shall be chosen and qualified, but after the expiration of his term the office shall be vacant for the purpose of choosing his successor, where there is a failure, in an annual village election, to elect a trustee for a ward, a new election must be had for that purpose.¹² Under a constitutional provision that in case of elective officers no person appointed to fill a vacancy shall hold his office by virtue of such appointment longer than the commencement of the political year next succeeding the first annual election after the happening of the vacancy, the term of a ward supervisor elected by a common council to fill a vacancy expires on the first of January next succeeding the first annual election after the happening of the vacancy.¹³ Where an election held to fill a vacancy is void, one previously appointed to fill the vacancy continues to hold under that appointment, although he was voted for at the void election and declared elected.¹⁴ Where a mayor mistakenly supposing that he has

Construction of particular provisions as to holding over.—All powers formerly exercised by the assessors of the old city of Brooklyn were by the Greater New York charter devolved, not upon successors eo nomine, but upon other boards or officials, leaving the old board, on Jan. 1, 1898, without any function, power, right, or duty; and therefore section 1613, which, for the purpose of avoiding any possible interregnum, provided that all officers should hold over under the new charter until their successors should be elected and appointed, did not operate to thus continue in office the former board of assessors. People v. Feitner, 30 N. Y. App. Div. 241, 51 N. Y. Suppl. 1094 [affirmed in 156 N. Y. 694, 51 N. E. 1093]. Greater New York Charter (Laws (1897), c. 378), abolishing the village of Richmond Hill, and providing (section 1613) that all persons in office when the act takes effect shall remain until their successors have qualified, applies only to officers whose successors are provided for in the act. Richmond Hill Fire Dept. v. Davies, 25 Misc. (N. Y.) 683, 54 N. Y. Suppl. 1077.

statute providing that such officers shall, after the adoption of the act, exercise the powers conferred on like officers until their successors are elected and qualified, mean the officers elected at the municipal election of the previous year, and not those elected at the time the law was adopted. Crook v. People, 106 Ill. 237. A constitutional provision that, in the absence of any contrary provision, all officers now or hereafter elected or appointed, subject to the right of resignation, shall hold office during their official term, and until their successors shall be duly elected or appointed and qualified, applies to the officers of a municipality. State v. Lund, 167 Mo. 228, 66 S. W. 1062, 67 S. W. 572.

A city attorney is within a constitutional provision that, with the exception of members of the general assembly and members of any board or assembly, two or more of whom are elected at the same time, every person holding any municipal civil office shall, unless removed according to law, exercise the duties of his office till his successor is duly qualified. People v. Herring, 30 Colo. 445, 71 Pac. 413.

Elective officers.—Some of the provisions apply to elective officers only. Sherman v. Des Moines, 100 Iowa 88, 69 N. W. 410; Stubbs v. Galveston, 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 143.

Reasonable time for qualification of successor.—The charter of the city of Montgomery provides for biennial elections of the city clerk, as of the mayor and aldermen; and the provision for his continuance in office, in addition to that term, "until his successor is duly elected and qualified," is only intended to cover the reasonable time, varying with circumstances, which may be necessary for his successor to qualify. Montgomery v. Hughes, 65 Ala. 201.

Retroactive effect.—A constitutional provision that when certain city officers shall be appointed or elected as the general assembly may by general law provide, their term of office shall be four years, and until their successors are appointed, does not apply to officers elected under a city charter before the passage of any general law regarding the election of such officers. Lexington v. Wilson, 97 Ky. 707, 31 S. W. 471, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 435.

Officers failing to perform their duty to order or hold an election for their successors are subject to ouster at any time after the expiration of their term, even though the statute authorizes them to hold over till their successors are elected and qualified. People v. Bartlett, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 422.

appointment is valid.¹⁷ Even in the absence of some constitutional or statutory provision that officers shall hold over until their successors are elected, or appointed and qualified, municipal officers hold over until election or appointment, and qualification, unless there is some constitutional or statutory restriction express or implied to the contrary,¹⁸ as is sometimes the case.¹⁹ Thus the phrase "and no longer,"²⁰ or "unless sooner removed,"²¹ following the period fixed for the term, operates to terminate the office at the expiration of the period, and a vacancy instantly ensues; and thereafter the incumbent is not even a de facto officer.²² Under a statute providing that certain officers shall hold their offices for one year from the second Monday in April of the year when elected, and until their successors are qualified, the time between the election of a successor and the time he actually qualifies is a part of the preceding term, although the party elected is his own successor.²³ The abolition of the municipality of which one was an officer destroys the "hold over" incident of his office.²⁴ Officers lawfully holding over continue to exercise the functions and enjoy the privileges and emoluments of office.²⁵

f. Enlargement or Abridgment of Term. A constitutional amendment providing that all officers whose successors would under the law as it existed at the time of their election be elected in an odd-numbered year shall hold their office for an additional year and until their successors are qualified applies only to county and township officers and does not operate to extend the term of an incumbent of a municipal office.²⁶ The legislative power of the state is absolute with respect to all offices that it creates where no constitutional restriction is placed upon its power with reference to such offices.²⁷ In the absence of such restriction it may shorten or lengthen the term of an incumbent in office,²⁸ but any statute of this character is of course void if in contravention of the organic law;²⁹ and a statute creating a vacancy in the appointive public office of an officer of a designated municipality, and enlarging the present incumbent's term from its expiration until a designated date, being unconstitutional in so far as it enlarged the present incumbent's term, the appointee of the common council of the city at the termination of the incumbent's previous term, as against such incumbent, was entitled to the custody of the office and the possession of the books and papers thereof.³⁰ Where a charter or statute has fixed the term of an office, a municipality cannot, by ordinance, vary the term;³¹ nor is it competent for the appointing power to prescribe a fixed term when the legislature has provided for a holding during good behavior.³² So an appointment for less than the term fixed is valid for the full statutory period,³³ even though there be a

Statutes lengthening term.—A statute providing that the qualified voters of each ward in a city of the third class shall elect "a properly qualified person, according to law, to act as county assessor under existing laws, who shall serve for three years," does not establish a new office of county assessor, or provide for the election of a new officer of that name, but merely lengthens the term of the official charged with making the assessment for county purposes to three years, whatever may be his legal title. Kuhlman v. Smeltz, 171 Pa. St. 440, 33 Atl. 358. Ind. Rev. St. (1894) § 3476, in extending the term of office of city attorney (an officer appointed by the council) from May to September, provided the consent of his surety to such extension was filed, and conferring on the common council power to remove such officers as they might appoint under its provisions, amending Rev. St. (1881) § 3043, under which the council already possessed the power of removal of the city attorney, extended his term subject to the council's right to abolish the office, or remove its incumbent, at its pleasure, at any time between May and September. State v. Wilson, 142 Ind. 102, 41 N. E. 361. And see State v. Witt, 72 Ohio St. 584, 74 N. E. 1075.

Statutes not extending term.—Under Colo. Laws (1901), pp. 384, 385, providing that aldermen should be elected in 1901 for the term of two years, provided that those elected prior to 1901 whose terms would not expire until 1902 should hold over for the term for which they were elected, "and until the second Monday after the election to be held in April, A. D. 1902, at which time their terms shall expire, and the city council . . . shall select their successors," the term of office of such alderman was not extended beyond April, 1902, although no election was held in that month. People v. Wright, 30 Colo. 439, 71 Pac. 365.

A. 831, holding that "the continuance of a person in office by legislative interference, beyond the specific term for which he was elected or appointed, is equivalent to a new appointment to the office, and void if the office be one that the legislature cannot fill by direct appointment or election."

Statutes held unconstitutional.—An amendment to a city charter, purporting to extend the term of city magistrates, is in violation of a constitutional provision requiring existing city officers to be elected or appointed by such authorities as the legislature shall designate, such act being in effect an appointment by the legislature, and void. Kelly v. Van Wyck, 35 Misc. (N. Y.) 210, 71 N. Y. Suppl. 814.

Removal of constitutional objection.—Although an act providing a new charter for a town and continuing the terms of the "present incumbents" of certain offices required by the constitution is so far unconstitutional, yet where the charter is submitted to the people before it becomes law and is voted on and accepted by them, the constitutional objection is removed. By this means the officers must be understood as elected for their terms as extended by the charter. Clarke v. Rogers, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 929.

custom to the contrary, previously acquiesced in by the officer.³⁴ And the common provision that an officer shall hold till his successor is duly elected and qualified is not regarded as a violation of constitutional inhibition against extension of official term, but rather as an emergent provision for temporary purposes.³⁵ An act providing that the term of any office in any particular city or city of any particular class "shall be three years" does not extend the tenure of any present holder of such office, but applies only to terms beginning in futuro.³⁶

g. Effect of Municipal Transition From One Class to Another. The term of a municipal officer is liable to change by the transition which the corporation undergoes in process of reorganization,³⁷ or in passing from one class or grade of corporation to another.³⁸ In such transitions the legislature usually makes provision for enlarging or abridging the terms of office so as to obviate conflict or hiatus;³⁹ but lacking such provision the courts lend their aid to the same orderly purpose by holding that the old officers hold over till the election and qualification of the officers of the new organization.⁴⁰ But where a hiatus occurs by the dissolution of a corporation without immediate connection with its successor, the term of course ends with the life of the municipality.⁴¹ Provisions for extending terms in such cases of transition are held to apply to fixed terms, and do not include officials holding only during the pleasure of the appointing power.⁴² They apply to officers, although the offices which they hold are not elective.⁴³ And where the transition was from a municipality with a single council to one bi-cameral, ordinances enacted, proceedings taken, and contracts made by the single council in the period elapsing between the date of change and the election under the new organization were valid.⁴⁴ Where on transition of a municipality from one class to another, there is no provision in the statute declaring a certain office vacant, and the duties under it are in each case substantially the same, the transition does not vacate the office.⁴⁵

10. RESIGNATION AND ABANDONMENT⁴⁶ — a. Right to Resign. At common law a person elected to a municipal office was obliged to accept it and perform its duties, and he subjected himself to a penalty by refusal. An office was regarded as a burden which the appointee was bound, in the interest of the community and of good government, to bear.⁴⁷ From this it followed of course that,

Suppl. 350], holding that where the term for which a municipal officer may be appointed is supposed to have been shortened by a statute which is invalid, a provision in his appointment fixing the termination of his term at the time it would end if the statute were valid will be regarded as surplusage, and the officer is entitled to hold for his full term.

after an office was conferred and assumed, it could not be laid down without the consent of the appointing power; and this is the law in many states,⁴⁸ although there are some authorities which seem to recognize the absolute right of a municipal officer to resign his office, and hold that the resignation is complete without acceptance.⁴⁹ When the law provides that an incumbent shall hold office until his successor is elected and qualified, he is not, in most jurisdictions, relieved from the duties of his office even by the acceptance of his resignation, but must await the qualification of his successor,⁵⁰ but the contrary has been held.⁵¹

b. Form and Sufficiency—(1) IN GENERAL. A resignation may be either express or implied.⁵² Where the form and manner of resignation are proscribed by law, the requirements must be strictly complied with to make a resignation effectual.⁵³

(II) IMPLIED RESIGNATION—(A) By Abandonment of Office. Abandonment of an office constitutes an implied resignation.⁵⁴ A single wilful absence or act of delinquency does not constitute abandonment.⁵⁵ The absence must be so long continued as to justify the presumption of abandonment,⁵⁶ and the time necessary to raise such presumption must be a mixed question of law and fact to be determined from the circumstances of each case.⁵⁷

(B) By Accepting Incompatible Office. At common law the acceptance by one who holds a municipal office of a second office incompatible therewith operates ipso facto as a resignation of the first.⁵⁸ But if the duties of the second office are not incompatible, either by nature or statute, with those of the first, the officer may occupy both offices.⁵⁹ The same rule obtains where the holding of two offices by one person at the same time is forbidden by constitution or statute. In such case the illegality of holding the two offices is declared by positive law, and incompatibility in fact is not essential.⁶⁰ Although the offices be incompatible there is no abandonment or implied resignation by mere election or appointment to the second office; ⁶¹ actual acceptance of the second office by the officer is essential to such implication.⁶²

c. Acceptance. The acceptance may be express or implied; ⁶³ it may be manifested by a formal declaration, or by the appointment of a successor.⁶⁴ So the appointment of the incumbent of an office to another office is equivalent to an agreement to accept the appointee's resignation of the former office.⁶⁵

d. Effect. Where acceptance is necessary mere tender of resignation does not affect the officer's status or relation,⁶⁶ but a complete resignation operates to sever the officer from the office and creates a vacancy.⁶⁷ A fraudulent resignation will not, however, relieve an officer from the discharge of duties imposed by law; ⁶⁸ nor can an officer, by resignation, take from the city any remedy for wrongs committed by him during his term of office.⁶⁹

An attendant on the court of general sessions in New York city, being appointed by the judges thereof, is an officer of the court, and not of the city, although his salary is payable out of the city treasury, and hence is not within Consol. Act (1882), c. 410, § 55, providing that any person holding an office under the city shall be deemed to have vacated it by accepting any office under the government of the United States or the state. *O'Brien v. operates to render the office vacant.⁷¹ And these statutes have been held to apply as well to cases when an officer ceases to be a resident because of a legislative change of boundaries as to cases where he ceases to be a resident of his own volition,⁷² although there is some authority to the contrary.⁷³ Where, however, a statute merely provides that a councilman shall be a resident of the ward at the time of his election, his subsequent removal to another ward does not create a vacancy, as he is not an officer of the ward electing him but of the entire city.⁷⁴ Where a statute provides that the acceptance of another office by a commissioner shall cause his office to become vacant, the acceptance disqualifies the commissioner from any further action as commissioner without a judicial determination that the vacancy exists.⁷⁵ The fact that officers while candidates pledged themselves to a certain course of action, not unlawful, does not disqualify them from performance of their official duties.⁷⁶ Under a city charter providing that members of the council "shall, during the whole term for which they are elected be possessed of all the qualifications . . . and if any one of them during the time for which he was elected shall fail to retain all the qualifications necessary to render him eligible to election," then any taxpaying citizen may file a petition to have his office declared vacant, such remedy does not apply where the councilman was not qualified when elected, in which case his predecessor would be entitled to the remedy by mandamus.⁷⁷

b. Suspension. Power to suspend an officer holding for a fixed term depends upon authority conferred by charter or statute.⁷⁸ Where a resolution is adopted declaring that a designated officer is presented to the board of aldermen for impeachment, an impeachment is "pending" from the time of the resolution within a statute providing that, pending impeachment and until the final disposition thereof, the party shall not exercise the functions of his office.⁷⁹ According to some decisions power to suspend is not to be inferred from power to remove.⁸⁰ Others hold that the power of removal includes the power of suspension pending trial.⁸¹ Where an officer is suspended until the legislature shall act upon the subject and the legislature adjourns without taking any action he is entitled to resume his office immediately on adjournment.⁸²

remove municipal officers exists are usually designated by the organic law of the state, or by the charters of the municipalities.⁸¹ The purpose of this section is to determine what power of removal exists, in the absence of any such provision. On this question there is considerable conflict of opinion. According to some decisions, in the absence of any constitutional or statutory provisions therefor, a municipality has incidental power to remove for cause, "all corporate officers, whether appointive or elective," and the power may be exercised by the body which represents the municipality in the exercise of its corporate powers,⁸⁵ it being said that "the power to remove a corporate officer from his office for reasonable and just cause is one of the common-law incidents of all corporations."⁸⁶ It was further held that power of removal conferred by charter is neither greater nor less than the municipality would have had, if the charter had been silent on the subject.⁸⁷ In other decisions in which it was not necessary to lay down the rule so broadly it was held that in the absence of all constitutional provision or statutory regulation, the power of removal "of appointive officers" is incident to the power of appointment.⁸⁸ This, however, has been denied in other cases.⁸⁹ And as respects "elective officers," there are decisions holding that there is no inherent power of removal in any officer or municipal board; but that the power must be conferred by constitutional or statutory provisions.⁹⁰

(B) Under Constitutional or Statutory Authority. The power of removal and the persons or tribunal who shall exercise it is sometimes provided for by the organic law of the state.⁹¹ And in the absence of any constitutional restriction against its so doing, the legislature may vest the power of removal in any officer or board which it may see fit to designate;⁹² and the power to remove may also

Statutes conferring power.—A statute providing that all the corporate powers of the corporation shall be exercised by the common council confers on it the power of removal of officers for misconduct, which at common law is vested in the corporation at large. Richards v. Clarksburg, 30 W. Va. 491, 4 S. E. 774. So where a charter of a city authorized the board of trustees to remove from office any appointees, for misconduct, or to impose a penalty of perpetual disqualification for office. The fact that the latter penalty might be beyond the power of the board of trustees to inflict did not deprive them of the power, given under the charter, to try charges preferred against its appointees, the power to impose the other penalty being unquestioned. Croly v. Sacramento, 119 Cal. 229, 51 Pac. 323. For other statutes held to confer power see State v. Noblesville, 157 Ind. 31, 60 N. E. 704.

Statutes not taking away right of removal.—A proviso in a statute continuing city officers then in office until a designated date, being intended to fix a uniform time when the terms of such officers shall commence, does not take from the council the power granted by a previous proviso, of removing an officer before that date. Goodwin v. State, 142 Ind. 117, 41 N. E. 359. So the power of the city council to remove municipal officers having been separated by statute from the power of appointing, which was given by such statute to the mayor, the restoration to the city council of said power of appointment by such statute did not take away from it such power of removal. Atty-Gen. v. Cahill, 169 Mass. 18, 47 N. E. 433. And it has been held that a statute which confers on the superior court jurisdiction to remove municipal officers for official misconduct and neglect does not subordinate and control a provision of a freeholders' charter, providing for the removal of such officers by the municipal board of trustees, which they leave in full operation, prescribing merely a concurrent remedy, and are not, as so construed, displaced as to the municipality by a constitutional provision declaring that municipal charters shall be controlled by general laws "except in municipal affairs." Coffey v. Sacramento County Super. Ct., 147 Cal. 525, 82 Pac. 75.

Statutes held not in conflict with constitutional provisions.—The power given the courts by constitution to remove municipal officers has been held not exclusive, and a city charter authorizing the common council to remove recorders of the recorders' court, on impeachment proceedings, is valid. State v. Adams, 46 La. Ann. 830, 15 So. 490. It has also been held that a statute providing that each branch of city councils "shall have power and authority to vacate the seat of any member for misbehavior, neglect of duty or other misdemeanor" is not in conflict with a constitutional provision that all officers shall hold their offices on the condition that they behave themselves well while in office, and shall be removed on conviction of misbehavior in office or of any infamous crime, and that all officers elected by the people shall be removed by the governor for reasonable cause after due notice and full hearing, on the address of two thirds of the senate. Com. v. Sanderson, 1 Pa. Dist. 714, 11 Pa. Co. Ct. 593.

Change of constitution not invalidating power conferred by statute.—The constitution of 1849 provided that the judicial power of the commonwealth should be vested in a court of appeals, the courts established by the constitution, and such inferior courts "as the General Assembly may, from time to time, establish"; and such provision was changed in the later constitution, which provides that the judicial power shall be vested on the mayor,⁹⁷ on the mayor and aldermen,⁹⁸ or on the governor,⁹⁹ and power so conferred cannot be delegated¹ or exercised by any other than in the senate, when sitting as a court of impeachment, and in the court of appeals and the courts established by the constitution. It was held that the change did not invalidate Gen. St. § 2781, providing that executive and ministerial officers in cities shall be removable by the board of aldermen "sitting as a court," since the power conferred on such board is not strictly judicial, and it does not act as a court of impeachment. Gibbs v. Louisville, 99 Ky. 490, 36 S. W. 524, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 341.

Previous passage of ordinance unnecessary.—Where the statute provides that the council may remove elective officers for cause, it may sit as a court of impeachment without the previous passage of an ordinance regulating the manner of impeachment and removal. State v. Walker, 68 Mo. App. 110.

What officers removable.—A city charter provided that the city council should have power to remove any officer after due notice, etc., and the next article provided that, in addition to the "foregoing power of removal," the council should have power to remove by resolution any officer elected by them. It was held that the phrase, "any officer" in the former provision, referred to all officers, whether elected by the people or by the council. Riggins v. Richards, 97 Tex. 229, 77 S. W. 946.

97. State v. Kennelly, 75 Conn. 704, 55 Atl. 555; Hogan v. Collins, 183 Mass. 43, 66 N. E. 429; Williams v. Gloucester, 148 Mass. 256, 19 N. E. 248; Keenan v. Goodwin, 17 R. I. 649, 24 Atl. 148; State v. Williams, 6 S. D. 119, 60 N. W. 410.

Statutes held to confer power.—At any time a charter providing that, within six months after commencement of his term, the mayor, elected for a full term, may remove any public officer holding by appointment from the mayor, with certain exceptions, authorizes the first mayor to remove the officers indicated within the time stated. People v. Nixon, 158 N. Y. 221, 52 N. E. 1117 [affirming 32 N. Y. App. Div. 513, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 230]. For other statutes held to confer power on mayor see Hogan v. Collins, 183 Mass. 43, 66 N. E. 429; People v. Van Wyck, 159 N. Y. 509, 54 N. E. 31 [affirming 34 N. Y. App. Div. 573, 54 N. Y. Suppl. 675].

For statutes conferring power on mayor to remove for acts committed prior to his incumbency see Avery v. Studley, 74 Conn. 272, 50 Atl. 752.

Provisions held not to limit power of mayor.—By the terms of Laws (1890), § 5, art. 3, c. 37, which provides, that "the mayor shall have power to remove any officer appointed by him, whenever he shall be of the opinion that the interests of the city demand such removal, but he shall report the reasons for such removal to the council at its next regular meeting," power is conferred upon the mayor of a city incorporated under that act to remove any officer of the city appointed by him "whenever he shall be of the opinion that the interests of the city demand such removal." And the last clause of the section, which requires the mayor to report "the reasons for such removal to the council at its next regular session," does not constitute a qualification or limitation upon such power of removal by the mayor. State v. Williams, 6 S. D. 119, 60 N. W. 410. And an ordinance as to hearing complaints against police officers for "any irregularity, not sufficient to call for his removal from the force," applies to minor irregularities, and does not limit the power of removal vested in the mayor by the charter. Williams v. Gloucester, 148 Mass. 256, 19 N. E. 348.

Constitutionality of statutes.—A charter authorizing the mayor to suspend or remove constables from office is not in conflict with a constitutional provision relating to the removal of officers elected by a county, township, or school-district, since such section does not refer to officers of a city. Brandau v. Detroit, 115 Mich. 643, 74 N. W. 210.

98. Andrews v. King, 77 Me. 224, holding that where an officer is "subject after hearing to removal by the mayor, by and with the advice and consent of the aldermen," the hearing must be by the "board of mayor and aldermen." A hearing by the aldermen alone is not sufficient, even if by the officer's consent.

President of board acting as mayor.—Under a statute providing that in the absence of the mayor of the city of New York the president of the board of aldermen becomes acting mayor, he can with the consent of the board of aldermen legally remove for cause the city chamberlain and appoint another in his place; another statute vesting the power to remove in the mayor on the consent of the aldermen. Devlin v. Platt, 20 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 167. So under a statute providing that the mayor may remove, for cause shown, with the consent of the majority of the council, any elective officer, and that the council, in like manner, may remove by a two-thirds vote independently of the mayor; also that the mayor shall be president of the council, and that a president pro tem shall be elected to preside in his absence, the council has power, when presided over by the president pro tem, to try the mayor, as a court of impeachment. State v. Walker, 68 Mo. App. 110.

99. See Atty.-Gen. v. Detroit, 112 Mich. 145, 70 N. W. 450, 37 L. R. A. 211, holding that a statute conferring on the governor power to remove all city officers chosen by the electors of any city, was not repealed as to the mayor of the city of Detroit by the charter of such city, which provides for the removal of all city officers other than the mayor.

1. People v. Tracy, 35 N. Y. App. Div. 265, 54 N. Y. Suppl. 1070. And see People v. Blair, 82 Ill. App. 570, holding that the fact the board or tribunal on whom it is conferred.² Where power is conferred on an officer to remove officers designated in the statute, the officer on whom the power is conferred cannot remove any other officers than those so designated.³ By express constitutional provision in one state⁴ if the duration of the term of one appointed to office is not prescribed by law, the power appointing a person to office may also remove him.⁵ Where the power of removal is fixed by statute the doctrine of removal as incidental to the power of appointment has no application.⁶

(ii) WHETHER REMOVABLE AT PLEASURE OR FOR CAUSE. By the express provisions of some constitutions an officer appointed for an indefinite time is removable at the will or pleasure of the appointing power.⁷ By other constitutional provisions appointive officers are removable at pleasure, although the appointment be for a fixed time.⁸ And in the absence of constitutional restrictions the legislature may authorize the appointing power to remove an appointive officer at pleasure,⁹ and also elective officers.¹⁰ And when a power of removal is thus expressly given by statute to be exercised at pleasure, the officer upon whom it is conferred is made the sole and exclusive judge as to the propriety of its exercise.¹¹ And it is immaterial that the removal was in fact induced by reprehensible motives.¹² In the absence of statutory authority an officer hold-that a mayor has been derelict in his duty to nominate a city marshal, and that the preservation of public order demands the appointment of such an officer, does not justify the council in taking the reins of power from the mayor and appointing a mayor pro tem who will make the nomination.

2. State v. Donovan, 89 Me. 448, 36 Atl. 982 (holding that power of removal conferred on the mayor and council does not authorize removal by the mayor alone); Stahlhut v. Bauer, 51 Nebr. 64, 70 N. W. 496 (holding that a statute providing that the mayor and council of a city of a designated class can provide for removing officers of such city for misconduct does not clothe the council with power to remove the mayor).

3. Metsker v. Neally, 41 Kan. 122, 21 Pac. 206, 13 Am. St. Rep. 269; Palmer v. Foley, 44 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 308 [reversed on other grounds in 36 N. Y. Super. Ct. 14, 45 How. Pr. 110].

Application of rule.—A charter authorizing the mayor to remove for cause any one appointed to office by him refers to the officers appointed by the mayor, and not to individuals appointed by the mayor's appointees. O'Neil v. Mansfield, 47 Misc. (N. Y.) 516, 95 N. Y. Suppl. 1009.

the city of Gloucester (St. (1873) c. 246), providing, in section 11, that the mayor and aldermen shall have full and exclusive power to appoint police officers, "the same to remove at pleasure," and in section 9, that the mayor may, if in his opinion the public good requires, "remove, with the consent of the appointing power, any officer" appointed upon his nomination, authorizes the mayor with such consent to remove police officers, including the appointees of a predecessor without a hearing or cause shown. Williams v. Gloucester, 148 Mass. 256, 19 N. E. 348. So it has been held that under the provision of a charter authorizing the city council, when assembled from time to time, to elect and appoint a street supervisor, the city council has power to remove an incumbent and appoint his successor at their pleasure. Mathis v. Rose, 64 N. J. L. 45, 44 Atl. 875 [affirmed in 64 N. J. L. 726, 49 Atl. 1135]. For other statutes held to confer power see London v. Franklin, 118 Ky. 105, 80 S. W. 514, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 2306; Rogers v. Congleton, 84 S. W. 521, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 109; Magnar v. St. Louis, 179 Mo. 495, 78 S. W. 782; People v. Scully, 35 Misc. (N. Y.) 613, 72 N. Y. Suppl. 123.

What officers removable.—A charter authorizing the mayor to remove at pleasure, during the first six months of their respective terms, all officers appointed by him, applies to an officer who has been reappointed to a second term. MacLellan v. Marine, 98 Md. 53, 56 Atl. 359. It also applies to appointees of his predecessor. MacLellan v. Marine, supra.

11. State v. Kennelly, 75 Conn. 704, 55 Atl. 555; People v. New York, 82 N. Y. 491. And see Com. v. Willis, 42 S. W. 1118, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 962; State v. Doherty, 25 La. Ann. 119, 13 Am. Rep. 131.

ing for a definite term is not removable at pleasure, but only for cause.¹³ The reason of the rule is the evident repugnance between the fixed term and the power of arbitrary removal; and the effect of the rule is that the right to hold during a fixed term can only be overcome by an express grant of power to remove at pleasure.¹⁴ Under a constitutional provision giving the governor power to remove appointive officers at pleasure, officers holding elective offices cannot be removed except for cause.¹⁵ Officers can of course only be removed for cause when there are statutory requirements to that effect.¹⁶ Where provision is made for the removal of officers for cause, the power to remove at will is excluded.¹⁷ By the term "for cause," "just cause" is meant.¹⁸

(iii) GROUNDS. In the absence of statutory specification the sufficiency of the cause for removal is to be determined with reference to the character of the office and the qualifications necessary to fill it. The misconduct for which an officer may be removed must be found in his acts and conduct in the office from which the removal is sought, and must constitute a legal cause of removal and one that affects the proper administration of his office.¹⁹ If the constitution enumerates certain grounds for removal, and none are prescribed by statute, the only grounds for removal are those prescribed by the constitution.²⁰ And where grounds are specified by the municipal charter, the power of removal cannot be exercised except on the ground so specified.²¹ The grounds must have arisen after election or appointment.²² It is good ground for removal of an entire city council that it failed to organize within the time prescribed by law merely because of a failure to agree on the officers to be chosen.²³ So it has been held sufficient ground for removal from office that the incumbent has been guilty of soliciting bribes,²⁴ receiving bribes for official influence and votes,²⁵ or of intoxication for periods of fifteen minutes each while performing his duties,²⁶ or soliciting campaign expenses from officers of other departments,²⁷ persistent refusal to sign orders for the pay of city officers to which they are entitled and without which they cannot be paid,²⁸ refusal

An inferential authority to remove at pleasure cannot be deduced, since the existence of a defined term ipso facto negatives such an inference, and implies a contrary presumption, that is, that the incumbent shall hold to the end of his term, subject to removal for cause. *State v. to obey municipal ordinances,²⁹ negligence and incompetency on the part of the officer in regard to some particular work which it was his duty to do or to supervise,³⁰ entering into stipulations with litigants against the city not to appeal from adverse decisions,³¹ being interested in the purchase of real estate by the municipality,³² having an interest in a municipal contract,³³ commission of an assault by striking a person with a pistol,³⁴ or appropriation of municipal funds coming into his hands and denial when inquiries were made concerning the matter by the proper officials that there was anything payable.³⁵ On the other hand, it is not ground for removal that the officer removed appointed as a police officer one under prosecution for resisting an officer,³⁶ or approved a tax return and allowed it to go on the tax duplicate knowing it to be too low in amount, such acts being useless and without legal effect, because there was no statute requiring such consent or approval,³⁷ or refused to sign an order for payment for property purchased by the city, on the ground that the financial condition of the city did not warrant such an expenditure,³⁸ or demanded a reasonable fee for certifying for a purchaser of city bonds the minutes of the council relating to the bond issue, the demand having been promptly withdrawn upon an intimation that such certifying might fairly be considered city business.³⁹ So the making of a statement, in confidence by a member of a council of a city to the mayor, that he had heard rumors reflecting on the integrity of other members of the council, is no ground for removal, although the informant on whom he relies fails to substantiate his statement.⁴⁰ Mere political bias or personal dislike by the officer having the power of removal is not cause.⁴¹ So it has been held that a statute making it unlawful for any candidate to provide, or agree to provide, money to be used by another in making any bet on any event arising out of the election, and declaring that a violation thereof shall be a misdemeanor, does not authorize the removal by the board of trustees of a mayor who has violated it, in the absence of a prosecution and conviction of such offense in a court of competent jurisdiction.⁴² And it has also been held that the rule that a municipal officer shall be responsible for any want

from office for violation of a statute providing that no village officer shall be interested in a contract with the village, defendant did not deny knowledge of the law, and admitted that he was in office when the law went into effect, and knew that the previous law prohibited such contracts, he did not show that he acted in good faith while violating the law. Matter of Smith, 48 N. of judgment, skill, or failure of duty, which may cause unnecessary loss of life, limb, or property, contemplates the happening of one of the several events stated, and the officer will not be removed for a single error of judgment not resulting in the losses specified.⁴³

(iv) WHO ARE MUNICIPAL OFFICERS. Not every officer with functions solely municipal is an officer within the meaning of constitutional or statutory provisions for removal. It has been so held in respect of the president of the city council who is considered merely an officer of that body and, as such, removable at its will.⁴⁴ So a file clerk of the county records, a chief janitor of the county buildings, a special officer for justices' courts and a county physician, none of whom take any oath of office or file any official bond, are not officers, but employees within the meaning of the statutes as to the removal of officers.⁴⁵ Assistant assessors and city sheriffs are municipal officers.⁴⁶ Park commissioners are within the meaning of a constitutional provision for the appointment and removal of officers.⁴⁷ And so is a collector of delinquent taxes of a city.⁴⁸ So a deputy tax commissioner is an officer,⁴⁹ and a receiver of taxes of a city is a public officer and not a private employee, and where the charter provides that he may be removed at pleasure, his appointment for a period of five years does not constitute an irrevocable contract which will prevent his removal during such time.⁵⁰

(v) PROCEEDINGS AND REVIEW—(A) In General. The power of removal for cause is one that cannot be arbitrarily exercised.⁵¹ The proceeding is usually considered judicial or quasi-judicial in its character,⁵² and, while no particular form of procedure is necessary unless expressly required,⁵³ the rules of procedure

Proceedings administrative.—Some cases hold that the power to remove officers for cause, although to be exercised in a judicial manner, is administrative, not judicial. State v. Superior, 90 Wis. 612, 64 N. W. 304. See also In re Fire, etc., Com'rs, 19 Colo. 482, 36 Pac. 234. The removal of an officer upon conviction of an offense which forfeits his right to hold the office is an act mainly judicial. The removal of an officer as incident to the executive power of appointment is not judicial, and even where such removal is restricted by the establishment of certain precedent formalities, it is not judicial in the same sense as a removal made wholly as a punishment for an offense. *Avery v. The absence of any ordinance prescribing the mode of removal does not invalidate a removal, where the proceedings were regular, and no rights of the incumbent were infringed. State v. Smith, 72 Conn. 572, 45 Atl. 355; Riggins v. Richards, 97 Tex. 229, 77 S. W. 946.

according to the common law requiring notice of charges preferred and an impartial hearing must be observed.⁵⁴

(b) Competency of Triers. Where an officer is entitled to a hearing before he can be lawfully removed, the proceedings must be had by and before the authorized body duly assembled,⁵⁵ and not by and before a committee of such body.⁵⁶ The tribunal should be disinterested and impartial,⁵⁷ and it has been held that, when sitting as judges to try charges against an officer, municipal officers must be specially sworn for that purpose,⁵⁸ although this has been doubted in some cases,⁵⁹ and denied in others.⁶⁰

(c) Who May Institute Proceedings. In the absence of a statute prescribing who may prefer charges against a municipal officer, they may be preferred by any one.⁶¹ The mayor may properly formulate the charges of his own motion.⁶² In his supervision over the conduct of officers, it may be his duty to do so.⁶³

(d) Notice and Hearing—(1) RIGHT TO. When the tenure of a municipal officer is at the pleasure of the appointing body, the power to remove is discretionary, and may be exercised without notice or hearing.⁶⁴ But where the appointment is for a fixed term or during good behavior, or where the removal must be for cause, the power of removal can only be exercised on charges preferred, after notice and hearing, with a reasonable opportunity to be heard before the officer or body having the power to remove.⁶⁵ At the hearing the accused is

55. Both mayor and aldermen.—Under a statute providing that an officer "is subject after hearing to removal by the mayor, by and with the advice and consent of the aldermen," the hearing must be by the mayor and aldermen. A hearing by the aldermen alone is not sufficient, even if with the officer's consent. Andrews v. King, 77 Me. 224.

In California section 772 of the penal code provides for proceedings in the superior court upon an accusation, in writing, filed by any person against any officer for "charging and collecting illegal fees for services rendered, or to be rendered, in his office," or neglect "to perform the official duties pertaining to his office." When the proceedings are for any other kind of misconduct in office, they must be commenced by accusation presented by a grand jury. Crossman v. Leshner, 97 Cal. 382, 32 Pac. 449.

"Party interested."—A ratepayer is not a "party interested," under the act of March 7, 1881, subjecting supervisors failing to fix rates in February, to go into effect July 1 of each year, to removal from office "at the suit of any interested party," where the rate was fixed after February, but before July, and the suit was not commenced until July 15, since he was in no way injured by the failure to fix the rates in February. *Fitch v. entitled to produce his witnesses, and to cross-examine those of the prosecution; ⁶⁶ and he also has the right to be represented by counsel.⁶⁷ The rule as thus stated is subject to the exception that notice may be dispensed with: (1) When the officer appears and answers; (2) when he has permanently left the municipality; and (3) in certain cases where it is apparent that a motion was for good cause and that the order to restore would be without practical and useful effect.⁶⁸

(2) SUFFICIENCY. Unless expressly required, it is not necessary that the notice set out the charges in detail, but it should contain the substantial fact that the proceeding to remove is intended.⁶⁹ In the absence of statute or ordinance, analogies of the ordinary procedure of courts may be followed respecting notice, mode of service, and the like.⁷⁰

Effect of amendment of charges after notice.—Where proper notice of charges to be preferred against a municipal officer is given, its sufficiency is not affected by the fact that some of the charges are afterward amended, where the amendment is only an amplification of the original charges, and an adjournment is taken to give relator an opportunity to meet the amended charges. People v. Auburn, 85 Hun (N. Y.) 601, 33 N. Y. Suppl. 165.

Waiver of defects in notice.—Defects in the notice given are waived by appearance of the officer whose removal is sought. People v. Brookfield, 6 N. Y. App. Div. 445, 39 N. Y. Suppl. 677 [affirmed in 151 N. Y. 674, 46 N. E. 1150].

indictment, it is sufficient if it acquaints defendant with the substance of the accusation against him.⁷¹ The specific acts complained of should be stated, in order that it may appear, as matter of law, that the removing body has jurisdiction of the alleged offense.⁷²

(F) Adjudication. After the hearing, there should be an adjudication upon the truth or falsity of the charges as matters of fact; for upon such adjudication the order of removal is based. An omission to pass upon the truth of the charges invalidates the order of removal.⁷³

(G) Review—(1) BY CERTIORARI. Where the power of a municipal body to remove from office is not discretionary,⁷⁴ but only for cause, after notice and hearing, the proceedings are judicial in the nature, and may be reviewed on certiorari.⁷⁵ On such review the court will inspect the record to see whether the body had jurisdiction and kept within it,⁷⁶ and whether the charges preferred
