some indulgence, upon the faith of the pledge. In at least one jurisdiction, the pledgee of a negotiable instrument before maturity as security for a preëxisting debt is recognized as a holder for value,[7] but not the pledgee of a chattel.[8] All the cases recognize the lien of the pledgee for a preëxisting debt as against subsequent attaching creditors of the pledgor.[9]

d. Notice to Pledgee. A pledgee who receives property as security takes the pledged property subject to all outstanding rights of other persons against the pledgor of which he has notice.[10] As to what does or does not constitute notice, aside from actual notice,[11] and constructive notice of public records,[12] it is sufficient that the pledgee has knowledge of such facts as would put a reasonably prudent business man on inquiry that would lead to actual notice.[13] Where the property is pledged by one known to the pledgee to hold in a fiduciary capacity,[14]

Treasurer of corporation.— Certain corporate bonds, payable to bearer and duly certified by the trustee to have been properly issued, came into the hands of the corporation's treasurer, pursuant to certain reorganization contracts between the person controlling the corporation and himself, after which they were pledged by the treasurer to a bank to secure debts of his firm. It was held that, in making such pledge, the treasurer acted personally, and not as an officer of the corporation, and, having possession of the bonds with all the indicia of title, the bank was not charged with notice of any infirmity therein because it had knowledge of the treasurer's official connection with the corporation.

as for instance an executor,[15] guardian,[16] or a trustee,[17] he takes at his peril and with constructive notice of the terms of the trust. But knowledge that the pledgor obtained the subject of the pledge for an inadequate consideration is not alone sufficient to charge the pledgee with notice of defective title.[18] acceptance of the pledgor's assignment or surrender [26] for the benefit of creditors does not divest him of his lien under the contract of pledge,[27] nor a release of the principal obligation, where his rights to the pledged property are expressly reserved.[28] A tender of the amount due on the obligation the pledge is given to secure, if refused by the pledgee,[29] extinguishes his lien.

c. 3. Evidence as to Parties and Debts or Liabilities Secured — a. Admissibility. In addition to the express agreements of the parties, evidence is admissible of correspondence [89] and conversations [90] of the parties in regard to the pledge, of a general course of dealing between them,[91] and of a general banking custom with which both parties were familiar.[92] Upon a question whether securities in the possession of the creditor are held by him as collateral, evidence is admissible [93] that about the time of the transfer of such securities to him he made advances to the debtor; [94] also that the pledgee of shares of stock notified the corporation of the transfer to him and requested an assignment on the books of the company,[95] and that after the pledgee's death securities sought to be held as collateral were found among his papers attached to the principal obligation.[96] On a question as

Pledge for debt of a principal and two sureties of a note executed by the principal to the sureties and indorsed by them, with agreement that if the parties should come under any other liability to the bank, the proceeds of the collateral note might be applied by the bank as it deemed best, gives the bank no authority to apply the proceeds of the collateral note on notes of the principal on which the sureties are not liable. to whether a pledgee received certain collaterals in good faith, evidence is admissible that he made advances on the faith of the securities;[97] and, in the case of a loan to an estate, evidence is admissible that the pledgee was informed that the loan was to be put into a corporation in which the estate was largely interested.[98] In attacking the good faith of the pledgee of negotiable securities who obtained them from one not the owner, it is not necessary to show that he had notice of the particular person who was the real owner.[99]

b. Burden of Proof. The burden of proof is upon the creditor claiming a subsequent agreement by which collateral is to be held for additional indebtedness.[1]

IV. Rights and Liabilities of Parties.[2]

A. In General — 1. Possession and Control of Property — a. In General. Since possession is the essence of a valid pledge,[3] the pledgee is entitled to retain possession and control of the property, with the income therefrom,[4] until the complete payment [5] or tender [6] of the debt, or discharge of the obligation,[7] the pledge was given to secure, including interests and costs.[8] And where several things have been pledged, the pledgee is entitled, in the absence of a special agreement, to retain them all until the complete discharge of the debt,[9] and cannot be compelled to surrender a portion of them upon a partial payment of the debt.[10] Where the pledgee is deprived of his possession by the pledgor, in addition to his rights of action in assumpsit, trover, detinue, and replevin,[11] he may go into equity and compel a redelivery of the property to him.[12]

b. As Against Attachment or Execution Against Pledgor.[13] In the common-law states, except where modified by statute,[14] goods held in pledge may not be taken from the pledgee's possession even by the levy of an attachment or execution in an action against the pledgor,[15] and if the pledgee has been deprived of his possession in this way, he is entitled to recover it.[16] But in Louisiana property held in pledge may be seized by another creditor, taken from the pledgee's possession, and sold subject to the pledgee's claim.[17]

2. Right of Pledgee to Use Pledge. The pledgee is not entitled to use the property pledged,[18] except with the express or implied consent of the pledgor.[19]

3. Liability of Pledgee to Account For Income or Profits.[20] The pledgee must account to the pledgor for all the income, profits, and advantages derived by him from the pledged property.[21] Such profits or income should be applied first to the payment of the interest on the debt, then to the principal,[22] and any surplus

This view was sustained in Stief v. Hart, 1 N. Y. 20, by an evenly divided court, but was seemingly overruled in Truslow v. Putnam, 4 Abb. Dec. 425, 1 Keyes 568, laying down the common-law rule, although without mentioning the statute or either of the previous decisions.

5. Care of Property by Pledgee[32] — a. In General. Since the pledge is a bailment for mutual benefit,[33] it is the duty of the pledgee, in the absence of a special contract modifying his common-law liability,[34] to exercise ordinary care[35] in the preservation of the property; and he is liable to the pledgor in case of loss, destruction, or depreciation[36] of the property by reason of his negligence.[37]

b. Sufficiency.[38] Ordinary care has been defined as that degree of care which prudent business men exercise in regard to their own property of a similar kind under similar circumstances,[39] and of course may vary widely under different conditions.[40]

c. Evidence. Evidence of the nature of the property and of all the circumstances connected with its keeping by the pledgee [41] is admissible. The burden of proof is on the bailee to establish both the loss of the property [42] and his exercise of due diligence and care.[43]

d. Question For Jury. The question whether the pledgee has exercised due diligence and care in keeping the pledged property is for the jury to determine.[44]

6. Care of Property by Pledgor. Where the pledgee permits the pledgor to have free access to the goods, it is equally the duty of the pledgor to care for them, and he cannot hold the pledgee responsible for any loss that could have been prevented by due care on the part of himself.[45]

7. Sale or Other Disposal of Property and Failure to Sell or Convert. A pledgee of chattels [46] in the absence of a special agreement is not required to sell them and apply the proceeds on the debt,[47] even though he is authorized to sell,[48] and has been requested to do so by the pledgor.[49] But in case of sale by the

B. Enforcement of Choses in Action Pledged[58] — 1. Duty of Pledgor to Enforce. Upon the pledge of a chose in action as collateral, the pledgor is primarily relieved of the responsibility for its enforcement;[59] but he still has an interest in the note, and, at least with the pledgee's consent,[60] may bring suit on it against the maker.[61] And where the pledgor has the knowledge, power, and opportunity to enforce the collateral against the maker, he cannot complain of loss by reason of the pledgee's failure to enforce it.[62]

Assent to commingling of shares of stock. — Three persons gave their joint note to a bank, securing it by a deposit of three certificates of corporate stock, but thereafter the note was taken up and each maker gave his own note, each note being indorsed by the two parties other than the maker. Thereafter, by agreement, the stock was sent by the bank to be exchanged for stock in another corporation. The letter from the pledgors, directing such change, directed an apportionment of the stock among the pledgors and certain others, but the new stock was issued to one of the pledgors on three certificates, no one of which represented merely the shares due any pledgors. It was held that, although the pledgee had originally agreed to keep the stock of each pledgor separate, the facts showed the pledgors to have themselves assented to the mingling of the shares. c. Operation and Effect of Enforcement. The collection of the collateral by the pledgee bars any further action on it by the pledgor,[74] and the amount realized constitutes a payment pro tanto of the secured debt.[75] In the enforcement by the pledgee of a mortgage assigned to him, by foreclosure of the mortgage and sale of the property, he acts as trustee for the pledgor;[76] where he buys at the sale himself, he holds the land,[77] and where he sells to another, he holds the proceeds,[78] after the payment of his debt, in trust for the pledgor. But the pledgee is under no obligation to bid at the sale,[79] and where he notifies the pledgor that he will bid only enough to protect himself,[80] or where he makes the pledgor a party to the foreclosure proceedings,[81] he may purchase at the sale, and upon accounting for the purchase-money is under no obligation to surrender the land to the pledgor upon tender of the amount of his debt. Where the pledged collateral is secured by deed of trust, the pledgee may purchase at a sale conducted by the trustee without any obligation to account to the pledgor.[82]

d. Defenses of Maker Against Pledgee. The holder of collaterals securing notes is as a rule entitled to the same immunity against defenses between the original parties, with regard to them, as he is with regard to the notes themselves,[83] although notes, and accounts as collateral security, but with no agreement as to the mode in which the collaterals were to be dealt with so long as the debtor remained solvent, the creditor was not bound to take steps to enforce the pledges, but after the insolvency of the debtor it was his duty to exercise ordinary diligence in collecting them).

in some jurisdictions the rule is otherwise.[84] If, after the filing of a suit by the pledgee against the maker, he is paid the amount of his debt and costs of the suit, he is not entitled to further maintain the suit.[85] The satisfaction of a judgment on the principal debt cannot be pleaded by the maker of a collateral note as a defense to a suit by the pledgee on such collateral.[86]

e. Diligence by Pledgee — (i) Necessity. In the enforcement of collateral by the pledgee it is his duty to use ordinary diligence,[87] not only in making demand for payment or performance on the principal debtor, but also in taking the necessary steps to fix the liability of parties secondarily liable,[88] in making sales when

(II) DEGREE. The diligence required of the pledgee in enforcing the collection of collaterals is usually referred to as ordinary diligence,[92] and has been defined as that of an ordinarily prudent man in the conduct of his own business,[93] as that required of a bailee for hire,[94] and as that required of an agent or attorney.[95] The pledgee is not charged with the active duty of watching the movements of the debtor, with a view to forestalling or frustrating any attempt at fraud on his part;[96] and, having exercised ordinary diligence, is not responsible for any loss through failure to enforce the collateral, even though he could have prevented such loss by the exercise of extraordinary care and diligence.[97] The pledgee is not held to so strict a liability as an indorsee of negotiable paper; and in case of failure to present at maturity, to protest and give notice, he is not liable to the pledgor absolutely for the face value of the instrument, but is liable only in the event loss resulted from his negligence and to the extent of such loss.[98]

Failure to record mortgage.— Where the note secured by a chattel mortgage was also secured by a real estate mortgage, and where no evidence is offered showing that the maker of the note was insolvent, or that there was any negligence on the part of the person who payment of collateral security before its maturity, although he may know at the time that payment would be made if insisted on;[1] nor is he bound to sue an insolvent, where nothing could be gained by so doing,[2] nor is he liable for any loss where his course has been authorized or ratified by the pledgor.[3] But he is liable for loss occasioned by his failure to comply with the request of the pledgor either to take prompt action to collect or secure the collateral, or to surrender possession of it to the pledgor for that purpose.[4] And the pledgee is not justified in failing to sue because of an intimation by the maker that he has a defense against the pledgor.[5] Where the pledgee has notice that the maker of a collateral note is in danger of insolvency, it is his duty to bring suit upon it without delay;[6] but where the maker is reputed in good financial circumstances, and the pledgee has not been requested to sue, an indulgence for a reasonable time will not render the pledgee liable for loss occasioned by the maker's unexpected insolvency.[7] In all such cases of indulgence, the length of time, the amount involved, and the circumstances of the debtor are to be considered.[8] Where a collateral note is payable at a bank as to whose solvency the pledgee has no doubt, it is his duty to send the note to such bank for collection at maturity.[9] Where the collaterals are in turn secured by a lien on personal property, it is sufficient for the pledgee to reduce the collaterals to judgment, leaving the owner of the collaterals to subject the property and apply the proceeds to the payment of his debt.[10] Where the maker offers to settle the note by a delivery of specified property, the pledgee is not bound to communicate such offer to the pledgor;[11] but if the pledgor unites with the maker in requesting such settlement, the pledgee is liable for loss occasioned by his unreasonable refusal to accept it.[12] Even where the paper accepted by the pledgee as collateral is overdue, it is his duty to use due diligence in collecting it,[13] and to sue on it, if held the said note as collateral which was secured by such mortgage, or that there was any negligence on the part of the person holding the note to make the collection, or that the real estate security was not sufficient to insure the collection, it was held that the person holding the note as collateral cannot be made to respond in damages for a failure to have the chattel mortgage recorded. necessary.[14] In no event must the pledgee allow the collateral to be barred by the statute of limitations,[15] and he will be liable for all loss occasioned by his failure in this respect; and it is no defense that the maker might not have availed himself of the bar of the statute.[16] In some jurisdictions, if the pledgee has exercised ordinary diligence in selecting an agent or attorney to whom he has intrusted the enforcement of the collateral, he is not responsible for loss occasioned by the negligence of such agent,[17] although in other jurisdictions he is held responsible under the general rule of respondeat superior.[18] Where loss results from the negligence of an assignee of the note from the pledgee,[19] or from the negligence of an agent selected by the pledgee without due care,[20] the pledgee is responsible.

f. Right of Action Against Pledgee For Lack of Diligence — (i) In General. In an action against the pledgee for failure to enforce collateral, it is not enough to show that it has not been collected;[21] but it must appear that the pledgee has been negligent,[22] and that loss has resulted to the pledgor from such negligence.[23]

(ii) Evidence. Upon an action by the pledgor against the pledgee for failure to exercise due diligence in the enforcement of collateral, or where the pledgor sets up such lack of diligence as a defense to a suit on the principal obligation, the creditor must account for the collaterals, as in the case of their loss, but having done so, the mere fact that they have not been collected is not even prima facie evidence of negligence,[24] and the burden is on the pledgor to prove negligence and damage[25] although it has been held that the burden is on the creditor to prove diligence,[26] especially where he was warned by the debtor of the embarrassed position of the maker,[27] or the collaterals consisted of numerous notes and accounts.[28] Where the pledgee has permitted securities pledged to him to become barred by limitations,[29] or has wrongfully surrendered collateral pledged to him,[30] the burden is on him to prove that his negligence or wrongful act has not injured the pledgor. maturity, together with the failure of the pledgee to collect is strong evidence of negligence, especially if other creditors have during that time enforced claims by suit;[33] while the insolvency of the maker at material times is evidence to rebut negligence.[34] Evidence that the pledgee in suing or giving time on collateral notes and accounts acted under the advice of counsel is admissible to prove good faith and due diligence.[35]

(III) Questions For Court and Jury. Where the facts are undisputed, it has been said that diligence is a question, not of fact, but of law, to be determined by the court upon settled principles, governing such cases;[36] but where the evidence is conflicting, or the inferences to be drawn from facts proved are doubtful, the question is for the jury.[37]

(IV) Extent of Liability. Upon establishing loss through the negligence of the pledgee, the pledgor is entitled to recover not the value of the collaterals pledged, but the amount of loss sustained by him.[38] Where, however, it is admitted that the securities were worth their face value at the time of their delivery to the creditor, such value will in the absence of a contrary showing be presumed to continue until their maturity.[39] Where the pledgee by his negligence permits the collaterals to be barred by statutes of limitations, he will be charged with their value as of the date of their bar,[40] and not as of the date of maturity, since, if they had been collected after maturity, they would have been credited from the date of collection. In an action by the pledgor to recover profits realized by the pledgee from a purchase and sale of the collateral, the pledgee is entitled to allowance for commissions on the resale where it appears such sale was made by a firm of brokers of which he was a member.[41]

C. Conversion of Pledged Property[42] — 1. In General — a. By Pledgee — (I) In General. The wrongful or unauthorized disposition of the pledged property by the pledgee so as to put it out of his power to redeliver it on payment of the debt it secures constitutes a conversion.[43] But a conversion

Thus where a pledgee of a note and mortgage releases the mortgage debt on receipt of a deed of the mortgaged premises, without the consent of the pledgor, he must account securities,[66] he is liable to the debtor for conversion.[67] An exception to the general rule exists, however, in the case of a compromise by the pledgee of the pledged security on terms advantageous to the pledgor as well as to himself,[68] especially where the maker is insolvent and the debt is insufficiently secured;[69] and in such case he must account to the pledgor only for the amount actually received under the compromise.

(iii) Sale of Commercial Paper Pledged.[70] In the absence of special authority or agreement permitting him to do so, a pledgee has no right to sell commercial paper held as pledge, either at public or private sale,[71] and an unauthorized sale by him constitutes a conversion of the instrument. The power to sell may, however, be given the pledgee by express agreement,[72] although even in such case notice of the time and place of sale must be given the pledgor.[73]

67. Even under an express power to sell the note, the pledgee cannot compromise and surrender it to the maker for a sum less than is due thereon, but enough to pay the principal debt, and such action will prima facie render him liable for the face of the note in excess of his debt. of the pledged property without the consent of the pledgee,[74] this constitutes a conversion, for which the pledgee may maintain an action. So, where the possession of the property is wrongfully secured, or retained by a third person, he may be sued in conversion by either the pledgor,[75] or the pledgee.[76] In an action by the pledgee against the pledgor for conversion of the property, plaintiff is entitled to recover only the property itself, or the debt it was given to secure, with interest, since this is the measure of the pledgor's liability to him.[77]

2. Actions For Possession or Proceeds of Property — a. Between Pledgor and Pledgee — (i) In General. In the event of conversion by the pledgee of the pledged property, the pledgor may maintain an action for the property itself,[78] or, as in the case of its sale or exchange, for the proceeds,[79] or he may bring an action for the amount of damages suffered by him,[80] or, in a suit by the pledgee on the principal obligation,[81] he may set up the conversion of the pledge as a defense pro tanto or in full, according to the circumstances of the case.[82] But the pledgor is not entitled to recover the property unless he establishes either that it was obtained from him by fraud, or that the pledgee has violated the conditions on which it was delivered.[83] Upon judgment in trover against the pledgee, he will be given an option to return the property itself or its value.[84] In an action by the pledgee against the pledgor for conversion of the property, plaintiff is entitled to recover only the property itself, or the debt it was given to secure, with interest, as this is the measure of the pledgor's liability to him.[85]

The full sale price may be recovered by the pledgor, although the pledgee took a note for the price which he afterward surrendered to the purchaser for less than its face value. Demars v. Hudon, 33 Mont. 170, 82 Pac. 952.

Where the property is sold by the pledgee on credit, without interest, and the sale is ratified by the pledgor by his suing for the proceeds, the pledgor is chargeable with interest on his debt not only to the time of the sale, but until the payment of sufficient purchase-money to discharge his debt. Demars v. Hudon, 33 Mont. 170, 82 Pac. 952.

Where a pledgee, having an option to purchase the property pledged at a specified price, converts the property, the pledgor may elect to consider the conversion as an exercise of the option, and sue for the price. Upham v. Barbour, 65 Minn. 364, 68 N. W. 42.

If a pledged note is construed as paid to the pledgee, no matter by what means, he is liable for the face value, whether it was legally collectable or not. Union Nat. Bank v. Post, 192 Ill. 385, 61 N. E. 507 [affirming 93 Ill. App. 339].

If several items of property are pledged at one time, for one sum, and no reason exists for a separate demand of each article, the contract of pledge is entire, and the pledgor cannot bring separate actions of trover for separate articles. Bullard v. Thorpe, 66 Vt. 599, 30 Atl. 36, 44 Am. St. Rep. 867, 25 L. R. A. 605.

Judgment in trover; effect on title.— The right of the owner to the securities is not lost or merged in a judgment in trover, which he has recovered against his pledgee who has fraudulently hypothecated them. If the judgment is held to represent the securities, the rights of the parties will be protected by requiring the owner to make suitable credit on the judgment.

(III) STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.[88] The statute of limitations does not run against the debt due the pledgee so long as he remains in possession of the property, at least to the extent of the value of such property.[89] But the statute of limitations begins to run against the pledgor's right to recover the property immediately such right accrues,[90] and where a demand is necessary to the accrual of such right, from the time such demand is made.[91]

A statement of claim in replevin shows a prima facie case which sets forth that defendant was indebted to plaintiff and as collateral for the debt assigned to plaintiff certain chattels, the possession of which he was allowed to retain until the debt was paid, that the debt had never been paid, and the chattels never delivered to plaintiff. Such a statement of claim is not overcome by an affidavit of defense averring that there had never been a delivery to plaintiff, either actually or constructively, of the property pledged and replevied. In such a case where defendant retains possession under a claim property bond, he will not be heard to say that the chattels replevied were not the chattels pledged. Rickard v. Major, 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 107.

A plea of title which proves invalid does not deprive pledgee of the right to insist upon his lien as pledgee. Hubbard v. Tod, 171 U. S. 474, 19 S. Ct. 14, 43 L. ed. 246.

Affidavit of defense.— In an action of replevin to recover pledged property, defendant cannot in his affidavit of defense contradict the sheriff's return. If there was a wrongful return, the remedy is by an action against the sheriff. Rickard v. Major, 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 107.

Variance.— In an action by the pledgor to recover the proceeds of a pledge, an allegation that it was assigned to E. & Co., and proof that it was assigned to E. is an immaterial variance. Clarke v. Adam, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 66, 69 S. W. 1016.

Burden of proof.— So long as the principal obligation and the collateral pledged for its security remain with the creditor, or upon his death, with his personal representatives, the burden is upon the debtor, in an action to recover the collateral, to show that the note has been paid, and to explain its continued possession by the creditor or his representatives. Brown v. Bronson, 93 N. Y. App. Div. 312, 87 N. Y. Suppl. 872.

Presumptions.— Where the pledgee shows that the property has been stolen from him, it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that he has not subsequently recovered it. Ware v. Squyer, 81 Minn. 388, 84 N. W. 126, 83 Am. St. Rep. 390.

Admissibility.— In support of the pledgee's claim that he had become absolute owner of property originally transferred to him as a pledge, he may show that, although he had numerous subsequent transactions with the pledgor, the latter did not mention the property nor claim any interest in it. b. Against Third Person — (i) By Pledgee— (a) In General. The pledgee has a special property in the thing pledged sufficient to enable him to maintain an action in trover,[97] detinue,[98] replevin,[99] or, under certain circumstances, a suit in equity,[1] or other action for the recovery of the specific property,[2] or its proceeds, from a third person who has wrongfully obtained possession of or has converted it to his own use.[3]

(b) Pleading and Practice.[4] It is not necessary for the pledgor to join as a plaintiff in the action or suit.[5] No demand is necessary before suing in trover for the property.[6] And in such action he is entitled to an alternative judgment for the full value of the collaterals; [7] but upon an action against a purchaser from the pledgor, the pledgee can recover only the amount of his debt.[8] The effect of the satisfaction by the wrong-doer of the judgment in trover is to vest in him title to the property or its proceeds.[9]

(ii) By Pledgor. Where the pledge has been wrongfully transferred by the pledgee to a third party, not a holder in due course of a negotiable instrument,[10] the pledgor may, upon the payment or tender of his debt,[11] maintain an action cover possession of shares of corporate stock held by defendant as security for the payment of certain notes given by plaintiff to a third person for the purchase-price of the stock, there was no claim that the notes had not been paid, and defendant's refusal to surrender the stock was not based on that ground, but on the ground that he had an interest in the stock, the seller of the stock was not a necessary party. against such third person for the recovery of the property.[12] Where the pledgee has surrendered a note to the maker for less than its full value, in addition to the pledgor's remedy against the pledgee for conversion,[13] he may also recover from the maker the residue on the note.[14] If the pledgee, upon the maturity of a note deposited with him as collateral, refuses to sue on it, a bill will lie by the pledgor to have the note collected and the amount credited on his debt.[15] Where the pledgor has conferred upon the pledgee the indicia of ownership of the property, he can recover from a third person who has received it from the pledgee in good faith as collateral for a loan only the value of the property in excess of the loan by defendant to the pledgee.[16]

c. By Third Person — (i) In General. The validity of a pledge to secure notes cannot be attacked by a suit to which neither the pledgor nor the holders of the notes are parties.[17]

(ii) Owner of Property Pledged Without Consent. Where property has been pledged without the consent of the owner, and by one upon whom he has not conferred the indicia of ownership,[18] he may recover the property itself or the proceeds from the pledgee;[19] but if the owner has conferred such indicia upon the pledgor,[20] he can recover against the pledgee only the proceeds in excess of the amount for which it was pledged.[21] These rules would apply with equal force in favor of bona fide purchasers from the true owner.[22]

(iii) Prior Lienor. Any liens existing on the property at the time of its pledge may be enforced against the pledgee.[23]

(iv) Subsequent Purchaser[24] or Claimant — (a) Of or Through Pledgor. A subsequent purchaser of the property from the pledgor[25] is entitled to bring suit for the enforcement of the contract of pledge,[26] or for the conversion of the property;[27] but is entitled to recover possession of the property from the pledgee only upon payment or tender to the pledgee of the amount of the debt for which it is security.[28]

(b) Of or Through Pledgee. So one to whom the goods have been delivered by the pledgee, with the consent of the pledgor, may maintain an action for their conversion.[29] In a suit to foreclose a mortgage by one to whom it has been wrongfully repledged by the original pledgee, plaintiff is entitled to receive only the amount for which it was originally pledged.[30]

(v) Maker of Pledged Note. Where the pledgee has wrongfully transferred a note pledged to him, he will be liable to the maker, upon the payment or tender of his debt, for the amount the maker was obliged to pay to the holder of the note.[31]

3. Actions For Damages — a. Between Pledgor and Pledgee — (i) By Pledgee — (a) In General. Where the pledgee has delivered the property to the pledgor for a special purpose, an action in trover,[32] or the statutory substitute therefor,[33] lies against the pledgor for conversion of the property, and it is no defense to the action that the pledgee wrongfully sold other securities which he held for the same debt.[34]

(b) Measure of Damages. The measure of damages is the value of the property, with interest, from the time of the conversion,[35] unless such amount exceeds the sum due the pledgee, in which case that sum is the proper measure of damages.[36]

(ii) By Pledgor — (a) In General. Upon a conversion of the property by the pledgee, the pledgor, instead of suing for the property itself or its proceeds,[37] may maintain an action for damages for breach of the contract to keep the property safely and restore it to the pledgor upon payment of the debt,[38] without first demanding a return of the pledged property,[39] or tendering the amount of his debt;[40] or he may plead such conversion as a set-off to a suit on the original debt by the pledgee or his representative.[41] Nor is the pledgor estopped from recovering damages against his pledgee for a wrongful sale of the property by the fact that he has purchased the property from the pledgee's vendee.[42]

(B) Measure of Damages — (1) In General. The measure of damages which the pledgor is entitled to recover against the pledgee for conversion of the property, or for other violation of the pledgee's contract, is the actual amount of loss suffered by the pledgor by reason of the pledgee's wrongful act.[43] Upon the conversion of chattels, the measure of the pledgor's damages is the market value of the chattels at the time of conversion.[44] In the cases where it is held that the pledgor must tender payment of his debt before he is entitled to demand a return of the property or maintain a suit for its conversion,[45] it is held that the measure of his damages is the value of the property at the time of such tender and demand,[46] and not its value at the time of conversion. Ordinarily [47] the burden is on the pledgor to allege and prove not only the conversion, but the fact and extent of his loss.[48] Upon his failure to prove the actual value of the securities converted it will be presumed that they were of no value or only of a nominal value, and the pledgor will not be entitled to a judgment,[49] or he will be entitled to a judgment only for a nominal amount.[50]

the pledgee is prima facie the amount for which the mortgage is security,[51] and not the value of the mortgaged property.[52]

(3) Note, Bond, or the Like. the stocks.[58] In such case, when the facts are undisputed, and different inferences cannot reasonably be drawn from them, what is a reasonable time is a question of law.[59]

(c) Set-Offs. In all cases the pledgee is entitled to have the debt due him set off against the amount of damages recovered;[60] and the pledgor will then usually be entitled to interest on the surplus from the date of the conversion.[61] In an action by the pledgor against the pledgee for conversion of the property, the latter is entitled to set off damages sustained by him by reason of the pledgor's breach of the contract the pledge was given to secure;[62] but he cannot show, in an action against him for surrendering notes to the maker for less than their face value, that the pledgor was indebted to the maker of the notes in an amount greater than the pledgor's loss.[63]

b. Against Third Person — (i) By Pledgee — (a) In General. The pledgee being entitled to the possession of the property, may bring an action for damages against any one who wrongfully injures the same,[64] or converts it to his own use,[65] even though it be taken under an attachment regular on its face;[66] or against one who returns it, without authority, to the pledgor.[67]

(b) Measure of Damages. In an action for damages instituted by the pledgee against a third party for injury to or conversion of the property which has been pledged to him, he is not limited to recovery for his interest only, but may recover the total amount of the loss, which in a case of the conversion of the property is the actual value of the property at the time of the conversion.[68] But as against the pledgor,[69] or any one claiming through him,[70] the pledgee is entitled to recover only the amount of his debt, or if his debt is greater than the value of the property, such value, with interest to date of judgment.[71] Where the conversion is by an officer acting under a writ of attachment or execution against the pledgor legal and regular in all respects, such officer occupies the same position as the pledgor, and is liable to the pledgee only to the same extent;[72] but if the attachment or execution is improperly issued, or is otherwise illegal, the officer is liable for the full value of the goods,[73] which will be their market value at the time of the conversion,[74] and not the price for which they were sold by the officer.[75]

(II) By Pledgor — (A) In General. The pledgor, as general owner of the property, may maintain an action for damages against a third person for its injury or conversion,[76] and no tender of his debt is necessary before bringing such action;[77] but the pledgor, not being entitled to the possession of the property, cannot maintain trespass for taking it from the possession of the pledgee.[78] So the pledgor may recover damages against a third person by reason of whose breach of contract to pay the pledgor's debt to the pledgee the collateral has been forfeited.[79]

(B) Measure of Damages. In an action by the pledgor against a third person for conversion, he may recover the full value of the collateral[80] less any of his indebtedness paid by defendant to the pledgee.[81]

the pledgee was entitled.[88] Such assignment is effected by delivery of the collateral to the assignee,[89] and no formal assignment is necessary.[90] If the assignee converts the collateral to his own use, the original pledgee will not be liable to the pledgor for such conversion.[91] So the pledgee of a note may make a valid assignment of it to another simply for collection.[92]

2. Transfer of Debt Secured.[93] The pledge being regarded as collateral to the principal obligation,[94] upon an assignment of the latter without the pledge,[95] the assignor will hold the collateral as trustee for his assignee,[96] even though the assignee takes a renewal of the principal obligation in his own name,[97] and payments received by him on the collateral will be held for the use of the assignee.[98] So where the pledgee assigns the debt to one person and the collateral to another, the latter will hold the collateral in trust for the assignee of the debt.[99] But where it is the evident intention of the parties in the delivery of collateral that it shall be held for the personal security of the pledgee,[1] upon an assignment by the pledgee of his debt, without the collateral, the latter becomes the property of the pledgor freed from the lien.[2] If after the assignment of the principal debt without recourse the pledgee makes an exchange of collateral with the pledgor, the assignee may enforce the principal obligation against the pledgor,[3] without returning or accounting for the collateral,[4] since in such case the pledgee is acting as trustee for the pledgor rather than for assignee in holding the collateral.[5]

3. Transfer of Pledge Without Transfer of Debt.[6] The pledgee having merely a special property in the pledge as security for his debt cannot make a valid assignment of the collateral separate from the debt so as to confer any rights on such assignee as against the pledgor.[7]

B. Rights Secured by Purchaser From Pledgee — 1. In General. Upon an assignment by the pledgee of his interest in the pledge,[8] or upon an absolute sale [9] or pledge [10] by him of a chattel [11] or non-negotiable security,[12] whether to one who takes with notice of the pledgor's rights,[13] or to a bona fide purchaser for value without such notice,[14] such assignee or purchaser steps into the shoes of the original pledgee;[15] and cannot be required to surrender the property to the pledgor except upon payment or tender of the debt for which it was originally pledged.[16] But if the purchaser has notice that the sale is fraudulent on the part of the pledgee,[17] he acquires no right whatever as against the pledgor.[18] If the collateral security is itself a negotiable instrument,[19] or is delivered as security for a negotiable instrument,[20] the transfer of the collateral to a bona fide purchaser for value,[21] or, in the latter case, the transfer of the principal obligation and the collateral to such purchaser,[22] vests in him a valid legal title, without any liability to the pledgor. In an action by the pledgee against a purchaser from him for the price of the pledged property, the purchaser is not entitled to inquire into the amount due the pledgee on the original obligation.[23]

2. Pledgee of Pledgee.[24] A pledgee has the right to repledge property delivered to him as security[25] without obtaining the consent of the pledgor,[26] and does not lose his right to its possession as against the pledgor by so doing.[27] The subpledgee, unless he occupies the favored position of a bona fide purchaser for value of a negotiable instrument,[28] takes only the title of his transferrer;[29] but he is entitled to hold the property until the debt of the original owner has been discharged.[30] Unless authorized by a special agreement,[31] the pledgee has no right as against the pledgor to repledge the property for a greater amount than that for which it is held as security;[32] and where the pledgee thus exceeds his power, his assignee must deliver up the property to the pledgor upon the payment of the original debt it was delivered to secure.[33] Where the pledgor is estopped to deny the pledgee's authority to repledge the property,[34] as where he has conferred the indicia of ownership upon the pledgee,[35] he may still require that the subpledgee shall first apply to the satisfaction of his debt other collateral transferred to him by the pledgee;[36] but where he has received payment in full from the pledgee for the property converted by him, he has no further right against the assignee.[37]

C. Transfer of Interest of Pledgor. Subject to the rights of the pledgee,[38] the pledgor may sell or assign his interest in the pledged property,[39] and his assignee,[40] at least where the pledgee has notice of the assignment,[41] succeeds to all his rights in the property. But the relationship between the pledgor and the pledgee being regarded as a fiduciary one,[42] the purchase of the property by the pledgee at a public sale is voidable at the option of the pledgor,[43] and, in the case of a private sale by the pledgor, of his remaining interest in the property to the pledgee, the sale is presumed to be fraudulent and void,[44] unless the pledgee can show that it was fair, open, bona fide, and for an adequate consideration.[45] But this rule does not apply to the sale of the property under an execution against the pledgor,[46] and the pledgee is free to buy at such sale.[47] A purchase of the property by the pledgee does not extinguish his rights under the pledge as against an intervening garnishment by a creditor;[48] but he will hold the legal title, subject (1) to the payment of the debt for which the property was pledged to him, and (2) to the payment of the debt of the garnishing creditor.[49] discharge of the principal obligation of the debtor in any other way will operate to discharge the contract of pledge.[52]

2. Methods of Discharge — a. In General. Besides actual payment of the principal obligation,[53] there are other ways of effecting a valid discharge of a collateral contract or pledge,[54] as by a surrender of the principal obligation,[55] by a settlement of the pledgee with the pledgor by which the pledgor is released from further liability on the principal obligation,[56] by an avoidance of the principal contract by the pledgee,[57] or by substantial fulfilment of the condition accepted by the pledgee.[58] But a mere change in the form of the principal obligation, as the giving of a new note, will not discharge the pledgee's lien on the collateral.[59]

b. Tender of Payment — (i) Effect. Upon a tender of the amount due on the principal obligation,[60] the lien of the pledgee is discharged,[61] and the pledgor is entitled to the possession of the property,[62] even though such tender is refused by the pledgee.[63] Where the amount of the debt is not in dispute, a tender is not vitiated by the demand of the pledgor at the time that the property be returned to him.[64]

(ii) Time of Making. The tender may be made at or after the maturity of the debt,[65] but must be before the sale of the collateral for default.[66]

Price 593, holding that where goods are pledged to secure certain acceptances, they are discharged from the lien and cannot be held for acceptances made after the pledge, when the original acceptances have been paid.

Payment by check.— While a creditor who has surrendered collateral upon the payment of the secured debt by check is entitled, if the check is dishonored, to reclaim the collateral, yet when the check is paid the payment relates back to the delivery of the check, and the collateral is to be regarded as surrendered as of that date. (iii) Keeping Tender Good. It is not necessary that the tender be kept good to enable the pledgor to avail himself of it as a defense to an action by the pledgee to enforce the collateral;[67] but if the pledgor seeks affirmative relief, he must keep his tender good, or at least offer to pay the amount into court.[68]

c. Offer of Payment Without Actual Tender. A mere offer to pay the amount of the debt for which property has been pledged, not accompanied by an actual tender of money, is insufficient to discharge the pledgee's lien, or entitle the pledgor to a return of the property.[69]

d. Loss by Negligence of Pledgee as Payment. Loss or depreciation in value of the thing pledged, through negligence of the pledgee, does not of itself operate to extinguish, pro tanto, the debt secured,[70] although it will of course entitle the pledgor to damages.[71]

3. Effect of Payment or Discharge — a. In General. Upon the payment or other discharge of the principal obligation, the pledgor becomes the absolute owner of the collateral,[72] and entitled to the possession thereof,[73] freed from the lien of the pledgee,[74] from any right of the pledgee to hold it for any other debt than that for which it was pledged,[75] and from any right of set-off which a third party might have against the pledgee.[76] Where the pledgee has the legal title to the property, he will hold it as a mere naked trustee for the pledgor,[77] and any payments made to him on the collaterals will be held for the use of the pledgor.[78] Where the pledgee realizes enough from a portion of the collaterals to pay the principal debt, his interest in the remaining collaterals is extinguished.[79]

b. On Pledgee's Duty to Collect Collaterals. After the discharge of the principal debt, the pledgee is under no further obligation to collect collateral securities,[80] and in fact has no interest in them which will enable him to bring suit on them.[81]

c. Partial Payment or Discharge. Partial payments on the principal debt operate pro tanto to reduce the lien of the pledgee on the collaterals;[82] and by special agreement of the parties provision may be made for a release of a portion

B. Return of Property on Payment or Other Discharge — 1. Persons Entitled to Return. Upon the discharge of the obligation the pledge was given to secure,[87] the pledgor[88] or his assignee[89] is entitled to the collateral[90] or its proceeds,[91]

But where policies of life insurance were pledged on an agreement that they might be redeemed upon paying their surrender value, and subsequently, in consideration for an extension of the debt, other collaterals were pledged, the pledgee's lien upon the insurance policies was not released by a sale of the second collateral for more than the surrender value of the policies, but not enough to discharge the debt. if any remain.[92] So where an indorser of a note secured by collateral takes it up, he is entitled to the collateral.[93] But these rights are extinguished where the entire collateral has been required to satisfy the principal obligation,[94] or the pledgor's remaining interest has been exhausted under legal process for the payment of other claims against him.[95]

2. Duty of Pledgee to Return. Accordingly, whenever the obligation which the pledge was given to secure is discharged,[96] it becomes the duty of the pledgee to return the property or its proceeds, if any, to the pledgee.[97]

3. Conversion[98] by Failure to Return — a. In General. The failure of the pledgee to return the collateral upon payment of the principal debt is itself a conversion,[99] for which an action may be maintained[1] by the pledgor[2] or his assignee.[3]

b. Failure to Return Identical Stock. While as a general rule the pledgor, upon discharge of his obligation, is entitled to the return of the specific property pledged,[4] corporate stock, being merely evidence of an interest in the business of the corporation, stands on a different footing;[5] and in the absence of a special agreement,[6] the pledgee is not liable for their conversion by reason of his sale or other disposition of the identical certificates delivered to him, so long as he Tender of the amount of the debt and demand for the return of the property is prima facie evidence of a conversion. De Clark v. Bell, 10 Wyo. 1, 65 Pac. 852. But where on the same day that tender has been made and refused, and before suit is brought or the situation of the parties has materially changed, the pledgee retracts his refusal and offers to surrender the property upon the payment of the debt and charges legally due, there is no conversion. 6. Dykers v. Allen, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 497, 42 Am. Dec. 87, holding that where the pledgee is expressly given the power to sell stock pledged upon default, this is an implied denial of his right to do so before default, even though he retain an equal number of other shares.

Evidence of a usage among brokers giving the pledgee the right to sell is not admissible where it would change the terms of an express contract. Taylor v. Ketchum, 5 Rob. (N. Y.) 507, 35 How. Pr. 289; Dykers v. Allen, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 497, 42 Am. Dec. 87.

Parol evidence is inadmissible where it would modify or contradict the terms of a written contract. Fay v. Gray, 124 Mass. 500. Under a pledge to the payee of a note "with authority to use, transfer or hypothecate the same at payee's option, payee being required, on payment or tender . . . to return an equal quantity of said security, and not the specific stock deposited," the pledgee may sell the stock before default, if he retains an equal amount for the pledgor. Ogden v. Lathrop, 65 N. Y. 158 [reversing 35 N. Y. Super. Ct. 731].

retains at all times an equal number of shares of the same class and value,[7] to be delivered to the pledgor, upon discharge of his obligation. Where the pledgee has wrongfully converted the shares pledged to him,[8] he may be compelled to transfer to the pledgor an equal number of similar shares held by him,[9] where necessary to give the pledgor an adequate remedy for the conversion.[10]

4. Necessity of Tender and Demand. Upon discharge of his obligation the pledgor may usually maintain an action for the recovery of the pledge or its proceeds without a distinct demand for the return of the property;[11] but where the pledge-holder is not the person to whom payment is made,[12] or where the pledgor has merely an option to withdraw the collateral pro rata upon partial payment of the debt,[13] the pledgor cannot maintain an action without first demanding a return of the collateral. The pledgor is not entitled to recover the property itself by an action in replevin,[14] or other possessory action,[15] without making and keeping good a tender of his debt, although tender is not necessary to the maintenance of an action to recover the proceeds,[16] or for a conversion.[17]

5. Right of Action and Defenses — a. Forms of Action. The remedy of the pledgor[18] or his assignee[19] for the conversion of the pledged property or for a failure to return the same may be in replevin or other possessory action for the property itself,[20] by an action in assumpsit for money had and received to recover its proceeds,[21] by an action in trover for the property or its value, with damages for its detention,[22] or under some circumstances, where necessary to obtain adequate redress, by a proceeding or suit in equity.[23]

b. Defenses. The pledgee may allege and prove in defense that no valid satisfaction of the principal obligation has been made or tendered,[24] or that there has been a material alteration in the collateral since its execution;[25] but he cannot plead as a defense or set-off to such a suit that the collateral was worthless, or of any less value than the amount paid to him upon it;[26] that plaintiff was not the owner of the claim sued on;[27] or that at the time of the tender and demand, a suit by a third party claiming title to the property was pending.[28]

c. Limitations. Although the statute of limitations begins to run against the principal debt secured from the time of its maturity,[29] the statute does not begin to run against the right of the pledgor to sue for failure to return the collateral until its conversion by the pledgee.[30]

d. Amount of Recovery. In actions against the pledgee for failure to return the collateral upon payment or tender, the amount of recovery is the actual loss suffered by reason of defendant's wrongful act, and this is determined by the same rules as in other cases of conversion by the pledgee.[31] Where the pledgee wrongfully refuses a tender of the amount due on the principal debt, he is responsible for any depreciation in the value of the pledge after such tender and refusal.[32] In a suit on the principal debt, the pledgor is entitled to set off any sums realized

But the pledgee is not liable for depreciation in value of collateral until demand made for its return, under an agreement by which the pledgor had a right to return of collateral in proportion to the amount of the

by the creditor from collaterals,[33] and may in an independent action recover any surplus in the pledgee's possession after satisfaction of the debt.[34]

C. Redemption — 1. Right to Redeem — a. In General. Upon default of the pledgor in discharging the principal obligation at maturity, the pledgee does not acquire title to the collateral, but holds it subject to the right of redemption in the pledgor,[35] or his representative,[36] until this right has been extinguished by a lawful sale of the property.[37]

b. Upon Wrongful Sale or Conversion. Where the pledgee has been guilty of a wrongful sale or conversion of the collateral, the pledgor is entitled to redeem it within a reasonable time after learning of such sale or conversion;[38] but his right of redemption is extinguished where he has authorized,[39] or ratified[40] the sale, or where he has failed to assert his right within a reasonable time after receiving notice of a wrongful sale,[41] especially where the collaterals have increased in value since the sale.[42]

c. Waiver of Right. So the pledgor may waive his right to redeem by a contract, for a separate consideration,[43] made after the original contract of pledge, and either before, or after[44] default in the principal obligation, but equity will

S. 611, 24 L. ed. 855, holding the right to redeem was lost where the shares had been sold after due demand and notice, the loan discharged, and the debtor received notice thereof without making any objection until four years afterward.

Presumption of abandonment.— Where in an action to redeem brought thirty years after default, the pledgor relied upon the lapse of time as a presumption of payment of the principal debt, it was held rebutted by the countervailing presumption of the debtor's abandonment of the collateral after so long a time. Daly v. Spiller, 222 Ill. 421, 78 N. E. 782 [affirming 119 Ill. App. 272]; Louchbaum's Estate, 7 Pa. Dist. 100.

scrutinize such a contract with great care, and set it aside if harsh or unconscionable.[45]

2. TIME TO REDEEM. Upon payment of the proper amount,[46] the pledgor may redeem at any time before a valid sale or foreclosure of the pledge.[47] Such right is not extinguished by a wrongful sale or surrender of the property,[48] as the purchaser will acquire no greater interest in the property than the pledgee had; nor is such right of redemption barred by a provision in the contract of pledge that unless it is redeemed by a certain time, the collateral is to become the property of the pledgee,[49] and the pledgor may still redeem after the time fixed. If no time has been fixed for the performance of the principal obligation, or for the redemption of the pledge, the pledgor is entitled to a reasonable time after demand,[50] before sale or foreclosure.[51]

3. PERSONS ENTITLED TO REDEEM. Upon the death or bankruptcy of the pledgor, his right of redemption passes to his personal representative[52] or assignee.[53] So redemption may be made by the owner of property that has been pledged without his consent,[54] or by a prior pledgee who has assented to the subsequent pledge.[55]

4. AMOUNT NECESSARY TO REDEEM. As a prerequisite to his right to redeem, the pledgor must tender the amount of the principal debt, with interest to date,[56] and any expenses of the pledgee properly chargeable upon the pledge,[57] subject to a reduction, however, to the extent of any benefit or profits derived by the pledgee from the possession or use of the property.[58] Where the pledgee had repledged the property, the original pledgor is entitled to redeem upon payment of the amount due from him.[59] The pledgee cannot prevent redemption by refusing to disclose the exact amount due on the debt, and denying that the tender made was the proper sum;[60] and where the pledgee, without objection, accepts the amount tendered, he cannot afterward refuse to return the collateral on the ground that the amount tendered was insufficient.[61]

5. Right of Action and Defenses — a. In General. The pledgor may maintain an action against the pledgee not only to redeem,[62] but also where there is doubt or dispute as to the amount due on the debt, for an accounting.[63]

b. Form of Remedy. The remedy of the pledgor to redeem is, in general, at law,[64] and a bill in equity will not lie for that purpose,[65] except upon the allegation of some additional ground of equitable jurisdiction,[66] as a sale or assignment of the pledge by the pledgee, and a demand for its retransfer to the pledgor,[67] or a request for an accounting,[68] or discovery.[69]

c. Tender of Amount of Debt. While in the absence of express provision to the contrary, a pledgor cannot recover possession of the pledged property without paying his debt, even though it is barred by the statute of limitations,[70] tender of the amount of the debt is not required where the goods are pledged to secure a running account,[71] nor where the pledgor sues to redeem from a wrongful sale by the pledgee.[72]

Where, however, one to secure his debt to an estate assigns personal property, which is his interest in the estate, to the administratrix, he is not entitled, on redeeming, to a credit by way of income on such property. Clark v. Seagraves, 186 Mass. 430, 71 N. E. 813. d. Laches and Limitations. Mere lapse of time after the maturity of the principal obligation does not bar the pledgor's right to redeem,[73] unless it is accompanied by elements of estoppel;[74] and the statute of limitations begins to run against such right,[75] not from the maturity of the debt,[76] but only from the time demand is made on the pledgor to redeem,[77] or his interest in the property is repudiated by the pledgee,[78] as by a claim of absolute title in himself.[79]

e. Parties. In a suit for redemption, all persons having an interest in the pledge should be made parties.[80]

f. Pleading. The bill or petition to redeem should state the terms of the contract of pledge,[81] should show plaintiff's interest in the collateral,[82] and allege or tender a fulfilment of the conditions entitling him to redeem;[83] but in a suit against a transferee from the pledgee, it is not necessary to allege that defendant took with notice of plaintiff's rights.[84] In an action by the pledgee to enforce the contract of a pledge, the pledgor may file a cross bill to redeem, upon tender of a sufficient amount to discharge the debt.[85]

g. Evidence. Mere delay on the part of the pledgor in redeeming will not raise a presumption of abandonment;[86] and an action by the pledgee on the principal debt is an admission that the pledgor's right to redeem is still open.[87] The pledgor may introduce evidence to show that a transfer of the collateral by the pledgee

In Daly v. Spiller, 119 Ill. App. 272 [affirmed in 222 Ill. 421, 78 N. E. 782], it was held that where insured in a life policy pledged the same to secure a loan, and at the time of insured's death the lender had a bill pending alleging that insured assigned and pledged the policy, and praying for an accounting, and that the policy be sold to satisfy the lender's claim, and pending the suit the lender stated to one to whom insured had applied for money to pay the loan that the suit had been brought because insured did not pay, and the lender retained the note given by insured, the facts showed that the pledgee and pledgor had recognized the existence of a right to redeem, so that the right to do so could not be denied on the ground of laches, waiver, or abandonment. was not a sale under the contract, but was merely colorable.[88] Exhibits filed by plaintiff may constitute evidence to sustain and supplement defendant's pleadings.[89]

h. Value of Converted Stock Chargeable to Pledgee. In a suit to redeem stock wrongfully sold by the pledgee, the pledgor is entitled, as far as possible, to be placed in the same position as if the sale had not been made, and where the stock itself cannot be restored to him, he may recover the market value of the stock at the time of filing his bill to redeem.[90]

i. Judgment. The judgment in a suit for redemption should order a payment of the amount for which the pledge is security as a condition to the return of the pledge.[91] So too when a suit is brought against a bona fide holder to redeem property wrongfully sold or repledged to him, the court may decree the payment of defendant's claim as a condition to redemption, and declare plaintiff's rights extinguished if the condition is not performed.[92] Where, pending a suit for redemption and accounting, or before suit brought, but unknown to the pledgor, the pledgee has sold the property, the judgment may be that the pledgee account for the value of the pledge at the time of its conversion.[93]

j. Costs. Where the pledgor's debt has not been paid at the time of the filing of his bill to redeem, he must pay the costs of the proceeding;[94] but where the debt has been paid before the bill is filed,[95] or where the pledgee, having sold the pledge, has refused to give any information respecting the sale,[96] the costs are chargeable to the pledgee.

VII. ENFORCEMENT.[97]

A. In General — 1. Remedies of Pledgee — a. In General. The pledgee, upon default of the pledgor in the discharge of the principal obligation, may proceed personally against the pledgor for his debt,[98] or file a bill in chancery to obtain a judicial sale under a regular decree of foreclosure,[99] or he may sell the pledge without judicial process, upon reasonable notice to the debtor to redeem.[1]

b. By Special Agreement. The method of enforcement of the pledge may be regulated by the agreement of the parties, and such agreement, when not fraudulent or against public policy, will be enforced by the courts.[2] A provision, however, authorizing one method of enforcement, does not preclude resort to other methods, in the absence of an express prohibition.[3]

c. Pledge of Commercial Paper. On a pledge of commercial paper, the pledgee may either collect the collateral,[4] or proceed on the original obligation without restoring the collateral.[5]

d. Pledge of Two or More Collaterals. Where the pledgee is in possession of two securities for his debt, he may proceed against either or both of them at his election,[6] and cannot be compelled to subject one before resorting to the other.[7]

e. Appropriation of Pledge to Debt. The pledgee is not entitled upon the pledgor's default to take the property as his own in satisfaction of the debt.[8] A provision in the contract by which the absolute property in the pledge is to vest in the pledgee, upon the default of the pledgor, is void,[9] and the pledgor is still entitled to redeem.[10] Nor can the pledgee cut off the pledgor's interest in the collateral by a mere notice that, if the debt is not paid by a certain time, he will take the collateral as his own.[11] So where a surety who holds collateral to indemnify him against liability on the debt transfers such collateral to the payee for the purpose of discharging the debt, the transfer does not divest the pledgor of his interest in the collateral and he may still redeem it, even after maturity of his debt.[12]

f. Concurrent Remedies and Election. The pledgee may bring concurrent suits on the principal obligation and on collateral securities held by him,[13] and cannot be compelled to make an election as to which he will enforce.[14] In a suit on the collateral, he is not restricted to the recovery of his debt, but may collect the entire amount of the collateral,[15] although any surplus after the satisfaction of his debt will be held by him for the pledgor.[16] But where the pledgee, after the maturity of the principal debt, wrongfully transfers the collateral to third persons, he will be held to have elected to take them in satisfaction of his debt, and he will not thereafter be allowed to sue on the principal obligation for any alleged deficiency.[17]

2. Default by Pledgor[18] — a. Time of Maturity Not Fixed. Where no definite time is expressed for the maturity of the principal obligation, the pledgor will be considered in default upon his failure to perform within a reasonable time after notice,[19] or after a reasonable time and his having made performance impossible.[20]

b. Time of Maturity Fixed — (i) In General. If a definite time is fixed, he will be in default upon failure to perform by the time stated,[21] unless such time has been extended by the pledgee, in which case the pledge cannot be sold until the expiration of the extension.[22]

(ii) On Demand. If the principal obligation is payable on demand, the pledgor will be in default upon his failure to pay on demand.[23]

3. Proceeds and Surplus — a. Application of Proceeds to Debt.[24] Upon a sale or collection of the collateral security, the proceeds must be applied to the debt or debts it was given to secure, and to no others.[25] Thus the pledgee, in the application of the proceeds to his secured debt, takes precedence over the general creditors of the pledgor;[26] and where the pledgor, after delivery of the collateral, has made a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, the pledgee is still entitled to apply the proceeds of the collateral to the debts it was given to secure, to the exclusion of other claims.[27] The rights of the parties as to the application will be determined by the terms of the pledge as they existed at the time of the sale or collection,[28] and the application will be made as of that date.[29]

b. Distribution Among Claims Secured.[30] The debtor upon giving collateral security has the right to direct the application of the proceeds,[31] or to authorize their application as the creditor may elect.[32] But if at the time of the delivery of the collateral the debtor fails to exercise his right to direct the application of its proceeds, he cannot do so afterward,[33] and the creditor may at his election apply the proceeds to the payment of any of the secured debts that are due at the time the money is received.[34] In some jurisdictions this right of the creditor to determine the application is recognized whether the proceeds of the collateral are livered for the security of their respective notes, and the company had no right to mingle it in a common fund.

An assignment of a life policy by the insured and beneficiary as collateral to the insured's debt gave the assignee a right, on insured's failure to pay the premiums, to receive a paid-up policy in lieu of the one assigned. Defendant failed to pay either the premiums or the debt, which amounted to more than the face of the paid-up policy, which the assignee demanded and received. It was held that, although without the assignment the paid-up policy would have belonged to the beneficiary, yet under it the assignee could treat such paid-up policy as so much money and apply it on the debt without attempting to make any sale of it as pledged property. Plaintiff assigned to defendant as collateral security notes and the mortgage securing them, with the understanding that defendant should complete the foreclosure of the mortgage commenced by plaintiff. The mortgage not being a first lien, defendant, with plaintiff's consent, proceeded to secure prior liens by purchase, and after some disbursements for this purpose, plaintiff and defendant made an agreement, reciting the advancement of money by defendant in purchasing liens on the mortgaged property and perfecting its title, and the necessity for further expenditures therefor, and providing that plaintiff should have the right to purchase the property of defendant within eighteen months by paying plaintiff's original indebtedness to defendant and the amounts advanced by defendant in purchasing liens on the property and perfecting its title. Immediately thereafter defendant foreclosed said mortgage and other liens, plaintiff not being made a party, and defendant bought the property at the sheriff's sale. It was held that defendant acquired the title to the property at the foreclosure for its own benefit, and therefore, although plaintiff did not exercise the option to purchase, defendant was obliged to account to plaintiff for the property on the basis of the amount of its bid at the foreclosure sale, it to have credit for plaintiff's indebtedness and for expenses in acquiring and perfecting title. E. 207], holding that in an action against the pledgee by the owner to recover the surplus proceeds of collateral pledged by a firm for its own debt, the assignee of the firm as a party defendant was not entitled to recover the surplus proceeds of other collateral delivered by the firm to the same pledgee as security for a different debt, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1294, providing that judgment may be given against one or more defendants, that the "ultimate rights of the parties on the same side" may be determined, and that "a defendant" may be given "any affirmative relief to which he is entitled," since that section does not authorize a defendant to raise an issue solely between himself and a co-defendant, which is not raised by the complaint.

Pledgor's action for the surplus is not premature where the collateral is delivered as security for a contingent liability, and the pledgee has collected more than enough to satisfy all possible liability under the pledge, although such liability has not been terminated. off expenses incurred by it in resisting unfounded claims of other persons to such surplus.[61]

4. Operation and Effect. Where a sale of the collateral is made by the pledgee in good faith, the pledgor is bound by the sale, although the property might have brought a higher price under other circumstances.[62] Upon the sale of a contract of indemnity held by the pledgee, the purchaser does not acquire an absolute title, but only the interest of the pledgee.[63] Where a lien is created on stock by its delivery as a pledge, and also by a contemporaneous deed of trust, the lien of the pledgee as such may be enforced even though the enforcement of the deed of trust is barred by the statute of limitations as to chattel mortgages.[64] If judgment for the amount of his debt is obtained by the pledgee on a bond and mortgage for a greater amount held by him as security, the bond and mortgage is not thereby extinguished as to the balance.[65] On the foreclosure by the pledgee of a mortgage delivered to him as collateral, and a purchase of the land by him, he will hold the land in trust for the pledgor upon the payment of the secured debt.[66]

B. Action on Debt or Liability Secured[67]— 1. Enforcement or Surrender of Security as Condition Precedent.[68] In the absence of a special agreement,[69] the pledgee is under no obligation to surrender [70] or enforce [71] collaterals held by him before suing on the principal obligation.

2. Necessity of Accounting For Pledge. While as a general rule the pledgee, in a suit on the principal obligation, is not bound to account for collateral pledged to him as security,[72] yet if it is alleged by defendant that he has realized on such collateral,[73] or has lost or misappropriated it,[74] the pledgee must account for the same, and a failure or refusal to do so will operate as a bar to the recovery of the debt itself.

3. Defenses — a. In General. The mere fact that the creditor has taken or holds collateral security is no defense to an action on the principal debt, without first realizing on the security,[75] in the absence of an express agreement to that effect, nor does the taking of security of a higher nature operate as a merger of the original debt so as to bar a suit on the latter;[76] but it is a good defense to such a suit that the creditor agreed to realize first on the collateral,[77] or that, aside from the collateral, the pledgor's personal estate is not sufficient to pay the debt, without resort to the realty.[78]

b. Set-Off of Value of Collaterals. As a general rule the pledgor is entitled to set off against the amount of the debt any profits or proceeds realized by the pledgee from the collateral,[79] and any loss resulting from the negligence,[80] wrongful sale of,[81]

Collaterals subject to prior claims.— Before suing the maker, an indorser of notes was not bound to apply collateral securities delivered to him subject to the claims of a creditor by the payee as security for the indorsement of notes including those sued on; a bill in equity having been filed against plaintiff by the creditor claiming the assets, and it appearing that no part of the money on hand could be applied to any particular note or claim until after the settlement of the litigation, and then only in the event of plaintiff's success. The loss of the property through the negligence of the pledgee does not operate ipso facto as a satisfaction of the debt to the extent of the loss, but may be pleaded by the pledgor as a set-off or counter-claim in a suit on the debt secured. or other wrongful act [82] of the pledgee in regard to the collateral.[83] But in some jurisdictions the pledgor is not allowed to set off unliquidated damages;[84] and the giving of a new note by the pledgor without claiming credit for the conversion of collateral will constitute a waiver of such claim by him.[85]

c. Non-Performance of Condition Precedent.[86] Tender or payment of the amount due on the principal debt is not a condition precedent to the pledgor's right to set off the value of collateral converted by the pledgee.[87] But it has been held that in a suit on certain notes defendant cannot avail himself of the defense that a part of the notes sued on were delivered as security for the others without first paying the amount of his real indebtedness.[88]

4. Parties. In an action by the pledgee on the original obligation, it is not necessary to join parties interested in the collateral, and the maker of a note held as security,[89] or the assignor of a mortgage received as security from the assignee,[90] is not a proper party.

5. Pleading. Under a general plea of non assumpsit,[91] or of payment,[92] the pledgor will usually be allowed to prove a conversion of the collateral by the pledgee, or his negligence in realizing on it and applying the proceeds to the payment of the debt.

6. Evidence — a. Burden of Proof. Upon an issue raised by defendant as to the conversion of collaterals by the pledgee, the burden is on the pledgee to account for them ;[93] but having done so, the burden is on defendant to prove a conversion.[94]

b. Admissibility — (i) In General. Evidence of the willingness of the maker to secure a note pledged as collateral is not admissible in the absence of a showing of negligence or wrongful conduct on the part of the pledgee.[95] Any evidence of a settlement or other conduct of defendant inconsistent with his assertion of a set-off or counter-claim is admissible.[96]

(ii) Parol Evidence. On an issue of payment of the principal debt by the sale of collateral, parol evidence is admissible to show that the collateral was also held as security for another debt,[97] but parol evidence is not admissible as to debts due plaintiff for which the collateral was not held as security.[98]

7. Questions For Jury. Upon a conflict of evidence as to whether certain property is held by the pledgee as collateral security,[99] or as to whether the pledgee has committed a specific wrongful act in regard to the property,[1] the question is for the jury.

8. Amount For Which Pledgee Is Accountable. Where the pledgee, acting strictly within his rights under the pledge, realizes upon the collateral on default of the pledgor, he must account only for the amount actually received by him;[2] but where he is guilty of conversion of the pledge,[3] he must account not merely for the amount received for it, but for its full value.[4]

9. Equitable Relief Against Judgment. The pledgor, upon paying the amount of a judgment on the principal debt into court, will be entitled to an order that no execution issue until the return of the collateral;[5] but he will not be entitled to enjoin execution on the judgment upon the mere allegation of irregularities in the enforcement of the collateral,[6] he must then account for it before he will be entitled to judgment on the principal debt.[7]

Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1524, giving the pledgor's personal representative the right to sell property pledged subject to the pledgee's lien, does not affect the pledgee's right to sell process,[11] upon giving the pledgor reasonable notice of the time and place of sale.[12] This right of the pledgee to sell is not a peculiar trust reposed in the creditor, but exists as an incident to the contract of pledge and as a part of the security,[13] unless an express agreement to the contrary be affirmatively shown.[14] The right of the pledgee to sell may be exercised not only against the pledgor,[15] but also against the receiver,[16] or assignee of the pledgor for the benefit of creditors,[17] and all other persons claiming through the pledgor.[18] Nor can the pledgee be required to postpone the sale on the ground that it would result in a sacrifice,[19] the only remedy against a sale being to redeem the pledge.[20] Ordinarily the pledgee has no right to sell the property before the debt is due,[21] and if he is expressly given this power, his authority will be strictly construed.[22]

b. As Dependent on Nature of Pledge.[23] As an exception to the pledgee's right to sell for default, he cannot sell choses in action, such as notes, drafts, and other evidences of indebtedness,[24] unless expressly authorized to do so;[25] but must hold and collect them as they become due.[26] Where, however, bonds having a long time to run are pledged as security for a short-time loan, it would be unreasonable to require the pledgee to wait until their maturity to realize on his security, and he may accordingly sell them at public auction upon default and notice.[27]

c. Revocation of Power of Sale. The right of the pledgee to sell is not a mere naked power,[28] but is a power coupled with an interest,[29] and as such is not revocable at the will of the pledgor,[30] nor is it revoked by the pledgor's bankruptcy,[31] or death;[32] and upon the death of the pledgee it survives to his representatives.[33]

b. Requisites and Sufficiency. The notice must inform the pledgor [56] that a sale is to be made of the pledged property [57] and of the time and place of sale,[58] and must be given a reasonable time before sale so that the pledgor may have an opportunity to protect his interests.[59] In the absence of some statutory provision Subsequent sale.— In Elbert v. Patten, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. 70, where a pledgee of stock, who had authority to sell without notice to the pledgor, bought in the stock at his own sale, a subsequent sale by him without notice to the pledgor was a good exercise of the power.

A. 857, acceptance of partial payments and indulgence for four years. But see Thornton v. Martin, 116 Ga. 115, 42 S. E. 348, holding that evidence that two or three days before the sale of corporation stock pledged as security for a note, the pledgee notified the maker that he wanted to collect the note within a short time, and the maker replied that he was ready to pay whenever the pledgee wished, is insufficient to show an agreement to postpone the sale until further notice, and is irrelevant.

Notice need not state grounds on which power of sale is exercised.— McDougall v. Hazelton Tripod-Boiler Co., 88 Fed. 217, 31 C. C. A. 487.

For additional cases see supra, note 57.

59. Jacoby v. Jacoby, 103 Fed. 473, holding a notice posted by the pledgee about the close of business hours the day before the sale and received two hours before the sale was insufficient.

requiring it,[60] no formal notice is required;[61] but it is sufficient that notice is sent by mail to the pledgor's post-office,[62] or that knowledge that the sale is to be made is brought home to the pledgor.[63]

c. Excuse For Failure to Give Notice. Notice is excused where the contract of pledge provides that sale may be made without notice,[64] or where the giving of notice has been rendered impossible by act of the pledgor.[65]

5. Time and Place of Sale. The sale of the pledged property need not be made promptly upon the pledgor's default,[66] and waiver by the pledgor of notice of the sale is not affected by the pledgee's delay in exercising the power of sale.[67] The sale must be at a reasonable time and place;[68] where, however, the pledgor, upon receiving due notice, makes no objection to the time or place of sale, he cannot claim after the sale that the time or place was improper.[69]

6. Manner and Conduct of Sale[70] — a. Good Faith and Diligence. The pledgee,[71] in making sale of the property pledged to him as collateral security, must act in good faith,[72] and with a reasonable degree of skill and diligence[73] in securing a fair price,[74] and conserving the pledgor's interests,[75] so far as consistent with his own protection;[76] but he is not required to exercise the same care, prudence, and diligence that a prudent man would in the sale of his own property.[77]

b. Public or Private Sale. In the absence of a special agreement,[78] the sale must be at public auction,[79] after due advertisement,[80] so that the pledgor may see that the sale is fair and arrange to get the best price; and a private sale is not binding on the pledgor.[81] But a private sale is valid where the pledgor has authorized it,[82] or acquiesced in it.[83] A sale of stock at the broker's board is regarded as a private sale,[84] since the public are not permitted to attend, and it is not conducted

80. Laclede Nat. Bank v. Richardson, 156 Mo. 270, 56 S. W. 1117, 79 Am. St. Rep. 528 (holding that waiver by the pledgor of notice of sale to him does not excuse public advertisement of property where such is necessary to secure a fair price for it, and that under certain circumstances it is the duty of the pledgee to adjourn the sale in order to prevent a sacrifice of the property); Jacoby v. Jacoby, 103 Fed. 473 (holding that in a sale at noon, advertisement in the paper the evening before and on the morning of the sale was insufficient).

Under Cal. Civ. Code, § 3005, requiring that a sale of pledged property shall be made "in the manner and upon notice to the public usual at the place of sale," it is not necessary that the published notice of such sale shall state that the property is pledged, or that it is the property of the pledgor, where that is not shown to be usual at the place of sale. 7. Persons Who May Buy at Sale[87] — a. In General. Where by the terms of the contract the pledgee is authorized to buy at his own sale,[88] a purchase by him in good faith and for a fair consideration is valid and binding on the pledgor, but the burden of proof is on him to show good faith and that the property brought a fair value,[89] and, in the absence of such special authority, a purchase of the property by the pledgee is voidable at the option of the pledgor.[90]

b. Effect of Purchase By or For Pledgee.[91] Where the pledgee, without authority, purchases the property at his own sale, the pledgor[92] may, at his election, to be exercised within a reasonable time,[93] avoid the sale, in which case the pledgee will hold the property subject to the same conditions as before;[94] or of the rights of the pledgor,[5] so that the property is placed beyond the control of the pledgee,[6] constitutes a conversion of the property, for which the pledgee is liable to the pledgor.[7]

b. Actions For. Upon a wrongful sale of the collateral by the pledgee, the pledgor may sue either in trover for the conversion,[8] or in case for damages,[9] or, if he elects to ratify the sale, in assumpsit for the proceeds, as money received to his use.[10] And tender of his debt is not necessary before bringing suit,[11] as it would be useless, the pledgee having put it out of his power to perform his part of the contract,[12] and being allowed to set off the amount of his debt against the amount of the pledgor's recovery.[13] But where the pledgee has bought the property at his own sale, the pledgor cannot sue him in conversion unless he has first tendered the amount of his debt and demanded a return of the property, and the tender and demand have been refused by the pledgee.[14]

c. Measure of Damages. Whether the pledgor sues in trover [15] or in case,[16] or whether he pleads the wrongful sale by the pledgee in defense to a suit on the principal debt,[17] he is entitled to recover of the pledgee the actual amount of the loss suffered by him by reason of the wrongful sale.[18] Upon a wrongful sale of Delay of one year.— Plaintiff's assignor pledged certain bonds to secure a debt, and was present, but did not object to a private sale thereof, on April 3, 1899. No objection was subsequently made to such sale until after a subsequent sale of the bonds with other similar bonds in April, 1900, to a purchaser procured by plaintiff's assignor for which he was paid a commission. It was held that both plaintiff and his assignor were estopped to object to the validity of the

11. Title and Rights of Purchaser.[31] Upon a sale by the pledgee of property other than negotiable instruments,[32] or upon a sale of negotiable instruments to one with notice of the pledge,[33] the purchaser takes a good title where the sale was rightful and regular in all respects,[34] and in the case of a chose in action may enforce it for its face value against the maker;[35] but where the sale was in violation of the pledgor's rights, the purchaser acquires only such title and rights as the pledgee possessed.[36] Upon a sale, however, to a bona fide purchaser, of a negotiable instrument, or of other property to which the pledgor has given the pledgee the indicia of ownership,[37] the purchaser takes absolute title, even against the pledgor.[38]

D. Actions to Foreclose[39]— 1. Right of Action and Defenses. If the pledgee has been wrongfully deprived by the pledgor of the possession of the property,[40] or if he is unable to find the pledgor,[41] or if for any other reason he cannot demand payment and give the pledgor notice of sale,[42] he must resort to a judicial foreclosure of the lien. express terms of the contract,[44] he possesses the power to sell on notice, without judicial process, he may elect to file a bill in equity in the nature of foreclosure for the sale of the pledge.[45] Pledges of commercial paper, which ordinarily must be enforced by collection and not by sale,[46] and pledges of bonds and mortgages,[47] may also, under proper circumstances, be foreclosed by a bill in equity. A third person claiming adverse title to the pledgee will be allowed to set up such title upon foreclosure;[48] but the pledgor will not be allowed to plead as a defense that he gave the pledge to defraud his creditors.[49]

2. Proceedings and Relief — a. Parties. In an action to foreclose, there should be joined as parties defendant the pledgor,[50] or his representative,[51] and all other persons having an interest in the pledged property;[52] but a mere general creditor will not be permitted to become a party.[53]

b. Pleading and Process. Where by statute,[54] or by the terms of the contract,[55] certain requisites are prescribed before suit for foreclosure can be brought, the bill or petition must allege compliance, or excuse a failure to comply, with the conditions.[56] A petition should not be dismissed on demurrer where it states the substance of the contract of pledge, although in informal terms,[57] nor because it may appear on final hearing that it will not be necessary to sell all the property pledged.[58] And no consideration is required to be stated or proved, unless the want of consideration is set up by the answer.[59] No levy is required on the property in the pledgee's possession.[60]

c. Evidence. In the suit to foreclose, notes or mortgages held as collateral may be admitted as evidence,[61] and also an order from the pledgor directing the property to be held in pledge.[62]

d. Relief. Upon establishing his case, the pledgee is entitled to an order for the sale of the property [63] and to a personal judgment for any deficiency.[64] If property is sold under a void decree, the chancellor may order its restitution so as to place the parties in the same position as before.[65] The advantages of foreclosure in equity are that it concludes the rights of all parties in interest and prevents any recourse against the pledgee for violation of his duties to the pledgor or to third parties,[66] and that it enables the pledgee to buy at the sale,[67] which he is not allowed to do at a sale upon notice, without judicial process.

Where notes held as collateral are impounded in an equity suit, the pledgee is still entitled to control the same so far as necessary to bring an action at law upon the notes, and to have the proceeds thereof paid into court. Gregory v. Pike, 67 Fed. 837, 15 C. C. A. 33.

The right of the indorser of a note outstanding and past due to enforce the collateral held by him to secure him against liability on his indorsement, consisting of a note secured by a trust deed, is a matter solely between himself and the pledgors, with which the purchasers of the property covered by the trust deed, under a sale made in attachment proceedings, are not concerned, where they have failed to establish their claim that the collateral had been extinguished by payment. of the pledgor,[72] according to the practice in the respective jurisdictions, unless he has expressly agreed not to do so;[73] and he possesses the right without first seeking to enforce the principal obligation,[74] and although the principal debt is not yet due,[75] or the contingent liability which the pledge was given to secure has not attached,[76] and even though he is authorized to enforce the pledge by sale of the collateral.[77] Upon a pledge of bonds secured by mortgage, the pledgee also has the right to foreclose the mortgage.[78] Where suit has been begun by the pledgor for the enforcement of the right of action before his pledge of it to the pledgee, upon his obtaining judgment, the pledgee or his assignee will be entitled to intervene and claim the proceeds, without allowance to the pledgor out of the funds for the expenses of his suit.[79]

2. Defenses.[80] The obligor on the chose in action pledged may defeat an action by the pledgee for its collection by showing that it has been duly paid [81] or otherwise discharged,[82] by showing that the secured debt has been paid,[83] or by proof of an agreement to sue first on the principal debt and a failure to do so.[84] But, without proof of a special agreement, it is not a good defense that the pledgee has not attempted to collect the principal debt; [85] that the maker, with knowledge of the pledge, and without the pledgee's consent, has paid the pledgor;[86] that the pledgee has obtained an unsatisfied judgment against the pledgor; [87] that he has obtained judgment on another note held as collateral for the same debt; [88] that a suit by the pledgee against one of the parties to the instrument has failed; [89] that the pledgee took the note with the intention of making illegal use of it; [90] that the action is brought by the pledgor instead of by the pledgee; [91] that in a suit on a note

by a purchaser from the pledgee it was not proved that the pledgee made demand and served notice on the pledgor before the sale; [92] that an assignee of the pledgee who is a party to the action claims a lien on the pledge as security for a debt of the pledgee; [93] that other parties are claiming title to the note or its proceeds; [94] that upon the pledge of a negotiable instrument before maturity, the consideration between the maker and the pledgor has failed; [95] that equities have arisen between the maker and the pledgor since the assignment and notice to the maker; [96] or that the pledgee has exchanged other collateral held by him for the principal debt, unless such exchange has caused a loss to the pledgor.[97] Nor is the maker entitled to set off money received by the pledgee from a person who was only secondarily liable on the pledgor's debt.[98]

3. Right to Compel Pledgee to Exhaust Other Collateral. The maker of a collateral note cannot compel the pledgee, before enforcing it, to exhaust other security held by him for the principal debt,[99] even though the maker has a set-off available against the pledgor.[1] Nor can a surety compel the pledgee to apply the proceeds of pledged property upon a note to which he is a party rather than to other notes for which the property was also held as security.[2] Nor will an injunction be issued to restrain a pledgee from enforcing his collaterals while his debtors and the sureties on the collaterals are litigating their equities therein.[3]

4. Parties. Ordinarily the pledgee of a chose in action may sue thereon in his own name,[4] and in the absence of special circumstances,[5] the pledgor is not a necessary party to the suit; [6] but all persons claiming an interest in the pledge adverse to that of the pledgee should be joined in the action.[7] But that does not mean that the pledgor, where he is the real party in interest, may not also bring the suit either alone, or by joining with the pledgee as plaintiff.[8] Under a statute requiring every action to be prosecuted "in the name of the real party in interest," [9] it has been held that either the pledgor [10] or the pledgee of a note which has not been indorsed by the payee[11] may sue thereon in his own name, but that the pledgor of a bond is a necessary party to a suit by the pledgee against the obligor on the bond;[12] and that the pledgor of a special tax bill may sue in his own name to enforce the same.[13]

5. Pleading. The pledgee's petition must show his title to the chose in action,[14] and his right to enforce it against the maker or obligor.[15]

6. Evidence. Since the pledgee may be a bona fide holder of the instrument only to the extent of the amount for which he holds it as security, in a suit by him against the maker, the latter may show that he is not liable on the instrument to the pledgor;[16] but the presumption is that the pledgee is entitled to enforce the collateral for its face value, and the burden is on the maker to prove the amount of the pledgor's debt to the pledgee less than the face of the collateral.[17]

7. Amount and Extent of Recovery.[18] As a general rule the bona fide pledgee of a chose in action may enforce it for the entire amount thereof against the maker as obligor, and will retain any surplus after the payment of his debt, as trustee for the pledgor;[19] but where the maker proves a defense not available as a bar to

Civ. Proc. § 367, requiring actions to be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, the pledgor of a note is entitled to maintain a suit thereon against the maker, although Civ. Code, § 3006, authorizes a pledgee of an evidence of debt to collect it at maturity, but the pledgee would be a necessary party to the action. Graham v. Light, 4 Cal. App. 400, 88 Pac. 373. But although under Code Civ. Proc. § 389, authorizing the court to bring in necessary parties, the pledgee of a note should be brought in as a party to an action by the pledgor thereon, where the pledgee still retained an interest at the time of the trial, this was not necessary where the note had been transferred back to the pledgor before the time of trial. Law, (St. Louis, Ed. 1878) 261, 266, and notes. In Roget's Thesaurus it will be found grouped with 'mutilation,' 'spoliation,' 'destruction,' and 'sack,' at section 619; with 'harm,' 'wrong,' 'molest,' spoil,' 'despoil,' 'lay waste,' 'dismantle,' 'demolish,' 'consume,' 'overrun,' and 'destroy,' at section 649; with 'booty,' 'spoil,' and 'prey,' at section 793; and with 'taking,' 'catching,' 'seizing,' 'carrying away,' 'stealing,' 'thieving,' 'depredation,' 'pilfering,' 'larceny,' 'robbery,' 'marauding,' 'embezzlement,' 'filch,' 'pilfer,' and 'purloin,' at sections 791, 792, (Sears' Ed. 1866). In Abbott's Law Dictionary 'plunder' is said to be often used to express the idea of taking property without right to do so; but not as expressing the nature of the wrong involved, or necessarily imputing a felonious intent. 2 Abb. Dict. 284, word, 'Plunder.' In Bouvier's Law Dictionary it is limited to the idea of capturing property from a public enemy on land; but 'plunderage' is defined as a maritime term for the 'embezzlement' of goods on board a ship. The word is used in Rev. St. § 5361, in describing an intent as a synonym of 'despoil,' this being also a section of the act of 1825, from which the one we are considering was taken. The first English statute of 7 and 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, § 18, used the words 'plunder or steal,' but contained a proviso that where things of small value were cast on shore and were stolen, without circumstances of violence, the offender might be prosecuted for simple larceny; which shows that the statute was not regarded as declaring the crime of larceny simply, but something more. Indeed, anciently, the common law would take no jurisdiction of theft upon the high seas, but committed the offender to answer in the admiralty. The second English statute of 1 Vict. c. 87, § 8, uses the words 'plunder or steal,' as does the latest, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, § 64, without the proviso, and, with the exception of the word 'destroy,' the act is the same as our act of 1825, which was enacted before any of the English statutes. 2 Russ. I. DEFINITION.

The term "poison" may be defined to be any substance which, when applied to the body externally, or in any way introduced into the system, is capable, without acting mechanically, but by its own inherent qualities, of destroying life.[1]

1. People v. Van Deleer, 53 Cal. 147, 148. Other definitions are: "A substance [which] when taken into the body, is capable of destroying some part or parts of the body, so

II. Injuries Resulting From Sale or Use of Poisons.

A. Sale Under False Label — 1. Liability Therefor.[2] One who puts on the market a deadly poison negligently labeled as a harmless medicine is liable to all persons who, without fault on their part, are injured by using it as such medicine relying on the false label,[3] whether labeled by himself or an agent,[4] or whether sold to the injured person directly or to a middleman and by him resold to the injured person.[5]

2. Actions For Damages. It is negligence per se to fail to comply with the statute making it a misdemeanor to deliver or sell to another any poisonous substance or liquor without having it labeled poison, and the vendor is liable for personal injuries to any person of which injuries his negligence is the proximate cause.[6]

as to leave them permanently incapable of performing their functions." U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc. v. Newman, 84 Va. 52, 61, 3 S. E. 805.

"Any substance which, when introduced into the animal organism, is capable of producing a morbid, noxious, or deadly effect." Preferred Mut. Acc. Assoc. v. Beidelman, 1 Mona. (Pa.) 481, 482.

"A substance which, when administered in small quantity, is capable of acting deleteriously on the body." Dougherty v. People, 1 Colo. 514, 519.

"A substance taken internally, seriously injurious to health and often fatal to life." Bacon v. U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc., 44 Hun (N. Y.) 599, 602.

"A substance having an inherent deleterious property which renders it, when taken into the system, capable of destroying life." 2 Wharton & S. Med. Jur. § 1.

In popular language the term "poison" is confined to substances which in small doses destroy life. Dougherty v. People, 1 Colo. 514.

Using the word in a loose sense, a great many things are called poisonous in the sense of poisoning — that is to say, they produce death — while strictly speaking they are not poisons. Using the word in a loose sense, one would say a person drowned was poisoned. U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc. v. Newman, 84 Va. 52, 3 S. E. 805.

The quantity of a given substance required to destroy life cannot enable one to distinguish a poisonous from a non-poisonous substance. Boswell v. State, 114 Ga. 40, 44, 39 S. E. 897.

Imports fatal properties.— Poison is a word which ex vi termini imports fatal properties when introduced into the human system, and therefore it is not necessary in an indictment for murder to aver that the accused knew the noxious properties of the poison administered. State v. Slagle, 83 N. C. 630.

Statutory definition.—A poison is defined in the act prohibiting the sale of any poison without a label attached to be "any drug, chemical or preparation, which according to standard works on medicine or materia medica, is liable to be destructive to adult human life in quantities of sixty grains or less." Kentucky Bd. of Pharmacy v. Cassidy, 115 Ky. 690, 74 S. W. 730, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 102.

Poisonous substances, as used in an indictment charging the offense of exposing a poisonous substance with intent that a certain animal belonging to another person should take and eat the same, should be construed to include paris green. State v. Labounty, 63 Vt. 374, 21 Atl. 730.

Ammonia.— Within the meaning of a life insurance policy excepting liability on account of a death resulting from poison, death results from poison when it is caused by the insured swallowing aqua ammonia given him through mistake for medicine. Early v. Standard L., etc., Ins. Co., 113 Mich. 58, 71 N. W. 500, 67 Am. St. Rep. 445.

Coal gas.— Poison as used in a life insurance policy excepting a company from liability for death caused by taking poison or coming into contact with poisonous substances cannot be considered to include coal gas. U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc. v. Newman, 84 Va. 52, 3 S. E. 805.

Sting of insect.— The question whether the term "poison" in a policy exempting the insurer from liability for injuries resulting therefrom includes the sting of venomous insects is for the jury. Preferred Mut. Acc. Assoc. v. Beidelman, 1 Mona. (Pa.) 481.

B. Use — 1. Liability Therefor. One who uses a poisonous substance in manufacture is not liable to another injured by handling the manufactured article, where it appears that the substance in question, the common one used for the purpose, was not at the time of the injury known to be poisonous to handle.[7]

2. Actions For Damages. In an action to recover damages for injuries resulting from the use of a poisonous substance in manufacture, an instruction to the jury is not erroneous on the ground that it removes the question of proximate cause from the case, if such question has been fully covered by other instructions.[8]

III. Offenses Relating to Poisions.[9]

A. Administering[10] — 1. Elements — a. In General. To manually deliver poison to another[11] or to force it down his throat[12] is not an element of the offense of administering poison to another; it is enough to compel him by threats of violence to swallow it,[13] to furnish it to him for the purpose of suicide if he takes it for that purpose,[14] or to intentionally leave it in any place where he is likely to take it by mistake, if he does so take it and any part of it goes into his stomach.[15]

b. Poison Must Enter Stomach. It is not an administering within the statute unless some portion of the poison actually enters the stomach of the person for whom it was intended.[16]

c. Intent to Injure — (I) Must Clearly Appear. Where the statute makes an intent to injure an element of the offense, such intent should clearly appear.[17]

(II) Double Intent. To constitute administering with intent to injure it is not necessary that the poison be administered with the specific intent to do bodily harm, but it is sufficient if it be administered as a means for the accomplishment of another unlawful purpose.[18]

2. Extent of Injury. When poison is administered and operates to derange the healthy organization of the system, temporarily or permanently, it is an injury within a statute making it an offense to administer poison to another with intent to injure.[19]

B. Mixing With Food or Drink. Administering forms no part of the offense of mingling poison with the food, drink, or medicine of another with intent to injure him.[20]

C. Sale Without Label. A statute making it an offense to sell poison not labeled as such does not apply to cases where a druggist is induced to deliver the den rests upon plaintiff to show that the violation of the statute was the proximate cause of the death. Burk v. Creamery Package Mfg. Co., 126 Iowa 730, 102 N. W. 793, 106 Am. St. Rep. 377.

L. 558, to be erroneous, his own note of the case showing that the judges were unanimously of opinion that the poison had not been administered because it had not been taken into the stomach, but only into the mouth.

poisonous substance to a person without knowing its character, by the representation of such person that it was his.[21]

D. Sale Without Prescription. A statute making it an offense to sell or give away certain poisonous substances without a prescription for the same from a physician or regularly qualified pharmacist applies to a physician as well as any other illegal seller.[22]

E. Prosecutions For Unlawful Sale or Use — 1. Indictment. In prosecutions of this character indictment is governed by the same rules applicable to indictments in criminal cases in general.[23]

2. Defenses. One who engages in the prosecution of an unlawful design against another and uses poison to accomplish such design, which, by its natural action produces a greater injury than was anticipated, is not relieved from criminal responsibility for his act by ignorance of the probable extent of the injury.[24] In a prosecution against a physician for selling opium without a prescription, defendant must show, in order to make his defense complete, that he comes within the provisions of the act "to prevent the practice of medicine and surgery by unqualified persons," and as a legally practising physician sold the opium as a prescription.[25]

3. Evidence. Evidence in prosecutions of this character, including the admissibility[26] as well as the weight and sufficiency[27] of evidence, is subject to the same rules which control in criminal cases in general.

4. Instructions to Jury. Instructions to the jury in prosecutions of this character are governed by the same rules which control in giving or refusing to give instructions to the jury in criminal cases in general.[28]

POKER. A game of chance,[1] played with cards, and, usually with chips, for diversion or gain.[2] (See, generally, Gaming, 20 Cyc. 873.)

Statute constitutional.— Under the police power the legislature has authority to make it an offense to sell, give away, or otherwise dispose of, a given poisonous drug except on the prescription of a duly licensed practising physician. State v. Ah Chew, 16 Nev. 50, 40 Am. Rep. 488.

23. See, generally, Indictments and Informations, 22 Cyc. 157.

Sufficient indictment.— An indictment for the offense of mingling poison with any food, drink, or medicine with the intent to injure another need not charge that the offense was committed wilfully, but only that the act was done and the intent with which it was done. Davis v. State, 4 Tex. App. 456. An indictment for mingling poison with the food, drink, or medicine of another is sufficient where it alleges that the drink was mixed with the intent that the victim should drink it and to do her injury. It is not necessary to charge that it was feloniously done. Madden v. State, 1 Kan. 340.

25. State v. Ching Gang, 16 Nev. 62.

26. See Criminal Law, 12 Cyc. 390 et seq.

Improperly excluded.— In a prosecution for a sale of poison without having properly labeled it, it is error to exclude evidence tending to show that the mixture in question was a non-poisonous one and a useful and valuable medical remedy. State v. Marvin, 5 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 593.

27. See Criminal Law, 12 Cyc. 485 et seq.

Not sufficient.— Extrajudicial confessions alone are not sufficient to prove the body of the crime of administering poison to another. Blackburn v. State, 23 Ohio St. 146, holding further that the confession may, however, be admitted and used to prove the body of the crime in connection with other evidence in the case.

28. See Criminal Law, 12 Cyc. 587 et seq.

Request properly refused.—In a prosecution for mingling poison with food with intent to injure there was evidence that defendant administered the poison to prosecutrix for purposes of seduction. It was held that a request to charge that the jury could not convict defendant unless they were satisfied that he administered the poison with the specific intent of doing her bodily harm, and not for purposes of seduction, was properly refused. But even when played for diversion, chips, representative of value, are generally used.

Each party plays for himself.— Laytham v. Agnew, 70 Mo. 48, 49.

POLICE. A word which, in law, is not a term of indefinite meaning, although it has several significations.[3] As a function, that species of superintendence by magistrates which has principally for its object the maintenance of public tranquillity among its citizens;[4] the government of a city or town; the administration of the laws and regulations of a city or incorporated town or borough.[5] In general, as a system, one of precaution, either for the prevention of crime or of calamities,[6] divided into administrative police, which has for its object to maintain constantly public order in every part of the general administration; and judiciary police which is intended principally to prevent crimes by punishing criminals.[7] Applied to persons, the officers who are appointed for the purpose of the maintenance of public tranquillity among the citizens.[8] (Police: Commissioner, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 28 Cyc. 486. "Senate poker" is described as a game played with cards. The dealer sits on one side of a table, and the players around in front of him. The players put up their money in the dealer's hands, for which he issues to the players some ivory or bone chips. The dealer then deals to each man five cards. Then the players either bet their chips or not, according as they are willing to venture on their hands. They may discard and draw more, if they see fit. For each dollar that is bet on the game, the dealer takes off five per cent or ten per cent, or something like that amount, for the proprietor of the house. At the end of each game the chips are handed in to the dealer, who cashes them. No particular table is required for the game. It may be played as well upon the floor, a bed, a rock, or any smooth surface. A dealer in such game, who takes no part in the game, but merely receives the percentage, is not guilty of exhibiting a gaming bank and table for the purpose of gaming. Hairston v. State, 34 Tex. The police of a state, in a comprehensive sense, embraces its system of internal regulation by which it is sought not only to preserve the public order, and to prevent offenses against the state, but also to establish, for the intercourse of citizen with citizen, those rules of good manners and good neighborhood which are calculated to prevent a conflict of rights and to insure to each the uninterrupted enjoyment of his own, so far as is reasonably consistent with a like enjoyment of rights by others. POLICE MAGISTRATE or JUSTICE. A term which, without other legal definition, supposes some officer of the state, or some municipal division thereof, invested with authority — executive or judicial, relating to the administration of police or municipal laws.[19] More specifically, an inferior judicial magistrate, whose jurisdiction, in the absence of constitutional or statutory extensions, is confined to criminal cases arising under the ordinances and regulations of a municipality.[20] (See POLICE COURT; and, generally, COURTS, 11 Cyc. 718; JUDGES, 23 Cyc. 504; JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, 24 Cyc. 403 note 2; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 28 Cyc. 535.)

POLICE ORDINANCES. A term described as designating "at once family rules on a large scale, and State laws on a small scale."[32] (See Cross-References under ORDINANCE, 29 Cyc. 1522.)

POLICE POWER. Strictly speaking, a term which has relation to a power of organization of a system of regulations tending to the health, order, convenience, and comfort of the inhabitants, and to the prevention and punishment of injuries and offenses to the public.[33] (Police Power: In General, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW;[34] MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.[35] Delegation of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW;[36] MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.[37] Distinguished From — Eminent Domain, see ACTIONS;[38] EMINENT DOMAIN;[39] LEVEES;[40] Regulation of Commerce, see COMMERCE;[41] Taxation, see TAXATION. POLICE PURPOSES.[49] Ordinarily such as arise in the administration of the affairs of cities and towns, in the exercise of their power and duty to promote the public health, convenience, and welfare.[50]

POLICE REGULATION or REGULATIONS. The term which is used to define a power which resides in the state.[51] In the plural, such provisions of law as are designed to protect the lives, limbs, health, comfort, and quiet of citizens and to secure them in the enjoyment of their property.[52] (See Municipal Regulation; and, generally, Constitutional Law; Municipal Corporations.[53])

POLICY. Prudence or wisdom in practical affairs; art, stratagem;[54] the general principles by which a government is guided in its management of public affairs, or the legislature in its measures;[55] a term which, as applied to a law, ordinance, or rule of law, denotes its general purpose or tendency considered as directed to the welfare or prosperity of the state or community.[56] Also a method of gambling by betting as to what numbers will be drawn in a lottery;[57] a form of gambling in which bets are made on numbers to be drawn by lottery.[58] (Policy:

If it be understood as art, stratagem, it should never be a ground of judicial decision. If taken in the sense of the art of governing, or the management of affairs, it is rather inappropriate for courts of law to be dealing with it, otherwise than in the synonyme of prudence or wisdom in practical affairs, appertaining to the administration of justice; to suppress a mischief, rightly to expound the law, to guard against fraud, and advance the remedy for a mischief or inconvenience."

POLICY OF INSURANCE.[62] A. Referring to the Document. The name by which the formal written instrument in which the contract of insurance is usually embodied is known;[63] the written instrument in which a contract of insurance is set forth;[64] a mercantile instrument in writing, by which one party, in consideration of a premium, engages to indemnify another against a contingent loss, by making him a payment in compensation whenever the event shall happen by which the loss is to accrue;[65] the written evidence of an agreement by the terms of which the insurer, in consideration of a stipulated premium, undertakes to indemnify the insured against such damage as he may sustain by reason of injury money prizes awarded to the persons who selected numbers all of which have been drawn at the single drawing next after the purchase, was "called and generally known as 'playing policy.'" State v. Kansas Mercantile Assoc., 45 Kan. 351, 352, 353, 25 Pac. 984, 23 Am. St. Rep. 727, 11 L. R. A. 430. "Persons who wish to play 'policy,' as he calls it, pay the respondent a sum of money, usually from five to fifty cents, and at the same time select two, three, or four numbers, from one to seventy-eight. If the player selects two numbers it is called a 'saddle.' If he selects three it is called a 'gig.' If he selects four it is called a 'horse.' If all the numbers selected by the player came out in the drawing, he won a certain amount from the policy dealer. In the case of a 'gig,' or three numbers, if the player won, he received ten dollars for five cents; in the case of a 'saddle,' the odds were proportionately less; in the case of a 'horse,' proportionately greater." "Writing policy" or "selling policy" see State v. Wilkerson, 170 Mo. 184, 188, 70 S. W. 478, where those terms are used synonymously with reference to the sale of policy tickets, and where it appears that in evidence it "was further shown that a person who sells tickets or writes policy is a necessary part of the game; that his duties are entirely different from the service of one selling lottery tickets. A lottery ticket is made printed and complete, and a sale of it consists of a delivery simply of the ticket. While one selling policy necessarily writes the tickets himself, keeps duplicate copies thereof in what is called 'a book,' which is two sheets of manifold paper — one he must deliver at the place of the drawing before it takes place, the other he keeps to pay winning tickets (if any) by. He secures the winning numbers or reports and is then prepared to and does pay the winning tickets, having first sold them and collected the money for them."

POLITE ART. See Art.[99]

POLITIÆ LEGIBUS, NON LEGES POLITIIS, ADAPTANDÆ. A maxim meaning "Politics are to be adapted to the laws, not laws to politics."[1]

POLITICAL. Pertaining to policy or the administration of government.[2] (See Political Action; Political Character; Political Corporation; Political Discretion; Political Division of the State; Political Occurrences; Political Offense; Political Offices; Political Party; Political Power; Political Questions; Political Rights; Political Status; Political Subdivision of the State; Politics.)

POLITICAL ACTION. In the popular sense that which a man does in the line of his political affiliations or ambitions.[3] Used of an action at law in the sense of one which determines a political question.[4] (See Political.)

POLITICAL CHARACTER. A term which may be used to designate affiliation to one political party as distinguished from another.[5] (See Party, 30 Cyc. 768; Political; and, generally, Elections, 15 Cyc. 279.)

POLITICAL CORPORATION. One which has principally for its object the administration of the government, or to which the powers of government, or a part of such powers, have been delegated.[6] (See, generally, Corporations;[7] Counties;[8] Municipal Corporations;[9] Schools and School-Districts; Towns.)

POLITICAL DISCRETION. A discretion which embraces, combines, and considers all circumstances, events, and projects, foreign or domestic, that can affect the national interest.[10] (See Discretion, 14 Cyc. 382; Discretionary Power, 14 Cyc. 383; Judicial Discretion, 23 Cyc. 1617; Legal Discretion, 25 Cyc. 174; Political.)

POLITICAL DIVISION OF THE STATE. A division formed for the more effectual or convenient exercise of political power within the political localities.[11] (See Political Subdivision of the State.)

2. Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in People v. Morgan, 90 Ill. 558, 563].

"In its higher and true sense . . . that which pertains to the government of a nation. In this sense it includes the entire system of its laws, constitutional and statutory." In re Kemp, 16 Wis. 359, 396.

Applied to corporations as synonymous with "municipal" or "public" (see Winspear v. Holman Dist. Tp., 37 Iowa 542, 544); these words being used interchangeably (see Curry v. Sioux City Dist. Tp., 62 Iowa 102, 104, 17 N. W. 191; Cook v. Portland, 20 Oreg. 580, 585, 27 Pac. 263, 13 L. R. A. 533).

3. Com. v. Rentschler, 11 Pa. Dist. 203, 204, holding that the phrase is so used in a statute declaring it criminal to distribute circulars reflecting upon the political actions of a candidate.

4. See State v. Cunningham, 83 Wis. 90, 134, 53 N. W. 35, 35 Am. St. Rep. 27 note, 17 L. R. A. 135, where it is held that an action at law which may have a political effect is not necessarily a political action.

5. See Shields v. McGregor, 91 Mo. 534, 544, 4 S. W. 266; Turner v. Drake, 71 Mo. 285, 287.

The words apply to independent candidates as well as to those who are nominees of regular party organizations. Shields v. McGregor, 91 Mo. 534, 544, 4 S. W. 266.

6. Black L. Dict.; Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in Auryansen v. Hackensack Imp. Commission, 45 N. J. L. 113, 115].

Statutory definition.—"Political corporations are those which have principally for their object the administration of a portion of the state, and to whom a part of the powers of government is delegated to that effect." La. Civ. Code, art. 429 [quoted in State v. Louisiana Bar Assoc., (La. 1904) 36 So. 241; State v. Kohnke, 109 La. 838, 843, 33 So. 793].

Does not include a bar association consisting in a mere voluntary association of lawyers. State v. Louisiana Bar Assoc., (La. 1904) 36 So. 241.

"A community clothed with extensive civil authority . . . is sometimes called a 'political,' sometimes a 'municipal,' and sometimes a 'public' corporation." See Angell & A. Corp. [cited in Winspear v. Holman Dist. Tp., 37 Iowa 542, 544].

Subject to jurisdiction coextensive with its limits see Courts, 11 Cyc. 668.

7. Distinguished from private corporations with reference to governmental control see Corporations, 10 Cyc. 157 et seq.

8. See 11 Cyc. 341–343.

11. State v. Englewood Drainage, etc., Com'rs, 41 N. J. L. 154, 156.

POLITICAL OCCURRENCES. A term which, when used in a charter party to designate a certain ground of demurrage, has been held to include only such political occurrences as directly cause the delay and not such as are indirect causes of it.[12] (See, generally, SHIPPING.)

POLITICAL OFFENSE. See EXTRADITION (INTERNATIONAL).[13]

POLITICAL OFFICES. Such as are not immediately connected with the administration of justice, or with the execution of the mandates of a superior[14] officer.[15]

POLITICAL PARTY. See ELECTIONS,[16] 15 Cyc. 326.

POLITICAL POWER. The policy of government or its administration.[17] (See, generally, CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 8 Cyc. 714.)

POLITICAL QUESTIONS. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.[18]

POLITICAL RIGHTS. Those which may be exercised in the formation or administration of the government;[19] which consist in the power to participate,

The distinctive marks are that such divisions embrace each a certain territory and its inhabitants, organized for the public advantage and not in the interest of particular individuals or classes; that their chief design is the exercise of governmental functions, and that to the electors residing within each is to some extent committed the power of local government, to be wielded either mediately or immediately, within their territory, for the benefit of the people there residing. State v. Englewood Drainage, etc., Com'rs, 41 N. J. L. 154, 157 [quoted in Allison v. Corker, 67 N. J. L. 596, 606, 52 Atl. 362]. See also Smith v. Howell, 60 N. J. L. 384, 386, 38 Atl. 180, where the syllabus of State v. Englewood, supra (there cited as Lydecker v. Englewood) is quoted as a concise statement of the existing authority in the supreme court on the subject as follows: "A political division to whose boundaries a general tax may be confined is a division of the state with its inhabitants, organized for the public advantage and not in the interest of particular individuals or classes, the chief design of which is the exercise of governmental functions, and to the electors residing within which is, to some extent, committed the power of local government."

"Essential element, in a sustainable political division, of the popular voice of the inhabitants of the territory" see Allison v. Corker, 67 N. J. L. 596, 607, 52 Atl. 362.

Includes a street lighting district, the legal voters of which once a year elect commissioners to determine how much money shall be expended by them in lighting the streets of the district. Smith v. Howell, 60 N. J. L. 384, 385, 38 Atl. 180.

Does not include a sewerage, drainage, and water district under a board to be elected every five years by male and female resident landowners in fee, such board being invested with some control over a defined territory, but having no concern with the inhabitants, such district being formed, not for public advantage, but in the interest of a particular class — the landowners, and the chief end of which is not the government of the persons and things within its territory, but mere land improvement at the expense of the land either by general tax or special assessment, and the electors of which district have no voice whatever in its corporate affairs, the choice of commissioners and approval of plans falling on the landowners alone. State v. Englewood Tp. Drainage, etc., Com'rs, 41 N. J. L. 154, 155, 157.

12. See Sixteen Hundred Tons Nitrate of Soda v. McLeod, 61 Fed. 849, 851, 10 C. C. A. 115, where political occurrences, by cause of which dealers refuse to sell, but which leave them free to sell if they will, were held not included by the term.

POOL MEASURE. An allowance claimed by ancient custom in the port of London of one chaldron to every score, the basis of which measure is the chaldron, a well known quantity, being a multiple of so many bushels; a measure by the ordinary chaldron with a certain allowance of one chaldron over in twenty.[75] (See, generally, WEIGHTS and MEASURES.)

POOL-ROOM.[76] A room in which pools on races, etc., are sold;[77] a room in which betting on races is carried on;[78] in its common and popular meaning, a place where people resort to wager on horse-racing which is run away from the room or out of the state.[79] In another sense, a room where the game of pool is played.[80] (See GAMING, 20 Cyc. 894; POOL.)

POOL-SELLER. One who sells pools on any event — as horse racing, boat racing, elections, etc.[81] (See GAMING, 20 Cyc. 894; POOL; POOL-SELLING.)

POOL-SELLING.[82] A method of betting[83] or wagering money upon horse races or other contests;[84] betting upon the results of horse-races and other trials of skill, speed, and durations, at a place with apparatus and devices convenient for this purpose.[85] (See POOL; POOL-SELLER; and, generally, GAMING, 20 Cyc. 885.)

POOL-STOCK. A term which appears to have been used by a certain corporation to describe certain of its stock which was not to be used until after a given period of years, and for which special receipts were issued to holders as evidence of their ownership.[86] (See, generally, CORPORATIONS, 10 Cyc. 1 et seq.)

POOL TICKET. A ticket entitling the holder to a share in the proceeds of a pool.[87] (See GAMING, 20 Cyc. 877; POOL.)

POOR. Destitute of property; wanting in material riches or goods, needy, indigent.[88] The word is used in two senses:[89] In one sense simply as opposed to rich,[90] applied to persons who are not entirely destitute of property but who are not rich; as a poor man or woman, poor people;[91] in the other sense to describe that class who are entirely destitute and helpless;[92] indigent, necessitous, denoting extreme want;[93] in law, so completely destitute of property as to be entitled to maintenance from the public.[94] It may also be used in a third sense as a term of endearment and compassion.[95] (Poor: As Applied to Beneficiaries, see CHARITIES, 6 Cyc. 939. As Entitled to Public Support, see PAUPERS, 30 Cyc. 1064. Debtor, see POOR DEBTOR, and Cross-References Thereunder. See also POOR CHILD; POOR DEBTOR; POOR-HOUSE; POOR RATE; POOR RELATIONS.)

There is no distinguishing between the degrees of poverty; for if degrees of poverty were to be taken into consideration, and govern the construction, it would open a field of inquiry into the relative poverty of relations, rendering it very difficult and embarrassing, if not impracticable, ever to arrive at a just conclusion who were poor. The devise to relations, is, of itself, not free from ambiguity, and courts have been obliged to lay hold of the Statutes of Distributions as the standard, to prevent an inquiry which would be infinite, and would extend to relations ad infinitum." 11. Of counties.—As regulated by constitution see COUNTIES, 11 Cyc. 344. As used in N. Y. Const. art. 6, § 20, prohibiting practice as an attorney by judges, of specified courts, elected in a county having a "population" exceeding one hundred and twenty thousand, quære, whether the word is to be confined to the citizen inhabitants, excluding aliens, or extends to all inhabitants. The court declined to decide the question, but Woodward, J., in a concurring opinion, took the view that the word was not of so precise a definition that it could not be made to conform to the spirit of the instrument, and that it was therefore limited to the resident citizen population of the county. Evidence.[13] Synonym, in One Construction, of "People," see People, 30 Cyc. 1388 text and note 8.)

Populist. A member of the People's Party.[14]

Populus Anglicanus nemini servire nisi Deo et legibus. A maxim meaning "The people of England are subject to none but to God and the laws."[15]

Populus Anglicanus non nisi suis legibus quas ipse elegerit tenetur obtemperare. A maxim meaning "The people of England are bound to obey only their own laws, which they themselves have chosen."[16]

Populus vult decipi — et decipiatur. A Latin phrase meaning "The people wishes to be deceived — and let it be deceived."[17]

Porcelain. A ceramic ware having a translucent body, and when glazed a translucent glaze also.[18]

Porch. In common speech, a word applied to a shelter in front of a door, and capable of being used as a generic term including a shelter with closed sides as well as one with pillars.[19] (See Portico.)

Pork. The flesh of swine, fresh or salted, used for food.[20]

Port. A term used in two senses — first, according to the popular understanding, as denoting a particular place; and, second, in a larger acceptation, as comprising under one name a district of many places classed together for the purpose of revenue;[21] a term which even when applied to a single specific port, may be used in different senses, one as the head port of a district wherein are subordinate and independent ports, and the other the limited (also the popular) sense, of a port situate locally on a certain river or part of a river with a town near thereto;[22] a term which, in sea phrase, may be said to be any safe station for

Does not include a flight of steps from the street to the second-story of a building; nor does such a structure bear sufficient relation to a porch to come within the meaning of a provision permitting the use of space "for erecting porches . . . or for other purposes of utility," although such provision is construed to relate to porches and other erections of similar nature. People v. Carpenter, 1 Mich. 273, 282, 284.

20. Webster Dict. [quoted in Whitson v. Culbertson, 7 Ind. 195, 196].

"Pork on foot" is a term which embraces hogs that may, in due season, and at convenience, be prepared for and converted into pork, as well as those that may be ready for the knife. Byous v. Mount, 89 Tenn. 361, 364, 365, 17 S. W. 1037, where the term is so construed as used in the statute exempting from execution "pork slaughtered or on foot."

"Pork hogs" is a term which may indicate slaughtered or live hogs, according to circumstances. See Alexander v. Dunn, 5 Ind. 122, 124, where the term, in consideration of the fact that the hogs so described were to be delivered at a pork-house, and of the use of the word "net" in connection with the weight, was construed as "slaughtered hogs"; while it was said that had the slaughter-house been indicated, live hogs would plainly have been intended.

"Pork-house" is a term which has been used to describe a place for weighing and cutting up pork, as distinguished from a slaughter-house. See Alexander v. Dunn, 5 Ind. 122, 124.

21. Kingston-upon-Hull Dock Co. v. Browne, 2 B. & Ad. 43, 54, 22 E. C. L. 28.

The name of a single port may cover various places. Martin v. Hilton, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 371, 377; Smith v. Swift, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 329, 332; Kingston-upon-Hull Dock Co. v. Browne, 2 B. & Ad. 43, 54, 22 E. C. L. 28. But the name of a port does not necessarily include all its members within its legal limits. See Devato v. Eight Hundred and Twenty-Three Barrels of Plumbago, 20 Fed. 510, 515, where it is said that goods consigned under a bill of lading to a merchant in New York city, at the "port of entry" could not properly be delivered at distant places within the limits of the port.

ships; but, in law, described as a place for arriving and lading and unlading of ships in a manner prescribed by law; and near to which is a city or town for the accommodation of mariners and securing and vending of merchandise; [23] a place either on the sea coast or on a river, where ships stop for the purpose of loading and unloading, from whence they part and where they finish their voyages; [24] in the Browne, 2 B. & Ad. 43, 59, 22 E. C. L. 28, where it is shown that the word in these two uses was applied in 14 Geo. III, c. 56, to the port of Hull or Kingston-upon-Hull.

23. The Wharf Case, 3 Bland (Md.) 361, 369, adding that in this (the legal) sense "a public port is a complex subject, consisting of somewhat that is natural, as a convenient access from the sea, a safe situation against winds, and a shore upon which vessels may well unlade; something that is artificial, as keys, wharves and warehouses; and something that is civil, as privileges and regulations given to it by the government. A public port often includes more than the bare place where ships lade or unlade; it is sometimes extended many miles, including several places as members of the port; designating one as a port of entry, and another as a port of delivery."

As used in U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 2767, providing that no merchandise shall be transported under penalty of forfeiture thereof from one port of the United States to another port of the United States, in a foreign vessel, the word means "any place from which merchandise may be shipped." Petrel Guano Co. v. Jarnette, 25 Fed. 675, 677.

Home port.— Within the meaning of U. S. Rev. St. (1878) tit. 48, c. 1, as to registry and recording of vessels, as in admiralty law, the home port of a vessel is the place where she belongs and where her owners reside. The Dingley Bill. 23 U. S. St. at L. 58 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 2831] provides that the word, as used in the U. S. Rev. St. (1878) §§ 4178, 4334 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 2963], in reference to painting the name and port of every registered or licensed vessel on the stern of such vessel, shall be construed to mean either the port where the vessel is registered or the place in the same district where the vessel was built or where one or more of the owners reside. The words themselves "home port" indicate that that is where the vessel belongs or is owned. It may be a port of entry or a port or place other than a port of entry. The Lotus No. 2, 26 Fed. 637, 639, 640.

"'Port,' as used in the revenue act, rests somewhat in theory, and involves intention . . . and perhaps subsequent acts, to make its operation effectual. The language of the statute is that it may include places where cargoes are received and discharged, thus indicating a distinction between a commercial and a fiscal port. It cannot be the intention of the law that a vessel must report at the barge office before it can be considered in port, since there are several piers or docks between that office and the mouth of the river." Hartwell Lumber Co. v. U. S. 128 Fed. 306, 308, referring to the port of Chicago, in view of the purposes of the Dingley Act, in force July 24, 1897.

Distinction as used in relation to collection of customs and in relation to regulation of commerce.— Within the meaning of U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 2767, as used in title 34, chapter 4, in relation to collection of duties on imports, the term may include any place from which merchandise can be shipped for importation or at which merchandise can be imported, but in title 48 in reference to the regulations of commerce and navigation, and chapter 1, under that title in reference to recording and registry of vessels, it is not confined to that meaning. In the former case it means a port of entry, in the latter it is used in the general sense. The Lotus No. 2, 26 Fed. 637, 640.

Within the meaning of the terms "home" and "foreign ports" as used in regard to maritime liens attaching in the latter on the Missouri river, the word applies to places where steamboats may land with safety and lie moored to the shore, and not merely those places designated by acts of congress as ports of entry and for other purposes. Rees v. Steam-boat General Terry, 3 Dak. 155, 159, 13 N. W. 533.

"Port of delivery" is a phrase used to distinguish the port of unlivery, or destination, from any port at which the vessel touches in the course of the voyage for other purposes as for advice, refreshment, inquiry after markets, or in consequence of stress of weather, or other necessity. The Two Catherines, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,288, 2 Mason 319, 331. See, generally, SHIPPING.

"Port of departure" is a term which as used in a regulation requiring the master of the vessel about to depart from any foreign port for a port in the United States to procure "at such port of departure" a bill of health, means the port from which the vessel cleared, and not another port at which she last stopped while bound to the United States. The Dago, 61 Fed. 986, 989, 10 C. C. A. 224. See, generally, SHIPPING.

"Port of destination" is the port at which a ship is to end her voyage. Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in Sheridan v. Ireland, 66 Me. 65, 69]. Never consists, even partly, in land.— "Land, according to any definition, can never be considered as making a part of a port. A bank, quay, or wharf, is a necessary appendage to it; and, according to the jurisprudence of this state, is always public and destined to the use of all, as well as the port itself. But this public use cannot legally be extended farther than the bank or wharf, which is always distinct from alluvion fully formed, and subjected by law to the ownership of private individuals or public bodies." Packwood v. Walden, 7 Mart. N. S. (La.) 81, 88, holding that a place formerly part of a port ceased to be so upon being occupied by alluvion.

A place of actual use.— "Not any place within the geographical limits of the same name where ships might load and unload, but where they in fact do so, i. e., where they are accustomed to do so." Devato v. Eight Hundred and Twenty-Three Barrels of Plumbago, 20 Fed. 510, 516.

The term "ports and havens," within the rule that all ports and havens are within the body of the counties of the realm (a discredited common-law theory asserted in opposition to the doctrine of admiralty jurisdiction in ports or havens), means not merely port and haven towns, but all the tide-waters included within the harbors and franchises. When applied to property acquired from one's ancestor, the word is the most comprehensive that can be used, broad enough to include and intended to cover all the property or estate thus received. Lewis' Appeal, 108 Pa. St. 133, 137.

When used, with reference to the gift inter vivos which shall operate as an ademption of a legacy it is clearly of technical import and is generally used for the purpose of indicating or signifying that part of a person's estate which a child would be entitled to upon the death of such person, but which has been given to the child by such person, while living, as an advancement or provision. State v. Crossley, 69 Ind. 203, 209, adding that where there is great disparity between the gift made inter vivos and the legacy bequeathed in the will, the amount of the legacy being largely in excess of the gift, the gift cannot be regarded as either a portion or advancement, within the legal meaning of the terms, which will operate as an ademption or a satisfaction pro tanto of the legacy, unless the testator in making the gift declared his intention, or unless the circumstances clearly indicate such intention, that the gift shall so operate.

78. Black L. Dict. [citing Mackeldey Rom. L. § 238].

"The term 'possessio' occurs in the Roman jurists in various senses. There is possessio generally, and possessio civilis, and possessio naturalis. Possessio denoted, originally, bare detention; but this detention, under certain conditions, becomes a legal state, inasmuch as it leads to ownership through usucapio. Accordingly the word possessio, which required no qualification so long as there was no other notion attached to possessio, requires such qualification when detention becomes a legal state. This detention, then, when it has the conditions necessary to usucapio, is called possessio civilis, and all other possessio as opposed to civilis is naturalis." Sandars Just. Inst. 274 [quoted in Wharton L. Lex.].

Possessio per longum, continuum et pacificum usum, sine consensu expresso, per patientiam veri domini, qui scivit et non prohibuit, sed permisit de consensu tacito is a description of adverse possession as a means of acquiring easements, which means: "Possession through a long time, continuous and peaceable use without express consent, by sufferance of the true owner who has known and has not prevented, but permitted by tacit consent." 2. Possession of Land — a. In General. Possession of land has been defined as the holding of it and exclusive exercise of dominion over it.[94]

b. Compared With "Occupancy." As applied to land, the term may be employed in the sense of Occupancy, q. v., with which it is nearly if not quite synonymous,[95] and which has been said to be its ordinary meaning.[96]

c. Compared With "Seizin." The term in this connection has also been used as implying actual seizin;[97] but while it has been said to be, now, legally, synony-

"others" instead of "other persons") [quoted in Rice v. Frayser, 24 Fed. 460, 463].

Including power to exclude.— "By the possession of a thing we always conceive the condition in which not only one's own dealing with the thing is physically possible, but every other person's dealing with it is capable of being excluded." Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in Webster Lumber Co. v. Keystone Lumber, etc., Co., 51 W. Va. 545, 554, 42 S. E. 632, 66 L. R. A. 33]. See also Sullivan v. Sullivan, 66 N. Y. 37, 42.

Double meaning.— "In an instrument dealing with real estate 'possession' means broadly one of two things. It may mean what has been styled . . . 'physical possession,' as when a tenant in fee occupies and farms his own land, or if not farming his own land, still occupies in the sense of receiving his rents from his tenants. In that connection, the alternative to 'possession,' natural, proper, technical, strictly legal, is receipt of the rents and profits. Again, 'possession' in a legal instrument is frequently used with reference to the title, and to designate that title which is enjoyed in presenti as distinguished from that which is to be enjoyed in futuro — the distinction being between an estate in possession and an estate in remainder, reversion, or expectancy. In most legal instruments . . . it is generally possible to give to the word 'possession' either one or the other of these two meanings, although, no doubt, they occasionally overlap one another." Leslie v. Rothers, [1894] 2 Ch. 499, 506, 63 L. J. Ch. 617, 71 L. T. Rep. N. S. 134, 7 Reports 600.

By owner, implies right.— "There can be no possession, actual or constructive, by an owner of an estate in lands without at least the right to actual possession as against every other person." mous with "seizin," [98] and is sometimes used in that sense,[99] it does not fully express the technical meaning of that term, as seizin includes possession yet it implies something more,[1] and does not mean the same.[2]

3. In the Sense of "Ownership." The word has been used in certain cases in the same sense as "ownership," when referring to realty,[3] as well, also as when referring to personalty.[4] And the term "ownership" has sometimes been satisfied by the fact of possession.[5]

4. With Reference to Thing Possessed. As applied to the thing possessed, the word is used in some of the books in the sense of property,[6] and may, no doubt, include real estate if so intended, although such would not be its technical signification.[7] A possession is a hereditament or chattel.[8]

For example, the possession of undivided property within N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1532, has been described as not an actual, physical possession only, but also that possession which follows the title (Bender v. Terwilliger, 48 N. Y. App. Div. 371, 372, 63 N. Y. Suppl. 269 [affirmed in 166 N. Y. 590, 59 N. E. 1118]); not a strict pedis possessio, but a present right to possession (Weston v. Stoddard, 137 N. Y. 119, 128, 33 N. E. 62, 33 Am. St. Rep. 697, 20 L. R. A. 624); a constructive possession, such as the law draws to the title (Wainman v. Hampton, 110 N. Y. 429, 433, 18 N. E. 234). Each of the three passages above cited is quoted in Heinze v. Butte, etc., Consol. Min. Co., 126 Fed. 1, 3, 61 C. C. A. 63, holding that the possession which the law imputes to the holder of the legal title is sufficient to maintain an action for partition under Mont. Code Civ. Proc. § 1340, giving that remedy to cotenants "who hold and are in possession of real property as joint tenants."

May be of whole by occupancy of part.— As where the owner of a tract of land regularly laid out is in possession of a part, but is constructively in possession of the whole. Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in Fleming v. Maddox, 30 Iowa 239, 241 (quoted in Black L. Dict.)]. This is often called "constructive possession" see McColman v. Wilkes, 3 Strobh. (S. C.) 465, 471, 51 Am. Dec. 637. Although, where there is no controversy, the rule that possession of a part is possession of the whole is to be taken in reference to the entire tract, yet where there is a conflict of titles it is to be taken in reference to such conflict. Taylor v. Burnsides, 1 Gratt. (Va.) 165, 196. Occupancy of part under conveyance may constitute possession of the whole (Coleman v. Billings, 89 Ill. 183, 188; Barger v. Hobbs, 67 Ill. 592, 597; Davis v. Easley, 13 Ill. 192, 199); and in such case the deed will be regarded as enlarging the possession of a portion so as to include all land called for by the deed (Austin v. Rust, 73 Ill. 491, 493).

Degrees in exclusiveness.—"Possession of land is the holding of an exclusive exercise of dominion over it. It is evident that this is not and cannot be uniform in every case, and that there may be degrees in the exclusiveness even of the exercise of ownership. The owner cannot occupy, literally, the whole tract,—he cannot have an actual pedis possessio of all, nor hold it in the grasp of his hand. His possession must be indicated by other acts. The usual one is that of inclosure. But this cannot always be done, yet he may hold possession, in fact, of uninclosed land by the exercise of such acts of ownership over it as are necessary to enjoy the ordinary use of which it is capable and acquire the profits it yields in its present condition. Such acts being continued and uninterrupted will amount to actual possession." Illinois Steel Co. v. Jeka, 123 Wis. 419, 429, 101 N. W. 399.

37. Peaceable distinguished from disputed or contested possession see Powell v. Mayo, 24 N. J. Eq. 178, 181 [quoted in Adler v. Sullivan, 115 Ala. 582, 587, 22 So. 87 (quoted in Southern R. Co. v. Hall, 145 Ala. 224, 226, 41 So. 135)].

38. "Scrambling possession" is one "without any savor of the legitimate enjoyment of property rights, and neither sought nor secured on any such account; but which is only scrambled for, by one party or by both, because of some supposed advantage it may command in a pending struggle. The uniform course of adjudication . . . has always been to refuse recognition of such a miscalled possession as investing its claimant with any title to the protection offered in behalf of a peaceable occupancy, however acquired, which the holder intends and uses simply as an exercise of that dominion which insures an enjoyment of the ordinary and accustomed rights of property." Dyer v. Reitz, 14 Mo. App. 45, 46.

Distinguished from "peaceable possession" see FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER, 19 Cyc. 1115 text and note 38.

No basis for action of forcible entry and detainer see FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER, 19 Cyc. 1132–1333.

As estoppel when coupled with representation that property held belongs to estate of another see DETINUE, 14 Cyc. 247 note 32.

39. "Substantial possession" is an occupancy in fact of the whole that is in possession — pedis possessio. McColman v. Wilkes, 3 Strobh. (S. C.) 465, 471, 51 Am. Dec. 637.

40. "Virtual possession" is a term employed on one occasion to distinguish the possession of the whole by occupancy of a part see McColman v. Wilkes, 3 Strobh. (S. C.) 465, 471, 51 Am. Dec. 637.

41. As where the party is in actual use and enjoyment of the land or other real estate. Bacon v. Sheppard, 11 N. J. L. 197, 198, 20 Am. Dec. 583.

44. "Possession by relation of law" is where the party in actual possession becomes dispossessed, and is afterward restored, by reëntry or in some other lawful manner;

D. In Civil Law Jurisdictions — 1. In Louisiana. Under Louisiana law, the detention or enjoyment of a thing, which we hold or exercise by ourself or by another who keeps it or exercises it in our name,[45] and divided into two species natural and civil.[46]

2. In French Law. In a proper sense, the detention of a thing, which he, who is master of it, or who has reason to believe that he is so, has in his own keeping, or in that of another person by whom he possesses; it implies a right and a fact, the right to enjoy annexed to the right of property, and the fact of the real detention of the thing that it be in the hands of the master, or of another party.[47]

3. In Spanish and Mexican Law. The occupation of a corporeal thing.[48]

E. As a Degree of Title.[49] A good title where no better title appears; [50] one he is then, during the period which has intervened between the dispossession and the restoration, deemed in possession by relation of law. Bacon v. Sheppard, 11 N. J. L. 197, 198, 20 Am. Dec. 583.

Less efficacious than possession in fact see Bacon v. Sheppard, 11 N. J. L. 197, 198, 20 Am. Dec. 583.

45. La. Code, art. 3389 [quoted in Suñol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 254, 266].

Implies a right and a fact.— The right to enjoy annexed to the right of property, and the fact of the real detention of the thing, that is in the hands of the master or another party. La. Code, art. 3397 [cited in Suñol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 254, 266].

"To be able to acquire possession of a property, two distinct things are requisite: 1. The intention of possessing as owner; 2. The corporeal possession of the thing." La. Code, art. 3399 [cited in Suñol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 254, 266].

Occupation of part with entry and intention to possess all within the boundaries is possession of the whole. See La. Code, art. 3400 [cited in Suñol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 254, 266].

Intent to possess sufficient to preserve possession once acquired by corporeal detention see La. Code, art. 3405 [cited in Suñol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 254, 267].

Possession animo domini is: That kind of possession which is the basis of usucaption, or the prescription of acquisition, and which "must be, at least in its commencement, a corporeal possession, and must be continuous, uninterrupted, peaceable, public, and unequivocal." Wilson v. Marshall, 10 La. Ann. 327, 330 [quoted (as Wilson v. Martin) in Vicksburg, etc., R. Co. v. Le Rosen, 52 La. Ann. 192, 197, 26 So. 854].

46. La. Code, art. 3390 [cited in Suñol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 254, 266].

"Civil possession."— Possession is civil, when a person ceases to reside in the house or on the land which he occupied, or to detain the moveable which he possesses, but without intending to abandon the possession." La. Code, art. 3392 [quoted in Suñol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 254, 266]. It is "the detention of a thing by virtue of a 'just title, and under the conviction of possessing as owner.'" La. Code, art. 3394 [quoted in Suñol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 254, 266]. "In law, civil possession is as extensive as ownership, and there may be cases where actual possession is broader than the title." Thomas v. Blair, 111 La. 678, 684, 35 So. 811.

"Natural possession" is "that by which a man detains a thing corporeal, as by occupying a house, cultivating grounds, or retaining a moveable in possession." La. Code, art. 3391 [quoted in Suñol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 254, 266]. It is "also defined to be the corporeal detention of a thing, which we possess as belonging to us, without any title to that possession, or with a title which is void." La. Code, art. 3393 [quoted in Suñol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 254, 266].

47. Suñol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 254, 263, 264.

48. It is divided into possession in fact (de hecho), and possession in fact and by the will (de hecho y de voluntad), the former, nothing more than a simple holding or detention of a thing, which is under our control, without the intention of acquiring the thing for ourselves; such as the possession of a bailee, a tenant, and others, who possess a thing in the name of another, and not in their own; the latter, the holding of a thing with the intention of excluding all others from its use, or, that holding or detention, which a man has of things corporeal, by the aid both of the body and the mind; the latter species, divided into natural and civil, natural being that which consists in the detention of the thing itself corporeally, as one's house or estate; civil being that which consists in the detention of the thing mentally, as when one departs from his house or estate without the intent to abandon it; true possession comprising both natural and civil and resulting from some regular title, that is, a title sufficient to transfer the property; for the acquisition of which is necessary the will or intention to acquire it, and an occupation or actual detention of the thing, either corporeally or symbolically. See Suñol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 254, 262.

Transfer of possession accompanying oral grant of realty under Spanish and New Mexican law see Frauds, Statute of, 20 Cyc. 209 text and note 52, 210 text and note 53.

49. Distinguished from "title" see Attachment, 4 Cyc. 572 text and notes 28, 29.

One of the elements of title see Shafer v. Constans, 3 Mont. 369, 371.

50. Black L. Dict. [citing 20 Viner Abr. 278]. Compare, however, Cole v. Berry, 42 N. J. L. 308, 315, 36 Am. Rep. 511 [quoted in Kestner v. Keiser Cigar Co., 4 Pa. Dist. 479, 480] (evidence of title, but not title); Miller degree of title, although the lowest, such an interest in land that one who has only the bare possession may maintain ejectment against a mere wrong-doer who has entered into the possession.[51]

F. In Connection With Various Subjects. Among the many subjects in relation to which possession is important on the civil side of the law are abandonment,[52] admiralty,[53] alterations of instruments,[54] assignments,[55] assignments for benefit of creditors.[56] It is an object of the writ of assistance,[57] also of the proceeding, assize,[58] and is of importance in relation to attachment as affecting amenability of property thereto,[59] and otherwise bearing upon the proceeding, as Piano Co. v. Parker, 155 Pa. St. 208, 210, 26 Atl. 303, 35 Am. St. Rep. 873 (where it is said that possession is not conclusive of title).

51. Swift v. Agnes, 33 Wis. 228, 240 [quoted in Baragiano v. Villani, 117 Ill. App. 372, 375]; Foust v. Territory, 8 Okla. 541, 543, 58 Pac. 728.

"Legal possession of land, though the lowest interest or title that a person can have, is an estate therein, capable of being conveyed, and when conveyed creates a sufficient privity of estate between a grantor and grantee to carry the covenants of warranty and quiet enjoyment through successive conveyances to a remote grantee. . . . Legal possession of land which is sufficient to carry the covenants upon a conveyance must be a right or interest in the nature of property, valid, at all events, against all extraneous intrusion and capable of the same kind of transfer and devolution as other property." Mygatt v. Coe, 147 N. Y. 456, 462, 463, 47 N. E. 17.

Resulting in possessory title when conveyed by quitclaim by grantor without title see DEEDS, 13 Cyc. 654 note 6.

As limit of legal title granted under certain deeds see DEEDS, 13 Cyc. 656 text and note 64.

"Possession is nine-tenths of the law.—This adage is not to be taken as true to the full extent, so as to mean that the person in possession can only be ousted by one whose title is nine times better than his, but it places in a strong light the legal truth that every claimant must succeed by the strength of his own title, and not by the weakness of his antagonist's." Wharton L. Lex. [quoted in Black L. Dict.].

POSSESSION FENCE. A term said to mean an enclosure made by the lapping of fallen trees.[68] (See, generally, Fences, 19 Cyc. 466; Possession.)

POSSESSIO PACIFICA FACIT JUS. A maxim meaning "Peaceable possession for the legal time gives a right." [69]

POSSESSIO PACIFICA POUR ANNS 60 FACIT JUS. A maxim meaning "Peaceable possession for sixty years gives a right." [70]

POSSESSIO PEDIS. An occupancy in fact of the whole that is in possession, substantial possession;[71] a foothold on the land, an actual entry, a possession in fact, a standing upon it, an occupation of it, as a real demonstrative act done.[72] A term synonymous with "Occupation," q. v., "subjection to the will and control," and "actual possession." [73] (See Pedis Possessio, 30 Cyc. 1329; and, generally, Adverse Possession, 1 Cyc. 968.)

68. See Freedman v. Bonner, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 40 S. W. 47, 48, and from the meaning and connection in which it is used such inclosure would seem to be merely for the purpose of marking a claim.

69. Morgan Leg. Max., "for the legal time" being evidently an interpolation by the translator to suit the law of adverse possession.

70. Black L. Dict.

71. McColman v. Wilkes, 3 Strobh. (S. C.) 465, 471, 51 Am. Dec. 637.

Does not require actual occupancy see Porter v. Kennedy, 1 McMull. (S. C.) 354, 357.

72. Churchill v. Onderdonk, 59 N. Y. 134, 136, where the term is given as "pedis possessio or pedis positio," and "actual possession" is said to be the same thing.

73. See Lawrence v. Fulton, 19 Cal. 683, 690.

POSSESSIO TERMINUM TENENTIS POSSESSIO REVERSIONARII EST HABENDA. A maxim meaning "The possession of the tenant of the estate is to be reckoned the possession of the reversion." [74]

POSSESSOR. One who possesses; one who has possession.[75] (See, generally, POSSESS; POSSESSION.)

POSSESSORY ACTION. An action which has for its immediate object to obtain or recover the actual "possession" of the subject-matter; [76] an action founded on possession.[77]

POSSESSORY CLAIM. A term used to describe a claim, founded in Possession.[78] (See CLAIM, 7 Cyc. 180; POSSESSION.)

POSSESSORY LIEN. See ATTORNEY AND CLIENT, 4 Cyc. 1005.

POSSESSORY TITLE. A term which has been applied to a title gained by possession.[79] (Possessory Title: In General, see ADVERSE POSSESSION, 1 Cyc. 968. To Mining Claims, see MINES AND MINERALS, 27 Cyc. 641. To Public Land, see PUBLIC LANDS. To Support Action, see EJECTMENT, 15 Cyc. 17; ENTRY, WRIT OF, 15 Cyc. 1071; QUIETING TITLE; TRESPASS; TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE.)

74. Morgan Leg. Max.

75. Black L. Dict.

Distinguished from "owner" see Ainsa v. U. S., 184 U. S. 639, 646, 22 S. Ct. 507, 46 L. ed. 727.

Used in the sense of owner, in the opinion in Higgins v. Kusterer, 41 Mich. 318, 324, 2 N. W. 13, 32 Am. Rep. 160, as that opinion is construed in Bigelow v. Shaw, 65 Mich. 341, 346, 32 N. W. 800, 8 Am. St. Rep. 902.

Pocedores de buena feé, "'possessors in good faith' rather than owners" see Ainsa v. U. S., 184 U. S. 639, 646, 22 S. Ct. 507, 46 L. ed. 727.

Possessor in bad faith.— See La. Civ. Code, art. 3452 [quoted in Black L. Dict.]. One who is not ignorant of the fact that there exists a defect in his title or his mode of acquiring possession (Philippine Civ. Code, art. 433 [quoted in Lerma v. De la Cruz, 7 Philippine 581, 584]).

76. Black L. Dict., adding: "As distinguished from an action which merely seeks to vindicate the plaintiff's 'title,' or which involves the bare right only; the latter being called a 'petitory' action."

"In admiralty practice a possessory suit is one which is brought to recover the possession of a vessel, had under a claim of title" (Black L. Dict.); one which seeks to restore to the owner the possession of which he has been unjustly deprived, when that possession has followed a legal title, or as it is sometimes phrased, when there has been a possession under a claim of title with a constat of property (The Tilton, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 14,054, 5 Mason 465, 468).

Distinguished from petitory action: In general see Black L. Dict. In admiralty see The Tilton, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 14,054, 5 Mason 465, 468 [cited in Black L. Dict.]; 1 Kent Comm. 371 [cited in Black L. Dict.]. See PETITORY SUIT, 30 Cyc. 1535.

Replevin and ejectment included see Atwater v. Spalding, 86 Minn. 101, 102, 90 N. W. 370, 91 Am. St. Rep. 331.

To protect possession see Jennings-Heywood Oil Syndicate v. Houssiere-Latreille Oil Co., 117 La. 960, 962, 963, 42 So. 467.

Title not put in issue see Jennings-Heywood Oil Syndicate v. Houssiere-Latreille Oil Co., 117 La. 960, 967, 42 So. 467.

Not to be joined with petitory action see JOINDER AND SPLITTING OF ACTIONS, 23 Cyc. 435 text and note 14.

77. Black L. Dict., adding: "Trespass for injuries to personal property is called a 'possessory' action, because it lies only for a plaintiff who, at the moment of the injury complained of, was in actual or constructive, immediate, and exclusive possession."

In Louisiana see Code Proc. § 6 [quoted in Black L. Dict.].

78. For examples see Larsen v. Oregon R., etc., Co., 19 Oreg. 240, 244, 246, 247, 23 Pac. 974 [cited in Enoch v. Spokane Falls, etc., R. Co., 6 Wash. 393, 398, 33 Pac. 966] (where the term is used in connection with the application of the provision of U. S. St. March 3, 1875 (18 U. S. St. at L. 482), § 3, concerning the condemnation of "possessory claims," to the right of a settler, upon a homestead claim, whose compliance with the land law is incipient and not yet complete, to whom therefore no patent has been granted; which right, though inchoate, is protected); Fields v. Livingston, 17 U. C. C. P. 15, 25 (where it is said: "There are two kinds of possessory claims under the law of limitation; one, by which the party either has in himself alone, or in himself and by those through whom he claims, such a length of possession that a legal and marketable title has thereby been acquired by the occupant, and the right of the owner has become extinguished; the other, by which an extinguishment alone has been effected without any more than the mere possessory title vesting in any one").

"Possessory claimant" is a term sometimes applied to the owner of a possessory claim. Enoch v. Spokane Falls, etc., R. Co., 6 Wash. 393, 397, 33 Pac. 966.

79. See Black v. Ryan, 4 App. Cas. (D. C.) 283, 287, where the phrase "good as a possessory title" was said to apply to "a title good by prescription or adverse possession under such circumstances and for such length of time as to have ripened into a perfect title, indefeasible at law or in equity."

I. NATURE AND PURPOSE.

A. Nature. The proceeding by possessory warrant is, in its nature, a mere summary mode of transferring possession of personalty to await the main trial of a civil suit.[1]

B. Purpose. The object or purpose of the proceeding is to protect and quiet possession of personalty [2] by restoring it summarily to the party having the recent lawfully acquired, quiet and peaceable possession thereof.[3]

II. IN WHOSE FAVOR AVAILABLE.

A. Consignees of Goods. A consignee of goods cannot obtain possession of them from a carrier who received them from another carrier by means of a possessory warrant, without producing the bill of lading or accounting therefor.[4]

B. Landlords. In addition to the ordinary cases in which a possessory warrant will issue,[5] a new and distinct right in a landlord to repossess crops by possessory warrant is created [6] in all cases where the cropper unlawfully sells or otherwise disposes of any part of a crop, or excludes the landlord from possession thereof, while the title thereto remains in the landlord.[7]

4. Bass v. Glover, 63 Ga. 745, where it is said that if, as between the consignee and the carrier, the consignee only was in possession within the meaning of the possessory warrant law, it was only a constructive possession, and while it remains uncertain as to who is the holder of the bill of lading, there is reasonable doubt in whom the best claims to a constructive possession reside.

7. Visage v. Bowers, 122 Ga. 760, 50 S. E. 952; Landrum v. Smith, 1 Ga. App. 215, 57 S. E. 913.

Where it does not appear, however, that defendant is seeking to remove the property, or to do any of the acts mentioned in Ga. Civ. Code (1895), § 3130, a proceeding by possessory warrant will not lie thereunder. Visage v. Bowers, 122 Ga. 760, 50 S. E. 952.

C. Persons Jointly Interested. Where two persons are jointly interested in personal property, either legally or equitably, and one of them delivers the possession of the same to a third person, the other cannot recover possession of the same by possessory warrant sued out by himself alone.[8] If, however, by the terms of partnership, one partner must have and has had the exclusive possession of certain personalty, in order to carry out the objects of the partnership, the warrant will, at his instance, lie against his copartner who has deprived him of possession by fraud.[9]

D. Principals. The possession of property by an agent is in law the possession of his principal, and suffices to support a proceeding by possessory warrant whenever the former, after demand, has refused to deliver the property to the latter,[10] or whenever there has been a wrongful taking from the agent's possession by a third party.[11]

E. Tenants. A warrant will lie at the instance of a tenant who has been deprived of his lawfully acquired, quiet, and peaceable possession of property by the landlord, although title is in the latter.[12]

F. Wife, For Self and Children. After property has, under the provisions of the statute, been set apart to the head of a family as an exemption, his possession is for the use and benefit of the wife and children, and if the property is tortiously taken from his possession, the wife, on behalf of herself and minor children, may proceed by possessory warrant to recover it.[13]

G. President of a Corporation. The president of a corporation cannot maintain a possessory warrant in his own name to recover possession of the corporate property of which he has had no prior possession either as an officer or an individual.[14]

III. Against Whom Available.

A. Agents. The warrant will lie against an agent at the instance of his principal where the former, after demand, has refused to deliver the property to the latter.[15]

B. Carriers. The remedy does not lie against a common carrier at the instance of a consignee of goods who is not in possession of the bill of lading.[16]

C. Landlords. Although title is in a landlord, his tenant, whom he has deprived of his lawfully acquired and peaceable possession of property, may invoke against him the remedy by possessory warrant.[17]

D. Public Officers. Public officers who, in the discharge of their official duties, take possession of property, are not amenable to a proceeding by possessory warrant.[18] It is otherwise, however, where the officer's act is under an invalid statute.[19]

Levying on property.—A possessory warrant will not lie to recover possession of property levied on by a sheriff in the discharge of his official duty, but the party injured by the levy made by the officer under such circumstances is left to his remedy by a claim or action of trespass against the officer. Raiford v. Hyde, 36 Ga. 93.

Impounding stock.—A city marshal impounding stock is not amenable to a possessory warrant (King v. Ford, 70 Ga. 628), unless the stock was impounded under a void law (Reeves v. Gay, 92 Ga. 309, 18 S. E. 61).

19. Reeves v. Gay, 92 Ga. 309, 18 S. E. 61; Cunningham v. Campbell, 33 Ga. 625.

Impressing property.— Where the statute under which a public officer impresses property is void, the proceeding by possessory warrant is an appropriate remedy to recover possession from him. Cunningham v. Campbell, 33 Ga. 625.

E. Purchasers at Judicial Sales. The warrant will not lie against the purchaser at a judicial sale made under the forms prescribed by law, on the ground that the trespass was committed by a levying officer in taking possession of the property, the purchaser not being particeps in the tort.[20]

IV. GROUNDS.

A. In General. A possessory warrant lies only where it is shown that defendant acquired possession of the property in dispute in one of the modes prescribed by the statute;[21] and it is not the proper remedy to recover possession of property where the title[22] or right to possession[23] is in dispute.

B. Possession Taken — 1. By Fraud. If one obtains the possession alone by fraud a possessory warrant will lie against him at the instance of the party injured;[24] but it will not lie where the title is obtained by fraud, and the possession accompanies it by the consent of the owner.[25]

2. By Force or Duress. The warrant lies whenever personal property has been taken from the possession of the complaining party by force or violence.[26] So too the warrant lies when a husband under duress of threats to prosecute him criminally delivers to a third person property belonging to his wife without her consent.[27]

3. By Enticement. Where a personal chattel is taken by enticement from the possession of another, a possessory warrant lies at the instance of the injured party to recover possession thereof.[28]

4. By Consent. Where possession of the property was obtained by none of the means inhibited by the statute, but by consent, a possessory warrant will not lie.[29]

C. Possession Received Without Legal Authority. The warrant lies whenever property in the recent peaceable and lawfully acquired possession of one person has disappeared without his knowledge and consent, and has been received into the possession of another without lawful authority.[30]

V. PROPERTY SUBJECT TO WARRANT.

The remedy is invocable to quiet the possession of all kinds of personal property of which the holder had the immediate possession and use.[31]

See also Wilcox v. Turner, 46 Ga. 218, promissory notes and liens.

VI. PROCEEDINGS TO PROCURE.

A. Prior Possession as Condition Precedent — 1. In General. Prior possession in plaintiff is a condition precedent to the right to maintain the proceeding.[32]

2. Character of Possession. Whether naked constructive possession will suffice to support the proceeding has not been squarely decided, although the decisions strongly intimate that something more is required.[33]

B. Jurisdiction. The proceeding being summary and special, the jurisdiction must clearly appear on the face of the papers.[34]

C. Venue. Possessory warrant may be had in the county where the property in dispute is found.[35]

D. Affidavit For Warrant — 1. Necessity For. The affidavit is the foundation of the proceeding.[36]

2. Who May Make. The affidavit required by the statute must be made by the injured party.[37]

3. Sufficiency of Allegations. In deciding what averments will suffice, regard must be had to the general scope and scheme of the statute, and to what, in the nature of things, is practicable or impracticable, in applying it to the actual cases which it is intended to reach.[38]

E. Hearing and Determination — 1. Hearing — a. Mode. The magistrate, on the return of the warrant, is required by the statute to hear the evidence in a summary way.[39]

b. Continuance to Procure Testimony. A time should be fixed for trial and the parties allowed a reasonable opportunity to procure testimony;[40] but a continuance, in order to obtain testimony, is properly refused where such evidence is irrelevant.[41]

33. See cases cited infra, this note.

Possession of agent.— It has been held that the possession of the agent is more than a bare constructive possession of the principal and will therefore support the proceeding. Sheriff v. Thompson, 116 Ga. 436, 42 S. E. 738; Hillyer v. Brogden, 67 Ga. 24; Bass v. Glover, 63 Ga. 745. See also Cobb v. Megrath, 36 Ga. 625, where the court, in discussing the holding of Meredith v. Knott, 34 Ga. 222, says that the court in that case went to the utmost limit of the law touching possessory warrants, and that if it meant to decide that a constructive possession in plaintiff is sufficient to enable him to maintain the proceeding, it may be very seriously doubted whether it did not go beyond the bounds prescribed by the statute.

Possession of a minor son is that of his father and will support this proceeding. Wynn v. Harrison, 111 Ga. 816, 35 S. E. 643.

34. Claton v. Ganey, 63 Ga. 331.

Superior court has no jurisdiction to enforce the execution of an order emanating from the magistrate before whom a possessory warrant is sued out, the magistrate having competent power to enforce the execution of his orders. Sherill v. Parrott, 26 Ga. 388.

35. Jordan v. Owens, 67 Ga. 616, holding further that a proceeding by possessory warrant is not a suit and therefore necessary to be brought in the county of defendant's residence.

36. Mills v. Glover, 22 Ga. 319.

37. Mills v. Glover, 22 Ga. 319.

Consignee of property.— The oath which is to be taken to procure a possessory warrant is not suitable to be taken by the consignee of property who is not in possession of the bill of lading. Bass v. Glover, 63 Ga. 745.

Member of firm.— Merely describing affiant as a member of a designated firm does not make the affidavit one in favor of the firm; affiant will be considered as prosecuting for himself if the possession violated is his own. McClain v. Cherokee Iron Co., 58 Ga. 233.

38. Claton v. Ganey, 63 Ga. 331.

Location of property.—An affidavit is sufficiently specific which alleges that defendant is of the county in which the warrant is applied for. Claton v. Ganey, 63 Ga. 331, where the court says that while it does not follow with absolute certainty that the property is in a given county because the person who has taken or received it is of that county, yet there is a fair presumption, unless the contrary appears, that such is the fact.

Under Ga. Civ. Code, § 3130, an affidavit alleging that the cropper is attempting to exclude him from possession of the crop and fails to pay for supplies and advances made to him, need not further allege the existence of any of the grounds for obtaining the possessory warrant, under section 4799. Visage v. Bowers, 122 Ga. 760, 50 S. E. 952.

39. Welman v. Harris, Ga. Dec., Pt. II, 63

40. Marchman v. Todd, 15 Ga. 25.

c. Issues. On the trial of the proceeding neither the right to possession [42] nor the title [43] to the property is involved; the sole issue to be determined is in whose lawfully acquired, quiet, and peaceable possession the property last was,[44] and whether possession thereof has been obtained from such party in any of the several modes prohibited by the statute.[45]

d. Evidence — (i) BURDEN OF PROOF. Upon the hearing the burden rests on plaintiff to support the facts contained in his affidavit by competent and sufficient evidence.[46] However, the burden of proof may shift to defendant, as where plaintiff has made out a prima facie case,[47] or where defendant sets up as a defense his own quiet and peaceable possession.[48]

(ii) ADMISSIBILITY. The evidence must be confined to the question of possession solely, and any other evidence not pertinent to that issue, exclusively, the magistrate has no right to receive.[49]

(iii) WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY. Where the evidence shows that personal property was obtained by consent and by none of the means inhibited by the statute, a judgment in favor of defendant is justified by the evidence.[50]

e. Questions of Fact. Whether plaintiff has or has not consented is a question of fact which must vary in each particular case, and may, or may not, be inferred, according to the circumstances which may have been proven.[51]

2. DETERMINATION — a. Property Must Be in Court's Custody. Generally, no final order disposing of the property should be made by the primary court until after it is produced and placed within the power of the court or its officers.[52]

b. In Favor of Plaintiff. If the magistrate finds from the evidence that possession of the property has been obtained from plaintiff in any of the modes prohibited by the statute, it is its duty to restore possession to plaintiff,[53] on his giving the bond required by statute,[54] which is conditioned to have the property forthcoming to answer in any suit brought by defendant in relation to any lien or claim upon it within four years thereafter; [55] or on plaintiff's failure to give such bond to turn over the property to defendant on his giving a like bond.[56] that a continuance, in order to obtain evidence that a judgment on a former warrant between the same parties and covering the same property, while adjudging the possession to plaintiff, limited the time during which the possession was to continue, was properly refused, since any such limit contained in the judgment was not relevant to the issue of the case.

47. Marchman v. Todd, 15 Ga. 25.

Change of possession.— Where plaintiff shows that he was heretofore in peaceable possession of the property which is now found in the possession of defendant, he has made out a prima facie case, and the burden shifts to defendant to show that the change of possession has been by the consent of plaintiff or by operation of law. Marchman v. Todd, 15 Ga. 25.

48. New v. Le Hardy, 46 Ga. 616, where it is held that the burden rests with defendant to establish the defense interposed, that he has been in quiet and peaceable possession of the property for four years next immediately preceding the issuance of the warrant.

49. Welman v. Harris, Ga. Dec., Pt. II, 63.

The judgment on a former warrant between the same parties and covering the same property is relevant to show that plaintiff's former possession, of which he has been deprived, was a legally acquired one, when taken in connection with proof that the property was delivered to him in pursuance of the judgment. Mann v. Waters, 30 Ga. 207.

50. Dennard v. Butler, 2 Ga. App. 198, 58 S. E. 297.

51. Marchman v. Todd, 15 Ga. 25.

52. McClain v. Cherokee Iron Co., 58 Ga. 233, in which it is said that the scheme of the statute is that the property shall be under the control of the primary court at the time the final order is made. See also Roseberry v. Roseberry, 31 Ga. 122.

53. Sheriff v. Thompson, 116 Ga. 436, 42 S. E. 738; Roseberry v. Roseberry, 31 Ga. 122; Mann v. Waters, 30 Ga. 207.

54. Ivey v. Hammock, 68 Ga. 428; Roseberry v. Roseberry, 31 Ga. 122.

This bond is a condition precedent to the delivery of the property to plaintiff which cannot be dispensed with by the primary court. Hillyer v. Brogden, 67 Ga. 24; McClain v. Cherokee Iron Co., 58 Ga. 233.

55. Hillyer v. Brogden, 67 Ga. 24.

56. Roseberry v. Roseberry, 31 Ga. 122.

c. In Favor of Defendant — (I) In General. If plaintiff fails on the hearing to support the facts contained in his affidavit by competent and sufficient evidence, it is the duty of the magistrate to dismiss the proceeding for want of jurisdiction, and leave plaintiff for redress to the ordinary proceedings at law.[57] If defendant satisfactorily shows quiet and peaceable possession of the property in himself,[58] or in himself and those under whom he claims,[59] for four years next immediately preceding the issuance of the warrant, it is the duty of the magistrate to dismiss the proceeding,[60] without any bond to plaintiff for its forthcoming.[61]

(II) Effect of. An order dismissing the warrant without any reason stated therein or appearing on the record, will not be regarded as an adjudication of the right of possession in favor of defendant.[62]

d. Mode of Restoring Property. The final order, when proper to be made by the primary court, should be for delivery of the property to the officer and then by the officer to the party.[63]

e. Review by Certiorari [64] — (I) Proceedings — (A) Time For Instituting. Certiorari from a decision of a county judge in a proceeding by possessory warrant must be sued out within ten days from the decision.[65]

(B) Notice of Application and of Hearing. The written notice of the sanction of petition for service, and of the time and place of hearing, which is required by the statute to be given to defendant, may be dispensed with by a waiver in writing.[66]

(C) Hearing. The superior court, in hearing a certiorari, is restricted to the errors alleged to have been committed by the primary court on the trial.[67]

(II) Determination — (A) Final. The superior court, on certiorari, may, in its discretion, make a final disposition of a proceeding by possessory warrant without sending it back for a new trial,[68] even though the evidence before the magistrate was conflicting on controlling issues;[69] but the court has no power to order the delivery of the property in dispute to plaintiff without the bond required by the statute;[70] nor can it make final order requiring one party to a proceeding to deliver the property directly to the other.[71]

(B) Ordering New Trial. All issues under the possessory warrant act are mixed questions of law and fact, and whenever the finding of the primary court is against the principles of equity and justice, a new trial should be ordered.[72] But the superior court, on certiorari, cannot order a rehearing on the ground of newly discovered evidence since the trial of the proceeding.[73]

(III) Enforcement of Judgment of Reversal. When the property is, in pursuance of the judgment, turned over to plaintiff, on his giving the bond required by the statute, the judgment is performed, and if certiorari is afterward sued out and judgment reversed, defendant is left to the ordinary remedies, and the court cannot attach plaintiff for contempt in failing to obey its order to redeliver the property which he has sold before reversal and cannot produce.[74]

VII. CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES.

The proceeding is summary, harsh, and in derogation of the common law,[75] and the statute authorizing it should be strictly construed;[76] and especially so as the proceeding under the statute, to a certain extent, partakes of a criminal nature.[77]

Distinguished from right in Carney v. Kain, 40 W. Va. 758, 781, 23 S. E. 650, where it is said: "The fact that a thing is possible to one and not to others does not change the nature of a possibility and transmute it into a right."

May include right of entry for breach of condition see Smith Real & Pers. Prop. (6th ed.) § 890 [quoted in Re Melville, infra]; Re Melville, 11 Ont. 626, 630, so holding in construing the word as used in Ont. Rev. St. c. 106, § 2.

"Possibility of benefit" is a term which was applied to an interest, such as an insurance policy in holding the latter a part of a bankrupt's effects to which the assignees in bankruptcy are entitled, in Schondler v. Wace, 1 Campb. 487, 488.

"Reasonable possibility" see Sims v. State, 100 Ala. 23, 14 So. 560; Nichols v. State, 100 Ala. 23, 25, 14 So. 539.

Kind held not transferable at common law. — "The proposition is undoubtedly correct that the common law treated all transfers and conveyances of mere possibilities, as well as of all choses in action, as absolute nullities. . . . But what does the term 'possibility,' as used by common law writers, import? It has never applied to interests which were vested either in interest or possession, but always to remote and improbable contingencies." Vint v. King, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,950.

That one might take holy orders. Cholmley's Case, 2 Coke 50*a*, 51*b*, 76 Eng. Reprint 527. dinary [13]). And the word has a general sense, in which it includes even executory interests, which are the objects of limitation; but in its more specific sense, it is that kind of contingent benefit which is neither the object of a limitation, like an executory interest, nor is founded in any lost, but recoverable seizin, like a right of entry; [14] thus, a possibility may be coupled with an interest,[15] or may be a mere or bare possibility otherwise known as an EXPECTANCY,[16] q. v., or naked possibility; [17] while a third classification has been made of mere contingent interests.[18]

14. Smith Real & Pers. Prop. 192 [quoted in Needles v. Needles, 7 Ohio St. 432, 443, 70 Am. Dec. 85]. For the same passage (except that for the final words "like a right of entry") is substituted the following: "Of this nature is a possibility of reverter on the grant of a qualified or determinable fee. . . . Of the same nature is a contingent right of entry in case there should be a breach of a condition subsequent" see Smith Real & Pers. Prop. (6th ed.) § 890 [quoted in Re Melville, 11 Ont. 626, 630].

"There are two kinds of possibilities; the one 'a bare possibility, that which the heir has from the curtesy of the ancestor,' which is nothing more than hope of succession. Such a possibility undoubtedly is not the object of disposition, for if the heir were to dispose of it during the life of the ancestor," though it afterward devolved on him from his ancestor, "such disposition would be void" (Jones v. Roe, 3 T. R. 88, 93 [quoted in Stover v. Eycleshimer, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 84, 87]), "the other, a possibility, or contingency, like the present," namely, the contingent right devised to the first son, if any, of T who should live to be twenty-one years of age, "and which is widely different from the former;" held devisable, and said to be also transmissible and descendible, as a valuable interest by way of executory devise (see Jones v. Roe, 3 T. R. 88, 93–98 [affirming 1 H. Bl. 230, and discussed in Jackson v. Waldron, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 178, 222, wherein Chancellor Walworth, in the minority opinion (at p. 193) cited the case as authority that a possibility coupled with an interest was assignable, but Senator Tracy in the majority opinion (at p. 222) declared that Jones v. Roe, supra, did not "trench at all on the old doctrine in Lampet's Case," 10 Coke 46*b*, 47*a*–50*b*, 77 Eng. Reprint 994, "that a contingent interest is not assignable;" where, also, there was a difference of opinion as to the kind of possibility, the chancellor and minority regarding a devise over on death of the immediate devisee without issue as an interest (see pp. 191–196), and Senator Tracy, with the majority, insisting that it was no interest, but a naked possibility (see pp. 218–221)]).

15. "A possibility 'coupled with an interest,' is where the person, who is to take an estate upon the happening of a contingency, is ascertained and fixed." Burrill L. Dict. "A possibility coupled with an interest: this may of course be sold, assigned, transmitted or devised: such a possibility occurs in executory devises and in contingent, springing or executory uses." Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in Bodenhamer v. Welch, 89 N. C. 78, 81].

As distinguished from bare possibility devisable see 1 Fearne Remainders 545–546 [cited in Vint v. King, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,950].

Does not include right of entry for forfeiture as used either in St. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106 (Hunt v. Remnant, 9 Exch. 635, 640, 18 Jur. 335, 23 L. J. Exch. 135, 2 Wkly. Rep. 276, per Maule, J.; Hunt v. Bishop, 8 Exch. 675, 680, 22 L. J. Exch. 337); or, it would seem to follow, from the two cases last cited, in Ont. Rev. St. c. 98, § 5 (Re Melville, 11 Ont. 626, 630).

Not coupled with interest unless person to take is ascertained see 4 Kent Comm. 262 [cited in Burrill L. Dict.].

16. "A 'bare' or 'mere' possibility, signifies nothing more than an expectancy, which is specifically applied to a mere hope of succession unfounded in any limitation, provision, trust, or legal act whatever; such as the hope which an heir, apparent or presumptive, has of succeeding to the ancestor's estate." Smith Real & Pers. Prop. [quoted in Needles v. Needles, 7 Ohio St. 432, 443, 70 Am. Dec. 85]. "A 'bare' possibility is one that is not coupled with an interest; as that a son may inherit to his father who is living. This is not considered as an estate in law." Burrill L. Dict. A bare possibility, or hope of succession. This is the case of an heir apparent during the life of his ancestor. It is evident that he has no right which he can assign, devise, or even release. Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in Bodenhamer v. Welch, 89 N. C. 78, 81, where, however, the word "of" is substituted for "or," before "hope of succession"]. A possibility founded on a trust differs from a mere possibility. The first may be devised but the other cannot. Jacob L. Dict.

"Contingent interest of a person unascertained, or a 'mere' possibility as distinguished from a contingent interest in a person who is ascertained" see Needles v. Needles, 7 Ohio St. 432, 443, 70 Am. Dec. 85.

the meaning of the word is often modified to suit the particular case. Similarly 158, 165, 166 (where, in view of the fact that the court had found no judicial construction of the phrase, it was taken in its "natural, plain, obvious and ordinary significations" as requiring that the conveyance to be made by a party, be made "as soon as it was within his power" to do so; "as soon as he had the ability"); Hydraulic Engineering Co. v. McHaffie, 4 Q. B. D. 670, 673, 675, 676, 27 Wkly. Rep. 221 [quoted in Sentenne v. Kelly, 59 Hun (N. Y.) 512, 513, 515, 13 N. Y. Suppl. 529, which, however, omits the remarks of Brett, L. J., and the vitally important phrase "with an undertaking to do it in the shortest practicable time" in the opinion of Bramwell, L. J.] where, with reference to a defense based on a cause of delay consisting in defendant's lack of a foreman capable of certain essentials, it is said, by Bramwell, L. J.: "to do a thing 'as soon as possible' means to do it within a reasonable time," with an undertaking to do it in the shortest practicable time. "In Atwood v. Emery the expressions of eminent judges seem to favor a different view as to the construction of the words 'as soon as possible.' I quite agree that a manufacturer or tradesman is not bound to discard all other work for the occasion, in order to take in hand a thing which he promises to do 'as soon as possible;' for instance, a tailor who accepts an order to make a coat 'as soon as possible' need not put down a half-made vest in order to begin the coat; every customer knows at the time of giving the order that the manufacturer or tradesman may have other orders on hand; and I do not think that Atwood v. Emery goes further than this. . . . If, however, it is an authority in favor of the defendants, I cannot agree with it. In construing the contract in the present case, I think it would be utterly unreasonable to hold that the defendants were not bound to deliver the 'gun' until the state of affairs in their work-shop should allow them to do so; the defendants ought not to have undertaken to make it, unless they were certain that they could carry out their contract;" by Brett, L. J.: "I do not think that Atwood v. Emery (1) decided anything which can be fully adopted. It was there held that the delay on the part of the plaintiffs was to be excused by reason of the size of their business, and by the circumstance that they had several orders on hand. . . . But in the present case I think . . . that the accidents of the defendants' business were not to be taken into amount in their favor;" and by Cotton, L. J.: "By the words 'as soon as possible' the defendants must be taken to have meant, that they would make the 'gun' as quickly as it could be made in the largest establishment with the best appliances. I do not think that these words can be taken to mean that the defendants merely promised to make the 'gun' as quickly as the means at their disposal might allow"); Atwood v. Emery, 1 C. B. N. S. 110, 115, 26 L. J. C. P. 73, 5 Wkly. Rep. 19, 87 E. C. L. 110 [cited in Benjamin Sales (7th Am. ed.) Pt. II, 705 (quoted in Robinson v. Brooks, 40 Fed. 525), and explained and distinguished in Hydraulic Engineering Co. v. McHaffie, supra] (where the phrase is construed, by Cresswell, J.: "No more than a reasonable time, regard being had to the plaintiffs' facilities and extent of business, and to the contracts they already had in hand;" by Williams, J.: "Within a reasonable time, regard being had to other orders which they might previously have received;" by Crowder, J.: "As soon as 'you' possibly can," adding: "nor can I understand how it can reasonably be suggested that either party contemplated that the plaintiffs were to put aside any other engagement, in order that this particular one should be performed"). Also construed "without unreasonable delay" (Scammon v. Germania Ins. Co., 101 Ill. 621, 626; Atwood v. Emery, supra, per Cresswell, J.); "with due diligence under the circumstances of the case" and without unnecessary and unreasonable delay (Niagara Ins. Co. v. Scammon, 100 Ill. 644, 651 [cited in Williams v. Rittenhouse, etc., Co., 198 Ill. 602, 609, 64 N. E. 995]; May Ins. § 462 [quoted in Konrad v. Casualty, etc., Co., 49 La. Ann. 636, 639, 21 So. 721]); "with due diligence, [or without unnecessary procrastination or delay,] under all the circumstances of the case" (Edwards v. Baltimore F. Ins. Co., 3 Gill (Md.) 176, 188 [quoted in Provident L. Ins., etc., Co. v. Baum, 29 Ind. 236, 241 (quoted in Konrad v. Union Casualty Co., 49 La. Ann. 636, 639, 21 So. 721); Provident L., etc., Ins. Co. v. Martin, 32 Md. 310, 315] and see to like effect Cornell v. Le Roy, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 126 [quoted in Edwards v. Baltimore F. Ins. Co., 3 Gill (Md.) 176, 186]); "as soon as it could be, under the circumstances, or within a reasonable time, or as soon as practicable" (Palmer v. St. Paul F., etc., Ins. Co., 44 Wis. 201, 208, 209 [quoted in Harlev v. Chicago Sanitary Dist., 107 Ill. App. 546, 567, and cited, to support the two latter constructions, in Black L. Dict. "Possible" (quoted in Robinson v. Brooks, 40 Fed. 525, 527)]; as meaning that the thing to be done by one contracting to convey land, should be made "as soon as it was within his power," or "as soon as he had the ability" (Snodgrass v. Wolf, 11 W. Va. 158, 166). It has been held equivalent, when applied to delivery in a bill of lading, to a requirement for quick despatch in unloading, requiring the consignee to make use of all means of discharge readily available, not admitting of a detention of the vessels for such a disposition of the cargo as merely suited the convenience or the business purposes of the consignor and the consignee (Egan v. Barclay Filtre Co., 61 Fed. 527); too indefinite and uncertain in connection with a promise to pay, to render the promise conditional or prevent it from removing the bar of the statute of limitations (Norton v. Shepard, 48 Conn. 141, 143, 40 Am. Rep. 157); and in the following phrase: "eight hundred to be delivered 'as soon as possible,' balance within eighteen months," to require "greater celerity than 'a reasonable time'" (Sentenne v. Kelly, 59 Hun (N. Y.) 512, 513, with respect to the phrase "as speedily as possible."[27] (See CONTINGENT, 9 Cyc. 72; POSSIBILITY.)

POST. As a noun, a piece of timber, metal (solid or built up), or other solid substance, of considerable size, set upright, and intended as a support to a weight or structure resting upon it, or as a firm point of attachment for something;[28] a military establishment where a body of troops is permantly fixed;[29] a conveyance for letters or despatches;[30] a mode of conveying written or unwritten intelligence to and from appointed stations at regular intervals or whenever the performance of such service may properly be required;[31] and in old practice, the name given to a species of writ of entry.[32] As a verb, to attach to a post, a wall, or other usual place of affixing public notices;[33] to attach to a sign post or other usual place of affixing public notices; to advertise;[34] to bring to the notice or attention of the public by affixing to a post.[35] As a prefix, after, afterwards.[36] As a Latin preposition, after.[37]

POSTAGE. The fee charged by law for carrying letters, packets, and documents by the public mails.[38] (See POST-OFFICE, post, p. 986.)

POSTAGE STAMP. A ticket issued by government, to be attached to mail-matter, and representing the postage or fee paid for the transmission of such 515, 13 N. Y. Suppl. 529). When regarded as synonymous with "as soon as practicable" neither phrase can be construed to require more than the exercise of reasonable diligence in view of all the circumstances which might attend upon the execution of the work. See Williams v. Rittenhouse, etc., Co., 198 Ill. 602, 609, 64 N. E. 995. An agreement to ship "as soon as possible" construed as an agreement "to use all reasonable diligence to ship as soon as possible." Describing a boundary mark, the term is not satisfied by a stump, although, it seems, a proper stump might be hewed, marked, and adopted as a mining location post, but then should be described both as post and stump in a descriptive survey (see Pollard v. Shively, 5 Colo. 309, 316); nor is a line of marked trees the equivalent of a line of posts (Bruckner v. Lawrence, 1 Dougl. "Posted" as used in a railroad rule requiring that the rules and regulations should be posted in stations, etc., means that such rules and regulations shall be advertised in the form of a poster, printed in bill or placard form, in such stations. They should be so attached to something in a conspicuous place in the station that they can, without being removed, be read conveniently by the public. The use of a pamphlet does not meet the requirement. State v. Pensacola, etc., R. Co., 27 Fla. 403, 417, 9 So. 89.

"Posting as required by law" held to mean actual posting the requisite number of days. See Nelson v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1902) 75 S. W. 502, 504.

POST-DATED. See BANKS AND BANKING, 5 Cyc. 528–529; COMMERCIAL PAPER, 7 Cyc. 531, 752, 954. See also POST NOTE, post, p. 968.

POST DIEM. After the day.[41]

POSTEA. Literally, "afterwards." In practice, whatever is done, subsequent to the joining of issue and awarding the trial, as entered on the record;[42] the name given to the entry, on record, of the proceedings on the trial of a cause, including the verdict of the jury;[43] a formal statement indorsed on the nisi prius record which gives an account of the proceedings at the trial of the action.[44]

POSTED WATERS. A phrase used to describe all waters marked by notices posted on the banks under the provisions of the chapter in which the phrase occurs.[45] (See, generally, POST; WATERS.)

POSTER. A large bill posted for advertising.[46]

POSTERI DIES TESTES SUNT SAPIENTISSIMI. A maxim meaning "We can not judge accurately of deeds, save by their results."[47]

POSTERIORA DEROGANT PRIORIBUS. A maxim meaning "Things subsequent supersede things prior."[48]

POSTERIORES LEGES AD PRIORES PERTINENT, NISI CONTRARIO SINT. A maxim meaning "Later laws pertain to former, if they be not to the contrary."[49]

POSTERIORE TESTAMENTO PRIUS IPSO JURE RUMPITUR. A maxim of the civil law, meaning "By a later will the former is broken by the law itself."[50]

POSTERITY. All the descendants of a person in a direct line to the remotest generation.[51] (See CHILDREN, 7 Cyc. 123; DESCENDANT, 13 Cyc. 1047; HEIR, 21 Cyc. 408; ISSUE, 23 Cyc. 358; OFFSPRING, 29 Cyc. 1473.)

POST EXECUTIONEM STATUS LEX NON PATITUR POSSIBILITATEM. A maxim meaning "After the execution of an estate, the law suffers not a possibility."[52]

POST FACTUM NULLUM CONSILIUM. A maxim meaning "After the deed counsel is in vain."[53]

POSTHUMOUS CHILD. One born after the death of its father; or, when the Cæsarean operation is performed, after that of the mother.[54] (Posthumous Child:

POSTHUMUS PRO NATO HABETUR. A maxim meaning "A posthumous child is considered as though born (at the parent's death)." [55]

POST LETTER. See POST-OFFICE, post, p. 970.

POSTLIMINIUM. Literally "postliminy." [56] In international law, the law under which property, if taken by an enemy in time of war, is restored to its former state, upon coming again under the power of the nation to which it formerly belonged; [57] that right in virtue of which persons and things taken by the enemy are restored to their former state on coming again into the power of the nation to which they belonged.[58] (See WAR.)

It is a species of obligation resorted to by banks when the exchanges of the country, and especially of the banks, have become embarrassed by excessive speculation. Hogg's Appeal, 22 Pa. St. 479, 488, where it is said: "[They are] intended to enter into the circulation of the country as part of its medium of exchanges; the smaller ones for ordinary business, and the larger ones for heavier operations. They are intended to supply the place of demand notes, which the banks cannot afford to issue or re-issue, to relieve the necessities of commerce or of the banks, or to avoid a compulsory suspension. They are under seal, or without seal, and at long or short dates, at more or less interest or without interest, as the necessities of the bank may require. Like the Housatonic Railroad Company's notes, or those of the Manual Labor Bank, they may even be marked on the face 'secured by pledge of stock and property, or 'secured in trust on real estate,' or, like those of the New York banks, the notes may be in fact so secured; still, as they are intended and issued not merely as evidence of a loan, and to be thrown into the stock market, but as a part of the circulating medium, they are called post-notes."

I. POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT, POST-OFFICES, AND POSTAL REVENUES.

A. Control and Regulation of Postal Service — 1. IN GENERAL. By the constitution of the United States power is vested in congress to establish post-offices and post-roads.[1] This power has been practically construed, since the foundation of the government, to authorize not merely the designation of the routes over which the mail shall be carried, and the offices where letters and other documents shall be received to be distributed or forwarded, but the carriage of the mail, and all measures necessary to insure its safe and speedy transit, and the prompt delivery of its contents. In other words the power possessed by congress embraces the regulation of the entire postal system of the country.[2]

2. POST-ROADS AND ROUTES. The power given by the constitution to establish post-roads means such roads as are regularly laid out by the authority of the states or by counties under the laws of the states.[3] This power was given to enable the general government to make, repair, keep open, and improve post-roads, whenever the exercise of such an independent national power should be deemed proper to effectuate the satisfactory transportation of the mail; but it was not given to authorize congress to adopt and use state roads as post-roads without compensation, if any should be just, and should be demanded.[4]

B. Post-Offices — 1. Establishment and Discontinuance. By the legislation of congress the postmaster-general has the power to "establish post-offices," [5] as well where the commissions of the office amount to or exceed one thousand dollars as where they do not.[6] The power to establish implies the power to discontinue,[7] unless congress expressly prohibits such discontinuance in a particular case; [8] and deputy postmasters occupy their offices subject to the contingency that such offices may be so discontinued.[9]

2. Lease of Buildings For Post-Offices. While the postmaster-general, under the power to establish post-offices, may designate the places, that is, the locali-

"Post-road" has been defined as being a public highway whose use by the post is prescribed or authorized by law (U. S. v. Kochersperger, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,541); one of the highways or public passages on which mail is transported on a post route (U. S. v. Kochersperger, supra).

"Post route" is a term usually synonymous with post-road. See U. S. v. Kochersperger, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,541; Black L. Dict. It has also been defined as being the appointed course or prescribed line of transportation of mail. U. S. v. Kochersperger, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,541, distinguishing "post-road."

"Post-road" and "post route" distinguished.— The term "post-road" ordinarily signifies a highway by land or water made by statute an avenue over which mails may be lawfully transmitted; while the term "post route" signifies a post-road, or definite portion thereof, over which mails are usually transported by contract. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., 13 Ct. Cl. 199. See also Cosgriff v. Tri-State Tel., etc., Co., 15 N. D. 210, 107 N. W. 525, 5 L. R. A. N. S. 1142; Blackham v. Gresham, 16 Fed. 609 [cited in U. S. v. Easson, 18 Fed. 590]; U. S. v. Kochersperger, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,541.

After discontinuance as state road.— So far as the designation and use of any state road as a post route may be concerned, the power of congress to establish post-roads cannot import more than the precedent power to establish post-offices and transport the mails, excepting only that the one implies only a right of use on just and common terms as long as a state shall choose to continue a road as a state road, and the other may imply a right in congress, not only to enjoy the like use, but to continue, as a post route, a road once adopted or designated or established as a post-road, even after it shall have been discontinued as a state road. Dickey v. Maysville, etc., Turnpike Road Co., 7 Dana (Ky.) 113.

The act of congress making all roads post-roads means only such as have charters from the several states, and not such as are built in derogation of law. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Franklin Canal Co., 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,890. Such act does not give to the United States, to a mail contractor, or to the owner of a road, the right to an injunction to restrain a threatened injury. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Franklin Canal Co., supra.

4. Dickey v. Maysville, etc., Turnpike Road Co., 7 Dana (Ky.) 113.

Unless congress elects to exercise its right of eminent domain, and buy a state road, or make one, or help to make or repair it, the constitution gives no authority to use it as a post-road, without the consent of the state or owner, or without making just compensation for its use. Dickey v. Maysville, etc., Turnpike Road Co., 7 Dana (Ky.) 113.

7. Ware v. U. S., 4 Wall. (U. Notice sent to discontinued post-office see Commercial Paper, 7 Cyc. 1097 note 90.

8. See 29 U. S. St. at L. 313 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 2633]. The intention of congress, expressed in this provision, was to take from the postmaster-general the power to discontinue a post-office at a county-seat for the purpose of consolidation with another regardless of any view that he might entertain in respect of the public interests affected. U. S. v. Cortelyou, 26 App. Cas. (D. C.) 298.

9. Ware v. U. S., 4 Wall. (U. S.) 617, 18 L. ed. 389, holding that the postmaster-general may exercise the power, notwithstanding the deputy postmasters have been appointed by the president, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, and under a statute which enacts that the appointee shall hold his office for the term of four years unless sooner removed by the president.

ties, at which the mails are to be received,[10] he cannot bind the United States by any lease or purchase of a building to be used for the purpose of a post-office unless the power to do so is derived from a statute which either expressly or by necessary implication authorizes him to make such lease or purchase.[11]

C. Post-Office Department — 1. Postmaster-General — a. Powers and Duties. The law-making power has given to the postmaster-general great power of discretion in the management of the mails and post-roads, and committed much to his opinion and good judgment.[12] Under statutory authority the postmaster-general has power to establish post-offices at such places on post-roads established by law as he may deem expedient;[13] he prescribes the penalties on postmasters' bonds,[14] may appoint postmasters of a certain class,[15] may temporarily fix the salary of new offices[16] and must readjust the salaries of postmasters,[17] may designate distributing or separating offices,[18] may discontinue a post-office,[19] fixes the salary of letter carriers[20] and prescribes their uniform,[21] may establish branch offices,[22] may, upon evidence "satisfactory to himself," return certain registered letters as "fraudulent,"[23] and may discontinue a post-road when "in his opinion it cannot be safely continued."[24]

b. Liability. The law is well established that the postmaster-general is not responsible for the negligence of postmasters or their deputies or assistants.[25]

2. Chief Clerk. The official duties of the chief clerk of the post-office department embrace all matters relating to finance in that department.[26]

3. Postmasters[27] — a. Qualification; Bond. The postmaster-general had, from the institution of his office, implied, if not express, authority to take bonds of his

An appropriation of money to pay for the rent of a post-office building at a named place might give authority to the postmaster-general to lease such building in that locality as he deemed proper for the service, always keeping within the amount so appropriated. Chase v. U. S., 155 U. S. 489, 15 S. Ct. 174, 39 L. ed. 284. So also the power to lease a building to be used as a post-office may be implied from a general appropriation of money to pay for rent of post-offices in any particular fiscal year or years. Chase v. U. S., 155 U. S. 489, 15 S. Ct. 174, 39 L. ed. 284.

Limitation of postmaster-general's power. — In any case the power of the postmaster-general to lease buildings for post-office use is limited to leases for a period not exceeding that covered by the appropriations of the current year. Enjoining postmaster from carrying out in-deputies, conditioned for the faithful performance of their duties, and to pay all moneys that should come to their hands for postages, etc.[28] At present such a bond is required by statute.[29] A bond given by a postmaster, with sureties, for the performance of his official duties, does not constitute a binding contract, until approved and accepted by the postmaster-general.[30]

b. Suspension and Vacation of Office. Under the tenure of office act,[31] the president had authority to suspend a postmaster, his commission being in terms "subject to the conditions prescribed by law."[32] A postmaster may vacate his office by removing his residence from the place where the office is kept,[33] but the mere fact that he remains out of the neighborhood of the office will not have this effect.[34]

c. Compensation — (i) In General. Salaries of postmasters are left, in a greater or lesser degree, to the discretion of the postmaster-general.[35] When the law constitutes him the sole judge to determine the compensation to be allowed, the postmaster is without judicial redress; but when the law prescribes rules to govern the action of the postmaster-general, or sets specific bounds to his discretion, a postmaster may sue and recover whatever the law declares he shall be paid.[36] By the act of 1883[37] the salary of a postmaster is made dependent upon and regulated by the amount of business done at his office.[38]

(ii) During Suspension. A person appointed by the president to perform the duties of a postmaster, suspended under the "tenure of office act," is entitled to the salary and emoluments of the office while he performs the duties of the suspended officer, who is not entitled to the salary till he actually resumes the office.[39]

(iii) Fees. The statute[40] provides that postmasters "may be allowed, as compensation for issuing and paying money-orders," a certain proportion of the fees, "provided such compensation, together with the postmaster's salary, shall not exceed" a certain sum. This is intended as compensation for increased responsibility and personal service; but the clerks in the money-order department must be paid by the postmaster, and if the postmaster-general fail or refuse to fix the allowance the postmaster is without judicial remedy.[41]

Postmaster-Gen. v. Norvell, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,310, Gilp. 106. (IV) EXTRA ALLOWANCES. The statute[42] provides that "the Postmaster-General may allow . . . to the postmasters at offices of the first and second classes . . . a reasonable sum for the necessary cost of rent," etc.[43] The provision that no such allowance shall be made except on the order of the postmaster-general prohibits such allowance from being made by other administrative officers, but does not exclude a postmaster from judicial redress.[44] Under the act of June 22, 1854,[45] authorizing the postmaster-general in his discretion to make an extra allowance to postmasters for extra labor and expense in certain cases, no postmaster has a right to such allowance until it is made him by the postmaster-general, and the action of the latter in the premises is final, and not subject to judicial review.[46]

(V) INCREASE AND READJUSTMENT — (A) In General. After a postmaster's salary has been fixed, a readjustment by the postmaster-general must be made before it can be increased.[47] Such readjustment is an executive act,[48] taking effect in general prospectively;[49] and, if it be not performed, the law imposes no obligation on the government to pay an increased salary.[50]

(B) Classes of Readjustment — (1) BIENNIAL. The revised Post-Office Act, 1872,[51] contemplates and provides for two classes of readjustments of salaries. The first of these, the biennial readjustment, is general and mandatory. The

A statement of readjustment by a clerk in the post-office department, but not acted on by the postmaster-general, is not evidence of a readjustment. Trask v. U. S., 27 Ct. Cl. 330.

A report by the postmaster-general to congress stating in general terms that claims filed before a certain day "have been reviewed" and that the review "has been completed" is insufficient to establish the readjustment of any single postmaster's salary. Peysert v. U. S., 41 Ct. Cl. 311.

Parol evidence to show the adoption or ratification of the alleged readjustment of salary by the postmaster-general in the absence of record evidence is inadmissible. Trask v. U. S., 27 Ct. Cl. 330.

Mandamus to compel readjustment.— When the salary of a postmaster has been adjusted and fixed at the proper time, on a sworn statement of the revenues of the office furnished by such postmaster, a mandamus will not issue to compel a subsequent postmaster-general to readjust the salary so fixed by his predecessor. The adjustment of such salary is not merely a ministerial function, but requires skill and discretion. U. S. v. Key, 3 MacArthur (D. C.) 328.

statute is imperative " that the salaries of postmasters shall be readjusted by the postmaster-general once in two years," and the basis and method of readjustment are so clearly defined by statute that the duty of readjustment involves no discretion and is merely ministerial.[52]

(2) SPECIAL AND DISCRETIONARY. The second class of readjustments is special and discretionary. The power to readjust salaries " in special cases " is not confined to biennial periods, but is to be exercised by the postmaster-general " as much oftener as he may deem expedient." [53]

(VI) WITHHOLDING COMMISSIONS. The act of June 17, 1878,[54] authorizing the postmaster-general in his discretion, when satisfied that the postmaster has made a false return of business, to withhold commissions on such returns, " and to allow any compensation that under the circumstances he may deem reasonable," applies only to postmasters whose accounts are pending and unsettled, and gives the postmaster-general no authority to make an order reducing the compensation of a postmaster after his accounts have been settled and allowed.[55]

d. Liability — (I) FOR DETENTION OF MAIL OR REFUSAL TO DELIVER. Trover will lie in a state court against a postmaster for detaining or refusing without right to deliver a letter or newspaper from a party to whom it was sent.[56]

(II) FOR LOST OR STOLEN MAIL. A postmaster is not responsible for the default and misfeasance of his clerks or assistants, although appointed by him, and under his control, unless it be shown that the postmaster was negligent in not exercising proper care and prudence in the selection of suitable and competent persons to perform the duties of clerks or deputy assistants, or unless it be shown

52. U. S. v. Vilas, 124 U. S. 86, 8 S. Ct. 422, 31 L. ed. 29 (holding that this enactment did not impose on the postmaster-general a legal duty to readjust the salaries of postmasters oftener than once in two years); Fairchild v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cl. 226.

Based on quarterly returns.— A readjustment can be made only when there are quarterly returns for two years preceding on which it can be based. U. S. v. Vilas, 124 U. S. 86, 8 S. Ct. 422, 31 L. ed. 29.

Discretion here is necessary to determine what is an extraordinary increase or decrease, and that discretion is confined to the postmaster-general. Fairchild v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cl. 226.

Decision not reviewable.— Under Act Cong. March 3, 1863 (12 U. S. St. at L. 702, c. 70, § 5), providing that whenever the presence of a large military force near a post-office makes an unusual increase in the business of the office, the postmaster-general shall make a special order allowing a proportionately increased compensation to the postmaster, the postmaster-general is the sole judge of the exigencies of each case, and his decision is not reëxaminable by any department of the government. U. S. v. Wright, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 648, 20 L. ed. 188.

Extraordinary increase or decrease in business.—A subsequent section of the statute (§ 84) contains a proviso " that in cases of an extraordinary increase or decrease in the business of any post-office, the Postmaster General may adjust the salary " so as to take effect from the beginning of a preceding instead of from the succeeding quarter. This proviso is manifestly a mere exception to the general requirement of the same section, that all changes of salary shall take effect subsequently to the readjustment. Fairchild v. U. S., 12 Ct. A postmaster, who assumes to charge letter postage on a newspaper, in consequence of an initial being on the wrapper thereof, does not act in a judicial capacity in such a sense as to protect him from an action for improperly detaining such newspaper, although no fraud or malice on his part be alleged or proved. Teall v. Felton, 1 N. Y. 537, 49 Am. Dec. 352.

Where a declaration charged a postmaster with unlawful refusal to deliver a letter, a new count, charging the same act to have been done by one duly sworn, whom defendant wrongfully permitted to have the care of the mail in his office, does not introduce a new cause of action. that the postmaster himself was negligent in the duty resting upon him to properly superintend such clerks or assistants in the performance of the particular acts or duty, the doing of which or the omission to do which caused the loss and injury.[57] This exemption from liability is available to the postmaster only in cases where such clerks or subassistants are appointed in pursuance of some law expressly authorizing it, so that by virtue of the law and the appointment the appointees become in some sort public officers themselves, and if a postmaster employs a clerk or assistant independent of express authority, who is paid by him out of his own salary or means, he is liable for his default or misfeasance as any private person would be for the acts of his agent or employee. The doctrine respondeat superior applies in such cases.[58] So also if the loss be occasioned by the negligence of clerks who were not regularly appointed and sworn as his assistants, the postmaster will be responsible.[59] The burden of proof is upon him who alleges negligence to establish that fact.[60] He must also show that the loss was the direct consequence of the particular negligence proved.[61]

Not liable as common carrier.— A postmaster's liability for moneys or letters received by him in his official capacity is not that of a common carrier, and proof that the letters containing money were delivered to him or his agent, in his presence, and by his direction, for registration, and of their loss, without evidence of negligence resulting in their loss, is insufficient to authorize a recovery against him. Raisler v. Oliver, 97 Ala. 710, 12 So. 238, 38 Am. St. Rep. 213; Schroyer v. Lynch, 8 Watts (Pa.) 453.

Form of action.— Where a postmaster loses a letter which he receives, containing money, through his want of ordinary care, he is not liable to an action for money had and received, unless he puts the money to his own use. Danforth v. Grant, 14 Vt. 283, 39 Am. Dec. 224.

Pleadings must be made up according to the case.— Where it is intended to charge a postmaster for the negligence of his assistants, the pleadings must be made up according to the case, and his liability then will only result from his own neglect in not properly superintending the discharge of their duties in his office. Dunlop v. Munroe, 7 Cranch (U. S.) 242, 3 L. ed. 329.

Evidence of competency of clerk.— Where a postmaster has employed a clerk without express authority, in an action against him for the value of lost letters, evidence of the competency of his clerk is inadmissible, since the exemption from liability of the postmaster for the defaults of his clerks is available to the postmaster only in cases where such clerks are appointed under a law expressly authorizing it. Presumption on appeal.— In an action against a postmaster for the value of the contents of registered letters alleged to have been lost, in the absence of any contrary showing on the record, the appellate court will, to sustain the rulings of the court below, presume that his clerk or assistant is employed without express authority. St. Rep. 213; Christy v. Smith, 23 Vt. 663, holding that under a declaration against a postmaster, which alleges that he carelessly and negligently lost a letter, which was received at his office and was directed to plaintiff, any general proof of negligence, tending to show that the loss was occasioned thereby, and which satisfies the jury that it was so occasioned, is sufficient to sustain the issue for plaintiff.

Evidence of other acts of negligence.— In an action on the case against a postmaster for negligence, by which a letter of plaintiff was lost, evidence of specific acts of negligence in relation to other letters is not admissible, unless such acts were in their nature continuing. Wentworth v. Smith, 44 N. H. 419, 82 Am. Dec. 228.

(III) On Official Bonds — (A) Extent of Liability — (1) In General. The legal effect of a postmaster's bond is that he and his sureties will pay the actual loss which the government may sustain by any failure to discharge his duties faithfully.[62] The statute [63] requires that the bond of a postmaster at a money-order post-office "shall contain an additional condition for the faithful performance of all duties and obligations in connection with the money-order business." [64] Such additional condition is merely cumulative, however, and its omission does not render the obligation of no effect as to the money-order business.[65]

(2) Term Covered. The sureties on a postmaster's bond are liable for his non-compliance with subsequent as well as past laws or orders till his official term expires, if the orders be such as are justified by law,[66] but they are not liable for a default occurring before the bond was given.[67]

(B) Discharge From Liability — (1) By Indulgence or Forbearance. Mere indulgence or forbearance on the part of the government toward a postmaster who is in default, in the absence of fraud, will not discharge his sureties

Evidence of exposed manner in which office kept.— In an action against a postmaster for negligence, by means of which a money letter, addressed to plaintiff, and proved to have reached his office, was there lost, evidence of the exposed manner in which the office was kept is admissible to go to the jury. Ford v. Parker, 4 Ohio St. 576.

Loss of registered package.— A postmaster is liable on his bonds for the loss of a registered package, stolen after its delivery to him, irrespective of his negligence. U. S. v. Griswold, 9 Ariz. 304, 80 Pac. 317. The United States may recover the full value of such a registered package, notwithstanding U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 3926, provides that the sender is entitled to be indemnified to the extent of ten dollars, such recovery being only for the benefit of the sender. U. S. v. Griswold, 8 Ariz. 453, 76 Pac. 596.

Postage stamps, etc., not paid for.— Act March 3, 1851 (9 U. S. St. at L. 587, 589, c. 20, § 3), which provides "that it shall be the duty of the Postmaster-General to provide and furnish to all deputy postmasters, and to all other persons applying and paying therefor, suitable postage stamps," etc., authorizes the postmaster-general to deliver postage stamps to a deputy postmaster without prepayment; and the sureties on the official bond of a deputy postmaster are liable for postage stamps so received by their principal. U. S. v. Mason, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,737, 2 Bond 183.

Rebate on rent and rent of sublet portions of office.— Where a postmaster rented a post-office for the government at one thousand dollars per year, and received a secret rebate of one hundred and fifty dollars from his landlord, and also sublet portions of the space so rented for a news-stand and a confectionary stand, and received rent therefor, he and the sureties on his bond are liable to the government for such rebate and rent. U. S. v. Saylor, 31 Fed. 543.

Robbery of mail carrier.— To assist the government in safely conveying, through the mails, the public money which from time to time comes into the postmaster's hands, constitutes an essential element of the duties and trusts confided to him, and if he intercepts and robs a mail carrier, his sureties are liable on his bond. U. S. v. Jones, 36 Fed. 759.

Neglect to safely keep moneys collected.— A postmaster is the agent of the postmaster-general, and, although the latter is not by law liable for the misconduct of the former, he can employ him as agent to keep safely the money collected by himself or other postmasters near; and the sureties of the postmaster are liable on his official bond to the extent of its penalty for any neglect as such agent. Boody v. U. S., 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,636, 1 Woodb. & M. 150.

64. Bryan v. U. S., 90 Fed. 473, 33 C. C. A. 617, 53 L. R. A. 218, holding that a postmaster's bond, conditioned for the payment of all moneys that shall "come into his hands from . . . money orders issued by him," covers moneys received and embezzled by a money-order clerk, since the words "come into his hands" are equivalent to "come into his official custody."

Where a postmaster negligently delivers blank orders to a stranger, and they are filled up, the name of the postmaster forged thereon, and they are paid by the offices on which they are drawn, and in due course charged to the account of such postmaster in the books of the department, it becomes his duty to account for such orders, and on his refusal to do so the amount paid thereon may be recovered in an action on his bond. from their obligations on his bond.[68] Nor will the fact that the government continued a postmaster in office after discovery of a defalcation, and delayed to disclose the same, relieve his sureties from liability for subsequent defalcations.[69]

(2) By Delay in Bringing Suit. Before the act of March 3, 1825,[70] expressly providing therefor, neither a postmaster nor his sureties were discharged from liability on his bond by the postmaster-general's neglect to sue, within the time prescribed by law, for balances due from the postmaster.[71] Under this act the sureties on a postmaster's bond are discharged from all liability by two years' delay to bring suit after a default in not paying, when required by law, a quarterly balance found due by the auditor.[72]

(3) By Increase of Responsibility. An act of congress increasing rates of postage, and consequently the responsibility of the postmaster's sureties, will not discharge them.[73]

(4) By Order to Retain Balances. The order of the postmaster-general to the postmaster not to remit the money he may receive, but to retain it to answer his drafts, does not discharge the sureties.[74]

(5) By Giving New Bond. The giving a new official bond by a postmaster does not discharge his sureties under the old bond for the past or subsequent defaults of his principal.[75]

(6) By Accident or Misadventure. A postmaster is not a mere bailee for hire of the funds committed to his charge as an officer, and he is not released from liability merely because he uses the degree of care exacted from a bailee of that

68. U. S. v. Wright, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,776, 1 N. J. L. J. 4.

Possession of office by special agent.— The possession of the office of a postmaster by a special agent of the department for one day, while adjusting his accounts, does not release his sureties from all subsequent liability under U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 3836 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 2611], which provides therefor when a special agent takes charge till a vacancy can be regularly filled, that section applying only to cases where the office is vacant. U. Apparent acquiescence of government.— It is no defense to claim against a postmaster and his sureties, for rent received from the subtenants of a part of the post-office, that the special agents of the department had frequently visited the office, seen the subtenants in possession, and made no claim for rent, it appearing that the department had no knowledge of these facts. Exception to rule.— The act of congress of March 3, 1825 (4 U. S. St. at L. 102, c. 64, § 3), which exonerates the sureties of a postmaster if balances are not sued for within two years after they occur, does not apply to a case where, by the mode of keeping the account, on legal principles, the balance due from the postmaster is thrown on the last quarter. Jones v. U. S., 7 How. (U. S.) 681, 12 L. ed. 870; Postmaster-Gen. v. Norvell, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,310, Gilp. 106; U. S. v. Kershner, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,527, 1 Bond 432.

Computation of time.—In determining when the sureties are discharged under the statute by failure to bring suit for two years after a default, the defalcation of the postmaster is to be counted from the time the law required the moneys to be paid over, to wit, at the end of every three months, and not from the time he failed to pay the draft of the department. character, because he has not been negligent, nor because he has been robbed or the property otherwise stolen from him.[76]

(IV) ACTIONS TO ENFORCE LIABILITY — (A) Who May Sue. In the absence of statute, a private person cannot sue on a postmaster's official bond for moneys coming to him as such, and lost through his negligence or default.[77]

(B) Pleading. In an action on a postmaster's bond to recover the value of registered mail matter negligently lost by him, it is not necessary that the pleadings state that the suit is for the use of the sender of the package.[78] A plea of counter-claim for certain extra services and expenses incurred by a postmaster under the acts of June 22, 1854, and July 1, 1864,[79] should show that the office kept by defendant was within the act authorizing an allowance on such accounts.[80]

(C) Defenses and Counter-Claims. In an action on a postmaster's bond, defendant may, among the ordinary defenses to such actions,[81] plead a counter-claim, if it appear from such plea that the items thereof have been duly presented to the proper department for allowance, and rejected.[82] Voluntary payment to a creditor of the government cannot be set up as a defense.[83]

(D) Evidence. The usual rules of evidence,[84] including its admissibility,[85] as well as its weight and sufficiency,[86] obtain in actions upon a postmaster's bond.

76. U. S. v. Fordyce, 122 Fed. 962, holding that a postmaster is not relieved from liability by the fact that the United States furnished the building and the safe therein, both of which he was required to use, and from which the property was taken by the burglars. Actual receipt of money.—It is not essential to support an action on the bond of a postmaster for failure to account for money orders which were made upon blank forms intrusted to him for his use, and which have been paid by the offices on which they were drawn, and in due course charged to his account on the books of the department, that it should be proved that he actually received the money therefor. U. S. v. Barker, 100 Fed. 34, 40 C. C. A. 264.

Admissibility.— In an action against a postmaster and his bondsmen to recover for shortage in his accounts, on a certificate of the postmaster-general, withholding certain commissions because of alleged false returns discovered on a readjustment of defendant's accounts, it is error to exclude testimony that defendant had a full settlement with the government when he retired from office. U. S. v. Miller, 8 Utah 29, 28 Pac. 957. Evidence of what took place in the office after it was turned over to his successor is inadmissible against him. Nagle v. U. S., 145 Fed. 302, 76 C. C. A. 181.

Weight and sufficiency.— An order of the postmaster-general, reciting that he is satisfied that a certain postmaster has made false returns, and fixing a compensation which he deems reasonable, is not conclusive on the postmaster and his sureties in an action on his official bond to recover moneys alleged to have been illegally withheld according to such false returns, but such order is only prima facie evidence, which defendants may contradict by other evidence. U. S. v. Dumas, 149 U. S. 278, 13 S. Ct. 872, 37 L. ed. 734; Jaedicke v. U. S., 85 Fed. 372, 29 C. C. A. 199; U. S. v. Jaedicke, 73 Fed. 100. After an account of a postmaster, regular on its face, has been adjusted and allowed by the proper accounting officers, and fully paid, such officers cannot, after the term of office has expired, evolve ex parte a balance in favor of the government, founded solely on a general and vague allegation of fraud, so as to make such balance prima facie evidence against the postmaster and his sureties. Such allegations must be specific, and

4. Deputies and Assistant Postmasters. It has been held that an assistant postmaster is not an officer of the government, but a mere servant or agent of the postmaster,[87] and therefore he is not liable for his negligence.[88] The better rule seems to be, however, that an assistant postmaster is liable for losses and injuries occasioned by his own default or negligence.[89]

5. Clerks in Post-Offices. Clerks are only bound to use such care and diligence in the discharge of their duties as a prudent man exercises in his own affairs.[90] The official position of a clerk in a post-office must be determined by the roster of the office, approved by the postmaster-general.[91] The legal right of a clerk in a post-office to the salary of such office depends upon his being de jure an officer holding or entitled to hold the office.[92]

6. Letter Carriers — a. Appointment and Removal. Power is conferred by law upon the postmaster-general to employ carriers so far as the public convenience may require.[93] Incident to the power of appointment is the power to remove outright,[94] or to reduce carriers to the list of substitutes.[95] Notwithstanding a rule exists in the post-office department that no carrier shall be removed except for cause and on written charges, there is no provision of law which gives a carrier a permanent position, and the removal of a carrier is beyond review by the courts.[96] Nor can they interfere with an order of the post-office department reducing a letter carrier to the substitute roll.[97]

b. Duties. The duty of collecting letters and packages to be registered, imposed on letter carriers by the order of the postmaster-general of December 5, 1899, is sustained by competent evidence. U. S. v. Miller, 8 Utah 29, 28 Pac. 957; U. S. v. Case, 49 Fed. 270; U. S. v. Hutcheson, 39 Fed. 540, 2 L. R. A. 805; U. S. v. Hilliard, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,368, 3 McLean 324.

Sending registered letter by unregistered mail.— Where a post-office clerk received a letter containing money to be sent as a registered letter, and discovering that the letter could not be so sent, by direction of his superior, the chief clerk sent the letter by mail unregistered, and it was lost, both clerks were liable for the value of the letter. c. Compensation — (i) In General. The right of a letter carrier to salary depends upon appointment, which is wholly a matter of statute.[99]

(ii) As a Substitute. Where a letter carrier accepts the terms of an order which takes his name from the roll of regular letter carriers and places it on the roll of substitutes, without objection or protest, he thereby assents to the arrangement, and cannot recover the compensation of a regular carrier while paid for his services as a substitute.[1] A substitute cannot recover for the time when he is required to report and hold himself in readiness for assignment to service.[2]

(iii) During Suspension. When a letter carrier is suspended, nothing being said as to deprivation of pay, and afterward restored to duty, he is entitled to his pay during the period of suspension.[3]

(iv) For Extra Service — (a) In General. Under the letter carriers' eight-hour law,[4] a letter carrier is entitled to extra pay for work in excess of eight hours.[5] Carriers are not entitled to extra pay unless they are "employed," that is, engaged in active postal duties,[6] and this cannot be except with the knowledge and consent of the postmaster.[7]

Subordinates have no authority to require overtime from letter carriers without the consent of the postmaster (Seville v. U. S., 33 Ct. (B) Waiver. The compensation of a letter carrier for services in excess of eight hours a day is fixed by statute, and not by contract, and a postmaster has no authority to increase or diminish it, or to take it away, even though the carriers consent to serve without compensation.[8]

d. Bonds. The statute[9] provides that every letter carrier shall be required to give a bond conditioned for the faithful discharge of the duties and trusts imposed upon him.[10]

7. Railway Postal Clerks.[11] The statutes authorizing and fixing the compensation of postal railway clerks constitute an express contract; and the postmaster-general cannot, by the terms of an appointment, either detract from or enlarge the compensation.[12] The expenses of a railway postal clerk necessarily incurred upon the line of his route away from home must be borne by himself.[13]

D. Postage. The rates of postage are fixed by statute.[14] "Sea postage" is the difference reached by subtracting "inland" postage from the total postage.[15]

E. Postage Stamps, Stamped Envelopes, and Postal Cards. The postmaster-general is required by law[16] to provide suitable letter and newspaper envelopes, to be known as stamped envelopes, and to sell the same to the public, as nearly as may be, at the cost of procuring them, with the addition of the value of the postage stamps impressed thereon.[17]

Not employee traveling under direction of postmaster-general.—A railway postal clerk is not "an officer, clerk, or employee" traveling "under the order or direction of the postmaster-general," within the intent of the Post-Office Regulation, § 11. A money order is an order for a specified sum of money, not less than one cent or greater than fifty dollars, made out at a money-order office, on a blank form prescribed by law and the post-office regulations, and payable at some other money-order office.[18] More than one indorsement of a money order renders the same invalid and not payable.[19]

G. Disposition of Postal Revenues and Funds.[20] The act of 1836[21] requires the revenues of the post-office department to be paid into the treasury of the United States, and the money disbursed to be drawn therefrom. Failure to supply government on time.— While a company was getting ready to furnish envelopes, the post-office department was obliged to purchase them of a third party at a higher rate than that at which the company's contract bound it to supply them; these, however, being sold to the public, under U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 3915 [U. S. Comp. the regulation of the entire postal system, and includes as a necessary incident the right to determine what may be carried in the mails, and what shall not be, and to impose penalties for the violation of its regulations to be enforced through the courts.[24] The use of the postal service of the United States is not a matter of right, but of privilege, limited by the statutes declaring certain classes of matter to be non-mailable,[25] and congress has power to confer authority on the postmaster-general to forbid delivery of registered letters or payment of money orders to a citizen or corporation found by him to be using the mails for fraudulent purposes, but not to deprive them of the ordinary use of the mails.[26] Such a finding cannot be reviewed by the courts in so far as it involves questions of fact, nor unless a plain error of law is shown.[27]

b. How Enforced. Whilst regulations excluding matter from the mail cannot be enforced in a way which would require or permit an examination into letters, or sealed packages subject to letter postage, without warrant, issued upon oath or affirmation, in the search for prohibited matter,[28] they may be enforced upon competent evidence of their violation obtained in other ways; as from the parties

receiving the letters or packages, or from the agents depositing them in the post-office, or others cognizant of the facts.[29] And as to objectionable printed matter which is open to examination, the regulations may be enforced in a similar way, by the imposition of penalties for their violation through the courts, and, in some cases, by the direct action of the officers of the postal service.[30]

c. Second-Class Matter — (I) Classification by Congress. By the act of congress of March 3, 1879,[31] congress did not commit to the postmaster-general, or to any one else, the matter of determining what should be carried in the mails as second-class matter, and what as matter of the third class, but has reserved to itself that power exclusively, itself making the classification.[32] Under this act mailable matter of the second class embraces all newspapers and other periodical publications which are issued at stated intervals, and as frequently as four times a year, and are within certain conditions subsequently stated.[33]

(II) Identification by Postmaster-General — (A) In General. Of course the postmaster-general and his subordinates are required to use judgment and discretion, and it may sometimes be a matter of much difficulty to identify a publication as one included in the category prescribed by congress. But their discretion is limited to this question of identification; and it is not competent for them to impose additional requirements beyond those specified in the statute.[34]

(B) Conclusiveness of Decision. A certificate issued by the post-office department to a publisher, entitling certain of his publications to admission to the mails as second-class mail matter, and which by its own terms continues in effect until revoked, is a mere license,[35] and the postmaster-general is not bound by the con-

connected with the postal service any authority to invade the secrecy of letters and such sealed packages in the mail; and all regulations adopted as to mail matter of this kind must be in subordination to the great principle embodied in the fourth amendment of the constitution. Re Jackson, 96 U. S. 727, 24 L. ed. 877. Nor can any regulations be enforced against the transportation of printed matter in the mail, which is open to examination, so as to interfere in any manner with the freedom of the press. If therefore printed matter be excluded from the mails, its transportation in any other way cannot be forbidden by congress. Re Jackson, supra.

"Periodicals" and "periodical publications."— Within the meaning of the statute classifying mail matter, the terms "periodicals" and "periodical publications" are synonymous. Smith v. Payne, 22 App. Cas. (D. C.) 463 [affirmed in 194 U. S. 104, 24 S. Ct. 595, 48 L. ed. 893]; Payne v. Houghton, 22 App. Cas. (D. C.) 234 [affirmed in 194 U. S. 88, 24 S. The feature of periodicity must not only exist, but the publication must also be a periodical in the ordinary sense of the term. U. S. v. Cortelyou, 28 App. Cas. (D. C.) 570, 12 L. R. A. N. S. 166.

Books complete in themselves are not, because published at stated intervals and in consecutive numbers, entitled to second-class postage rates. Smith v. Payne, 194 U. S. 104, 24 S. "Institutions of learning," within Act Cong. July 16, 1894 (28 U. S. St. at L. 104, c. 137, § 1), providing that periodical publications issued by incorporated institutions of learning shall be admitted to the mails as second-class matter, are those organizations of a permanent nature wherein instruction is given in the higher branches of education only, and which owe their origin to private or public munificence, and are established solely for the public good, and not for private gain. U. S. v. Payne, 20 App. Cas. (D. C.) 606. An incorporated educational institution conducting a correspondence college for the gain and profit of its stock-holders is not a regularly incorporated institution of learning. 34. Payne v. U. S., 20 App. Cas. (D. C.) 581, holding that section 276 of the postal laws and regulations promulgated by the postmaster-general, defining second-class matter, is invalid so far as it superadds to the requirements of Act Cong. March 3, 1879 (20 U. S. St. at L. 355, c. 180), classifying mail matter.

struction placed by a predecessor in office upon the statute relating to second-class mail matter, so as to preclude him from revoking such a certificate which had been issued by such predecessor, where no vested right has been created by such certificate.[36] But when a publication has been accorded second-class mail privileges, the same cannot be suspended or revoked until a hearing shall have been granted to the parties interested.[37]

(c) Review of Decision by Courts. The question of the admissibility of publications to the mails as second-class matter, calling for the exercise of discretion on the part of the postmaster-general, the courts will not ordinarily review his decision thereon, although they have the power, and will occasionally exercise the right of so doing,[38] particularly where it is asserted that he acted without authority of law or in excess of the power granted to him,[39] or where his determination is clearly wrong.[40]

2. Deposit and Collection of Mail. The statute[41] directing any carrier of the mail to receive any mail matter presented to him, etc., includes a city letter carrier,[42] and a delivery of a letter to such a carrier is a deposit of the letter in the post-office.[43]

B. Contracts For Carrying Mails — 1. Power to Contract. The postmaster-general is authorized by the Revised Statutes[44] to enter into contracts for carrying the mails,[45] and the only limitation of time placed upon him is that of

Right to review as affected by form of relief sought.— The general question of the extent and limitations of the judicial power to supervise the determination of the postmaster-general respecting the admission of publications to carriage in the mails at second-class rates is not affected by differences in the form of relief sought, whether mandamus in one case or injunction in another, except that greater circumspection should be exercised where the remedy sought is injunction, which may have a continued mandatory operation. Power to contract for pneumatic tube service.— Under Act April 21, 1902 (32 U. S. St. at L. 114, c. 563, § 1 [U. S. Comp. section 3956, which restricts such contracts made by him to periods not exceeding four years.[46]

2. Prerequisites. The act of congress of June 8, 1872,[47] requires that before making any contract for carrying the mail the postmaster-general shall give public notice, which notice shall describe the route, the time at which the mail is to be made up, the time at which it is to be delivered, and the frequency of the service.[48]

3. Validity. A contract for postal car facilities, which makes the liability of the United States conditional on future appropriations, is valid, and becomes operative if appropriations are subsequently made;[49] and if a contract, dependent upon an appropriation for its validity, does not exceed the appropriation it will be deemed valid, although the appropriation is exhausted.[50]

4. Annulment or Vacation. Under the statute[51] the power of the postmaster-general to terminate the contract is not predicated on an abandonment of the entire service, but the postmaster-general may put an end to the service of the contractor and relet a part of it to another.[52] It is sometimes further stipulated in the contract that the postmaster-general may annul the contract or impose forfeitures in his discretion, for failure to perform the service according to the contract.[53]

5. Assignment, Subletting, and Substitution — a. In General. A contractor for the conveyance of the mails cannot transfer, assign, or sublet his contract without the consent of the postmaster-general;[54] but he may lawfully contract with

Implied contract.— The regulation of the post-office department that contracts in a section of the country are to be let for four years cannot be held to impose any obligation on the postmaster-general so that a contract, to be implied from services rendered after the expiration of a written contract, should be construed to last four years, but is merely designated to further the administration of business. See also Nix v. Bell, 66 Ga. 664 (holding that a partial assignment of a United States mail contract, being illegal under the laws of the United States and the post-office regulations, is not a valid consideration to support a promise to pay for a half interest in the contract); McConaghy v. Clark, 35 Wash. 689, 77 Pac. 1084.

Transfer under decree for foreclosure of mortgage.— On the foreclosure of a mortgage on all its assets and the sale thereof to a new company, a contract made by a railroad company to carry the mails is anor employ another to perform for him the services required by the contract.[55] So also a person who has obtained a contract for carrying the mails may agree to do so as the agent of another.[56]

b. Breach of Contract of Subletting or Substitution. After a contract of subletting or substitution has been made and approved by the postmaster-general, a breach thereof by either party will render him liable in damages to the other.[57]

c. Abandonment by Subcontractor. If a subcontractor for the conveyance of the mails abandons his contract, the post-office department may employ temporary service on the route,[58] and may reinstate the original contractor without permitting the subcontractor to resume service under the subcontract.[59] Without the consent of that department the subcontractor cannot be reinstated by the contractor.[60]

6. Bonds — a. Of Contractors. Contractors for carrying the mail are required to give bonds with sureties, and liability thereon is determined by the rules applicable to the enforcement of bonds generally.[61] Furthermore it is required nulled and the new company can claim no benefit under the contract. St. Paul, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cl. 405.

Subletting by subcontractor.— Under Act May 17, 1878 (20 U. S. St. at L. 61 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 2704]), the post-office department may annul a mail contract where a subcontractor has sublet his contract, although it be done without the knowledge or consent of the original contractor. McGinnis v. U. S., 27 Ct. Cl. 146.

The leading purpose of these acts was to prevent speculating contractors from reaping a profit out of the government by subletting for a less sum than contracted for. Myers v. Pickett, 81 Tex. 53, 16 S. W. 643.

Contract of subletting.— Where a contract of subletting stipulates for a discharge thereof on the removal of the contractor before the expiration of his term, the contractor may refuse a contract for increased service without becoming liable in damages to the subcontractor. Wingate v. McNamar, 28 Ind. 481. Where a subcontractor of a mail contract agrees to carry the mail in accordance with the terms of the contractor's agreement with the government, there is a breach of agreement if the subcontractor does not carry the mail during the entire period for which the principal contractor is bound to carry for the government. Welder v. Dunn, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 96.

Contract of substitution.— Where, in an action for breach of contract by which defendant agreed to substitute himself for plaintiff as subcontractor in a mail contract, it does not appear that the contractor was willing to make the substitution or that the United States had consented thereto, plaintiff is not entitled to recover. Actions on bonds.— In an action by the United States on the bond of a mail-route contractor, to recover damages resulting from the alleged abandonment of the contract by defendant, where the answer contains a general denial, it is incumbent on the plaintiff to prove the alleged abandonment (U. A. 688]); and evidence of the official finding of the postmaster-general that he was a failing contractor, together with the official reports of the local postmaster upon which the finding was based, is sufficient for this purpose (U. S. v. McCoy, supra).

that every proposal for carrying the mail must be accompanied by the bond of the bidder.[62]

b. Of Subcontractors. A bond given by a subcontractor or assignee of a mail contract, sublet in violation of the statute which renders the subletting null and void, is also null and void, and its invalidity may be asserted in an action thereon, notwithstanding defendant was a party to the illegal act.[63] If, however, the contract between the parties does not amount to an assignment or transfer of the mail contract, the bond may be enforced.[64]

C. Compensation For Carrying Mails — 1. Right to Compensation — a. In General. The compensation of a mail contractor is entirely within the discretion of the postmaster-general, subject to limitation as to the maximum imposed by congress.[65] By the uniform practice of the department the delivery of mails between intermediate stations and the post-offices thereat is not to be paid for in addition to the amount computed upon the mileage of the railroad proper.[66]

b. Voluntary Service. The government is not liable for voluntary service by a mail contractor,[67] unless rendered with the knowledge and consent of the post-office department.[68] When the contractor has performed the services ordered, the fact that the postmaster-general made the order irregularly will not deprive him of his right to compensation.[69]

c. Effect of Suspension or Discontinuance of Service. Contracts for transportation of the mail customarily provide that the postmaster-general may discontinue the service, whenever the public interest in his judgment shall require such discontinuance, on condition that the contractor be allowed one month's extra pay as indemnity.[70] Under such a contract a discontinuance during the Liability on proposal bond.—A proposal bond, given by a bidder for a contract for carrying the mail, is an absolute undertaking to pay the amount named therein as liquidated damages in case of condition broken, and not one of indemnity or security to the government against loss or damages for breach of contract, and in an action thereon the actual damages cannot be inquired into. When right accrues.—A claim against the post-office for one month's extra compensation for discontinued service does not accrue till the payment is due, namely, one month after the end of the current quarter. Salisbury v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cl. 404.

A subcontractor who has taken over a mail contract for "the full amount of mail pay" that shall become due to the contractor, and assumed all the obligations of the contract, is entitled to the one month's pay provided in the original contract in case of discontinuance of the service (Salisbury v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cl. 404. See also Garman v. U. S., 34 Ct. Cl. 237), and may sue to recover the same (Salisbury v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cl. 52).

Effect on claim for services performed.— The annulment of a mail contract does not

Civil war,[71] or for failure to accept less compensation than provided in the contract,[72] entitles the contractor to the extra pay.[73] Where the service is discontinued at the request of the contractor, he having failed to perform, and being in default, he cannot recover the one month's extra pay;[74] but if the discontinuance is only in part, the contractor's right is not forfeited by subsequent misconduct on the other part, although the one may be set off against the other.[75]

d. Land-Grant Railroads. The land-grant railroad statutes are in the nature of grants and the roads which so received public lands are to be regarded as the beneficiaries of a grant.[76] By the terms of the grant the mail is to be transported over those roads "at such price as Congress may, by law, direct" and "until such price is fixed by law, the Postmaster General shall have the power to determine the same."[77] The power to establish the price includes the power also to declare the period of its duration,[78] and where the rate of compensation for a specific period is agreed upon, the acts of congress reducing the compensation of land-grant companies for carrying the mails do not apply.[79] If, however, a land-grant road carries the mails without an express contract with the postmaster-general, it is subject to the reductions of those acts.[80]

A suspension of a mail route during the Civil war by an order of the postmaster-general, made with notice to the contractor that he would be held responsible for a renewal when the postmaster-general should deem it safe to renew the service, amounts to a discontinuance of the service, for which the contractor, pursuant to his contract, is entitled to call for a month's pay. Discontinuance of performance by contractor only.— Where the postmaster-general discontinues the contractor's performance, although the service itself was not discontinued, and was continuously performed by another contractor, the discontinuance being ordered because the contractor would not consent to a reduction of the service, the measure of damages was the one month's pay, and not the profit which the contractor might have made. U. S. v. Alabama, etc., R. Co., supra.

2. Readjustment and Reduction. By the acts of congress of July 12, 1876, and of June 17, 1878, the postmaster-general was authorized to readjust the compensation to be paid for the transportation of mails on railroad routes, by reducing the compensation ten and five per cent respectively.[81] These acts apply only to contracts thereafter made,[82] or to such as did not require the performance of the service for a specified period.[83] Therefore when a company binds itself to carry the mails during a certain period, its acceptance during that period of less than it was entitled to demand does not prejudice its right to claim what is legally due under its contract.[84] If, however, the company, having no definite time contract, may decline to accede to the reduction when made, its failure to do so and the acceptance of the reduced compensation constitutes an assent to the rates fixed by the reduction.[85]

3. New, Additional, and Expedited Service — a. New or Additional Service. Contracts for transportation of the mails generally reserve the right to the postmaster-general to require new or additional service without extra compensation.[86] Such a contract gives to the postmaster-general very considerable discretion in calling for additional service without compensation,[87] limited, however, by the general rule that where new or additional service is not different in kind and character from that specified in the contract, the contractor cannot recover therefor;[88] but when the new or additional service is different in

The purpose of this stipulation is to require the performance, without additional compensation, of new or additional service which may arise from improved methods in the transaction of the business of the post-office department, and in the increased demand for service resulting from the growth and development of towns and cities. The phrase "new or additional service" is not one of exact meaning, defining the precise extent of the obligation incurred, and permits the court to give it a reasonable construction with a view to doing justice between the parties. In giving a proper construction the court is required to examine the entire contract, to consider the relation of the parties and the circumstances under which it was signed. U. S. v. Utah, etc., Stage Co., 199 U. S. 414, 26 S. Ct. 69, 50 L. ed. 251.

New and additional service.— "New" service is service similar in its nature to that embraced in the general intent of the contract. "Additional" service is an increase of the service which the contract as a whole contemplated. Union Transfer Co. v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cl. 216; Woolverton v. U. S., 27 Ct. Cl. 292; Otis v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cl. 315.

Change of schedule.— Where, by order of the post-office department, the direction of a mail route is reversed, but the change requires no greater speed or increase of distance, the carrier is not entitled to increase of pay, although the change occasions him serious loss; section 812 of the regulations authorizing the postmaster-general to "change schedules of departures and arrivals in all cases, without increase of pay, provided the running time be not abridged. In re Smith, 26 Ct. Cl. 178.

Service not contemplated by contract.—An increase in the service required on a mail route, as the result of the establishment of a new distributing station in the city of New York, amounting to more than three hundred thousand miles of additional transfer service, and involving an additional expenditure of nearly ten thousand dollars for ferry tolls, cannot be required by the postmaster-general without extra compensation, under the authority reserved to him in the contract to call for new additional mail messenger, or transfer service without addi-

b. Expedited Service. The statute,[90] limiting the amount of compensation to be allowed for expedited mail service, is equally obligatory on both parties, limiting the authority of the postmaster-general, and notifying the contractor of such limitation;[91] and, if the compensation allowed is in excess of the statute, Carrying mails to and from street cars.— A change of service under a mail contract, by directing the carrying of the mails to and from street cars at certain street crossings, is fairly within the power reserved by the contract in the postmaster-general. "Foot service."— The carriage of the mails up and down the steps at elevated railroad stations is called for by a contract for performing the covered regulation wagon, mail messenger, transfer, and mail station service on a mail route, in which the contractor agreed to take the mails from and deliver them to the post-offices, mail stations, and cars. U. S. v. Utah, etc., Stage Co., 199 U. S. 414, 26 S. Ct. 69, 50 L. ed. 251 [affirming 39 Ct. Cl. 420].

Increase of branch post-offices.— Under a contract for covered regulation wagon, mail messenger, transfer, and mail station service, and for all new additional service of said kinds, although the number of branch post-offices is greatly increased, the service for them must be regarded as additional, and not as extra (Union Transfer Co. v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cl. 216); but a new system of receiving stations is not new or additional transfer and mail station service, within such contract, but is extra service, for which the contractor should recover (Union Transfer Co. v. U. S., supra. See also Woolverton v. U. S., 34 Ct. Cl. 247).

Cl. 247 (holding that where a contract calls for the delivery of mail at a railroad station in Jersey City, and the postmaster compels the contractor to likewise carry local Jersey City mail, it will be deemed extra service, for which the contractor is entitled to extra compensation); Woolverton v. U. The carrying of empty mail bags beyond those made necessary by the preponderance of mail in one direction is extra service, entitling the contractor to extra compensation. Woolverton v. U. S., 34 Ct. Cl. 247. See also Knox v. U. S., 30 Ct. Cl. 59.

The transport of gold is not included under "mail-messenger service," and the contractor is entitled to extra compensation therefor. Woolverton v. U. S., 34 Ct. Cl. 247.

Services required by unauthorized agent.— A contractor for carrying the mails is not entitled to extra compensation for services outside the terms of his contract, which were performed in compliance with the unauthorized demand of the local postmaster, where, upon protest to the postmaster-general, the contractor was promptly relieved from such services, and another contract was made for their performance. Travis v. U. S., 196 U. S. 239, 25 S. Ct. 233, 49 L. ed. 461 [affirming 38 Ct. Cl. 590]; Slavens v. U. S., 196 U. S. 229, 25 S. Ct. 229, 49 L. ed. 457 [affirming 38 Ct. Cl. 574].

Waiver of right to extra compensation.— Where a contractor renders extra service to the government during a period of more than six years without notice that he regards it as extra, and without demanding extra compensation, he will be held to have waived his right to extra pay. Whitsell v. U. S., 34 Ct. Cl. 5.

Estoppel to claim extra compensation.— Estoppel against a claim for extra mail service arises where the postmaster-general replied to a claim that if pressed he would discontinue a mail service then being performed by the contractor, and which had several months to run, and which he had the right to discontinue at any time, and the contractor neglected to inform the postmaster-general that his claim would be pressed, and continued to receive the benefits of the existing service, although he in the meanwhile, without the postmaster-general's knowledge, presented documents to the second assistant postmaster-general (with whom the business had previously been transacted) to prove the justice of his claim. Alvord v. U. S., 9 Ct. Cl. 500, 8 Ct. Cl. 364.

Voluntary performance of extra service.— Where the additional service of a mail contractor is voluntary, no liability is imposed on the government. Wightman v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cl. 144.

Economical performance of extra service. —A contractor who is compelled to perform extra service must perform it in the most expeditious and economical manner. A mail messenger contractor must include new stations in existing routes or circuits if he can. Union Transfer Co. v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cl. 216.

Condition precedent to payment of extra compensation.— Compensation allowed by the postmaster-general to a contractor for additional services cannot be paid until it is shown that the same is "expressed in the order and entered upon the books of the department," and that service additional to that required by the contract has been performed. the action of the postmaster-general is ultra vires;[92] and, if shown by the evidence to be materially in excess, the contract will be deemed to have been made in mutual mistake of fact.[93]

4. Fines, Forfeitures, and Deductions — a. In General. The Revised Statutes[94] authorize the postmaster-general to impose "fines" on delinquent mail contractors.[95] The power to impose a fine can be exercised as long as there is money remaining due upon the contract.[96] Conversely, the authority to impose fines is limited to the subject-matter of the contract and to payments which would otherwise be due to the contractor.[97] The fines imposed by the postmaster-general are in the nature of liquidated damages for the public inconvenience caused by a contractor's negligence,[98] and his decisions are final.[99]

b. Evidence of. A document authenticated by the postmaster-general, under the seal of the department, reciting the imposition of a fine upon a mail-route contractor is admissible as evidence of such fact, and is sufficient prima facie to support a charge against the contractor, in his account with the department, of the amount of the fine;[1] but it is not sufficient evidence that the fine has been paid,

The legal effect of this statute is to require the department to exact this agreement from all mail carriers, and to take such contracts out of the ordinary rules of law regulating penalties and liquidated damages. Parker v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cl. 344.

U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 3962 was not repealed by Act March 3, 1879 (20 U. S. St. at L. 358, c. 180, § 5 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 2646]), providing that the postmaster-general shall, for every failure of a railroad company to deliver mail on schedule time, deduct not less than one half the price of the trip, and, where the trip is not performed, not less than the price of one trip, and not exceeding, in either case, the price of three trips. The latter section merely makes an exception to the provisions of section 3962 as to railroad companies, and on repeal of that section of the act of 1879 the provisions of section 3962 are again in force. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., 127 U. S. 406, 8 S. Ct. 1194, 32 L. ed. 180; Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cl. 350; Jacksonville, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., 21 Ct. Cl. 155.

Under Act June 27, 1848 (9 U. S. St. at L. 241), the power of the postmaster-general to impose a fine on a contractor for transmission of mails to and from foreign countries, for any unreasonable or unnecessary delay in the departure of the mails, or in the performance of the trips, is limited to the cases and for the causes specified in the act. U. S. v. Collins, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,834, 4 Blatchf. 142.

A mere recommendation by the postmaster-general to the head of another department to make a deduction from the pay of a contractor is not sufficient to impose a fine. U. S. v. Collins, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,834, 4 Blatchf. 142.

Restoration of suspended contract.—Where a mail transportation service, suspended because of alleged imperfect performance, is restored on condition that the contractor shall pay the cost of the service during suspension, he is bound thereby, and cannot thereafter recover from the government the amount paid by it for such service, and deducted from the moneys due him. Woodlief v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cl. 457.

96. Parker v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cl. 344, holding that the fact that the account of the contractor for a certain quarter has been transmitted to the accounting officers of the treasury, and adjusted, and a balance certified and paid, does not preclude the postmaster-general from imposing a fine for a previously committed, but subsequently discovered, delinquency.

Fine exceeding contract price.— The postmaster-general may impose a fine exceeding the contract price, but cannot deduct it from moneys due the contractor on other contracts. Parker v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cl. 344.

so as to authorize a judgment for its amount against a subcontractor, through whose fault it was incurred.[2]

5. Payment, Overpayments, and Recovery Thereof — a. In General. In all cases where money has been paid out of the funds of the post-office department in consequence of fraudulent representations,[3] or under a mistake of fact,[4] it may be recovered back in an action by the government,[5] or the money so paid out may be deducted from other money due the payee.[6]

b. Estoppel. Although as a general rule estoppel does not run against the government,[7] there are exceptions, and after a settlement has been made between the postmaster-general and a railroad company, an overpayment cannot be set up as a counter-claim against a subsequent purchaser of the road.[8]

6. Presentation of Claims — a. In General. Presentation of a claim to the second assistant postmaster-general, his being the proper office in the department for considering it, is equivalent to, and a compliance with, any rule requiring presentation to the postmaster-general.[9]

b. Waiver and Estoppel. The fact that a railroad company has claimed and been awarded compensation for certain services in connection with the mails, and at the same time has failed to make any charge or claim for certain other services, is evidence of a waiver of any claim for the latter services.[10] Where, however, a mail carrier has no means of knowing the amount of compensation to which he is

Misrepresentations of facts known to post-office department.— Inaccuracies in an affidavit by a mail contractor as to information for the cost of an expedited mail service, relating to the schedules of arrivals and departures, and other matters as well known to the post-office department as to the contractor, cannot be set up as a fraudulent representation of the contractor, in a suit by him against the government, based on such service. D. Carriage[12] and Delivery of Mails — 1. Regulation of Departure and Arrival and Frequency of Service. It rests altogether in the discretion of the postmaster-general to determine at what hours the mail shall leave particular places and arrive at others, and to determine whether it shall leave the same place only once a day or more frequently.[13]

2. Delivery of Mail — a. Duty to Deliver. It is the duty of postmasters to deliver letters deposited in the office for persons residing in the same place, as well as those transmitted by mail.[14]

b. Effect of Delivery.[15] Where a letter has been delivered to the person to whom it is directed, or his authorized agent, the government is discharged of further responsibility, and its functions cease to operate upon the letter.[16]

3. Rights, Duties, and Liabilities of Carriers and Contractors[17] — a. Exemption From Arrest. While a mail carrier is exempt, as a matter of public policy, from arrest on civil process while engaged in such service,[18] the rule is different where the process is issued on a charge of felony,[19] or other criminal offense affecting the public welfare.[20]

b. Liability For Lost or Stolen Mail — (i) In General. A mail contractor is liable to third persons for a loss occasioned by his own personal negligence or default in the discharge of his duties,[21] but not for a loss caused by the negligence or default of a carrier when he has employed a person of suitable skill and ability.[22]

(ii) Railroads. A railroad company carrying the United States mails, whether under contract or by virtue of the requirements of the constitution and laws, is not in respect to such service a common carrier, but is a public agent of the United States, employed in performing a governmental function;[23] and as

III. Offenses Against Postal Laws.[26]

A. Offenses and Responsibility Therefor — 1. Unlawfully Franking Letters. Although it is unlawful for a member of congress to frank envelopes to be used in transmitting printed circulars through the mail, it is not penal.[27]

2. Writing on Newspapers Without Paying Letter Postage. The mere writing of a name on a newspaper is not within the prohibition of the Post-Office Act.[28]

3. Obstructing Passage of Mail[29] — a. In General. Any person who know-common carrier as well as a contractor with the government for carrying the mails does not transform it into a common carrier as to the mails, and so render it liable as such to the sender for the loss of a letter sent by mail); Boston Ins. Ordinary care only required.— Conceding that a railroad may be held liable by the addressee of a package for the loss of the same in the mail through the railroad's negligence, the degree of care required is only the reasonable care exacted of an ordinary bailee for him. German State Bank v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 113 Fed. 414.

Negligence of employees not negligence of company.— The negligence of the servants of a railroad company in the operation of a train and the care of a switch is not the negligence of the company itself, so far as concerns the performance of its duty in regard to carrying the mails; and the company is not liable to the addressee of the mail matter carried over its line, caused by the negligence of such servants. Boston Ins. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 118 Iowa 423, 92 N. W. 88, 59 L. R. A. 796.

25. Bankers' Mutual Casualty Co. v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 117 Fed. 434, 54 C. C. A. 608, 65 L. R. A. 397.

Rule of respondeat superior inapplicable.— The responsibility of a railroad company to an individual for a failure in the performance of its duty in carrying the mail, if it exist at all, can only be based upon a neglect of the corporation itself, since the rule of respondeat superior does not apply to a failure in the performance of an official duty by a duly authorized agent. Boston Ins. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 118 Iowa 423, 92 N. W. 88, 59 L. R. A. 796.

Relation of master and servant does not exist.— Since neither the sender nor addressee of mail carried over a railroad has any control over the railroad company in the handling of mail matter, the relation of master and servant does not exist, so as to render the company liable to the addressee for a loss caused by the negligence of the servants of the company. Boston Ins. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 118 Iowa 423, 92 N. W. 88, 59 L. R. A. 796.

No privity of contract.— The interest which the addressee of mail matter has in the performance by a railroad company of its agreement with the government for the carrying of mails is too indirect to make him a privy to the contract, so as to have a right of action thereon. Boston Ins. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 118 Iowa 423, 92 N. W. 88, 59 L. R. A. 796.

Even if the duty of a railroad company in the carrying of the mail be considered as ministerial, the company is not liable to the addressee of mail destroyed in an accident, since no liability exists to an individual for a breach of official duty owing solely to the public, although the individual have a mediate interest therein. Boston Ins. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 118 Iowa 423, 92 N. W. 88, 59 L. R. A. 796.

The duty of a railroad in carrying the mails is to the government, whether it be considered as created by a statute, or arising under contract (Boston Ins. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 118 Iowa 423, 92 N. W. 88, 59 L. R. A. 796), and not to the addressee of a letter or package (German State Bank v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 113 Fed. 414).

Railroad not bailee of mail.— A railroad company, since it has no control over the mail matter transported by it, but merely has charge of the car in which the mails are carried, is not a bailee of such matter, so as to render it liable to the addressee thereof for a loss caused by the negligence of its servants. Boston Ins. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 118 Iowa 423, 92 N. W. 88, 59 L. R. A. 796. But see Central R., etc., Co. v. Lampley, 76 Ala. 357, 52 Am. Rep. 334.

ingly and wilfully obstructs or retards the passage of the mail,[30] or any carriage, horse, driver, or carrier carrying the same is punishable by a fine of one hundred dollars.[31]

b. Persons and Acts Punishable. The statute of congress by its terms applies only to persons who "knowingly and wilfully" obstruct or retard the passage of the mail, or of its carrier; that is, to those who know that the acts performed will have that effect, and perform them with the intention that such shall be their operation.[32] When the acts which create the obstruction are in themselves unlawful, the intention to obstruct will be imputed to their author, although the attainment of other ends may have been his primary object.[33] The statute has no reference to acts lawful in themselves, from the execution of which a temporary delay to the mails unavoidably follows.[34]

30. By the term "passage of the mails" is meant the transmission of mail matter from the time the same is deposited in a place designated by law or by the rules of the post-office department up to the time the same is delivered to the person to whom it is addressed. U. S. v. Lingle, 9 Haz. Reg. (Pa.) 78; U. S. v. Claypool, 14 Fed. 127 (holding that mail matter in the post-office, ready for delivery, and there for that purpose, is on its passage, within the meaning of the law, and to interfere with it so as to obstruct and retard its delivery is an offense); U. Statute applicable to railroads.—Although U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 3995 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 2716], making it an offense to obstruct the mails, was originally enacted prior to the use of railroads for mail purposes, it is applicable to the carriage of mail by trains. U. Placing obstructions on the track of an electric railway engaged in carrying the mails constitutes the crime of obstructing the mails. U. S. v. Thomas, 55 Fed. 380.

To prevent the running of a mail train as made up is a violation of the statute, although the mail car would be permitted to go without certain other cars, since it is not practicable to transport a mail car by itself, and thus, by preventing the transit of other cars, the transportation of the mails is interfered with. In re Grand Jury, 62 Fed. 840; U. Failure to run other than regular passenger trains.—Where the regular passenger trains of a railroad have been designated for the carrying of mail, failure of the railroad to run other trains for that purpose, on the refusal of its employees to move the regular trains so long as certain cars are attached, is not in violation of the statute against obstruction of the mail. In re Grand Jury, 62 Fed. 834.

Arrest of mail carrier or driver.—The act of congress of March 3, 1825 (4 U. S. St. at L. 104, c. 64, § 9), which punishes the obstruction or retarding of the passage of the mail or its carrier, does not apply to the temporary detention of the mail by the arrest of a carrier on a warrant duly issued against him by a state court on a charge of murder (U. S. v. Kirby, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 482, 19 L. ed. 278), or other criminal offense affecting the public welfare (U. S. v. Hart, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,316, Pet. C. C. 390, 3 Wheel. Cr. (N. Y.) 304). A warrant in a civil action against a mail carrier is, however, no justification for the officer executing it. U. S. v. Harvey, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,320, Brunn. Col. Cas. 540.

The attachment, knowingly, of a mail coach and horses, while carrying the mail, is void, being an obstruction of the mail within Act Cong. March 3, 1825 (4 U. S. St. at L. 104, c. 64, § 9). Harmon v. Moore, 59 Me. 428; U. S. v. Barney, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,525, 3 Hughes 545, 2 Wheel. Cr. (N. Y.) 513. But see Lathrop v. Middleton, 23 Cal. 257, 83 Am. Dec. 112.

c. Conspiracy to Obstruct Mail. A conspiracy to obstruct the mail, in violation of section 3995 of the Revised Statutes, is a violation of section 5440, as a conspiracy to commit an offense against the United States,[35] and this, although the obstruction is effected by merely quitting employment.[36] An essential ingredient of the offense is knowledge by defendants that the mails were being carried upon the train which they conspired to obstruct.[37]

4. Conveyance of Mail Matter Out of Mail. It is provided by statute[38] that no person shall establish any private express for the conveyance of letters or packets,[39] or in any manner cause or provide for the conveyance of the same, by regular trips or at stated periods,[40] over any post route, which is or may be established by law,[41] or from any city, town, or place to any other city, town, or place between which the mail is regularly carried. So too it is made unlawful for letters to be carried by any vehicle or vessel making regular trips on places declared to be post-roads, or on places parallel to such roads.[42] It is also made unlawful for any person to set up any foot or horse post for the conveyance of letters on any post-road.[43]

Knowledge by carrier necessary.— The carrier of letters by private express, in a package, is not liable to the penalty unless he

5. Mailing Obscene Matter or Information Concerning Same — a. Mailing Obscene Matter — (I) In General — (A) Gist of Offense. The substance of the offense of mailing any obscene, lewd, or lascivious publication is the employment of, or attempt to employ, the mails for the transmission of obscene matter.[44]

(B) Test of Obscenity. Matter is "obscene" within the statute making it a criminal offense to mail any obscene, lewd, or lascivious publication,[45] when it is offensive to the common sense of decency and modesty of the community, and is such as to deprave and corrupt those whose minds are open to such immoral influences.[46] Language which is merely coarse, vulgar, and indecent is not within the purview of the statute.[47] It is not necessary that the entire contents of the publication be objectionable; it is sufficient if a single article or passage be knew that the package contained letters. U. S. v. Adams, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,421. Thus, if a passenger in a railroad car or steamboat passing over a post-road carry letters without the knowledge or consent of the proprietor of such car or boat or any of his servants, the owner does not incur the penalty. U. S. v. Kimball, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,531. Nor is the person who sends the letter liable where the carrier is not. U. S. v. Hall, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,281; U. S. v. Kimball, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,531; U. S. v. Pomeroy, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,065, 3 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 143. Contra, U. S. v. Fisher, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,100. But if a person be openly engaged in the business of private letter carrying over the post-roads of the United States, and a railroad company be notified by public advertisement, and by the agent of the post-office department, that the party and his agents are engaged in such business, they will be liable by reason of their conveying such agents carrying letters. U. S. v. Hall, supra. And the company being liable, the person sending the letter is liable. U. S. v. Hall, supra.

"Post routes" not synonymous with "post-roads."— U. S. v. Kochersperger, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,541. See also supra, I, A, 2.

The setting up of a post by railroad car or steamboat is not within the meaning of Act March 2, 1827 (4 U. S. St. at L. 238, c. 61, § 3), which enacts that no person shall set up any foot or horse post for the conveyance of letters or packets on any post-road. U. S. v. Kimball, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,531.

The words "obscene," "lewd," and "lascivious" have reference to that form of immorality which relates to sexual impurity (Swearingen v. U. S., 161 U. S. 446, 16 S. Ct. 562, 40 L. ed. 765; U. S. v. Wyatt, 122 Fed. 316), and have the same meaning as given them at common law in prosecutions for obscene libel (Swearingen v. U. S., supra; U. S. v. Clarke, 38 Fed. 500). "Obscene" is that which is offensive to chastity and modesty (U. S. v. Martin, 50 Fed. 918 [following U. S. v. Harmon, 45 Fed. 414]. "Lascivious" is synonymous with "lewd." U. S. v. Clarke, 38 Fed. 732.

Offense to religious sentiments.—An article is not non-mailable because it offends the religious sentiments of a majority of the people by attacking the doctrine of the immaculate conception of Christ in coarse or even obscene language, where it has no tendency to induce sexual immorality, that being the class of publications against which it is the purpose of the statute to protect the public. U. S. v. Moore, 104 Fed. 78.

Alleged medical works.— Where the acts described and the ideas conveyed in a book are calculated to deprave the morals of the reader by exciting sensual desires and libidinous thoughts, the book is obscene under U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 3893, and it is immaterial that the information conveyed is accurate and scientific and tends to prevent disease and other ills resulting from existing ignorance upon the topics discussed; that, as a whole, the book is calculated to be of value to the medical practitioner and to men and women in the marriage relation, that its publication was approved by several physicians; and that some portions of it are extracts from standard works. Such publications will not, because of their character, be considered privileged communications by a physician to a patient, in the absence of a showing that defendant is a physician, and that the persons to whom they were addressed were his patients. obscene.[48] Nor need the words used be of themselves obscene, if such is their necessary import.[49]

(c) Motive. Where the writings, papers, and publications sent through the mail by the accused are depraving and corrupting, and tend to excite lustful thoughts, the fact that they were so sent in the real or supposed interest of science, philosophy, or morality is immaterial.[50] Nor is it material that defendant did not regard the matter as obscene.[51]

(d) Persons Liable. It is not essential to the commission of the offense prescribed by statute [52] that the objectionable matter be deposited in the mail by the offender himself,[53] or by another acting under his express direction;[54] he being equally responsible if it is deposited therein as a natural consequence of an act intentionally done by him with knowledge of its probable effect.[55]

(ii) Sealed Letters or Packages. The original section [56] did not in terms include a letter and the decisions were conflicting as to whether a sealed letter was within its import;[57] but by the amendment of 1888,[58] the omission was supplied by the insertion of the word "letter" after the word "paper" and before the word "writing." [59]

b. Advertising Articles For Immoral Use — (i) In General. The statute also forbids the use of the mails for carrying any advertisement giving information where articles designed for producing abortion and preventing conception can be obtained or made.[60] In such a case it is not necessary that the advertisement should indicate any particular article or thing or its properties,[61] or that the article should be at the place designated.[62] Nor is it necessary that the article sent in reply to a request for such information should be capable of producing the desired effect.[63]

(II) Answers to Decoy Letters. The offense of sending letters by mail giving information where obscene pictures can be obtained does not lose its criminal character, although the letters were sent in response to an inquiry made under an assumed name by a government official, with a view of detecting the accused in the commission of an offense,[64] unless the accused was solicited to use the mails and thus to commit an offense.[65]

6. Mailing Offensive, Defamatory, or Threatening Matter.[66] The statute[67] declares unmailable matter upon the envelope or outside cover of which,[68] or any postal card upon which, are any delineation,[69] epithets,[70] terms or language of an indecent,[71] lewd, lascivious, obscene, libelous, scurrilous, defamatory, or threatening character, or calculated by the terms or manner or style of display,[72] and obviously intended, to reflect injuriously upon the character or conduct of another.[73]

68. Outside pages of publication considered cover.— When the outside pages of a publication, although of the same color as the rest of the publication, overspread or overlay the publication, such pages may be considered the "outside cover," of the publication, within Act Sept. 26, 1888. U. S. v. Burnell, 75 Fed. 824.

Absence of wrapper or cover.— The statute cannot be extended by construction to cases where there is no wrapper or cover at all, even though such cases may be within the reason and policy of the enactment. U. S. v. Gee, 45 Fed. 194.

A sealed letter containing defamatory language is not within the prohibition of this statute. U. S. v. Durant, 46 Fed. 753.

69. "Delineation" signifies representations expressed otherwise than by language. Therefore the sending through the mail by a collection agency of dunning letters, inclosed in black envelopes, addressed in white letters, the purpose of which was universally known to the post-office employees, is a "delineation," within the act. U. S. v. Dodge, 70 Fed. 235.

70. U. S. v. Pratt, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,082, holding that the mailing of a postal card containing words imputing illicit intercourse to third persons, but no epithet in the form of a substantive or adjective, is an offense under U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 3893 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 2658], punishing the mailing of postal cards containing "indecent or scurrilous epithets."

71. The term "indecent" in U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 3893 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 2658], in connection with the offense defined in said section of mailing any book, letter, envelope, postal card, etc., containing any indecent, etc., delineations, epithets, etc., either written or printed, taken with the history of the legislation on the subject, means immodest, impure; and language which is coarse or unbecoming, or even profane, is not within the inhibition of the act. U. S. v. Smith, 11 Fed. 663.

72. Display type.— Mailing a letter inclosed in an envelope, on which the words "Excelsior Collection Agency" are printed in very large full-faced capital letters, which occupy more than half the envelope, and are so placed as to be entirely separate from the direction to return to the sender, is a violation of the statute. U. S. v. Brown, 43 Fed. 135. It is otherwise when the type used is neither large nor unusual, but of a size and character quite common upon business envelopes. In re Barber, 75 Fed. 980.

73. U. S. v. Burnell, 75 Fed. 824; U. S. v. Davis, 38 Fed. 326.

Language held threatening.—A postal card reading: "It is with regret that I once more ask you to take your choice. I will vindicate myself if I live. The truth, and the whole truth must come out," contains language of a "threatening" character, within the meaning of the United States

7. Use of Mails to Defraud — a. In General. The statute[74] which makes it a criminal offense for any person to use the mails in the execution of a scheme or artifice to defraud contemplates three classes of transactions, namely, lotteries and other like games of chance, "confidence games," and schemes which from their very nature, in the light of business experience, are sure to end in financial disaster to their contributors.[75]

b. Mailing Matter Concerning Lotteries[76] or Gift Enterprises — (i) In General. By statute,[77] it is made unlawful to send[78] through the mails, letters or circulars[79] concerning lotteries, etc. The word "lottery" embraces the elements of procuring through lot or chance, by the investment of money or something of value, some greater amount of money or thing of value.[80]

(ii) Persons Liable. While the effect of the statute,[81] prohibiting the mailing postal laws. Griffin v. Pembroke, 64 Mo. App. 263.

The word "notorious," when written on the outside of a letter, after the name of the person addressed, as follows, "Room 32, Pease House, Front St., City, The Notorious," is not obviously intended to reflect injuriously on the character or conduct of another, and the mailing of such letter is therefore not within the prohibition of the statute. U. S. v. Jarvis, 59 Fed. 357.

Dunning postal cards.—A postal card demanding payment of a debt, and stating that "if it is not paid at once we shall place the same with our lawyer for collection," is non-mailable matter. U. S. v. Smith, 69 Fed. 971; U. S. v. Bayle, 40 Fed. 664, 6 L. R. A. 742. See also U. S. v. Simmons, 61 Fed. 640. But see U. S. v. Elliott, 51 Fed. 807. A postal card containing the words, "Please call and settle account, which is long past due, and for which our collector has called several times, and oblige," is not within the prohibition, as the language cannot be said to be threatening or offensive to the person addressed, or such as to attract public notice. U. S. v. Bayle, supra.

This provision relates to the external appearance, and is a protection against delineations or words which will convey or imply insult, threat, or harm to the person addressed, operating either directly in injuring his feelings, or indirectly by attracting the notice of other persons, and raising injurious inferences. In re Barber, 75 Fed. 980.

St. (1901) p. 2659], means the knowingly forwarding or causing to be forwarded through the mail, as matter to be conveyed by mail, that is, as mail matter, after the prohibited article has been deposited in the mail, and does not include the naked sending toward or to the post-office. A lottery ticket is not a "letter," within the meaning of the statute which forbids the mailing of "any letter or circular concerning lotteries," etc., but a schedule setting out the prizes offered in a lottery, printed on the back of all lottery tickets sent out for a particular drawing, is a "circular," within the meaning of that statute. Bond investment schemes.— When a city or a government, as an inducement to the purchase of its bonds, holds out large prizes to be determined in the manner in which prizes are usually determined in lotteries, the mailing of circulars concerning such drawings, past and future, is a mailing of lottery circulars within U. of lottery circulars, etc., is to make any matter concerning lotteries unmailable, and to subject the sender of any such matter by mail to the penalty therein provided,[82] the statute was aimed at lottery dealers only and not individual buyers of lottery tickets.[83] The offense is complete, although the letters or circulars in question are sent in reply to letters written by a detective, under a fictitious name, for no other purpose than to obtain evidence of the commission of the offense.[84]

c. Other Schemes or Artifices to Defraud — (i) Elements of Offense — (A) In General. The elements in the offense of using the mail for the purpose of defrauding[85] are: (1) The devising, or intending to devise, a scheme or artifice to defraud; (2) the opening or intending to open correspondence or communication with some other person, or inciting such person to open correspondence, by means of the post-office department, with the one devising the scheme; (3) in pursuance of the scheme, putting a letter or packet in the mail, or taking one out.[86]

(B) Intent to Defraud. To bring a case within the operation of the statute, an intent to defraud must exist.[87] It is not necessary to prove a specific intent,[88] but such intent may be determined by inference from all the facts and circumstances of the case.[89]

(C) Intent to Effect Scheme Through Use of Mails. This statute does not embrace every case where a letter promotive of, or connected with, a fraudulent design may be sent through the post-office by the person engaged in or contem-

82. U. S. v. Zeisler, 30 Fed. 499.

To constitute the offense of knowingly depositing or causing to be deposited in the mail a circular concerning a lottery, it is necessary that the offending party should be conscious of the physical act of depositing or causing to be deposited the circular in the mail, and that he should be aware that such circular related to an enterprise where the premiums or prizes or other important pecuniary detail is determined or fixed by lot or chance. U. S. v. Politzer, 59 Fed. 273.

83. U. S. v. Mason, 22 Fed. 707. "It is very plain that the broad, literal terms of this statute are to be restricted in some manner. It declares that the mailing of any letter concerning a lottery shall be punishable; so that a father writing his son, warning him against spending money upon tickets in any specified lotteries, would be indictable for a criminal offense. That cannot be the meaning of the statute. It must be construed, not according to its literal terms, but with reference to the evil to which congress was addressing itself, and the remedy it intended to provide for the suppression of that evil." U. S. v. Mason, 22 Fed. 707.

Amendment of March 2, 1889.—Amendment of U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 5480, relating to the fraudulent use of the mails, by Act March 2, 1889 (25 U. S. St. at L. 873, c. 393, § 1 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3698], did not limit the scope of such sections to schemes, artifices, or devices described in the amendment, but added to the offenses denounced by the original act those specified in the act of 1889. S. v. Stickle, 15 Fed. 798, holding that, in determining the intention of the accused, in a prosecution for using the mails to defraud, it is proper for the jury to consider all the facts and circumstances in evidence, the nature and quality of his advertisements and circulars, and the statements and representations therein contained, their truth or falsity in different plating the fraud. The scheme to defraud must be one which is to be effected by the deviser of it opening a correspondence by mail, or by inciting someone else to open such correspondence with him,[90] whether that be the sole or only part of the means to be employed in effecting it.[91]

(D) Actual Use of Mails. The gist of the offense under the statute is the use of the mails as a material part of carrying out the scheme to defraud,[92] and the mailing of the letter in execution of the unlawful scheme constitutes the corpus delicti.[93]

(II) Particular Schemes or Artifices Included. The phrase "scheme or artifice to defraud" is not limited to such as are to be accomplished by means of deception or trickery,[94] but includes any scheme designed and intended to injure another by depriving him of his property wrongfully.[95] A scheme need not be unlawful in itself, or constitute a fraud, either at common law or by statute.[96] It is enough if its purpose is to defraud other persons of their money, although no particular person had been selected as the subject of its operation.[97] The crimi-particulars, whether he filled orders for goods or not, and the quality of such orders, and his conduct in the premises generally.

Adaptability to deceive test of scheme to defraud.— Whether the pretensions made by the accused, which are averred to constitute the scheme of fraud, constitute an agreement, valid or otherwise, or consist of representations of fact, present or future, an expression of opinion or assurance of past, present, or future conditions, it may constitute a scheme to defraud, provided only it be designed and reasonably adapted to deceive. Illegality of scheme immaterial.— In a prosecution for using the mails in furtherance of a scheme to defraud by the payment of large returns for money to be used in betting on horse-races, the fact that such scheme involved a gambling transaction forbidden by the laws of the state where it was devised and where defendants resided was immaterial. nality of defendant does not rest upon the probabilities of the success of the scheme,[98] or upon the fact of success.[99] Nor is it necessary that the guilty person should be the originator of the fraudulent scheme in which he participates,[1] or that he should intend to obtain a benefit by the alleged fraud, or to convert the money obtained thereby to his own use.[2]

8. Illegal Sale or Other Disposition of Stamps and Inducing Sale on Credit — a. In General. By statute,[3] postmasters are peremptorily forbidden, not only to dispose of postage stamps in the payment of debts or in the purchase of commodities,[4] or to pledge them, but to sell or dispose of them except for cash.[5] An attempt to induce a postmaster to sell stamps on credit is also made penal.[6]

b. Newspaper and Periodical Stamps. Prior to 1881 there was no act of congress or regulation of the post-office department prohibiting the sale to the public of newspaper and periodical stamps, issued under the act of June 23, 1874, either by the department itself or by postmasters.[7] Therefore the possession thereof by persons outside of, and unconnected with, the post-office department was not presumptively unlawful.[8]

9. Detention, Opening, or Destruction of Mail Matter by Postmaster or Employee.[9] The statute[10] making it a criminal offense for any employee of the post-office department to unlawfully detain, delay, or open any letter, etc., applies to any letter or packet[11] which is intended to be conveyed by post,[12] and which has not reached its destination.[13]

10. Taking or Opening Mail Matter to Obstruct Correspondence[14] — a. At Common Law. Breaking open a private letter, and publishing its contents,

St. (1901) p. 3696], involves the element of some plausible device, reasonably calculated to deceive persons of ordinary comprehension and prudence; and a manifest hoax or humbug, which belies the known laws of nature, is not an indictable offense thereunder.

Requiring stamps to be affixed to receipt. — The direction given by the postmaster-general that newspaper and periodical stamps issued under the act of June 23, 1874, should be affixed to the stub of a receipt rather than to the mail matter itself, was not even inferentially a prohibition of the sale of such stamps by postmasters. U. S. v. Walter Scott Stamp Co., 87 Fed. 721.

Exchange with postal union.— The exchange by the government of newspaper and periodical stamps with members of the so-called "Postal Union," whereby over seven hundred complete sets of such stamps were issued, was without any reservation, and did not render unlawful the sale or gift of such stamps to private dealers or collectors. is a misdemeanor at common law.[15] It is not a public offense, however, to publish the contents of a letter which came innocently into the possession of the publisher after being opened.[16]

b. Under Statutes — (i) In General. The statute[17] providing that any person who shall take any letter, etc., out of a post-office or from a mail carrier, before it has been delivered to the person to whom it is addressed, with a design to obstruct correspondence, or shall secrete, embezzle, or destroy the same, shall be punished, is designed to protect letters sent by mail from embezzlement, and from interference with the improper designs therein enumerated, until they reach their destination by delivery to the person addressed, or his authorized agent.[18] The taking must be unlawful,[19] and with the intent of not delivering the letter to the addressee.[20]

(ii) Defenses. It is no defense to a prosecution under this statute[21] for taking a letter from the post-office with intent to obstruct correspondence that defendant, by virtue of an order from the writer of the letter, took it from the office where it was to be delivered;[22] that the letter related in part to the business of defendant or business in which he was interested;[23] that the letter was not sealed, and was written by defendant himself;[24] that the addressee's name was not correctly given;[25] that the letter was of no value to the person to whom it was addressed, or that accused believed in good faith, at the time that he took it out of the post-office, that it was of no value;[26] or that the letter was voluntarily delivered to defendant by the postmaster.[27] One cannot be convicted, however, if he knew the contents of the letter before he received it.[28]

Presumption of intent.— If a person takes a letter out of the post-office, addressed to another, without the authority or direction of the addressee, but with the declared purpose of delivering it, and does not deliver it, the first opportunity he has, the law raises the inference by that fact that, when he got it, he did not intend to deliver it. of offenses: The one relating to the embezzlement of letters, etc.; the other relating to stealing their contents.[32] Under this section [33] no one can be convicted who is not employed in the post-office department,[34] but whether he is employed directly by the United States or indirectly by a contractor is immaterial.[35] He must be, however, a regular assistant whose duty it is to perform the various functions which appertain to the office.[36] Only such letters as are, at the time, a proper subject of deposit in the mail,[37] and the contents of which are valuable,[38] can be the subject of the offense. The taking need not be with intent to steal.[39]

A person who has discontinued his employment as an assistant in a post-office, and who, although receiving no compensation, gives some instructions to a person in the office when the postmaster is absent, is not an employee of the post-office department within the meaning of the act of 1825, section 21, which prescribes the punishment for embezzlement by a person employed in the post-office department. "Decoy letters" defined see 13 Cyc. 432.

Genuineness of letter immaterial.— It makes no difference with respect to the duty of the carrier, whether the letter be genuine or a decoy, with a fictitious address. Coming into possession as such carrier, it is his duty addressed to a fictitious person or place,[41] and was never intended to be delivered,[42] provided it was intended to be conveyed by mail;[43] nor that it was made up so as to attract attention, and indicate that it contained money.[44]

b. By Other Persons. The statute[45] applies to the stealing of the mail by every person, irrespective of his employment in the post-office,[46] and the offenses provided against are: (1) The stealing of the mail or the taking from out of the mail or post-office or other authorized depository, a letter or packet, or the taking of such mail or letter or packet therefrom, or from any post-office, etc., or other authorized depository, with or without the consent of the person having the custody thereof;[47] (2) the opening, embezzling, or destroying of any such mail, to treat it for what it appears to be on its face — a genuine communication; to make an effort to deliver it, or, if the address be not upon his route, to hand it to the proper carrier, or put it into the list box. Certainly he has no more right to appropriate it to himself than he would have if it were a genuine letter. For the purpose of these sections a letter is a writing or document, which bears the outward semblance of a genuine communication, and comes into the possession of the employee in the regular course of his official business. His duties in respect to it are not relaxed by the fact or by his knowledge that it is not what it purports to be — in other words, it is not for him to judge of its genuineness. Goode v. U. S., 159 U. S. 663, 16 S. Ct. 136, 40 L. ed. 297.

The term "mail," as used in U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 5469 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3692], relative to larceny from the mails, may mean either the whole body of matter transported by the postal agents, or any letter or package forming a component part of it. U. S. v. Inabnet, 41 Fed. 130.

letter, or packet containing any article of value; [48] (3) the obtaining, by fraud or deception, from any person having custody thereof, any such mail, letter, or packet, containing such article of value.[49] To constitute the offense where no fraud is practised, the taking must be with a criminal intent; [50] not a taking by the authority of the addressee, although there is a subsequent embezzlement, nor a taking by mistake or with an innocent intent.[51]

12. Receiving Property Stolen From Mails. To constitute an offense under the statute [52] making it a criminal offense to receive, conceal, or aid in concealing any article of value, knowing it to have been stolen or embezzled from the mail, the property in question must have been stolen or embezzled from the mail; [53] and defendant, knowing it to have been stolen or embezzled, must have received it from the thief,[54] or concealed,[55] or aided the thief or someone else in concealing it.[56] Where an indictment alleges that two persons received property stolen from the mail, without alleging whether it was done jointly or severally, one of defendants may be found guilty when the other defendant has been discharged on a plea of autrefois convict.[57]

13. Robbery of Mail — a. In General. The statutory offense [58] of robbing the mail consists in robbing the carrier, agent, or other person intrusted with the mail, of the mail or any part thereof.[59] Two species of robbery are provided against: (1) A robbery of the mail under such circumstances as amount to the offense by the principles of the common law; (2) a robbery effected by putting in jeopardy the life of the person having the custody of the mail, by the use of dangerous weapons.[60] If the accused was present on the occasion of the robbery of the mails charged, aiding, advising, and procuring its commission, it becomes immaterial whether he actually entered the car containing the mail or not, as he is to be regarded as a principal, and convicted as such.[61]

b. Attempts. To constitute an attempt to rob the mail within the statute there must concur: (1) An attempt;[62] (2) the attempt must be to rob the mail;[63] (3) the attempt must be accompanied by an assault upon the person having custody of the mail, or shooting at him or his horse, or threatening him with dangerous weapons.[64]

14. Breaking and Entering Post-Office — a. In General. The statute[65] providing for the punishment of any person who shall break into any building used in part as a post-office with intent to commit therein larceny creates a purely statutory offense which is unknown to the common law, and which must be classed as a misdemeanor, and not a felony.[66] The offense is committed by breaking into any part of the building with intent to commit larceny in the part used as a post-office.[67]

b. Retention of Money Found on Person of Burglar. The United States cannot retain money found on the person of one who pleads guilty to burglary of a post-office without identifying it as that stolen; and money so retained may be recovered.[68]

B. Right of Search and Seizure[69] of Mailable Matter. The statutes[70] authorize the postmaster-general to empower any special agent or other officer of his department to make searches for mailable matter transported in violation of law, not being in a dwelling-house, and authorizes any special agent, collector, or other customs officer, or United States marshal, or his deputy, to seize all letters and bags, packets, or parcels containing letters which are being carried contrary to law and detain the same until two months after the final determination of all suits and proceedings which may at any time, within six months after such seizure, be brought against any person for sending or carrying such letters.[71]

C. Indictment and Information[72] — 1. Conspiracy to Defraud Government in Weight of Mail. An indictment charging railway officials with conspiring to deceive the postal officers and defraud the government by fraudulently increasing the mails at a time when they were being weighed to determine the compensation of the road for carrying the same states an offense against the United States and is sufficient.[73] It is not necessary to aver that the contemplated fraud was successful,[74] or the fraudulent mail matter of sufficient weight to entitle the company to increased compensation,[75] or that the forwarding of the matter would not be continued beyond the period fixed for weighing the mails;[76] nor need the indictment aver what particular officer was intended to be deceived.[77]

2. Unlawfully Franking Letters. An indictment against a member of congress for unlawfully franking need not charge that he franked any letter as a member of congress, or that he was a member of congress, when the offense was committed.[78] It should, however, negative the fact that the letters were written by order of defendant on the business of his office.[79]

3. Obstructing Passage of Mail. An indictment for obstructing the mails need not allege that the act was feloniously done,[80] or that defendants knew that the trains they retarded carried the mails,[81] nor that the acts of overturning cars on a railroad track were not done in the exercise of a lawful right;[82] but it must allege that such acts were knowingly, wilfully, or unlawfully done.[83] Where the indictment charges a conspiracy to obstruct the mails, it is not restricted to the allegation of a single overt act in pursuance thereof, since the gist of the offense is the conspiracy, which is a single offense.[84] In such an indictment it is necessary to charge that the defendants knew that the mails were carried upon the train they conspired to obstruct.[85]

4. Conveyance of Mail Matter Out of Mail. An information under the Post-Office Act of 1845, for carrying a letter on a mail route, and not in the mail, need not negative the fact that it was stamped.[86]

5. Mailing Obscene Matter or Information Concerning Same — a. Mailing Obscene Matter — (i) Description of Offense — (a) In General. An indictment for violation of the statute[87] prohibiting the mailing of publications of a certain described character must charge specifically that the publication mailed by defendant was of the character declared non-mailable by the statute,[88] and it is not sufficient to merely set out a copy of such publication, leaving its non-mailable character to be inferred therefrom;[89] nor is the defect cured by the conclusion of a subsequent count, "contrary to the form of the statute." [90] It is sufficient to allege that the publication mailed was "obscene, lewd, and lascivious" without adding "and of an indecent character." [91]

(B) Setting Out Obscene Matter. The constitutional right of a defendant to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation against him entitles him to insist, at the outset, by demurrer or by motion to quash, and, after verdict, by motion in arrest of judgment, that the indictment shall apprise him of the crime charged with such reasonable certainty that he can make his defense and protect himself after judgment against another prosecution for the same offense; [92] and this right is not infringed by the omission from the indictment of indecent and obscene matter, alleged as not proper to be spread upon the records of the court,[93] provided the crime charged, however general the language used, is yet so described as reasonably to inform the accused of the nature of the charge sought to be established against him; [94] and in such case the accused may apply to the court before the trial is entered upon for a bill of particulars, showing what parts of the paper would be relied on by the prosecution as being obscene, lewd, and lascivious, which motion will be granted or refused, as the court, in the exercise of a sound legal discretion, may find necessary to the ends of justice.[95]

(C) Address. In an indictment for depositing in the mails newspapers containing an obscene article, an allegation that the newspapers were addressed, or that direction was given for mailing or delivery is requisite; [96] but this is not necessary in the case of a letter, where the same is set out in the indictment, and shown to commence with an address.[97]

(D) Knowledge of Obscene Character of Matter Mailed. Since it is the depositing and mailing of a publication, with knowledge of its contents, such as is described in the statute, which constitutes a violation of the law,[98] the indictment should allege that when defendant deposited the publication he knew of its contents, and that it contained matter, the mailing of which was inhibited by the statute.[99] As to whether knowledge of the offensive character of the matter is sufficiently charged by the allegation that defendant "knowingly deposited in the mails" certain obscene matter, there is an apparent conflict in the decisions. These decisions may be nearly all harmonized, however, by this distinction, that such an allegation is insufficient when objection is taken on motion to quash before trial,[1] but that the

As the alleged obscene publication cannot be regarded as part of the record, a demurrer to the indictment on the grounds that the publication was not obscene, and that, if unfit for general circulation, it might lawfully be sent to certain persons, to whom the indictment did not show that the publication was not mailed, cannot be sustained. defect in failing to so sufficiently charge knowledge in the indictment will be regarded as waived after verdict.[2]

(II) Matter of Defense. As the statute contains no exceptions to the rule making obscene publications non-mailable, the fact that a publication which would ordinarily be classed as within its meaning might lawfully be sent to certain persons does not render it necessary to aver in the indictment that it was not sent to such persons, it being matter of defense to show that it was sent to such persons.[3]

b. Mailing Information Concerning Obscene Pictures or Articles For Immoral Use. An indictment charging defendant with having deposited in a post-office for mailing a letter or circular giving information where and of whom might be obtained obscene, lewd, and lascivious pictures is sufficient if it specifies the place where and of whom the letter or circular gave information, and alleges the character of the information, leaving further disclosures to the evidence.[4] It is not necessary to aver ownership or possession of the objectionable matter,[5] nor that the information was given to one who inquired for or desired it,[6] nor to describe the pictures about which information was given, further than to state their character.[7] An indictment charging the mailing of a letter giving information where and from whom an article or thing designed and intended for the prevention of conception might be obtained or made must state what the particular "article or thing" consisted of, describing it with at least such particularity that the accused may not only know the particular charge against him, but may be able to plead the judgment of conviction or acquittal in bar of a second prosecution.[8] A charge in the conjunctive "obtained and made" is good, and proof of either will be sufficient to support the charge made in the indictment.[9]

6. Use of Mails to Defraud — a. Mailing Matter Concerning Lotteries or Gift Enterprises. An indictment for mailing a letter or circular [10] concerning a lottery in violation of the statute should set forth such letter or circular in hæc verba,[11] and aver that defendant knew the matter so deposited concerned a lottery.[12] Such

S. v. Kaltmeyer, 16 Fed. 760, 5 McCrary 260, holding that a bill of indictment for depositing for mailing a notice of where an article for the prevention of conception may be obtained should set out the notice, unless it cannot be copied without great inconvenience, or is so obscene as to be unfit to go upon public records.

If, however, the indictment does set out the letter, which does not on its face purport to convey information, without also setting out the other extrinsic facts on which the government relies, the allegations are repugnant, and an objection on the ground of uncertainty will be sustained. an indictment need not allege specifically facts showing the enterprise to be a lottery. A general averment to that effect is sufficient.[13] Nor need it show how the letter or circular concerns the lottery;[14] but, where the circulars do not show on their face that they relate to a lottery, the indictment should aver the existence of a lottery, or an intention to hold a lottery, to which the circulars refer.[15]

b. Other Schemes to Defraud — (i) In General. An indictment charging a scheme to defraud by the use of the mails must allege three matters of fact: (1) That the person charged devised a scheme to defraud;[16] (2) that he intended to effect this scheme by opening or intending to open correspondence with some other person through the post-office establishment, or by inciting such other person to open communication with him;[17] (3) and that in carrying out such Informal averment cured by verdict.— The informal averment of facts necessary to show the illegal quality of the writing is cured by verdict and will not sustain a motion in arrest of judgment. U. S. v. Noelke, 1 Fed. 426, 17 Blatchf. 554.

Averment that letter "concerning lottery offering prizes."— It is not necessary to allege that the writing was one "concerning a lottery offering prizes." U. S. v. Noelke, 1 Fed. 426, 17 Blatchf. 554.

Averment that letter "in aid of lottery."— It is not necessary that the indictment should allege that the letter deposited in the post-office was in aid of a lottery, since the statute does not require this as an element of the crime, but only that the letter should have been concerning a lottery. U. S. v. Fulkerson, 74 Fed. 631.

Where the indictment does not purport to give the details of the lottery, the objection that such scheme is not a lottery, because the only element of chance therein relates to time of payment, cannot arise. U. S. v. Fulkerson, 74 Fed. 631.

Existence of lottery.— In an indictment for depositing in a post-office a document concerning a lottery, an allegation that an envelope deposited by defendant "contained a certain pamphlet concerning a certain lottery, which said lottery was then and there being conducted by a certain corporation, called," etc., sufficiently affirms the existence of a lottery. The intention of defendant to defraud, being the very gist and substance of the offense, must be clearly alleged (U. S. v. Post, 113 Fed. 852), but it is not necessary to further charge an intention to convert the money obtained to defendant's own use (Ewing v. U. S., 136 Fed. 53, 69 C. C. A. 61; Kellogg v. U. S., 126 Fed. 323, 61 C. C. A. 229; U. S. v. Bernard, 84 Fed. 634). If, however, an intention to convert is charged, it is unnecessary to specify the manner in which the conversion was accomplished. U. S. v. Loring, 91 Fed. 881.

Variance.— A defendant charged in the indictment with having devised a scheme to defraud, to be effected by means of the post-office establishment, must be shown to have devised the particular scheme specified in the indictment, and cannot be convicted on evidence that is as consistent with a different scheme, which, although equally within the statute, is not charged. Direct allegation necessary.— U. S. v. Long, 68 Fed. 348; U. S. v. Harris, 68 Fed. 347.

Use of mails as essential part of scheme.— An indictment for using the mails to defraud must show that the fraudulent scheme was "to be effected" through that medium as an essential part, and not as a mere adjunct or incident, and that the original design contemplated and embraced this. U. S. v. Clark, 121 Fed. 190.

Duplicity.— An indictment is not bad for duplicity for alleging that the scheme to defraud was to be effected "by opening correspondence . . . and by inciting [the person addressed] . . . to open correspondence," although the statute reads "or" inciting, scheme such person must have either deposited a letter or packet in the post-office, or taken or received one therefrom.[18] Another requisite of such an indictment is that the fraudulent scheme must be described with sufficient certainty to inform defendant with reasonable certainty of the nature of the evidence to establish the scheme which will be adduced at the trial,[19] and this must be done by direct and positive averment, and not inferentially.[20] If the indictment does not charge a scheme to defraud the public generally, or a class not capable of being resolved into individuals, but clearly imports an intention to defraud definite individuals, it must describe them by name,[21] or give a good and true reason for the omission.[22] The letters or circulars themselves need not be set out;[23] nor is it necessary to negative the truth of the representations contained therein.[24]

(II) Joinder of Offenses or Counts. Each letter put into the post-office in pursuance of a scheme to defraud constitutes a separate and distinct offense;[25] and, according to the express provision of the statute, but three offenses committed within the same six calendar months can be joined in the same indictment,[26] to say nothing of the same count;[27] but an indictment containing more

Date of mailing.— In a prosecution for devising a scheme or artifice to defraud, to be effected through the post-office establishment, the date of the alleged mailing of the different letters, papers, or writings described in the indictment was not an essential element of the offense; it being sufficient that the letters, writings, circulars alleged, or some of them, were deposited or caused to be deposited in the mails by defendant at any time within three years next prior to the finding of the indictment. than three counts is not for that reason fatally defective, where no demurrer or other objection was taken in the trial court, and only a single sentence was given thereon.[28] Nor does such provision prevent other indictments for other and distinct offenses committed within the same six months.[29] Counts for using the mails to defraud, in violation of section 5480,[30] and for conspiracy to commit such offense under section 5440,[31] where based upon the same transaction, may be joined in one indictment.[32]

7. Detention of Mail-Matter by Postmaster. An indictment against a postmaster for detaining mail is sufficient if it allege in the words of the statute that the letter in question was unlawfully detained, with intent to prevent its arrival. It need not aver that the letter was knowingly and wilfully detained.[33]

8. Taking or Opening Mail-Matter to Obstruct Correspondence of Another. In an indictment for opening a letter addressed to another person with intent to obstruct his correspondence, it is not necessary to lay any venue to the allegation of intent,[34] or to allege that the opening was unlawful,[35] or that the person to whom the letter was addressed was a real person,[36] if it be alleged that the letter was opened with intent to obstruct such person's correspondence, or to pry into his business or secrets.[37] An indictment for opening and reading or making public a letter addressed to another person must allege that it was a sealed letter,[38] or that it was published with knowledge that it had been opened and read without authority.[39]

9. Embezzlement or Theft of Mail — a. In General. Although under the statute relating to embezzlement and theft of the mail, "embezzling a letter" and "stealing its contents" are separate offenses, and may be charged as such,[40] the offenses are of the same grade and subject to the same penalty; and hence they may both be charged in a single count of the indictment, stating the whole transaction as a single offense, when both acts are committed by the same person at the same time, and constitute a single continuous act.[41] A count in such an indictment alleging that defendant did secrete and embezzle a certain letter is not defective for duplicity;[42] nor are averments that the letter was secreted,

The mere fact of the finding of two indictments charging more than three offenses within the same six months will not make both indictments void. In re Haynes, 30 Fed. 767.

Consolidation of indictments.— U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 1024 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 720] authorizes the consolidation of such indictments, notwithstanding the aggregate offenses are more in number than can be joined in one indictment under section 5480 (Booth v. U. S., 154 Fed. 836, 83 C. C. A. 552), and, this being so, it is immaterial that all the offenses charged may not have been committed within the same six months (Booth v. U. S., supra. Contra, Bass v. U. S., 20 App. Cas. (D. C.) 232).

embezzled, and destroyed, and that its contents were stolen, repugnant.[43] A fraudulent intent on the part of defendant need not be alleged. The offense is a mere misdemeanor and it is sufficient to set it forth in the language of the statute.[44] If the indictment is under section 5467,[45] it is sufficient to charge "that defendant was a person employed in one of the departments of the Post Office Establishment of the United States," [46] and the particular office held by the accused need not be stated.[47]

b. Description of Matter Stolen or Embezzled — (i) In General. An indictment charging the embezzlement of a letter and the stealing of its contents is good if it contains a substantial description of the subject-matter sufficient to inform the accused of what he is charged with taking, and to protect him from being again put in jeopardy for the same taking.[48]

(ii) Value of Property. In an indictment for stealing under sections 5467 and 5469,[49] if the thing within the statute be described, no value need be alleged.[50] Under the earlier statutes, providing a different punishment according as the letter embezzled did or did not contain articles of value, an indictment is sufficient without an averment that it contained no article of value, as it is an offense to steal a letter containing no such article;[51] but, if the letter contain an article of value, it must be so averred, to subject the defendant to the higher penalty.[52]

(iii) Ownership of Property. It has been broadly held that an indictment for embezzling a letter and stealing its contents need not charge the ownership of such property.[53] In a few cases, however, the following distinction is made: If the prosecution is for the embezzlement of a letter containing articles of value, an averment as to the ownership of such articles is not necessary;[54] but if the indictment is for larceny from a letter it is necessary to lay the property stolen on some other person than the prisoner.[55]

c. Mailing, Carriage, and Delivery — (i) Under Section 5467, Clause 1. An indictment under the first clause of section 5467[56] for embezzling a letter need not negative, in terms, that the letter had been delivered to the true owner. If it was fully delivered, so as to be beyond the purview of the postal laws before the acts charged against defendant were committed, this is matter of affirmative defense to be shown by him.[57] Neither need it be alleged that defendant obtained the letter by virtue of his employment. It is enough that, being an employee, he has obtained possession of the letter.[58] Nor is it necessary to aver that the letter embezzled was intended to be conveyed by post to any particular place, but only that it was intended to be conveyed by post.[59]

(ii) Under Section 5467, Clause 2. Under the second clause of section 5467[60] the indictment must show that the letter, the contents of which were stolen, was one which had come in some way or manner under the jurisdiction and into the possession of the post-office department.[61] It is not necessary to aver that the letter was intended to be conveyed by mail,[62] or delivered by a letter carrier, etc.[63]

d. Variance — (i) As to Description of Letters or Contents. While it is unnecessary to particularly describe a letter or the contents thereof alleged to have been embezzled,[64] if either be described, they must be proved as laid.[65]

Description as of time stolen.— If a check is correctly described as it was at the time it was stolen, subsequent indorsements or other alterations thereon will not make a variance. U. S. v. Jones, 31 Fed. 718.

Description of silver certificate.— An indictment for the statutory offense of embezzlement describing a silver certificate as being for one dollar, deposited "with the treasurer of the United States," is sufficient, although the words "deposited in the treasury" are used in the certificate. U. S. v. Eliason, 7 Mackey (D. C.) 104.

Name of drawer of draft.— Where an in-

The same rule applies to the description of the termini between which the letter was intended to be sent by post.[66]

(II) As to Ownership. Where an indictment for embezzling letters containing money charged that the letters in question came into defendant's possession as a railway postal clerk, to be delivered to the persons addressed, evidence that the letters were decoys and were to be intercepted before reaching the person to whom they were addressed does not constitute a variance.[67] So when the indictment alleges ownership in the person to whom a letter was directed and it appears in proof that it was in the custody of the post-office department for the benefit of the person to whom it was addressed, there is no variance.[68]

10. Robbery of Mail — a. In General. An indictment for advising, etc., a mail carrier to rob the mail should set forth that the carrier did in fact commit the offense — not necessarily, however, by a distinct, substantive averment of that fact.[69]

b. Issues, Proof, and Variance. In order to sustain an indictment for robbing "the mail" in the custody of a carrier, it is not necessary to prove a robbery of all the mail in the possession of the carrier.[70]

11. Breaking and Entering Post-Office. The acts and intent which constitute the crime of breaking and entering a post-office must be set forth with reasonable particularity of time, place, and circumstances.[71] An indictment for breaking and entering a building used in part as a post-office, "with intent to commit therein larceny," is sufficient without charging that the intent was to commit larceny in that part of the building used as a post-office, and that the breaking and entering was into that part.[72] Where, however, it charges the breaking into a building used in part as a post-office with intent to commit larceny "in said building," but fails to charge an intent to commit larceny in that part of the building used as a post-office, it is defective.[73] Breaking into a post-office building, with intent to commit larceny, and the actual stealing of stamps, constitute separate offenses, but, when both are parts of the same transaction, a single count stating these facts is not fatally bad.[74]

D. Evidence — 1. Presumptions. The rules governing presumptions in dictment charges defendant with stealing from the mail a certain letter containing a draft signed "Joseph Johnson, President," a draft signed "Jos. Johnson" is not admissible. U. S. v. Keen, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,510, 1 McLean 429.

Direction of letter.— Where an indictment charges that a letter alleged to be embezzled was directed to a certain person, and the proof shows that it was directed to another person, the variance is fatal. U. S. v. Denicke, 35 Fed. 407. But see U. S. v. Fuller, 4 N. M. 358, 20 Pac. 175, holding that in a prosecution for the embezzlement of a registered package where there is proof that such a package was actually put in the mail, and afterward taken by the accused, a variance as to the name of the sender, or of the person to whom the package was directed, is immaterial. A slight and unsubstantial variance between the indictment and the proof, in regard to the direction of a letter which is not produced, and which the witness states, after the lapse of two years, with doubt, will not exclude the evidence. U. S. v. Burroughs, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,695, 3 McLean 405. Where an indictment describes the letter embezzled as "a letter enclosed in an envelope, addressed and directed as follows, that is to say, to M. D., No. 122 W. 26 St.," it was held to be competent to give evidence relating to a letter contained in an envelope directed "M. D., No. 122 W. 26 Street," the word "to" and the abbreviation "St." not being on the envelope, the variances not being material. U. S. v. Jenther, 26 Fed. Cas. 15,476, 13 Blatchf. 335.

On an indictment in several counts, if the proof conforms to the averments in one of the counts, a motion to acquit on all the counts is properly overruled, although the proof varies from the allegations in the other counts as to those particulars. Walster v. U. S., 42 Fed. 891.

2. Burden of Proof. In prosecutions for offenses against the postal laws, as in other criminal cases, the burden of proof is on the prosecution from the beginning to the end of the trial, and applies to every element necessary to constitute the crime.[76]

3. Admissibility[77] — a. Embezzling Letters and Stealing Contents. In a prosecution against a postal clerk for embezzling a letter and stealing its contents, any evidence tending to show the intent of defendant is admissible.[78]

b. Mailing Obscene Matter. Under an indictment for depositing obscene matter in the mails, evidence tending to prove the identity of such matter is admissible.[79] Where the particular portions of the writing claimed to be obscene are marked, other portions thereof cannot be read in evidence;[80] nor can clauses of alleged similar character be read from other books by way of illustration.[81] Proof of the subsequent commission of another crime by the defendant is irrelevant and inadmissible.[82]

c. Mailing Matter Giving Information Concerning Obscene Pictures or Articles. In prosecutions for mailing letters giving information where obscene pictures can be obtained, where the letters complained of, to a casual reader, appear to be harmless, the government is entitled to allege and prove by extrinsic evidence that they in fact give information concerning obscene pictures or literature, and were so intended.[83]

d. Mailing Threatening or Abusive Matter. Extraneous evidence is not admissible to show that the language of a postal card, on its face threatening or abusive, was not so intended by the sender, or so understood by the sendee.[84]

e. Use of Mails to Defraud — (i) In General. Since, in a prosecution for use of the mails with intent to defraud, the gist of the offense is the fraudulent intent,[85] any competent evidence reflecting on such intent is admissible.[86] The Presumption that pistol loaded.— In a prosecution for robbery of the mail, which is made by statute a capital offense when the carrier's life is put in jeopardy by the use of a dangerous weapon, a pistol in the possession of the accused at the time of the alleged robbery need not be proved to have been loaded, the presumption being that it was. Presumption of intent not to deliver letter. — On the trial of an indictment for taking a letter from a post-office with intent to obstruct correspondence, if it appears that defendant took a letter out of the post-office addressed to another person, without the authority or direction of the person to whom it was addressed, with the declared purpose of delivering it, and that he did not deliver it the first opportunity he had, the law raises the presumption that when he got the letter he did not intend to deliver it. government may prove that fraudulent representations were made either by the oral statement of defendant, or by letters written by him, or by circulars, pamphlets, or publications sent by him through the mails.[87] Whether defendant did in fact defraud any one is immaterial.[88] Evidence tending to establish a different sort of fraud from that charged in the indictment is inadmissible,[89] but evidence of prior similar transactions is properly admitted as showing the nature of the scheme which defendant was engaged in executing when he mailed the letter to the person specified in the indictment.[90]

(II) Mailing Matter Concerning Lotteries. Where an indictment charges defendants with sending through the mails circulars concerning a lottery, the prosecution may show, by evidence outside the circulars, that the business advertised therein was in effect a lottery.[91] Circumstantial evidence is competent which tends to show that defendant had both motive and opportunity to mail the writing in violation of the statute.[92]

4. Weight and Sufficiency — a. Mailing Obscene Matter. To authorize a conviction under an indictment for sending obscene or indecent matter through the mails, it must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt that defendants or their agents deposited, or caused to be deposited, the paper containing the objectionable matter in the post-office for mailing;[93] that defendants knew that the paper contained the objectionable matter;[94] and that the publication was obscene, lewd, lascivious, or indecent.[95]

b. Use of Mails to Defraud — (I) In General. As the offense of using the mails to defraud consists in the concocting of a scheme or artifice to defraud individuals of their property and money, and in the employment of the post-office department in carrying into execution such scheme or artifice, to warrant a conviction the jury must be satisfied, beyond a reasonable doubt, of the intention of the accused to defraud;[96] and they must also be satisfied beyond a Letter written to defendant admissible.— A letter written to defendant before the close of the transactions charged in the indictment, although not answered by him, is admissible in evidence, where it is shown that it was part of a larger correspondence between the parties, and taken in connection with such correspondence and the other evidence, tended to show the representations charged in the indictment to have been made by defendant were false, and known by him to be so. reasonable doubt of the use by the person so accused of the post-office for that purpose.[97]

(II) Mailing Matter Concerning Lottery. On a prosecution for depositing in the mail a letter or circular concerning a lottery the jury must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the letter was mailed;[98] that it was concerning a lottery;[99] and that defendant deposited it, or caused it to be deposited.[1]

c. Larceny From the Mails. To justify a conviction for larceny from the mails the jury must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt not only that the mail had been violated,[2] but that the letter or package, with the stealing of which defendant is charged, had been in, and was taken from, the mail.[3] The most satisfactory evidence that it had been in the mail is that of the person who deposited it in the post-office, and, of its loss, that of the person to whom it was addressed, to the effect that it was never received by him.[4] If, however, such evidence is not forthcoming, a conviction may be had on circumstantial evidence.[5] Mere suspicion against defendant is overcome by the proof of his good character by reliable witnesses.[6]

E. Trial[7]— 1. Reception of Evidence. Where a postmaster is charged with stealing a letter from the mail, the other employees through whose hands the letter would pass should be examined,[8] especially if the accused proves an exemplary character.[9]

Evidence held sufficient to show mailing.— On a prosecution for using the mails to defraud, the fact that defendant wrote the letter in question is evidence from which, if unexplained, the jury may infer that he also mailed such letter. Evidence of the Louisiana statute of incorporation, and of the sale of the lottery tickets contained in the mailed envelope, are sufficient, in a prosecution for mailing a letter and circular concerning the Louisiana state lottery, to establish the existence of such lottery, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary. Evidence held sufficient to show mailing by defendant.— Where it was undisputed that defendant was engaged in the lottery business, evidence that defendant received an order for two lottery tickets such as were subsequently mailed with the letter; that the name used in the address of the letter was the same as that signed to the order; that the tickets bore his stamp; and that the letter inclosed his business card, would justify the conclusion that defendant deposited the letter in the post-office for mailing. 2. Questions For Jury. Ordinarily the question whether or not a particular publication is obscene, lewd, or lascivious is for the jury, under instructions from the court as to the meaning of the words.[10] But it is within the province of the court to construe the objectionable document so far as necessary to decide whether a verdict establishing its obscenity would be set aside as against evidence and reason.[11] The question of the intent with which letters are abstracted from the mail is for the jury.[12]

F. Sentence and Punishment. The punishment of offenders against the postal laws is a matter of statutory provision.[13]

IV. Civil Liability For Obstructing Mail.

A person receiving a letter addressed to another owes him the duty not to obstruct his mail, and a breach of this duty renders him liable for the damages proximately resulting therefrom.[14]

Mailing non-mailable matter.— Act Cong. Sept. 26, 1888, amending section 2 of the act of June 18, 1888 (25 U. S. St. at L. 187 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 2661]), relating to non-mailable matter, changes all former penalties provided for that offense; and as the law of Sept. 26, 1888, has no saving clause relating to offenses arising under the said second section, offenses committed prior to Sept. 26, 1888, cannot be punished under the present law. U. S. v. Barber, 37 Fed. 55.

Mailing letters concerning lotteries.— Although a fine is the only punishment prescribed by U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 3894 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 2659], which prohibits the carrying in the mail of letters or circulars concerning lotteries, and punishes as a crime the offense of knowingly depositing or sending anything to be conveyed by mail in violation of such section, a person who violates the statute may be arrested for trial, and imprisoned or bailed. In re Jackson, 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7,124, 14 Blatchf. 245.

Use of mails to defraud.— Where three indictments, each charging a single offense under the statute relating to the use of the mails to defraud, are consolidated as permitted by that statute, and defendant is convicted of the three offenses committed within the same six calendar months, the court is entitled to sentence defendant, in its discretion, to the full extent of the penalty provided for each offense. In re De Bara, 179 U. It is true that the word 'postponement' is usually preferred, when the purpose is to obtain a continuance to another day during the term at which the case is fixed, rather than to a future term; but the terms of the District Courts are now continuous, and, in this particular case, the postponement was asked until witnesses, not alleged to reside in the parish, or State, or elsewhere, and not alleged to be obtainable at any time, should be summoned, and their attendance obtained."

23. See Trenton Potteries Co. v. Oliphant, 56 N. J. Eq. 680, 709, 39 Atl. 923.

"Known as the Pottery building," a phrase in a fire policy, does not in itself, without further evidence, indicate an intention to include a building partly used as a pottery along with one adjoining and wholly so used. Forbes v. American Ins. Co., 164 Mass. 402, 405, 41 N. E. 656.

Pottery business see Trenton Potteries Co. v. Oliphant, 56 N. J. Eq. 680, 711, 39 Atl. 923.

24. Peterson v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 125 Iowa 562, 101 N. W. 289, 67 L. R. A. 631, where, however, the term was applied in the particular case by testifying physicians, to "the breaking of the fibula 1½ to 2 inches above the joint, and of what is known as the 'malleolus process.'"

25. See Com. v. Lewis, 25 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 432, 433, where it is said: "Although pigeons belong to the class of animals feræ naturæ, they are so nearly allied to the domestic birds as to be included under the subject 'poultry' in the Encyclopædia Britannica."

As domitæ naturæ see ANIMALS, 2 Cyc. 305 note 3.

26. See ANIMALS, 2 Cyc. 452.

27. Burrill L. Dict.

As inclosure see ANIMALS, 2 Cyc. 452–456.

Pound-covert—Pound-overt.—A pound (parcus, which signifies any inclosure) is either pound-overt, that is, open overhead; or pound-covert, that is, close. 3 Blackstone Comm. 13. And see Coke Litt. 47*b*.

28. Wooley v. Groton, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 305, 308.

Impounding of animals damage feasant see ANIMALS, 2 Cyc. 400–414.

29. See Borie v. Trott. 5 Phila. (Pa.) 366, 403, 404, where the above definition is quoted as that of Sir Robert Peel, and the following comment added: "Many pages have been written to controvert this definition and to prove that a pound is a mere abstraction — something like a mathematical point, without length, breadth or thickness. But common sense, I think, vindicates Sir Robert Peel. A standard measure must be some actual length or capacity — a standard weight some actual weight. How else can other weights and measures be compared with it? This is the object of a standard. So a standard of value must be some actual value."

The British sovereign, a coin representing a pound sterling, is equivalent to about four dollars and eighty-seven cents according to the standard fixed by 4 U. S. St. at L. 700. Schermerhorn v. Talman, 14 N. Y. 93, 135.

"A note payable in pounds sterling or British sovereigns is payable in 'money' just as much and as certainly as if it was payable in dollars. The case is different from a note made payable in 'currency,' which may be 'money' only conventionally, but not legally. But where a note is made payable in a particular denomination of foreign money, as pounds sterling, it is payable in money the same as if it was payable in a denomination of domestic money." King v. Hamilton, 12 Fed. 478, 479, 8 Sawy. 167.

30. Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in Bowe v. Campbell, 2 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 232, 234].

Sheriff's commissions as costs see COSTS, 11 Cyc. 103 text and notes 52–54, 131 text and note 33.

Not chargeable to attorney unless paid him by defendant see ATTORNEY AND CLIENT, 4 Cyc. 923 note 33.

31. As action may be joined with trespass

POUR AUTRE VIE or PUR AUTRE VIE. See ESTATES, 16 Cyc. 614.

POURPRESTURE or PURPRESTURE.[33] The wrongful inclosure of another's property, or the encroaching or taking to oneself that which ought to be in common.[34]

POURPRISE. A close or inclosure.[35] (See POURPRESTURE.)

POVERTY. The quality or state of being poor or indigent, want or scarcity of means or sustenance; indigence; need.[36] (Poverty: In General, see PAUPERS, 30 Cyc. 1058. As Affecting Competency to Serve in Fiduciary Capacity, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, 18 Cyc. 78–79 text and notes 35–37; 99 text and note 13; GUARDIAN AND WARD, 21 Cyc. 32 note 81; TRUSTS. As Element of Duress, see CONTRACTS, 9 Cyc. 461. As Ground For Security For Costs, see COSTS, 11 Cyc. 174.[37] As Object of Charitable Relief, see CHARITIES, 6 Cyc. 906–910.[38] Distinguished From Insolvency, see INSOLVENCY, 22 Cyc. 1257 note 4. Of Party to Divorce, see CONTINUANCES IN CIVIL CASES, 9 Cyc. 87 note 59; DIVORCE, 14 Cyc. 755.)

POWDER. A word applicable to a mass of fine particles of any substance whatever, but sufficient, in a proper context, to designate gunpowder.[39] (See, generally, EXPLOSIVES, 19 Cyc. 1.)

POWER. An ability to do;[40] the right, ability, or faculty of doing something;[41] the ability to act, regarded as latent or inherent; the faculty of doing or performing something; capacity for action or performance;[42] the capacity to be acted upon in some particular manner.[43] (Power: Applied Mechanically, see see JOINDER AND SPLITTING OF ACTIONS, 23 Cyc. 398.

32. Black L. Dict.

Appointment and nature of office see ANIMALS, 2 Cyc. 453–454.

As recipient of notice or certificate of impounding see ANIMALS, 2 Cyc. 405.

33. Derived from Pourprise, see Coke Litt. 277*b* [quoted in State v. Kean, 69 N. H. 122, 125, 45 Atl. 256, 48 L. R. A. 102].

34. 4 Blackstone Comm. 167 [cited in Burrill L. Dict.].

Example.— Where there is a house erected or an inclosure made upon any part of the king's demesnes or of a highway or common street or public water or such like public things it is properly called a purpresture. 4 Blackstone Comm. 467 [quoted in State v. Kean, 69 N. H. 122, 125, 45 Atl. 256, 48 L. R. A. 102].

Applied to rivers as state highways see Atty.-Gen. v. Eau Claire, 37 Wis. 400, 447 [quoted in In re Pierce, 44 Wis. 411, 434, where it is said: "An unauthorized encroachment upon any of them is a violation of the duty assumed by the state, in its aggregate and sovereign character, to keep them forever open. Every such encroachment is a pourpresture, which concerns the sovereign prerogative of the state, and the prerogative jurisdiction of this court"].

35. See Coke Litt. 277*b* [quoted in State v. Kean, 69 N. H. 122, 125, 45 Atl. 256, 48 L. R. A. 102].

36. Webster Int. Dict.

"Adjudication of poverty" see PAUPERS, 30 Cyc. 1131.

"Poverty-affidavit" is a term which has been applied to an affidavit made by way of excuse from giving security for costs. Cole v. Hoeburg, 36 Kan. 263, 264, 13 Pac. 275.

37. Suits in forma pauperis see COSTS, 11 Cyc. 200–204.

38. Degrees of poverty not to be considered in construing request for "poor" relation see McNeilledge v. Galbraith, 8 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 43, 45, 11 Am. Dec. 572.

39. See Blankenship v. Com., 66 S. W. 994, 995, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1995, where an allegation of shooting with "powder and leaden balls" was held sufficient for the purposes of indictment for murder committed by means of shooting without stating kind of weapon used.

40. Remington v. Peckham, 10 R. I. 550, 553.

41. Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in Bradley v. State, 111 Ga. 168, 36 S. E. 630, 78 Am. St. Rep. 157, 50 L. R. A. 691].

Sometimes used in the same sense as "right" see Rapalje & L. L. Dict. [quoted in Freligh v. Saugerties, 24 N. Y. Suppl. 182]; Matter of Lima, etc., R. Co., 68 Hun (N. Y.) 252, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 967.

42. Webster Dict. [quoted in Bradley v. State, 111 Ga. 168, 36 S. E. 630, 78 Am. St. Rep. 157, 50 L. R. A. 691].

"Authority" as applied to executive officers seems to be a convertible term with "power." Newburn v. Durham, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 655, 662, 32 S. W. 112.

The words "power" and "authority" sometimes construed "duty" and "obligation."— Baltimore v. Marriott, 9 Md. 160, 174, 66 Am. Dec. 326 [cited in Cochrane v. Frostburg, 81 Md. 54, 64, 31 Atl. 703, 48 Am. St. Rep. 479, 27 L. R. A. 728, and quoted in Anne Arundel County Com'rs. v. Duckett, 20 Md. 468, 477, 83 Am. I. Definition and General Nature.

A. Definition. A power is defined to be a liberty or authority reserved by, or limited to, a party to dispose of real or personal property for his own benefit, or for the benefit of others, and operating upon an estate or interest, vested either in himself or some other person; the liberty or authority, however, not being derived out of such estate or interest, but overreaching or superseding it, either wholly or partially.[1] A power does not imply ownership; it is not an estate or interest.[2]

Other definitions.— "An authority enabling one person to dispose of the interest which is vested in another." Goodhill v. Brigham, 1 B. & P. 192, 197, per Buller, J. [disapproved in 1 Sugden Powers 106].

"A power is a method of causing a use, with its accompanying estate, to spring up at the will of a given person. . . . It is an authority conferred upon one person to dispose of property vested in himself or in another person. It is a mode of disposing of property which operates under the statute of uses or wills, and it vests in the donee of the power a present indefeasible executory interest in such property." Bouton v. Doty, 69 Conn. 531, 542, 37 Atl. 1064.

A power of appointment is a mode which the owner of the estate reserves to himself, or gives to another, through the medium of the statute of uses, of raising and passing an estate. Maundrell v. Maundrell, 10 Ves. Jr. 247, 7 Rev. Rep. 393, 32 Eng. Reprint 839. Compare Freme v. Clement, 18 Ch. D. 499, 503, 504, 50 L. J. Ch. 801, 44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 399, 30 Wkly. Rep. 1 [approved in Heinemann v. De Wolf, 25 R. I. 243, 55 Atl. 707], where such a power was defined as "a power of disposition given to a person over property not his own by some one who directs the mode in which that power shall be exercised by a particular instrument." See also Heinemann v. De Wolf, 25 R. I. 243, 55 Atl. 707.

Under the New York statutes a power is defined to be "an authority to do an act in relation to real property, or to the creation or revocation of an estate therein, or a charge thereon, which the owner granting or reserving the power, might himself lawfully perform." N. Y. Laws (1896), c. 547, § 111. Prior to this act the definition was "an authority to do some act in relation to lands, or the creation of estates therein, or of charges thereon, which the owner granting or reserving such power, might himself lawfully perform." 1 N. Y. Rev. St. p. 732, § 74. See Murray v. Miller, 178 N. Y. 316, 323, 70 N. E. 870; Tilden v. Green, 130 N. Y. 29, 63, 28 N. E. 880, 27 Am. St. Rep. 487, 14 L. R. A. 33; Sweeney v. Warren, 127 N. The Minnesota statute defines a power as "an authority to do some act in relation to lands, or the creation of estates therein, or of charges thereon, which the owner granting or reserving such power might himself lawfully perform." Gen. St. (1878) c. 44, § 2; Rev. Laws (1905), § 3267. See Carson v. Cochran, 52 Minn. 67, 72, 53 N. W. 1130.

A power of sale is a trust. Coleman v. Cabaniss, 121 Ga. 281, 48 S. E. 927. See also Pollock v. Hooley, 67 Hun (N. Y.) 370, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 215, where it was held that a general power of sale conferred by will on named executors is a personal trust given them in a capacity distinctly different from their duty as executors. See, generally, Executors and Administrators, 18 Cyc. 1.

Power of sale conferred on executors a common-law authority see Rodgers v. Wallace, 50 N. C. 181. See, generally, Executors and Administrators, 18 Cyc. 1.

2. Burleigh v. Clough, 52 N. H. 267, 13 Am. Rep. 23; Eaton v. Straw, 18 N. H. 320.

Not an estate or interest in lands.— Eells v. Lynch, 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 465, 482 (where it is said: "A power is not an estate or interest in lands; unexercised, it is an encumbrance; and when exercised, the act performed by virtue of it is considered and construed as done by the donor of the power"); Root v. Stuyvesant, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 257, 283 (where it is said: "It is not an estate or interest in the land, but an authority to create an estate or interest. A power may be given to a person who has an estate in the land, or to a mere stranger. The name of the power is different in the two cases, but its nature is not changed. In either case it is the execution of the power, and not the power itself, which creates property"); Doe v. McEachern, 26 N. Brunsw. 391. "That a person having a power over property has not, in strictness, any interest in, or right or title to, the property to which the power relates, appears in early authorities; . . . though where the power is for his own benefit, he has the means of acquiring such interest, right or title; and in all cases, by the execution of the power, the possession, right, title or interest is altered or divested." Maryland Mut. Benev. Soc. v. Clendenen, 44

B. Property Subject to Powers. Personal property, as well as realty, may be the subject of a power;[3] and it has been held that the New York statute in relation to powers, although it in terms refers to real property only, is nevertheless also applicable to personal property.[4]

C. Purposes For Which a Power May Be Created. Subject to statutory restrictions, a power may be created to appoint property by will,[5] to convey, transfer, sell, exchange, or charge property,[6] or to do any other act which the donor of the power might himself lawfully perform.[7] The power may be given to one of several grantees in a deed to annul the use therein named and create others, and the other grantees take subject to the exercise of this power.[8] Under the New York statutes relating to trusts, which abolish all express trusts other than those enumerated, but declare that, if the trust authorizes the performance of any act lawful under a power, it shall be valid as a power in trust, the purposes for which a power may be created are not limited.[9]

D. Who May Create Powers. A power can only be created by a person competent to do the act which he attempts to authorize.[10]

E. To Whom Powers May Be Granted. Any person, although himself incapable of contracting or conveying, may, as a general rule, be the donee or grantee of a power and execute the same.[11] Thus a power may be granted to and executed by a feme covert,[12] or by an infant.[13] A power to convey land may be granted to and executed by a partnership[14] or corporation.[15] A power of sale

Not property.—"No two ideas can well be more distinct the one from the other than those of 'property' and 'power.' This is a 'power,' and nothing but a 'power.' A 'power' is an individual personal capacity of the donee of the power to do something. That it may result in property becoming vested in him is immaterial; the general nature of the power does not make it property. The power of a person to appoint an estate to himself is, in my judgment, no more his 'property' than the power to write a book or to sing a song. The exercise of any one of those three powers may result in property, but in no sense which the law recognizes are they 'property.' In one sense no doubt they may be called the 'property' of the person in whom they are vested, because every special capacity of a person may be said to be his property; but they are not 'property' within the meaning of that word as used in law." Ex p. Gilchrist, 17 Q. may be lawfully granted to one who has no legal or equitable interest in the property which is to be the subject of the sale;[16] but a use cannot be raised by a general power of appointment given to a stranger, unless the conveyance operates by transmutation of possession.[17] The owner of property may create a valid power in himself, as in the case where the creator of a trust reserves the power to sell and convey the land to others.[18]

F. Effect of Statutes. In most jurisdictions the creation, execution, and effect of powers are to some extent regulated by statute;[19] and in some jurisdictions a complete and exhaustive code has been enacted on the subject, abolishing powers as they existed at common law, and leaving the creation, construction, and execution of powers to be governed by the statute.[20] A statute in relation to powers does not apply to powers executed before it took effect.[21] It has been held that a statute authorizing in a particular case the surrender of a power of sale which is simply collateral,[22] or confirming such surrender when made, is constitutional and valid, since it diverts or takes away no vested or settled rights.[23]

II. CLASSIFICATION.

A. General and Special Powers. By a general power is understood a right to appoint to whomsoever the donee pleases. By a special or particular power is meant that the donee is restricted to objects or beneficiaries designated in the instrument creating the power.[24] Under some statutes the definitions are different.[25]

A general power is, in regard to the estates which may be created by the force of it, tantamount to a limitation in fee, not merely because it enables the donee to limit a fee but because it enables him to give the fee to whom he pleases. Therefore whatever estate may be created by a man seized in fee may equally be created under a general power of appointment. Thompson v. Garwood, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 287, 31 Am. Dec. 502 [citing 1 Sugden Powers 495].

A power general in terms will not be cut down to a particular power, unless there is an apparent intention. Thompson v. Garwood, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 287, 31 Am. Dec. 502 [citing Bristow v. Warde, 2 Ves. Jr. 336, 2 Rev. Rep. 235, 30 Eng. Reprint 660].

25. In New York, under the Revised Statutes, a power was declared to be general where it authorized the alienation in fee by means of a conveyance, will, or charge of the lands embraced in the power, to any alienee whatever; and it was declared to be special where (1) the persons or class of persons to whom the disposition of the lands under the power was to be made were designated, or (2) where the power authorized the alienation, by means of a conveyance, will or charge, of a particular estate or interest less than a fee. 1 Rev. St. p. 732, §§ 77, 78. These sections, however, have been repealed, and it is now declared that a power is general, "where it authorizes the transfer or encumbrance of a fee, by either a conveyance or a will of or a charge on the property embraced in the power, to any grantee whatever;" and a power is special where either: (1) "The persons or class of persons to whom the disposition of the property under the power is to be made are designated;" or (2) "the power authorizes the transfer or encumbrance, by a conveyance, will or charge, of any estate less than a fee." Laws (1896), c. 547, §§ 114, 115. See Dana v. Murray, 122 N. Y. 604, 26 N. E. 21; Delaney v. McCormack, 88 N. Y. 174; Cutting v. Cutting, 86 N. Y. 522; Jennings v. Conboy, 73 N. Y. 230; Leonard v. American Baptist Home Mission Soc., 35 Hun (N. Y.) 290; Fellows v. Heermans, 4 Lans. (N. Y.) 230, 255; Coster v. Lorillard, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 265, 324. A power is special where a class of persons to whom the disposition of lands under the power is to be made is designated contingently, upon the happening of a certain event, as well as if a class or person is designated absolutely. Wright v. Tallmadge, 15 N. Y. 307.

B. Beneficial Powers. Under the New York statute a general or special power is beneficial where no person other than the grantee has, by the terms of its creation, any interest in its execution; and a beneficial power, general or special, other than one of those specified and defined in the statute, is void.[26] There is a like statute in Minnesota.[27]

C. Powers in Trust. Under the New York statute a general power is in trust where any person or class of persons other than the grantee of the power is designated as entitled to the proceeds, or any portion of the proceeds, or other benefits to result from its execution; and a special power is in trust where either: (1) The disposition or charge which it authorizes is limited to be made to a person or class of persons other than the grantee of the power; or (2) where a person or class of persons other than the grantee is designated as entitled to any benefit from the disposition or charge authorized by the power.[28] There is a statute to the same effect in Minnesota.[29]

D. Powers Appendant or Appurtenant, in Gross, or Collateral — 1. Powers Appendant or Appurtenant. Powers appendant or appurtenant are so called because they strictly depend upon the estate limited to the person to whom they are given.[30] Illustrations of such a power are where an estate for life is

In Minnesota a power is general "when it authorizes the alienation in fee, by means of a conveyance, will, or charge, of the lands embraced in the power, to any alienee whatever;" and a power is special (1) "when the person or class of persons to whom the disposition of the lands under the power is to be made is designated," or (2) "when the power authorizes the alienation, by means of a conveyance, will, or charge, of a particular estate or interest, less than a fee." In order to create a valid power, either beneficial or in trust, it is indispensable that the object or objects to be accomplished by its execution shall be specified in or clearly ascertainable from the instrument by which the power is attempted to be created. When a power is conferred upon executors by virtue of the office, and not upon them as individuals, in the absence of evidence that it was intended to be beneficial to them, the presumption is that it was given for the purpose of being executed in the interest of the estate and not for their own benefit. 2. Powers Collateral or in Gross. Powers collateral or in gross are powers given to a person who had an interest in the estate at the execution of the deed creating the power, or to whom an estate is given by the deed, but which enable him to create such estates only as will not attach on the interest limited to him.[35] Illustrations of such a power are where a man seized in fee settles his estate on others, reserving to himself only a particular power;[36] and where land is granted or devised to a person for life with power to appoint the estate after his death among his children or to others,[37] or to sell and convey the fee.[38]

3. Powers Both Appendant and in Gross. A power may with reference to the different estates in the land over which it rides have different aspects; it may, in regard to one, be a power appendant; in respect to the other, a power in gross.[39]

4. Powers Simply Collateral. A power simply collateral, sometimes also called a "naked" power, is a power given to a person not having any interest in the land, and to whom no estate is given, to dispose of or charge the estate in favor of some other person.[40]

"'Power coupled with an interest' is a power which accompanies, or is connected with, an interest. The power and the interest are united in the same person. But if we are to understand by the word 'interest' an interest in that which is to be produced by the exercise of the power, then they are never united. The power, to produce the interest, must be exercised, and by its exercise, is extinguished. any part of the instrument, whether before or after conveyance of the estate.[52]

2. Effect of Failure to Designate Person to Execute. A clause in a will providing that the real estate may be sold, if advisable, is ineffective where no one is directed or empowered to convey the title.[53] As we shall see, however, when a power is given in a will to sell property without expressly naming a donee of the power, and the proceeds are to go to pay debts or legacies, or for distribution, the power vests in the executors by implication.[54]

3. Effect of Other Dispositions or Provisions Inconsistent With Power. The mere fact that the donor of a power makes other disposition of, or provisions as to, the subject-matter does not necessarily affect the power; but the instrument will be so construed, if possible, as to reconcile the inconsistency and give effect to all of its provisions.[55] Power given by will to an executor to sell all or any portion of the residuary real estate is not affected by the devise of such residuary share, for the devise is to be construed as subject to the power of sale.[56] Nor is a power of sale in executors necessarily inconsistent with a specific devise in fee.[57]

C. Validity — 1. In General. To be valid, a power must be definite and certain as to its objects,[58] and must be created for a lawful purpose.[59] Where the same person is made the devisee of the fee in lands and the donee of a power of sale thereof, the power is merged in the fee, and becomes inoperative.[60]

2. Effect of Invalidity or Failure of Other Dispositions or Provisions. Where a power is inseparably connected with other dispositions of, or provisions as to, the subject-matter, which are invalid or impossible of accomplishment, the power itself fails;[61] but it is otherwise where the power is not so connected with the invalid or impossible provisions, and is otherwise valid.[62]

3. Partial Invalidity. A power for several purposes does not fail because among them is one which is void or has lapsed.[63]

4. Relief Against Invalidity. Equity will not interfere in favor of the grantee of a power or of a purchaser under him to supply a defect in the creation of the power.[64]

Brown v. Kelsey, 2 Cush. IV. Modification or Revocation, Duration, and Termination.

A. Revocability. A mere naked power is revocable at the will of the donor or grantor;[65] but where a power is coupled with an interest,[66] or is given for a valuable consideration,[67] it is irrevocable.

B. Manner of Revocation or Modification. A duly created power cannot be revoked or modified except in express terms or by necessary implication.[68] Where a general power of appointment by deed or will has been exercised by an appointment by deed reserving a power of revocation and appointment to new uses to be exercised by deed only, the creation of this last power to appoint by deed only cannot, without clear evidence of intention, be taken as operating to destroy the original power to appoint by deed or will.[69]

C. Duration and Termination — 1. In General. The duration of a power is dependent upon the intention of the grantor or donor, as shown by the terms of the instrument creating it, the purposes had in view, and the circumstances surrounding the transaction.[70] The general rule is that powers cannot continue

3. Death of Beneficiary. Whether or not the death of a beneficiary under a power determines the power depends upon whether the object had in view in the creation of the power is frustrated thereby. b. Reservation of Power of Revocation. A general power of appointment over the fee will not be exhausted by an appointment to uses exhausting the fee, but reserving a power of revocation.[84]

6. Suspension. Where the exercise of a power is made dependent upon the happening of a future event, the power is suspended until that event happens;[85] and where a power is given by will to sell estates, which are the subject of a settlement which also contains a power of sale, the power is in abeyance so long as the trusts of that settlement remain unperformed.[86] So too a general power of appointment in a feme sole will be suspended upon her marriage, where there is a trust declared in that event which is inconsistent with the continuance of the general power;[87] and it has been said that where a power is given to a woman to dispose of an estate by will, and she marries, it is a suspension of the power where she is not enabled by statute to make a will.[88]

7. Merger. A general power of appointment does not prevent the fee from vesting, subject to be divested by the execution of the power;[89] and where one who is given power to charge an estate becomes entitled to the reversion in fee, the power does not merge, unless an intention to such effect appears.[90] executed by the trustee for the purposes of distribution becomes extinguished upon the reconversion of the property into realty by the election of the persons beneficially interested therein to take it as realty,[98] and where the whole beneficial interest is acquired by one of the beneficiaries, the exercise of such power becomes unnecessary.[99] On the other hand, a sale of land under the directions of a will passes a good title, although the persons entitled to the proceeds of the sale have previously conveyed their interests in the land, as such interests are personal and have no connection with the title.[1] If a power is extinguished by a conveyance of the estate to which it is appendant, it may be revived by a reconveyance for the same uses and purposes as under the original conveyance to the trustees.[2]

9. Bankruptcy of Donee. A mere power unexecuted in a tenant for life who becomes bankrupt does not vest in his assignees,[3] and a power given by will to a bankrupt to appoint among his children may be exercised after the bankruptcy.[4] But where a life-tenant with a general power of appointment, with remainder, in default of appointment, to himself in fee executed the power after his bankruptcy in favor of an appointee, the appointment was held void.[5]

V. Construction.

A. General Rules — 1. What Law Governs. In construing instruments creating powers the law of the grantor's or donor's domicile governs, and not the law of the situs of the property.[6]

2. Intention of Donor. Powers are to be construed in accordance with the intention of the donor or grantor; and in general that intention is to be gathered from the instrument itself, although a reference may sometimes be had to the circumstances under which it was given.[7] A power general in terms will not be cut property to her husband for life, with remainder to their children, giving her husband discretionary power to sell and reinvest, and the husband conveyed his life-estate in the property to the remainder-men, expressly reserving to himself the right to sell and reinvest as authorized by the will, the power of sale was unaffected by the conveyance.

down to a particular power, unless an intent to do so is apparent from the instrument conferring the power.[8] A particular intent will be made to yield to the general intent, where they are inconsistent with each other.[9]

3. Liberal or Strict Construction. While it has been held that mere naked powers are to be construed strictly, and powers coupled with an interest liberally,[10] the better view seems to be that all powers are to be construed liberally in equity, in furtherance of the purpose for which they were created.[11] A distinction is drawn, however, between conveyances wherein it is the object of the grantor to convey his property and to retain a future power in himself of disposing of it, but to restrict himself in the exercise of that power to a particular mode, and conveyances wherein it is his object to place the property entirely beyond his own control, but to confer on a third person the power of changing the disposition of it, it being held that in the former case the restraining words or phases ought to receive such a construction as is most favorable to the owner; but in the latter case they should be taken in their most efficacious sense so as to operate in favor of the donee.[12]

a power, one need not be sought out,[14] and where property is left by will with full power of disposal, no verbal statements or requests by the testator will in any manner control its disposition.[15] So too if an inconsistency exists in an instrument creating a power between the terms of an instrument to be executed under it and the consideration which it recites as moving to the grantor of the power, the recital will not operate as a limitation upon the power.[16] A general power may, however, be restrained and qualified by a particular proviso.[17]

B. Nature and Extent of Power Granted — 1. Powers of Appointment or Revocation — a. In General. The language of the donor's grant is to be looked to for the extent of the power conferred, and the limitations, if any, which are imposed on its exercise.[18] But where an absolute power to dispose of property is conferred, it embraces all powers necessary to effect the disposition.[19]

b. Discretion of Donee. Where, by the terms of the instrument creating a power of appointment or revocation, its exercise is left to the discretion of the donee, the exercise of such discretion will not be interfered with, in the absence of bad faith.[20]

c. To Whom Appointment May Be Made — (I) Under General Powers. Where a power of appointment is general, that is, wholly unlimited as to the beneficiaries,[21] the donee of such general power of appointment may exercise the same by appointing to or for the benefit of any one whom he may choose to appoint,[22]

Construction of statute.— This rule has in some jurisdictions been changed by statute; but a statute providing that "when a disposition under an appointment or power is directed to be made to the children of any person, without restricting it to any particular children, it may be exercised in favor of the grandchildren or other descendants of such person" (Ala. Code, § 1862), does not authorize one, given a power of appointment to three named children of the testator, to make an appointment to two of them and the children of the third, who is deceased, at least where it does not appear that testator had no children other than those named. Illegitimate children cannot take under a power of appointment limited to children,[39] and even where natural children are named as the beneficiaries, such as are born after the creation of the power cannot take, although en ventre sa mere at that time.[40] Power to appoint to children does not include a son-in-law;[41] and under a power of appointment to the children of a person living at the death of such person appointment to a child dying in his lifetime is void.[42]

(c) Issue. The word "issue" in a will or other instrument creating a power of appointment means all descendants, to any remote degree,[43] unless the context or other provisions of the instrument in which it is used, and such circumstances as may legitimately bear in that direction, show it to have been used in the more restricted sense of "children."[44] Where a power of appointment is created in favor of a particular person "or" his issue, it has been held that the word "or" is to be taken in a discretionary, rather than a substitutional, sense, and that the power may be exercised in favor of the issue to the exclusion of such person.[45] A power of appointment between children of a donee and the issue of such children as may die before the donee is improperly exercised by an appointment to the issue of living children.[46]

or "next of kin" of the donee or other person will receive a liberal construction. Thus it has been held that an illegitimate child [47] or grandchild [48] is a proper object of a power of appointment to or among one's "family"; and where a power is given a person to appoint a fund among his own family or next of kin, he is not confined to his statutory next of kin, but may appoint to any relative.[49] On the other hand a power to appoint for the benefit of a married woman and her family will not as a rule include the husband; [50] and it has been held that a testamentary gift by a man to his "family" should be read as a gift to his "children" to the exclusion of his wife.[51] In construing the word "family" a distinction has been made between powers of selection and powers of distribution, and it is held that a less restricted construction will be applied in the former than in the latter case.[52]

(E) Husband and Wife. Where a power of appointment is exercisable in favor of the wife of a person, the question as to what wife is meant, whether of a first or subsequent marriage, is wholly dependent upon the intention of the donor as shown by the instrument creating the power.[53] Where a wife had power to appoint the income to her husband as long as he should continue a widower, to apply it to the maintenance of her children, it was held that the husband was entitled to the income until he should marry again, although there were no children.[54]

(F) Nephews and Nieces. A power to appoint among nephews and nieces does not extend to great-nephews and great-nieces; [55] nor does a power to appoint to great-nephews and nieces extend to their children.[56]

(G) Relations. Where the donee has a power of selecting among relations, the power extends to relations at large, and is not confined to the next of kin.[57]

But where the donee has merely a power to appoint among relatives, and not among such of them as he thinks proper, he is confined in his appointment to the next of kin within the statute;[58] and the next of kin are such as are living at the time of the execution of the power, and not such as were living at the time of its creation.[59] In default of appointment, the fund will, without reference to whether the power was exclusive or merely distributive, be divided amongst the statutory next of kin, unless a contrary intent appear in the instrument.[60]

(H) Death of Objects. The exercise of a power of appointment in favor of a deceased person or his personal representative is void.[61] Where there is a power to divide a fund amongst the members of a particular class, the death of some of the members of that class before the exercise of the power will not prevent its exercise in favor of the survivors.[62]

d. Property, Estates, or Interests Included. What property, estates, or interests are included in a power of appointment is a matter of construction, and necessarily depends upon the terms of the instrument creating the power.[63]

an intention is shown in the instrument creating a non-exclusive power of appointment that the appointees shall take equally,[69] the donee may appoint such shares as he thinks fit,[70] provided, in some jurisdictions, none of them are illusory.[71]

f. Estates or Interests to Be Appointed — (i) In General. The donee of a power of appointment can appoint such an estate or interest only as is authorized by the instrument creating the power; he cannot appoint a greater or a less estate or interest.[72] On the other hand, if there is no restriction as to the estate or interest to be raised by the execution of the power, or if this is expressly left to the discretion of the donee, he may appoint any estate or interest he may see fit.[73]

See 40 Cent. Dig. tit. "Powers," § 42.

A general power to appoint a fund among children in such proportions as shall be thought fit authorizes the gift of particular interests and the apportionment of such in-but if the power expressly or by clear implication requires that an estate in fee, and no other, shall be appointed, a less estate than a fee cannot be limited.[78] Where a mere power of distribution or appointment is conferred, the donee cannot limit the estate of the appointees;[79] and where there is but one of a class to which the estate is limited in default of appointment, the donee cannot appoint a limited estate to that one, even though the instrument creating the power authorizes him to direct in what shares and proportions, and for what estates, the objects shall take.[80]

(iv) APPOINTMENTS IN TRUST.[81] Under a power of appointment, either general or special, without restriction as to the nature of the estate to be raised, the donee is not limited to an appointment of the legal estate, but may execute the power by an appointment in trust for the objects of the power.[82] It is other-terests at discretion. For instance, an interest for life may be given to one child in a particular share, and the capital of the same share to another child, or a share may even be limited to a child upon a contingency. Beardsley v. Hotchkiss, 96 N. Y. 201 [affirming on this point 30 Hun 605].

Myers v. Safe-Deposit, etc., Co., 73 Md. 413, 21 Atl. 58 [distinguishing Torrance v. Torrance, 4 Md. 11] (holding that a devise of an estate to testator's widow for life, with remainder to such of his children and grandchildren as she should by will appoint, and, in default of such appointment, the estate to pass as if testator had died intestate, created only a special power in the widow to apportion an absolute estate in the remainder among such of testator's children and grandchildren as she should see fit; and that her execution of the power by creating trusts for life, as to over half of the estate, in some of testator's children and grandchildren, with limitations over, was void); Stewart v. Keating, 15 Misc. 84. Morriss v. Morriss, 33 Gratt. (Va.) 51, where a testator by his will gave his wife a life-interest in lands, with power of appointment among his descendants, and by a codicil qualified the power by providing that "whatever she shall, by will, deed or otherwise, give beneficially to any of my deseendants, the same shall not be given absolutely to such descendant or descendants, so as to be under his or her control, but given in trust for him or her, and in case of a female to her sole and separate use"; and it was held that the will and codicil required that any provision made by the wife under the power for the grandchildren should be in trust for them, and for the separate use of females, and that she could not give them an absolute estate; and therefore, where by her will she gave the property to certain of their descendants, directing that it should not be sold for six years, her executor to hold it in the meantime, and that, when sold, the proceeds should be divided, and each one's portion invested, and paid over at the age of twenty-one years, this was not a valid execution of the power.

(vi) Charging Land Under Power to Appoint. A power to appoint land authorizes, in equity, a charge thereon for the benefit of an object of the power.[87] A power given by will to divide or appoint the estate to or among the testator's children as the donee may see proper, etc., is properly executed by devising land in fee to one or more of the children and charging it with pecuniary legacies in favor of the others.[88]

(vii) Sale Under Power to Appoint. In England it is a well-settled doctrine that a power to appoint an estate authorizes an appointment to trustees to sell and divide the proceeds among the objects of the power,[89] unless it appears from the instrument creating the power to appoint the estate that it was intended that the objects of the power should take the real estate and not the proceeds thereof.[90]

the estate was limited to the father for life, remainder to the wife and issue in strict settlement; and power was given to the father, in case there were any younger children, to charge the estate with the payment "of such sum or sums of money," for the benefit of the children, as he should think fit. By his will he directed the estate to be sold, and gave the money amongst his children, giving the eldest son a very small portion. This appointment was held to be, in substance, exactly what he had a right to do. See also Baily v. Lloyd, 7 L. J. Ch. O. S. 98, 5 Russ. 330, 29 Rev. Rep. 30, 5 Eng. Ch. 330, 38 Eng. of a fund, at least unless the period within which the income is to be appointed is limited.[92]

(IX) ADVANCEMENTS. A power of appointment may include a power to make advancements to or among children;[93] but a will devising property to testator's wife for life and directing that at her death it shall be equally divided between his children, and also authorizing her to divide the same or any portion thereof among said children during her life, does not authorize her to advance a sum to one of the children without any division among the others.[94]

g. Authority, Under Power of Appointment, to Convey or Mortgage — (I) TO CONVEY. Where the intention of the donor, as shown by the instrument creating a power of appointment, can be as effectually carried out by a conveyance as by an appointment, a conveyance by the donee is a valid execution of the power;[95] but a power of disposition by will cannot be executed by a conveyance of the estate by deed;[96] and where a testator devised his estate to his wife for life, and directed that immediately after her death it should be sold and the proceeds divided as his wife should direct in her will, and the wife made a will devising such real estate, it was held that it was not a valid execution of the power, since the power gave her no authority to dispose of the land itself, but only to direct what disposition should be made of the proceeds of the sale thereof.[97]

(II) TO MORTGAGE. Where there is a general power of appointment, the donor may validly exercise it by mortgage;[98] and where such a mortgage provides that, in case of a sale thereunder, any overplus remaining after paying the debt secured thereby shall be paid to the mortgagor, his heirs, representatives, or assigns, or otherwise disposes of the surplus or equity of redemption, it is a total appointment under the power.[99] But a power of appointment by will given to a grantee the income or fruit of a fund is, in my opinion, equivalent to a power over the tree which produces the fruit."

h. Purposes of Appointment. A power of appointment cannot be validly exercised otherwise than for the purposes intended by the grantor, as shown by the instrument creating the power.[3]

(II) Consent, Request, or Approval of Third Person. Thus where the consent, request, or approval of a third person is required to the execution of a power of appointment, it constitutes a limitation on the power, which, like every other condition, must be strictly complied with.[5]

Rhode Island.— Derby v. Derby, 4 R. I. 414, holding that a cemetery lot is not embraced in a power of sale to an executor, in which the property to be sold is described in general terms.

(II) After-Acquired Property or Interests.[8] A power of sale does not extend to after-acquired property or interests,[9] unless there is a statute to such effect,[10] or unless a manifest intent is apparent on the face of the instrument creating the power that such property or interests shall be included;[11] and the same is true where land is sold under a power and the proceeds reinvested in land.[12]

c. Estates or Interests to Be Conveyed. Whether the fee or a lesser estate or interest may be conveyed under a power of sale is dependent upon the terms of the instrument creating the power.[13] It appears, however, to be well settled that where a power of disposal accompanies a bequest or devise of an estate for life or during widowhood or for a term of years, the power of disposal is only coextensive with the estate which the devisee takes under the will, and means such disposal as a tenant for life or widowhood or for a term of years could make, unless there are other words clearly indicating that a larger power was intended.[14] If such inten-

Where the terms of a power are clear, the safest course is to abide by the words, unless upon the whole will there is something amounting almost to demonstration that the plain meaning of the words is not the meaning of the testator. Bacot v. Wetmore, 17 N. J. Eq. 250.

The granting clause prevails over any part of the deed conflicting therewith; and hence the trustee in a deed of an undivided two-thirds interest, containing a clause assuming to empower him, on condition broken, to sell the whole of the property, can make a valid conveyance of only the undivided two-thirds. Cas. 384.

North Carolina.— Jones v. Loftin, 38 N. C. 136, holding that where a will authorized the executor to sell a chattel purchased by the testator, the price of which remained unpaid, the rescission of the purchase was a due execution of the power.

where the instrument requires a sale and can only be executed, according to the intent, by a sale.[24] A life-tenant or executor having power to sell cannot convey as a gift or otherwise without consideration, and such a conveyance is void.[25] A life-tenant of real or personal property having the power to sell the same and to receive the proceeds and appropriate them to his own use may convey the property in payment of a debt.[26]

(III) To Exchange. A power given by will to sell does not include the power to exchange.[27] But where a power to sell land and invest the proceeds in other land is conferred, a direct exchange is a valid execution of the power.[28]

(IV) To Make Partition.[29] A power to "sell and exchange" includes a power to make partition.[30] Some of the cases hold that a power to sell, and nothing more, will authorize a partition.[31] Other cases, however, are to the contrary.[32]

Ohio.— Stableton v. Ellison, 21 Ohio St. 527, holding that where testator at his death held the legal title to land, the equitable estate of which belonged to another, and his will gave his widow power to dispose of all his property as she might deem best, she had the power to convey the legal title to the person having the equity.

Wisconsin.— Sydnor v. Palmer, 29 Wis. 226, holding that an executor who is required by the will to retain land for the benefit of infant devisees, or to sell it for their benefit when its use becomes unprofitable, may convey it directly to them.

See 40 Cent. Dig. tit. "Powers," § 56.

conditional sale — as something within the power.[34] And where an absolute and unrestricted power to sell for the benefit and in the discretion of the donee of the power is conferred such power has been held to include a power to mortgage.[35]

(VI) To Pledge or Hypothecate. While it has been directly held that a power to a trustee to sell securities includes a power to make a conditional sale of them by hypothecation,[36] it would seem that whether or not a power to pledge or hypothecate is included in a power to sell must depend upon the construction of the instrument creating the power.[37]

(VII) To Lease. A power to sell does not as a rule authorize a lease;[38] but circumstances may justify a departure from the words of the power.[39]

e. Purpose of Sale. It is well settled that a power of sale can only be exercised for the purpose or purposes pointed out in the instrument of creation,[40] in determining which the intent of the donor, as shown by the terms of the instrument, governs.[41] Where the power of sale is unrestricted, or is given for any purpose

3. Mortgage, Lease, Management, Improvement, or Investment — a. Mortgage — (i) In General. Whether or not a power to mortgage is conferred and, if so, the scope and extent of the power, are questions which wholly depend upon the construction of the instrument under which the power is claimed.[49] A mortgage given for an unauthorized purpose is void.[50] A power to trustees to sell, and, if unable to sell to advantage, to mortgage to pay borrowed money, or to keep in repair, gives no power to pay mortgage debts contracted by the testator.[51] But a power to encumber by mortgage has been held to include power to extend an outstanding mortgage on the property,[52] and to authorize renewals.[53]

(ii) Dependent on Condition or Contingency. As in the case of a power of appointment [54] or sale,[55] contingencies or conditions upon which a power to mortgage is made dependent must happen or be fulfilled.[56]

the intention of the parties.[58] Unless conferred expressly,[59] or by necessary implication, the owner of a life or other limited estate has no power to grant leases binding upon the remainder-man or reversioner; [60] nor does a power to lease include a power to sell.[61]

(II) What Property May Be Leased. The determination of what may be demised under a power to lease depends upon the construction of the instrument creating the power.[62]

"An opinion has, however, prevailed that a power of leasing is to receive a more strict construction than any other power (see Fitz. 219; 3 Vin. Abr. 431), and that equity cannot relieve against a defect in the execution of it; but we have already seen that this relief is administered in proper cases (2 Sugd. Powers 131), and the books abound with authorities in favour of the liberal construction of this power. Lord Mansfield, whose authority is generally quoted in favour of the rigid construction (1 Burr. 121), seems merely to have meant that the power must not be abused (Dougl. 573; 1 Blackst. 449). Lord Chancellor Cowper thought the power was to be taken strictly (see 3 Cha. Rep. 73); but Lord Chief Justice Holt, in the same case, was of a contrary opinion (3 Cha. Rep. 69, 70): and that was the opinion of Bridgman, C. J. (Bridg. by Ban. 90, 91). Lord Kenyon has decided that the intention of the parties must govern in the construction of this power (3 Term Rep. 675), and Lord Redesdale has shown, upon very solid grounds, that the power must receive as liberal an interpretation as a power of jointuring or any other power (1 Sch. & Lef. 61)." 2 Sugden Powers 306.

Lands "usually so leased."— In a lease, under a power of demising for lives, or for years determinable on lives, any part of the lands "usually so leased," the joining of lands in the same lease which were usually let separately is not at variance with the power, for the words "usually so leased" apply to the duration of the lease. And it is said, that if land has been let by contract from year to year, for three years, it is not within the power, for it is but one lease (2 Ro. Abr. 262, pl. 14; contra, pl. 2, Ja. B.)" 2 Sugden Powers 317.

(v) Terms and Conditions. The terms, covenants, and conditions of a lease under a power of leasing are to be determined by the terms of the instrument by which the power is created, and unauthorized terms, covenants, or conditions cannot be supported.[68] A court of equity will not, against the remainder-man or reversioner, reform a lease executed under a power, where it contains covenants not warranted.[69]

c. Management and Control, Improvement, and Investment. Where an estate is left by will to the management and control of the executor, or of a testamentary trustee, the extent of his powers is necessarily dependent upon the terms of the will or testamentary instrument and the object had in view by the testator;[70] and the same is true where power is conferred to make improvements,[71] or to invest and reinvest.[72]

4. Charging and Jointure. As in the case of other powers, the scope and extent of a power to charge is dependent upon the intention of the donor, as shown by the will or other instrument creating the power.[73] A power to charge includes power to sell,[74] and a power to charge lands with a sum of money imports interest thereof also.[75] Under a trust of a term to raise portions out of the rents and profits, it was held that by virtue of the word "profits" the trustees might sell or mortgage.[76]

2. Under Power of Appointment or Disposition — a. In General. A general power of appointment or disposition, existing as a mere technical power, does not imply ownership, but excludes the idea of any absolute fee simple in the person possessing such power.[82] But where there is a gift to a person indefinitely, with a superadded power of disposal, the donee takes an absolute estate.[83]

b. Limited Estate With Power Superadded. It is very generally held that, where a life or other limited estate is granted and there follows an additional power of disposal or appointment to the tenant for life, they will not have the effect of conferring an additional right of property upon the tenant by being construed to enlarge to a fee or absolute estate the estate which had been previously expressly where no life-estate is expressly given, but the power of disposition is limited to particular objects,[85] or where there are limitations over in default of execution.[86] This rule is not, however, absolute, and where the fee is clearly intended to pass, the donee will not be restricted to a life-estate.[87]

3. Under Power of Sale — a. In General. A naked power of sale vests no interest in the subject-matter in the donee.[88] But where the instrument creating the power manifests an intention that the donee shall have all the beneficial interests in the property, it vests the title in him.[89]

b. Under Power of Sale in Executors. Whether an executor takes an interest in lands intrusted to him under a will to sell, or is clothed merely with a power of disposition, was early held to depend upon the terms of the devise. A devise to the executor to sell passes the title to him;[90] but a direction or devise that executors shall sell the land, or that lands shall be sold by the executors, gives them no estate therein, but a mere naked power, and the land vests in the devisees, or, if the will makes no other disposition thereof, it descends to the heirs, subject to the execution of the power;[91] and the same is true of a devise of land to be sold by exec-estate in the executor is necessary to the due execution of the trust imposed upon him..[96]

5. Effect of Existence of Power on Other Rights and Interests in Property. Other rights and interests in the subject-matter of a power are unaffected by its mere existence, although liable to destruction or divestment upon its execution.[97] But where a testator directs his executor to sell land, and devises whatever remains after payment of debts and certain legacies to a person named, the latter acquires no seizin in the land, and only takes such part of the proceeds of the sale as may remain after the payment of the debts and legacies.[98] A conveyance upon the trust that the grantor shall have the use of the property during his life, with a qualified power of appointment in him, and that at his death it shall be conveyed to his heirs, gives the grantor's children an equitable interest during his lifetime, and that interest is assignable by the children during the lifetime of their father, subject, however, to be defeated by their father exercising the power of appointment reserved to him in the deed.[99]

6. Rights and Remedies of Creditors of Donee — a. Upon Non-Execution of General Power of Appointment. Upon the non-execution of a general power of appointment by the donee, equity will not subject the subject-matter of the power as assets for the benefit of the creditors of the donee, as against the donor or persons to whom it is limited in default of appointment;[1] and in this respect it seems that a defective execution in favor of a volunteer is to be regarded as in effect non-execution.[2] This rule, however, is in some jurisdictions changed by statute. Thus in several states there are statutes providing, in substance, that when an absolute power of disposition, not accompanied by any trust, is given to the owner of a particular estate for life or years, such estate is changed into a fee absolute, as to the rights of creditors and purchasers, but subject to any future estates limited thereon, in case the power shall not be executed, or the lands sold for the satisfaction of debts, during the continuance of such particular estate.[3] So it is provided that where the grantor in any conveyance reserves to himself, for his own benefit, an absolute power of revocation, such grantor must be taken as the absolute owner of the estate conveyed, as to the rights of creditors and purchasers.[4]

b. Upon Execution of General Power. Where a donee has a general power of appointment, either by deed or will, and exercises it in favor of a volunteer,[5] equity will, in exclusion of the appointee, seize upon the subject-matter as assets for the payment of the debts of the donee.[6] This rule is declared or recognized by statute in some states.[7] The rule does not apply where the power is limited and not general.[8]

7. Assignment of Power. Where a power is given by words that clearly indicate that the donor places special confidence in the donee, so that the element of personal choice is found, it must be exercised by the person thus selected, and ordinarily is not transmissible or assignable.[9]

terms of the instrument are inconsistent with the exercise of the power during coverture, it cannot then be exercised;[30] and where a power is restricted to first coverture, it cannot be exercised during widowhood, or second coverture.[31] In the absence of restrictions the rule is otherwise.[32] A power to appoint by will may be executed by a married woman, although she cannot make a will.[33]

that where no executor is named in the will, the administrator with the will annexed cannot execute the power,[36] while others hold that he may;[37] and where a will authorizes a sale by any person legally qualified to administer the estate, it has been held that an administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo may sell without a license from the court of probate.[38]

4. Personal, Official, or Fiduciary Character of Donee. To constitute a power created by will a personal one, the persons on whom it is conferred must be specially named, and not merely referred to as a class, or virtute officii, as "my executors";[39] in such a case the power is never personal, and may be exercised by any person holding the office.[40] Where a power to sell lands is given to executors ratione officii, and only by their official name, it has been doubted whether its exercise must not be limited to those who prove the will, but where it is given to executors by their individual names, or to executors "hereinafter named," it vests in all those thus named, whether they prove the will or not, by force of the will itself. A devise of the power is then construed to take effect in precisely the same manner as a devise of the legal estate.[41]

5. Courts, and Trustees Appointed Thereby.[42] Where a power is conferred on a person, not as an individual, but ratione officii, it may be exercised by the court or by a substituted trustee, on the principle that the court will not allow a trust

New York.— In re Bierbaum, 40 Hun 504, holding that where a will names one as executor, and confers on him a discretionary power of sale, the court on his death cannot appoint a trustee to execute the power.

North Carolina.— Young v. Young, 97 N. C. 132, 2 S. E. 78, where land was settled on a trustee in trust for A for life, remainder in trust for her children then living and the issue of such children as should die leaving issue, with a power in the trustee to sell the land whenever, in his opinion, it should be best for the interest of the cestuis que trust-ent, with directions to reinvest the proceeds as he should think best, and it was held that a court of equity could not decree a sale at the instance of a life-tenant and her children, and the trustee having died without executing the power of sale, a trustee appointed by the court could not execute it.

Pennsylvania.— Woodward's Estate, 8 Phila. 211, holding that where a testator devised upon trust, vesting his trustee also with a power by the exercise of which, at the discretion of the trustee, the trust would determine, and the trustee died without exercising this power, the power and the trust generally were separable; that the power, being discretionary, was personal to the trustee and was extinguished by his death, while the trust passed to the new trustee and continued to subsist unaffected by the power.

Rhode Island.— Bailey v. Burges, 10 R. I. 422, holding that a power of sale and reinvestment in a deed to a trustee "his heirs and assigns . . . from time to time as and when the said trustee shall deem it expesame discretionary power which he has given to trustees designated by himself shall belong to the trustees appointed by the court, in case of a vacancy; but if he omits to do so, a discretionary power will be construed to be personal.[46] In case of an equitable conversion a power conferred upon executors must be exercised by the administrator with the will annexed, and not by a substituted trustee;[47] and the same is true where an executor takes no estate in the land but a mere power in trust to sell.[48]

6. Delegation of Powers. The donee of a power in whose discretion special confidence is reposed cannot delegate its exercise to another,[49] save in some pardient, to sell or mortgage," etc., "at his discretion," is a special discretionary power and does not devolve on a new trustee appointed by the court.

New Jersey.— Tarlton v. Gilsey, (Ch. 1897) 37 Atl. 467, holding that where a will authorizes such of the executors "as shall qualify and survive" to sell testator's lands, all who qualify and survive must join in a contract of sale, and one of them cannot delegate to another the power to act for him, at least unless all have jointly agreed on the terms of sale, so that no discretion remains to be exercised, and even then the contract must purport to be that of all.

Statement of the rule.— "Whenever a power is given, whether over real or personal estate, and whether the execution of it will confer the legal or only the equitable right on the appointee, if the power repose a personal trust and confidence in the donee of it, to exercise his own judgment and discretion, he cannot refer the power to the execution of another, for delegatus non potest delegare." 1 Sugden Powers 221, 222.

at least so far as acts involving discretion are concerned.[59] A power may, however, be executed by one donee with the assent of the other or others,[60] and where a power to sell is given to two executors, a sale by one, subsequently ratified by the other, is valid.[61] And of course the general rule does not apply where the power is in terms given to the donees jointly or severally,[62] or where a majority of the donees are expressly authorized to act.[63]

b. even though the power is discretionary,[65] unless a contrary intention appears from the instrument creating the power.[66] In some jurisdictions, however, the common-law rule that a power conferred upon two or more persons does not survive the death of one of the donees has been changed by statute.[67] If a power be annexed to an office, any person filling the office may execute it.[68]

be exercised by the survivor. So too where the power is coupled with a trust, as where something is directed to be done in which third persons are interested, who have the right to call on the executors to exercise the power, such power survives.[72] If the will expressly requires the power to be exercised jointly, it does not survive.[73]

(B) By Statute. In some of the states the common-law rule that a naked power of sale given to executors by name, and not ratione officii, does not survive has been changed by statutes providing in substance that where a power of sale is given by will to two or more executors, and one or more shall die, the power may be executed by the survivor or survivors;[74] and in some jurisdictions,[75] although not in others,[76] it is held that the statute applies where the power is merely discretionary as well as where it is mandatory. It has also been held that the statute is retrospective, and applies to wills already made and admitted to probate.[77] Such a statute does not prevent a testator from placing such limitations on the exercise of powers as he may see fit; and a power of sale to two or more executors will not survive if a joint execution is expressly required by the will.[78]

c. Neglect or Refusal to Qualify or Act. As has been said, at common law a mere naked power to act, as distinguished from a power coupled with an interest, could not be exercised by less than the entire number of donees;[79] and the rule applied where one of two or more executors refused or neglected to qualify.[80] But this rule was modified in England by statute in cases where a part of the

d. Resignation, Disqualification, or Removal. Where an executor resigns or relinquishes his office after qualification his co-executor cannot execute a power of sale,[89] unless the power is coupled with an interest, or is given ratione officii,[90] or unless the common-law rule is changed by statute.[91] In New Jersey and New York, when an executor is disqualified,[92] or is removed from office,[93] the power becomes lodged in the remaining executor or executors.

8. Renunciation, Resignation, or Discharge as Affecting Right to Execute. Where an executor renounces or resigns the office, or is discharged therefrom, he is not deprived of the right to execute a power of sale given him by the will,[94] unless the power was given simply ratione officii.[95] Where a person is appointed executor and trustee by a will, and he resigns as testamentary trustee, a sale of the property, which, as executor and trustee, he had power to sell, is void.[96]

9. Representatives or Assignees of Donee. A power cannot be exercised by the executor or administrator of the donee,[97] unless it is coupled with an interest or trust,[98] or is expressly conferred upon the donee and his executors or administrators, and the object of the power continues.[99] Nor can a power be executed by the assigns of the donee,[1] unless it is conferred upon him and his assigns.[2] But the donee of a power of appointment, who exercises the power by making an appointment, may leave to his executors such acts as a division of the property according to the appointment.[3]

10. Executor in Right of Wife. Where a married woman in the capacity of an executrix is directed to sell property for the payment of the testator's debts, her husband, as executor in right of his wife, may sell the chattels of the estate which pass by delivery, but cannot convey lands which the will directed her to convey, the legal title thereto being vested in her.[4]

11. Administrator With Will Annexed. Where a will confers a power of sale or other power on the executor merely ratione officii, and to be exercised in any event, the power may be executed by an administrator with the will annexed, but, at least in the absence of a statute, he cannot exercise discretionary powers involving personal trust and confidence, and which are not generally within the scope of administrative functions. In some jurisdictions this subject is regulated by statute.[5]

12. Heirs of Donor or Donee. Where lands are devised to trustees in fee, upon trusts, or with powers which, in their execution, require the exercise of judgment and discretion, and the trustees disclaim the devise, so that the legal estate in fee descends to the heirs at law, such powers or trusts cannot be exercised or carried into execution by the heir, although he holds the estate, subject to the trusts of the will; but a trust which gives the trustee no other duty to discharge than simply to clothe the equitable ownership with the legal estate may be performed by the heir.[6] Where a power is personal to the donee it cannot be exercised by his heirs.[7]

C. Time of Execution[8] — 1. In General. The whole period of the life of the donee is allowed for the execution of a power, where it is general in its terms.[9]

estate, it cannot, except by consent of the life-tenant,[23] be executed during the continuance of such estate.[24]

5. Appointment by Survivor. In England a general power of appointment given to the survivor of two can be well exercised by the will, made during the lives of both, of the person who turns out to be the survivor.[25] Where, however, the power is special and given to the survivor of two persons,[26] or where it is limited to be executed after the death of one,[27] it cannot be well exercised by a will made during the lives of both by that individual who afterward proves to be the survivor, unless he republishes the will after the other's death.[28]

D. Mode of Execution[29] — 1. In General. As a general rule a power must be executed in strict accordance with its terms;[30] but where no mode is prescribed, or where the manner of execution is left to the discretion of the donee, he may execute it in any manner which will legally effectuate the intention of the donor.[31] In the case of a power coupled with an interest, the law is satisfied with a substantial compliance with its terms,[32] nor is the same strictness applied to the execution of a power coupled with a trust as if it were a naked one.[33]

Widow declining to take under will.— Where a devise was made to testator's wife for life, and, after her death or marriage, the lands to be sold for division among his children, and his wife renounced the will, and dower was assigned her, it was held that the executor had no power to sell any part of the subject of the devise during the widowhood of the wife. It was held that the power of appointment was well exercised by the effect of the codicil in republishing the will.

in the name of the donor, or as his attorney, it must be so executed;[35] and a naked power, which expires with the death of the party creating it, must be executed in the name, and as the act, of the grantor.[36] Regularly the donee should execute a power in the capacity in which it is conferred upon him;[37] but the mere fact that a conveyance is made by an executor or trustee personally, instead of in his fiduciary capacity, will not defeat its operation;[38] and where a guardian is authorized by will to sell land, a deed following the authority to sell and describing the guardian as executor alone will be a valid execution of the power since the reference to the will gives notice of the guardian's authority.[39] Where a power, as to make partition, has no connection with the office or duties of an executor, but is conferred upon the donees as executors, yet in its execution, they act, not at all as executors, but wholly as devisees in trust.[40] A power to convey land granted to a firm may be properly executed under the firm-name and the act of acknowledgment made by one partner as its agent.[41]

3. Powers of Sale — a. Public or Private Sale. Although public sales have been required in a few states,[42] the general rule is that an executor or trustee with power to sell may make a sale either at auction or privately,[43] unless the mode of sale shall be prescribed in the instrument creating the power, in which case the prescribed mode must be followed.[44] Where a sale before a master is directed by decree, a contract by the trustee for a private sale will not be enforced.[45]

The instrument creating a power of appointment or disposition may by implication require its execution by will.[57]

b. Instrument in Writing. A power required to be executed by a writing or instrument in writing is well executed by a will,[58] provided it is executed with the formalities, if any, prescribed by law and by the instrument creating the power;[59]

Deed or will.—"If a deed is expressly required, the power cannot be executed by will." 1 Sugden Powers 268 [citing Woodward v. Hasley, Rolls Feb. 1727, MS.; Darlington v. Pulteney, Cowp. 260]. "It is well settled law that a power to appoint by will cannot be executed in any other manner. The intention of the creator of such a power is taken to be that the donee of it shall not deprive himself until the time of his death of his right to select such of the objects of the power as he may deem proper." Re Collard, 16 Ont. 735, 736.

A power to appoint by deed or will is a single power, with a restriction requiring it to be exercised by one or the other of those instruments, but leaving to the donee the option to choose which instrument he will use. Saunders v. Evans, 8 H. L. Cas. 721, 7 Jur. N. S. 1293, 31 L. J. Ch. 233, 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 129, 9 Wkly. Rep. 501, 11 Eng. Reprint 611.

Ch. 434, 39 Eng. Reprint 1009 (power "to will" property).

Power to "leave" property has been construed as requiring execution by will. Moore v. Ffolliot, L. R. 19 Ir. 499; Doe v. Thorley, 10 East 438; Walsh v. Wallinger, 11 Eng. Ch. 78, 39 Eng. Reprint 324, 9 L. J. O. S. Ch. 7, 2 Russ. & M. 78, Taml. 425, 12 Eng. Ch. 425, 48 Eng. Reprint 169.

Power of appointment or disposition "at death" of donee.—It has been held that, where a will giving a life estate to the wife contains the words, "I further will and request, that, at her death, she makes such a disposition of it as she thinks best," such power cannot be executed by a conveyance by deed, but only by appointment by will. Porter v. Thomas, 23 Ga. 467. And in Weir v. Smith, 62 Tex. 1, it was held that where property is given to the testator's widow, with power at the time of her death to make a final disposition of such parts as she shall not have disposed of in maintaining herself and children, such power can be exercised only by will. See also Wilks v. Burns, 60 Md. 64; In re Flower, 55 L. J. Ch. 200, 53 L. T. Rep. N. S. 717, 34 Wkly. Rep. 149. Compare, however, Christy v. Pulliam, 17 Ill. 59 (holding that, where a testator devised land to "[his] dearly beloved wife . . . to dispose of at her death to any person she may think best to live with her and take care of her," the power was well executed by deed during the wife's lifetime); Fairman v. Beal, 14 Ill. 244 (holding that where land was devised to a person for life, and it was provided that "at her death" she might dispose of it as she should please, the words "at her death" did not by implication restrain the exercise of the power to a will, but she might properly exercise the same by deed); Benesch v. Clark, 49 Md. 497 (holding that, unless the language of the instrument creating the power indicates that the power must be executed by last will and testament, the fact that the disposition is not to take effect until the death of the donee of the power, is no reason why the disposition cannot be made by deed). "The mere circumstance of the estate being limited to A for life, and 'after his death,' or 'then' to be at his disposal, will not, by implication, restrain the execution of the power to a will." 1 Sugden Powers 270 [citing Dighton v. Tomlinson, Comyns 194, 10 Mod. 31, 88 Eng. and a power to be exercised by an instrument in the nature of or purporting to be a will is well exercised by an instrument of a testamentary character, although it is void as a will.[60]

3. Formal Requisites — a. In General. A deed, will, or other instrument in execution of a power must be executed with the formalities required by law in the execution of such instruments generally,[61] and a will of lands in execution of a power must follow all the formalities required for a valid devise.[62] In the exercise of a power all formalities prescribed by the instrument creating the power for its execution must be observed;[63] but as a rule where a power may be executed by either of two instruments, formalities prescribed for one are not required for the other.[64]

b. Signature, Seal, and Attestation. A requirement that the instrument of execution shall be signed by, or under the hand of, the donee,[65] or that it shall be under seal,[66] must be complied with. So, where the instrument creating a power

2. Reference to Power — a. Necessity. In the execution of a power, a direct reference to the power is not necessary, nor is it necessary that the intention to execute it should expressly appear upon the face of the instrument; but it must be apparent that the transaction is not fairly or reasonably susceptible of any other interpretation than as indicating an intention to execute the power; and this intention is to be collected from all the circumstances.[70]

"The general rule of construction, both as to deeds and wills, is that if there be an interest and power existing together in the same person over the same subject, and an act be done without a particular reference to the power, it will be applied to the interest and not to the power. If there be any legal interest on which the deed can attach, it will not execute a power. If an act will work two ways, the one by an interest, and the other by a power, and the act be indifferent, the law will attribute it to the interest and not to the authority." New England Mortg. Consideration equal to value of fee.—When the donee of a power to sell land possesses also an interest in the subject of the power, a general warranty deed executed by him for a consideration equal to the value of the fee, and professing and evidencing an intention to convey the fee, is a valid execution of the power without actual reference to its source. exactly the sum the testator had a right to dispose of under a power is a good execution of the power, although the will contains no direct reference to or express recital of the power.[84] Of course a devise or bequest, whether general or specific, or even a general residuary devise or bequest, is sufficient to execute a power of appointment, where there is a clear reference in the will either to the power itself or to the subject-matter thereof.[85]

b. Under Statutes. Both in England and in some of the United States statutes have been enacted which provide in substance that a general devise or bequest shall be construed to include any estate over which the testator had power to appoint as he might think proper, and shall operate as an execution of such power.[86]

The 27th section of the English Wills Act presupposes the existence of some real estate, or some personal estate, as the case may be, which is subject to a general power of appointment, and which, although not the testator's property, is at his uncontrolled disposition. The section does not extend to the creation of property at the expense of another, or to the imposition of an otherwise non-existent charge upon the property of another, or to this conversion pro tanto of the real estate of another into a money charge, which if and when charged will be personal estate which the testator will have power to appoint as he may think fit, but which has no existence unless and until the testator creates it. In re Wallinger, [1898] 1 Ir. 139. See also In re Salvin, [1906] 2 Ch. 459, 75 L. J. Ch. 825, 95 L. T. Rep. N. S. 289, where the above case was followed and it was held that where a testator had under a settlement power by deed or will to charge real estate, of which he was only tenant for life, with payment to himself or any other person or persons of any sum or sums not exceeding in the whole £6,000, with interest, and to appoint the premises charged to any person for any term of years upon trusts for raising the sums charged; and by his will he gave all his real property to one person and all his personal property (except some pecuniary legacies) to other persons, the gift of personalty did not operate as a charge in favor of the donees, on the real estate which he had power to charge.

Inchoate powers.—The English Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26, § 27) applies only to powers actually created at the death of the testator, and does not enable a testator to execute an inchoate power of which he was the intended donee under the will of a person who survives him. Jones v. Southall, 32 Beav. 31, 9 Jur. N. S. 93, 32 L. J. Ch. 130, 18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 103, 1 New Rep. 152, 11 Wkly. Rep. 247, 55 Eng. Reprint 12.

Residuary legatee — Lapsed share.—A general residuary clause will operate as an execution of a power where a prior express ap-and in England have been frequently construed and given effect, except of course where a contrary intention clearly appeared in the will.[87]

c. Will Executed Prior to Creation of Power. While there is some conflict of authority, the better view seems to be that a will executed prior to the creation of a power cannot be held an execution thereof,[88] in the absence of statutory pointment has lapsed. In re Spooner, 21 L. J. Ch. 151, 2 Sim. N. S. 129, 42 Eng. Ch. 129, 61 Eng. Reprint 289. See also In re Hunt, 31 Ch. D. 308, 55 L. J. Ch. 280, 54 L. T. Rep. N. Power expressly requiring reference.—A power to appoint by will expressly referring to the power itself is not exercised by a general bequest or devise contained in the will of the donee. Requirement that will purport to exercise power.—A residuary bequest of personal estate over which the testator has "any disposing power" is a sufficient exercise of a general testamentary power of appointment to which a condition is attached that no will shall be deemed an exercise of the power "unless it expressly purports to exercise such power." In re Waterhouse, 77 L. J. Ch. 30, 98 L. T. Rep. N. S. 30 [affirming 96 L. T. Rep. N. S. 688].

Power of revocation and new appointment. — A general devise and bequest does not operate under section 27 of the Wills Act, 1887, as an exercise of a power of revocation and new appointment, and this applies to the case where the power of revocation and new appointment is that contained in the instrument originally creating it, as well as to the case where the power is that reserved by an appointment made in exercise of the original power. In re Goulding, 48 Wkly. Rep. 183.

On face of will.— The intention to exclude the power should appear on the face of the will. Machir v. Funk, 90 Va. 284, 18 S. E. 197.

"The only safe rule for discriminating between mere conjecture and the contrary intent required by the statute is to inquire whether there is anything in the will inconsistent with the notion that the residuary bequest is meant to operate as an execution of the power." Whether a settlement creating a power was made by testator or a stranger is immaterial in ascertaining whether the testator has shown an intention not to execute. In re Clark, 14 Ch. D. 422, 49 L. J. Ch. 586, 43 L. T. Rep. N. S. 40, 28 Wkly. Rep. 753.

Testator's forgetfulness of power held not to show intention not to execute.— Re Boyd, 63 L. T. Rep. N. S. 92.

"Necessary implication," under a statute requiring that the intention not to execute the power must appear "either expressly or by necessary implication," results only where the will permits of no other interpretation; and therefore the intent not to execute the power must not be implied unless it so clearly appears that it is not to be avoided. Lockwood v. Mildeberger, 159 N. Y. 181, 53 N. E. 803 [reversing 5 N. Y. App. Div. 459, 38 N. Y. Suppl. 1107], holding also that when a will disposes of all the testator's own property, an intention not to execute a power of appointment conferred by will is not to be inferred from the fact that it makes no reference to the primary will or to the power of appointment therein conferred.

benefit of the grantor for life, with power of appointment by will, and a will was executed by him so nearly contemporaneous therewith as to make it a part of the same transaction, it was held that the appointment was good, although the will was in fact executed before the deed. A codicil executed after the creation of a power, ratifying and republishing a will executed before its creation, may execute a power created after the execution of the will. Willard v. Ware, 10 Allen (Mass.) 263. In this case a testator, after disposing of all his estate by will, conveyed land in trust for his six children and their issue, and in case of their death without issue then for his heirs, reserving to himself full power to alter the trusts by deed or will. He married a second wife, lost one child, and subsequently made a codicil to his will, giving to his wife "in fee simple one-sixth part of the whole estate and property, real, personal and mixed, whereof I die possessed, it being my intention to give to her what would be her legal share if she were one of my children," and ratified and confirmed his will in all respects in which it was not qualified by the codicil; and in the will and deed of trust he preserved equality among his children. It was held that the codicil operated as an execution of the power of disposal, which the testator reserved to himself, of the estate conveyed by the deed of trust, and his widow was entitled to one sixth of his whole estate, and the other five sixths would be disposed of according to the directions of the will, irrespective of the deed of trust. tions, however, a supervisory control of testamentary powers of sale has been conferred by statute upon the probate or orphans court.[1]

2. Leave of Court. Where a direct power of sale is conferred upon an executor by will, he may sell under the power without procuring an order of sale from the probate court.[2] But where a power of sale is conferred for a specific purpose, as to pay legacies, an executor cannot sell for another purpose, as to pay debts, without the leave of the probate court.[3] Where one has a life-estate in land, with a limited power of sale in case the "use and improvement" becomes insufficient for his support, he is authorized to exercise such power on the actual existence of necessity at the time of each sale, without an order of any court.[4]

3. Notice of Sale. In Utah, where a will gives the executor a mere naked power of sale, without direction as to notice, a sale without the statutory notice is invalid.[5]

4. Confirmation. In some jurisdictions confirmation or ratification by the court is required in case of a sale by an executor under a testamentary power.[6]

Where the question is simply one of detail, rather than one of judgment and opinion, courts of equity will exercise a greater control. Dickey v. Barnstable, 122 Iowa 572, 98 N. W. 368.

Charitable gifts.— Where discretionary powers are given an executor to determine the object of charitable testamentary gifts, the powers should be exercised under the direction of the court after reference to the master, especially where the fund, after the powers have been exercised, is to pass out of the jurisdiction of the court. Pell v. Mercer, 14 R. I. 412.

Concurrent jurisdiction of equity.—An administrator de bonis non appointed by the orphans' court may file a bill in equity asking to be allowed to administer the estate and execute a power of sale under the discretion of the court, as the jurisdiction of the orphans' court is not exclusive under the statute, but a superintending power is reserved for the courts of equity. 5. SETTING ASIDE SALE UNDER POWER. In the absence of proof of error or mistake, or wilful disregard of an executor's duty, in the sale of a decedent's real estate, under a power contained in the will, the court will not interfere with the executor's exercise of his discretion,[7] nor will it interfere to set aside a sale by an administrator with the will annexed which is absolutely void.[8] Where, in ejectment, defendants claim under deed from a devisee under a will giving him a life-estate, with power to sell in case of necessity, the deed may be attacked on the ground that it was not necessary to sell the land, without first having it set aside by a court of equity.[9]

I. Validity and Sufficiency of Execution — 1. WHAT LAW GOVERNS. Questions as to the validity and sufficiency of the execution of a power are, as a general rule, to be determined, in the case of personalty, by the law of the domicile of the donor of the power, and in the case of real estate by the law of the place where it is situated, and not by that of the donee of the power.[10]

the donee to direct, the simple fact that such party has voluntarily, and without any knowledge of what the donee intended to do, applied or agreed with a third party so to apply them, is not enough to make the appointment fraudulent and void.[12] And where a testator empowers his son to sell land "to any of my issue," a conveyance by the son to his son is not rendered invalid because the latter shortly afterward conveys to an outsider.[13] The inadequacy of the price brought at a sale under a power conferred by will, without evidence of fraud or collusion, is not sufficient to impeach the sale.[14]

b. Illusory Appointments. In England and some of the United States it has been held that, where there is a power of appointment among several distributees, it cannot be legally exercised except by giving to each appointee a beneficial interest in the fund fairly proportioned to the amount for distribution, and that the appointment of a nominal share to a beneficiary is illusory and void in equity, although not at law,[15] unless he has been otherwise provided for by the donee.[16] This doctrine has never been recognized in other states,[17] and is now abolished by statute in England.[18]

c. Benefit of Donee. The donee of a power cannot lawfully exercise it in such a manner as to secure an advantage to himself, contrary to the intention of the donor as shown in the instrument creating the power;[19] and a release or agreement not to execute by the donee, in consideration of a benefit to himself, is as much a fraud on the power as an execution for his own benefit.[20] But the mere fact that the donee or a third person is indirectly benefited by the exercise of a power does not render its execution fraudulent, where such benefit is not the moving cause of such execution;[21] and where the execution of a power, as by will, is valid in its inception, it will not be afterward avoided by being made the basis of transactions amounting to a fraud on the power.[22]

3. Partial Invalidity. In equity the fact that the execution of a power is partly invalid, because of excess of the power, fraud, or for any other reason, does not, as a rule, invalidate it in toto, if the valid and invalid parts are severable;[23] but

b. By Legislative Act. An invalid execution of a power may be confirmed by a general or special legislative act.[28]

5. Reëxecution After Invalid Appointment. The fact that an execution of a power of appointment is invalid because fraudulent or excessive does not prevent a subsequent valid reëxecution of the power.[29] And fraud in the appointment of part of a fund will not necessarily render invalid a subsequent appointment of the residue.[30] But if the taint of the first appointment enters into and is not cured by the subsequent appointment the latter is also invalid.[31]

6. Partial and Successive Executions — a. In General. A power may be exercised from time to time by partial and successive executions, to suit convenience and promote advantage, as exigencies arise, or as expediency may suggest;[32] and where successive irrevocable appointments are made in favor of the same person, the later appointment will be held to be in substitution for the former, if such appears to be the intention of the donee of the power, and the appointee will be compelled to elect between them.[33]

b. Abatement and Priority of Appointments. The first of several successive appointments by deed has priority, where all cannot be satisfied out of the fund, and the appointees do not take ratable portions of the fund;[34] but where sucsatisfaction of his debt, and the son, at the age of twenty-three executed a release to the trustee of all his claims, and eighteen years afterward filed a bill the whole transaction was fraudulent and void, and that the trustee should be ordered to replace the fund, the father also being declared responsible.

When an appointment has been set aside on the ground that it was made in reliance on a sense of moral obligation known to be operating on the mind of the appointee, which would lead her to carry out the appointor's wishes, nothing short of a distinct declaration by the appointor that he considers the appointee relieved from such obligation can make a fresh appointment to the same person valid. cessive appointments are made by separate wills, the later will takes priority.[35] Where specific sums are appointed by will to some appointees, and there is an appointment of the residue to another, the specific appointments have priority, and the pecuniary and residuary legacies do not abate proportionably.[36] Where the fund is insufficient to satisfy contemporaneous legacies, they are abated proportionably.[37] Where a person has a power of appointment over two funds under separate powers, and appoints a sum by will, referring generally to both powers, the sum must be considered as appointed ratably out of both funds.[38] Where a donee of a power of appointment appoints a specific sum out of the fund over which he has power to appoint, and the fund is subsequently reduced, the specific sum appointed is to be paid in full, and not ratably out of the deficient gross sum.[39]

7. Lapsed Appointments — a. In General. Where an appointee dies before the appointment to him, whether by will or deed, takes effect, his appointment lapses,[40] except in so far as the rule is changed by statute.[41] The same principle which makes a gift to an appointee, under a special power of appointment by will, fail or lapse by reason of the death of the appointee before the death of the testator, also applies to the failure of the subject-matter of the appointment.[42] Where under a general testamentary power money is appointed not out of mere bounty, but in satisfaction of a debt, the gift will inure to the estate of the appointee, if he dies before the testator.[43]

special power before the appointment takes effect, the subject-matter goes as in default of appointment.[45] But under a general power the effect of testamentary appointment in trust for one who dies in the lifetime of the appointor is that the appointed property does not revert to the donor, or to those who would have taken under a gift over in default, but remains part of the general estate of the appointor.[46] If, however, the appointment under a general power is made directly to the appointee, it is a question of intention whether, on the death of the appointee, the subject-matter remains in the appointor, or reverts to the donor or those who would have taken by gift over in default.[47]

(II) Upon Death of Joint Appointee. Where one of several joint appointees dies before the appointment takes effect, the entire subject-matter passes to the survivors.[48]

c. Effect of Appointment of Residue — (I) In General. Where a definite fund is subject to a special power of appointment, and one sum, part of the fund, is appointed to one person, and another sum, other part of it, to another, and "all the rest," or "all the remainder" of the fund to a third, the third appointee cannot claim a share which may lapse in consequence of the death of either of the former appointees;[49] but if there is upon the will a plain indication of an intention to appoint the whole that may remain strictly in shape of residue, or to appoint the entire fund charged only with the sums specified in the preceding appointments, then the residuary clause will be read as an appointment of the entire fund, subject to the preceding appointments, the court acting upon the manifest intention of the testator to dispose of the entire fund.[50]

(II) Under English Wills Act. Under the English Wills Act a general residuary devise or bequest will include property appointed under the will, where the appointment has lapsed by reason of the appointee's death.[51]

Fraudulent intention abandoned.— Where the evidence establishes that it was at one time intended by the appointor that an appointment should be exercised for his own benefit, the burden of proof that such intention was subsequently abandoned lies on the appointee. Humphry v. Olver, 5 Jur. N. S. 946, 28 L. J. Ch. 406, 7 Wkly. Rep. 334. And when an appointment has been set aside by reason of what has taken place between the donee and the appointee, a second appointment by the same donee to the same appointee can only be sustained by clear proof on the part of the appointee that the second appointment is perfectly free from the taint which attached to the first. Topham v.

whether a power of appointment has been legally or illegally exercised, the presumption in favor of meritorious claimants is that it has been legally exercised.[53] Not only the instrument of execution, but all the accompanying facts must be examined, to ascertain the real nature of the transaction.[54] The intentions of the donor are to be collected from the instruments, and not from parol evidence, but parol evidence is admissible to show the purposes for which the power was exercised, although they may not appear on the deeds.[55] Where a will gives executors plenary power to sell, their deed is conclusive evidence of sale under the power, and vests the title to the land in the purchaser;[56] and where a purchaser has had uninterrupted possession for thirty years under what purported to be the execution of a power of sale conferred upon a trustee, it will be presumed that the conveyance to him was sufficient to pass the estate of the grantor, and was made in pursuance of a valid execution of the power.[57] But the execution of a power will not be presumed from the fact that the bequests in a will exceed the testator's estate.[58]

9. Revocation of Execution.[59] A power which, in any mode, and to any extent whatever, has been exercised revocably, and the revocable appointment made under which has been revoked, without being operated upon, is generally of the same force, and exercisable in the same manner, as if the revoked appointment had not existed; and a power cannot be necessarily exhausted by a revocable act, although exercising otherwise the power to the utmost, more than by a conditional act, or by an act of merely partial execution.[60] Conversely, where an act of revocation is itself rescinded, the original execution of the power remains in full force and effect.[61] If an irrevocable appointment is made of a life-interest in favor of a first wife, and, subject thereto, the fund is appointed absolutely to children, the appointor cannot, after the death of his first wife, make a valid appointment to a second wife, to take effect in priority to the interests of the children, such appointment being inconsistent with the previous exercise of the power.[62]

J. Defective, Excessive, and Irregular Execution, and Non-Execution — 1. Aiding Defective Execution — a. In General. Mere suspicion.— The court will not go against a title on mere suspicion of appointment by the donee for his own benefit, as, for example, in the case of a purchaser under the execution of a power of appointment by a father, subject to estates for life, in him and his wife, in favor of their son, all three joining and receiving the money, the fair value. executed by deed is executed by will, this is such a defect as will be aided in equity in a proper case;[68] but equity cannot make valid the attempted execution of a power which is void for want of authority in the person who attempts its execution,[69] or because it is executed after expiration of the period prescribed by the instrument creating the power.[70]

b. In Whose Favor Equity Interferes. nected.[86] But, in order to reject the excess and let the appointment stand, the court must see distinctly what the donee had in view, and be satisfied that if he had rightly understood the extent of his power he would have so executed it.[87]

3. Non-Execution. As has already been stated, equity will not, as a rule, relieve against the non-execution of a power,[88] and where there are no limitations over in default of execution,[89] the interest undisposed of by him remains in the donor, and he, or his heirs or next of kin, will be entitled thereto on non-execution.[90] This rule does not apply, however, where there is not a mere power, but a trust in favor of the objects of the power.[91] And where a will, marriage settlement, or other instrument gives a power of appointment among certain persons or a class, without any limitation over upon non-execution of the power, and a general intention that such persons or class shall take appears, subject only to their selection or a division by the donee, their right to take will not be defeated by the failure of the donee to execute the power, but they will be entitled in equity to an equal distribution.[92] Where a testator directs his executors to sell, within a

See 40 Cent. Dig. tit. "Powers," § 156.

The only exceptions to the rule are when the person executing the power has granted they vest only from the time of execution.[95] Where the donee of a general testamentary power of appointment over a fund, in consideration of money lent to him, covenants by deed to exercise the power by a will giving the lender a first charge on the fund, and does so, the fund is assets for the payment of the appointor's debts generally, and the lender has no priority over the other creditors.[96] Where a tenant for life under a marriage settlement, in exercise of a power of appointment in favor of the children of the marriage, by deed appointed "that so much of the stock, funds, shares, and securities" then subject to the trusts of the settlement "as shall be sufficient to raise" a certain "net sum," should, subject to the life-interest therein of the appointor, "henceforth belong and be vested in" a certain person, one of the objects of the power, and be held in trust for him, his executors, administrators, and assigns, the appointee took the money clear of all charges, including succession duty.[97] Where, under a marriage settlement, the husband and wife took successive life-interests in a trust fund, the wife's interest being cut down to one moiety on remarriage, and subject thereto the fund was settled on trust for the issue of the marriage as the husband should appoint, and in default of appointment for the sons at twenty-one or daughters at twenty-one or marriage, with the usual hotchpot clause; and by his will, which recited that he had power to appoint the fund after the death of his wife, the husband appointed that "after the death of my said wife" three fifths of the fund should be held in trust for his elder son and two fifths for his younger son, these sons being the only issue of the marriage, the wife having remarried after her husband's death, it was held that the moiety of the income thereby set free during her life passed under the appointment.[98] Where all the beneficiaries who are distributees of the proceeds of the sale of land directed to be sold under a power join in asking a conveyance of the lands to themselves, according to their distributive shares, and such a course does not substantially conflict with the purpose of the gift, a conveyance will be decreed.[99] The disposition of the subject-matter of a power by the donee in express execution of the power will be restricted, in the absence of anything in the context showing a lease or any other interest which he may grant by virtue of his estate, for then he is not allowed to defeat his own act; but suffering a judgment is not within the exception as an act done by the party, since it is in invitum. Leggett v. Doremus, 25 N. J. Eq. 122.

a contrary intention, to an execution of the power so as not to affect the donee's individual estate.[1]

2. Of Purchasers on Sale Under Power[2] — a. In General. An executor's sale under a power, even though required to be confirmed by the court, is not a judicial sale, and a purchaser can repudiate his contract only on grounds which would be sufficient for the rescission of any other contract of sale.[3] On the other hand where an administrator with the will annexed, in the execution of a power given to executors who have resigned, sells land and gives the purchaser a title bond and possession of the premises, the purchaser acquires thereby an equitable right on payment of the purchase-price, to a conveyance of the land.[4] Statutes have been enacted in some jurisdictions providing that when an absolute power of disposition, not accompanied by any trusts, shall be given to the owner of any particular estate for life or years, such estate shall be changed into a fee absolutely, in respect to the rights of creditors and purchasers, but subject to any future estate limited thereon, in case the power shall not be executed.[5]

b. Rights and Liabilities as to Purchase-Money. On the sale of real estate by an executor under a testamentary power, he, not the heirs, is entitled to the purchase-money, and can alone maintain an action for it,[6] although it has been held that where testator directed his land to be sold by his executors, and the proceeds to be paid at a specified time to certain legatees, and the land was sold, and possession, with the title bond, was given to the purchaser, but the purchase-money had not been paid, nor the conveyance made when the time arrived for the payment to the legatees, the legacies were an equitable charge on the land, and the legatees had the right in equity to subject the land to the payment of the purchase-money.[7] A payment by a purchaser in depreciated currency constitutes a devastavit to which he is a party, and he will be decreed to take the lands at their value at the time of the decree, or otherwise they will be again sold.[8] In Pennsylvania, where a testator orders his land to be sold, but names no one to execute the power, and the executor sells without authority from the orphans court, that court has authority to compel specific performance by the purchaser.[9]

c. Estate or Interest Acquired by Purchaser. A purchaser under a testamentary power can take no greater estate or interest than the testator had,[10] and where a sale by an executor is made avowedly under the provisions of the will the purchaser can demand only such title as was in contemplation of the parties when the sale was made.[11] Where a life-tenant, with full power of disposition under the will, conveys in fee for a valuable consideration, the purchaser acquires the fee, although the conveyance contains no reference to the will or the power.[12]

d. Rights as Against Creditors of Heirs or Devisees. A purchaser at a bona fide sale under a testamentary power of sale takes a good title as against creditors or lienors of the heirs or devisees of the testator.[13]

e. Rights as Against Subsequent Purchasers. Where subsequent purchasers know that the power to sell under the provisions of the will has been conditionally exhausted by the making of an executory contract of sale, they take the property subject to the chance of their conveyances becoming inoperative by the final fulfilment of the executory contract.[14]

f. Rights as Dependent Upon Existence or Due Execution of Power. A purchaser at a sale under a power is bound to ascertain whether the power of sale exists at the time of his purchase;[15] but in order for him to be affected by a fraudulent or illegal exercise of the power on the part of the donee, either participation in the fraud or notice of it must be brought home to him.[16]

g. Rights as Dependent on Application of Purchase-Money. Where an executor or trustee is authorized to sell land, a purchaser under the power is not, in the absence of bad faith, bound to see that the purchase-money is properly applied.[17]

Precedents sub silentio is a term applied to silent uniform course of practice, uninterrupted though not supported by legal decisions. Black L. Dict. "It is not only from decided eases, where the point has been raised upon argument, but also from the long continued practice of the courts, without objection made, that we eollect rules of law." Calton v. Bragg, 15 East 223, 226, 13 Rev. Rep. 451, per Lord Ellenborough, C. J. Though the practice of the courts, or forms of pleadings, which pass sub silentio, do not make the law; yet a constant practice of permitting acts of assembly, or laws to be read out of printed books, without opposition, is a great evidence of the law. Thompson v. Musser, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 458, 464, 1 L. ed. 222.

Where a certain point of law is not brought to the view of the court in determining a course, the decision is not a precedent, calling for the same decision in a similar ease in which the point is brought before the court. The Edward, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 261, 274, 4 L. ed. 86.

By statute in many states it is provided that the word "preceding" when used by way of reference to any section of a statute or title of a code shall mean the section next preceding that in which the reference is made, unless some other section is expressly designated, or unless the context requires a different construction. Wilkinson v. State, 10 Ind. 372, 373; and the statutes of the several states. Under a statute providing that a public stock yard shall be a stock yard which, for the preceding twelve months, shall have had an average daily receipt of a certain number of live stock, the word "preceding" does not mean anterior to the passage of the act, but that a stock yard, to come under the law, must have maintained for a period of twelve months a stated volume of business. Cotting v. Kansas City Stock-Yards Co., 79 Fed. 679, 681. Under a Texas statute providing that it shall be a good cause for challenge of a juror that he has served for one week in the district court within six months preceding, it is held that the word "preceding" means service rendered at a term prior to and other than the one then being held. Myers v. State, 7 Tex. App. 640, 652; Tuttle v. State, 6 Tex. App. 556, 559; Garcia v. State, 5 Tex. App. 337, 340; Walsh v. State, 3 Tex. App. 413. 76. Century Dict.

Decision on appeal.—A provision of a state constitution "that the concurrence of four justices 'present at the argument' is necessary for a judgment by the court in Bank; and that if four justices 'so present' do not concur in a judgment, all the justices qualified to 'sit' in the cause 'shall hear the argument.' These clauses are not to be construed as requiring that a judgment cannot be pronounced by the court in Bank unless concurred in by four of the justices who were physically present at an oral argument, or that all of the justices qualified to 'sit' shall literally 'hear' an argument. . . . The meaning of these clauses and the construction to be given them is, that the argument shall be 'considered' by the court, or by those of the justices who are qualified to 'act' in the cause, and that the judgment to be rendered shall be concurred in by four of the justices of the court." Niles v. Edwards, 95 Cal. 41, 43, 30 Pac. 134.

77 Thomas v. People, 59 Ill. 160, 163, where, however, it is said: "Yet, in the relation, and in the sense in which it was used, [it] evidently meant a prize." See GIFTS, 20 Cyc. 1192.

PRESIDE. To direct, control, and govern, as a chief officer.[88]

PRESIDENT.[89] A term very generally applied to the chief executive officer of a committed a certain offense. Com. v. Keefe, 9 Gray (Mass.) 290, 292.

Under a statute requiring persons having claims against a decedent's estate, on due notice to "present" them, accompanied by a proper voucher and affidavit of their correctness, the term simply means a display or a profert of the claim, accompanied with a proper voucher, and a reasonable opportunity to the administrator to examine into and determine for himself upon the justness and validity of the demand. Willis v. Marks, 29 Oreg. 493, 504, 45 Pac. 293.

Used in a state constitution requiring that every bill, before it becomes a law, shall be "presented to the Governor" for approval, the term means not merely exhibited, but that opportunity must be afforded him to deliberately consider its provisions and prepare his objections, if any he has, to its passage. PREVIOUSLY. An adverb of time, used in comparing an act or state named, to another act or state, subsequent in order of time, for the purpose of asserting the priority of the first.[22] (See PREVIOUS.)

PRICE. The amount at which a commodity is valued or sold in the market; the market price;[23] the sum for which anything may be bought, or at which its value is rated; an equivalent in money asked for anything; cost,[24] the sum in money or other equivalent set upon an article by the seller, which he demands for it;[25] the sum of money for which a thing is bought or sold, or offered for sale;[26] the sum of money which an article is sold for;[27] the sum or amount of money, or its equivalent, which a seller asks or obtains for his goods in market; an exchangeable value of a commodity;[28] the sum stipulated as the equivalent of the thing sold, and also every incident taken into consideration for the fixing of the price put to the debit of the vendee, and agreed to by him;[29] the value which the seller places on his goods for sale.[30] (Price: Cost, see COST PRICE, 10 Cyc. 1370. ground to suspect of future misbehavior, to stipulate with, and to give full assurance to, the public, that such offense shall not happen, by finding pledges or securities for keeping the peace, or for their good behavior." 4 Browne's Blackstone Comm. c. 28, p. 668 [quoted in State v. Sargent, 74 Minn. 242, 244, 76 N. W. 1129]. Under a statute declaring that "Death by suicide, or by the hands of justice, either punitive or preventive, releases the insurer from the obligation of his contract," the killing of his wife's paramour by the husband on discovering them in the act of adultery is not an act of preventive justice. "The word 'preventive' must be construed to refer to a killing by an authorized officer of the law or a private person standing for the time being in the attitude of a public officer; as, a member of the sheriff's posse, or the like, under those circumstances where the law authorizes the taking of human life in the advancement of public justice. It can not be properly interpreted to ever include a killing by a private person, to avenge or prevent a private wrong, even though the circumstances be such that the homicide is justifiable." who has ordinarily a general oversight over its entire business, a secretary over its records, or a treasurer over its moneys — or at least receiving and paying them out. Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. Warring, 20 Wis. 290, 292.

The words "president or other principal officer" mean the chief executive officer of the corporation, whether called "chairman," "president," or by any other title, and were not intended to include "general manager." Dale v. Blue Mountain Mfg. Co., 167 Pa. St. 402, 405, 31 Atl. 633.

51. See also MASTER AND SERVANT, 26 Cyc. 941; PRINCIPAL AND AGENT; PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

Principal and accessary see CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 183.

52. Sheets' Appeal, 52 Pa. St. 257, 267.

No strict legal meaning.— The loose general idea involved in it is a source of income. Sheets' Appeal, 52 Pa. St. 257, 267.

Distinguished from "interest" see Epping v. Columbus, 117 Ga. 263, 269, 43 S. E. 803. Where the jurisdiction of superior courts is limited to cases in which the demand, exclusive of interest, amounts to three hundred dollars, the jurisdiction is ascertained by regarding the debt sued upon as divided into two parts, one of which, in reference to the other, is principal; one represents the original debt, the other the interest upon such debt. "The terms 'principal' and 'interest' are correlative. Each implies and excludes the other. That which is principal cannot be interest. Yet we contract for compound interest, and necessarily this is an agreement that the installment of interest which is compounded shall be made a principal and bear interest. But the term 'principal' applies to the new sum only in relation to the interest upon it. It is still true that this new principal itself accrued upon that contract sued upon as interest. If we were to speak of it with reference to the original principal, or in regard to the mode in which it accrued on the obligation — became a part of the debt — we should call it interest." Christian v. San Diego Super. Ct., 122 Cal. 117, 119, 54 Pac. 518.

As used in a will providing that the principal of the subdivided moiety [real estate] is to be invested, and the income only used for the benefit and use of the devisee, it means the original gift, as distinguished from its income. Gammon v. Gammon, 153 Ill. 41, 46, 38 N. E. 890. As used in a will providing that the testatrix's two sons should share alike, and if neither have children the principal will come back to the children of a certain daughter, the daughter to get her full share, "principal" is synonymous with "share." The testatrix did not use it in the sense of a sum of money placed at interest. In re Kennedy, 190 Pa. St. 79, 83, 42 Atl. 459.

A verdict for principal and interest was held to mean the principal and interest claimed in the declaration. Phillips v. Behn, 19 Ga. 298, 301.

I. THE RELATION.

A. Definition and Nature — 1. IN GENERAL. Agency in its broadest sense includes every relation in which one person acts for or represents another by his authority.[1] In the more restricted sense in which the term is used in the law of principal and agent, agency may be defined as the relation which results where one party, called the principal, authorizes another, called the agent, to act for him in business dealings with third persons.[2] Agency is a representative relation. Its fundamental maxim is, Qui facit per alium facit per se. The agent represents, acts for, and derives his authority from, another, his principal; he is an attorney, standing in the place of his employer.[3] The most characteristic feature of the agent's employment is that he is employed primarily to bring about business relations between his principal and third persons, and this power is perhaps the most distinctive mark of the agent as contrasted with others, not agents, who act in representative capacities.[4] The relation of agent is normally contractual, since it generally arises from a contract, either express or implied in fact, previously entered into between the principal and the agent.[5] In exceptional cases, however, the elements of a contract are wanting. Thus the agent may undertake to act for the principal without compensation, and enter upon the undertaking; and in this event, although even as between the parties the relation of agency exists, the contractual element of consideration is wanting.[6] So the relation may arise in certain cases by operation of law, as where an abandoned wife is invested by law with a limited power to bind her husband in contract to third persons; and in these cases none of the elements of a contract appear.[7] And finally, even as between the parties, the legal effects and consequences of agency may attach where one person acts for another without authority or in excess of his authority, and the latter subsequently ratifies the act.[8]

Agent or borrower.— It not infrequently happens that one person furnishes money for the use of another under circumstances that make it difficult to tell whether the latter is appointed agent of the former or is a mere borrower on his own account. See Krohn v. Lambeth, 114 Cal. 302, 46 Pac. 164 (where defendant agreed to furnish to a broker a certain amount of money to be used in a purchase of a mine, which was to be conveyed to a corporation to be formed, in which defendant was to have a certain share of the stock, the money advanced to be repaid him from the profits; and the broker purchased the mine in accordance with the agreement, making a cash payment thereon, which was furnished by defendant, and executing his own note for a deferred payment, defendant not being known in the transaction with the seller; and the court held that this was a loan by defendant to the broker to enable him to buy the mine, and it was to be repaid; it did not make the broker defendant's agent, on whose note defendant could be held liable as an undisclosed principal); Central Georgia Land, etc., Co. v. Exchange Bank, 101 Ga. 345, 28 S. E. 863 (where a bank advanced money to a cotton buyer with which to pay for cotton as he bought it, but neither party contemplated that he should assume to act as agent of the bank, or that the bank should have any interest in his business or share any losses, and it was held to be a loan and not an

In determining whether a contract or the conduct of the parties constitutes an agency or some other relation, the court will as a rule give effect to the intention of the parties; and the question is not governed by the name the parties themselves give to the relation.[10] But if the facts establish the relation of principal and agent as a matter of law, the intention of the parties is immaterial, and the character of the relation is not affected by any agreement of the parties that an agency between them does not exist or that some other relation does exist.[11]

b. Master and Servant. The relation of principal and agent and master and servant are frequently confused. In general the principles governing the rights, duties, and liabilities growing out of the two relations are the same, and to determine whether a given relation is one of agency or of service is of no consequence. This results from the fact that the law of principal and agent is an outgrowth and expansion of the law of master and servant.[12] Occasionally, however, and espeagency); Spencer v. Mali, 87 Ill. App. 680 [affirmed in 186 Ill. 363, 57 N. E. 1033] (holding that where a single woman who has no knowledge of business affairs appoints her brother-in-law as her agent, who is skilled, capable, and experienced, to conduct her business, and leaves to him its sole management and control, and large profits are made, such profits cannot be subjected to the payment of his debts on the theory that as the property was placed in the agent's hands with absolute control of it the original capital should be considered as a loan to him, and the increase caused by his skill should be subjected to the payment of his debts); Van Sandt v. Dows, 63 Iowa 594, 19 N. W. 669, 50 Am. Rep. 759 [following Dows v. Morse, 62 Iowa 231, 17 N. W. 495] (where a contract was made whereby one party was to furnish money to be used by the other in the purchase of corn, which was to be the property of the former, marked with his name, and sold by him, he to receive out of the sales his original investment with eight per cent interest and one cent a bushel on the corn besides, the second party to receive the balance and to guarantee the first against loss in the transaction; and the court held that the second party did not receive this money as a borrower, but as an agent, and he did not cease to be an agent and become a borrower on investing it); Hartshorne v. Thomas, 43 N. J. Eq. 419, 10 Atl. 843 (where a person was held to be an agent rather than a borrower).

Agent or joint owner.—An agreement by which one party agrees to ship to another, for sale, his entire output during a season, establishes between them the relation of principal and agent, and not joint ownership. Elwell v. Coon, (N. J. Ch. 1900) 46 Atl. 580. And see FACTORS AND BROKERS.

Agent or licensee.— In some cases permission is granted by one person to another which under different conditions may amount to a mere license to do some act or acts on his own responsibility (Murphy v. Emigration Com'rs, 28 N. Y. 134, holding that the licensing of the owners or captains of steamboats, etc., to receive the land passengers and their baggage, and of persons to solicit emigrant passengers and baggage for boarding-houses and transportation lines, by the commissioners of emigration, does not make the licensed persons the agents of the commissioners, for whose acts the commissioners can be held liable), or to a commission to the second party to act as agent of the first on the responsibility of his principal (Bingaman v. Hickman, 115 Pa. St. 420, 8 Atl. 644, (1889) 17 Atl. 20, where lien creditors by written agreement selected three men as a committee to represent them, authorized them to take possession of kaolin mines on land bound by the liens, employ men, purchase horses, etc., prepare for market and sell the kaolin, and appropriate the proceeds in accordance with a scheme of distribution adopted by the creditors and made part of the agreement, which also fixed the committee's compensation and reserved a right to revoke their powers, and the court held that this was not a mere license to work the mines, but was a contract of agency). License generally see LICENSES, 25 Cyc. 593.

Agent or obligor.—An agreement, whereby a physician was induced to locate at defendant's sawmill as a physician, that defendant would collect for him specified sums from its employees monthly, was an original obligation to pay such sums, and not merely an agreement to collect and pay over as an agent. Texarkana Lumber Co. v. Lennard, (Tex. Civ. App. 1907) 104 S. W. 506.

Agent or particeps criminis.— One who managed what he termed a "board of trade," where he received money from plaintiff on representations that defendant, a firm of brokers, whose correspondent he was, would purchase options on the Chicago board of trade, a commission being taken and shared by him and defendant, and he not pretending to bargain either with plaintiff or defendant, was not merely an agent of either party, but a particeps criminis in the gambling enterprise. 12. Kingan v. Silvers, 13 Ind. App. 80, 37 N. E. 413.

cially in the application of statutes using the word agent or servant, the distinction may be controlling.[13] The distinction between principal and agent and master and servant is very difficult to define; the two relations are essentially similar, and the real difference between them may be said to be one of degree only.[14] Several tests of agency have been suggested. Thus the agent has been said to be employed in a capacity superior to that of the servant.[15] Again he is said to be clothed with greater discretion than the servant. The agent is to accomplish a certain end, in general using his own discretion as to the means adopted, while the servant is bound to perform his service in the manner commanded by the master.[16] But such distinctions are of doubtful utility, and must at most be applied with reference to the facts of each case, for manifestly some servants have large discretion, some agents little or none. Again the two relations are so closely associated that the same person may act at one time or in one part of his employment as an agent, and at another time or in another part of his employment as a servant. The only essential distinction is that the agent is employed to establish contractual relations between his principal and third persons, the servant is not. Rather the servant deals with things, or if he deals with persons it is not to bring about contractual relations. If a servant contracts for his employer with third persons he is in so far an agent; otherwise not.[17] called agents. Kingan v. Silvers, 13 Ind. App. 80, 37 N. E. 413, 416. Servant defined see MASTER AND SERVANT, 26 Cyc. 965. The words "agents" and "servants" in a general sense both apply to persons in the service of another. Turner v. Cross, 83 Tex. 218, 228, 18 S. W. 578, 15 L. R. A. 262. And see People v. Treadwell, 69 Cal. 226, 235, 10 Pac. 502. Compare Rich v. Austin, 40 Vt. 416. Indeed it has been said that in legal essence there is no difference between the relation of master and servant and that of principal and agent, the terms "servant" and "agent" being fundamentally interchangeable, and the distinction between them evidential only. c. Employer and Independent Contractor. The liability of an employer for the acts and contracts of one employed to work for his interests often turns on the distinction between agent or servant on the one hand, and independent contractor on the other. For the acts of the agent [18] or servant [19] within the scope of his employment the employer is in general liable; for the acts of the independent contractor in general he is not.[20] In so far as the employer retains the right of general control and management of the work, he makes the employee his agent or servant; [21] but in so far as the employer leaves the choice of means and methods to the employee, he makes him an independent contractor.[22] The independent contractor, like the agent, undertakes to accomplish a certain end. In the work to be done and the means to be adopted to attain the end he is, even more than the agent, free from the control and direction of the employer. As a rule his acts are his own, his contracts are his own, and for them he, and not the employer, is responsible.[23] So far as the employer is concerned, the independent contractor, the employment was one of agency, not of service; that as he had contracted no business relations with third persons he had entirely failed to perform as agent, and hence was entitled to no compensation); The Portland v. Lewis, 2 Serg. & R. 197.

like the servant, deals with things, but, unlike the servant, he uses his own discretion, and on his own account deals with persons and makes contracts.[24] One may be an agent, and not an independent contractor, though he is paid according to the amount of work accomplished.[25]

d. Trusteeship.[26] While agency is a trust relation demanding of the agent undivided loyalty and fidelity to the interests of the principal confided to his charge,[27] it differs in many respects from any recognized class of trusts.[28] In the ordinary agency the title to any property involved, and usually to all the proceeds of the agency, remains in the principal, and the agent acts in the name of the principal;[29] in a trust the legal title is in the trustee, and he acts in his own name.[30] Agency may in general be revoked at any time;[31] a trust can ordinarily be terminated only by the fulfilment of the purposes of the trust.[32] It is the business of the agent to make contracts binding his principal to third persons;[33] a mere trustee cannot render either the creator of the trust or the beneficiary liable to third persons.[34] In this, as in the case of other relations that are sometimes difficult to distinguish from agency, the courts will construe the contract so as to give effect to the true intent of the parties, notwithstanding the name they may have given to their relation in the contract.[35]

e. Partnership.[36] Partnership is a branch of the law of principal and agent, each partner having authority in partnership affairs to act as principal for himself, and as agent for the other partners, and this is the most certain test of partnership.[37] An agent, on the other hand, does not act for himself, but for his principal alone.[38] In general, an agreement to share profits raises a presumption of partnership, while vesting title to the property which forms the subject-matter of the agreement in one of the parties, or sharing profits but not losses, is significant of an intent to create an agency.[39] But these presumptions are by no means conclusive. The early English rule that sharing profits and losses was the test of partnership[40] was generally followed by early American cases, and is still adhered to in some of the states.[41] But this rule has been overruled in England,[42] and apart from this it has always been recognized that an agreement to share profits as profits is to be distinguished from an agreement to share in profits as compensation for services. The former creates a partnership, the latter an agency, unless there is added the grant of the rights, powers, and duties incident to a partnership.[43] As between the parties themselves it is purely a question of inten-

f. Landlord and Tenant.[46] While the ordinary lease bears no resemblance to a contract of agency, yet in some cases contracts have been so drawn as to raise a doubt whether they created the relation of landlord and tenant or that of principal and agent. If the intention of the parties, collected from the whole contract and the surrounding circumstances, was to create a lease, it will be so regarded,[47] and the landlord will not be liable for the acts of the tenant,[48] nor can the tenant escape liability by claiming that he is a mere agent;[49] and where the contract on its face appears to be one of lease, and it has been so treated by the parties, third persons cannot insist on a different construction to establish their rights.[50] But if it appears that it was the purpose to conduct an enterprise through an agent, although under an agreement called a "lease," then the relation will be treated as one of agency with its resulting liabilities;[51] and especially will this be so where

Hawley v. Curry, 74 Ill. App. 309. Defendants, owners of a manufactory and of a pond above it, having purchased of plaintiff the right of drawing off the water from the pond through his land, had made a written contract with B by which he was to run defendant's mill for one year, and to manufacture for them, at a specified price, cotton furnished by them, and to keep the mill in good running order at his own expense, except the main gearing, which was to be repaired by defendants if necessary, and no rent was to be charged by defendants, and they were not to be called on for any expense unless the main gearing should fail or some injury should arise to the dam, and six or seven acres where the factory stood, with the factory houses, blacksmith's shop, etc., were to be used by B. In an action against defendants for an injury sustained by plaintiff in consequence of B's letting off the water from the pond so rapidly as to overflow plaintiff's land, it was held that B was the lessee and not the agent of defendants, and consequently that they were not liable for the injury. Fiske v. Framingham Mfg. Co., 14 Pick. (Mass.) 491. So, on an issue whether S was the agent of W, who had leased a certain compress for a term of years, or the holder of the lease, it appeared that, although S took possession of the compress under a power of attorney authorizing him to represent W, S never kept any accounts or dealt with W as principal; that S used printed letter heads in connection with the compress business in which his name appeared as lessee; that a written contract with a third person was made by S, in which S and W were referred to as the lessees; and that in the directory of the city where the compress was located S was advertised as proprietor and lessee of the compress. It was held that S was the real lessee, or the assignee of the lease, and was liable for the rent. Ragsdale v. Meridian Land, etc., Co, 71 Miss. 284, 14 So. 193.

Illustrations.— A lumber company and B entered into an agreement called a "lease," reciting that the company was the owner of a mill and timber rights and options, and that B was desirous of manufacturing the timber and operating the mill, and also that B had contracted with one person to operate the mill and manufacture the timber, and contracted with another person to sell the manufactured lumber. The company leased the premises to B for about three years at a yearly rental of one dollar and the net proceeds of the operations, which B agreed to account for; and the company agreed to pay B for his services one thousand five hundred dollars a year, payable monthly, and a percentage of the net proceeds of the business at the close of each year. The company assigned the agreement to a creditor. The creditor and B entered into a contract reciting the making of the foregoing agreement, and providing that the creditor would perform the conditions set forth in the company's lease to B, and that B would perform the conditions therein required of him, and also providing that in case of B's death the agreement should not lapse, but should inure to the benefit of the person B designated; and B designated the creditor. It was held that B was a mere agent, rendering the creditor liable for the expenses of the operation of the mill incurred pursuant to a contract made by B. Petteway v. McIntyre, 131 N. it appears that the so-called lease is a mere sham to conceal the real relationship of the parties or to secure for them exemptions from liability.[52]

g. Buyer and Seller,[53] Vendor and Purchaser,[54] Option Holder and Owner,[55] Grantor and Grantee.[56] The distinction between the relation of principal and agent and that of buyer and seller is ordinarily plain and simple. In a sale title passes to the buyer; in agency title remains in the principal, although possession be transferred to the agent.[57] So where goods are delivered by one person to another to sell on behalf of the person delivering them, the transaction is an agency to sell on consignment, the property in the goods remaining in the principal or consignor, and the agent or consignee being liable, not to pay a price, but to account for the proceeds of the goods when sold;[58] but if from the whole agreement it to provide for the hotel; to contract no debts on account of the concern without the consent of the directors; to reside with his family in the hotel but free of all charge for board or rent; to keep constantly in his employment a bookkeeper, who should keep the accounts and be liable to discharge by A if the directors disapproved of him; and the books were to be opened for the examination of any of the directors. Then followed provisions for the compensation of A, varying according to the profits, but at last securing him in any event a certain compensation of four thousand dollars per annum. Another provision in the agreement was that A's interest was personal merely, not transferable to any one, nor liable for his debts; and, if A should die, that compensation should be made to his representatives. It was held that this agreement was not a lease, and that A, being in possession as agent of the owners to manage for them, had no legal interest in the possession which could be set up against an execution for the debt of the company. Whitman Agricultural Co. v. Hornbrook, 24 Ind. App. 255, 55 N. E. 502. Plaintiff, a musical instrument manufacturer, agreed to appoint defendant his exclusive agent in New York, and to advance necessary funds to pay rents for the first six months, to be repaid within three months from the date of the advance, and to consign on sale to defendant the stock necessary to equip the agency. Defendant agreed to rent, at his own expense, a suitable apartment, employ necessary assistance, devote his time to the sale of plaintiff's wares, and to pay plaintiff certain percentages of the advertised price of the merchandise. Defendant also agreed to make monthly settlements and remit for all balances due plaintiff, to keep up the stock of instruments, etc., by reordering as fast as sold, and to pay monthly for such instruments and music so reordered, and for all other instruments and music at the rate specified. It was held that the contract was for the sale of goods on credit, and did not create a fiduciary relation between the parties; and that such construction was not changed by a subsequent writing by which defendant acknowledged his indebtedness to plaintiff in payment for musical instruments, etc., which he promised to pay in specified monthly instalments, and authorizing plaintiff, in case of failure, to institute such legal proceedings against him as the circumstances might warrant. Conn v. Chambers, 123 N. Y. App. Div. 298, 107 N. Y. Suppl. 976. Where a foreign firm agreed to sell all the goods it manufactured for the United States through defendants, and to pay them for their services a commission on all sales not made from stock, whether such sales were made by defendants or by such firm; and on all sales made by defendants in their own name from stock kept by such firm in the United States for their account, defendants were, in addition to the commission, to deduct five per cent on the invoice price of the goods, the sales on which such five per cent was allowed vested the title to such goods in defendants as buyers, and were not ordinary sales on commission. The mere word "consignee" does not mean a sale by one or a purchase by the other. The invoice is not a bill of sale, nor evidence of a sale. Sturn v. Boker, 150 U. S. 312, 14 S. Ct. 99, 37 L. ed. 1093.

However, a clause providing that the final payment for any consignment shall be made within twelve months of shipment was held, in Lenz v. Harrison, 148 Ill. 598, 36 N. E. 567, not to create a sale, but to be incorporated in the contract to compel the agent promptly to sell and report sales.

Option to buy or sell.— A contract that requires the consignee to pay for unsold goods at a stated time is a contract of sale and not of agency, even though the consignor reserves the right to exercise an option not to sell at that time, but to require the consignee to store the goods as the property of the consignor. But where the contract provides that goods unsold in the hands of the consignee at whatever terms may be used in describing it.[62] If it appears that possession of property has been transferred but a naked title reserved merely to secure payment of the price, the contract is a sale, although it may in the agreement be called an agency.[63] On the other hand, provisions that title is to remain in the consignor,[64] that unsold property is to be returned,[65] and that the consignee shall pay the proceeds of sales to the consignor [66] are characteristic of agency, even though, as in a del credere agency, the agent guarantees payment.[67] The contract may be one of agency, although the agent is to find his compensation in the discount allowed him by the principal from the usual price,[68] in the advance he may be able to secure from third persons above the principal's price to him,[69] or, it would seem, a certain date are to be settled for or stored, free of charge, as the property of the consignor until another season, settlement to be at the option of the consignor, the title does not pass until sales are made or the option is exercised, and the relation is one of agency. even though the contract provides no compensation at all for the agent.[70] Not all the cases can be reconciled. Some contracts seem to have been intentionally so drawn as to enable the consignor of goods to treat the contract as either sale or agency, or both, as might suit his purpose.[71] However such a contract may be regarded as between the parties, the courts will endeavor so to construe it as to protect the rights of others, and save them from prejudice because of the uncertain or contradictory terms of the contract.[72] To make a sale and at the same time constitute the buyer simply an agent of the seller to hold the property until it is paid for is an attempt to accomplish what cannot be done. The two things are incompatible and cannot coexist.[73] It is possible, however, to create by one contract a relation of agency which is to be changed by the fulfilment of given conditions or by the exercise of an option by one of the parties into a conditional or absolute sale.[74] In such cases on fulfilment of the condition [75] or the exercise of the option [76] title at once passes to the agent; and this is so even though he may not have paid for the goods as the contract provides, where payment of the price is not made a condition precedent to the passing of title.[77] The distinction between contracts of agency and of sale is often of importance. In some states the statutes require contracts of sale to be registered, and the validity of a given contract may depend on showing that it is a contract of agency and not of sale.[78] So the validity of a contract may depend on whether it is a contract of sale within the statute of frauds or an agency.[79] Again the distinction may be vital in determining questions arising between the principal or seller and the agent or buyer, especially as to the liability of the latter to the former. More often it becomes an issue in transaction a conditional sale); Lambeth Rope Co. v. Brigham, 170 Mass. 518, 49 N. E. 1022; Butler Bros. Shoe Co. v. U. S. Rubber Co., 156 Fed. 1, 84 C. C. A. 167.

With knowledge of the material facts, the consignors elected to sue for the price, and it was held that they could not thereafter abandon their first election and choose the opposite remedy. questions arising with third persons, as in cases where the agent or buyer is insolvent and creditors seek to attach his property, including that in his possession by shipment from the principal or seller.[80] A common mode of sale, especially of real estate, is by an option bond by the terms of which the prospective purchaser secures an option for the purchase of the property on given terms within a stated time. Such a contract does not per se constitute the option holder the owner's agent, and if the transaction is really what it purports to be it creates the relation of possible vendor and purchaser.[81] But where the option bond is a mere form of agency given to secure to the agent control of the negotiations, or to lend to him the appearance and character of a purchaser for its effect on third persons with whom the agent may negotiate, and it was not contemplated that the agent should really acquire any title or become the purchaser, then the contract is one of agency, and not of sale.[82] And it has been said that the courts incline to construing such a contract as an agency rather than as a prospective sale. Even where the language purports to provide for a sale, yet if the circumstances show an intent to create an agency, it will be construed as creating the relation of principal and agent.[83] Instead of an option to purchase, the agency sometimes takes the form of a power of attorney to the agent to receive or sell the land. Such an instrument creates an agency, and is not a conveyance to the agent, even though it is for his beneficial use.[84] Where a person is employed to purchase goods on behalf of another the transaction is an agency to buy;[85] but if it is the intention of the parties that the one is to purchase on his own behalf and sell the goods to the other, the transaction is a contract to sell.[86] So where one person, on the order of another, secures and ships goods to him on a commission, the undertaking is presumptively an agency and not a sale,[87] although in doubtful cases the question must be determined upon a review of all that passed between the parties, before and contemporaneously with the dealings under consideration,[88] whether the relation created is that of principal and agent [89] or seller and buyer; [90] and some contracts have been held to create one an agent in procuring specified goods, and a seller in subsequently transferring and delivering them to the principal.[91] In all these transactions the controlling question in every case is what was the intent of the parties,[92] as it may be gathered, not from chance words or names used in describing the relation cut off,[93] but as it is evidenced by a consideration of the entire instrument,[94] and from the circumstances surrounding it.[95]

3. Classes or Kinds of Agents. Agents may be classified in various ways: (1) With reference to the manner of their appointment, agents are either express or implied. If they are appointed in terms, whether verbally or by writing, the agency is express; if they are not appointed in terms, but the appointment is implied as a matter of fact from the conduct of the parties and the circumstances of the case, the agency is implied.[96] (2) With reference to their authority in fact, agents are said to be either (a) actual or (b) apparent or ostensible. An actual agent is one who has, either expressly or by implication in fact, been authorized by the principal to act in his behalf. An apparent or ostensible agent is one whom the principal, either intentionally or by want of ordinary care, induces third persons to believe to be his agent, although he has not, either expressly or by implication, conferred authority upon him.[97] (3) With reference to the scope of their authority

"The real inquiry is," said the court, "what was the intention of the parties to the contract? And that intention must prevail, and when it is plainly and unequivocally expressed in the writing that it is an agency, and not a sale, and the title does not pass, there is no room for construction." agents are frequently classified as general and special or particular; and in this connection there has also been mentioned a class termed universal agents. A general agent is said to be one who has authority to transact generally the business of the principal in regard to which he is employed. A special or particular agent has been defined as an agent empowered to do a specific act or one or more specific acts, or employed for a particular purpose, or as an agent acting under limited powers, and subject to restrictions imposed by the principal. The terms "general" and "special" or "particular" in this connection are used relatively. A universal agent has been said to be one who is appointed to do all the acts that the principal may personally do, and which he may lawfully delegate to another the power of doing.[98] (4) With reference to the geographical extent of their authority some agents are said to be either general or local.[99] (5) A principal may appoint a number of agents to act for him in regard to the same matter, and in this event it becomes a question whether any one of the number may execute the authority separately or whether all must join in the act. With reference to this question agents are said to be either joint or several, according to whether all must join in executing the authority or whether one may act alone.[1] (6) With reference to the person from whom he immediately derives his authority to act in behalf of a principal, a person is said to be either an agent or a subagent. The agent derives his authority directly from the principal, or from one whom the principal has authorized, not to do the act in question, but merely to appoint an agent to do it. The subagent derives his authority to do the act in question immediately from the agent who has been appointed to do the act.[2]

B. Parties to Relation — 1. Capacity to Be Principal[3] — a. In General. Inasmuch as one who acts through an agent in law does the act himself — qui facit per alium facit per se, it follows that capacity to act by agent depends in general on capacity in the principal to do the act himself if he were present.[4] It is a general rule therefore that one who has capacity to act for himself may be a principal and do the act by an agent;[5] and that incapacity to appoint an agent is a necessary consequence of personal disability to do the act for which the agent is employed.[6] Presumptively, then, every person sui juris is capable of being a principal, while persons non sui juris are wholly or partially incapable of acting as principals.[7]

b. Persons Non Compos Mentis. One who is non compos mentis is naturally incapable of appointing an agent; being unable to comprehend business, he is equally wanting in discretion to select an agent to do such business.[8] Accordingly a lunatic is no more capable of constituting an agent than of binding himself by contract.[9] It has often been said that the power of attorney of a lunatic is not merely voidable at his election or at the election of his representative, but is wholly void.[10] But this broad statement of the rule has often been questioned and greatly limited, and by weight of authority the contracts made by such an agent are not always void.[11] Thus it has been held that the contract of one not judicially declared a lunatic is voidable only, and as the legal effect of the contract is the same when made through an agent, the agent's appointment is of course in such a case not wholly void, but voidable at the election of the lunatic or his representatives.[12] And when, in good faith and without knowledge of the principal's insanity, consideration has been given and used for the lunatic's benefit, and the third person cannot be restored to his former position, the best considered cases uphold the agent's power so far as may be necessary equitably to protect the rights of such third person.[13] The court may, however, set aside the power of attorney and the agent's contracts on a showing that no injustice is thereby done to the third person;[14] and of course the lunatic, on restoration to sanity, may disaffirm the agency, and have all transactions by the agent in his behalf set aside except such as have been fair, in good faith, and without knowledge of the insanity, and which have led the third person so to change his position that he cannot be placed in statu quo.[15] On the other hand, in jurisdictions holding the lunatic's power of attorney

Capacity to confer power.— For a valid execution of a power of attorney to convey land, it is essential that the party executing the power should at the time possess sufficient mind and memory to understand the nature of the business he is engaged in, and to know the character and location of the property and the object and effect of the act he is doing. voidable rather than void, he may, on being restored to sanity, ratify the act of his agent.[16]

c. Infants. It is well settled that an infant cannot bind himself absolutely by the appointment of an agent.[17] The cases are not in accord, however, as to whether the appointment of an agent by an infant is absolutely void or merely voidable at his election when he attains his majority. In very few cases holding the appointment to be void is the reason for such a rule examined, and those few rely almost entirely on a note of the editor to a case not involving agency at all.[18] Yet it cannot be denied that the majority of the cases referring to the matter take the view that the infant's letter of attorney is absolutely void.[19] There are a few cases to this effect in which the question was actually involved, the infant having ratified the act of the assumed agent but the courts holding the ratification ineffectual because the act was void,[20] or the action being one in which a third person and not the infant sought the benefit of the rule on the ground that the act, being void, could have no validity as to any one.[21] But most of these statements are mere lunatic on being restored can of course disaffirm. Indeed, as the power is considered void there would be no possibility of affirming it. Daily Tel. Newspaper Co. v. McLaughlin, [1904] A. C. 776, 73 L. J. P. C. 95, 91 L. T. Rep. N. S. 233, 20 T. L. R. 674. See cases cited supra, note 10.

18. Tucker v. Moreland, 1 Am. Lead. Cas. 247 note. As this is almost the only reasoning in support of the rule to be found in the books it will be quoted in full. "An act which an infant is under a legal incapacity to perform, is the appointment of an attorney, or, in fact, an agent of any kind, and this rule depends upon reasoning which, if somewhat refined, is yet perhaps well founded. The constituting of an attorney by one whose acts are in their nature voidable, is repugnant and impossible, for it is imparting a right which the principal does not possess, that of doing valid acts. If the acts when done by the attorney remain voidable at the option of the infant, the power of attorney is not operative according to its terms; if they are binding upon the infant, then he has done through the agency of another what he could not have done directly, binding acts. The fundamental principle of law in regard to infants requires that the infant shall have the power of affirming such acts done by the attorney as he chooses, and avoiding others, at his option; but this involves an immediate contradiction, for to possess the right of availing himself of any of the acts, he must ratify the power of attorney, and if he ratifies the power, all that was done under it is confirmed. If he affirms part of a transaction, he at once confirms the power, and thereby, against his intention, affirms the whole transaction. Such personally and discretionary legal capacity as an infant is vested with is, therefore, in its nature incapable of delegation; and the rule that an infant cannot make an attorney is, perhaps, not an arbitrary or accidental exception to a principle, but a direct, logical necessity of that principle. But if the consideration suggested as the foundation of this rule be not satisfactory, the rule itself is established by a conclusive weight of authority." This reasoning has seemed to many courts highly artificial, and the conclusiveness of the authority in its favor has been denied, such courts preferring the view of Chancellor Kent (2 Kent Comm. 235) that "the tendency of the modern decisions is in favor of the reasonableness and policy of a very liberal extension of the rule, that the acts and contracts of infants shall be deemed voidable only, and subject to their election when they become of age, either to affirm or disavow them."

dicta, the cases either involving no question of agency at all,[22] or containing other facts or circumstances that must have led the court to the same decision whether the power of attorney was void or voidable.[23] Thus many of the cases were actions in which the infant was seeking to disaffirm the act of the agent, as of course he had a perfect right to do,[24] or in which there had been no ratification of the act by the infant on reaching majority.[25] In many states the cases seem inconsistent, and it is not clear what the rule is.[26] The majority of the best reasoned cases, however,

Dexter v. Hall, supra, moreover, was a case of lunacy and not of infancy. So in Tucker v. Moreland, 10 Pet. 58, 9 L. ed. 345, an infant's letters of attorney are referred to as void, but the case did not involve the point.

23. Dakota.— Wambole v. Foote, 2 Dak. 1, 2 N. W. 239, was an action by an infant to disaffirm a conveyance by attorney. Plaintiff, while an infant, had married, which the court held would of itself have been a revocation of authority. Furthermore, the statutes of Dakota disabled an infant absolutely to give a delegation of power. Here were three reasons for annulling the deed, and it was scarcely necessary to invoke the common law, as the court did, to make the authority of no effect, the statute being held to be merely declaratory of the common law.

contract for neccssarics. Munson v. Washband, 31 Conn. 303, 83 Am. Dec. 151.

In Kentucky the early cases of Pyle v. Cravens, 4 Litt. 17, and Semple v. Morrison, 7 T. B. Mon. 298, speak of a warrant of attorney by an infant as absolutely void. But in the first case the court said no such warrant was proved, and in the second as the notc was signed for an infant in her presence and at her request, it may be doubted whether the court should not have ruled that the signature was really her own, as in Gardner v. Gardner, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 483, 52 Am. Dec. 740. In Duwall v. Graves, 7 Bush 461, 467, the court seems to regard this doctrine as antiquated. It says: "But if it be admitted that the rule, as anciently adjudged — that naked powers of attorney by infants are void — be still the arbitrary law," etc., the rule does not apply to a power coupled with an interest.

In Maine the court in two cases, like the courts of several other states, seems to have accepted without examination the doctrine that an infant cannot appoint an agent, but in neither of these cases was there any agency. Robinson v. Weeks, 56 Me. 102; Dana v. Combs, 6 Me. 89, 19 Am. Dec. 194, where the rule was limited to the delegation of a naked power with no interest. But when the question was really involved the court reached a different conclusion. Hardy v. Waters, 38 Me. 450, holding an indorsement of a note by the agent of an infant voidable only, and avoidable only by the infant or his heir or representative. This case is the stronger because the infant had a guardian who had not approved the transfer until after the suit was commenced. It was later vigorously attacked, but upon mature deliberation was approved in Towle v. Dresser, 73 Me. 252.

In Maryland the position of the court is uncertain. In Wainwright v. Wilkinson, 62 Md. 146, the appointment of an attorney by an infant is said to be nugatory. In this case the infant sought through her prochein ami to disaffirm her act, and of course should be allowed to do so. In Deford v. State, 30 Md. 179, it was said that infants are not capable of appointing an attorney, but there was no pretense that the infants in question had even attempted to do so; they were suing by their prochein ami. In the earlier case of Hall v. Jones, 21 Md. 439, a father, on behalf of himself and his minor children, made a contract of sale of land. It was held that the children could, on coming of age, ratify, and the ratification would date back to the date of the sale. If so the conclusion is irresistible that the agency of the father was not void but voidable.

In Massachusetts the question has been more fully considered than elsewhere, and the law seems to be firmly settled there that the infant's appointment of an agent is voidable and not void, except perhaps where it could be held as matter of law to be prejudicial to the infant. See Simpson v. Prudential Ins. Co., 184 Mass. 348, 68 N. E. 673, 100 Am. St. Rep. 560, 63 L. R. A. 741. In Fairbanks v. Snow, 145 Mass. 153, 156, 13 N. E. 596, 1 Am. St. Rep. 446, the court said that "the distinction as to powers of attorney has been limited, if not wholly done away with, in Massachusetts, in regard to infants" [citing Moley v. Brine, 120 Mass. 324; Welch v. Welch, 103 Mass. 562; Whitney v. Dutch, 14 Mass. 457, 7 Am. Dec. 229], although the court admits that in some of the states and in England a power of attorney given by an infant is void. There are in Massachusetts, as elsewhere, chance remarks that seem to deny the power of an infant to appoint an agent. Cassier's Case, 139 Mass. 458, 1 N. E. 920; Guild v. Cranston, 8 Cush. 506. In both these cases the remarks referred to the appointment of an attorney to appear in court for the infant; such appearance, of course, should be by guardian ad litem or by prochein ami. But the principal case, and the leading case for the doctrine that an infant's appointment of an attorney is voidable merely, is the early case of Whitney v. Dutch, supra, a case which strangely enough has been equally cited for and against the doctrine there laid down. In that case Parker, C. J., after careful consideration of the question, although he found no cases in point, reached the conclusion that despite many references in the books to an infant's power of attorney as an example of a void contract, the infant's appointment of an agent, except perhaps an appointment that must be under seal, is not absolutely void but voidable only, and he perceives no satisfactory reason for excepting even powers under seal.

In Missouri the courts have examined the question with some care and reached the conclusion that an infant cannot appoint an agent. The case of Poston v. Williams, 99 Mo. App. 513, 73 S. W. 1099, was an action by an infant against his agent, and the operation of the rule denied the infant relief for what appears to have been the fraud of the agent. The court relied on Turner v. Bonalier, 31 Mo. App. 582, a rather unusual case, almost the only one in which the question is considered on reason and the old rule upheld, although the court found that the decision must have been the same for another cause. The result was to throw the infant out of court because the affidavit to his statement in replevin was made by attorney. A prochein ami had been appointed and of course should have acted, but the court went further and declared that any appointment of an agent by an infant by a power of attorney is void. The authorities were reviewed, and the erroneous statement of Strong, J., in Dexter v. Hall, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 9, 26, 21 L. ed. 73, that Massachusetts so holds was quoted with approval. The conclusion was reached that the rule is, perhaps, not arbitrary or accidental, but necessary for the protection of the infant. The application of the rule in Missouri seems not to have necessaries, is a voidable contract,[27] subject to affirmance or disaffirmance after the infant comes of age. He may then ratify or deny both the appointment of the

been a benefit, but in each case a clear detriment to the infant, enabling the other party, and not the infant, to take advantage of the infancy. In Thompson v. Lyon, 20 Mo. 155, 61 Am. Dec. 599, an infant's power of attorney coupled with an interest is said to be bad. Compare Duvall v. Graves, 7 Bush (Ky.) 461; Askey v. Williams, 74 Tex. 294, 11 S. W. 1101, 5 L. R. A. 176, in both which eases the court says such a power is good, although a naked power is void. Irreconcilable with these Missouri eases seems the early case of Ward v. The Little Red, 8 Mo. 358, in which it was said that an infant may become a party to a contract made without his authority by a subsequent ratification. See also MacFarland v. Heim, 127 Mo. 327, 29 S. W. 1030, 48 Am. St. Rep. 629, in which the court quotes with approval the statement in Story Agency, § 6, that infants "are incapable of appointing agents, except under special circumstances."

In Nebraska there is no case directly discussing the general question. The right of an attorney to recover for services rendered to a minor was in Cobbey v. Buchanan, 48 Nebr. 391, 67 N. W. 176, made to depend on whether they could under the circumstances be called necessaries. The implication seems to be that there may be a valid employment of attorney by an infant. See also the general discussion of voidability of infant's contracts in Englebert v. Troxell, 40 Nebr. 195, 58 N. W. 852, 42 Am. St. Rep. 665, 26 L. R. A. 177.

In New Hampshire, although the broad question was not passed upon, it was held that an infant may under certain circumstances employ an attorney to appear for him in a suit, and that he will be bound by the acts of such attorney (Belivean v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co., 68 N. H. 225, 40 Atl. 734, 73 Am. St. Rep. 577, 44 L. R. A. 167), and may be liable to the attorney for his services (Barker v. Hibbard, 54 N. H. 539, 20 Am. Rep. 160).

In South Carolina it seems always to have been taken for granted that an infant may ratify the acts of his agent. The case of Shumate v. Harbin, 35 S. C. 521, 15 S. E. 270, might have rested on the theory that the contract of a mother as agent for the improvement of the property of her infant child was a contract for necessaries, but the original contract by which the child became owner of the property through the act of the mother as agent could not be so explained. The case of Rhode v. Tuten, 34 S. C. 496, 13 S. E. 676, was similar, the contract of a mother in leasing the land of her infant children being upheld as a valid agreement, although no guardianship was shown. In Salinas v. Bennett, 33 S. C. 285, 11 S. E. 968, the contract of a partner was held to bind an infant partner, the fact that the latter remained in the partnership and drew profits therefrom after coming of age being regarded as a ratification. The case of Scott v. Scott, 29 S. C. 414, 7 S. E. 811, is a clear statement of the rule that the contract of an agent for an infant principal is "not absolutely void, but voidable." This point was not necessarily involved, for the infant chose to disaffirm and no ratification was shown. In Miller v. Sims, 2 Hill 479, a partnership liability was involved, but the earlier case of Alexander v. Heriot, Bailey Eq. 223, was decided on the broad ground that if an agent makes a contract for an infant, although not for necessaries, and the infant after coming of age affirms it, he is bound thereby. The still earlier case of Belton v. Briggs, 4 Desauss. Eq. 465, is undoubted authority for the same doctrine.

See 27 Cent. Dig. tit. "Infants," §§ 5, 7; 40 Cent Dig. tit. "Principal and Agent," § 13.

27. California.— In Hastings v. Dollarhide, 24 Cal. 195, 208, the rule is stated thus: "It is established by the tenor of the modern decisions that an infant may execute a promissory note by agent." The infant's appointment of an agent is voidable and not void, and no one can take advantage of the fact of infancy but the infant himself or his heirs or personal representatives. In Childs v. Lanterman, 103 Cal. 387, 37 Pac. 382, 42 Am. St. Rep. 121, an infant was held to be bound by a judgment, where he appeared by attorney and no guardian ad litem had been appointed. The question is now governed by statute in California. See Cal. Civ. Code. § 33.

Minnesota.— The case of Coursolle v. Weyerhauser, 69 Minn. 328, 72 N. W. 697, might have been decided on other grounds, but the case is interesting because of the able review of the question by Mitchell, J. The interest is greater because it involved the validity of a sealed instrument executed by the agent of an infant. The court found that on principle an infant's contract appointing an agent should stand on the same footing as any other contract, and be voidable the same as his personal contracts, citing especially Craig v. Van Bebber, 18 Am. St. Rep. 629 note.

New Jersey.— In Patterson v. Lippincott, 47 N. J. L. 457, 1 Atl. 506, 54 Am. Rep. 175, it was held that an infant's appointment of an agent was voidable only, and may be avoided by the infant alone.

agent and the act the agent has assumed to do for him.[28] This rule furnishes the infant full protection, and yet enables him to take advantage of such contracts of an agent on his behalf as he desires to assume on reaching years of discretion;[29] and, as has been said, it is supported by the weight of reason, and by many highly respected authorities, if not by the actual weight of authority.[30]

2. Capacity to Be Agent[31]— a. In General. Any one who has capacity to act for himself is ordinarily capable of acting as agent for another.[32] But so much as this is not required, and it is generally held that one may be capable of acting as agent for another, although he is not capable of acting for himself.[33]

b. Persons Defective in Mental Capacity.[34] Although less capacity is required to act as agent than to act in one's own right,[35] still in the very nature of things some mental capacity is necessary in an agent, and it has been said that infants of tender years, lunatics, and imbeciles are therefore generally incompetent to act as such.[36] However, a person lacking in ordinary intelligence may so act in some cases at least;[37] and an intoxicated person, it seems, is not necessarily incapable of acting as agent.[38] Generally speaking the principal will not be heard to complain of the lack of mental capacity of one whom he has chosen to represent him.[39] However, an agent lacking contractual capacity, although he may bind his principal, will not of course himself be bound by an agency contract more than by any other, and hence incurs none of the agent's contractual liabilities.[40]

c. Infants.[41] All the cases are agreed that an infant may in general act as agent,[42] his capacity being limited only by the readiness of the principal to intrust to him a commission, and his own physical and mental capacity to carry out the instructions under which he acts.[43] Thus it has been held that an infant may execute a power by instrument under seal,[44] and even, when it is clear that such was the intention, a power coupled with an interest.[45] But while an infant agent may effectually bind the principal and third person, the infant himself of course will incur none of the contractual liability attaching to an adult agent, either to his principal or to the third person.[46]

d. Persons Having or Representing Interests Adverse to Those of Principal. If, at the time of his appointment as agent, a person has or represents interests adverse to those of the principal, and the principal has no notice of that fact, he is disqualified in law to undertake the agency.[47]

C. Purpose of Relation — 1. In General. From the fundamental maxim of agency, qui facit per alium, facit per se, it follows that, as a general rule of law, whatever a man may do himself he may do through an agent.[48] There are, however, many acts in reference to which the common law requires personal performance on the part of the actor, and these he cannot perform by agent or attorney, an instance being that an agent cannot perform by a subagent the acts which he has been appointed to perform in person.[49] So there are many acts regulated by statute which, because of their nature or the requirements of the statute, must be done personally.[50] If a person cannot lawfully do an act himself, he cannot of Rights of third persons.— It has been suggested that the rights of third persons may set a limit on the infant's capacity to act as agent, unless the duty undertaken is in keeping with his age, capacity, and experience. Mechem Agency, § 59. It may be doubted whether a third person can be compelled to deal with an infant agent at all, because the infant cannot, like an adult agent, be held personally liable to the third party; but if third persons consent to contract through an infant agent, it is difficult to see why they, equally with the principal who chose the agent, do not waive any right to complain of the infancy. The cases say that the infant can execute a power as fully and effectually as an adult. See cases cited supra, note 42.

This principle is fully discussed and its various applications in other places in this work.[53]

D. Creation and Existence — 1. By Act of Parties — a. Necessity of Mutual Assent; Intention. It is a fundamental principle that agency can exist only by the will of the principal, and with the consent of the agent.[54] It is therefore essential to the formation of the relation that the principal shall in some manner, either expressly or by implication from conduct for which he is responsible, appoint the agent,[55] and that the agent shall in some way accept the appointment.[56]

While a mutual intention to create the relation of principal and agent is generally an essential element of agency, still it is to be observed that where the facts are such as to create an agency as a matter of law, the actual intention of the parties and the name they give to their relation are immaterial; they cannot agree that facts which in law establish the relation of agency shall not establish that relation or shall establish a different relation.[57]

b. Necessity of Consideration. An executory agreement to act as agent for another is ordinarily not binding on either party unless it is based on a consideration.[58] If, however, one who gratuitously promises to act for another enters upon performance of the undertaking, he is bound to complete performance according to his promise, notwithstanding the lack of consideration;[59] and if the promise has been executed in pursuance of the authority conferred, it is immaterial whether or not there was any consideration for the agent's undertaking,[60] since the rule making consideration an essential element of simple contract does not apply to executed agreements.[61]

c. Mode of Creation — (i) In General. There is, in general, no particular way in which an agent must be appointed,[62] although, as will later appear, in a few special instances the law requires a particular form of appointment.[63] The relation may be formed either by express contract between the parties,[64] or by a contract implied in fact.[65] The appointment may be made by instrument under seal,[66] and generally by simple writing [67] or by mere word of mouth.[68] The appointment must be communicated to the agent,[69] and in some instances it may be necessary that the agent's acceptance of the undertaking should be communicated to the principal; [70] but as a rule if the agent proceeds to act under the appointment it is unnecessary to give the principal express notice of acceptance.[71]

(II) Implied Appointment — (A) In General. The relation of principal and agent does not depend upon an express appointment and acceptance thereof, but it may be implied from the words and conduct of the parties and the circumstances of the case.[72] It is often difficult to determine upon general principles

whether any agency exists; rather it must be determined from the facts and circumstances of the particular case.[73] It will not be inferred from the fact that third persons thought the agency existed,[74] nor because the alleged agent assumed to act as such,[75] nor because the conditions and circumstances were such as to make such an agency seem natural and probable, and to the advantage of the supposed principal.[76] Finally, an implied agency must be based upon facts, and facts for which the principal is responsible,[77] and upon a natural and reasonable, and not a strained, construction of those facts.[78] And if, in view of the facts, an implied agency is apparent, its extent is limited to acts of a like kind with those from which it is implied, and is to be restricted to the purpose for which the facts show that it was granted.[79]

(B) Agency by Estoppel Distinguished. Implied agency does not include, and is properly speaking distinguishable from, agency by estoppel,[80] although the two are usually confused. In a strict use agency by estoppel should be restricted to cases in which the authority is not real but apparent.[81] To the third person the principal is equally liable in the case of implied agency and agency by estoppel, although this distinction is to be noted, that agency by estoppel can be invoked only when the third person knew and relied on the conduct of the principal,[82] while in implied agency he need have had no knowledge of the principal's acts, nor have relied on the same. The agent by implied authority being an actual agent, the principal is liable for his acts the same as though the authority had been express.[83] As between the principal and agent, moreover, the distinction is vital. An agent by implied appointment is a real agent with all his rights and liabilities; an apparent agent, an agent by estoppel, is no agent at all, and as against the principal has none of the rights of an agent.[84]

(C) Agency Implied From Active Holding Out, Course of Dealing, Acquiescence, Etc. Agency in fact, as distinguished from agency by estoppel, may be implied where one person by his conduct holds out another as his agent, or thereby invests him with apparent or ostensible authority as agent.[85] So an actual agency may be implied from the habit and course of dealing between the parties,[86] as where the

The rule as to apparent authority rests essentially on the doctrine of estoppel. The rule is that, where one has reasonably and in good faith been led to believe from the appearance of authority which a principal permits his agent to have, and because of such belief has in good faith dealt with the agent, the principal will not be allowed to deny the agency, to the prejudice of the one so dealing"); Morris v. Joyce, 63 N. E. 469 (which holds that an agent's general authority to collect is not shown by proving occasional instances of his receiving partial payments on a note); Fadner v. Hibler, 26 Ill. App. 639 (holding that no inference of an agent's authority to sign a contract for his principal can be drawn from evidence that the agent had twice in the presence of the principal drawn up and signed contracts embodying terms made by the principal); Rice v. James, 193 Mass. 458, 79 N. E. 807 (holding that on an issue as to whether one who purchased lumber from plaintiff had acted in so doing as defendant's agent, it was proper to refuse a requested instruction that if the alleged agent claimed to plaintiff to be the agent of defendant, and bought goods in his behalf prior to the date of the sale in question for which defendant had paid, it made no difference what limits defendant might have placed on such agent's authority to buy, unless he notified plaintiff of such limitations prior to the sale in question, as the instruction failed to recognize any difference as to the effect of purchases made at different times under a special authority for each time and purchases made as a general agent, in reference to inferring authority to make like purchases afterward); Smith v. Roe, 1 Can. L. J. N. S. 154 (holding that the fact that a man employs another to do a specified act for him at a particular time raises no presumption whatever that the person so employed has authority to do a similar act at a different time).

Dissimilar transactions.—Authority to do an act as an agent will not be implied from the doing by the actor of a totally distinct and different act on behalf of the alleged principal. Collins v. Crews, 3 Ga. App. 233, 59 S. E. 727. Thus, where it was not shown that shingle-mill owners had authorized or known of the construction of a logging road to their timber, or had constructed logging roads at any other time, the authority of their agent, who had limited powers, to contract for the construction of such a road will not be implied from the fact that contracts negotiated by him for acts of an entirely different kind were entered into by them. Gregory v. Loose, 19 Wash. 599, 54 Pac. 33. So a general authority to an agent to collect debts, and to pay and receive money, does not authorize him to bind his principal by negotiable instruments; nor can an agent having authority to collect money for his principal, arising from the use or proceeds of the sale of his property, bind him by entering into contracts for which money is to be paid out. Hazeltine v. Miller, 44 Me. 177. And the business of selling logs after their arrival at the market is distinct from that of operating in the woods, or the driving of logs; an agency for the two kinds of business is so different that proof of an agency for the one will have no tendency to prove its existence for the other. To establish an agency by inference, it must be shown that the acts sought to be proved are of the same general character and effect as those under a recognized agency. Stratton v. Todd, 82 Me. 149, 19 Atl. 111.

Subsequent transactions.— The fact that in a particular instance a person was authorized by the owner of property to negotiate a sale of it to one person on certain terms, the actual transfer to be made by the owner personally, is not sufficient to prove authority in such person to sell and transfer the same property at a prior time and on different terms to another and different person. Graves v. Horton, 38 Minn. 66, 35 N. W. 568.

The fact that the agent performed similar acts for other persons in the neighborhood in and about the same business does not authorize the inference that he was authorized to perform such acts as agent for plaintiff. Hill v. Helton, 80 Ala. 528, 1 So. 340.

if the agent has repeatedly been permitted to perform acts like the one in question.[88] Finally, the subsequent adoption and ratification by the principal of similar acts done by the agent may justify the inference that the agent has authority to do acts of that kind.[89]

d. Identity of Principal — (i) In General. When agency is shown, it is often difficult to determine, as between two or more parties involved, whose agent the representative has been in the given transaction. The question in such cases is, as between two parties who sustain relations to the agent, which of them under all the circumstances and conditions of the case it is fair to conclude appointed him and controlled his acts and the tenure of his employment.[90]
