Limitations and qualifications of rule.—The mere fact that the principal has acquiesced in the doing of similar acts by the agent is not conclusive of his general authority to do such acts. Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. McCormick, 40 Ill. App. 51. Nor is authority to be inferred from the fact that the principal has previously ratified an act of the agent of a different character (Smith v. Georgia, etc., R. Co., 113 Ga. 625, 38 S. E. 956; Humphrey v. Havens, 12 Minn. 298; White Sewing-Mach. Co. v. Hill, 136 N. C. 128, 48 S. E. 575), or an act done under substantially different conditions (Smith v. Georgia, etc., R. Co., supra). Nor is authority to be inferred from the fact that on one or two previous occasions the principal has approved similar acts (Temple v. Pomroy, 4 Gray (Mass.) 128; Paige v. Stone, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 160, 43 Am. Dec. 420; Danaher v. Garlock, 33 Mich. 295; Woods v. Francklyn, 19 N. Y. Suppl. 377; Wills v. International, etc., R. Co., 41 Tex. Civ. App. 58, 92 S. W. 273), although it has been held that the implication of authority rests not so much on the number as on the character of the acts approved, and that the adoption of a single act by the principal may be so unequivocal and comprehensive as to establish an agency to do similar acts (Anderson v. Johnson, 74 Minn. 171, 77 N. W. 26; Wilcox v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 24 Minn. 269; Briggs v. Kennett, 8 Misc. (N. Y.) 264, 28 N. Y. Suppl. 540).

(II) Agency to Negotiate Loans. In the negotiation of loans it is often mittee of a city council that he would do certain work for the city for a certain price, and the latter agreed to submit the matter to the committee, and, if they agreed to employ plaintiff, to send him a telegram, and it was held that the chairman, in sending the telegram, was not acting as plaintiff's agent, but as agent of the city.

California.— Murdock v. Clarke, (1890) 24 Pac. 272, where it appeared that by an agreement between a mortgagor and mortgagees the latter were to have the sole right to the possession of the land, accounting for the rents and profits, and were to select a person to manage the property; that at an accounting against the mortgagees they testified that they were to send a man to take possession in order to take care of the personal property security, and that everything was to be run in their name; and they also spoke of the man selected, both in their testimony and in the pleadings, as their agent; and it was held that for the purposes of possession and accounting such person must be considered as the agent of the mortgagees only, although his selection was approved by the mortgagor, and his salary was paid as a part of the running expenses.

Illinois.— Evans v. Pierce, 70 Ill. App. 457 (holding that where the treasurer of a university delivered the checks for the salaries of the employees thereof, as shown by the pay-roll, to the registrar, to deliver to the employees as they signed the pay-roll, and pending delivery to the employees the bank on which the checks were drawn and in which were funds to pay them failed, the registrar was the agent of the treasurer, not of the employees); Brainard v. Turner, 4 Ill. App. 61.

Kansas.— Detwilder v. Heckenlaible, 63 Kan. 627, 66 Pac. 653, holding that where a borrower by express stipulation makes the agent through whom a loan is obtained his agent to pay the principal of such loan and interest thereon, evidence which is as reconcilable with the theory that the agent is acting as the agent of the borrower in receiving and forwarding such principal and interest as with the theory that such agent is acting as the agent of the lender must be held to show agency under such stipulation and not to show agency for the lender.

Kentucky.— Martin v. Kennedy, 90 S. W. 975, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 966.

Massachusetts.— Blaney v. Rogers, 174 Mass. 277, 54 N. E. 561, where the agent of a surety company, on receiving an application for the company to act as surety for a building contractor, told the contractor to have the owner's attorney "draw the bond, and bring it back to the company, and that it would execute the same as surety," and such instructions were carried out, and the contractor paid the attorney for his services, and the company executed the bond, supposing that certain recitals in the bond were true, and it was held that the contractor did not act as the company's agent in employing the attorney at the request of the company.

Michigan.— Fair v. Bowen, 127 Mich. 411, 86 N. W. 991, where it appeared that B executed a mortgage on certain land to plaintiff and then conveyed it to defendant; that subsequently H wrote plaintiff's agent that defendant wished to sell eighty acres, and would pay four hundred dollars and interest for a release of that eighty; that plaintiff's agent forwarded the release to H, to whom defendant delivered certificates of deposit for four hundred dollars and interest; that H embezzled the certificates, and defendant, on discovering H's failure to remit, refrained at H's request from notifying plaintiff of the embezzlement; and the court held that H was the agent of defendant, the evidence showing that H acted at defendant's request and in his behalf.

Minnesota.— McMullen v. People's Sav., etc., Assoc., 57 Minn. 33, 58 N. W. 820.

Missouri.— Sanborn v. Buchanan County First Nat. Bank, 115 Mo. App. 50, 90 S. W. 1033, where according to a course of business, a bank on making loans occasionally took notes running to defendant bank, and then two of the officers of the former bank indorsed the notes and sent them to defendant bank, which gave the other bank credit as a deposit, defendant bank obtaining a certain percentage of interest, and the officers as consideration for their indorsement retaining the difference between that interest and that called for by the notes, and it was held that in such transactions the bank officers in question did not act as agents for defendant bank, nor did they act as agents of defendant bank in foreclosing a mortgage given to secure the notes, it appearing that defendant bank had sent the notes to the officers for collection, with directions to protest and return if they were not paid, but instead the officers, to save themselves on their indorsement, foreclosed the mortgage.

New Jersey.— Polhemus v. Holland Trust Co., 59 N. J. Eq. 93, 45 Atl. 534, holding that where defendant held bonds of a gas corporation as security for a loan, under an agreement that they should be surrendered as the corporation might sell them, and that the proceeds of the sale should be applied in liquidation of the debt, and plaintiff was induced to purchase some of the bonds by defendant's clerk, by false representations that they were first mortgage bonds, defendant was not liable for the loss sustained, since the clerk in such transaction acted in the interest of the gas corporation, and not as defendant's agent.

New York.— Cooper v. Hong Kong, etc., Banking Corp., 107 N. Y. 282, 14 N. E. 277 [reversing 13 Daly 183]; Horstmann v. Baltzer, 38 Hun 367; Graves v. Mumford, 26 Barb. 94 (where it appeared that the owner of a farm procured a loan for three thousand dollars from an agent of V, who had sent money for investment; that at the time there was a mortgage on the farm given by difficult to determine whether an intermediary is the agent of the borrower or of a former owner to a third person for two thousand dollars; that the owner gave his mortgage to V to secure the three thousand dollars which he received from the agent, less the amount of the former owner's mortgage, which sum the agent retained to pay the latter mortgage; that the money secured by the mortgage to such third person was not due, and he refused to receive it, and the agent paid him interest on the mortgage until 1849, when he paid him the balance of the principal and interest with money belonging to M, in his hands to be invested for her; that such third person at the request of the agent executed an assignment of the mortgage in blank, the agent stating that he wanted the mortgage to raise the money again temporarily, and afterward filled up the blank with the name of M as assignee; that the agent died without having applied the money of V, retained by him for that purpose out of the loan made to the owner, to the payment of the former owner's mortgage; that V had no actual notice of the existence of the other mortgage; and it was held that the legal effect of the transactions between the agent and such third person was not a payment and satisfaction of the former mortgage, as the agent was then acting as the agent of M and paid the money out of her funds); Ulster County Sav. Inst. v. New York Fourth Nat. Bank, 5 Silv. Sup. 144, 8 N. Y. Suppl. 162 (holding that where the treasurer of a savings bank sent certificates of stock to a correspondent of the bank with instructions to have the stock sold, inclosing a power of attorney of the owner to transfer it, and the letter was of the usual form used by the bank in its business transactions with the correspondent, and was signed by the treasurer as such, and the correspondent had previously sold stock for the bank, the correspondent, having acted upon the letter, could look to the bank as the principal; that the treasurer did not act as agent of the stock owner); Dodge v. Wilbur, 5 Sandf. 397 [affirmed in 10 N. Y. 579] (where commission merchants in London authorized D, one of plaintiffs, to procure for them certain consignments of cotton and to draw on them or on defendants in New York for the necessary advances, and requested defendants to pay such bills as might be drawn, and promised to honor such bills as defendants for their reimbursement should draw on them, and it was held that defendants in accepting and paying the bills acted solely as disbursing agents of such commission merchants, and not as agents of D or of the shippers of the cotton).

Washington.—Sibson v. Hamilton, etc., Co., 22 Wash. 449, 61 Pac. 162, holding that where the absolute control of the business and property of a debtor corporation passes by agreement into the hands of a mortgagee, and an officer and stock-holder in the corporation is made manager under the direction of the mortgagee for the purpose of continuing the business and paying off the indebtedness, such stock-holder becomes the agent of the mortgagee, and for any mismanagement of the business on his part, resulting in loss, the mortgagee, and not the corporation, is liable.

United States.— Davis v. Patrick, 122 U. S. 138, 7 S. Ct. 1102, 30 L. ed. 1090 (where it apeared that a mining company, being indebted to D and desiring to obtain further advances from him to work its mines, executed a writing by which it was agreed that D should advance a certain amount of money, and P was appointed manager of its property and business until out of the profits he had repaid D, D to have the power to remove P if not satisfied with his management; that the company also executed a power of attorney to P, authorizing him to work and manage the mine; that P employed his brother to haul ore, and he sued D for his services, claiming that P was D's agent; and it was held that P was not the agent of D but of the company, and that the agreement was intended only as security for the repayment of the advances made by D to the company); American Bonding, etc., Co. v. Takahashi, 111 Fed. 125, 49 C. C. A. 267 (where it appeared that plaintiffs applied to the general agent, who was also local manager and secretary, of defendant, to furnish a bond to a railway company to whom plaintiffs had contracted to supply laborers to be paid by them, the company requiring the bond to protect it from claims which the laborers might make against it for wages; that the agent, as a condition to the furnishing of the bond and for the protection of defendant, required the money to become due from the railroad company under the contract to be paid to him as trustee, to be disbursed by him to the laborers, and the contract and bond accordingly provided that such money should be paid to the agent, designating him merely as trustee, and that he should pay the laborers therefrom, and pay over the remainder to plaintiffs, and that they also reserved the right to defendant to designate a new trustee at any time on notice to the other parties; that these requirements were within the general authority of the agent and were also expressly approved by defendant, which subsequently exercised the power given it to change the trustee; and the court held that the agent in his capacity as trustee represented defendant, which was responsible for the faithful execution of his trust, and liable to plaintiffs for the sum due them from the trustee on an accounting); Jones v. U. S., 1 Ct. Cl. 383 (holding that an astronomer who assists contracting engineers in a government survey and is paid with their money, but who is not appointed by them and cannot be discharged by them, and who is not responsible to them, is not their agent, but the agent of the government).

the lender. Each case must be decided upon its own particular circumstances.[91] If a person desiring a loan makes known that desire to one who applies to a money lender and consummates the loan, the intermediary is the agent of the borrower, not of the lender.[92] So if the borrower in a written application or otherwise expressly makes the intermediary his agent,[93] if he pays the agent's commission

Co., 14 Quebec Super. Ct. 178 (holding that the operator of a telegraph company who receives and transmits the message is not the agent of the sender, but of the telegraph company).

Agent of vendor or purchaser.— Where, at the time for delivery of deed by L and payment of purchase-money by N, there being an unsatisfied mortgage which it was the duty of L to satisfy, it was agreed that a part of the purchase-money equal to the mortgage should be left with S, to be paid by him to L on the mortgage being paid, and an agreement showing this was signed by L and N, reciting "Cash retained by G. R. Schaefer for use of L. W. Lipman until the mortgage . . . is satisfied," and S gave L a receipt reciting receipt from L of said sum to be paid him on satisfaction of the mortgage, L consented to S acting as his agent for custody of the money, so that he must bear the loss of S's embezzlement thereof. Lipman v. Noblit, 194 Pa. St. 416, 45 Atl. 377. This seems doubtful, for the only purpose of such retention of the money seems to be the protection of the purchaser, and not of the vendor. A land agent procured an option to purchase plaintiff's land for twenty thousand dollars. He then organized a syndicate, composed of himself and nine others, to purchase the land from plaintiff for twenty-two thousand dollars; but there was a secret understanding between him and plaintiff that they should share between them the advance of two thousand dollars. When the contract between plaintiff and the members of the syndicate came to be executed one of them refused to sign it, and the agent procured another person to sign it, the other members of the syndicate not consenting to such change in its membership, and being ignorant of the arrangement between plaintiff and the agent for sharing the profits of the transaction. It was held that the land agent, in procuring the additional signature, was the agent of plaintiff, and not of his associates in the syndicate, and that the latter were not bound by his act, while plaintiff was; and that the act was a fraud on the other members of the syndicate, and avoided the contract. Whether a loan agent who retains part of the money loaned until prior encumbrances are discharged acts in so doing as agent of the lender or of the borrower is in dispute. Certainly he may be so employed by the borrower. But when the agent is directed to retain a portion of the loan until the prior encumbrance is discharged, it would seem that he does so for the lender, who alone is interested in having the discharge before he parts with his money. Otherwise the retention of the money seems without meaning, for if the agent acts for the borrower then his possession is the possession of his principal, and the latter may demand that the money be paid him without discharging prior claims against the property, and such is the holding of many cases. But there are other cases that hold that the discharging of the prior encumbrance is the duty of the owner of the property, and hence in attending to such discharge the agent acts for him. 2. Alabama.— Land Mortg. Inv. Agency Co. v. Preston, 119 Ala. 290, 24 So. 707, in which it was held that an agent to procure a loan, who obtained it from a company loan,[3] these facts, taken collectively or in various lesser combinations, justify an inference that the intermediary is the agent of the lender. If the lender pays the intermediary's commission, it tends to establish an agency in the lender's behalf;[4] and if the service is performed at the request and by the direction of the lender, presumptively the agent is his agent, even though the borrower is required to pay for the service.[5] However, none of the foregoing facts is conclusive on the question of agency, and will not preclude the alleged principal from showing that the intermediary was actually acting as the agent of the other party,[6] or as agent of each, but for different purposes.[7] And the fact that the application for the loan recites that the intermediary is the agent of the borrower is not controlling, if the facts and circumstances are such as to create an agency in behalf of the lender as a matter of law.[8]

(III) AGENCY FOR ADVERSE PARTY. Often the agent of one party to a transaction is appointed by the adverse party his agent for certain purposes, and each party will then stand in the relation of principal to the agent as to the matters by him intrusted to the agent, and as to those alone.[9] But such appointment of the

which sent the money to him to be sent to the borrower, is the agent of the lender in paying over the money to the borrower.

instruments need not be written,[17] although the authority is not to be lightly inferred but must be clearly shown.[18]

(II) Written Authority; Power of Attorney — (A) In General. An agent for any purpose may be, and often is, appointed by writing, called the power of attorney;[19] and if written authority is required by law the same provision that requires the writing forbids that a power previously given shall subsequently be extended or altered by parol.[20] Although it has been held that the term "power of attorney" imports a sealed instrument unless the contrary is shown,[21] yet that is not at all necessary, and is now much less common than formerly. Indeed to constitute a valid power no special form is requisite. It is enough if the principal in the writing makes a clear expression of his desires.[22] Nor need the writing be so detailed as to specify each act the agent is empowered to do, or particularly to describe the property with which he is to deal, provided it is specific enough to enable him reasonably to understand his principal's will.[23] On the other hand a pretended power of attorney is worthless unless it contains a sufficient description of the agent, and of the property or subject with which he is to deal, and of the acts he is to do.[24] Once executed, it becomes the property of the agent to whom it is issued, and he has a right to keep it as evidence of the authority under which he acts, until it is recalled by the principal.[25]

(B) Execution — (1) In General. It has been held that a power of attorney must be executed with the same solemnities required for the execution of the instrument made by agent acting under it.[26] However, a power, when attached to judicial proceedings, thereby becomes duly authenticated, and cannot thereafter be questioned by parties to the proceedings.[27]

(2) Execution in Blank. A power of attorney executed in blank, although under seal, may be filled up in accordance with the agreement of the parties, in which event it takes effect as from its date.[28] But a power does not become effective when filled in without the knowledge or authority of the principal and where the elements of estoppel are not present.[29]

(C) Acknowledgment and Recordation. In the absence of any statute requiring it, a power of attorney need not be acknowledged [30] or recorded,[31] although as matter of proof of authority the power may be and usually is recorded with any recorded instrument which has been executed under it.[32] When, however, an instrument required by law to be publicly recorded is to be executed by an agent, the same reason that calls for recording the original instrument demands that the power of the agent be likewise recorded in order to prove the validity of the instrument he has assumed to have authority to execute. Hence it is common to find the statutes requiring in such cases that the power of attorney of the agent shall be acknowledged and recorded with the instrument executed by such agent.[33]

Other statutes permit, but do not require, that powers of attorney shall be recorded, and make such record competent evidence of the agent's authority.[34] As the purpose of requiring acknowledgment and record is thereby to give notice to third persons, failure to record the power of attorney even when recording is required by law will not invalidate the agent's acts thereunder except as to creditors and subsequent purchasers without notice,[35] unless the statute makes recording a prerequisite to authority to act, or provides that unrecorded instruments shall be absolutely void.[36]

(III) SEALED AUTHORITY[37] — (A) In General. It has been said to be a maxim of the common law that authority to execute a sealed instrument must be conferred by an instrument of equal solemnity, that is by one under seal.[38] The rule

Acknowledgment of power executed in blank see Gibbons v. Sloane, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,382, 6 McLean 273, in which a power was held invalid because when it was filled up acknowledgment was not made as required by statute.

Time of acknowledgment.— It is not necessary that a power of attorney should be acknowledged on the day it is executed. It may be acknowledged at a later date, even at a date subsequent to the contract made by the agent, for the acknowledgment is of importance only as showing that the power was executed by the principal whose name is signed to it. Springer v. Orr, 82 Ill. App. 558.

Sufficiency of recordation see Mix v. Hotchkiss, 14 Conn. 32 (holding that the power was recorded "with" the deed, although they were written in the book eighty pages apart, both being properly indexed); Taylor v. McDonald, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 420 (holding a deed unavailing because the deed and the power were not recorded in the office required by law); Rosenthal v. Ruffin, 60 Md. 324 (in which it was held that the power need not be recorded at the same time with the deed; that it is enough if it is recorded prior to the deed; that the terms "with the deed," employed in the statute, means upon the proper records of the city or county where the deed is recorded); Drake v. Brander, 8 Tex. 351 (in which objection to a power because it was not filed was held to be sufficiently answered by filing it); Wren v. Howland, 33 Tex. is a technical one and has been changed in some of the states by statutes abolishing all distinctions between sealed and unsealed instruments,[39] while many of the American courts, without awaiting a legislative action, have shown a disposition to relax its strictness.[40] Thus it has often been held that if an agent in executing a contract unnecessarily attaches a seal thereto, the seal may be treated as surplusage, and it is sufficient that the authority of the agent who executed it was conferred by parol;[41] and so is parol authority sufficient for the execution of a

Deed as equitable contract for sale.— Still other cases hold that even where the instrument is required by law to be under seal, an instrument ineffective because executed by an agent wanting authority under seal will still be treated in equity as a simple contract which may be specifically enforced against the principal. deed in the presence and by the direction of the principal, for such execution is treated in law as the act, not of the agent, but of the principal himself, the agent being regarded as a mere instrument.[42]

(B) Deeds of Conveyance and Contracts Therefor — (1) In General. Conveyances of land, except when the necessity of a seal has been abrogated by statute, must be made by instrument under seal,[43] and accordingly in most jurisdictions an agent must have sealed authority to execute a conveyance of land,[44] although not to make a contract to convey, since such a contract does not require a seal.[45]

(2) Ineffectual Deed as Equitable Contract to Convey. In many jurisdictions the common-law rule requiring sealed authority is practically nullified by the fact that a deed which is ineffectual as such because executed by an agent without sealed authority is treated in equity as a contract for a deed, which the courts will specifically enforce by requiring the principal to execute a deed.[46]

(c) Bonds. The term "bond" imports a sealed instrument, and there cannot be a perfect bond without a seal.[47] Hence an agent's authority to execute a bond must be under seal.[48]

2. By Operation of Law. Agency is in a few instances implied by law without the consent of the principal, and even against his express dissent.[49]

E. Estoppel to Assert or to Deny Agency — 1. Estoppel to Assert. If a person has acted in his own name, holding himself out as principal, he cannot afterward, as against persons interested in the transaction, set up that he was acting as agent only.[50] So if a principal in a transaction represents to the other party that his agent is jointly interested as principal, he is estopped, as against the other party, to assert the agency.[51] And if the owner of property represents

So where a trust deed authorizes the trustee, his legal representatives or attorney, to sell the land conveyed on default of payment, and a sale is fairly made under a power of attorney not under seal, and the purchase-money paid and a conveyance executed by the attorney, the sale will be good in equity, and the purchaser will acquire the equitable title to the premises, and may set up such title in bar of a suit in equity to have the sale set aside. 51. East Haddam Bank v. Shailor, 20 Conn. 18, in which case D sued A, B, and C as indorsers on notes given as security for moneys loaned by D to them with the understanding that all were interested in the transaction for which the money was needed, while in fact C was only the agent of A and B in the business, and the court held that B, having united in the representations on the faith of which D advanced the money, was estopped from denying C's interest in the transaction.

that his agent is the owner thereof,[52] or actively or by acquiescence or by want of due care holds out his agent as owner,[53] he is estopped to assert the agency as against third persons who deal with the agent in reliance on his ownership. However, a principal who merely intrusts an agent with possession and control of property necessary to the transaction of the business of the agency is not thereby estopped from asserting his title to the same.[54]

2. Estoppel to Deny — a. Estoppel of Principal — (i) As Against Agent. The agent may sometimes invoke estoppel against his principal when the latter seeks to hold him responsible for unauthorized acts. If the principal upon being informed of them did not promptly repudiate them he will be estopped to deny the agent's authority.[55]

(ii) As Against Third Person[56]— (a) Preliminary Distinctions. Under the doctrine of equitable estoppel[57] two persons may find themselves charged with all the consequences of agency as to third persons, when as between themselves there exists as a matter of fact no agency at all, or no agency for the particular purpose in question.[58] Strictly speaking agency by estoppel should be limited to cases in which there is no real, but only an apparent, agency, for when an actual agency is shown, whether by express or implied appointment, it is quite unnecessary to invoke the aid of estoppel.[59] Practically, however, this distinction is not

52. Simar v. Shea, 89 N. Y. App. Div. 84, 85 N. Y. Suppl. 457 [affirmed in 180 N. Y. 558, 73 N. E. 1132], holding that if a consignor of goods represents that he has sold them to the consignee, he is estopped, as against one who has bought the goods from the consignee in reliance on the representation, to assert that the consignee was merely his selling agent.

53. Indiana.— Rathbone v. Sanders, 9 Ind. 217.

Iowa.— White v. Morgan, 42 Iowa 113, holding that where the owner of property has permitted his agent in possession to represent himself as the owner, whereby he has obtained credit and incurred a debt for an improvement on the property, the owner is estopped to deny his liability therefor.

Maine.— See Munroe v. Whitehouse, 90 Me. 139, 37 Atl. 866, holding that where a person intrusted with goods as agent sells them to one who has no knowledge that he is agent, but is led to believe from the manner in which he has been allowed to deal with the goods that they are his, the other party may offset against the principal a debt of the agent.

Missouri.— De Baun v. Atchison, 14 Mo. 543.

New Hampshire.— See Clement v. Leverett, 12 N. H. 317, where a principal accepted bills of exchange drawn on him by his agent, payable to the order of the agent, who agreed to get them discounted for the benefit of the principal, and the agent, assuming to be the owner of the bills, pledged them to a bona fide holder to secure money borrowed for his own use, and it was held that the principal, having enabled the agent to hold himself out as owner of the bills of exchange, was bound by the pledge.

However, the fact that an agent in possession and use of the property of his principal held himself out to the public as the owner of the same in such manner as to induce credit to be given him cannot prevail against the principal, where he did nothing to superinduce the agent's conduct and did not acquiesce therein. Curl v. Bond, 52 La. Ann. 1052, 27 So. 577. And the principal is not estopped unless he knew that the agent was acting as owner and failed to repudiate his acts. White v. Morgan, 42 Iowa 113.

clearly made, and it is often impossible from the facts brought out by the evidence to determine whether the agency is actual or ostensible.[60] In most cases the distinction would not affect the rights of the parties, but, as elsewhere pointed out, occasionally a case may turn on whether the agency is implied or is one by estoppel.[61] The doctrine of estoppel involves apparent or ostensible agency, which exists where the principal intentionally, or by want of ordinary care, induces third persons to believe another to be his agent, although he did not in fact employ him.[62] As to third persons the distinction between actual and apparent or ostensible agency is unimportant, as the liability of principal and agent is the same in either case, but as between the parties themselves of course the ostensible agent is no agent at all.[63] Apparent or ostensible agency is really agency by estoppel, and it is more strictly accurate to say that liability arises for the acts of such

62. Apparent authority "is such authority as a reasonably prudent man, using diligence and discretion, in view of the principal's conduct, would naturally suppose the agent to possess." St. Louis Gunning Advertising Co. v. Wanamaker, 115 Mo. App. 270, 295, 90 S. W. 737. The apparent authority of an agent which will be sufficient to bind his principal for acts done thereunder is such authority as he appears to have by reason of the actual authority which he has. Northwest Thresher Co. v. Eddyville State Bank, (Nebr. 1907) 114 N. W. 291.

Ostensible agency exists in law where one either intentionally, or from want of ordinary care, induces another to believe that a third person is his agent, although he never in fact employed him. In other words, one may actually create another his agent; and one may, on the other hand, induce a third person to believe another his agent, and to act with him as such, in which event the principal would be liable for the acts of the agent. Bibb v. Bancroft, (Cal. 1889) 22 Pac. 484. An agency is ostensible when the principal, intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes a third person to believe another to be his agent who is not really employed by him. Fargo First Nat. Bank v. Minneapolis, etc., Elevator Co., 11 N. D. 280, 91 N. W. 436; Reid v. Kellogg, 8 S. D. 596, 67 N. W. 687.

Ostensible authority is such as a principal, intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes or allows a third person to believe the agent to possess. Quay v. Presidio, etc., R. Co., 82 Cal. 1, 22 Pac. 925; S. D. Civ. Code (1903), § 1675. "There are two essential features of an authority of this character; viz., the party must believe that the agent had authority, and such belief must be generated by some act or neglect of the person to be held. A belief founded on the agent's statements is not sufficient; for a party has no right to take the agent's word for the existence of his authority." Where it does not appear that the acts of a principal which are supposed to have been sufficient to justify a belief in an agent's authority were known to the person dealing with him, they could not have generated in his mind any belief on the subjects of the agency, and hence there was no ostensible authority. Harris v. San Diego Flume Co, 87 Cal. 526, 527, 25 Pac. 758. This is the embodiment of a well-established principle of the common law which has been called the "foundation of the law of agency." Quinn v. Dresbach, 75 Cal. 159, 16 Pac. 762, 7 Am. St. Rep. 138. "Ostensible authority," as used in Cal. Civ. Code, § 2369, providing that a factor has ostensible authority to deal with the property of his principal as his own in transactions with persons not having notice of the actual ownership, has a broader meaning than "ostensible authority" as used in Civ. Code, § 2317, defining ostensible authority to be such as a principal, intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes or allows a third person to believe the agent to possess, for it has reference to the ostensible authority of agents in general. "The authority is as real where it is declared to be ostensible, as where it is declared to be actual." Wisp v. Hazard, 66 Cal. 459, 462, 6 Pac. 91. Ostensible authority is defined in S. D. Comp. Laws, §§ 3965, 3979, as such authority as a principal, intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes or allows a third person to believe the agent to possess. Reid v. Kellogg, 8 S. D. 596, 603, 67 N. W. 687. Ostensible authority to act as agent may be conferred if the principal affirmatively or intentionally, or by lack of ordinary care, causes or allows third persons to act on apparent agency. a so-called agent, not because there is any agency, but because the principal will not be permitted to deny it.[64]

(B) General Rule and Its Limitations. The same acts and conduct on the part of a principal that, when so intended, work an implied appointment often estop the principal to deny an appointment when no actual agency was intended. Accordingly, it is a general rule that when a principal by any such acts or conduct has knowingly caused or permitted another to appear to be his agent either generally or for a particular purpose, he will be estopped to deny such agency to the injury of third persons who have in good faith and in the exercise of reasonable prudence dealt with the agent on the faith of such appearances.[65] This rule

See 40 Cent. Dig. tit. "Principal and Agent," § 42.

The various methods by which a person may so hold out another as his agent as to be estopped to deny the existence of the agency were enumerated by the court in Hackett v. Van Frank, 105 Mo. App. 384, 394, 79 S. W. 1013, where it is said: "By the law of estoppel, a man may be bound by an unauthorized and unratified act. This consequence ensues when the conduct of the represented party induced some one to trust the pretending agent's assumed authority in matters which would entail a loss on the trusting party, if the one represented were permitted to deny responsibility. An estoppel may be raised because the supposed principal intentionally held the actor out to the public as an agent possessed of the authority he assumed; or permitted the actor to hold himself out in that way; or by negligent conduct, created a false impression respecting the actor's authority; or negligently failed to correct such an impression created by the actor himself, when the principal ought, in reason, to have known it was likely to entrap some one . . . and though fraud may be an ingredient of the case, it is not essential. The estoppel may be allowed on the score of negligent fault, on the principle that where one of two innocent persons must suffer loss, the loss will be visited on him whose conduct brought about the situation. Of course, if a man presents some one to the public as his agent, whom he in fact has not appointed, and on that score afterward denies responsibility for the pretended agent's acts, the defense is highly fraudulent; as it is, too, if a man denies responsibility after advisedly permitting another to represent him, when no appointment had been made, or beyond the scope of the appointment. That a man knew what was done in his name by another may be established by direct evidence, or by proof that it was done in a manner to warrant the inference that the party represented knew of it. . . . We believe these are all the predicaments in which a person is liable, by the law of agency, for the acts of another."

Consideration as element of estoppel.— The fact that no consideration moved to the alleged principal does not defeat the estoppel. Booth v. Wiley, 102 Ill. 84, 106.

Fraud as element of estoppel.— Actual fraud on the part of the alleged principal is not essential in order to estop him. Hackett v. Van Frank, 105 Mo. App. 384, 79 S. W. 1013.

One who succeeds to the alleged principal's rights in the subject-matter of the apparent agency is similarly estopped, where he had notice of the facts (Booth v. Wiley, 102 Ill. 84, 106), or where he acquired his rights without consideration (Philadelphia Trust, etc., Co. v. Philadelphia Seventh Nat. Bank, 6 Fed. 114).

One who deals with the person with whom the alleged agent dealt is entitled to assert the estoppel, where he relied on the apparent agency to his injury. McCalla v. American Freehold Land Mortg. Co., 90 Ga. 113, 15 S. E. 687; Gore v. Royse, 56 Kan. 771, 44 Pac. 1053.

Although authority to do an act with reference to another's land must be in writing, and there is none such, yet the principal may be estopped, as against a bona fide purchaser from one who dealt with the agent, to question the validity of the agent's act. McCalla v. American Freehold Land Mortg. Co., 90 Ga. 113, 15 S. E. 687; Gore v. Royse, 56 Kan. 771, 44 Pac. 1053.

Estoppel as to acts done in excess or in abuse of actual authority.— The doctrine stated in the text applies equally to cases in which there is an entire want of authority to act as agent and those in which an agent with certain authority is permitted to appear to have larger authority. See infra, II, A, 2, e.

Estoppel to assert revocation of agency.— Where a person, after long being the agent of defendants in selling stoves, continued, after the termination of the agency, with their knowledge and acquiescence, to hold himself out to the world as their agent, and plaintiff in buying a stove of him was thereby led to regard him as their agent, defendants were estopped from denying its continuation. W. 849, holding that where an agent had been in the habit of investing money for his principal, paying the taxes where foreclosures were necessary, and making all collections of interest and frequently of the principal, the principal is estopped to deny the authority of the agent to collect a note in his hands.

New Hampshire.— Knapp v. U. S., etc., Express Co., 55 N. H. 348, holding that an express company whose agents have been accustomed to receive and to send notes for collection to points beyond its own line, delivering them to a connecting express company, is estopped to deny that such agents were authorized to make contracts on its behalf to transact such business beyond the terminus of its own line.

Y. 300 [reversing 47 Barb. 411] (holding that where one authorizes another to use his name in conducting and carrying on a business, he is liable for the debts incurred in such business, although he has no beneficial interest therein); Durst v. Burton, 47 N. Y. 167, 7 Am. Rep. 428 [affirming 2 Lans. 137] (where defendants owned a cheese factory which they leased to C to run, they having no supervision or control, and they furnished the materials, took the products, and sold them in the market as manufactured by themselves. and the court held that while as between themselves C was an independent contractor, as to the public defendants assumed the character of principals); Sloss Iron, etc., Co. v. Jackson Architectural Iron Works, 103 N. Y. App. Div. 316, 92 N. Y. Suppl. 1056 (holding that where plaintiff through its agent had been accustomed for a long time, in selling iron to defendant, to make deliveries on the order of a particular representative of defendant, and when any iron was wanted such representative gave direction to have deliveries made, and they could not be made except on his order, plaintiff was justified in dealing with him as defendant's authorized agent); Marine Bank v. Butler Colliery Co., 1 Silv. Oregon.— Neppach v. Oregon, etc., R. Co., 46 Oreg. 374, 80 Pac. 482, holding that one who is held out by a railroad company as its authorized land agent, and who transacts its entire business in relation to the acquisition and disposal of lands, may bind the company by a contract extending the time for payment by a purchaser of lands from it, or waiving a strict compliance by him with the provisions of his contract in that regard.

Pennsylvania.— Ruane v. Murray, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 187, holding that where defendant permitted a saloon to be conducted in her name, and actively aided a third person in holding himself out to the public as the responsible proprietor by annually applying for a license in his name, she clothed him with apparent authority to bind her by contracts within the scope of that particular business, and if he, when he employed plaintiff, represented himself to be acting as the agent of defendant, she was bound by the contract.

Texas.— Elsner v. State, 30 Tex. 524, where it was held that a young man standing behind a counter of his father and dealing with his customers may be considered as agent, and the father be held responsible for his acts in the line of duty.

Vermont.— Landon v. Procter, 39 Vt. 78.

Virginia.— Hooe v. Oxley, 1 Wash. 19, 1 Am. Dec. 425, holding that if, in consequence of a notorious agency, the agent is in the habit of drawing bills, which the principal has regularly paid, this is such an affirmance of his power to draw that the principal will be bound to pay other bills, although the agent should misapply the money raised thereby.

West Virginia.— Dewing v. Hutton, 48 W. Va. 576, 37 S. E. 670, in which the court held that if an agent notifies his principal of continuous unauthorized acts committed by himself, the principal, to escape responsibility therefor, must promptly repudiate the same before the rights of third persons are affected; otherwise he will be estopped to deny that such acts were authorized.

England.— Summers v. Solomon, 7 E. & B. 879, 3 Jur. N. S. 962, 26 L. J. Q. B. 301, 5 Wkly. Rep. 660, 90 E. C. L. 879, where it appeared that defendant owned a jeweler's shop at Lewes, living himself at London and visiting the shop monthly; that the shop was managed by a shopman, from whom plaintiff had for some years received orders at Lewes transactions,[67] many of which fall within the rule, as commonly stated, that where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third, he who has enabled the third person to occasion the loss must sustain it.[68] The general rule, it will in defendant's name for goods which were sent to the shop and afterward paid for by defendant; that the shopman absconded and came to London and ordered jewelry there of plaintiff in defendant's name, which he carried away with him; and the court held that the previous course of dealing justified plaintiff in assuming that the shopman had general authority to order goods for the shop on defendant's credit, and that defendant was therefore liable for the goods obtained by the shopman in London.

67. District of Columbia.— Dye v. Virginia Midland R. Co., 20 D. C. 63, where it was held that the question of agency of one railroad company for another depends, as to the public not on the actual contract between the two, but on what the first, by its holding out, invited the public to believe.

Georgia.— People's Sav. Bank v. Smith, 114 Ga. 185, 39 S. E. 920 (holding that where the holder of a note surrenders to the maker collaterals given to secure its payment in order that the latter may sell them and apply the proceeds to the payment of his indebtedness, the relation of principal and agent exists between them in so far as third persons are concerned); Florida, etc., R. Co. v. Varnedoe, 81 Ga. 175, 7 S. E. 129 (holding that a railroad company which, with knowledge and without objection, allows a person to rent an office on its right of way and put up a sign styling it the office of the company is liable for ties purchased by such person in its name).

Illinois.— Booth v. Wiley, 102 Ill. 84, holding that it the holder of a judgment which is a lien on land allows it to be believed that one assuming to act as his agent in postponing the judgment lien to a trust deed about to be made to secure a loan had authority to do so, and the lender of the money secured by the deed, and a surety on the note given, act in that belief in taking the deed and signing the note, he is bound by the act of the apparent agent.

Indiana.— Foss-Schneider Brewing Co. v. McLaughlin, 5 Ind. App. 415, 31 N. E. 838, where defendant company gave to another the "sole right" to control the sale of its goods in a certain city, furnished him with a delivery wagon, and built him an ice-house, and on the ice-house and wagon defendant either had painted its corporate name and that of the other as agent, or, after the same had been painted, permitted it to remain, and it was held that there was a holding out of such person as agent of defendant, and one acting in good faith had a right to deal with him as such.

Massachusetts.— Holden v. Phelps, 141 Mass. 456, 5 N. E. 815, holding that where the records of a bank purported to give an authority to its treasurer to assign mortgages, the bank was bound by the authority appearing on its records, although the authority was never given to the treasurer by the trustees, the word "assign" being an unauthorized interpolation in the record.

Missouri.— Johnson v. Hurley, 115 Mo. 513, 22 S. W. 492, holding that where the conduct of a landowner was such as to have reasonably induced defendant to believe that one with whom he dealt as agent had authority to make sale of the land, and defendant, acting on such belief, paid the price and expended large sums in improvements, the owner will be estopped to dispute the agent's authority.

New Jersey.— Morris v. Joyce, 63 N. J. Eq. 549, 53 Atl. 139, holding that by leaving all her papers in possession of her agent, plaintiff was estopped to deny the agent's authority to deliver a mortgage and assignment to the indorser, either absolutely or as collateral.

Virginia.— Marrow v. Brinkley, 85 Va. 55, 6 S. E. 605, holding that where the agent of plaintiffs' intestate was authorized by the latter to represent him in suits to sell his land for debt, which fact was known to plaintiffs, who are claimants of the land, and they did not after intestate's death revoke or question the agent's authority during the pendency of the suits, they are estopped after a sale to set up the agent's want of authority.

Washington.— Haner v. Furuya, 39 Wash. 122, 81 Pac. 98, where plaintiff was referred to room 7, upstairs, and was there told by the person in charge of the office that his account was all right and would be paid by defendant, and the court held that if room 7 was in fact one of the departments of defendant's business, defendant was estopped to deny the authority of the alleged agent.

United States.— Burton v. Burley, 13 Fed. 811, 9 Biss. 253, holding that where the president of a national bank instructed its correspondent bank to charge up against the bank of which he was president the amount of a note given by him, in payment of such note, and an account was rendered showing the transaction, the bank was estopped from denying the correctness of the charge in an action by a receiver, subsequently appointed, seeking to set aside the transaction.

Narrower statement of rule.— There is no general rule of law that where one of two innocent persons must suffer for the acts of a third, that innocent person who has enabled such third person to occasion the loss must himself sustain the loss; but there is a general rule of law that in such a case an innocent person who has enabled the third person to occasion the loss by his neglect of some duty owing from him to the other innocent person must himself sustain the loss. Rimmer v. Webster, [1902] 2 Ch. 163, 71 L. J. Ch. 561, 86 L. T. Rep. N. S. 491, 18 T. L. R. 548, 50 Wkly. Rep. 517, holding, accordingly, that where an owner of property invests another person with his indicia of title, neither intending, nor giving grounds for a legitimate presumption that he intends, that such person should deal with the property with some third person, the owner is not primarily liable, as between himself and an innocent third person, for any loss occasioned by a dealing with the property, unauthorized by him, between the innocent third person and the person so invested with the indicia of title, for no duty on the part of the owner can be inferred toward the third person, and there cannot accordingly be any neglect of such duty; but that where an owner of property invests another person with his indicia of title, intending, or giving grounds for a legitimate presumption that he intends, that such person should deal with the property with some third person in a limited manner, the owner in such a case is primarily liable, as between himself and an innocent third person whom he has neglected to inform of the existence and extent of the limitation, for any loss occasioned by a dealing with the property between the innocent third person and the person so invested with the indicia of title in excess of the limit imposed, for a duty is inferred on the part of the owner to inform the third person, whom he invites to deal with the property, of the existence and extent of the limitation, and for any loss arising from the neglect of such duty the owner is primarily liable as between himself and the third person.

New Mexico.— Ilfeld v. Stover, 4 N. New York.— Rowan v. Kemp, 103 N. Y. Massachusetts.— Nourse v. Jennings, 180 Mass. 592, 62 N. E. 974, where it appeared that plaintiff's son-in-law, being indebted to defendant for two thousand dollars on a note to which he had forged plaintiff's name, applied to defendant for a further loan of two thousand five hundred dollars, offering as security a mortgage on plaintiff's property, and agreeing that the mortgage should also secure the prior indebtedness; that plaintiff, in ignorance of the debt of two thousand dollars, executed to defendant a mortgage for the two thousand five hundred dollars, "together with any sums that I now owe" defendant; and it was held that the fact that plaintiff had mortgaged her property on two previous occasions to raise money to assist her son-in-law, and that the former negotiations were conducted by him did not show that he had apparent authority to make the agreement that the mortgage should cover the prior indebtedness.

Missouri.— Commerce Bank v. Bernero, 17 Mo. App. 313, holding that the mere fact that notes previously executed by an agent without authority had been purchased by a third person and paid at maturity by someone does not of itself estop the person in whose name they were executed from denying the agent's authority to execute a particular note, unless there has been a course of dealing between the parties which would justify belief in authority in the particular instance.

Texas.—Owens v. Hughes, (Civ. App. 1903) 71 S. Communication of representation.— Statements by plaintiff to a third person, not made to be communicated to defendant, to the effect that a certain person was authorized to act as his agent, do not, in a controversy with defendant, estop plaintiff from denying the authority of such alleged agent, even though the person to whom the state-principal's acquiescence in or recognition of another's assumption of authority, it must appear that he had knowledge thereof else no estoppel arises.[74] Second, it is essential, in order to estop a man to deny the authority of another to act for him, that his representation of authority, whether by word or by conduct, should have been believed and relied upon in good faith by the person asserting the estoppel; that such person should have been misled by the representation; and that his change of position should have been induced thereby.[75] No estoppel arises therefore, if, at the time he changed his position, the person asserting the estoppel knew that no authority in fact existed,[76] or should, as a reasonably prudent man, have known that fact, as where he was acquainted with facts that should have suggested an inquiry, which, if pursued, would have led to a discovery of the alleged agent's want of authority.[77] So an estoppel cannot be invoked in favor of one who has relied upon the alleged agent's declaration of his authority, and made no further inquiry.[78] Third, in reliance upon the representation of authority made by the person sought to be bound, the person asserting the estoppel must have changed his position as otherwise he would not have done, so that if the authority is not admitted to exist he will suffer injury which otherwise he would not suffer.[79]

"Ratification takes place when one person adopts a contract made for him, or in his name, which is not binding on him because the one who made it was not duly authorized to do so. Ratification is a question of fact; and, in the great majority of instances, turns on the conduct of the principal in relation to the alleged contract or the subject of it, from which his purpose and intention thereabout may be reasonably inferred. And, generally, deliberate and repeated acts of the principal with a knowledge of the facts, that are consistent with an intention to adopt the contract, or inconsistent with a contrary intention, are sufficient evidence of ratification." Oregon R. Co. v. Oregon R., etc., Co., 28 Fed. 505, 507.

"Ratification cannot be accurately defined as a legal term. Generically, the word always expresses the same idea, and in legal effect is always the adoption of the act of one who has assumed to be an agent without the grant of an antecedent authority. In its application to different conditions, legal accuracy requires the observance of very wide differences in the significance of the term." Smyth v. Lynch, 7 Colo. App. 383, 43 Pac. 670, 675 [reversed on other grounds in 25 Colo. 103, 54 Pac. 634].

"Confirmation" and "ratification."— In its primary use the word "confirmation" applies to that by which what was before voidable is made valid, as where one makes valid a voidable contract of his own which he might have repudiated, while ratification applies to the act of another in the nature of an act of agency; but these words are often used interchangeably as synonyms. Sciffert, etc., Lumber Co. v. Hartwell, 94 Iowa 576, 63 N. W. 333, 58 Am. St. Rep. 413. "Confirmation is . . . a ratification of a previous trans-

b. Nature and Necessity in General. A ratification is necessary only where an agent acts as such without authority [87] under particular conditions.[88] Ordinarily the principal has an election either to repudiate or to ratify the unauthorized transaction; [89] and although it has been held that, until ratification, an unauthorized contract made by one person for another is utterly void,[90] it is more accurate to say that such contract is voidable and without effect on the person in whose behalf it was made, and that in order to make it binding on him he must subsequently ratify it.[91] A principal may either ratify unauthorized acts or contracts made on his behalf by a mere stranger or volunteer who has never been his agent but who has assumed to act as such in the particular transaction,[92] or he may ratify the act of one who is his agent for certain purposes, but who in the particular transaction acted outside the scope of his authority or after the termination of his agency,[93] whereupon the relation of principal and agent is created in respect to matters concerning which none before existed, and the act or contract thereby becomes as effectual as to the principal as though it had been previously authorized, not only from the moment of his ratification but by relation back from the moment of the unauthorized transaction.[94]

c. Adoption Distinguished. Although the term "adopt" or "adoption" is often used in its broader sense in defining ratification, in its legal sense there is a distinction between "adoption" and "ratification." Accurately speaking a ratification is an adoption and more. It is the acceptance of a previously unauthorized contract and takes effect from the making of such contract, whereas an adoption is in legal effect the making of a contract as of the date of the adoption.[95] A ratification implies an existing person on whose behalf the contract might have been made at the time.[96] An adoption, however, may be made by a person who has no legal existence at the time the contract was made on his behalf,[97] and is peculiarly applicable to the law of corporations, where a corporation, after its organization, adopts contracts made by its promoters or agents before the corporation is organized.[98] One may, if he will, adopt for his own use the terms of any contract that suits his purpose; he may ratify a contract only when it was originally made for him without authority.[99]

d. Estoppel Distinguished. In the literature of the law there has often been little inclination displayed to distinguish between ratification and estoppel in pais;[1] but the distinction between the two is nevertheless well defined, and where as in some states the mode of ratification is governed by statute, it becomes important and necessary to distinguish them.[2] The substance of ratification is confirmation of the unauthorized act or contract after it has been done or made, whereas the substance of estoppel is the principal's inducement to another to act to his prejudice.[3] Acts and conduct amounting to an estoppel in pais may in some instances amount to a ratification; but on the other hand ratification may be complete without any of the elements of an estoppel,[4] and if the act or contract in question has in fact been ratified and the ratification is sufficient, there is no need of invoking the doctrine of estoppel.[5]

Statement of distinction.— The adoption of a former contract is the making of a contract as of the date of the adoption. To adopt is to take and receive as one's own that with reference to which there existed no prior relation, either colorable or otherwise. To ratify is to confirm, approve, or sanction a previous act or an act done in behalf of the party ratifying without sufficient authority. But as to contracts adoption and ratification are often treated as synonymous, and in many cases the result is the same whether the contract be adopted or ratified. The facts are usually set forth at length and the conclusion reached and expressed that such conduct amounts to a ratification; and indeed where the form which the ratification must take is not governed by a statutory rule it may and usually does matter little whether the acts of a principal are said to be such as to constitute a ratification or to be such as to constitute an estoppel. By either name he is held equally bound. Blood v. La Serena Land, etc., Co., 113 Cal. 221, 41 Pac. 1017, 45 Pac. 252.

Within the meaning of Cal. Civ. Blood v. La Serena Land, etc., Co., 113 Cal. 221, 41 Pac. 1017, 45 Pac. 252.

3. Steffens v. Nelson, 94 Minn. 365, 102 N. W. 871. And see supra, I, E, 2, a, (II).

Statement of distinction.— The distinction between a contract intentionally assented to or ratified in fact and an estoppel to deny the validity of the contract is very wide. In the former case the party is bound because he intended to be; in the latter he is bound notwithstanding there was no such intention. because the other party will be prejudiced and defrauded by his conduct unless the law treat him as legally bound. In the one case the party is bound because the contract contains the necessary ingredients to bind him. including a consideration. In the other he is not bound for these reasons, but because he has permitted the other party to act to his prejudice under such circumstances that he must have known, or be presumed to have known, that such party was acting on the faith of his conduct and acts being what they purported to be, without apprising him to the contrary. son on behalf of another without prior authority and which would in law be his act if done in pursuance of authority is as a general rule capable of ratification by the person on whose behalf it was done; [7] and this is true where the person who did the act was a subagent appointed by the agent without the authority of the principal.[8]

(II) VOID AND VOIDABLE ACTS. If an act done or a contract entered into by one person in behalf of another without authority is by positive law or public policy illegal and void, it cannot be ratified; [9] but unauthorized acts which are merely voidable may be ratified by the person in whose behalf they were done.[10]

Where an act performed by an agent of the state is forbidden by statute, the statute as a whole must be examined to determine whether it was the intention of the legislature to make the forbidden act totally void. If the intention was to make the act unlawful in any case, whether performed by the state itself or by its agents, such an act performed by an agent cannot be ratified. (III) TORTS IN GENERAL. A principal may ratify a tort committed by another on his behalf, so as to make himself liable therefor,[11] such as a wilful trespass [12] or conversion.[13] But it has been held that if an unauthorized act involved a crime or was opposed to public policy, it cannot be ratified.[14]

(IV) FORGERY. Whether a principal can by ratification make himself liable on a contract which is a forgery is in dispute. In some jurisdictions it is held that he cannot, because of public policy, which forbids that by consenting to be bound by the forged contract the principal should induce or encourage the exemption from prosecution of the forger;[15] and also on the technical grounds that the forged contract does not purport to be executed by an agent but by the principal himself, and hence there is no assumption of agency and nothing to ratify,[16] and that in the absence of any new consideration or element of estoppel a subsequent promise or ratification of the forged instrument is a mere nudum pactum.[17] In these jurisdictions the ratification which the law interdicts relates only to such acts as clearly appear to have been done in violation of a criminal statute, and it has been said that it is impossible in such a case to attribute any motive to the ratifying party but that of concealing the crime and suppressing the prosecution.[18] But where the signature or act of forgery is of an ambiguous character and may as well be attributed to a mistaken assumption of authority as to a criminal purpose, public policy does not forbid its ratification.[19] In other jurisdictions, however, the courts take the ground that so far as considerations of public policy are concerned, the ratification of forgery should stand on the same footing as other contracts, and that as to the want of authority, it can make no difference whether the unauthorized act was or was not a forgery, since this want of authority is the very thing which the ratification cures; and hence it is held in such jurisdictions that the principal whose name has been forged may ratify the signature so as to make himself civilly liable on the contract,[20] but not so as to excuse the forger from prosecution.[21] Probably all authorities, however, agree that the principal will be liable if his promise to assume the contract induces the other party to change his position to his prejudice; but in such a case the liability rests on the doctrine of estoppel and not on ratification.[22] On the same ground ratification of one act of forgery may estop the principal to deny the genuineness of his signature in subsequent similar forgeries.[23] In any event a forgery cannot be ratified so as to enable the forger to take advantage of the contract.[24]

b. a forged signature on commercial paper the person whose signature has been forged becomes liable thereon, although no words of agency appear on the paper and no facts are shown sufficient to constitute an estoppel in pais.

c. Actor Must Have Acted in Behalf of Ratifier. In order that an unauthorized act may be capable of ratification it is necessary that it should have been performed by one acting as agent on behalf of another as principal.[33] Hence if an alleged agent does not pretend or assume to be acting for another, but acts solely on his own account, then as to such other the transaction is inter alios acta, and he cannot make himself a party to it by his ratification of the act;[34] and even where one falsely professes to act as agent but is actually contracting for himself and in his own name, the alleged principal cannot make himself a party to the contract by ratification.[35] Nor can one person ratify an act done by one assuming to act as agent for another person.[36] In some cases it is said that in order that there may be a ratification, the unauthorized act must have been done avowedly for the person sought to be charged as principal, and that if the agent did not profess to be acting for the person sought to be held as having ratified the act, the subsequent assent of such person is of no effect.[37] In other cases, however, it is said that while it is necessary that the act should have been done by one who was in fact assuming to act as an agent, it is not necessary that he should have been understood to be such by the person with whom he was dealing, and that the principal may ratify if the agent reasonably intended, although without open avowal, to act as agent.[38]

d. Existence of Principal. poration before its organization. In such case there can be no ratification by the corporation after its organization. Although it may become liable on the promoter's contracts by adopting them, this liability does not relate to the time the contract was made but only to the time of adoption.[40] An apparent exception to the above rule exists in the case of executors and administrators. In such case the executor's or administrator's power when he is appointed relates back to the death of decedent, and since before he is appointed he is capable of being identified by the appointment, he may ratify an act done since the death of decedent and before his appointment.[41]

e. Knowledge of Facts — (i) In General. As a general rule, in order that a ratification of an unauthorized act or transaction of an agent may be valid and binding, it is essential that the principal have full knowledge, at the time of the ratification, of all material facts relative to the unauthorized transaction.[42]

L. 756, holding that the person for whom the agent professes to act must be capable of being ascertained at the time; that while he need not be named, there must be such a description of him that he can be ascertained.

A contract entered into in anticipation of the formation of an association by one who subsequently becomes its agent cannot be ratified by the association after its formation, since the existence of a principal when the act is done is one of the essential elements of a ratification. Effect of records.—A general ratification of all acts does not extend to those the principal was ignorant of, although they be deeds on record. Billings v. Morrow, 7 Cal. 171, 68 Am. Dec. 235. Assent by the principal to an unauthorized act of the agent may be presumed from acquiescence after notice, but the record of a deed from the agent is not constructive notice to the principal of its contents; much less will it give him notice that his agent has exceeded the limit of his authority when an inspection of the deed will not inform him of this fact. Reese v. Medlock, 27 Tex. 120, 84 Am. Dec. 611.

Usurious transactions.—If an agent in loaning money exacts without authority a bonus or sum in excess of the legal rate of interest, the acceptance by the principal of the security taken or the sum paid without knowledge of the nature of the transaction is not a ratification of the act and will not prevent a recovery of the amount lent with legal interest. matters not whether the principal's want of knowledge was due to designed or undesigned concealment or wilful representation on the part of the agent or his mere inadvertence, or whether the question arises between the principal and the agent or as to third persons.[45] Where, however, the principal was sufficiently informed of the facts, he cannot repudiate a ratification because he did not know the legal effect of the facts.[46] If the principal's misapprehension of the facts is partial, and the contract can be so severed as to enable him to avoid it to the extent of the mistake, it has been held that the balance of the contract ratified can be enforced against him.[47]

(II) FAILURE TO INQUIRE. In the absence of circumstances sufficient to put a man of reasonable prudence on inquiry, no duty rests upon a principal to make any effort to discover whether another is doing unauthorized acts in his name, and he may assume, until otherwise advised, that his agent will act within the scope of his authority; and hence a principal's failure to use diligence to make such discovery is not such negligence as will charge him with constructive knowledge of what he might have discovered by such inquiry, and therefore will not render him liable under a ratification made without such knowledge.[48] Knowledge is not to be imputed to a principal by reason of the mere fact that he had reasonable opportunity to acquire such knowledge.[49]

(III) Deliberate Ratification. The lack of full knowledge, however, does not protect a principal who deliberately chooses to act without such knowledge, as where, knowing that he is ignorant of some of the facts, he has such confidence in his agent that he is willing to assume the risk and to ratify the act without making inquiry for further information than he at the time possesses,[50] or where he deliberately ratifies without full knowledge under circumstances which are sufficient to put a reasonable man upon inquiry.[51]

Where the situation naturally and reasonably suggests that some inquiry or investigation should be made, and none is made, the person failing to make it will be deemed in law possessed of such facts as the inquiry would have disclosed. Where, therefore, the agent's whole conduct toward his principal is suggestive of unfair dealing, he is held by his ratification, although he was ignorant of important facts. Ballard v. Nye, 138 Cal. 588, 72 Pac. 156.

Illustrations.—A principal who is informed of a written contract of purchase made in his name by one assuming to act as his agent, and who is requested by the vendor to state whether the agent had authority to make it and whether the contract is correct, is put upon inquiry as to the terms of the contract; and it is negligence for him not to take the precaution to obtain a copy of it from the vendor before giving him assurance that it could be carried out, and in such case he cannot plead want of knowledge of the details of the contract to prevent the effect of a ratification implied from such assurance. Pope v. J. K. Armsby Co., 111 Cal. 159, 43 Pac. 589. So where a principal receives from his agent the proceeds of an unauthorized act with his report or account of the transaction, he cannot ignorantly or purposely shut his eyes to means of information within his possession and control, and thereby avail himself of the benefits of the transaction, and then repudiate it. Johnson v. Ogren, 102 Minn. 8, 112 N. W. 894.

operates as a ratification of the whole.[57] But this latter rule does not apply to different and independent transactions; and in the absence of other evidence of ratification, the mere ratification by a principal of previous acts of an agent is not conclusive of the ratification of later similar acts, and will not prevent the principal from rejecting them if he so elects.[58]

g. Necessity of New Consideration. Since ratification is equivalent to prior authority,[59] the original contract after ratification and by force of the ratification alone becomes the contract of the parties as though it had in the first instance been made by the agent with authority; and hence no consideration other than that inuring to the principal from the original contract is necessary to support a ratification.[60]

h. Necessity of Intention to Ratify. A ratification of the unauthorized act of an agent or of a stranger who assumes to act as such must be found in the intention of the principal, either express or implied, to ratify.[61] If that intention cannot be shown no ratification can be held to have been established.[62] But in most cases it is this intention as manifested by the principal's acts and statements, rather than by his professions as to ratification, that must determine whether the principal had a legal intent to ratify;[63] and the circumstances may be such that the law will recognize a constructive intention to ratify where none was actually intended.[64] authorization necessary, and not that of the act done by the agent, which determines the necessary form of ratification; [78] and if written authority was not necessary a contract in writing may be ratified by parol,[79] or impliedly by subsequent recognition or acquiescence,[80] although it was one which necessarily must have been in writing; [81] and if a seal was not essential to the validity of an instrument, the fact that one was attached by the agent does not make a ratification under seal necessary.[82] A ratification not under seal of an instrument to which a seal has been unnecessarily attached does not, however, render it effective as a sealed instrument,[83] but does make it effective as a simple contract not under seal.[84] The principal may be estopped by his acts and conduct to deny the authority of an agent, although there is no valid ratification by reason of the fact that in the particular case a particular form of ratification was necessary; [85] but unless the facts are sufficient to constitute an estoppel the general rule applies that the ratification must be in such a form as would be good as a prior authorization.[86]

of what an agent has done is of course equivalent to a prior authority.[87] Whether such express ratification must be in writing or under seal depends upon the principles above stated,[88] and unless a different mode of authorization would have been necessary an express ratification may be oral.[89] So also it is not necessary that the principal should state in express terms that he ratifies the act, but it is sufficient if what he has stated or written shows that such was his intention,[90] as when with a knowledge of the facts he states on being informed of what has been done that it is "all right," [91] or where goods have been purchased by an agent in his name he states on being presented with the bill or informed of the transaction that he will pay for them.[92] There may also be a ratification by means of an express authority given subsequent to the act but dated so as to appear to be prior thereto,[93] or by the admissions in an answer in a suit involving the transaction in question [94] or the property affected thereby.[95] An express ratification of what an agent may have done under a power of attorney is held to be no broader than the power; [96] and a writing alleged to be a ratification will be strictly limited to the purposes therein expressed, both in determining whether it amounts to a ratification [97] and in deciding whether it is broad enough to cover the acts claimed to be therein ratified; [98] but a qualification or condition in an express ratification should not be so construed as to defeat the necessary legal effect of what has been expressly ratified.[99]

an implied ratification there must be some acts or conduct upon his part which reasonably tend to show such intention;[14] and a mere effort on the part of the principal, after knowledge of the unauthorized act, to avoid loss thereby, will not amount to a ratification so as to relieve the agent from liability.[15] The principal in doing the acts relied on as a ratification must also have acted with knowledge of the material facts,[16] and if, as soon as informed of the facts, he expressly repudiates the transaction, a ratification cannot be implied.[17] In reference to what acts or conduct will constitute an implied ratification a distinction should be made between cases where the person assuming to act as agent did so without authority and cases where there was an actual agency but the agent exceeded the authority conferred;[18] conduct which in the former case might be sufficient will not always amount to a ratification in the latter.[19] It is also the rule that as between the principal and third persons dealing with an agent less is required to constitute a ratification than is required between the principal and the agent.[20] It is not necessary, in order to prevent a principal from being bound by the unauthorized act of an agent, that he should expressly repudiate it,[21] since a repudiation or intention not to ratify as well as a ratification may be implied from the acts and conduct of the principal;[22] and this is so not only where the principal by his conduct utterly repudiates the agent's acts,[23] but also when to avoid loss he seeks a friendly settlement of the differences caused by such unauthorized acts by yielding something of his own right to totally avoid the agent's agreements,[24] or requests the other party to the agreement not to insist upon its being carried out;[25] and where the act was unauthorized and the principal's acts and conduct are equally consistent with an intention not to ratify, a ratification will not ordinarily be implied.[26] If the contract of an agent is not to become binding until it is submitted to and approved by the principal, a ratification of the agent's acts is not to be implied where the contract has not been so submitted and the principal refuses to ratify it after learning of its terms;[27] but if the contract was submitted to the principal a ratification may be implied from his subsequent conduct in relation thereto.[28]

(II) ACCEPTING BENEFITS — (A) In General. It is a well settled principle of ratification that the principal must ratify the whole of the agent's unauthorized act or not at all, and cannot accept its beneficial results and at the same time avoid its burdens.[29] It follows that, as a general rule, if a principal with full knowledge of all the material facts takes and retains the benefits of the unauthorized act of an agent, he thereby ratifies such act,[30] and with the benefits accepts the agent that he would not ratify, and in order to avoid any misunderstanding or difficulty with the other party wrote him in the form of a request not to insist upon the transaction being carried out as he did not desire to sell, there was no ratification.

and he does not otherwise give his approval to such act,[33] or where the benefit received by the principal is merely incidental and arises out of a credit extended by a third person to the agent in his individual capacity.[34] The mere fact that the principal has received or enjoyed the benefits of the unauthorized act will not amount to a ratification if he did so in ignorance of the facts;[35] nor will his retention of such benefits after knowledge of the facts amount to a ratification if at the time he acquires such knowledge and without his fault conditions are such that he cannot be placed in statu quo or repudiate the entire transaction without loss,[36] or if the other party to the transaction did not deal with the agent as such but in his individual capacity;[37] nor will the retention of the benefits of one transaction constitute a ratification of another separate and distinct transaction between the agent and the same third party of which the principal had no knowledge.[38] A principal also has a right to receive money from an agent in payment of a debt due from the latter without inquiry as to the source from which it came;[39] and if it is

Application of rule.— If the principal merely receives back his own property, which was in the custody of another and to which he was unconditionally entitled, he does not thereby ratify an unauthorized agreement made by his agent under which the possession was restored, in the absence of any other evidence of a ratification of such act. Baldwin Fertilizer Co. v. Thompson, 106 Ga. 480, 32 S. E. 591. So the fact that a mining company retains ore taken from a mine by means of funds loaned to it without its knowledge by a third person through an agent who had no authority to borrow is not a ratification of the unauthorized act, since the ore belonged to the company both before and after it was taken from the mine. Union Gold Min. Co. v. Rocky Mountain Nat. Bank, 1 Colo. 531. And where an agent makes an unauthorized contract for a sale of land to a tenant of his principal, the fact that the principal after knowledge of the contract collects a small sum of money from the tenant, who at the time of the contract was in arrears for rent under his lease, is not a ratification of the contract of sale. Torrence v. Shedd, 112 Ill. 466.

34. Grover, etc., Mach. Co. v. Polhemus, 34 Mich. 247, holding that where a principal furnishes his agent with a horse, which the agent is to feed and take care of, the fact that the employment of the horse by the agent in the prosecution of the principal's business afforded a profit to the principal does not make the latter liable for board and keeping of the horse procured by the agent on credit without authority and charged directly to the agent.

in good faith so received and applied by the principal, its subsequent retention after he learns that it was procured through an unauthorized transaction entered into by the agent in his name will not amount to a ratification of such transaction.[40] The rule of ratification by the acceptance of benefits also implies the power of election to aeeept or reject what has been received,[41] and does not apply where the benefit has been received without knowledge and its return is impossible, as in the case of labor performed or services rendered,[42] or its continued enjoyment by the principal is unavoidable,[43] as where in taking, using, or disposing of a building or other thing he unavoidably enjoys the benefit of work or materials furnished or repairs or improvements made thereon.[44] Where, however, the principal has suffered no prejudice and can make restitution, he should, when he is apprised of the facts, make his election, and if he decides not to ratify he should return the fruits of the unauthorized act,[45] and if he does not do so but retains, uses, or disposes of what he has received, he will be held to have ratified the act of the agent,[46] and

The term "promptly" has been explained as implying merely that the principal "should not have been dilatory; should have been guilty of no unnecessary delay" (Clay v. Spratt, 7 Bush (Ky.) 334); but in other cases where the term "promptly" was used it was used in connection with the expressions "on the spot, or certainly within a few days" (Hazard v. Spears, 2 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 353, 4 Keyes 469), and "the first moment the facts comes to his knowledge" (Bredin v. Dubarry, 14 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 27).

It is error to instruct that the principal must repudiate the act "within a few days." Each case is governed by its peculiar circumstances, and the words "within a reasonable dependent upon the circumstances of the particular case,[71] which may be such on the one hand as to require prompt or immediate action, or on the other hand as to make some delay excusable or immaterial.[72] If the principal on being informed of the unauthorized act of the agent does not then repudiate it or do so within a reasonable time thereafter, but without any objection acquiesces in what the agent has done, he will ordinarily be held to have ratified the act,[73] and this is particularly true where the delay has been for a long time" or their equivalent should be used. Peck v. Ritchey, 66 Mo. 114.

It is stating the rule too broadly to say that the principal will be bound unless he repudiates the act instantly or as soon as it comes to his knowledge, particularly in the case of a mere intruder. Miller v. Excelsior Stone Co., 1 Ill. App. 273.

conclusive,[82] and it is held that it cannot be conclusive unless the rights of innocent third persons have been prejudiced thereby,[83] or in other words unless the case contains this element of equitable estoppel.[84] Silence is, however, always an element to be considered in connection with other evidence tending to show a ratification,[85] and may alone be sufficient to justify a finding of ratification,[86] particularly where the circumstances impose a special duty upon the principal to speak,[87] as where the other party was liable to be misled or injured by his failure to do so.[88] If the acquiescence, silence, or delay on the part of the principal has caused third persons in reliance thereon to forego some right or act to their prejudice, he should be held to have ratified the act of the agent.[89] Cases of this

Application of rule.— If the transaction between the agent and a third person is complete before the principal is notified, so that no injury can result to such person from a failure to repudiate the transaction within a reasonable time, the principal's failure to do so is merely evidence of a ratification; it is not conclusive, nor does it amount to an estoppel. But if the transaction is still in progress, and the silence of the principal after notice induces the person dealing with the agent to pursue a course which would be detrimental to him if the principal were not bound, a ratification will be conclusively presumed or the principal will be held estopped by his silence and delay. Opportunity to improve position.— Where after knowledge of the unauthorized act the third person affected thereby has an opportunity to improve his position, the failure of the principal to repudiate the act within a reasonable time after notice will amount to a ratification. character evidently contain the element of estoppel,[90] and some of the decisions are expressly based wholly or in part upon this ground.[91] It has been stated that since implied ratification by mere silence or failure to disaffirm is founded upon the doctrine of equitable estoppel,[92] it cannot be set up by the principal as a ratification in his own favor;[93] but as elsewhere shown there is a clear distinction between ratification and estoppel,[94] and silence may be evidence from which a ratification may be inferred, although no element of estoppel is involved.[95] It is also held that ratification by acquiescence is a doctrine that applies to principals, and that one of two joint agents who can only act jointly does not by failure to repudiate the separate act of his co-agent thereby ratify the act so as to make it valid and binding as against the principal;[96] but it may be invoked by the agent against the principal to protect him from the consequences of his failure to act according to his original agreement with the principal.[97]

(B) Distinction Between Unauthorized Acts of Agents and of Strangers. In applying the doctrine of ratification by silence or acquiescence the decisions make a distinction between cases where a stranger or volunteer assumes to act for another without any authority and cases where a recognized agent merely exceeds his authority,[98] and a further distinction has been made between acts of a mere obtrusive volunteer and one who, although without authority, assumes in good faith to act as an agent,[99] or who may reasonably be presumed to have the authority to act as such from the fact of having had such authority at a previous time [1] or on account of his family relations with the alleged principal.[2] While the authorities are not uniform as to the extent of the effect of these distinctions,[3] they are agreed that the question as to the relations between the principal and agent or person acting as such is important in determining whether there has been a ratification.[4] It has been said that in the case of an unauthorized act by a mere stranger the principal need take no notice of it, and can be bound only by an affirmative ratification;[5] but on the contrary it has been held that while mere silence in such cases is not conclusive,[6] it is evidence of ratification,[7] although of less weight than in the case of an agent exceeding his authority;[8] and that whether an inference of ratification should be drawn therefrom depends upon the circumstances of the case;[9] and if the circumstances are such that silence on the part of the principal would be calculated to mislead the other party, a failure to repudiate the act may justify a finding of ratification.[10]

(IV) Bringing Suit or Attempting to Enforce Contract. If the principal with knowledge of the facts brings suit against a third person, basing his right of action upon a contract made by an agent without authority, he thereby ratifies such contract;[11] and the same rule applies if he attempts in any other way to enforce or take advantage of such contract,[12] or if he sets it up by way of defense to a suit brought against him.[13] In such case the principal must abide by the entire contract as it was made by the agent,[14] and cannot avail himself of its benefits without also accepting its burdens,[15] or reject that part of the contract which was unauthorized and enforce the rest,[16] for the contract as made is the only one assented to by the third person against whom he seeks to enforce it.[17] If, however, when the principal first acquires knowledge of the facts conditions are such that he cannot in justice to himself repudiate the whole of the agent's acts he may stand upon what he has authorized, and the third person must bear the loss resulting from his dealing with an agent without learning the bounds of his authority.[18] It has been held that an action of assumpsit against a purchaser for goods sold and delivered without authority by an agent is not a ratification of the sale if the action was not relied on but discontinued before trial,[19] or if the complaint was amended so as to contain a count in trover;[20] but on the contrary it has been held that if such a suit is instituted with full knowledge of the facts it operates as a conclusive ratification,[21] and that plaintiff cannot thereafter discontinue the action and repudiate the transaction and sue in trover for the value of the property sold.[22] A suit brought by the agent without the knowledge of the principal upon an unauthorized transaction entered into by the former is not a ratification by the principal;[23] nor is the institution of a suit by the principal based upon the contract a ratification if instituted without knowledge of the material facts;[24] but upon discovery of the facts plaintiff should abandon his suit on the contract and repudiate the act of his agent, and assert such rights as he may have arising from the unauthorized act. So long as he insists and relies upon the contract, he cannot escape the consequences of a ratification by showing that he was not fully informed of its terms and conditions.[25] If the action is not based upon the contract made by the agent, the principal may, without ratifying it, maintain an action to protect his rights,[26] as in the case of goods wrongfully sold and delivered, by tendering back what may have been received and bringing an action of replevin[27] or an action of trover to recover their value.[28] Where an agent makes an unauthorized sale of property an action by the principal against the agent to recover the proceeds of the sale is prima facie a ratification of the sale;[29] but a suit against the agent for moneys wrongfully received is not necessarily a ratification, as to third persons, of the agent's unauthorized contract;[30] and where money has been wrongfully lent by the agent without taking sufficient security, an action in assumpsit by the principal against the borrower to recover the money lent is not an approval of the security taken and will not relieve the agent from liability.[31] Where an agent makes an unauthorized sale and delivery of property amounting to a conversion, the owner may, without ratifying the sale as made, waive the tort and sue the agent on the common counts in assumpsit to recover the value of the property;[32] and where an agent has made an unauthorized lease of property, an action by an heir of the owner to require the agent to account for rents received since the owner's death but not to hold him accountable as his own agent is not a ratification of the lease.[33]

(II) Exceptions and Limitations. The rule stated in the preceding section is, however, subject to many exceptions.[39] Thus it is a well settled rule that a ratification will not relate back so as to impair or defeat the rights of third persons which have intervened between the time of the doing of the unauthorized act and its ratification by the principal,[40] particularly where, when knowledge of the unauthorized act was first acquired by the principal, he disaffirmed and repudiated it.[41] So if a third person has a complete cause of action or defense when a suit is commenced, he cannot be deprived thereof by a subsequent ratification of an act without binding force except for such ratification.[42] Nor can ratification subject a third person to loss or damage for non-performance of an obligation or duty which he would not have been obliged to perform in the absence of ratification.[43] Neither can a ratification relate back so as to make valid an act which was utterly void and against the law,[44] or so as to give effect to the act of one who was incapacitated to receive an original appointment as agent,[45] or so as to make void a contract that was valid at the time and place of ratification.[46]

thorized act, which in favor of third persons might amount to a ratification, is not necessarily as to the agent such a ratification as to relieve him from liability.[60] A principal is not bound, in order to avoid ratification, to give the agent immediate notice of his dissent,[61] although he may be held to have ratified the acts, so as to relieve the agent, if he does not with reasonable promptness after knowledge notify the agent of his repudiation so that the agent may take proper steps to protect himself.[62] The fact that the principal is compelled to carry out a contract made with third persons by an agent acting contrary to his secret instructions cannot be urged by the agent against the principal as a ratification of such unauthorized acts.[63] So acceptance of part of the agent's acts in which he followed directions is no ratification of other separable acts in which he was disobedient to his principal's orders,[64] or negligent in the performance of his duties.[65]

(II) In Tort.[66] Whilst the ratification of an agent's tort will fix liability therefor to the third person upon the principal,[67] and will relieve the agent from liability to his principal on account of the tort,[68] it will not relieve the agent from liability to the third person injured thereby,[69] except where the act of the agent is Knowledge necessary.—There can be no ratification of an agent's wrongful act so as to excuse the agent if the principal had no knowledge that the agent was guilty of wrong. George N. Pierce Co. v. Beers, 190 Mass. 199, 76 N. E. 603. And see supra, I, F, 2, e.

The principal may elect to waive the agent's tort by ratifying his act, thus relieving him from tort liability to the principal and holding him accountable for the agency. Judah v. Vincennes University, 16 Ind. 56; Motley v. Motley, 42 N. C. 211, holding it to be a well-settled principle that, if an agent convert the property confided to him, the principal may at his election ratify the transaction and claim whatever profit is made by it. Where, however, an agent, without the consent of his principal, sells to himself at the price he was authorized to sell to a third person, the waiver by the principal of his right to proceed as for tort founded on the conversion by the agent of his property in purchasing the same himself, and his electing to sue the agent on an implied contract of purchase by the agent, does not constitute a ratification of the original act of the agent in purchasing himself so as to limit the recovery to the price specified; but it is merely a waiver of the element of tort in the transaction. Anderson v Grand Forks First Nat. Bank, 5 N. D. 451, 67 N. W. 821.

A mere failure to repudiate the transaction entirely is not necessarily to be construed as a ratification that will relieve the agent of his liability. Bell v. Cunningham, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 69, 7 L. ed. 606.

a trespass or other tort merely because he acted without authority; in such a case a subsequent ratification relates back and relieves his act of its tortious nature and him from liability therefor.[70]

d. As Against Principal. As against the principal the maxim omnis ratihabitio, etc., is operative in all cases; and upon ratification with full knowledge of the facts, or upon an intentional ratification regardless of knowledge, of an act done or contract made by an agent without authority, the principal is bound as fully as if the agent had acted under original authority,[71] especially where the third person thereon.[83] After ratification the property of the principal in the hands of an agent cannot be reached by a creditor of the agent.[84]

(II) Right of Withdrawal by Other Party. As to whether or not an unauthorized contract entered into by an agent on behalf of his principal is binding on the third person by the mere fact of ratification without any further action on his part, or whether he has a right to withdraw therefrom, the authorities are conflicting. According to one view, the third person has no right to withdraw his offer made to the agent, and a ratification by the principal, at least if made within a reasonable time, relates back to the time the contract was entered into so as to make it binding on the third person as from that moment, notwithstanding that on learning of the agent's want of authority he repudiated the contract before it had been ratified by the principal,[85] although it has been held that the agent and the third person may by mutual assent release the latter from the unauthorized contract at any time before ratification.[86] According to another view, the ratification of the principal cannot bind the third person unless after such ratification the third person renews his assent.[87] Between these two extremes the better rule, and that supported by the weight of authority, is that until ratification the third person is free to withdraw from the contract, but if he does not do so the principal's ratification cures the defect in authority and the third person becomes thereafter bound as though the authority had been previously conferred.[88]

G. Termination of Relation [89] — 1. By Act of Parties — a. By Force of Original Agreement — (i) Fulfilment of Purpose. An agency is of course created by the principal for a purpose, and when this purpose is fully accomplished the agency ipso facto ends, and the authority of the agent to bind the principal by further action thereupon ceases.[90] Under some circumstances it may be necessary, in order to work a termination of the agency, that the principal should either accept or reject what the agent has done. In this event the agency generally terminates when the principal accepts the agent's acts,[91] and not before acceptance or rejection thereof.[92] Ordinarily, so long as the purpose of the agency has not been fulfilled as originally contemplated, the agent's power continues,[93] unless the agent has definitely and finally failed in his attempt to accomplish that purpose.[94]

(II) Expiration of Term.[95] An agent may be appointed for a fixed term, in which case, whether the purpose of the agency has been accomplished or not, the expiration of the term puts an end to the agency; and unless the term is extended the rights and liabilities of the parties are limited to acts done within the term, and no later acts of the agent have any binding force on the principal,[96] although if the terms of the authority were such as to imply a power of the agent to bring to completion matters undertaken before the expiration of the time limit, he will be bound by acts of the agent as to such matters.[97] The duration of the term of the agency may be expressly stated in the power, or, in the absence of such statement, the provisions of the contract of employment or the surrounding circumstances may be such as to imply a definite term.[98] The circumstances may

Implied limitation to term of principal's absence.— A power of attorney contained a recital that the donor was about to return to South Australia, and was "desirous of appointing an attorney or attorneys to act for him during his absence from England." The operative part of the deed, which gave the attorney large powers of mortgaging the donor's property, contained no mention of the duration of those powers. It was held that the operative part of the deed was con-

be such that an extension of the term of the agency may be implied;[99] but no implication of extension at the expiration of the term arises from the mere fact that the principal continues in the business to which the agency related.[1] The term of authority of a subagent who becomes the agent of the principal, and not the agent of the agent who employed him, is not affected by the termination of the authority of the latter.[2]

b. By Revocation or Repudiation by Principal — (i) Power of Revocation — (a) General Rule. Save in exceptional cases,[3] a principal has power [4] to revoke the authority of his agent at his pleasure, with or without reason.[5] The principal trolled by the recital, and consequently that charges effected by the attorney upon the property of the donor while he was in England were invalid as against him. Danby v. Coutts, 29 Ch. D. 500, 54 L. J. Ch. 577, 52 L. T. Rep. N. S. 401, 33 Wkly. Rep. 559. So letters of attorney reciting the principal's intended departure from the country, "to remain absent in Europe and elsewhere, for some length of time," are limited by the recital of absence, and cannot be renewed by redelivery without change of terms or date upon the departure of the principal for Europe the second time. Heard v. March, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 580. To the contrary see Forbes v. Wooderson, 49 Me. 14, holding that where one is constituted an agent for the purchase and sale of goods in the name of the principal, a recital in the power of attorney that the principal "is about to leave upon a voyage to sea" does not limit the duration of the agency to the time when the voyage is completed.

been held that an agency is irrevocable by act of the principal alone if the power is expressly declared to be irrevocable and the agent is given an interest in its execution;[11] and also that the principal cannot revoke a power where it is granted as an incident to a complete contract for services to be rendered by the agent on the one side and for compensation to be paid by the principal on the other.[12] However, the mere fact that the agent advances money to the principal in the course of his employment does nor render the power irrevocable.[13]

(2) Authority Conferred For a Consideration. Where an authority or power is given for a valuable consideration, it cannot be revoked by act of the principal alone, in the absence of a stipulation that it shall be revocable.[14] If, however, the consideration for which the agency was conferred fails, the agency is revocable.[15]

Mere advances made by a factor, whether at the time employed as such or subsequently, do not alter the revocable nature of an authority to sell, unless the advances are accompanied by and made the consideration for an agreement that the authority shall not be revocable. Power coupled with interest distinguished. —A power conferred for a consideration is in some cases regarded as one form of a power coupled with an interest. See Bonney v. Smith, 17 Ill. 531; and cases cited passim, I, G, 1, b, (I), (B), (2). But in other cases the two are regarded as separate and distinct conceptions. See Coney v. Sanders, 28 Ga. 511 (holding that in order that a power may be a power coupled with an interest, the agent must have an interest in that to which the power relates; it is not enough that he pays a valuable consideration for the power); Guthrie v. Wabash R. Stipulation as to revocability.— The rule stated in the text is especially true where the power of attorney expressly stipulates that it is irrevocable. Barr v. Schroeder, 32 Cal. 609. But such a stipulation is not necessary to render the power irrevocable. Walker v. Denison, 86 Ill. 142; Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 174, 5 L. ed. 589 [reversing 12 Fed. Cas. Right of agent to execute power in his own name as test.— If the power is coupled with such an interest as precludes termination of the agency either by act of the principal or by his death, disability, etc., the agent may in such case execute the power in his own name. Norton v. Whitehead, 84 Cal. 263, 24 Pac. 154, 18 Am. St. Rep. 172 (holding that where an assignment is followed by an irrevocable power of attorney, a provision in the power authorizing action in the name of the principal detracts nothing from the right of the assignee to act in his own name as assignee in receiving moneys accruing either before or after the death of the principal); Gilbert v. Holmes, 64 Ill. 548; Bonney v. Smith, 17 Ill. 531 (semble); Hunt v. Rous-

not.[23] To bring a case within the exception it is necessary: (1) That the power and the interest should be coupled or united in point of time; that they should coexist. Hence the interest must exist in the subject-matter of the power, and not merely in that which is produced by an exercise of the power. If the agent's interest exists only in the proceeds arising from an execution of the power, the power and the interest are not coupled in point of time, since the power, in order to produce the interest, must be exercised, and by its exercise it is extinguished. The interest does not come into being until the power is gone.[24] (2) That the power and the interest should be coupled with reference to their subject-matter.

manier, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 174, 5 L. ed. 589 [reversing 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,898, 2 Mason 342] (holding that if the interest or estate passes with the power and vests in the person by whom the power is to be exercised, such person acts in his own name; the estate being in him passes from him by a conveyance in his own name; he is no longer a substitute acting in the place and name of another, but is a principal acting in his own name, in pursuance of powers which limit his estate). If, on the other hand, the interest of the agent is not such as to enable him to execute the power in his own name, it is not such an interest as precludes termination of the relation by revocation or by the principal's death, disability, etc. Frink v. Roe, 70 Cal. 296, 11 Pac. 820; Gilbert v. Holmes, supra; Andrews v. Travelers' Ins. A power of attorney which gives to the agent a veto upon the acts of his principal is equivalent to a power coupled with an interest. Day v. Candee, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,676, 3 Fish. Pat. Cas. 9.

An oral authority is irrevocable if coupled with an interest (Terwilliger v. Ontario, etc., R. Co., 149 N. Y. 86, 43 N. E. 432 [citing Hutchins v. Hebbard, 34 N. Co., supra).

In England it is said that an authority which is given for a consideration and by which the agent is to secure a benefit creates an interest precluding revocation. In re Hannan's Empress Gold Min., etc., Co., [1896] 2 Ch. 643, 65 L. They must exist with reference to the same thing.[25] For this reason also it is necessary that the agent's interest should exist in the subject-matter of the power, and not merely in that which is produced by an exercise of the power.[26] (3) That the power and the interest should be coupled with reference to the person in whom they are vested. They must be united in the same person.[27] And (4) That the power and the interest should be coupled with reference to their source. They must be derived by the agent from the same person.[28]

(II) RIGHT OF REVOCATION. A distinction is to be noted between a principal's power to revoke his agent's authority and his right to revoke it. Although as has been stated, he has the undoubted power, so far as the agency is executory, to revoke the agent's authority, it by no means follows that he has always a right to do so, since the contract of agency may provide otherwise. Accordingly, if he revokes the agency in violation of the contract, he becomes liable to the agent for the damages caused thereby.[29] However, it should be observed in this connection that the agent is limited to his action for damages; the courts will not specifically enforce the contract against the principal.[30] If the contract is expressly made revocable at any time by the principal,[31] or if it contains no terms indicating the creation of an agency for a definite period,[32] it is terminable at will, and the principal by revoking the authority incurs no liability to the agent, unless the agent has entered upon performance of the contract so that a revocation of his authority would work him legal injury.[33] And even where the agency is for a definite term, the principal has a right to revoke it before the expiration of such term because of the agent's failure faithfully to perform his express or implied undertakings as agent.[34]

Sole or exclusive agency.— The mere fact that the contract of agency expressly declares the agency to be exclusive does not preclude

Effect of specifying grounds for revocation. —A provision in a contract, otherwise terminable upon reasonable notice, that a violation of the spirit of the agreement shall be a sufficient cause for its abrogation does not imply that it can be abrogated only for sufficient cause. Adverse interest.— If an agent, without his principal's consent, engages in any employment or business for himself or another which tends to injure the principal's business, as in one which brings him in direct competition with the principal, he may lawfully be discharged before the expiration of the agreed term of service, even though he so conducts such other business that it does not interfere with the time and attention due the business of his employer. The mere fact however, that a corporation which acts as agent is controlled by another company which in turn is controlled by stock-holders in a rival company of the principal will not justify revocation of the agency, no hostile acts appearing. Brush Electric Co. v. Brush-Swan Electric Light Co., 49 Fed. 8 [reversed on other grounds in 52 Fed. 37, 2 C. C. A. 669].

Failure to deposit or remit funds.— Where a contract of agency stipulates that the agent shall deposit daily all moneys received, a continuous violation of the stipulation affords the principal just grounds for terminating the agency. Macfarren v. Gallinger, 210 Pa. St. 74, 59 Atl. 435 [affirming 33 Pittsb. Leg. J. N. S. 273]. And the same is true where a selling agent fails to remit the proceeds of the sale at the time when they become due under the contract of agency. Contractors', etc., Supply Co. v. Alta Portland Cement Co., 26 Ohio Cir. Ct. 49.

Indulgence in intoxicants or narcotics.—A single act of drunkenness might so offend the public with whom the agent is to deal as to justify the principal in discharging him. Bass Furnace Co. v. Glasscock, 82 Ala. 452, 2 So. 315, 60 Am. Rep. 748; Huntington v. Claflin, 10 Bosw. (N. Y.) 262 [affirmed in 38 N. Y. 182]. But to justify discharge of the agent for the use of narcotics it must appear that the habits complained of were not only injurious to the agent himself, but had a tendency to interfere with his usefulness or effectiveness as an agent. Jakowenko v. Des Moines Life Assoc., 21 Ohio Cir. Ct. 199, 11 Ohio Cir. Dec. 576.

Unsatisfying performance.— If the contract of employment provides that the performance shall be satisfactory to the principal, he is by the better rule the sole judge of satisfactory performance, and may revoke the authority at any time that he becomes honestly dissatisfied with the agent's efforts. Tyler v. Ames, 6 Lans. (N. Y.) 280; Karsner v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co., 12 Ohio Cir. Ct. 394, 6 Ohio Cir. Dec. 335. And see CONTRACTS, 9 Cyc. 618 et seq. See, however, Highland Buggy Co. v. Parker, 27 Ohio Cir. Ct. 115, where it was held that the principal's dissatisfaction must depend on such facts as would warrant a reasonable person in concluding that the services were not promoting the interest of the principal.

Violation of instructions is ground for discharge. Highland Buggy Co. v. Parker, 27 Ohio Cir. Ct. 115. And see Dodge v. Reynolds, 135 Mich. 692, 98 N. W. 737. But it is not a breach of a traveling salesman's contract justifying his discharge for him to go to a place off of his route to spend Sunday with his family, where it does not seriously interfere with his compliance with his contract. Milligan v. Sligh Furniture Co., 111 Mich. 629, 70 N. W. 133.

Dissolution of partnership agent.— Where a contract between a corporation and a partnership made the latter selling agents for the former, it being understood that one of the partners, who was known to the corporation, would use his personal efforts, and as incidental to the agency the corporation contracted to sell machines to the partnership, a dissolution of the partnership authorized the corporation to abandon the contract both as to the agency and as to the sales. Wheaton v. Cadillac Automobile Co., 143 Mich. 21, 106 N. W. 399.

When one of two joint agents becomes incapacitated, the principal has a right to discontinue the agency. Salisbury v. Brisbane, 61 N. Y. 617 [citing Robson v. Drummond, 2 B. & Ad. 303, 9 L. J. K. B. O. S. 187, 22 E. C. L. 132]. And see Rowe v. Rand, 111 Ind. 206, 12 N. E. 377.

Effect of specifying particular grounds for discharge.— A provision that an agency may be terminated on certain specified grounds does not imply an agreement that it shall exist indefinitely, so long as the agent commits none of the specified delicts. Stier v. Imperial L. Ins. Co., 58 Fed. 843 [applied in Willcox, etc., Sewing-Mach. Co. v. Ewing, 141 U. S. 627, 12 S. Ct. 94, 35 L. ed. 882].

Waiver of ground for discharge.— The principal is not bound to dismiss the agent instantaneously upon his misconduct; and by permitting a day to pass before discharging him the principal does not waive the right to revoke the agency because of the misconduct. was conferred by written instrument, yet it may be revoked by word of mouth,[36] and a parol revocation is effectual, although the authority was conferred under seal.[37] The authority may be revoked not only in express terms [38] but also by implication from words and conduct of the principal inconsistent with the continuation of the authority.[39] However, revocation is not to be inferred if the Recall of power of attorney.— The demand by the principal for the return of a written power under which an attorney in fact was acting, and its surrender without any further instructions, is a revocation of the power. Kelly v. Brennan, 55 N. J. Eq. 423, 37 Atl. 137. Revocation by bringing suit.— If a principal sues to set aside a conveyance by the agent on the ground that the power of attorney was obtained by fraud, it constitutes a revocation of the power. Hatch v. Ferguson, 66 Fed. 668, 14 C. C. A. 41. So a power to release a claim is revoked by the principal's subsequently suing on the claim. Flynn v. Butler, 189 Mass. 377, 75 N. E. 730. It has been held, however, that where by a contract of sale the price is to be paid to a third person, the vendor, by bringing a suit to collect the price, does not revoke that person's authority to give a discharge pendente lite. Walker v. Barrington 28 Vt. 781.

Revocation by grant of inconsistent power. — If other inconsistent power is conferred on the agent the prior authority is revoked. Hamilton v. Peace, 2 Desauss. Eq. (S. C.) 79. Thus a power given to one agent may be so inconsistent with a previous power given to another agent as to amount to a revocation thereof. Clark v. Mullenix, 11 Ind. 532; Converse v. Dillaye, 62 N. Y. 621; Brookshire v. Brookshire, 30 N. C. 74, 47 Am. Dec. 341 (semble); Aiken v. Taylor, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1900) 62 S. W. 200; Williamson v. Richardson, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 17,754. So an agent's authority is revoked by the subsequent grant of the same power to him and another jointly (Copeland v. Mercantile Ins. Co., 6 Pick. (Mass.) 198), and a power to two persons jointly and severally is revoked by a subsequent power to such two and one other jointly but not severally (Morgan v. Stell, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 305). On the other hand the later grant of power may not be inconsistent with the prior grant, and in such case no revocation of the first agency is to be implied merely from the creation of the second. Davol v. Quimby, 11 Allen (Mass.) 208 (holding that authority given by a principal to an agent to collect a sum of money is not necessarily revoked by the mere appointment of another agent to collect the same); Enright v. Beaumond, 68 Vt. 249, 35 Atl. 57 (holding that an authority given by the first indorsee of a note to continue to deal with the maker as if the payee were still the owner and holder of the note, and to take payments as they became due thereon, is not revoked by the fact that the note was subsequently placed in a bank for collection, since it is not necessary to the exercise of the authority that possession of the note be held); French v. Townes, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 513 (holding that a certain deed of trust to an agent did not revoke a power of attorney to him); Hatch v. Coddington, 95

principal's conduct is not necessarily inconsistent with a continuance of the agency.[40] A retraction or waiver of revocation by the principal, so as to continue the agency in force, is not lightly to be inferred;[41] but the parties may of course, upon revocation, enter into a new contract of agency.[42]

(B) Necessity and Sufficiency of Notice — (1) As Between Principal and Agent. As between principal and agent a revocation of authority does not become effective until it is in some way communicated to the agent. To give it effect the agent must have notice thereof, express or implied, actual or constructive.[43] Accordingly an uncommunicated revocation does not defeat any rights against the principal which may arise in favor of the agent out of subsequent acts done by him in pursuance of his original authority,[44] or subject the agent to any liability as for having done those acts without authority.[45] However, formal notice of revocation need not be given [46] unless the contract requires it.[47]

U. S. 48, 24 L. ed. 339 (in which it was held that a power conferred on an agent to negotiate bonds of the principal, if silent as to a like power previously given by the principal to the agent, does not operate as a revocation of the earlier power).

Y. (2) As Between Principal and Third Persons. As a general rule a revocation of authority does not become effective as between the principal and third persons subsequently dealing with the agent as such until they receive notice thereof. By conferring the authority the principal gives third persons who are aware of it the right to deal with the agent according to its terms on the principal's account; and they have a right to assume until they are otherwise informed that the authority continues as it was originally conferred. Accordingly, in the absence of notice of revocation, third persons subsequently dealing with the agent may hold the principal responsible for acts done by the agent within the apparent scope of his previous authority.[48] This rule, however, does not apply in favor only, and thus prevented the seller's giving the notice earlier or within the year, the agent was not entitled to any commission on deficient shipments, nor to a year's notice. Belgian Glass Co. v. Pabst, 101 N. Y. 621, 4 N. E. 519.

Failure to recall instrument evidencing authority. — Where an agency constituted by writing is revoked, but the written authority is left in the hands of the agent, and he subsequently exhibits it to a third person, who of third persons who have not dealt with the agent in reliance on the apparent agency;[49] nor in cases where the agent was originally constituted a special agent to do a particular thing, and not a general agent with continuing authority.[50] Ordinarily no particular form of notice is necessary to give effect to a revocation of authority.[51] As well as actual or express, notice may be implied or constructive.[52]

c. By Renunciation or Abandonment by Agent — (I) POWER OF RENUNCIATION. As the principal may in most cases revoke the agency at any time, even in cases when it is wrongful for him so to do,[53] so the agent in all cases has the power at any moment to renounce the agency.[54] deals with him as agent on the faith of it without notice of the revocation, the act of the agent within the scope of the authority will bind the principal. Beard v. Kirk, 11 N. H. 397. And see Williams v. Birbeck, Hoffm. (N. Y.) 359.

If the principal is guilty of great negligence in failing to give notice of revocation, he is bound to third persons subsequently dealing with the agent as such in good faith. Morgan v. Stell, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 305. And see Williams v. Birbeck, Hoffm. (N. Y.) 359.

Character of notice — Analogy to dissolution of partnership. — The same character of notice is required to inform the public of a revocation of an agency as is necessary to give information of the dissolution of a partnership. As affected by dealings with agent before revocation. — A distinction is made, as to the character of the notice, between persons who dealt with the agent before the revocation and persons dealing with him after the revocation but without sufficient notice thereof. Dubious or equivocal circumstances, however, will not be substituted for actual notice. Claflin v. Lenheim, 66 N. Y. 301; McNeilly v. Continental L. Ins. Co., 66 N. Notice of revocation may be given by the agent as well as by the principal. Vail v. Judson, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 165.

Notice of the creation of a second agency which is inconsistent with the continuance of the first is sufficient notice of the revocation of the first agency. Clark v. Mullenix, 11 Ind. 532; Johnson v. Youngs, 82 Wis. 107, 51 N. W. 1095; Williamson v. Richardson, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 17,754.

Bush v. Van Ness, 12 Vt. 83. Contra, Best v. Gunther, 125 Wis. 518, 104 N. W. 82, 918. In any event the record constitutes notice where the statute so provides. Arnold v. Stevenson, 2 Nev. 234. If, however, a revocation is not required to be recorded, the record thereof does not constitute notice (Williams v. Birbeck, Hoffm. (N. Y.) 359; Bush v. Van Ness, supra), although it has been held that it may be prudent to record it (Morgan v. Stell, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 305), and that if a power is recorded, although unnecessarily, and a third person knows of the record, he is guilty of negligence in failing to search the record office for a subsequent revocation (Williams v. Birbeck, supra). The revocation of a power of attorney to assign a mortgage of land must be recorded, where recordation is necessary, in the county where the land lies, else the record does not constitute notice. (II) Right of Renunciation — (A) In General. Because he has the power it by no means follows that the agent has the right to renounce the agency at his pleasure.[55] An agency at will, so far as it is executory, may of course be abandoned or renounced by the agent at any time,[56] unless he has entered upon performance of his undertaking, in which event he cannot withdraw therefrom wantonly and without cause without rendering himself responsible to the principal for any loss that he may sustain therefrom. To avoid this liability the agent must act in good faith, and give the principal reasonable notice of the intended abandonment, so that the latter may attend to the business himself, or appoint a new agent to attend to it, or otherwise avoid loss from the renunciation of the agency.[57] If, on the other hand, an agency is not at will, and the agent renounces it without sufficient cause, he is bound to indemnify the principal for any loss thereby sustained.[58] Whether the agency be one at will or otherwise, however, the agent may renounce it at any time for good cause.[59]

Stipulation as to duration of agency.— While an agency may be terminated at will on reasonable notice where no time is fixed for its duration (Security Trust, etc., Ins. Co. v. Ellsworth, 129 Wis. 349, 109 N. W. 125. And see Gibb v. McCoy, 19 N. Y. Suppl. 755), yet where a contract of agency provides that the agents shall pay a certain royalty per annum "for the first three years of this license," but that they may terminate the agreement at the end of the first year by giving three months' notice, and further provides for its termination by the principal at the end of three years, the agents cannot terminate the contract before the expiration of the third year, if they fail to terminate it at the end of the first (Gibb v. McCoy, supra). However, the fact that the agency is specified to be for a definite time is not, it seems, conclusive that it cannot rightfully be terminated at will, and if an agency for a certain period leaves the agent free to act or not as he will, the agency is in effect one at will, and may ordinarily be terminated at any time by the agent. Cannon Coal Co. v. Taggart, 1 Colo. App. 60, 27 Pac. 238.

Damages.—Where the agent of a coal company abandons the sale of the latter's coal, and the company procures another agent at some cost, and, so far as may be, themselves endeavor to sell the coal at an added expense, this is the principal damage which they are entitled to recover in an action for such breach; and although they may be injured in the matter of the price at which, after the renunciation of the agent's engagement, they are compelled to dispose of their product, such difference does not furnish the true basis of recovery. Cannon Coal Co. v. Taggart, 1 Colo. App. 60, 27 Pac. 238.

S. v. Jarvis, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,468, 2 Ware 278, 4 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 298 (semble).

58. Cannon Coal Co. v. Taggart, 1 Colo. App. 60, 27 Pac. 238, holding that this is especially true where the agent, before renunciation, had entered on his undertaking. And see Rowe v. Rand, 111 Ind. 206, 12 N. E. 377.

59. Conrey v. Brandegee, 2 La. Ann. 132, holding that where the conduct of the principal is calculated to interrupt the friendly relations existing between him and his agent, the latter may terminate his agency, under a full reservation of all his rights.

Abusive conduct by the principal toward the agent is good cause for renunciation. Cody v. Raynaud, 1 Colo. 272; Bishop v. Ranney, 59 Vt. 316, 7 Atl. 820.

(B) Compelling Specific Performance. Even though an agent may have no right to abandon the contract of agency, yet the courts will not decree specific enforcement thereof.[60] Such a contract calls for personal services, and the performance of these no court has the power to compel.[61] Moreover it is the policy of the law to allow the principal at any time to require the agent to cease to act in his name, and specific performance should not be available to one party to a contract unless it is open to the other also.[62] But while the courts will not compel an agent to perform his undertaking, they will in a proper case reach out a restraining arm to prevent him, and third persons in collusion with him, from taking advantage of his wrongful repudiation of the agency in such a way as to work injury to the principal.[63] Thus injunction will issue to restrain an agent from using, to the injury of the principal's business, information acquired in the performance of the agency;[64] and in cases where the ability of the agent is so peculiar or unique that he cannot be replaced, the court may by injunction forbid him to enter the employ of any other person than the principal.[65] Injunction, however, is an extraordinary remedy to be resorted to only when legal remedies fail. To justify its use therefore it must appear that an action at law for damages will not afford the principal adequate compensation for his injury.[66]

Breach of the contract of agency by the principal is good cause for renunciation. Duffield v. Michaels, 97 Fed. 825 [reversed on other grounds in 102 Fed. 820, 42 C. C. A. 649]; Newcomb v. Imperial L. Ins. Co., 51 Fed. 725. However, a contract obligating one of the parties to push the sale of the other's coal for one year, and to pay for all he may order at an agreed price, but not requiring him to take any definite amount, is not a contract of purchase and sale, carrying with it an implied warranty of quality, but an agency; and although the principal is bound to furnish merchantable coal, a single failure to do so will not warrant a rescission of the contract, but for this purpose it must appear that the coal was generally unsalable. 2. By Operation of Law[69] — a. In General. An agency is terminated in many cases by operation of law, regardless of the consent or intention of the parties, by changes affecting the subject-matter of the agency[70] or the parties thereto.[71] A contract of agency is likewise terminated by a change in the law which would render performance of the contract illegal.[72] And if, before the agent acts, the principal himself completes the transaction which the agent was employed to negotiate, the agency likewise ceases.[73] However, the loss or accidental destruc-

67. Necessity of notice of abandonment of agency at will see supra, I, G, 1, c, (II), (A).

68. Stoddart v. Key, 62 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 137, holding that where an agent under a contract as a book canvasser wrote to his principal that he had determined to sell out and give up the business, and that if the principal wanted it, to come or send, the principal, after having made a fair attempt to settle, and having reason to suspect the agent's good faith, was justified in treating the agency as abandoned and in appointing another agent, and that a sale of the list of subscribers afterward by the former agent, or an attempt on his part to release them, was invalid.

Where, however, the agent of an insurance company resigned his agency and asked the appointment of his son in his place, saying that the work of the latter would be under his immediate supervision; and another agent through whom this was communicated to the company added that the business would run the same as before, but that the agent resigning "desires his son to learn the business, and have some responsibility, and takes this method"; and the son was thereupon appointed, the court held that the evidence justified a finding that the agent thus resigning still had authority to act for the company. Ganser v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 38 Minn. 74, 35 N. W. 584. And where an agent for the care and sale of real estate wrote to the owners complaining that they had been acting with other agents, and that he would not so act any longer, but he continued to act thereafter, receiving propositions from the owners as to price and terms of sale, the contract of agency was not terminated by such letter. Stringfellow v. Elsea, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 45 S. W. 418.

Communication of renunciation.— In order to relieve an agent from the duties and obligations which he has assumed as such, his renunciation of the agency must not only be positive and unequivocal, but it is essential that it be made known to the principal. An undisclosed purpose to renounce is without effect. As the intelligent assent of the parties is necessary to establish the relation, so its dissolution must rest upon the knowledge of both. Bergner v. Bergner, 219 Pa. St. 113, 67 Atl. 999.

Adverse employment or interest.—Where an attorney in fact having power from a creditor of the estate of a deceased person is afterward appointed the administrator of the estate, the operation of the power becomes suspended, if indeed the agency is not thereby entirely renounced. In re Watkins, 121 Cal. 327, 53 Pac. 702. So where an agent had authority to sell a slave, and tried to sell but failed, and then attempted to run off, dispose of, and conceal the slave, his conduct was held to be an absolute abandonment and renunciation of his agency. 73. Vardon v. Vardon, 6 Ont. 719, holding that where each of two adverse principals who desire to enter into a mutual contract appoints an agent to settle the terms of the contract, and subsequently the principals either perfect the contract or put an end to proposals for one before the delegated power to their agents has been fully exercised, the acts of the principals are the binding acts, and the subsequent acts of the agents are of no avail as against their principals; but that if the principals had, between themselves, entered into an agreement, and the agents, tion of the instrument evidencing the agent's authority does not work a termination thereof.[74]

b. Change Affecting Subject-Matter of Agency — (i) In General. The agency may terminate by operation of law because of a change in the subject-matter thereof,[75] as where, in some instances, the subject-matter is destroyed [76] or the principal loses control over it by reason of a legal attachment against it.[77]

(ii) Disposal of Subject-Matter. An agency is effectually revoked when the principal disposes of his interest in the subject-matter of the agency by assignment, conveyance, contract for sale, or otherwise; [78] and where the principal in ignorance of what the principals were doing, had previously concluded a different agreement, the agreement made by the agents would bind, because prior in time. And see Rowe v. Rand, 111 Ind. 206, 12 N. E. 377.

A sale to the agent operates as a termination of the relation of agency. Alger v. Keith, 105 Fed. 105, 44 C. C. A. 371.

If the principal makes a lease of property which he has authorized another to sell (Hollingsworth v. Young County, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 590, 91 S. W. 1094) or to manage (Perkins v. Currier, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 10,985, 3 Woodb. & M. 69), it operates to revoke the agency.

Severance of interests of joint principals.— Where two principals jointly appoint an agent to take charge of some matter in which they are jointly interested, a severance of their interests works a termination of the agency. Rowe v. Rand, 111 Ind. 206, 12 N. E. 377. But see Cotton v. Rand, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 51 S. W. 55 [reversed on other grounds in 93 Tex. 7, 51 S. W. 838, 53 S. W. 343].

If the principal disposes of part of the subject-matter of the agency, the agency is terminated as to that part, and that part only. Perkins v. Currier, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 10,985, 3 Woodb. & M. 69. And see Copelin v. Shuler, (Tex. 1887) 6 S. W. 668.

If the agent's power is coupled with an interest in the subject-matter of the agency, it is not terminated by a sale of the property by the principal. Wells v. Littlefield, 59 has appointed several agents, a sale of the property by one is a revocation of the authority of the others.[79] Accordingly no later act of the agent can have any efficacy in favor of persons having proper notice of the revocation.[80] If, however, third persons subsequently dealing with the agent have no notice of the termination of the agency, they will be protected as against the principal, and, in some instances, against those claiming under him.[81]

c. Change Affecting Parties to Relation — (I) In General. An agency may terminate by operation of law by reason of a change in the condition or status of either of the parties to the relation before execution of the agency.[82]

(II) Adverse Interest or Employment. It has been held that an agency is terminated by operation of law where the agent, before performance of his undertaking and without the principal's consent, becomes adversely interested or accepts adverse employment.[83]

(III) Bankruptcy or Insolvency — (A) Of Principal. The power of an agent generally ceases by operation of law upon an adjudication of the principal's bankruptcy or insolvency,[84] or upon the making of a general assignment by the Record of deed as notice.— Under a statute providing that the record of a deed shall be notice to all persons of its existence, the registry of a deed executed by the principal is constructive notice to the agent and persons subsequently dealing with him of the revocation of a previous power of attorney to sell the land conveyed. principal for the benefit of his creditors;[85] and hence the agent does not become the agent of the assignee in bankruptcy or insolvency.[86] However, the agent may in such case do such acts as the bankrupt or insolvent himself might do, such as mere formal and ministerial acts to complete a transaction entered into before the bankruptcy or insolvency;[87] and if the agent has a power coupled with an interest the bankruptcy or insolvency of the principal cannot deprive him of his authority.[88] A power of attorney to confess a judgment is not revived after bankruptcy by a new promise which revives the debt, this not being an incident of the debt, but a separate matter creating an agency.[89]

(B) Of Agent. The insolvency of the agent will ordinarily put an end to the agency, at least if it is in any way connected with the agent's business which has caused his failure.[90] But the bankruptcy of the agent will not destroy any right he may have under a power coupled with interest.[91]

(IV) DEATH — (A) Of Principal — (1) GENERAL RULE. Since the agent can and only does act in the name of the principal and executes his will, it therefore follows as a general rule that the death of the principal ordinarily works an immediate revocation of the authority of the agent by operation of law.[92] Accord-it was held that if, after the act of bankruptcy but before an adjudication, property of the bankrupt is conveyed under the power to a bona fide purchaser without notice of the act of bankruptcy, he may hold the property as against the trustee.

are not binding on those claiming under or through the principal,[93] and afford the agent no basis for a claim against the principal's estate;[94] but on the contrary they expose the agent to liability to the representatives of the deceased principal,[95] and to the third persons with whom the subsequent dealings are had,[96] for acting without authority.

(2) Exceptions and Limitations — (a) In General. Where a principal assigns property in possession of his agent to a third person and authorizes the agent to turn it over to the assignee, the death of the principal before delivery to the assignee does not defeat the latter's right and title to the property.[97] And where the power of attorney forms part of a contract, and is security for money or for the performance of any act which is deemed valuable, it is generally made irrevocable in terms, and if not so, is deemed irrevocable in law, and the power may be exercised at any time, and is not affected by the death of the person who created it.[98] It has been held that if the authority has been in part actually executed by the agent, the death of the principal does not revoke the unexecuted part as to the other contracting party.[99] The conduct of the administrator of the deceased principal's estate may be such as to estop him from denying the validity of the agent's acts as against persons who have dealt with the agent without notice of the principal's death.[1]

An attempt to create an agency to become effective at the death of the principal is nugatory, since by that death the authority is terminated. Moore v. Weston, 13 N. D. 574, 102 N. (b) Where Death Is Unknown. Although, as has been seen, notice of the revocation of an agency is generally necessary,[2] yet when it is revoked by death the revocation takes effect at once, even as to persons ignorant of the principal's death. Accordingly a third person subsequently dealing with the agent as such acquires no rights and incurs no liabilities as against the principal's estate.[3] As to third persons acting in good faith and in ignorance of the death of the principal the civil law makes an exception, and many of the cases and text writers have regarded the common-law rule as harsh and unjust,[4] and in some of the states it has been modified by statute.[5] In other states it has been held that where the death of the principal is unknown acts of the agent are valid, if they need not have been done in the name of the principal.[6] But this distinction is a strained one, since unless the power is coupled with an interest, the agent, whether he uses the principal's name or not, has no right to act except in that name. Accordingly it is a sounder position to justify an exception in favor of parties acting in ignorance of the principal's death on equitable grounds. Why should the principal's distributees, who receive property only by grace of the law, be given by that law a better position as to the property than would have been occupied by their principal himself, and for a purely technical and often inequitable reason? On this principle some courts lay down the broad rule that while death of the principal

works a technical revocation of the agency, yet as to third persons dealing with the agent in ignorance of such death, the distributees take the estate with the same burdens that would have rested upon it in the principal's hands, and as to such persons the agency is not terminated by the death of the principal when such result would be inequitable.[7]

(c) Where Authority Is Coupled With Interest. As the principal if alive could not revoke the authority, so the death of the principal does not terminate the authority of the agent when he has a power coupled with an interest. An agent having such a power has an interest of his own in the subject-matter and can act in his own name, even after the death of the principal.[8] To preclude termination of the agency by the principal's death the agent's interest must be engrafted on an estate in the subject-matter of the agency itself. An interest less than this, such as an agency made irrevocable for a consideration or an agency created as part of a security, although it might prevent the principal from revoking the authority during his lifetime, will not enable it to survive his death.[9]

(3) Death of Joint Agent. A principal who appoints joint agents is presumed to do so because he desires their joint discretion.[13] The death therefore of one of several joint agents puts an end to the agency of all,[14] unless a prior or subsequent intention of the principal to the contrary appears.[15] However, a joint and several agency is not terminated by the death of one of the agents.[16]

(4) Effect of Primary Agent's Death on Subagency. If the authority of a subagent proceeds from the principal, it is not affected by the death of the agent who appointed him,[17] unless the subagent is a substitute for the agent, in which case the death of the agent in whose right he acts and to whom he is accountable revokes his authority,[18] and where the subagent acts under joint agents the death of one of them ordinarily terminates the authority of the subagent.[19]

(v) Dissolution of Partnership — (a) Partnership Principal.[20] Dissolution of a partnership ordinarily works a revocation of the authority of an agent of the firm;[21] but the successor to the firm may by its conduct justify the agent in relying on a continuance of the agency relation.[22]

(b) Partnership Agent.[23] Where a partnership is acting as agent its dissolution generally revokes the agency.[24]

(vi) Insanity — (a) Of Principal. Ordinarily if the principal becomes insane or otherwise mentally incapacitated before the agent has performed his undertaking the agency is terminated or suspended by operation of law.[25] An exception to this rule exists, however, in favor of third persons to whom the agent has been held out as having authority, and who have dealt with him in reliance thereon without notice of the principal's insanity, where their rights would be prejudiced by a denial of the agent's continuing authority,[26] unless there has been a legal adjudication of insanity, upon which all are charged with notice of such incompetency.[27] A second exception to the general rule exists in the case of an agency in which the power is coupled with an interest in the subject-matter thereof so that it can be exercised in the name of the agent himself. Such a power is not terminated by the principal's insanity.[28] The same reason that operates to suspend an agency during insanity effects its revival upon the restoration to sanity of the principal if he manifests no will to terminate the authority, and he may then, if he will, even assent to acts done by the agent during the suspension of the agency.[29]

(B) Of Agent. Since a person who is insane or otherwise mentally incompetent is generally incapable in the first instance of becoming an agent,[30] it would seem to follow that the agency of one who was sane when appointed agent would ordinarily terminate or become suspended upon his subsequently becoming insane or otherwise mentally incapacitated.[31]

(VII) MARRIAGE[32] — (A) Of Principal. The subsequent marriage of a man who has given a power of attorney terminates the agency so far as it may concern homestead interests acquired by the wife.[33] By the common law a married woman can have no agent, and accordingly the marriage of a feme sole instantly terminates the authority of her agents.[34]

(B) Of Agent. Where a woman has been appointed as agent, her subsequent marriage does not of itself necessarily terminate the agency.[35] And in no event is her agency thus terminated where her power is coupled with an interest in the subject-matter of the agency.[36] or the parties which ordinarily terminate an agency by operation of law,[47] an attempted revocation by the principal, or the occurrence of such changes, is ordinarily without effect on the rights and liabilities of the parties.[48]

(II) As Between Principal and Third Persons. Where, before the execution of an agency either wholly or in part, the principal, acting within his power and right, revokes the agent's authority,[49] or it expires by the terms of the contract of agency [50] or terminates by operation of law,[51] the agent is deprived of power to act in behalf of the principal or his representatatives.[52] Accordingly subsequent acts of the agent are not as a rule binding on the principal or his representatives, and third persons who subsequently deal with the agent with notice of the cessation of his authority [53] neither acquire any rights against the principal or his representatives, nor subject themselves to contractual liability by reason of such dealings.[54] If, however, the agency is such that the principal has no power to revoke it,[55] or of such a nature that it does not cease by reason of the various changes affecting the subject-matter or the parties which ordinarily terminate an agency by operation of law,[56] an attempted revocation by the principal, or the occurrence of such changes, is ordinarily without effect on the rights and liabilities of the parties.[57] third persons who have dealt with the agent, the termination of the agent's authority does not affect the rights and liabilities of the parties as to authorized transactions already concluded.[63]

II. THE AUTHORITY.

A. Nature and Extent[64] — 1. General Rule. It is fundamental in the law of principal and agent that the power of every agent to bind his principal rests upon the authority conferred upon him by that principal. Without this authority for which the principal himself, by act or conduct, has become responsible, the agent can bind only himself.[65] Every person therefore who undertakes to deal with an alleged agent is put upon inquiry, and must discover at his peril that such pretended agent has authority, that it is in its nature and extent sufficient to permit him to do the proposed act, and that its source can be traced to the will of the alleged principal.[66]

For example, an agent cannot lawfully act for his principal and for himself in matters in which they have adverse interests, and every person dealing with an agent who is acting for himself as well as for his principal in such matters is put upon inquiry as to the authority and good faith of the agent. Moores v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 15 Fed. 141.

Chargeable with knowledge of facts discoverable upon inquiry.— Third persons dealing with an agent are chargeable with a knowledge of such facts as a proper in-agent is absolute, inquiry as to limitations would be useless, and therefore is not required of the third person.[70] One dealing with an agent need not inquire into the agent's authority in the ordinary course of business,[71] and a person dealing with an agent whose authority is in writing need not look beyond such writing.[72] The necessity of inquiry as to the authority of one with whom it is proposed to deal as agent is illustrated in every sort of transaction. Thus one who makes payment to an agent must at his peril discover whether the agent has authority to receive payment at all,[73] or to receive payment in anything but money;[74] and if a debtor, owing money on a written security, pays it to another as the agent of the holder of the security, he must see that the person so paid is in possession of the security, or that he has authority or has been represented by the creditor to have authority to receive such payment.[75] And the courts are even more insistent that one dealing with an agent shall inquire whether he has sufficient authority, when such agent assumes to make or indorse negotiable paper.[76] When the principal directs that the agent shall contract only in writing it is of course the agent's duty so to do, and the principal will not be bound by oral contracts of the agent,[77] except when the quiry as to the agent's powers would have revealed to them. Cummins v. Beaumont, 68 Ala. 204; Leavens v. Thompson, 48 Hun (N. Y.) 389, 1 N. Y. Suppl. 18 [citing Ellis v. Horrman, 90 N. directions were in the nature of secret or private instructions to the agent, in which case the third person cannot be affected thereby.[78] In the case of a public agent, or of one whose authority must by law appear on the public records, all persons are chargeable with notice of his authority, so far as it is public in its nature or publicly recorded;[79] and when the authority is by law required to be in writing third persons are charged with knowledge of that fact, and of the limitations upon the agent's power contained in such writing.[80]

2. Authority Distinguished From Instructions — a. General Distinctions. In legal significance an agent's authority is the sum total of the powers which his principal has caused or permitted him to seem to possess. It is not limited to the powers actually conferred and those to be implied as flowing therefrom, but includes as well the apparent powers which the principal by reason of his acts or conduct is estopped to deny.[81] The instructions to the agent include not only terms of the power which are intended to be made known to those who deal with the agent, and a deviation from which will render ineffectual the act of the agent, but also private instructions or directions to the agent as to the manner in which he shall execute his commission, but which from their nature or the desire of the principal it is manifest he does not expect the agent to disclose to persons with whom he deals.[82] Between these there is a material distinction. The former are part of the agent's authority, the latter, however they may affect the agent, can have no effect to qualify the liability of the principal to third persons to whom they are not, and are not intended to be, communicated.[83] It is proper to receive evidence to establish the former, or to show the knowledge of third persons as to the authority of the agent, and any limitations thereon;[84] but the agent's apparent authority being proved, it is not proper to admit evidence of instructions unknown to third persons and not intended to be communicated by the agent.[85] The authority of the agent includes not only such instructions as are to be disclosed to third persons, but also, in the absence of special restrictions, the powers implied from the nature of the business,[86] from custom and usage,[87] or the previous course of dealing by the principal,[88] as well as power the exercise of which by the agent the principal is by his conduct estopped to deny,[89] or which he has subsequently approved and ratified.[90]

b. Secret or Private Instructions. Secret or private instructions to an agent, however binding they may be as between the principal and his agent, can have no effect on a third person who deals with the agent in ignorance of the instructions and in reliance on the apparent authority with which the principal has clothed him.[91]

The principal may make the authority of his agent as broad or as narrow as he will, and any lawful limitations which he chooses to impose upon the agent's powers and which are not in the nature of secret instructions will be as binding upon third persons legally charged with notice of them as upon the agent himself;[96] and if the original authority is a restricted and limited one, then such limitations form part of the power itself, and third persons must know them at their peril.[97] If specific instructions are brought home to the knowledge of a third person dealing with the agent it cannot matter whether he is a general or a special agent; in either case his power to bind his principal will be limited by these known instructions or limitations.[98]

d. Custom and Usage.[99] Custom and usage of the trade or business in which the agent is engaged form part of his authority. To such custom and usage the principal is presumed to consent, provided, however, that the evidence thereof is clear and that such custom or usage is shown to be reasonable, uniform, and notorious;[1] and the third person is equally presumed to understand and be guided

The liability of the principal is determined in any particular case, however, not merely by what was the apparent authority of the agent, but by what authority the third person, exercising reasonable care and prudence, was justified in believing that the principal had under the circumstances conferred upon his agent.[13]

3. Express and Implied Authority. In its nature the authority of an agent to act after his appointment, like the original appointment itself,[14] is either express or implied.[15] Even when the appointment of an agent has been expressly made, much of his resulting authority may be left to be implied,[16] and, indeed, an agent acting under the most detailed power of attorney almost invariably has at least a limited implied or incidental authority as to some details inevitably omitted in drawing the power of attorney.[17] Especially in the case of a general agent much must of necessity be left to his discretion and judgment as he is confronted with circumstances not foreseen when he was appointed, but requiring to be met in his best judgment so as to effect the principal's purpose.[18] And extraordinary emergencies may arise in which a person who is an agent may from the very necessities of the case be justified in assuming extraordinary powers.[19] When the authority is expressly conferred in writing the power of the agent is of course confined to the limits thus marked out;[20] and third persons having notice that they are dealing with an agent must inform themselves of the extent and limitations of his authority.[21] The principal too is presumed to have put into the express power all the limitations he cares to have made public, and third persons are not bound to look beyond such power for other restrictions on the agent's authority.[22] But when it is implied, and in so far as it is implied, the power of the agent must be determined from no one fact alone, but from all the facts and circumstances for which the principal is responsible.[23] This is so even when the authority is express and in writing, if it appears that the principal has by his acts or conduct justified third persons in believing that he has given the agent larger powers than those enumerated in the writing.[24] Even as to persons who know that the agent has a written power the principal may orally, or by his acts or conduct, expand the power of the agent beyond the limits specified in the writing.[25] The extent of the agent's authority, like his original appointment, is often to be implied from the previous course of dealing of the principal, or from his conduct under circumstances working against him an equitable estoppel.[26] And whether the agency is implied from the

App. 270, 90 S. W. 737).

"A special agency exists when there is a delegation of authority to do a single act." Keith v. Herschberg Optical Co., 48 Ark. 138, 145, 2 S. W. 777.

A local agent is: "An agent at a given place or within a definite district." Western Cottage Piano, etc., Co. v. Anderson, 97 Tex. 432, 435, 79 S. W. 516, where the court said: "An agent for the state is not a local agent within this State."

"An agent residing [in a place] either permanently or temporarily for the purpose of his agency." Moore v. Freeman's Nat. Bank, 92 N. C. 590, 596.

As applied to insurance, the term means any person or firm soliciting, contracting for, or receiving premiums for any insurance company, or who delivers policies, and includes a railroad agent or employee who solicits or receives premiums for accident insurance. Eichlitz v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 486, 487, 46 S. W. 643.

As applied to corporations, it means a person who represents it in the business for which it was incorporated. Bay City Iron Works v. Reeves, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 254, 257, 95 S. W. 739. See also PROCESS.

A particular agent is an agent authorized to do one or two particular things. Ruby v. Talbott, 5 N. M. 251, 21 Pac. 72, 3 L. R. A. 724.

Statutory definitions.— In some jurisdictions general and special agents are expressly defined by statute. See the statutes of the several states. And see Quay v. Presidio, etc., R. Co., 82 Cal. 1, 22 Pac. 925; Moore v. Skyles, 33 Mont. 135, 82 Pac. 799, 114 Am. St. Rep. 801, 3 L. R. A. 136.

they can do anything within the scope of their agency so as to bind the principal, notwithstanding there may be some secret instructions limiting their powers;[35] and whether the authority be general or limited they cannot charge their principals if they exceed it. They are of course more likely to transcend the bounds of a narrow than of an extended power; but the principle in either case is the same.[36] Universal agents are mentioned in a few cases;[37] but it is believed that there is no case in the books in which it has been necessary to a decision to hold any particular person to be a universal agent, nor is one likely to arise.[38]

b. Extent of General Authority. A general agent, unless he acts under a special and limited authority, impliedly has power to do whatever is usual and proper to effect such a purpose as is the subject of his employment. Hence, in the absence of known limitations, third persons dealing with such a general agent have a right to presume that the scope and character of the business he is employed to transact is the extent of his authority.[39] This rule, as already stated, does not

Principal undisclosed.— The ordinary rule that a principal is liable for the acts of his agent which are within the authority usually confided to an agent of that character, notwithstanding secret limitations upon that authority, applies also where the existence of any principal was unknown to the person contracting with and giving credit to the agent alone. Watteau v. Fenwick, [1893] 1 Q. B. 346, 56 J. P. 839, 67 L. T. Rep. N. S. 831, 5 Reports 143, 41 Wkly. Rep. 222; Edmunds v. Bushell, L. R. 1 Q. B. 97, 12 Jur.

apply when limitations upon the authority of the agent have been brought home to the knowledge of the third person dealing with him,[40] nor when the third person fails to make such inquiry as conditions demand, especially if the facts and circumstances are such as to suggest inquiry.[41] Furthermore, the implied power of any agent, however general, must be limited to such acts as are proper for an agent to do, and cannot extend to acts clearly adverse to the interests of the principal, or for the benefit of the agent personally.[42] And an agent has no implied authority to do acts not usually done by agents in that sort of transaction, nor to do them in other than the customary manner. The most general authority is limited to the business or purpose for which the agency was created.[43]

c. Extent of Special Authority. The authority of a special agent must be

Indorsement of check.— Where a person authorizes his agent to indorse a check, which he does, and the act is within the scope of his authority, such party cannot deny liability for the acts of his agent because the authority was intended only to apply to checks received by the agent in the proper management of his business, and his agent wilfully perverted the power vested in him to do some-

than he actually possesses, he will be estopped to deny the existence of as broad an authority as he permitted the special agent to exercise.[50] The act of a special agent outside of his authority is voidable at the option of the principal.[51]

5. Incidental Authority. In the absence of proof that the principal has withheld such authority, it is a rule of law that every grant of power implies and carries with it incidental authority to use all necessary means and inducements properly to perform it.[52] The means adopted, however, should be such as are most usual, thing more than was intended. Slaughter v. Fay, 80 Ill. App. 105.

6. Authority of Agents For Particular Purposes — a. To Buy — (1) In General. The general rule is that a principal is responsible for the purchases of his agent only when he authorizes him to make them, or when he permits him to make purchases knowing that the seller parts with his property on the responsibility of the principal, and not on the credit of the agent,[54] although of course he cannot escape responsibility for purchases because the agent has disregarded private instructions.[55] And the principal is not responsible if the agent has not purchased what he was authorized to buy within the limits within which he was necessary or reasonable to enable him to effect the purpose of his agency.

(II) Power to Buy on Credit. As a general rule if an agent is provided with the cash to pay for his purchases he has no authority to pledge the credit of his principal therefor, as that is not, under such circumstances, either necessary or proper to enable him to make the purchases.[69] A special agent employed to buy in a single transaction or under specific restrictions to buy only for cash,[70] or an agent acting under a written power wherein he is expressly limited to purchases for cash,[71] has no authority to buy on credit. But an agent with general authority to buy has a right to buy for cash or credit at his discretion;[72] and this seems to be true as to a general agent, although he is only authorized to buy for cash.[73] On the other hand, if purchases are reasonably necessary to enable the agent to accomplish the object of the agency, and no funds are provided to pay for such purchases, the agent has implied power to bind the principal by purchases of such goods upon credit.[74] And so he has if the principal by his conduct or course of dealing has held the agent out as having authority to make them,[75] or if the custom is well established to buy on credit in such dealings as are intrusted to the agent.[76] In any event the principal will not be bound to third persons who have knowledge, or by making the inquiry necessary under the circumstances would know, of the agent's want of authority to buy upon credit.[77] If the agent is limited to purchases on credit the principal cannot be bound by his contracts to purchase for cash.[78] And when no agency is established there can of course be no implied right in the seller to pledge to third persons the credit of the vendee.[79]

(III) Power to Make Payment. In the absence of a showing to the contrary, an agent with authority to buy is presumed to have authority to buy for cash and hence to make payment, for which the principal must indemnify him.[80] He has, however, no implied authority to advance money in payment before the goods are to be delivered under the contract.[81] If the agent exceeds the limits set by his principal and the necessary and proper acts to perform the agency, as by making advances or exchanges or other unusual contracts, his principal is not bound by such acts,[82] nor is he liable if the agent departs from his open instructions as to the manner of making payment; and this is especially true if the third person accepts the check or other paper credit of the agent in payment.[83]

b. To Sell Personal Property — (I) In General. The acts of an agent assuming to have authority to sell his principal's personal property will not bind the principal unless he has actually given the agent such authority, or has held him out to the public as clothed with it.[84] Such authority cannot be presumed from the fact that the agent was in a particular instance authorized to negotiate a sale,[85] or that he had previous or subsequent authority to solicit orders or to seek a purchaser,[86] or to buy property for his principal;[87] nor will power to sell to one person authorize a sale to another.[88] A general power to act for the principal in his business and to manage his property conveys no implied right to sell such property unless sales are regularly in the line of the business intrusted to the agent.[89] And no power to sell can be inferred from a power to store or ship, or to keep and let, or use, the property.[90] But authority to sell will be inferred whenever the intention to bestow such power is distinct and clear from the whole authority, the established usages and customs, and the surrounding circumstances. The authority need not be express and specific.[91] The property sold must be the property the agent was authorized to sell.. Authority to sell specified property, or property of a given description, conveys no power to sell other property;[92] but it will justify a sale of part of the specified property unless it be

Custom and usage may give such agent authority. Thus, an agent employed by a foreign manufacturer to solicit orders for goods must, as to innocent third persons dealing with him, be deemed to have authority to accept the orders, and to enter into contracts of sale binding on his principal, where that is the general usage in the business as conducted by such manufacturers through such agents, and where it is shown that such sales entered into by the agent in question had been repeatedly recognized by his employers. clear from the authority that the property was to be sold as a whole.[93] General authority to sell the product of a mine or factory empowers the agent to sell for future delivery;[94] but an agent authorized to sell the property of his principal when manufactured has no authority to sell before it is manufactured.[95] A commercial traveler or other agent has not usually authority to sell his samples.[96] Authority to sell of course does not apply to property not owned by the principal.[97] A sale must be made in the usual manner.[98] A selling agent presumptively has no power to sell the property in payment of a claim against his principal,[99] and certainly an agent empowered to sell his principal's property has no implied power to dispose of it for his own benefit in payment of his own debt. to sell or trade cannot directly or indirectly sell or trade to himself.[2] An agent employed to sell is not thereby authorized to compromise;[3] but if he has authority to fix the price and collect, this has been held sufficient to enable him to make a deduction by way of settlement.[4] An agent to sell goods has authority to agree with a purchaser not to sell to any others in the same town, and such an agreement will bind the principal, the purchaser not knowing of any limitation of the agent's authority.[5]

(II) Possession as Evidence of Authority. Simply intrusting to the agent possession of property confers upon him no authority to sell the same,[6] although possession and control of property for a period may be evidence tending to show authority to sell.[7] Nor can third persons acquire any title to such property from the agent unless he have some other evidence of property or authority to sell than bare possession.[8] If an agent be merely given the goods to seek a purchaser and report the offer to the principal, he can give no title to a third person without the principal's assent.[9] Certainly as between the principal and agent, such act confers no authority upon the agent to make a sale,[10] although property thus left with a regular dealer in such goods may be sold by him so as to bind the principal.[11] The fact that an agent has authority to sell certain property, or a specified interest in property, in his possession, does not warrant a sale by him of other property, or of other interests, which are also in his possession.[12] And an agent authorized to take possession of property and sell it has no power to sell it until it has come into his possession.[13] When, however, the principal not only intrusts to the agent the possession of the property, but also clothes him with apparent ownership or power of sale, then he will not be permitted to deny the agent's authority as against third persons who have dealt with him in good faith and with reasonable prudence.[14]

(III) Extent of Authority — (A) To Make Warranties. It seems not to be doubted that general authority given by a principal to an agent to sell personal property carries with it by necessary implication the power to warrant the title to the property so as to bind the owner.[15] There is, however, considerable confusion in the decisions as to the implied power of an agent to warrant the quality or condition of personal property sold by him.[16] The rule which is supported by the more numerous and more recent decisions is that if in the sale of that kind or class of goods which the agent is empowered to sell it is usual in the market to give a warranty, the agent may give that warranty in order to effect a sale, and the law presumes that he has such authority; and that if an agent with express authority to sell has no actual authority to warrant, no authority can be implied where the property is of a description not usually sold with warranty.[17] There are cases, however, which lay down a broader rule and hold that an agent upon whom general authority to sell is conferred will be presumed to have authority to warrant, unless the contrary appears.[18] A distinction is also sometimes drawn between the power of a general and a special agent in this respect, it being held that a special agent has no implied power to warrant the quality or condition of goods sold by him, while a general agent has, unless the contrary appears.[19] But this distinction has not always been recognized, and there is authority for the proposition that both a general and a special agent may warrant the goods sold by him in this respect.[20] In cases where it is the custom to give such a warranty, an agent undoubtedly has a right to do so. Thus it has frequently been held that one having unrestricted power to sell horses may warrant the age and soundness of the horse.[21] And the same rule has been applied to the sale of slaves.[22] The custom of manufacturers to warrant machinery is so general that an agent authorized to sell a machine has implied power, no restrictions appearing, to warrant it to be suitable for its purpose.[23] And when an agent is empowered to sell by sample there can be no question of his authority to warrant that the goods shall be equal in quality to the sample.[24] An agent may warrant that goods sold as of a particular description shall be of that description.[25] The principal is bound by such warranty even though, unknown to the buyer, the agent has express instructions not to make it;[26] but it is otherwise as to known instructions,[27] unless waived by the principal.[28] An agent who is not empowered to make sales of goods has no implied power to warrant their quality.[29] Whatever the implied power of an agent to warrant the quality of the goods he is then selling, it cannot extend to authorize a warranty by him of goods of a like kind which his principals have previously sold, or may afterward sell to the same persons. His implied power to warrant is exhausted with the sale he then makes.[30] The implied power be the usage and custom, well recognized and known to the person dealt with,[39] as well as in cases where the manner in which the business is conducted makes sales on credit necessary.[41] A sale for cash upon the delivery of the goods has been held to be within the power of an agent authorized to sell for cash.[42] An agent may give the purchaser a reasonable time within which to accept or reject the proposition of sale,[43] or to make trial of machinery, or other similar wares, to determine whether it is satisfactory.[44] Again, a sale contemplates a price in money. Hence authority to sell conveys power to sell for cash and not to exchange for other property, or for part property and part cash,[45] unless the terms of the agency clearly empowered him to exchange.[46]

Thus where goods were sold on credit, and a bill was delivered therewith on which was printed the notice, "Pay none but authorized collectors," a payment for the goods thereafter made to the salesman who sold the same, and who was without actual authority to receive payment, or apparent authority other than that he sold the goods, did not

not be express, but may be implied from the fact that the bill for the goods previously sold by him is sent to him by his principal and presented by the agent for payment.[53] An agent who, by the habits and course of dealing of the principal, is permitted to appear to have authority to make collections, or to transact business for his principal generally, may receive payment for goods sold.[54] It seems that if an agent is authorized to sell on credit, he may accept the vendee's note for the purchase-price, or for so much of it as is to be paid at a future date;[55] but it does not follow that by virtue of his authority to sell he has any authority to collect such paper at maturity, or at any time after the sale. By the sale and acceptance of the paper for his principal his authority is presumptively exhausted.[56] And even where an agent is authorized to collect notes after their maturity, he has not the right to take anything save money in the payment of them, without express authority from his principal.[57] If the purchaser of property does not know that he is dealing with an agent of the owner, and has not good reason to know it, he is justified in treating the agent as the owner, and payment of the price to him will be a defense to an action by the owner for the amount.[58] A selling agent has no implied power to release a claim without payment,[59] and if he has general authority to collect, this will not authorize him to reinvest the funds so collected.[60]

(D) To Rescind or Modify Sale.[61] A sales agent may be expressly given any authority the principal desires, and the acts and conduct of the principal may be equivalent to the grant of express authority. But ordinarily such an agent is supposed to be employed to contract a sale, and has no implied power, once this is done, either to undo or to modify the contract.[62] The sale completes the transaction, and there is no presumption, from the mere authority to sell, that the agency continues so as to enable the agent to rescind the sale, or to offer the vendee further inducements to carry out its terms, or to adjust the damages resulting from a breach of its terms.[63] The agency, however, does presumptively continue until the sale is complete,[64] and accordingly if the sale is conditional upon the quality of the goods or chattels, and the principal has not fulfilled the terms of his warranty, the sale is not complete, and the agent may modify the terms of the contract as to the notice of the defects in the chattels, or as to their return.[65] But a general agent with full authority to represent the principal in a given locality, or to manage a particular branch of the principal's business, is more than a mere sales agent, and where the conduct of his agency reasonably requires power to modify the contracts he makes, courts have often held the right so to do to be within his implied powers.[66] Certainly, if the principal asserts the authority of the agent to rescind the sale, third persons will not be heard to deny it.[67] Where the principal has prescribed the limits or terms, an agent has no implied power to modify or extend them.[68] and the intent as gathered from the whole instrument of appointment, have sometimes led the courts to include after-acquired lands.[77] Power to sell all lands which the principal may own is generally held to include lands acquired during the agency and after the execution of the power.[78] A power to buy and sell real estate has been construed to authorize the agent to sell and convey only such lands as he had first bought, and not land owned by the principal previous to the execution of the power,[79] and authority to claim, recover, and sell lands is restricted to lands held by adverse claimants.[80] Power to sell the realty includes the right to sell everything that is appurtenant thereto, so as to form part of it.[81] If the power describes the lands to be sold, the sale by the agent will be binding if the land conveyed can be ascertained by the description in the power.[82] Where a power of attorney has been given, authorizing the conveyance of land, verbal directions from the maker of the power can confer no new authority, nor enlarge that contained in the power of attorney.[83] A deed from one who has power of attorney to sell passes title, although he does not refer to such power and has no estate in the land conveyed.[84]

(II) Extent of Authority — (A) In General. The authority to sell land must be strictly pursued and acts outside the authority will not bind the principal.[85]

Thus the power merely to sell does not authorize the agent to exchange,[86] to mortgage,[87] to make representations as to quantity, quality, or condition of the real estate,[88] or to convey in payment of a debt or claim.[89] Where the authority to sell is limited as to time the sale to bind the principal must be consummated at or within the time stated.[90] In the absence of a time limit the sale must be made within what is under the circumstances a reasonable time.[91] Authority may, however, be conferred upon the agent broad enough to include other acts than mere sale, in which case of course the agent's power to bind his principal will be as broad as the authority.[92] An agent to sell land has, however, by implication authority to perform all acts necessary to effect a binding sale,[93] for the rule of strict construction will not be allowed to defeat the very purpose of the agency.[94] Where the agent has authority to exercise discretion his exercise thereof will bind the principal;[95] but it must be for the principal's benefit,[96] unless it is clearly the object of the agency that the agent should deal with the real estate for his own benefit.[97] A power of attorney for the sale of lands recorded, and in no manner revoked, may be rightfully regarded by purchasers as continuing.[98]

(B) To Convey and Warrant. While a power of attorney to sell land is not of itself a conveyance and does not give the agent any title to the land,[99] yet where an agent is empowered by power of attorney to sell real estate, the authority to execute proper instruments required by law to carry such sale into effect is necessarily incident.[1] And a power without restriction to sell and convey real estate gives authority to the agent to deliver deeds with general warranty binding on the principal, where under the circumstances this is the common and usual mode of assurance.[2] Although authority not under seal to sell land is insufficient to empower an agent to convey it,[3] such authority nevertheless empowers him to execute a contract for such sale binding upon his principal.[4] But the mere employ-

In full and ample manner as principal.— A power of attorney which authorizes a conveyance to be made in as full and ample a manner as the principal could execute authorizes a deed to be made by the attorney, with covenants of general warranty. Authority to grant discharges.— The authority in a power of attorney "to grant any and all discharges by deed or otherwise, both personal and real," as fully as the principal might do, cannot be fairly construed as enabling the agent to convey by deed of warranty the real estate of his principal. Heath v. Nutter, 50 Me. 378.

Mere power to sell lands, without more, will not authorize an agent to bind his principal by a written contract to convey. Duffy v. Hobson, 40 Cal. 240, 6 Am. Rep. 617; Tyrrell v. O'Connor, 56 N. J. Eq. 448, 41 Atl. 674.

ment of a real estate broker to find a purchaser of land on terms fixed by the owner does not include authority to execute a contract binding upon his principal.[5] A power of attorney to make deeds of conveyance and of partition authorizes a deed of sale as well as a deed of partition.[6] Once the agent has executed the instrument of conveyance he was authorized to make he has no power to issue a second instrument conveying different property, although he had implied power to correct, by a second instrument, errors in the first one.[7]

(c) To Fix or Modify Terms of Sale. An agent empowered to sell lands has the undoubted power to do those things that are usually done in making such sales,[8] including the power to fix the price unless that has been determined by the principal.[9] He may also make any reasonable agreements, not contrary to his authority, as to the time and terms of payment.[10] Presumptively a sale is to be made for a price in money or its equivalent.[11] To transfer for anything but money

Authority determined by circumstances.— The extent of the authority conferred by a memorandum in writing merely empowering an agent to sell must be determined by the circumstances under which the power is given, the person to whom it is given, and all facts surrounding the parties at the time of the execution of the writing. If the language of the writing or the circumstances surrounding the parties indicate that it was intended to confer the power on the agent to enter into contracts of sale and bind his principal by written contract, then the naked power to find a purchaser will confer no such authority on the agent. Donnan v. Adams, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 615, 71 S. W. 580.

Writing unnecessary.— It is not necessary that the authority of an agent to bind his principal by written agreement to convey should be in writing, such authority may be given by parol. Tyrrell v. O'Connor, 56 N. J. Eq. 448, 41 Atl. 674.

S. 216, 15 S. Ct. 816, 39 L. ed. 956), even though the times for payment agreed to by the agent may be earlier than those authorized. The law will not presume the principal desired earlier payment. is to exchange, not to sell, and is not authorized under a power to an agent to sell;[12] and if the authority is to exchange real estate, then it must be an exchange, and not a sale for cash, or part for cash and part in exchange.[13] Generally a power to sell lands or to do some act in connection with their sale conveys no authority thereafter to modify or rescind the contract of sale;[14] and an agent cannot without his principal's consent cancel so as to release the purchaser.[15]

(D) To Give Credit. Presumptively the agent should sell for cash and not on credit.[16] His right to sell lands on credit, if not expressly given or justified by the conduct of the principal, arises only when he acts under a power containing no limitations or directions as to whether sales shall be for cash or on credit, and to give credit is shown to be according to the usual custom in such sales.[17] When the agent is authorized to sell upon credit, a reasonable credit is meant.[18]

(E) To Receive Payment.[19] An agent to sell lands, like an agent to sell goods, has no implied authority to collect payments that are to be made after the date of the sale,[20] although authority to sell and convey lands will authorize the agent to receive so much of the price as is to be paid down,[21] and the terms of the power of attorney[22] or the conduct of the principal[23] may justify a payment of deferred payments to the agent.

d. To Collect[24]— (I) In General. Authority to collect, like all authority of an agent, must be traced to the principal. Moreover it is not to be inferred from mere employment as agent. To bind the principal the collection must be made by one who is not only his agent but who has been clothed with authority to make such collection.[25] The authority of the agent to collect, like his authority generally, is to be determined in the light of all circumstances surrounding the parties, and Acceptance of payment by principal.— The fact that the principal has not left such securities with the agent does not show necessarily that the agent has not authority to make collections, especially when the principal without dissent accepts payment from the third person through the agent who negotiated a loan. Quinn v. Dresbach, 75 Cal. 159, 16 Pac. 762, 7 Am. St. Rep. 138 (holding that the fact that a supposed agent of the payee of a note was not in possession of it at the time the maker made payments to him on its account is not conclusive as to his lack of authority to receive the payments, even though, as the maker knew, the note had been transferred to a bank for collection); Union Trust Co. v. McKeon, 76 Conn. 508, 57 Atl.

the burden of knowing at his peril that the agent possesses the notes or securities at the time each payment is made, and if as a matter of fact he has parted with such possession, payment to him will not discharge the debtor of liability to the principal unless the money actually reaches the latter.[32] It is not necessary, however, that the third person should demand that he be shown the papers. He will be as fully protected if as a matter of fact they are in the agent's possession, although of course if the debtor does not see them he assumes the risk that the agent may be deceiving him.[33] These rules of course have no application to cases in which the agent has actual or ostensible authority to receive payment for the principal without having possession of the securities. In other words, to give an agent authority to receive payments on a note it is not always essential to leave the note in the agent's possession.[34] And where a principal by his habits and course of dealing has held an agent out as having general authority to make loans for him, and to receive payments on the same, he may be bound by payments to the agent, although the securities are not in the possession of the latter, and although payments are accepted before maturity,[35] or are made to one who has had actual authority which has been revoked, but without notice to the third person.[36] If the debtor knows that the agent has no authority to collect, then his payment to the agent is not validated by the fact that the securities were in the agent's hands.[37] The fact that notes are made payable at the office of the agent negotiating the loan is not conclusive of his authority to receive payments on the notes; nor is the added fact that the notes are in his possession, if it appears that they are known not to have been left there for collection.[38] Payment to one who has had such authority to collect is no payment to the principal after he has properly terminated the agency.[39]

Co. v. Briggs, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 41 S. W. 1036, in which an agent of a non-resident loan company negotiated a loan and was named trustee in the deed given to secure the loan; and he continued to be the company's agent for the transaction of all its business where the loan was made and was collecting its money and loaning its funds; and it was held that he had authority, even as against the company, authority of an agent employed to make collections, however, carries no implied to declare money secured by said trust deed to be due, and to sell the lands under such deed, and to make deeds to the purchaser, and to receive the money paid by him.

Illustrations.— To bring suit to compel payment is one of the necessary powers of a collecting agent, to be sparingly exercised as a final resort. German F. Ins. Co. v. Grunert, 112 Ill. 68, 1 N. E. 113 (holding that authority to bring necessary suits to collect insurance in case of loss by fire is indispensably incident to the power of a general agent in charge of his principal's business, and essential to an efficient discharge of his duties); Briggs v. Yetzer, 103 Iowa 342, 72 N. In aid of this power an agent may issue execution upon a judgment obtained (Schock v. Lesley, 2 Del. Ch. 304; Joyce v. Duplessis, 15 La. Ann. 242, 77 Am. Dec. 185), and pursue the property due the principal on the debt into the hands of third persons who may have acquired it from the debtor (Beck v. Minnesota, etc., Grain Co., 131 Iowa 62, 107 N. W. 1032; Sherman v. Sherman, etc., Co., 64 N. J. Eq. 77, 53 Atl. 226). He may also agree with the execution debtor to reconvey the property to him upon payment of the judgment debt. Brown v. Jackson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 40 S. W. 162. An agent who, under his contract, is constituted a general collection agent, and who, in the performance of his duties, agrees to place with a bank for collection, notes received by him for his principal, as consideration of the sale by him to a third person of machinery belonging to his principal, has the power to bind his principal by a contract with the bank, authorizing it to make advancements for freight on the machinery sold, and to retain the amount so advanced from the first moneys collected on such notes and contracts. Northwest Thresher Co. v. Eddyville State Bank, (Nebr. 1907) 114 N. W. 291.

Limitations upon authority.—An agent to collect has no implied authority to assign the debt to a third person to collect (Rigby v. Lowe, 125 Cal. 613, 58 Pac. 153; Dingley v. McDonald, 124 Cal. 682, 57 Pac. 574), nor does a bare power to collect authorize the agent to foreclose a mortgage securing the debt (White v. Madigan, 78 Minn. 286, 80 N. W. 1125; Burchard v. Hull, 71 Minn. 430, 74 N. W. 163; Corey v. Hunter, 10 N. D. 5, 84 N. W. 570, holding that evidence that an agent had been in the habit of loaning funds of his principal and collecting interest thereon as it became due, and on instructions from his principal reinvesting the same does not warrant a finding that such agent had ostensible authority to foreclose a mortgage running to his principal. Compare Standard Brewery v. Nudelman, 70 Ill. App. 356; Curtis v. Cutler, 76 Fed. 16, 22 C. C. A. 16, 37 L. R. App. 1905) 74 N. E. 551, holding that the act of the agent of the lessor in receiving a payment after the expiration of the term did not bind the lessor), nor to reloan the money he has collected (Haynes v. Carpenter, 86 Mo. App. 30, holding that a power of attorney to attend to the business of the grantor, to collect all money and obligations due, adjust all business matters of whatever nature, pay and settle all debts, draw checks, and do all acts in the premises which the attorney may deem proper, does not confer power to reloan money after it has been collected, and such reloaning constitutes a conversion by the attorney), nor generally to do acts not necessary or proper for the collection (Hathaway v. Choury, 14 Colo. But general authority to conduct a business involving the acceptance of checks or notes will involve of necessity implied authority to take and indorse such paper in the course of the business intrusted to the agent.[50] Authority to an agent to take in settlement whatever he can get will give him power to accept paper not current, when circumstances make collection of lawful currency impossible or improbable;[51] and extraordinary conditions may justify the agent in making unusual terms of settlement, and in the case of collecting a claim against an insolvent debtor the acceptance of notes or securities less than money may be best and necessary.[52] Failure of the principal Griffin v. Erskine, 131 Iowa 444, 109 N. Agent's note.— Where an agent has authority to collect a note, but is not authorized to receive anything in payment but money, he cannot accept his own note in payment. However, if he supplies out of his own funds the amount of the note received by him, and turns the same over to his principal less his commission for collection, the principal cannot complain. Wilcox, etc., Organ Co. v. Lasley, 40 Kan. 521, 20 Pac. 228.

Note payable to agent.— Where an agent for the collection of a debt receives a note, payable to himself at a future day, in payment, this is not a satisfaction of the debt of the principal, nor a bar to an action by him to recover the original debt. Personal liability of agent.— Where one accepts a draft where he might have procured money in payment of a check he has for collection, and the draft is dishonored, he is liable for its value, although the bank issuing and the bank on which the draft is drawn are solvent, and the draft is stopped by telegram of the debtor, a collector having no authority to accept anything but money in payment of a claim. to reject the payment received by the agent may of course become in law an acceptance of it;[53] and if the principal does not reject the settlement it does not lie with third persons to set up the agent's want of authority.[54]

(c) To Modify Terms of Payment. It is the duty of the agent to make the collection in the manner prescribed by the principal, and he has no implied power to make it in any other mode. 53. Glass v. Davidson, 1 Baxt. (Tenn.) 47, holding that if a debtor having no notice that his creditor's agent is under special instructions to receive nothing but legal tender pays the attorney in current bank-notes subject to the creditor's approval, a failure to return such notes within reasonable time will render the payment binding on the creditor.

Substantial compliance is enough.— Thus where a creditor in the country directed his debtor to pay money into a London banking-house for his account, but he had no account with the house but through a country banker, the court held that such direction to make the payment was complied with by a payment to the credit of his account with the country banker. Responsibility for agent's method.— One who, without giving special instructions, employs a collecting agent whose card announces that he will treat debtors "with delicacy, so as not to offend them, or with such severity as to show that no trifling is intended," is responsible for whatever means the agent adopts. Caswell v. Cross, 120 Mass. 545.

Thus, where an agent having money placed in his hands with undisputed power to loan, manage, and collect as he should deem best, makes an agreement for extension of time of payment his principal is bound thereby; Wheeler v. Benton, 67 Minn. 293, 69 N. W. 927, holding that such power may be conferred by a long course of dealing), to release some of the parties who are liable upon it, or to substitute other persons in their stead (Torbit v. Heath, 11 Colo. (D) Application of Payment.[56] Where one makes a person an agent to receive money for him, he is also his agent to receive such declarations as accompany the payment and direct its application.[57] But if no directions as to its application are given then the agent may make application of the payment according to his discretion,[58] although if he is under the same obligations to the several creditors, and the debts stand on an equal footing, his duty is to treat all creditors alike, and distribute the payment pro rata.[59] And where payments are made by a debtor upon several debts owed to one creditor, a general agent for the collection of such debts has implied power to apply the payments in his discretion.[60] The general manager of a creditor's business is such an agent as has power to stipulate for the application of the proceeds of particular collaterals received by him to the payment of a given debt, although this may modify a previous contract made by the creditor with the debtor.[61] If a person have two accounts with a person paying money, one due himself and one due a person for whom he is acting as agent, general payments will be applied ratably to the debts due on both accounts.[62] And if an agent blend his own and his principal's accounts in one demand, and receive a general remittance, he must apply it ratably.[63]

(E) Employment of Subagents. A collecting agent, like other agents, must in general personally perform his service to the principal. He has no more power than other agents to delegate his authority.[64] Payment to an agent of a collection agent whose employment has not been sanctioned by the principal is accordingly no payment of the debt.[65] Where a principal authorizes one agent to employ another agent to make collections, the former agent is presumed, in the absence of known restrictions, to have power to contract as to the manner and terms of

be broad enough to justify the inference that it is within the discretion vested in the agent to make waivers or releases), or to accept a partial payment of the obligation as full settlement (Lowenstein v. Bresler, 109 Ala. 326, 19 So. 860; Couch v. Davidson, 109 Ala. 313, 19 So. 507; Halladay v. Underwood, 90 Ill. Thus where a mortgage debtor paid a sum of money to the son of the mortgagee's agent to be applied on the mortgage, and the agent had authority to receive money for the mortgagee, and the son had for a number of years acted as his clerk or servant in the business of the agency, and had sometimes carried money collected to the mortgagees, but had no authority as their agent, the debtor's payment to him was not payment to the mortgagees' agent, and the promise of the agent that he would allow such payment was not

e. To Give or Receive Commercial Paper — (i) In General.[67] Commercial paper passes current to a limited extent like money, and accordingly power to an agent to make or indorse it is to be strictly limited, and will never be lightly inferred.[68] The most comprehensive grant, in general terms, of power to an agent conveys no power to subject the principal to liability upon such paper, unless the exercise of such power is so necessary to the accomplishment of the agency that such intent of the principal must be presumed in order to make the power effectual.[69] However, the rule of strict construction adopted in the case of the execution by an agent of negotiable instruments is not to be pursued to the extent of defeating, by technical interpretation, the obvious intent of the principal as gathered from a reasonable interpretation of the instrument appointing the agent. Hence, if the agent's act be within such intent it will bind his principal.[70] Much must depend upon the position of the agent and the circumstances of the case, and the agent's authority to execute or indorse commercial paper will be presumed whenever such power is reasonably necessary to effectuate the main object of the agency.[71] In accord with this, it has often been held that power to conduct the principal's business as he might do, includes power to make and indorse negotiable paper when the nature of the business is such as to require it, although such necessity must be clearly shown.[72] In extreme cases an overruling necessity may justify an agent in exercising the power.[73] While the authority may on proper showing be presumed from the conduct of the principal,[74] as, for example, his receiving the proceeds of the indorsed paper,[75] yet an occasional recognition of a note made or indorsed by the agent will not be enough to establish his authority,[76] although it may afford some evidence on the subject.[77] In any case no one can hold a principal liable upon negotiable paper signed or indorsed by one as agent without proving such agent's authority.[78]

(II) EXTENT OF AUTHORITY. Even when clearly granted, power to execute commercial paper must be strictly pursued. Power to deal in a certain way with commercial paper is not to be enlarged by construction to permit the doing of other, although somewhat similar, things.[79] Mere authority to receive negotiable ceptance of bills by an agent to avoid the suspension of work of great importance to the principal does not fall within that class of cases of extraordinary emergency or overruling necessity, in which, from the very necessities of the case, an agent is justified in deviating from the authority conferred on him.

(Va.) 428, holding the principal liable on an indorsement at the bank named in the power, although it was not intended by the principal that the agent should indorse paper carries with it no power to indorse it. The receipt of the paper accomplishes the purpose of the agency, and hence exhausts the power; [80] and authority to make or indorse for one purpose, or upon one occasion, cannot be exercised for another purpose, or upon a different occasion,[81] although a principal who has held an agent out as having general authority to indorse paper cannot escape the results of such indorsement because of secret limitations on the purposes for which the indorsement may be made, which the agent has disregarded.[82] An agent has for the purpose he did; Clement v. Dickey, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,883. 1 Paine 377); if his authority is to make one kind of commercial paper, as to draw checks on his principal's account, there is no inference of authority to make other kinds, as promissory notes in payment of authorized purchases (Hefner v. Palmer, 67 Ill. 161; Avery v. Lauve, 1 La. Ann. 457; New York Iron Mine v. Negaunee First Nat. Bank, 39 Mich. 644; Alder v. Buckley, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 69, holding that authority not under seal "to sign any note or other instrument of writing" does not authorize the agent to execute a bill single). Authority to make a restricted indorsement carries no power to make any other indorsement (Exchange Bank v. Thrower, 118 Ga. 433, 45 S. E. 316; Schmidt v. Garfield Nat. Bank, 64 Hun (N. R. 106), nor can authority to indorse or accept bills be inferred from power to draw such bills, especially if such power be special (Sewanee Min. Co. v. McCall, 3 Head (Tenn.) 619). If his authority is to make a joint note, he cannot make a joint and several note, except the circumstances make it clear that such was the intent (Metropolis Bank v. Moore, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 901, 5 Cranch C. C. 518 [affirmed in 13 Pet. 302, 10 L. ed. 172], suggesting, although doubtfully, that under a power of attorney from several persons to sign a joint promissory note the attorney may make a joint and several promissory note, the purpose of the parties being to renew a joint and several note which had been discounted by plaintiff), and if the authority from several principals to an agent is severally given he cannot bind them jointly, nor jointly with himself, by making them joint indorsers of a note, or makers of other paper (Harris v. Johnston, 54 Minn. 177, 55 N. W. 970, 40 Am. St. Rep. 312; U. S. Bank v. Beirne, 1 Gratt. (Va.) 234, 42 Am. Dec. 551; Odell v. Cormack, 19 Q. B. D. 223 [distinguishing Kirk v. Blurton, 12 L. J. Exch. 117, 9 M. & W. 284]). If the authority is to borrow money on the security of the principal's property, the agent cannot bind the principal personally by giving his note (Mylius v. Copes, 23 Kan. 617. But see Taylor v. Hudgins, 42 Tex. 244), if the power is to bind the principal in a representative capacity it does not give authority to bind him personally (Gore Bank v. Meredith, 26 U. C. Q. (Ky.) 436; State Bank v. McWillie, 4 McCord (S. C.) 438; State Bank v. Herbert, 4 McCord (S. Post-dating.— An agent cannot bring himself within the limits of his authority by post-dating the paper drawn by him. Indeed he has no authority to post-date paper. no authority to guarantee payment by his principal, except as his authorized indorsement may make his principal answerable.[83] The broadest possible authority to make and indorse paper presumptively is to be exercised in the principal's interest only, and does not impliedly extend to making or indorsing paper for the accommodation of third persons,[84] and still less for the agent himself. Accordingly, in the absence of very clear showing of such authority, an agent has no power under the broadest terms in the letter of appointment to make or indorse negotiable paper for his own interest, in the name of his principal,[85] or for his own interest and that of the principal.[86] But it has been held that an agent authorized to make negotiable paper may bind his principal as to innocent holders, although he appropriates the avails to his own use, or although he exercises the power to the detriment and not to the benefit of the principal, as by an accommodation indorsement, for the agent has done just what his power authorized him to do.[87] The principal will not, however, be bound if the third person knew, or if the transaction showed upon its face, that the agent made the paper for his own use or for the accommodation of a third person, for these are acts that are not authorized, and on their face carry to the third person knowledge of that fact.[88] An agent cannot, if specially limited as to the amount, obligate his principal by executing an instrument for a greater amount.[89] Mere authority to make or indorse will not empower the agent to receive or waive notice and protest on notes indorsed by the principal.[90] On the other hand, the principal may of course give to an agent whatever authority he will to make, indorse, or accept commercial paper on his account, and when the agent has acted within such limits the principal is bound precisely as he would be in the case of other acts done by an agent;[91] and if an agent issues commercial paper which he was authorized to make, the principal is not released from liability because the agent has, without knowledge of the party dealing with him, misused or abused the power confided in him;[92] nor because he has exercised the power conferred without first complying with all the conditions imposed upon him.[93]

f. To Manage Principal's Business. Agency to manage implies authority to do with the property what has been previously done with it by the owners, or others with their express or implied consent; or further to do with it what is usual and customary to do with property of the same kind in the same locality.[94] But in the absence of a grant of such power in specific terms, no power to do acts beyond the ordinary needs of the principal's business is to be inferred from the use in his authorization of general terms of the broadest import.[95] Thus an agent

The principal may give an agent such complete charge of his business as to enable him to rescind a contract to purchase which he

to a contract made by his agent upon the plea that he has departed from his instructions where the agent has followed the power in all material points, or where his only departure consists in the use of different phrases having the same legal effect, or perhaps providing a contract more favorable to the principal.[7]

h. Miscellaneous — (i) To Lease or Rent.[8] From a general authority to manage real estate may be inferred authority to lease in the ordinary form for ordinary terms.[9] But authority to lease is not to be inferred from power to sell or exchange, unless accompanied with further rights or powers in the agent,[10] nor from a mere power to collect rents for the landlord.[11] When the power exists it must be strictly pursued. While the agent may bind his principal by agreements left to his discretion,[12] he cannot bind his principal by other agreements or obligations,[13] nor lease the property for an illegal purpose,[14] nor make a lease beyond, or contrary to, the restrictions openly imposed by the principal, either as to the land to be included in the lease or as to the terms upon which it is to be leased.[15] The power to lease and collect the rents carries with it no power to release, and surrender of the premises to such agent before termination of the lease has no binding force upon the principal.[16] Nor will the principal be bound if the agent

substitutes a new tenant for the former one. Authority to contract is no authority to cancel a contract and substitute a new one.[17] On the other hand, the agent may of course release and accept a surrender of the premises where such powers are evidently within his authority.[18] And a general agent in full charge of premises has implied power to make any reasonable and necessary arrangement with the tenant.[19] Authority to collect rents shows no authority to renew a lease,[20] nor to sell the property.[21] An agent has no authority to receipt for the rent upon payment of less than the full amount, nor to accept anything but money in payment of the rent,[22] nor to contract to repay money paid on the rent if the tenant does not remain the full time.[23] He has authority to take all usual and necessary steps to collect such rent,[24] and may take proper steps against the tenant in case of non-payment.[25] A general agent to lease may do so on his own credit and recover from his principal rent payments made by him.[26] One in general charge of a business which requires the use of buildings or premises for the conduct of the business of his principal has implied power to rent them.[27] courts will not hesitate to uphold a mortgage executed by an agent, although he was not expressly authorized to give mortgages or the mortgage in question.[30] An agent having authority to mortgage has, as a necessary incident of such authority, the power to insert in the mortgage the usual terms incident to such instruments, including the ordinary warranties and covenants, and a power to sell in case of default,[31] or to give a trust deed, or to make an equivalent conveyance, for the same purposes for which a mortgage was authorized.[32] The agent himself may have such an interest in the property that he has a right in himself to sell it. In such case he has the lesser right to pledge or mortgage it.[33] Presumptively the power to mortgage is limited to property owned by the principal at the time he gave the power, although when the principal's intent, as gathered from the language of the power and the surrounding circumstances, is broader, the courts to appeal from a judgment in a suit,[51] and presumptively to collect the amount recovered.[52] Authority to bring suit on a claim does not give the agent power to compromise it, unless previously granted or subsequently approved by the principal.[53] The same principles that govern the right of an agent to enforce a settlement by a suit may be extended to bringing suits generally. The authority of an agent to engage in litigation for his principal must depend upon the conditions of the agency. Litigation is liable to be hazardous and expensive. Hence, unless the duties intrusted to the agent are in their nature such that the principal must be supposed to have anticipated that the execution of the commission would be likely to entail litigation, such power is not within the scope of general authority, and the principal cannot be bound by the act of his agent in bringing a suit.[54] But he will be liable for, and, on the other hand, he can take advantage of, authorized acts of his agent either in the litigation or in laying a foundation therefor.[55] The same principles that recognize the prosecution of a suit by an agent apply to defenses to suits through attorneys in fact. Although such matters are for the most part in the hands of attorneys at law, there is no reason why one cannot in litigation do by attorney in fact what he could do personally.[56] One may appear and confess judgment by agent,[57] although the authority must be strictly pursued and exercised within such limits as the principal has imposed.[58] of cash, yet the loan is complete if the agent accepts ordinary exchange, subject to be defeated if the exchange is not paid [67] If a loan is made to the principal, and payment is made by check to the agent authorized to negotiate the loan, there is a good payment to the principal, although the agent, after cashing the check, absconds with the proceeds,[68] and the principal is bound by payment to the agent authorized to borrow, although the formal power given to the agent was invalid.[69] But if the agent had no authority to borrow, proof of a loan to such agent is not evidence of the receipt of the money by the principal.[70] In the absence of restrictions, authority to loan or borrow carries power to contract for a loan within a time reasonably meeting the principal's purposes.[71] Whether the agent negotiating a loan is the agent of the lender or of the borrower depends upon the circumstances of each case. If the lender has given the agent no authority to receive payment for him, and the borrower pays such agent, the debt is not satisfied until the money reaches the lender, for the intermediary is in such case acting as agent of the borrower to receive and transmit the payment.[72] If the borrower has applied to the agent for a loan, prima facie such agent is his agent, and the lender is justified in paying him the amount of the loan.[73] The employment of an agent to lend money does not carry with it implied authority to lend the money to himself.[74]

(v) To Make Contracts of Employment — (A) In General. The general power of an agent to delegate his authority is fully explained elsewhere in this article.[75] It is the purpose in this connection to consider the question of the agent's authority to make for his principal contracts of employment of any kind. Such authority in general is to be implied only when sanctioned by the usages of such an agency as that in question, or by the nature and necessities of the business intrusted to the agent.[76] Authority to make contracts of employ-

Employment authorized by business exigencies.— An agent having no general authority to hire help may from the exigencies of the business intrusted to his care have a right to contract for his principal in a special instance. subsequent agreements modifying or adding to the contract of hiring.[81] Authority to employ necessarily implies power to contract with such agents for their compensation;[82] but an agent having no power to employ cannot bind his principal to pay for services.[83] An agent cannot bind his principal to pay for help or supplies furnished to independent contractors who should themselves provide and pay for such services or materials.[84]

(B) Employment of Attorney. The employment of an attorney is not one of the ordinary incidents of agency. Ordinarily the principal should be consulted first; and hence authority to contract for such employment on behalf of the principal exists only in particular classes of agencies, or under circumstances making such employment necessary and proper to the performance of the agency.[85] An agent to collect, having authority to collect by suit if necessary, has the resulting power to employ an attorney to conduct such suit;[86] and a principal is liable for payment for services rendered by an attorney employed by a general agent to whom the principal has intrusted business requiring the services of an attorney, either in law suits or in other matters.[87]

Thus incidental benefit promised to his principal will not warrant the employment by an agent of an attorney to appear in a suit to which his principal is not a party (Perry v. Jones, 18 Kan. 552), and the ordinary general agent has no authority to employ attorneys to test the claims which he thinks might be established for his principal by a suit (Bush v. Southern Brewing Co., 69 Miss. 200, 13 So. 856, holding that the agent should consult the principal in such matters; Cochran v. Newton, 5 Den. has no implied authority to contract in his name for such attendance.[88] This is true of the ordinary manufacturing or commercial corporation, and any liability of such a corporation for the employment by its agent of a physician or surgeon must rest upon the express authority or active assent of the principal.[89] But because of the peculiar nature of certain occupations the courts upon humanitarian grounds, and for reasons of public policy as well, have held that the agent of persons or corporations engaged in such occupations may provide medical attendance upon the credit of his principal.[90] This rule has been most often applied in the case of corporations engaged in the hazardous business of operating railroads, and it has been held in a number of cases that authority to employ such medical attendance will be regarded as being within the scope of the implied powers of some agent of the company, generally the superintendent of the road.[91] But no such authority ordinarily resides in the subordinate employees and agents of the road, such as yard-masters, station agents, engineers, conductors, and the like. Their contracts of this kind therefore will not bind the company unless specially authorized or ratified,[92] although it has been held that such agents may have authority in exceptional cases and emergencies to employ such medical aid as may be imperative until the superintendent can be communicated with. The means of communication are such that such authority must be infrequent, and very limited as to time.[93] This liability for medical attendance upon an employee, it has been held, does not extend to services to a passenger injured without negligence on the part of the company. Hence there is no implied power in the superintendent to employ a physician for such a passenger.[94] And of course a conductor of a railroad train has no authority to employ a physician to attend a trespasser injured without the fault of the railroad company.[95] Seamen are exposed to hardships and dangers, and are subject to illness and injuries when far from home, to such an extent that the maritime law has always been solicitous for their protection. The master of the vessel is agent of the owners with authority to furnish to all mariners on the ship medical attendance at the cost of the owners.[96] Contracts for boarding and nursing railroad employees injured while in the performance of their duties fall within the rule above stated with reference to contracts for physicians and surgeons, and the superintendent of the road has implied power to make them.[97] But the implied authority to make such contracts of any one inferior to the superintendent will be strictly limited to emergencies that require action before he can be consulted.[98] One having general power to employ and discharge men, and whose power is coextensive with the business, may contract for board and nursing for an injured employee.[99]

(VI) To Contract For Board.[1] The implied authority of an agent to contract on his principal's account for board involves no peculiar rules. It arises when such contract is necessary and proper to the performance of the duties intrusted to the agent, but not otherwise.[2]

(VII) To Ship Goods.[3] When goods are put in the charge of an agent to deliver to a carrier,[4] or when he is employed to accompany the goods in transit, he is presumed to have authority to make the necessary contracts at the point of shipment, or, if arrangements must be made along the way, during the transit.[5] The principal question growing out of authority to ship goods has to do with the agent's implied authority to assent for his principal to contracts affecting the carrier's liability. Such authority includes all the necessary and usual means of carrying it into effect.[6] One of the necessary incidents to a shipment is to arrange with the carrier to receive the goods. Accordingly it is a general rule that the shipping agent must be regarded as having authority to stipulate for and accept the terms of transportation.[7] This includes authority to assent to the usual contracts releasing carriers from their strict common-law liabilities as common carriers of goods,[8] to make agreements and give directions as to the delivery of the goods,[9] and to assent to reasonable regulations as to the shipment, or the time and manner of presenting claims for damages.[10] But when the shipper has made his own contract with the carrier it has been held that the agent has no implied authority to assent to any modification of such contract.[11]

(VIII) To Make Payments. The power of a buying agent to pay for the goods purchased by him has been already discussed.[12] The principal may of course expressly authorize his agent to pay obligations which he owes, and such authority may be implied in a particular case from a general power to make collections and from the proceeds to settle the principal's accounts.[13] Power to make payments, and to make them in property instead of in money, may be part of the acts necessary and proper to enable the agent to perform the duties intrusted to him, and in such cases authority to make them is to be inferred;[14] but such authority is not to be lightly implied. The mere fact that an agent has general power to conduct a merchant's retail business in his absence of itself raises no implication that he has authority to pay the merchant's debts,[15] particularly before they are due.[16] And an agent authorized to make payments for his principal has, in the absence of special powers to that end, no authority to make payments in his own notes,[17] or in anything but money;[18] and he has no power to pledge the principal's credit for future payments,[19] or for the debts of other persons who have assumed to buy or otherwise contract, on the principal's credit.[20]

(IX) To Make Contracts of Guaranty and Suretyship. A guaranty, like a warranty, is not within the scope of an agent's implied powers except by force of usage or custom, and a usage to guarantee payments is not common. The authority to give a guaranty is not inherent in a general agency of any kind.[21]

But it is always competent to show that the agent has been clothed with such authority, and in such case the principal will of course be bound thereby.[22] Except in so far as the principal may be bound by an authorized indorsement by the agent, the latter when empowered to give or sell notes cannot give a guaranty of their payment by the principal.[23] While it is entirely competent to empower an agent to bind his principal as a surety,[24] yet such a contract is extraordinary, and does not impliedly come within the powers of the most general agent.[25] Moreover, when the power does exist it must be exercised strictly within the limits prescribed by the principal or he will not be bound at all.[26]

agent as such has no authority to receive property for the principal if this is not a necessary part of the performance of the duties intrusted to him;[28] nor can he, if authorized to receive the property, accept it at an unusual or unauthorized time or place,[29] although a substantial compliance is all that is required.[30] If an agent is in possession of the principal's property by the authority of the principal, the possession of the agent is the possession of the principal,[31] and will authorize the agent to maintain against third persons possessory actions with reference to the property.[32] Possession as indicia of ownership, or of authority to the agent to sell the property intrusted to him, has been elsewhere considered.[33]

B. Construction — 1. In General. That every grant of authority should, if possible, be so construed as to give effect to the intent of the principal in creating the agency is the cardinal rule of construction of the authority of an agent. This is an immediate consequence of the nature of agency, which is a relation founded on the intent of the principal.[34] This rule is to be applied, however, subject to two considerations namely: (1) This intent is to be determined from the legal effect, and not necessarily the effect really supposed by the principal, of the language, conduct, or circumstances constituting the appointment.[35] (2) As a corollary of this, the authority will be so construed as to protect third persons dealing with the agent, provided the latter acted within the real or apparent scope of his authority, although contrary to the intention and privately expressed desires of the principal.[36] It must never be overlooked, however, that in the absence of proof writer,[45] especially where they are susceptible of two interpretations, and the agent has acted in good faith upon one of such interpretations.[46] In the case of a power of attorney, as with other written instruments, when the meaning of the terms used is obvious, such meaning is not by implication to be enlarged or restrained beyond what is expressed, as indicated by the natural and ordinary meaning of the language.[47] But if the language of the power is ambiguous as to the particular mode in which an object admitted to be within the power is to be effected, and would with reasonable attention bear the interpretation placed upon it by the agent and a third person, the principal is bound, although upon a more refined and critical examination a court might be of opinion that a different construction would be more correct.[48] While third persons will not be made to suffer for the principal's lack of clearness and precision, yet the authority is to be restricted to that which is given in terms under a reasonable construction of the language used, or which is reasonably necessary to the performance of the powers expressly given.[49] But the rule is not to be narrowly applied, either to extend or to limit the authority. The power should be read, not only with reference to the language used, but in the agent inclosing the same, are to be considered as constituent parts of the same instrument, and are to receive the same construction as though embodied with one and the same paper; and, where in such case the agent was authorized by the letter to use the power of attorney to make a transfer of property only on certain terms, the power of the agent was strictly limited by such instructions, and he could not convey his principal's interest on other or different terms to one who had knowledge of such limitation. Thus a power to act with reference to the interests of the principal will not extend to interests of the principal jointly with others, and vice versa a power from joint principals confers on the agent no authority to deal with their separate interests (Johnston v. Wright, 6 Cal. 373; Gilbert v. How, 45 Minn. 121, 47 N. W. 643, 22 Am. St. Rep. 724; Stainback v. Read, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 281, 62 Am. Dec. 648; Dodge v. Hopkins, 14 Wis. 630), although a more liberal rule has sometimes been applied in cases where the power does not forbid a sale of the separate interests, and the circumstances are such as reasonably to justify the inference that the principal intended the power to apply to his separate property (Holladay v. Daily, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 606, 22 L. ed. 187; Dolton v. Cain, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 472, 20 L. ed. 830). Likewise authority to act for the principal with reference to his own property can carry no power to deal with property held by the principal in a representative capacity. Pipes' Succession, 26 La. Ann. 203.

Alternative powers convey authority to do one or the other, but not both of the acts specified. When one of the acts has been done the power is exhausted and the agent cannot then do the other. Thus a power of attorney reciting among other things, "and my said attorney is hereby empowered to locate any such certificate in my name, or sell and assign the same," does not authorize the agent to locate a government pension certificate and also to sell the land after such location. Not authorized to engage in new business.— A general power of attorney authorizing an agent to represent the principal in all his interests in a given locality does not empower him to embark the principal in a new and different business. Campbell v. Hastings, 29 Ark. 512. So a power of attorney given by a member of a firm engaged in real estate transactions to his partner to sign any instrument pertaining to the business will be construed as given to enable the latter to manage the affairs of the partnership, and does not authorize him to admit a new partner or to vary the terms of the partnership; nor can he bind the principal by an agreement that another shall have a share in transactions negotiated by him, the money for which should be furnished by the principal. Horne v. Ingraham, 125 Ill. 198, 16 N. E. 868. the written power and the authority of the agent are by no means always coextensive, and the agent may have authority resting on the acts and dealings of the principal, but not contained in the written power, even under the most liberal rule of construction. In such case the power of attorney will not be construed as restricting the power of the agent to the matters therein specified, provided it is not exclusive and not inconsistent with the larger powers exercised by the agent.[54]

C. Execution[55] — 1. In General. It is elementary and fundamental, and involved in the very name, that agency exists only to enable the principal to execute his will through another, the agent. It is therefore the first duty of the agent to execute the will of his principal, and to do so as he has been directed.[56] In doing this, as is elsewhere explained, the agent should act within the scope of the authority conferred upon him,[57] and if he does not, his execution fails of its object, and the agent is liable to the principal for the resulting damages.[58] Where, however, in performing one transaction he does an authorized act and also something more which he was not authorized to do, the authorized portion of the act may be treated as valid and binding and the other rejected, provided the two portions are not so interwoven that they cannot be separated.[59] But it is otherwise where the act which was authorized cannot be separated from the unauthorized excess.[60] The power to the agent may be broader than the interest of the principal, and in such case an execution of the power according to its terms will be effective to the extent of the actual interest of the principal.[61] If the principal does not prescribe how the authority shall be executed, he cannot escape liability because the agent did not execute it as he would have preferred or himself have done it.[62] In the absence of instructions the principal is presumed to consent that the agent may execute his authority in accordance with general custom and usage in that trade or business.[63]

2. WHAT LAW GOVERNS. The general rule is that the authority given by a principal to an agent, and the execution of that authority when so given, are to be controlled by the lex loci contractus. The principal in sending the agent forth is presumed to consent that he shall be governed by the law of the place where he is to act;[64] and where an instrument is signed by the principal in one state the authority of the agent, as well as the validity of the obligation which the agent as such seeks to impose upon his principal, by delivery in another state, is to be determined by the law of the state in which the instrument was signed.[65] The validity of a power to sell realty and of a conveyance executed by virtue of such power depends upon the lex situs.[66]

3. EXECUTION BY JOINT AGENTS AND AGENTS OF JOINT PRINCIPALS.[67] A principal may have more than one agent, each one appointed to act separately in a particular branch of his principal's business or in a particular locality.[68] Such agents are several agents, and are to act severally, and when more than one agent is appointed with reference to the same business, they are still several agents if it appears that it was the intention of the principal that they should act separately.[69] But generally it is presumed that when a principal employs more than one agent to represent him in one matter of business they are joint agents, the exercise of whose joint discretion is desired, and an act performed by one or by any number less than the whole is not such an execution of the authority as to bind the principal.[70] Where the authority is joint and several, then, it has been held, all may act or one, but not an intermediate number. Ministerial acts.— By the weight of authority, an act that involves no discretion, but is ministerial only, may be done by any of several joint agents. St. Paul Div. No. 1 S. T. v. Brown, 11 Minn. 356 (holding that where three agents are appointed by a corporation to tender payment and receive a conveyance of certain property in trust for the corporation, any one of the three may make such tender, for the act is merely ministerial); Powell v. Tuttle, 3 N. (Pa.) 56, holding that where powers are granted to several persons to transact private business, all must join in the execution of it: and the rule applies in all cases, whether the duty be ministerial or judicial.

and in such case all will be bound who authorized the execution.[73] But the agent of such principals has of course no authority to execute contracts to bind one principal in the separate business of another.[74] An agent of two independent and unconnected principals has no right to act for them jointly,[75] unless there be actual consent of the principals, or a custom to lump orders or sales for different principals, each becoming liable for his share of the contract.[76]

4. Execution of Verbal Contracts. A verbal contract is binding on the principal if his name be disclosed and the person making it contract as his agent and on his behalf.[77]

5. Execution of Simple Written Contracts — a. In General. The most approved manner of executing a simple written contract by an agent is to do so entirely in the name of the principal, signing the name of his principal by himself as agent.[78] However, it by no means follows that this is the only form of execution that binds the principal and him alone, and if the body of the instrument expresses the contract to be that of the principal, and the signature is that of the agent acting as agent, it is sufficient.[79] But the mere addition of descriptive words to the name

70 Nebr. 144, 147, 97 N. W. 227, 99 N. W. 652, 113 Am. St. Rep. 783; Guthrie v. Armstrong, 5 B. & Ald. 628, 1 D. & R. 248, 7 E. C. L. 343, holding that where a power of attorney was given to fifteen persons therein named, jointly or severally to execute such policies as they or any of them should jointly or severally think proper, an execution of such power by four of the persons named was sufficient.

Even the death of one of two several agents may not terminate the power of the other. Thus it has been held that where a power of attorney to convey, given to a firm of lawyers, authorizes either of them to act, a conveyance by one of them, after the other's death, to a purchaser who is put in possession and who pays the purchase-money and makes improvements is valid, notwithstanding the attorney may have erroneously supposed that he was acting under a subsequent power, which in reality had not been given. In most of them an intent to bind the principal is disclosed by the instrument.[83] It has been decided that a principal may be charged upon a written simple executory contract entered into by an agent in his own name within his authority, although the name of the principal does not appear in the instrument, and was not disclosed, and the person dealing with the agent supposed that he was acting for himself, and that this rule obtains as well in respect to contracts which are required to be in writing as to those where a writing is not essential to their validity.[84] It is not essential that the agent's name appear at all, and the only purpose of adding his name is for purposes of evidence, by way of explaining the fact that the principal's undertaking and signature have been made not by himself in person, but through his duly authorized agent.[85]

Execution of Negotiable Instruments.[87] While a person may obligate himself for a bill or note as effectually by an agent as by his own hand, yet it must appear on the face of the instrument itself in some way or other that it was in fact drawn for him or he is not bound. The particular form of the execution is not material, if it be substantially done in the name of the principal.[88] If this be clear, the instrument, although inartificially drawn and defectively signed, may nevertheless effectuate its purpose as the obligation of the principal.[89]

7. Execution of Sealed Instruments.[90] When the authority is under seal, it authorizes the agent to attach a seal to his principal's signature to contracts he is empowered to make with the third person.[91] The best form for the execution of sealed instruments, as all others, is to put in the body of the instrument the principal's name, and to sign the name of the principal at the end, with the agent's name below, preceded by the preposition "by" and followed by the word "agent."[92]

Statutory provisions. — In some jurisdictions the rule as to the execution of sealed instruments by agents has been modified as the result of statutory enactments. See the statutes of the different states. And see Wheeler v. Walden, 17 Nebr. 122, 22 N. W. 346 (holding that the strict rule of the common law in regard to contracts under seal, made by an agent for the sale or leasing of real estate, is not in force in Nebraska, private seals being abolished; and that a lease signed with the principal's name and that of the agent is sufficient if, from the terms of the instrument itself or any other matter therein, it appears that the parties intended it as the agreement of the principal, and his name appears therein, however informally it may be signed by the agent); Williams v. Paine, 169 U. S. 55, 18 S. Ct. 279, 42 L. ed. 658 (in which a deed was held good under a statute providing that an acknowledgment by an authorized attorney that a deed is his act and deed shall have the same effect as if

And according to the strict common-law rule a deed or contract under seal made by an agent does not bind the principal unless it professes to do so, and to be executed in his name and as his deed or contract; and it is not enough for the agent to declare in the instrument that he makes it as the agent of his principal, and to add to his signature words expressive of the same thing.[93] Many cases, however, such attorney had acknowledged it to be the deed of his principal, the grantor). But a statute merely dispensing with the necessity of seals, or of executing in the name of the principal, has been held not to affect the common-law rule as to the manner of the execution of a deed by an agent, whenever as matter of fact the agent does make the contract under seal or in his principal's name. Jones v. Morris, 61 Ala. 518. Where a statute has abolished distinctions between sealed and unsealed instruments, and provided that any instrument within the authority of an agent will bind the principal if the intent to bind him is plainly inferable therefrom, a contract under seal, signed by the agent, will nevertheless bind the principal if its language as a whole makes such intent clear. Southern Pac. Co. v. Von Schmidt Dredge Co., 118 Cal. 368, 50 Pac. 650; Wheeler v. Walden, 17 Nebr. 122, 22 N. W. 346; Post v. Pearson, 108 U. S. 418, 2 S. Ct. 799, 27 L. ed. 774. Statutes providing the manner of executing deeds by attorney are presumed to provide an additional method, and not to abrogate the common-law rule. Thus it is held that a deed under a power of attorney is properly executed at common law in the name of the principal by his attorney, and that form is still valid, notwithstanding Md. Acts (1856), c. 154, § 23, providing that the agent shall sign the deed as agent or attorney. Posner v. Bayless, 59 Md. 56.

Virginia.— Shanks v. Lancaster, 5 Gratt. 110, 50 Am. Dec. 108, holding that it is a sufficient execution of a deed by an attorney in fact for his principal, if he sign the name of the principal, with a seal annexed, stating it to be done by him as attorney for the principal, or if he signs his own name, with a seal annexed, stating it to be for his principal.

See 40 Cent. Dig. tit. "Principal and Agent," § 444.

The fact of agency may appear in the signature only.—A deed signed "A. B. [the name of the grantor], by C. D., his attorney in fact," sufficiently indicates that it was executed on the part of the grantor by an attorney in fact, although there is no recital of the fact in the deed itself. Tidd v. Rines, 26 Minn. 201, 2 N. W. 497.

The instrument must at least identify the principal.—A deed executed by G as attorney for the "heirs of A" conveys no title, where the names of the heirs do not appear in the deed, unless the deed refers to the power of attorney and the names of the heirs appear therein. McMaster v. Childress, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 92, 30 S. W. 843; Baldwin v. Goldfrank, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 269, 26 S. W. 155. But where a power of attorney authorized the grantee to sell the lands belonging to the estate of W, of which the grantor was the lawful heir, and there were several heirs of W, and the attorney made a deed wherein he described himself "as attorney in fact for the heirs of W," and executed the deed in the same form, it was held that in equity the deed conveyed whatever interest the grantor in the power had in the land as heir of W. Wynee v. Parke, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 30 S. W. 52.

the principal except for the fact that it was sealed.[95] And a deed invalid as a deed because of defective execution may nevertheless be good evidence of a contract, and has often been construed in equity as a contract vesting an equitable title or as foundation for an action on the implied obligation;[96] and it has been held that if made in the name of the agent, and inoperative to pass the principal's title, it will nevertheless pass whatever right the agent had, either personally or as agent.[97] It is not necessary, although as matter of evidence it is desirable, to the proper execution of a deed by an attorney in fact that he should sign his name to it at all. The name of the principal is enough.[98] While it is best that a deed by an agent should make reference to the power of the agent, this is not essential, and if the deed be executed by the agent, within his power, and in the name of his principal, it is good, although in it there is no reference to the power of attorney under which the agent acts.[99] The deed and the power must correspond so as to make it clear that the conveyance is executed in behalf of the principal who gave the power, although the validity of the deed cannot be affected by immaterial defects or differences.[1] Presumptively if the agent has an interest of his own in property and a power of attorney from another to convey it, a deed from the agent which does not refer to the power conveys the interest of the agent only, and is not to be regarded as an exercise of the power.[2] In accordance with the principle that the power need not be recited, the validity of a deed executed by an agent will not be affected by a misrecital of the power in the deed; it is sufficient if he had the authority and has pursued it.[3] And it has been held that a deed is good, although it refers to an invalid power when another and a valid one is in existence.[4] However, it must appear that he has pursued his power, and if it appears that he did not intend to execute the power he possessed, the deed will not be held good by referring it to such power.[5] As to an instrument not required to be under seal but so executed by an agent, it has been held that it must be executed in the name of the principal and purport to be sealed with his seal.[6] But in a number of cases it has been decided that when a sealed contract has been executed in such form that it is in law the contract of the agent and not of the principal, but the principal's interest in the contract appears upon its face, and he has received the benefit of the performance by the other party, and has ratified and confirmed it by acts in pais, and the contract is one which would have been valid without a seal, the principal may be made liable in assumpsit upon the promise contained in the instrument, which may be resorted to to ascertain the terms of the agreement.[7] Where a contract not required to be under seal is executed under seal by an agent having authority to execute simple contracts but not sealed contracts it is valid as a simple contract.[8]

8. Effect of Improper Execution or Execution in Name of Agent. A deed or other sealed instrument so executed as not to be binding upon the principal, as where it is made by the agent in his own name or signed and sealed in his name, although he describes himself as agent,[9] is not necessarily void,[10] but may bind the agent if it contains apt words to bind him personally. But if it is clear from the instrument as a whole that the agent is promising and covenanting, and acting generally, in a representative capacity, it will not bind him.[11] It has been held that a lease in which the lessor styles himself as agent, but which is signed by him individually, cannot be sued on by the principal.[12] If in the execution of a simple written contract the agent uses apt words to bind himself, if he contracts in his own name and makes the promises and undertakings his own, although reciting that he is an agent, he will be personally bound thereby, although the other party knew he was agent, and the principal cannot be held on the contract.[13] An agent will be bound in such case even though he attaches to his signature

he does thereby represent that he has authority as agent to execute the instrument, and may thereby make himself liable to third persons in damages, if as matter of fact he is acting without or outside of his authority.[20] A contract which because of defective execution is void binds neither agent nor principal.[21] Although an instrument is so defectively executed that it cannot be sued on, it may nevertheless be used as evidence in an action on the money counts in assumpsit against the principal, provided the contract is one on which the principal would have been liable except for the defective execution.[22] When the principal has actually or by his course of dealing authorized the agent to execute contracts or to make and indorse paper in his own name, or has chosen to do business, using the name of the agent as his trade name, the principal cannot escape liability on contracts on the ground that they were executed in the name of the agent.[23]

D. Delegation[24] — 1. General Rule. The general rule is that an agent in whom is reposed trust or confidence, or who is required to exercise discretion or judgment, may not intrust the performance of his duties to another without the consent of his principal; and since nearly all acts of agency involve discretion, and the very selection as agent ordinarily implies personal confidence in the agent chosen, it follows that one clothed with authority to act for a principal must ordinarily perform the act himself.[25]

2. Application of Rule[26] — a. Collection Agents. The general rule that an agency to collect and receive money is one of personal trust and confidence, and therefore not to be delegated to another without authorization,[27] does not apply to a general agency to take charge of and manage the business of a principal.[28] A collecting agency which undertakes to make collections at all points in the country through local agents and attorneys whom it employs and represents as skilful and reliable is responsible for the negligence of an attorney whom it employs on terms known only to itself.[29] But when the agent employed is not a collection agent, and that is no part of his regular business, it has been held with good reason that impliedly his undertaking is merely to forward the paper to a suitable collecting agent in the place where it is to be collected.[30]

b. Joint Agents. It has been seen that joint agents must act jointly, and the principal will not be bound by the act of less than the whole number.[31] This is but an application of the principle that delegated power cannot be delegated. Several joint agents cannot delegate to one of their number the performance of the duties intrusted to them jointly.[32]

W. 424), and generally to do any acts that are not merely clerical, mechanical, or ministerial in their nature (Fairchild v. King, 102 Cal. 320, 36 Pac. 649, holding that one employed to secure a tenant may not delegate his authority; Terre Haute, etc., R. Co. v. Brown, 107 Ind. 336, 8 N. E. 218; Bonwell v. Howes, 15 Daly (N. Y.) 43, 2 N. Y. Suppl. 717; Fargo v. Cravens, 9 S. D. 646, 70 N. Who may invoke rule.— The prineiple that delegated authority eannot be delegated is one that avails for the advantage of the principal and not of the agent. The latter cannot invoke its aid either to acquire rights or to escape liability to the third person or to the principal. Harralson v. Stein, 50 Ala. 347 (in which an agent sued a third person and sought to avoid the effect of the act of the subagent, and the court held that the legal maxim that an agent cannot delegate his authority to a subagent is not of universal application, and can be invoked only by the principal when sought to be charged by the act of the subagent); Peterson v. Christensen, 26 Minn. 377, 4 N. 3. Exceptions to Rule — a. Express Authority to Delegate. Clearly subagents may be appointed when their appointment has been expressly authorized by the principal,[33] and in such case the agent assumes no liability for the acts of the subagent,[34] who is directly accountable to the principal.[35] The principal's consent to look to the subagent will be presumed when he knowingly assents to the substitution of another in place of the agent he appointed.[36]

b. Authority Implied From Nature of Agency. Express authority to appoint subagents is not always necessary. Such authority is usually to be implied when the agency obviously and from its very nature is such as to make the employment of subagents necessary. In such cases the employment of subagents is presumed to have been contemplated when the power was given, and the agent has implied authority to appoint such subagents within the limits of the necessities of the case.[37]

The subsequent ratification by the principal of the appointment of a subagent is of course equally effective with a prior consent to justify the delegation of the authority and to establish a direct agency relation between the principal and the subagent (Lucas v. Rader, 29 Ind. App. 287, 64 N. E. 488; Booth v. Majestic Mfg. Co., 105 Mich. 562, 63 N. W. 524; McCormick v. Bush, 2 Tex. Unrep. Va. 576, 37 S. E. 670), but the mere fact that the principal knew of the employment of the subagent and acquiesced therein is not a ratification, if there is nothing to show that he understood that the subagent was employed as his agent and not as the agent of the primary agent (Barnard v. Coffin, 141 Mass. 37, 6 N. E. 364, 55 Am. Rep. 443; Tynan v. Dullnig, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 25 S. Hence he incurs no liability for the acts of such subagents if chosen with reasonable care,[38] and the principal is bound by the acts of a subagent so employed, even though he has no personal knowledge of him.[39] The converse of the proposition is equally true, and an agent has no implied power to delegate his power to a subagent when such delegation is not necessary, proper, or usual.[40]

c. Performance of Ministerial Acts. The fact that the employment of subagents is necessary is not conclusive of the principal's consent to rely on them and not his chosen agent. And whenever it is apparent that the principal relies on the skill, judgment, and responsibility of his agent alone, or that he consents that such agent shall employ subagents only on his own account, the principal can continue to hold his agent accountable for the acts of himself and of his agents. d. Custom and Usage to Employ Subagents. Every man is supposed to contract with reference to the custom and usage of the business in which he engages. Hence where it is the usual custom of a trade or business to employ subagents, the principal, in the absence of proof to the contrary, is presumed to consent that agents appointed by him shall appoint subagents within the limits of such custom.[43]

4. Effect of Delegation. By an unauthorized delegation of his authority, or by the employment of a subagent on his own account, the agent makes himself personally responsible for the acts of the subagent, who is regarded as his agent and not as the agent of the principal. And this is the rule even where the subagent is employed with the consent of the principal, but not as his agent.[44] On the other hand, when the employment of a subagent is authorized, he becomes the agent of the principal, and the first agent is not responsible for his acts or omissions.[45] The person seeking to hold the subagent liable on his undertaking must be his principal; that is, either the original principal or the primary agent, as the case may be; and when the subagent is the agent of the primary agent there is no privity between him and the original principal upon which any mutual rights and remedies can to make a tender cannot delegate his authority to another, he may make the tender by letter sent by the hands of another; Eldridge v. Holway, 18 Ill. 445, holding that the delivery of a written notice requires no confidence, skill, discretion, or judgment, and may be deputed by the agent to a subagent; Renwick v. Bancroft, 56 Iowa 527, 9 N. Y. 378, holding that where an agent vested with a power to sell the property of his principal makes a sale within the limits of his authority which he believes to be for the best interest of his principal, the fact that in making the sale the impelling motive which as to loyalty does not apply to cases where no relation of trust or confidence exists between the parties, as where the agent is bound merely as an instrument, more properly as a servant, to perform a service,[59] or where the relation of principal and agent is not shown to exist.[60]

b. Adverse Interests In General.[61] In accordance with the above rule, good faith and loyalty to the principal's interests require that an agent must not, except with his principal's full knowledge and consent, assume any duties or enter into any transaction concerning the subject-matter of the agency in which he has or represents interests adverse to those of his principal.[62] If he does so the principal, actuated him was the compensation he was to receive, not his duty to his principal, does not give the latter a right of action for fraud in ease the sale proves disadvantageous.

when he acquires full knowledge of the facts may repudiate the transaction,[63] without regard to whether the agent acted in bad faith, or whether the transaction resulted in a loss to the principal;[64] or the principal may adopt the transaction and compel the agent to account for any profits made thereby.[65] Nothing will defeat this right of the principal except his own confirmation after full knowledge of all the facts,[66] and it does not matter that the agent was a mere volunteer agent, or that he was acting gratuitously.[67] Nor is this rule affected by a custom or usage to the contrary of which the principal had no notice, actual or constructive.[68]

c. Engaging in Rival Business. In the absence of a clear consent of the principal the agency relation denies to the agent the right to engage in any business or dealings on his own account of the same character as the principal's,[69] or of a kind to take the time he has contracted to give to the principal,[70] although where the

The object of the principle is to elevate the agent to a position where he cannot be tempted to betray his trust. The reason of the rule is that owing to the selfishness and greed of human nature there must in the great mass of transactions be a strong antagonism between the interests of the seller and buyer, and universal experience shows that the average man, when his interests conflict with his employer's, will not look upon his employer's interests as more important or entitled to more protection than his own. Porter v. Woodruff, 36 N. J. Eq. 174.

Principal's right to vendor's lien.—Where an agent employed to sell property fraudulently purchases the same for his own benefit, and thereafter with the profits of such fraudulent purchase pays for land conveyed to him by his principal, since the money so paid belongs to the principal, the price of the land will be considered unpaid, and the the agency of a third person.[88] He must not, without his principal's knowledge and consent, become a partner or otherwise jointly interested in purchasing the property,[89] and in such case he is bound to disclose to his principal the exact nature of his interest in the purchase and all material facts connected therewith.[90] The mere fact of the purchase by the agent makes the contract prima facie voidable;[91] but since such sale is voidable only, it may be approved by the principal, and if he does not dissent no one else can object;[92] and if the agent buys the property principal will have a lien therefor. Porter v. Woodruff, 36 N. J. Eq. 174.

If the agent to sell is surety for the principal, any claim he has on the property sold will continue, to the extent of his liability, when he has become the purchaser of such property. Walker v. Palmer, 24 Ala. 358.

The clerk of a broker employed to make a sale of land, who has access to the correspondence between his principal and the vendor, stands in such a relation of confidence to the latter that if he becomes a purchaser he is chargeable as trustee for the vendor, and must reconvey or account for the value of the land. Compare Synnott v. Shaughnessy, 2 Ida. Where a landowner gives a written option thereon for a given time at an agreed price to certain persons, whom he thereby constitutes his agents to sell on commission, the agents cannot buy for themselves at the priee named, since where such option papers are doubtful the law will not infer that the agent could himself become the purchaser. the agent to account for any excess he received above the real value of the property.[8] The distinction has been made that if an agent sells to his principal property which he owned or had contracted for before becoming agent, and the principal chooses to keep the property, he cannot compel the agent to refund the advance paid to the agent in excess of what the property cost him;[9] but that if the agent acquires the property for the express purpose of selling it to his principal at an advance, the principal may retain the property and compel the agent to account for the excess, and that it is immaterial to plaintiff's recovery in such case whether the agent contracted for the land before or after the principal agreed to purchase it.[10]

g. Purchasing Agent Must Not Purchase For Himself. Likewise an agent must not, without his principal's full knowledge and consent, purchase for himself property which he is employed to purchase for his principal.[11] If he does so it is a breach of faith and he will be regarded as holding the property so purchased, or its proceeds, in trust for his principal,[12] although he contributes his own funds to the purchase;[13] and he may be compelled to convey the property to his principal,[14] upon being reimbursed,[15] and upon the principal's complying with the terms of the contract of purchase.[16] Or if the agent has sold the property he may be compelled to account for the proceeds;[17] or the principal may, if he prefers, repudiate the transaction and throw the loss if any upon the agent.[18] The above rule is not affected by a custom or usage to the contrary of which the principal had no notice;[19] but it does not apply where the purchase is made in good faith after the agency has been terminated,[20] or where the agent has purchased for himself at a higher price after unsuccessful efforts to purchase for the principal at the price limited by the latter.[21]

h. Transactions Between Principal and Agent. As a general rule an agent is not permitted to enter into any transaction with his principal on his own behalf respecting the subject-matter of the agency, unless he acts with entire good faith and without any undue influence or imposition, and makes a full disclosure of all the facts and circumstances attending the transaction.[22] Since this rule, however, exists to protect the principal, it has no application to cases in which the agent openly and fairly deals with the principal, as in such cases an agent is as competent to deal with the principal as another.[23] However, because of possible abuses of the confidence and trust reposed in the agent, and of his commanding influence over the principal, and of the natural conflict of duty and interest in dealings between the principal and agent, the law views with suspicion, and scrutinizes closely, all dealings between them in the subject-matter of the agency, to see that

It is a well-settled rule of equity jurisprudence that all gifts, contracts, or benefits from a principal to one occupying a fiduciary or confidential relation to him are constructively fraudulent and void. Comstock v. Comstock, 57 Barb. (N. Y.) 453.

Modification of contract.—After the agency has commenced and a fiduciary relation has been established, a modification of the contract at the instance of the agent and for his benefit, unless attended by the utmost good faith upon his part, will be invalid; and any misrepresentation made by the agent as to the subject of the agency to induce the principals to modify the contract in his favor is bad faith. principal may have the sale set aside,[29] and compel the agent to reconvey the property to him upon repayment of the purchase-money or of so much as has been paid,[30] and to account for the rents and profits received by him,[31] although the principal may allow the conveyance to stand and compel the agent to account to him for such profits as he may have made.[32] And where the consideration given by the agent is very inadequate, or less than the agent can actually procure for the principal,[33] or the agent conceals the fact that he is himself the purchaser,[34] or where the principal is infirm and of doubtful business capacity,[35] very slight circumstances will be enough to cause the court to set aside the dealings between the principal and agent. But where the agent makes a full disclosure of all the facts and acts honestly and in good faith, a purchase by him from his principal will be upheld;[36] and a deed of gift by the principal to the agent will be good, if there is no improper influence or conduct on the part of the agent in procuring it.[37]

i. Acquisition of Adverse Right or Title[38] — (i) In General. Good faith and loyalty to his principal's interest also require that an agent shall not use his position or information obtained by him during the course of his agency to acquire for himself, without the principal's knowledge and consent, any adverse right, title,

Certainty of disclosure.—Where an agent buys land from the principal, and the transaction has remained unchallenged for a number of years, and the value of real estate has fluctuated from time to time, resulting in a final increase, it is sufficient for the agent to show, as regards the original price paid by him, with certainty to a common intent that it was fair and equitable. The agent may buy claims to protect the principal, and in such case he acquires a right to collect the note secured by the mortgage which he buys and has discharged. Thus where purchasers of land retained part of the consideration to pay off liens reported by their attorney, who subsequently, discovering another lien, purchased the same with his own money, such attorney was not estopped by reason of his confidential relation to deny payment of such claim by the money so retained, but was entitled to recover the same in an action against the vendor. to act in bad faith toward one or both of his principals,[66] there is no legal objection to such double employment if both principals fully understand the situation and consent thereto.[67] However, the presumption is that inconsistent duties have been assumed by the double agency,[68] and it must appear that both principals are fully informed of every fact material to their interests, and that they freely consent.[69] An exception to the general rule exists, however, where the interests of the two principals are not conflicting and loyalty by the agent to one of them is not a breach of his duty to the other,[70] as where the agent exercises no discretion in the matter, but acts merely to bring the parties together, and they themselves settle the terms of the agreement between them.[71] Furthermore, the rule does not disqualify one who is agent of one party for a certain purpose from acting as agent for an adverse party for an entirely different purpose.[72]

k. Dealings After Termination of Agency. The above rules as to good faith and loyalty do not apply after the agency has been fully terminated. As a general rule, after one has performed his office as agent or has in good faith severed his relation as agent, he is free to take up negotiations for his own interest, and can act adversely to his former principal as fully as any other person.[73] Because of

well as from a positive departure from instructions,[87] but he will not be liable if his performance was contingent upon the fulfilment of certain conditions on the part of the principal which the latter failed to perform.[88] If the agency is gratuitous the agent will not be liable for a non-feasance if he never entered upon the service expected of him; [89] but if he does undertake the service he must perform it according to the principal's instructions and will be liable for a failure to do so.[90] Deviations from instructions cannot be justified on the ground that they were not material if the principal in giving the instructions regarded them as material; [91] and if there is a clear violation of instructions the principal has a right of action and is entitled to at least nominal damages.[92] Where actual damages have been sustained the measure of damages is compensation for the loss actually sustained by the principal from the agent's violation of instructions,[93] and exemplary damages should not be awarded.[94] A violation of instructions will defeat the agent's right to recover commissions [95] or losses which he may himself have sustained in the transaction in question,[96] and also constitutes a breach of contract for which he may be discharged from his employment by the principal.[97]

b. Disobedience as a Conversion. The most usual remedies of a principal against his agent for a violation of instructions are an action of assumpsit and an action on the case;[98] but the instructions of the principal may be violated in such a manner as to amount to a conversion,[99] and authorize an action of Violations constituting a conversion.—An agent is liable for a conversion where he is intrusted with property to sell at a price to be approved by his principal, and he sells without such approval (Comley v. Dazian, 114 N. Y. 161, 21 N. E. 135); where he is instructed to sell goods at a certain price on a certain day and if not so sold to ship them to a certain place, and he sells them upon the following day (Scott v. Rogers, 31 N. Y. 676); where, on being authorized to negotiate a note, he is instructed not to part with the note until he gets the money, and he delivers the note to a third person, and such person discounts it and appropriates the proceeds (Laverty v. Snethen, 68 N. Y. 522, 23 Am. Rep. 184); where the owner of goods on a vessel instructs the captain not to land them on the wharf against which the vessel is moored, and the captain disobeys the order and delivers the goods into the possession of the wharfinger (Syeds v. Hay, 4 T. R. 260, 2 Rev. Rep. 377); or where an agent is trover.[1] A wrongful or fraudulent intent on the part of the agent is not a necessary element of a conversion,[2] but it is sufficient if the principal has been deprived of his property by the act of the agent in assuming an unauthorized dominion and control over it.[3] It is not, however, every violation of instructions through which a loss occurs entitling the principal to damages which will amount to a conversion,[4] but ordinarily there must be an entire departure from his authority;[5] and if the agent has done what he was authorized to do but merely violated some instruction, such as in regard to the terms of sale or manner of disposing of the proceeds, it will not amount to a conversion.[6] The distinction between the two classes of cases is technical and in some cases difficult to determine, but it exists,[7] and is important as it affects the nature of the remedy and the measure of the recovery.[8] In cases of violation of instructions not amounting to a conversion, the proper remedy is not trover but an action on the case,[9] and the measure of damages is the loss actually sustained by reason of the agent's misconduct.[10]

c. Where Instructions Are Ambiguous.[11] If the instructions of a principal to his agent are ambiguous or capable of different constructions, the agent is not chargeable with disobedience or its consequences in case he makes an honest mistake and adopts a construction different from that intended by the principal,[12] and in such cases the loss if any must fall upon the principal rather than the Violations not amounting to conversion.— An agent authorized to sell goods is not guilty of a conversion because he sells them at a price less than that stipulated by the principal (Moore v. McKibbin, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 246; Sarjeant v. Blunt, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 74; Dufresne v. Hutchinson, 3 Taunt. 117); nor is an agent who is given a bill of exchange with instructions to have it discounted and apply the proceeds in a particular way, where he has it discounted as authorized but misapplies a portion of the proceeds (Palmer v. Jarmain, 2 M. & W. 282); and where an agent was authorized to deliver goods only upon receiving sufficient security, and they were delivered upon an inadequate security, it was held that the agent was not liable for a conversion as the sufficiency of the security was a matter resting within his judgment (Cairnes v. Bleecher, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 300).

The result of the authorities has been said to be that if the agent parts with the property in a way or for a purpose not authorized he is liable for a conversion, but if he parts with it in accordance with his authority, although at a less price, or misapplies the proceeds or takes an inadequate security, he is not liable for a conversion of the property but only in an action on the case for misconduct. agent;[13] but the agent is not under such circumstances at liberty to disregard the instructions entirely and substitute therefor his own judgment, but must follow one of the interpretations reasonably derivable from the terms of the instructions.[14]

d. Cases of Emergency. In cases of necessity arising from a sudden emergency the conditions may be such as not only to justify but to require a deviation by the agent from his previous instructions,[15] or from the customs and usages of the particular agency.[16] In such case if the agent does what he deems best for the interests of the principal in the exercise of a sound discretion he will not be liable,[17] although it may subsequently appear that a course different from that adopted would have been more to the advantage of the principal.[18] Ordinarily where unforeseen conditions arise the agent should notify the principal and procure additional instructions,[19] and the agent so acting in good faith will not be liable in case a loss is occasioned by the delay;[20] but in the case of a sudden emergency the agent may and should do whatever he deems best in the exercise of a sound discretion.[21] The agent is not, however, justified in deviating further from his instructions than the necessities of the case require.[22]

e. Illegal Acts. An agent cannot be held accountable for failure to obey instructions to perform acts which are illegal or immoral,[23] or which if complied with would work a fraud upon others.[24]

f. Custom and Usage. Except as limited by special instructions the known usages and customs of the particular business for which an agent is engaged enter into and form a part of his authority and duty,[25] and he will be liable for losses due to a failure to act according to such usages and customs,[26] and on the other hand if he does act in accordance therewith he will not, in the absence of any instructions to the contrary, be liable for any loss resulting;[27] but where the instructions given are direct and positive they must be strictly complied with,[28] and no usage or custom will authorize a departure from such instructions or relieve the agent from liability for a resulting loss.[29]

g. Ratification by Principal.[30] Although an agent may have violated his instructions, he will not be liable to the principal if the latter, with knowledge of the facts, ratifies what he has done,[31] and such ratification may be either express or implied;[32] but in order to relieve the agent from liability it must have been with knowledge on the part of the principal of the material facts.[33]

An agent does not, however, in the absence of express agreement, insure the success of his undertaking,[36] or guarantee the principal against incidental losses,[37] or undertake that he will commit no errors or mistakes,[38] and so will not be liable for losses occurring without any fault or negligence on his part,[39] or, if he has acted in good faith and with due care, for losses due to a mere mistake,[40] or due to an error of judgment in regard to matters with which he is invested with discretionary powers.[41] He is required only to exercise ordinary care, skill, and diligence,[42] and if he does so will not be liable for losses which the principal may sustain.[43] By ordinary care, skill, and diligence is meant such as a person of ordinary prudence would exercise in the conduct of his own affairs of the same nature under similar circumstances,[44] or such as is usually possessed and exercised by persons of ordinary care and capacity engaged in the same business,[45] and what will amount to its exercise will depend upon all the circumstances of the particular case, including the character and subject-matter of the agency,[46] and so is ordinarily a question of fact for the jury.[47] An agent is not chargeable with negligence in failing to do something that he had no authority to do,[48] or in failing to go on and do things connected with or arising out of the agency which are beyond the powers and duties conferred upon him;[49] and where one employs an agent who is employed in the service of another principal with full knowledge of the first employment and of the fact that the second is to be concurrent therewith, the second contract must be construed in the light of the duties imposed by the first, and the agent will not be liable to the second principal for a failure of duty caused solely by the obligation imposed by the first employment.[50] Where one assumes as a mere intruder to act for another without the latter's consent, he will be held to a strict account and liable for as much as could have been made by the best of management.[51]

(II) Special Undertakings. The rule of ordinary care, skill, and diligence is that which, in the absence of express agreement, the law attaches to the relation of principal and agent,[52] and it may by special stipulation between the parties be varied and either narrowed or enlarged.[53] In such cases the liability of the agent is to be measured according to the terms of his undertaking,[54] which may be such as to render him liable as an insurer;[55] but an undertaking to keep property intrusted to the agent in good order is not an absolute undertaking to respond in damages for its loss or destruction if it occurs without the fault of the agent.[56]

(III) Where Agency Is Gratuitous. If an agent acts gratuitously he cannot be held liable for a mere non-feasance where he has never entered upon the undertaking;[57] but if he does enter upon it he may be held liable for negligence in the performance of the duties which he has undertaken.[58] A gratuitous agent is clearly liable if he is guilty of gross negligence,[59] but except where the undertaking is one which implies the exercise of special or professional skill,[60] it is ordinarily held that where he acts gratuitously he will not be liable in the absence of gross negligence.[61] It has been said, however, that to define what will constitute gross negligence on the part of a gratuitous agent is difficult if not impossible,[62] since what would be slight negligence in dealing with one matter or on the part of one person might be gross negligence in dealing with a different matter or on the part of a different person,[63] and that gross negligence is no more than a failure to exercise such care as the situation reasonably demands,[64] and that what will constitute such negligence depends upon all the circumstances of the case, including the subject-matter and objects of the agency and the character, qualifications, and relations of the parties,[65] so that it is ordinarily a question of fact for the determination of the jury.[66] A gratuitous agent will not be liable if he acts in good faith and with ordinary prudence,[67] or exercises such care and diligence as would be exercised by a prudent person in the management of his own affairs; [68] and it is held that he is not chargeable with gross negligence if he has exercised the same care in regard to his principal's property as his own.[69]

To whom notice given.— In the absence of any agreement or commercial usage to the contrary, it has been held that an agent will not be liable for failure to give notice of dishonor to all parties and indorsers, but that it is sufficient if he gives such notice to his principal (Mobile Bank v. Huggins, 3 Ala. 206; Troy State Bank v. Capital Bank, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 343); but if it is according ment anything but money,[96] and will be liable for accepting a different medium of payment whereby a loss is sustained by the principal.[97] The agent may also be liable for accepting payment of a debt in a depreciated currency,[98] particularly if the obligation was in terms payable in another and particular form of currency;[99] but if not in terms so payable the circumstances may be such that the agent will not be liable for taking a depreciated currency,[1] and he will not be liable if it was done with the express consent of the principal,[2] or with his knowledge and acquiescence,[3] or the principal with knowledge of the facts accepted and retained what the agent had collected.[4] If an agent to collect employs a subagent he will ordinarily, in the absence of any stipulation to the contrary, be liable for any negligence or default on the part of the subagent,[5] and the subagent will be liable to the agent who is his immediate principal.[6] If, however, the subagent is employed with the consent of the principal, which may be either express or implied,[7] and may be implied from the usual course of trade or nature of the transaction,[8] the agent will

to the established and understood custom of a bank to give notice to all indorsers, it will be liable for failure to do so (Smedes v. Utica Bank, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 372 [affirmed in 3 Cow. 662]; Utica Bank v. McKinster, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 473).

not be liable for the negligence or default of the subagent if he has exercised due care in selecting a competent and reliable person.[9] It is also competent for the agent expressly to stipulate against liability from the acts of a subagent,[10] in which case he will not be liable in the absence of gross negligence in selecting the subagent;[11] but ordinarily where an agent acts through another he must exercise due care in selecting a competent and reliable person.[12] If an agent is unable to make a collection intrusted to him, it is his duty to notify the principal,[13] and he must return the notes or other obligations intrusted to him or furnish a sufficient excuse for not doing so;[14] and a mere offer to return them after a lapse of time is not sufficient to relieve him from liability without a showing that he has used due care and diligence in an effort to collect them.[15]

(III) AGENT TO LEND OR INVEST. Where an agent is authorized to lend or invest money of his principal he must exercise reasonable skill and ordinary care and diligence, and will be liable for losses occasioned by his negligence,[16] as in lending money on the unsecured obligation of the borrower,[17] or an inadequate security,[18] or on property subject to prior mortgages, liens, or other encumbrances.[19] The agent may also become personally liable by a guaranty to the

Where no loss is occasioned.— An agent should not as a general rule lend money upon property subject to a mortgage and take a second mortgage, and if he does he takes the risk of being personally liable in case a loss occurs; but he is not liable merely because he has made such an investment where no loss has been sustained and there is no evidence that any will be sustained. liable, at least not for more than nominal damages, for failing to procure insurance where no loss has resulted,[40] or where the insurance if effected according to the instructions of the principal would have been void.[41]

(v) Forwarding Agents. A person acting as a forwarding agent in the shipment of goods or property must conform to any express instructions of his principal,[42] and must exercise ordinary care and diligence in the performance of all the duties involved in his undertaking; [43] but a mere forwarding agent is not an insurer of the safety of the shipment,[44] and will not be liable if he acts with due care and diligence according to the nature of the undertaking.[45]

(vi) Care and Custody of Property. An agent who is intrusted with the care and custody of property belonging to his principal becomes a bailee of the property and subject to the ordinary liabilities of such bailees,[46] but this liability does not arise until the actual delivery of the property to the agent or its constructive delivery whereby he accepts its care.[47] The agent will not be liable if the property is lost, destroyed, or injured without any fault or negligence on his part,[48] or if in keeping and protecting it he exercised ordinary care, skill, and diligence,[49] or such as an ordinarily prudent person would exercise in regard to his own property;[50] but what will amount to ordinary care and diligence in this regard will depend upon all the circumstances of the case,[51] and particularly upon the nature and value of the property,[52] and in any case where an agent has property of the principal in his care and custody he will be liable therefor unless he can show that he still has the property or can account for its loss.[53]

agent must be with knowledge on the part of the principal of the material facts.[74] So also the agent will not be liable if the loss was due to the fault of the principal himself,[75] or the principal's contributory negligence,[76] or if the principal, notwithstanding the negligence of the agent, could by the exercise of ordinary care have protected himself and avoided any loss therefrom and failed to do so.[77]

d. Debts.— Where an agency to sell merchandise for another is terminated by the agent's insolvency, debts arising from sales made by the agent on credit in his own name belong to the principal, subject to legal liens, principal; [94] and if the principal cannot specifically trace such proceeds he becomes a creditor at large of the agent for the amount.[95] It is also the duty of an agent to account for property or funds which he has received to be applied to a specific purpose,[96] and if he fails to apply them to the purposes for which they were received, the principal may recover the same.[97] But where the property received consists of money, the agent need not account for and turn over the identical money received unless it can be identified.[98] If the property is sold or exchanged, or the money invested, the title of the principal at once attaches, and the agent must account for the money or property so received.[99] The agent must deliver although in pursuance of the agreement between the parties the agent has rendered monthly accounts of all his sales, and given notes or acceptances to the principal for the cost of the merchandise at wholesale prices, taking a receipt containing a promise to account for the same at maturity. See Allen v. Thompson, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 198, 77 Am. A purchase in the principal's name with the agent's funds does not vest in the agent, even though made without the principal's knowledge, unless the principal consents to give the agent the benefit. Giannoni v. Gunny, 14 La. Ann. 632.

Election of principal.— The principal may elect to hold the agent or claim goods taken by the agent without authority. Thus an agent, although authorized to sell or exchange the property of his principal, does not by any exchange divest his principal of his right of property in the thing received; nor does an agent, by investing his funds in the property of his principal, make the property his own. The principal may claim the property received by his agent in exchange, or sue for the value; and suing for its value is an election of remedy. Lowry v. Beckner, 5 B. Mon. Improper demand.— Under a provision in a contract for the sale of machines by an agent that he should promptly deliver all machines remaining unsold at the end of the season on demand of the principal, such agent cannot be compelled to pay for machines as sold which he refused to deliver on demand, where the demand was coupled with a claim for the value of other machines under another provision of the contract, and compliance with it might have been construed as an admission of the validity of the latter claim, which the agent disputed. 5. Kountz v. Gates, 78 Wis. 415, 47 N. W. 729, holding that where an agent disposes of his principal's property according to his authority, and secures a contract for the payment of a valuable consideration therefor, repudiate any unauthorized acts of the agent and hold him strictly accountable to the agreement between them.[6]

b. To Whom Accountable. An agent's duty to account is ordinarily owing to his principal only,[7] or upon his death to the heirs or personal representatives.[8] In accordance with this rule, a subagent ordinarily is under a duty to account only to the primary agent,[9] unless his employment is such that a privity of contract exists between him and the principal, in which case he may be compelled to account directly to the principal;[10] and in any case he may be compelled to account to the principal if notice of the latter's ownership is given to him before he turns over the funds or property to the primary agent.[11] But having settled with the primary agent a subagent cannot be compelled to account over again to some other person having a beneficial interest but sustaining no legal relation to him.[12] In case of the death of an agent his personal representatives must account wherever it would have been his duty so to do.[13] Where a number of persons constitute one their common agent for a common purpose, he should account to them all together and not to one separately,[14] except where the understanding between and wrongfully surrenders such contract or releases the purchaser from payment of any part thereof without authority, he must account to his principal on the basis of conditions existing immediately before such surrender. And see Witsell v. Riggs, 14 Rich. (S. C.) 186, where an action was brought to recover damages for an alleged breach of duty in not paying over to plaintiff the purchase-money (Confederate treasury notes) of land which defendant had sold for plaintiff, the money having been retained by defendant, without giving notice that he had received it, until it became valueless; and the declaration contained no specific allegation of fraud or collusion, nor of special damages; and it was held that the measure of damages was the value of the currency at the time it was received by defendant, with interest thereon.

the parties is that he should account to one only,[15] or to each separately.[16] Where a principal has assigned his right to the property or funds, of which fact the agent has notice, he may be compelled to pay it over thereafter to the assignee.[17]

c. Keeping and Rendering Accounts. In accordance with this duty, an agent, where his agency is of such a nature as to require it, must keep true, regular, and accurate accounts of all his transactions as agent, both of receipts and disbursements,[18] and be ready to render to his principal a full and complete statement of his dealings and of the state of the account between them,[19] supported by proper vouchers,[20] whenever an accounting is reasonably requested or demanded,[21] or at reasonable times without demand, especially if to make such demand would be impracticable or very inconvenient,[22] unless there is something in the nature or character of the particular agency that excuses him from doing so,[23] as where the principal's own conduct or carelessness makes it impossible for him to render an

Joint interests.—If one sells personal property as the agent and by the authority of another, and agrees to pay him the proceeds, he is liable to such other for the proceeds of the sale, although other persons may be jointly interested in the property. Where notice is given to an agent in a particular adventure that another person is jointly interested with his principal, this prima facie imposes upon the agent the necessity of accounting to such other person for his share of the adventure; but this obligation ceases to exist if the transaction shows that it was the intention of such other person and of the party originally interested in the adventure that the agent should account solely to the latter. account.[24] An agent who fails to keep an account raises thereby a suspicion of infidelity or neglect, creates a presumption against himself, and brings upon himself the burden of accounting to the utmost for all that has come into his hands; and in such a case every doubt will be resolved against the agent, and in favor of the principal.[25] If the agent renders an untrue account, giving a false balance, he becomes at once liable to his principal;[26] and if he refuses to account when it is his duty to do so, the principal may at once terminate the agency and sue for the balance then due.[27]

d. Set-Off and Counter-Claim. In rendering an account between principal and agent, any lawful claims of the agent by way of compensation, reimbursement, or interest may as a general rule be deducted from the claim of the principal,[28] except that the agent may not deduct or set off a debt due to himself in a matter not arising out of the agency,[29] nor can he set off a claim where it would be a breach of his duty to the principal,[30] or set off sums wrongfully or unauthorizedly expended or applied by him.[31] Nor can an agent, without the principal's knowledge and consent, apply the principal's funds or property, which he has in his possession, to a debt due to him by the principal[32] or by a third person,[33] particularly where the funds or property are intrusted to him to be applied to a another and specific purpose.[34]

e. Approving, Stating, and Opening Accounts. Questions relative to a stated or settled account between a principal and his agent are ordinarily governed by the rules governing stated or settled accounts generally.[35] Where an account is received by the principal and not objected to within a reasonable time, it is presumed to have been accepted as correct, and ordinarily thereby becomes a settled account; and if the principal acted upon full knowledge the account cannot be before the time specified therein, and may set off against plaintiff's claim the expenses incurred after the breach in endeavoring to carry out the requirements of the contract as to themselves.

Stale demands.— A mandatary who has acted as such continuously for a long period of years without being called upon for an account, and who then renders an account showing a balance in his favor, does not subject his demand to a charge of staleness because the credits giving rise to the balance arose in the first years of the mandate. Borge's Succession, 44 La. Ann. 1, 10 So. 418.

Where a principal signs drafts for his agent with the full knowledge of the state of the accounts and in liquidation or settlement of the same, he is as a general rule prima facie bound thereby for the payment of the money expressed therein, and if there are any facts going to show that it was not the intention of the parties that the drafts should be a full and final settlement and compromise of the subject-matter of the accounts for which the drafts were given, the burden of proof to show such facts is on the principal, and he should rebut the presumption of the law against him by clear and satisfactory evidence. Facts peculiarly within knowledge of agent. — The retention by a principal for a number of years of the accounts rendered by an agent without objection thereto, when the accounts contained statements of facts peculiarly within the knowledge of the agent and not known by principal until shortly before action brought, does not constitute an acquiescence which will prevent the principal maintaining an action for a difference in his favor. In settling an extended insurance account between an agent and the representatives of his deceased principal, the fact that defendant omitted to credit his principal with interest and the balance due to him from year to year, where there was no express contract time or the death of the agent will not prevent an opening of the account, although in order that such opening may be ordered the case should be very clear.[38] When the contract of agency provides who shall pass upon the accounts of the agent, the report of such inspector is conclusive in the absence of fraud or mistake.[39]

f. Commingling of Funds or Property.[40] As an important part of his duty to keep clear and regular accounts, it is the duty of an agent to keep separate and distinct from his own property the business and property of his principal; and if he fails to do so, he is put to the necessity of showing clearly which part belongs to his principal and which to himself;[41] and he is personally responsible for any resulting loss,[42] unless he acted in good faith and no detriment resulted to the principal.[43] In such case the whole commingled mass will be treated as trust property except in so far as the agent may be able to distinguish what is his,[44] and every doubt will be resolved in the principal's favor; and if the two sums cannot be distinguished the agent must satisfy to the full every legal or equitable claim of the principal, even to the extent, if that be necessary, of giving the whole to the principal.[45] If the agent deposits his principal's money in a bank in good to allow interest, is not evidence of fraud; and the fact that certain claims which were then of little or no value, although they afterward became very valuable, were not mentioned in the account, although both parties had full means of knowing the facts, is not proof of fraud on the part of the agent. Farnam v. Brooks, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 212.

An agent's account in which he charges himself with sums received is not conclusive against him as to the facts of those receipts; but the account may be opened to let in the fact of the sums not having been received in either of the following cases: If the account on the face of it disclosed that the money has not been actually received; if the principal shows by his conduct that he knows the money has not been actually received; or if the principal does not express his assent to a subsequent correction of the account by the agent, in which correction he relieves himself from the sum with which he had previously charged himself. standing, either in his principal's name or under some mark to indicate that the deposit is not his own personal account, he will not be liable, although the bank prove insolvent;[46] but if he deposits it in his own name or in any manner other than to indicate that it belongs to his principal, ordinarily he is personally liable for any loss.[47]

g. Liability of Agent For Interest. As a general rule, where an agent is ready at the proper time to account for and turn over funds or property in his hands belonging to his principal, he is not liable for interest thereon before a demand.[48] But where the agent fails or refuses to account, and keeps in his hands funds for which he should have accounted, the principal may collect from him, in addition to such funds, lawful interest on the same from the time when the accounting should have been made.[49] An agent will also be liable for interest wrongfully converted the funds to his own use, interest is reckoned from the date of its conversion.[59] The rate of interest chargeable against an agent is ordinarily the legal rate,[60] except that if the money was to be invested at a given rate and is so invested, he will be chargeable with such rate,[61] and except that if the agent has secured a higher rate, the principal is entitled to all that he has received.[62] Where an agent entitled to a certain per cent on amounts collected by him as compensation is charged with interest on the full amount collected, he is entitled to be credited with interest on his commissions from the time the money was received by him.[63]

h. Estoppel Between Principal and Agent — (i) In General. Estoppel between a principal and his agent is ordinarily governed by the rules regulating estoppel generally.[64] Thus as a general rule an agent is estopped to deny the amount shown to be due by his account;[65] and if he has represented to his principal that he has received certain funds or property, he cannot later show that he received nothing at all or something else instead, but must account for the cash or property he acknowledged he had received.[66] The mere fact that an agent has made tentative statements of account to his principal from time to time does not deprive the principal of the right to demand a full and complete account of all the agent's dealings for him;[67] but if the principal has with full knowledge accepted the agent's account he is estopped from later trying to hold the agent liable for his acts,[68] although he is not precluded from suing for a balance due by the account.[69] reason of an infringement of trade-mark.[74] In the case of an adverse claim the agent is not bound to pay the amount claimed to his principal unless he is protected against the claim;[75] he must interplead the principal and the claimant if he can,[76] and demand indemnity and deliver the property to the party who indemnifies him;[77] and if after proper notice of the claim by a third person he turns over the property or funds to his principal, he becomes liable to the claimant if the latter has a right thereto,[78] although he will not be liable if he turns over the property to his principal with knowledge of a third person's claim but before it has been legally asserted.[79]

i. Illegality of Transaction.[80] An agent cannot be compelled to account for funds or property received by him for his principal in the course of an illegal transaction where the right of recovery and the illegal transaction are so closely connected that the principal cannot enforce his right without showing the illegality.[81] But where the illegal transaction has been completed, and the principal relies for his right to an accounting upon a collateral and independent obligation not connected therewith, the agent may be compelled to account for the funds or property so received, although arising out of the illegal transaction, and will be precluded from setting up the illegality of the transaction as a defense.[82] So

If the title of the third person is not paramount the agent is liable to the principal for the money paid him. Thus where a portion of the price of land is paid to an agent of the owner of the land by the intending purchaser, and the agent, on the representations of the intending purchaser that the owner's title is not perfect, returns it, and the title is afterward shown to be perfect, the agent is liable to his principal for the money so paid to him. B. Duties and Liabilities of Principal to Agent — 1. Obligation to Continue in Business and Afford Agent Opportunity, Means, and Facilities For Earning Commission. In the absence of an express or implied stipulation to the contrary in the contract of agency, the principal of a commercial agent is under no obligation to continue in business and afford the agent opportunity, means, and facilities for earning his commissions; and hence his failure to do so affords the agent no ground for the recovery of damages.[95]

L. T. Occ. Notes 394, 25 Ont. 291 (holding that where, in a written contract of agency, the principal agreed to pay the agent a fixed commission on all sales effected by the latter of goods manufactured by the former, and the contract was made terminable at the end of a year or a month's notice by either party, there was no implied obligation on the part of the principal to manufacture any goods).

Obligation to continue agency.— An obligation of the principal to continue the agency for any period cannot be implied where, in a written contract of agency, the principal agreed to pay the agent a fixed commission on all sales effected by the latter of goods manufactured by the former, and the contract was made terminable at the end of a year or a month's notice by either party. Morris v. Dinnick, 14 Can. L. T. Occ. Notes 394, 25 Ont. 291. See, however, Lewis v. Atlas Mut. L. Ins. Co., 61 Mo. 534.

Obligation to supply agent with goods.— Defendant entered into an agreement in writing with plaintiff whereby defendant agreed to employ plaintiff as agent for five years, and plaintiff agreed to do his utmost to obtain orders for the various goods manufactured or sold by defendant which might be submitted to him, plaintiff to be paid by a commission. After two years defendant ceased to carry on business and discharged plaintiff. In an action for wrongful dismissal it was held that there was an implied agreement to supply plaintiff with goods to a reasonable extent, and that plaintiff was entitled to damages. Turner v. Goldsmith, [1891] 1 Q. B. 544, 60 L. J. Q. B. 247, 64 L. T. Rep. N. S. 301, 39 Wkly. Rep. 547. So, where plaintiff had contracted with defendant to act as its sole agent in another state to establish a market for its oils, and was to receive as compensation ten per cent of the amount of his sales, and to be subject to the orders of the company, defendant was bound to furnish the oils necessary to fulfil contracts made by plaintiff. Union Refining Co.

2. Agent's Right to Compensation — a. As Affected by Contract of Employment — (i) Necessity of Authority — (a) In General. To entitle a person

v. Barton, 77 Ala. 148. Where, however, defendants agreed to furnish plaintiff with goods for sale by him, but not all he could sell, and after goods had been furnished him for a part of the season it developed that defendants could not manufacture more than they themselves could sell at retail, which plaintiff had understood they were to continue to do, they were under no obligation to supply him further with goods. Dodge v. Reynolds, 135 Mich. 692, 98 N. W. 737.

Excuses for discontinuing business.—Where a manufacturer obligates himself to his sales agent to continue the business and supply the agent with goods for a definite period, he is not excused from performance by the fact that, before the expiration of the specified period, his manufactory is destroyed by fire. Turner v. Goldsmith, [1891] 1 Q. B. 544, 60 L. J. Q. B. 247, 64 L. T. Rep. N. S. 301, 39 Wkly. Rep. 547. So the fact that a foreign insurance company becomes unable, by reason of the insufficiency of its assets, to comply with a statute regulating foreign insurance companies, does not excuse it from carrying out a contract by which it has obligated itself to employ a state agent for a specified period. Lewis v. Atlas Mut. L. Ins. Co., 61 Mo. 534.

Obligation to supply agent with samples.—A principal may bind himself to furnish his agent with samples of the goods he is hired to sell. Jacquin v. Boutard, 89 Hun (N. Y.) 437, 35 N. Y. Suppl. 496 [affirmed in 157 N. Y. 686, 51 N. E. 1091] (holding that where a manufacturer hired an agent to sell his goods on commission, and, although he had not agreed in terms to send the agent samples, yet did so until he gave six months' notice to terminate the agency, as allowed by the contract, his obligation to do so while the agency continued was clearly within the intent of the parties and will be enforced); Turner v. Goldsmith, [1891] 1 Q. B. 544, 60 L. J. Q. B. 247, 64 L. T. Rep. N. S. 301, 39 Wkly. Rep. 547. However, a contract by which a principal agrees to supply his agent for the sale of a certain article "with sufficient samples" of the said article, "as may be called for" by the agent, means only that the agent shall be furnished with a quantity of samples such as shall be reasonably sufficient for the business actually done, and, in case of disagreement, the question as to what is a reasonable quantity is to be determined by the jury. Jenson v. Perry, 126 Pa. St. 495, 17 Atl. 665, 12 Am. St. Rep. 888.

Obligation to make fair prices.—Under an executory contract between a corporation engaged in the business of refining cotton-seed oil in Alabama and an agent employed to introduce and establish a market for the sale of its oils in Georgia, by which it was stipulated that for three years the agent was to have the sole right of selling the company's oils in Georgia through himself and his subagents, was to pay the expenses of himself and his agents, was to receive as compensation ten per cent of the amount of his sales, and was to be subject to the orders of the company, it was held that the company, in regulating the price to be charged for oils, was neither required to sell its oils at a loss, nor authorized to raise the price above a fairly remunerative profit, which would defeat or substantially hinder sales, in order to get rid of the agency. Union Refining Co. v. Barton, 77 Ala. 148.

Obligation to supply agent with price lists.—A principal may by the contract of agency obligate himself to supply a sales agent with price lists. Jacquin v. Boutard, 89 Hun (N. Y.) 437, 35 N. Y. Suppl. 496 [affirmed in 157 N. Y. 686, 51 N. E. 1091].

Obligation to make money advances to agent.—A contract by which plaintiff is to serve defendants as a traveling salesman for a certain term, his compensation to be half the profits made on sales effected through his agency, he to pay his own expenses, and defendants to furnish supplies, and, to enable him to meet expenses until profits are realized, to honor his orders on them for fifty dollars every two weeks during his employment, binds defendant to make such payments, not as compensation, but as loans, the rights of the parties to be adjusted on settlement of the profits; and their refusal to make such payments is a breach of the contract. Beck v. West, 87 Ala. 213, 6 So. 70.

Obligations as to agent for sale of corporate stock.—By the contract between plaintiff and defendant building and loan association he became agent for the sale of "shares of its stock" in a certain territory, his compensation being fixed at a certain sum per share, which was to cover all his expenses as well; and he further bound himself to sell five hundred shares at least per month. Shortly afterward defendant changed the nature of its shares, and issued them on a new basis, whereby they became less salable. It was held that this was a breach of the contract, as it contemplated only shares of the character defendant was issuing when the contract was made. Gates v. National Bldg., etc., Union, 46 Minn. 419, 49 N. W. 232. An agent was employed by the stock-holders of a corporation to place its stock under a contract that he should receive a commission on all the stock so placed. The contract contained no restrictions as to whether he could sell at par or at the market price, or that the corporation or any of its members should not sell any stock for less than par. The agent placed part of the stock at par, but after members of the company had put their own stock on the market and sold it for less than par, the agent found he could place no more stock at par, and ceased to make further efforts to place additional stock at any price. It was held that he was entitled only to his commission on the amount of stock he had placed, and not on the whole amount of stock to be placed, since the stock-holders, to compensation for services rendered as the agent of another, he must ordinarily have been employed by that other to render such services.[96]

(B) Express and Implied Authority.[97] The contract of agency may be express,[98] or it may be implied from the conduct and words of the parties and the facts and circumstances surrounding the case.[99]

(C) Ratification.[1] Although a person assumes to act for another without authority, yet he may recover compensation for his services in an otherwise proper case if the latter ratifies the unauthorized act.[2] So one for whom an agent has been employed by a third person without authority may ratify the unauthorized employment, in which case the agent may, if otherwise entitled, recover compensation of the former.[3]

(II) Necessity of Contract For Compensation — (A) In General. The right of an agent to recover compensation for his services rests upon contract, express or implied, as affected by custom or usage. Accordingly the principal is not liable for compensation in the absence of any express or implied contract to pay it, or of a custom or usage entitling the agent to compensation.[4]

(B) Express and Implied Contracts. The contract for compensation may be in putting their own stock on the market, violated no term of the contract. Vine v. Munson, 5 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 480, 6 Am. L. Rec. 240, 2 Cinc. L. Bul. 293.

Consideration.— The contract for compensation must be based upon a valid and sufficient consideration, else no compensation is recoverable. Fife v. Blake, 38 Minn. 426, 38 N. W. 202 (holding that where plaintiff buys property on monthly payments, and surrenders the contract and vacates the property, an action against the vendors on their promise that if he can sell the property he can have all he gets above the amount of their claim cannot be sustained, the promise being without consideration and void); Murray v. Beard, 102 N. Y. 505, 7 N. E. 553 (holding that a contract by an agent with several employers separately to obtain a sale of piles for each one of them on commissions, he knowing that proposals are about to be made by a company building a pier for the purchase of the same of the lowest bidder but not disclosing the same to his principals, cannot be enforced by him against one of his employers who is the successful bidder, on account of no consideration); Washburne v. Pintsch, 17 Fed. 582 (holding that where the owner of property, induced to believe that another, who has been trying to sell such property on speculation for his own benefit alone, was clearly acting as his agent in the matter, and that he is under a moral obligation to compensate him for his trouble, promises to do so, such promise is without color of consideration and void). However, an agreement to pay an agent a certain sum if he sells a farm, and half that sum if the owner sells it outside his influence, is upon good consideration. Hoskins v. Fogg, 60 N. H. 402. And where a sales agent sent a man to see a customer after the principal had said to him that any man that left his card or admitted that he had had any conversation with the agent in regard to the property to be sold should be the agent's customer, and he should get the commission, the agent's efforts to sell the property afforded a consideration for a promise thereafter made by the principal to pay the agent a commission should it later sell to such prospective purchaser. Garfield v. Peerless Motor Car Co., 189 Mass. 395, 75 N. E. 695.

"Charges" as including commissions.—An agreement that defendant, employed to sell lands purchased by him for plaintiff's benefit, should be reimbursed for any costs and charges he may have been or thereafter might be at by reason of such purchase excludes defendant to any claim to commissions or other compensation for his services. These cannot come under the head of charges; that word includes only expenses paid out in attending to the business. Green v. Jones, 78 N. C. 265.

Compensation for retransfer of machines.— Where defendant stored machines with complainant, its agent, to be conveniently delivered to other agents in the state, and the contract between defendant and complainant declared that he should be allowed compensation for the retransfer of such machines, but that he should ship at the order of defendant all unused machines free of charge, and on demand of an agent of defendant all facts and circumstances of the case;[6] and in general it may be said that when an agent performs services for his principal of such a nature and under such circumstances as to imply that he expects compensation, and there is nothing in the case from which the principal might reasonably assume that the services are rendered gratuitously, a contract to pay the agent a reasonable compensation may be implied.[7]

(c) Modification of Contract. Contracts as to compensation may be modified by agreement of the parties, subject to the rules that apply to the modification of contracts generally.[8]

machines were surrendered, and, by such agent's direction, immediately transferred to parties who had been appointed agents instead of complainant, he was not entitled to compensation for the transfer, it not being to other agents, within the meaning of the contract, and being governed by the agreement to deliver to the company free of charge. Brown v. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co., (Tenn. Ch. App. 1900) 59 S. W. 196.

Compensation for selling second-hand machines.— A season contract of agency for the sale of machinery which provides that no commissions shall be paid for the sale of second-hand machinery once before sold by the agent has no reference to commissions for the second sale of machines which had been sold by the agent before the date of the contract and bought in by the principal at foreclosure sale. Shook v. Marion Mfg. Co., 138 Mich. 467, 101 N. W. 657. So a provision in a contract between a threshing machine company and their local agents at a certain town that the agents should receive no commission on the sale of second-hand goods referred to second-hand machines taken in part payment for new machines sold by the agents in their territory, and did not preclude them from recovering a commission for selling, at a special request of the company, a second-hand machine taken by it in trade in another locality. Gooch v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co., 119 Mo. App. 397, 96 S. W. 431. And where, in a contract of agency, the principal reserved the right to sell second-hand machinery in any territory, and provided that he should not be liable for commissions on such sales, and it was also provided that no commissions should be paid on second-hand goods except when sold by an agent other than the one who sold them in the first instance, it was held that upon the sale by plaintiff of a second-hand engine which had not been sold by plaintiff before and which was represented by the general agent to be a new engine, plaintiff was entitled to a commission. However, a promise to pay for services may be implied only when they were rendered under such circumstances as authorized the party performing them to entertain a reasonable expectation of payment by the party soliciting performance. McLiney v. Gomprecht, 7 Misc. (N. Y.) 169, 27 N. Y. Suppl. 253; Harrison v. Gotlieb, 3 Ohio Cir. Ct. 191, 2 Ohio Cir. Dec. 109.

Services rendered for joint benefit of parties.— Where one of several parties interested in a joint enterprise acts for the benefit of all, he is not, in the absence of an express contract, entitled to any compensation. So an agent who in his character of agent collects a debt due to his principal and retains it under a contract of loan with his principal as debtor, entered into before the debt is collected, is not entitled to commissions on the amount so collected. Short v. Skipwith, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 12,809, 1 Brock. 103. And see Rogers v. Priest, 74 Wis. 538, 43 N. W. 510. And where plaintiff, being desirous of surrendering premises which he held under a lease from defendant, had an interview with defendant in relation thereto, during which defendant told him to get a tenant and he would do what was right, no agreement to pay plaintiff commissions for procuring the tenant could be implied from such remark. Where, however, a landlord and tenant agree on the expiration of the lease that the tenant shall remain in possession, to care for the premises, and collect the rents in his own behalf, and apply them on the landlord's indebtedness to him for a building erected on the premises, the law will imply a promise to allow the tenant reasonable compensation for his services. Consideration for modification.— Where a contract appointing plaintiff defendant's ex-

b. As Affected by Termination of Agency [9] — (i) Termination by Act of Parties — (a) In General. An agent selling goods on commission is ordinarily entitled to a commission on goods sold by him during the continuance of the agency, although the principal does not deliver the goods [10] or collect the price [11] until after the agency has terminated; and the same rule applies to orders for work taken by an agent before termination of the agency and fulfilled by the clusive agent for the sale of automobiles within a certain territory provided that all inquiries from territory other than his own should be promptly referred to defendant, efforts made by plaintiff to sell a car to a resident of a territory other than his own constituted a violation of the contract, and not an act done thereunder, and hence such efforts constituted a sufficient consideration for defendant's promise to pay plaintiff a commission for a sale resulting therefrom. Garfield v. Peerless Motor Car Co., 189 Mass. 395, 75 N. E. 695. And where plaintiff and defendants agreed that the former should devote his time and energy to selling real estate for the latter at specified rates of compensation, "for such time as may be mutually agreeable," it was held that as no time was fixed by the agreement, plaintiff was not bound by it except as to what was actually done under it, so that a subsequent agreement that defendants should pay him a different rate if he should sell a particular piece was upon a valid consideration. Forbes v. Bushnell, 47 Minn. 402, 50 N. W. 368.

Implied modification.— Where a principal, after appointing an agent to sell property for a certain commission, writes to him reducing its amount, his silence for upwards of three months will be considered an acquiescence. Livaudais v. Perret, 11 La. 294. Pending negotiations by plaintiff on behalf of defendants for an exchange of whisky of defendants for a yacht, they wrote to him that if he made a trade on the basis proposed, they should expect him to wait for his commissions until they could realize something on the yacht. Plaintiff received this letter before the sale took place, but did not directly assent to the postponement of payment of commissions. It did not appear that defendants authorized the sale except on that condition. It was held that plaintiff was not entitled to commissions until the yacht was disposed of. Frankel v. Wathen, 58 Hun (N. Y.) 543, 12 N. Y. Suppl. 591.

Supersession of original contract.— Defendant entered into a written agreement with plaintiff to pay him a certain commission for selling real estate. Subsequently she entered into an oral contract with him whereby it was agreed that he should enter into her service and manage her general business for a certain compensation per day. It was held that the oral contract did not supersede the original agreement, there being evidence that it was not modified or abrogated. Smith v. Lane, 101 Ind. 449. And an oral agreement to pay an agent a commission for selling land is not superseded by subsequent letters raising the price and giving more specific instructions as to the terms to be made with the purchaser, and the letters will control the oral instructions so far only as they are inconsistent therewith. McLaughlin v. Wheeler, 1 S. D. 497, 47 N. W. 816.

Verbal modification.— A provision in a written contract of agency forbidding its change unless approved in writing by the principal does not invalidate an oral agreement for commissions on sales not within its terms. Shook v. Marion Mfg. Co., 138 Mich. 467, 101 N. W. 657.

E. 1091]. See, however, Merriman v. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co., 96 Wis. 600, 71 N. W. 1050, where it appeared that an agency contract for the sale of machines provided that the agents should obtain orders, house the machines, instruct the purchasers, draw notes and remit the same; that they should receive a specified selling commission, to be paid only on machines sold and settled for and not on orders not filled; and that the principal might at any time terminate the contract and take into its possession all orders, notes, moneys, machines, etc.; and that after the agents took orders for machines, but before they were filled, the principal canceled the contract, and afterward delivered machines to persons from whom such orders were obtained; and it was held that the agents were entitled to reasonable compensation for obtaining such orders, but not to the full commission specified in the agreement.

11. Singer Sewing Mach. Co. v. Brewer, 78 Ark. 202, 93 S. W. 755, so holding under a contract which stipulated for a fixed weekly compensation, for a commisssion on sales payable as payments on the sales were made, and for a remitting commission on the net amounts collected and remitted to the company, and provided that all claims for compensation should cease on the termination of the contract, which was subject to termination at the pleasure of either party; and holding also that a custom that an agent selling a machine to a buyer who moved out of his territory should forfeit his commission on the balance unpaid at the time of the re-principal thereafter.[12] However, in the absence of anything in the contract to the contrary,[13] an agent is not entitled to commissions on new orders delivered to the principal after termination of the agency by customers procured by the agent while the agency existed;[14] and agents who manage realty are not entitled on the termination of the agency to retain commissions on rents to accrue in the future from leases made by them.[15] The right to advances of money on account of unearned commissions, as sometimes given by the contract of agency, ceases upon termination of the agency.[16]

(B) Termination by Force of Contract of Agency; Expiration of Time. If the contract by which an agent is employed to effect a particular transaction does not fix the term of its duration, the law implies its continuance for a reasonable moval, and that the account should be transferred to the agent into whose territory the purchaser moved, where future collections were to be made, does not show that the parties intended that the agent on his discharge should forfeit his selling commission on uncollected sales. To the contrary see Wheeler, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Gallivan, 10 Nebr. 313, 4 N. W. 1061, where plaintiff and defendant entered into a contract for the sale and leasing by the former of machines furnished by the latter, plaintiff to receive certain commissions "during the continuance of the contract," and the contract ceased by the consent of both parties, after which payments were made to defendant for machines disposed of by plaintiff under the contract, and it was held that plaintiff was not entitled to commissions on payments so subsequently made.

12. Greene v. Freund, 150 Fed. 721, 80 C. C. A. 387, where it appeared that plaintiff made a contract with defendant for an indefinite term to act as its agent in procuring orders for the bleaching, printing, and dyeing of cotton goods; that the contract provided that plaintiff should receive a commission, to be paid each month on all the work secured by him and completed by defendant during the preceding month; that his manner of doing business was to interview a prospective customer, and, if favorable, to prepare and send him a writing called a "price memo," which was in the form of a letter, setting forth all the conditions of a contract and was in effect an offer which, if accepted, became a contract binding the customer to send to defendant at least a minimum quantity of work to be done at prices therein specified; and it was held that on plaintiff's discharge he was entitled to recover commissions, not only on the work previously done, but also on all work called for by contracts so secured by him by the acceptance of his offers by customers, either formally or by sending orders thereunder for any part of the work called for. See, however, Hilton v. Helliwell, [1894] 2 Ir. 94, holding that the agent was not entitled to commissions under such circumstances where the contract provided that he was to be paid a commission for work done or supplied from the date of the contract at a certain per cent on amount of orders; that the contract should be terminable on notice — neither party to be entitled to compensation, but the agent to receive, on the termination of the contract, such commission as should have been earned and should be or become payable.

Suppl. 671, where defendant agreed to pay plaintiff half his commissions on the business of customers whom plaintiff should bring him, and by a subsequent change in the rules of the board of brokers to which defendant belonged the payment by him of such commissions to plaintiff was prohibited, and it was held that the contract might be terminated, after the lapse of a reasonable time, for a good reason, and on proper notice; that such change in the rules of the board was sufficient reason for a termination of the contract; and that, on dealings after such termination with a customer introduced by plaintiff, defendant was not liable to plaintiff for commissions.

Suppl. 746 (holding also that the fact that the accounts of such customers were marked in defendant's books with the initials of plaintiff to designate them as his customers does not prove that such later sales were made by him, it further appearing that the marks were originally made on old accounts while plaintiff was in defendant's employ, and were continued in the subsequent accounts by the bookkeepers for their own convenience, and not by order of defendant); Ract v. Duviard-Dime, 4 N. time and that only.[17] If the contract sets a time within which he must perform, he is not as a rule entitled to compensation unless, within the time set, he finds a third person who is able, ready, and willing to enter into a binding contract with the principal.[18] And where a contract of agency running for a definite term and calling for continuing services on the part of the agent has by its terms expired, the agent cannot ordinarily recover for like services subsequently performed,[19] unless at the principal's request;[20] much less can the agent recover as for services which he might have performed under the contract had it been renewed.[21]

An agent who is guilty of unfaithfulness, treachery, or dishonesty in transacting the agency cannot as a rule recover compensation. Steele v. Crabtree, 130 Iowa 313, 106 N. W. 753; Sumner v. Reicheniker, 9 Kan. 320; Sea v. Carpenter, 16 Ohio 412; Landis v. Scott, 32 Pa. St. 495; Hahl v. Kellogg, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 636, 94 S. W. 389.

Where, however, the owner of an equitable interest in land becomes the agent of another to procure the legal title for their joint benefit, and to dispose of enough of the land on commission to reimburse the principal for advances made to procure the legal title, the agent's fraud in overstating to the principal the amount of advances required to obtain the legal title, while defeating his right to commissions on subsequent sales of part of the land, does not forfeit his interest in the residue. Shaeffer v. Blair, 149 U. S. 248, 13 S. Ct. 856, 37 L. ed. 721 [reversing 33 Fed. 218]. And where a broker effects a loan without any agreement as to the amount to be paid for his services, the fact that he afterward presents to the borrower, and the latter promises to pay, a bill for commissions charged at a greater rate than the statute allows will not forfeit his right to legal compensation. Misrepresentation, concealment, or non-disclosure of the best terms obtainable for the principal ordinarily forfeits the agent's right to compensation, especially where he reaps a secret profit as the result of his fraud (Wright v. Smith, 23 N. J. Eq. 106; Shaeffer v. Blair, 149 U. S. 248, 13 S. Ct. 856, 37 L. ed. 721 [reversing 33 Fed. 218]. See, however, Hale Elevator Co. v. Hale, 201 Ill. 131, 66 N. E. 249 [affirming 98 Ill. App. 430], where a corporation in the elevator business agreed with an agent that he might retain any sum he could obtain on a contract for the installation of elevators, over a named price, and thereafter the agent represented that he could not obtain such price, whereupon the corporation fixed a lower price, and the agent then secured a contract for a greater price than that originally agreed on, and it was held, even though the agent's representations were fraudulent, and the price was reduced on that account, he might recover the amount obtained over the price first fixed), or where the principal has rejected the adverse party's offer as communicated to him by the agent, and closed a deal with another party before the agent communicated the adverse party's true offer (Wadsworth v. Adams, 138 U. S. 380, 11 S. Ct. 303, 34 L. ed. 984). Liability of agent to principal for deceit see supra, III, A, 1.

Concealment or non-disclosure: Of agent's individual interest see infra, III, B, 2, d, (IV). Of dual agency see infra, III, B, 2, d, (III). agent's non-disclosure of material facts.[54] So if an agent in transacting the agency is guilty of gross misconduct,[55] gross mismanagement,[56] gross negligence,[57] or gross unskilfulness,[58] he generally forfeits his compensation. However, the fact that an agent is guilty of fraud, misconduct, etc., with reference to one transaction does not defeat his right to compensation in regard to another transaction negotiated for the same principal, although he is regularly employed by the principal and the transactions are like in nature, where by the contract of agency his compensation is computed separately with reference to each transaction.[59] And it has been held that even where an agent is regularly employed on a salary, yet he Suppl. 353, holding that where plaintiff was retained to obtain a settlement of defendant's claim for damages against a railway company, and plaintiff omitted to disclose to defendant the company's standing offer to settle such claims at a fixed rate, he was not entitled to recover under his contract for services. See, however, Raht v. Union Consol. Min. Co., 5 Lea (Tenn.) 1, holding that a principal and agent, in defining the nature of the agency and fixing the amount of compensation, deal with each other as strangers, not only in the original contract, but in a renewal thereof, and the agent is not bound to disclose the true value of his services.

Where, however, a landowner authorized an agent to sell his land, but afterward, when he knew the agent was about to complete a sale, expressed unwillingness to have him do so, without, however, forbidding it, and merely adding the additional stipulation that it be for cash, no duty rested on the agent to discourage the purchase on the part of those with whom he had been negotiating, even though it was for the best interests of the owner not to sell at the price stipulated. Millett v. Barth, 18 Colo. 112, 31 Pac. 769. See, however, Gibson v. Bailey Co., 114 Mo. App. 350, 89 S. W. 597, holding that a general agent for the sale of goods in a certain territory, who entices away from his principal orders in that territory which the principal had previously acquired in order to give them to another company in which he (the agent) is interested, is guilty of such misconduct as to defeat his right to commissions for other goods sold during his agency.

may, notwithstanding fraud or misconduct resulting in a termination of the agency, recover for past services, if they are of a uniform character and the salary may fairly be proportioned by the time of actual service.[60]

(II) Conversion, Failure to Account, Etc.[61] If an agent, after purchasing property for his principal, converts it to his own use, he is not as a rule entitled to compensation for his services.[62] So an agent generally forfeits his compensation where he wrongfully refuses or fails to account for funds of the principal in his hands.[63] So ordinarily the right to compensation is lost if the agent has wrongfully failed to keep regular accounts and vouchers in the transaction of the agency.[64]

(III) Representing Adverse Interest; Commissions From Adverse Party or Both Parties.[65] An agent is held to the utmost good faith in his dealings with his principal, and if, in the transaction of the agency, he represents persons having interests adverse to those of the principal, he generally loses his

After the transaction for which the agent was employed has been closed, however, and the agency has terminated, the agent does not forfeit his right to compensation from his principal by representing the adverse party or accepting compensation from him.[80] And it is to be observed that the rules stated in this section do not apply against brokers who act as mere middlemen in bringing the parties together, and have no hand in the negotiations between the parties, and take no part in settling the terms of the transaction between them.[81]

(iv) Individual Interest of Agent; Secret Profits.[82] An agent who falsely denies that he has an individual interest in the subject-matter of the agency which is antagonistic to that of the principal, or misstates the nature or extent of his interest, or who conceals or fails to disclose his interest or its nature or extent, thereby deceiving the principal, is guilty of a fraud which generally forfeits his right to compensation for his services as agent.[83] Similarly he loses the right to compensation if in transacting the agency he seeks to advance his own interests at the expense of the principal's,[84] thereby reaping a secret profit.[85]

Purchase by agent at sale of principal's property.— If an agent employed to sell his principal's property purchases the same, he is entitled to no commissions on the sale (McGar v. Adams, 65 Ala. 106; Hobson v. Peake, 44 La. W. 55]), unless the principal consents thereto (see cases cited supra and infra, this paragraph). This rule applies to a purchase through others as a result of which the agent acquires the property or an interest therein. McGar v. Adams, supra; Reardon v. Washburn, 59 Ill. App. 161; Smith v. Townsend, 109 Mass. 500; Humphrey v. Eddy Transp. Co., 107 Mich. 163, 65 N. W. 13.

Misrepresentations as to necessity of acquiring interest.—A principal employed an agent to sell land at a minimum price of four dollars per acre. The agent found two persons who wanted the land, and, supposing that he was their agent in the premises, took him in as an equal partner in the purchase at four dollars per acre. The agent falsely represented to the principal that his customers would not take the land unless he was admitted as a partner in the purchase. The principal signed a contract to convey the land to the agent and his customers at the minimum price. It was held that the agent was not entitled to recover compensation, since he acted in bad faith and in hostility to the interests of the principal. Smith v. Tripis, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 267, 21 S. W. 722.

After termination of the agency, however, the agent may acquire an individual interest in the subject-matter of the agency without forfeiting previously earned compensation. McGar v. Adams, 65 Ala. 106.

87. McKenzie v. Champion, 4 Manitoba 158, holding that misconduct of an agent in taking a deposit from a customer for the principal's property does not defeat his right to compensation, where the principal accepts the deposit.

By continuing the agent in his employment with knowledge that the agent is not prosecuting his work with diligence, the principal precludes himself from asserting the agent's negligence to defeat the right to compensation earned during the employment. Spinks v. Georgia Quincy Granite Co., 114 La. 1044, 38 So. 824; Williams v. Gregg, 2 Strobh. Eq. (S. C.) 297.

Where the agent has accepted compensation from the adverse party he cannot recover compensation from the principal unless the latter agreed expressly, with a knowledge of all the circumstances, to waive his right to refuse compensation. Rice v. Davis, 136 Pa. St. 439, 20 Atl. 513, 20 Am. St. Rep. 931, holding that where an agent of the owner for the sale of stock receives from a purchaser thereof compensation for his services, the fact that such receipt was with the knowledge and without the objection of the seller will not constitute a waiver of the rule and preserve the right of the agent to be compensated by the seller. To the contrary see Davis v. Huber Mfg. Co., 119 Iowa 56, 93 N. W. 78 (where the principal, with knowledge of the agent's breach of duty, continued him in the employment and accepted the benefits of his services); Culverwell v. Campton, 31 U. C. C. P. 342 (where an express waiver was not required in order to entitle the agent to recover from his principal).

88. Construction of contract as to coman agent performs no service under his contract of employment, he cannot as a rule recover compensation thereunder.[89] So if he otherwise fails to perform his undertaking according to the terms of his contract, he is ordinarily debarred from recovering the compensation specified therein.[90] And generally speaking an agent is not entitled to reasonable compensation on account of unsuccessful efforts to negotiate the transaction which he was employed to negotiate.[91] If, on the other hand, an agent performs the undertaking assumed by him, he is generally entitled to the compensation specified in his contract of employment.[92] In determining whether or not an agent is entitled to compensation under the contract of employment it is of prime importance, therefore, carefully to scrutinize the contract in order to determine precisely the nature and extent of the agent's undertaking.

If the agent procures a contract from the third person binding him to accept the principal's offer, he is all the more entitled to the stipulated compensation. Goss v. Stevens, 32 Minn. 472, 21 N. W. 549; Goss v. Broom, 31 Minn. 484, 18 N. W. 290, although such person pays down no cash. And see Wheeler v. Knaggs, 8 Ohio 169.

Necessity of binding contract.— The test of the agent's right to commission for finding a purchaser is not whether his contract with the purchaser is specifically enforceable, but whether he has found a purchaser able, ready, and willing to take the property on the terms prescribed by his principal. McLaughlin v. Wheeler, 1 S. D. 497, 47 N. W. 816; Kelly v. Phelps, 57 Wis. 425, 15 N. W. 385; McKenzie v. Champion, 4 Manitoba 158 [affirmed in 12 Can. Sup. Ct. 649], holding that the owner cannot refuse to pay the commission because no agreement in writing actually was entered into; at all events, when the reason was that he refused to sign it unless some unusual term was inserted, and he had accepted the purchaser and by various acts showed that he considered that there was a valid verbal contract. So where an agent employed to sell lands finds a purchaser who is able, ready, and willing to purchase it on the terms given the agent by the landowner, the contract of sale need not be in writing, as a condition precedent to the agent's right to recover for his services. Vaughan v. McCarthy, 59 Minn. 199, 60 N. W. 1075; Lawson v. Thompson, 10 Utah 462, 37 Pac. 732; Boughton v. Hamilton Provident Soc., 10 Manitoba 683, holding, however, that the agent is not entitled to full commissions in such case.

Although commissions are payable only on net sales, yet if, through the principal's fault, orders procured by the agent are not filled, the agent is entitled to commissions thereon. Abel v. Nelson, 104 N. Y. Suppl. 362. And see Lafferty v. Lorimer, 86 Mich. 591, 49 N. W. 586; Stone v. Argersinger, 32 N. Y. App. Div. 208, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 63. See also infra, note 95.

Contract as conferring right to reject orders.— A contract between principal and agent provided that the principal should furnish the agent with machines to fill orders, and that the agent should deliver no machines until the orders therefor were accepted by the principal, and that the agent should receive a commission on machines sold, settled for, and delivered, but that no commission should be paid on any order not filled. It was held that the principal did not have an absolute right to reject an order, and thus defeat the agent's right to compensation. Sherman v. Port Huron Engine, etc., Co., 13 S. D. 95, 82 N. W. 413. So a clause in a contract obliging a manufacturing company to furnish engines if the exigencies of their business permit, when ordered by its agent selling on commission, who has made large expenditures in building up a trade, gives it no arbitrary right to refuse. Taylor Mfg. Co. v. Hatcher Mfg. Co., 39 Fed. 440, 3 L. R. A. 587. However, under a contract with an agent that no commissions are to be paid on orders not shipped, and that the acceptance of orders is at the discretion of the principal, the agent cannot collect compensation for orders not accepted. Temby v. William Brunt Pottery Co., 229 Ill. 540, 82 N. E. 336 [affirming 127 Ill. App. 441].

(III) Procuring Parties to Enter Into Contract — (A) In General. If the agent assumes not merely to find a person who is able, ready, and willing to

Inability of the principal to comply with his offer does not relieve him from liability to compensate the agent for finding a person who is able, ready, and willing to accept that offer. Fox v. Rouse, 47 Mich. 558, 11 N. W. 384; Stone v. Argersinger, 32 N. Y. App. Div. 208, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 63. And see McLaughlin v. Wheeler, 1 S. D. 497, 47 N. W. 816; Nosotti v. Auerbach, 79 L. T. Rep. N. S. 413, 15 T. L. R. 41 [affirmed in 15 T. L. R. 140].

Sale by agent defeated by sale by principal or outside agent.— Where an agent to sell land is not authorized to execute a conveyance, but merely to obtain a purchaser, he is entitled to compensation on finding a person ready and willing to make the purchase, although, owing to the owner's subsequently selling the land to another, the sale is not consummated. Ford v. Easley, 88 Iowa 603, 55 N. W. 336. So where a party is by contract to receive a certain commission for finding a purchaser for real estate, he becomes entitled to such commission on procuring a person ready, willing, and in a situation to purchase, although, before the principal accepts him, another agent, acting within his authority, binds the principal to sell to another person. Fox v. Rouse, 47 Mich. 558, 11 N. W. 384. If, however, the principal himself sells the property before he learns that the agent has found a customer, the agent is not as a rule entitled to the contract compensation. Darrow v. Harlow, 21 Wis. 302, 94 Am. Dec. 541.

The principal must stand by the terms of his offer.— After the agent has produced a person who is able, ready, and willing to enter into a contract on the terms originally proposed by the principal, the latter cannot defeat the agent's right to compensation by refusing to enter into the contract except on different terms. Squires v. King, 15 Colo. 416, 25 Pac. 26; Hannan v. Moran, 71 Mich. 261, 38 N. W. 909. And see McLaughlin v. Wheeler, 1 S. D. 497, 47 N. W. 816; Nosotti v. Auerbach, 79 L. T. Rep. N. S. 413, 15 T. L. R. 41 [affirmed in 15 T. L. R. 140].

Implied terms of principal's offer.— Where a principal employs an agent to find a purchaser for real estate, and nothing is said or understood between them as to the title, the implication of the law is, between principal and agent as between owner and purchaser, and that the owner has and intends to convey a good title; and it is no defense to the agent's claim for commission that the agent's agreement provided that the purchaser should get a good title, either in general terms or that certain particular encumbrances should be removed. McLaughlin v. Wheeler, 1 S. D. 497, 47 N. W. 816. So where all the terms of an offer are stated except the term as to the time when it is to be carried out, and there is no express stipulation as to the time, then it is an implied term that the agreement is to be performed within a reasonable time. Thus where plaintiff was instructed by defendant to find a purchaser for his house for a certain sum, and on January 16, he found a person ready and willing to pay that sum who required possession by March 15, defendant could not refuse the offer on the ground that he could not give up possession on March 15, the jury having found that from January 16 to March 15 was a reasonable time, and plaintiff was entitled to his commission. Nosotti v. Auerbach, 79 L. T. Rep. N. S. 413, 15 T. L. R. 41 [affirmed in 15 T. L. R. 140].

The principal must make good his representations concerning the subject-matter of the agency. Thus he is liable to the agent for compensation for finding a person willing to purchase property where such person failed to buy by reason of the non-existence of advantages which the principal had represented as existing. Hannan v. Moran, 71 Mich. 261, 38 N. W. 909. So where an agent employed to borrow money on leasehold security finds a person able and willing to lend, but the negotiations go off by reason of such person discovering unusual covenants in the lease which the agent was not informed of, the principal having represented that the lease contained only the usual covenants, the agent is entitled to the whole of the agreed commission for procuring the loan. Green v. Lucas, 33 L. T. Rep. N. S. 584.

Countermand of order by buyer.— Where defendant promised to pay plaintiff a certain compensation for taking orders for goods, the fact that orders are countermanded by purchasers does not affect plaintiff's right to compensation. Dougan v. Turner, 51 Minn. 330, 53 N. W. 650. See, however, Lafferty v. Lorimer, 86 Mich. 591, 49 N. W. 586. Compare In re Ladue Tate Mfg. Co., 135 Fed. 910.

Ability, readiness, and willingness.— The person procured by the agent must be able, ready, and willing to contract with the principal on the terms originally proposed by the latter, else the agent is not entitled to compensation where the transaction fails through. Acme Harvester Co. v. Madden, 4 Kan. App. 598, 46 Pac. 319; Wright v. Beach, 82 Mich. 469, 46 N. W. 673; Aikins v. Thackara Mfg. Co., 15 Pa. Super. Ct. 250; Darrow enter into a particular transaction with the principal, but to effectuate the transaction itself, then unless the parties actually enter into that transaction the agent is not entitled to the compensation specified in his contract of employment.[94]

v. Harlow, 21 Wis. 302, 94 Am. Dec. 541; Mackenzie v. Champion, 12 Can. Sup. Ct. 649 [affirming 4 Manitoba 158]; Culverwell v. Birney, 14 Ont. App. 266. And see Smith v. Patrick, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 36 S. W. 762. See also infra, III, B, 2, e, (v). So an agent employed to find a purchaser for land cannot recover compensation therefor without showing that the purchaser found was financially responsible, although the principal may have sold the land to another in the interim between the time the agent was employed and the time he found the purchaser. Iselin v. Griffith, 62 Iowa 668, 18 N. W. 302.

The agent must of course notify the principal that he has secured a person able, ready, and willing to enter into the transaction that he was authorized to negotiate; otherwise the principal is not liable for commissions where the transaction is not entered into. Wright v. Beach, 82 Mich. 469, 46 N. W. 673. And see cases cited this note, preceding paragraph.

If the principal deems a proposed buyer to be financially irresponsible, relying on the reports of the well-known commercial agencies, and he acts in good faith, he may refuse to fill the proposed buyer's order without rendering himself liable to the agent who took the orders. Stone v. Argersinger, 32 N. Y. App. Div. 208, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 63; Allhouse v. Baum, 11 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 205, 25 Cinc. L. Bul. 250. Thus where a principal contracted that an agent should have a commission on all orders taken by him which the manufacturer should "accept and ship," and letters from the principal to the agent stated that orders from persons with rating over five hundred dollars would be promptly filled, and others as soon as information of a satisfactory nature could be obtained, it was held in an action by the agent for commissions, in which he claimed bad faith on the part of the principal in refusing to fill orders, that this rating of customers must have been one known to and in use by defendant, and not some private rating of financial standing, procured by and only known to plaintiff; that private information obtained by the agent as to the responsibility of customers of which defendant had no notice could not be considered as evidence of bad faith on the part of defendant in failing to ship orders to such customers; nor could the fact that certain parties to whom goods were sold might have been entitled to credit for the amount of their orders. Wolfson v. Allen Bros. Co., 120 Iowa 455, 94 N. W. 910.

If a person offering to exchange lands with the principal has no title to the land offered by him, the agent is not entitled to compensation for finding him. Culverwell v. Birney, 14 Ont. App. 266. And if in the course of the negotiations the principal discovers an undisclosed encumbrance on the land offered him, he may break off the negotiations without assigning any reasons therefor and without notice, and the agent who found the person who offered the land will be entitled to nothing, although such person failed to mention the encumbrance solely through inadvertence and was able and prepared to remove it. Rockwell v. Newton, 44 Conn. 333.

Submission of offer from one already in negotiation with principal.— Where one authorized to sell certain property within a specified time for a given sum, he to have a certain amount for procuring a purchaser or making sale, notifies the owners within the time that he has a proposition on certain terms at the price fixed, and the proposition is not accepted, he cannot recover the agreed compensation, the customer being one with whom the owners had themselves been in treaty for the property for several months prior thereto, and who had that very day made them an offer of the same amount. Hartley v. Anderson, 150 Pa. St. 391, 24 Atl. 675.

The agent himself cannot accept the principal's offer and thus become entitled to commissions, where the principal refuses to deal with the agent as a customer. Tower v. O'Neil, 66 Pa. St. 332. So where an agent employed to sell land agreed with the proposed buyer to take an interest therein and apply his compensation toward payment for his interest, the owner is justified in refusing to convey, and the agent cannot recover compensation as for a sale. Finch v. Courade, 154 Pa. St. 326, 26 Atl. 368.

Good faith of principal.— It has been held that if an offer procured by the agent is rejected by the principal in good faith and not merely to defeat the agent's right to commissions, he is not liable to the agent. Taylor v. Cox, (Tex. 1887) 7 S. W. 69. Compare Gooch v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co., 119 Mo. App. 397, 96 S. W. 431; Jacquin v. Bontard, 89 Hun (N. Y.) 437, 35 N. Y. Suppl. 496 [affirmed in 157 N. Y. 686, 51 N. E. 1091].

Commissions not recoverable eo nomine.— It has been held that where the principal wrongfully rejects an offer procured by the agent, the latter cannot recover commissions eo nomine (Stevenson v. Morris Mach. Works, 69 Miss. 232, 13 So. 834; Adamson v. Yeager, 10 Ont. App. 477), but is entitled only to reasonable compensation for his services (Stevenson v. Morris Mach. Works, supra, holding that the agreed commissions afford a measure of damages; Adamson v. Yeager, supra; Prickett v. Badger, 1 C. B. N. S. 296, 3 Jur. N. S. 66, 26 L. J. C. P. 33, 5 Wkly. Rep. 117, 87 E. C. L. 296). If, however, the negotiations come to nothing because the person produced by the agent is unable or unwilling to comply with the principal's terms, the agent cannot as a rule recover on a quantum meruit. Mason v. Clifton, 3 F. & F. 899; Culverwell v. Birney, 14 Ont. App. 266.

94. Illinois.— Garnhart v. Rentchler, 72 Ill. 535, holding that a contract by a principal to pay his agent a commission on sales does

(B) Effect of Failure to Carry Out Contract. The terms of the employment may be such that the right to compensation is dependent, not merely upon the agent's finding a person who enters into a specified contract with the principal, but also upon the carrying out of that contract by the parties thereto according to its terms,[95] although as to this it is to be observed that as a rule the failure, not authorize the agent to recover commissions upon contracts to sell.

Iowa.— Wolfson v. Allen Bros. Co., 120 Iowa 455, 94 N. W. 910, holding that a contract which provides that an agent is not to receive any commission on orders taken by him unless his principal "accept and ship" the goods is valid in the absence of a showing of fraud or bad faith on the part of the principal.

The agent cannot recover the reasonable value of his services in attempting to negotiate the transaction in such a case. Broad v. Thomas, 7 Bing. 99, 20 E. C. L. 53, 4 C. & P. 338, 19 E. C. L. 543, 9 L. J. C. P. O. S. 32, 4 M. & P. 732. See infra, III, B, 2, e.

If the parties enter into the transaction the agent is entitled to his compensation. Ward v. Cobb, 148 Mass. 518, 20 N. E. 174, 12 Am. St. Rep. 587; Newhall v. Appleton, 61 N. Y. Super. Ct. 251, 19 N. Y. Suppl. 701 [affirmed in 136 N. Y. 666, 33 N. E. 335]; McKenzie v. Champion, 12 Can. Sup. Ct. 649 [affirming 4 Manitoba 158]. And see In re Ladue Tate Mfg. Co., 135 Fed. 910. Thus a sales agent is entitled to compensation where orders taken by him are filled by the principal, although the principal, for reasons of his own, saw fit to have the customers execute new written orders. Merriman v. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co., 101 Wis. 619, 77 N. W. 880. And see Gooch v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co., 119 Mo. App. 397, 96 S. W. 431. And a salesman is entitled to commissions on goods sold, where the customer has no right to reject them, although the orders provide for future delivery of the goods. Ross v. Portland Coffee, etc., Co., 30 Wash. 647, 71 Pac. 184.

Validity of transaction.— Plaintiff contracted with defendant to act as its agent in selling school furniture on commission, and bound himself to sell to such persons only as were legally qualified to enter into contracts, which contracts were to be subject to defendant's acceptance. Plaintiff sold on contracts that were not binding on the districts they purported to obligate, and such contracts were accepted by defendant, both plaintiff and defendant acting in good faith, believing them to be legal. It was held that defendant was not estopped by its acceptance of the contracts to plead their invalidity in defense to a claim for compensation. Cleveland School Furniture Co. v. Hotchkiss, 89 Tex. 117, 33 S. W. 855.

95. White v. Turnbull, 8 Aspin. 406, 3 Com. Cas. 183, 78 L. T. Rep. N. S. 726, 14 T. L. R. 401.

By custom and usage in England in certain lines of trade an agent is not allowed a commission unless the transaction is carried out. Read v. Rann, 10 B. & C. 438, 8 L. J. K. B. O. S. 144, 21 E. C. L. 189; Bower v. Jones, 8 Bing. 65, 1 L. J. C. P. 31, 1 Moore & S. 140, 21 E. C. L. 447. But the parties may contract to the contrary. Bower v. Jones, supra.

Default of customer as defeating compensation.— The rule stated in the text is especially true where it is not the principal, but the agent's customer, who defaults in carrying out the contract negotiated by the agent. Beale v. Bond, 84 L. T. Rep. N. S. 313, 17 T. L. R. 280. Thus where the owner of personalty agreed to pay an agent a commission in case he should succeed "in disposing of" the property on acceptable terms, and the agent procured a purchaser who made a written contract with the owner to buy goods, and to pay for the same partly with a deed to certain land, and such purchaser was unable to perform his contract for want of title to such land, the agent was not entitled to commissions, Greusel v. Dean, 98 Iowa 405, 67 N. W. 275. So a contract by which a manufacturer employs a person as a "selling agent" at a commission "on all sales" contemplates actual sales, and not mere contracts of purchase and sale, and hence if an accepted order procured by the agent is filled only in part because of the buyer's inability to pay for more, the agent is not entitled to commissions on the unfilled part. Creveling v. Wood, 95 Pa. St. 152. See, however, Lockwood v. Levick, 8 C. B. N. S. 603, 7 Jur. N. S. 102, 29 L. J. C. P. 340, 2 L. T. Rep. N. S. 357, 8 Wkly. Rep. 583, 98 E. C. L. 603. Justifiable refusal of customer see this note, following paragraph.

Default of principal as defeating compensation.— If it is due to the fault of the principal that the contract negotiated by the agent is not carried out, the agent is entitled to compensation. Fisher v. Drewett, 48 L. J. Exch. 32, 39 L. T. Rep. N. S. 253, 27 Wkly. Rep. 12, holding that if the principal, having accepted an offer of a loan procured by refusal, or inability of either the principal or the third person to carry out the contract entered into by them does not defeat the agent's right to compensation

the agent, afterward refuses to complete the transaction, the agent is entitled to his commission even though it was payable only "on any money received" by the principal. Thus if a vendor promises the agent who effected the sale a sum for his services if the purchaser should fulfil his agreement, the agent is entitled to recover of the vendor if the purchaser is ready to fulfil, but through the default of the vendor does not. Shinn v. Haines, 21 N. J. L. 340. So it is not ground for withholding commissions earned under a contract providing that commissions should be due out of all sums collected from sales made by the employee that it was not possible for the employer to fill the orders in the usual course of business. Stone v. Argersinger, 32 N. Y. App. Div. 208, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 63. So also where a person was employed to sell goods on a written contract for a commission on all net sales which he procured, to be paid only after the goods were paid for, he could recover his commissions, not only on goods sold by him and paid for, but on goods the orders for which were not filled through the fault of the employer. Abel v. Nelson, 104 N. Y. Suppl. 362. And see Lafferty v. Lorimer, 86 Mich. 591, 49 N. W. 586. And where a salesman is to receive commissions on the delivery of goods sold, his employer cannot arbitrarily refuse to deliver the goods, and so deprive him of compensation for his labor. Aikins v. Thackara Mfg. Co., 15 Pa. Super. Ct. 250. Where an agent is authorized to sell machines and to make certain representations relative to them, and is to receive as compensation a percentage of the proceeds of sales made by him, and the machines sold do not prove to be as represented, and are returned, he is entitled to recover his compensation on the sales of such machines. Garnhart v. Rentchler, 72 Ill. 535. And if a buyer refuses to accept the goods on the ground that they were not properly made, the agent is entitled to his commission notwithstanding a provision that it was not to be paid till the goods were delivered and paid for. Restein v. McCadden, 166 Pa. St. 340, 31 Atl. 99.

Construction of contract.—Defendants agreed with plaintiff to remunerate him "in the event of their taking into partnership" one M, introduced by plaintiff, and afterward entered into a written agreement with M by which it was agreed that they should enter into partnership as and from a specified future day, when a formal deed of partnership should be executed carrying out the terms of the agreement. This agreement recognized and adopted the agreement between plaintiff and defendants, but no partnership deed was ever executed, nor did M ever in fact act as a partner of defendants. It was held that there was evidence of a "taking into partnership" within the meaning of the agreement between plaintiff and defendants, so as to entitle plaintiff to his commission. Harris v. Petherick, 39 L. T. Rep. N. S. 543. Plaintiff, a commission agent, proposed to do business with defendant, a manufacturer, on terms as follows: "We expect to receive our commission on all goods bought by houses whose accounts are opened through us." Plaintiff introduced a customer who gave defendant an order for goods which he accepted but did not execute. It was held that plaintiff was entitled to a commission, since the words "goods bought," applied to all goods ordered by customers introduced by plaintiff, whether the order was executed by defendant or not. Lockwood v. Levick, 8 C. B. N. S. 603, 7 Jur. N. S. 102, 29 L. J. C. P. 340, 2 L. T. Rep. N. S. 357, 8 Wkly. Rep. 583, 98 E. C. L. 603. See, however, Creveling v. Wood, 95 Pa. St. 152.

Payment of price as condition precedent to right to selling commission.—The terms of the contract of employment are frequently such that the agent's right to a commission for negotiating a sale does not accrue until and unless the purchaser pays the price. Taylor Mfg. Co. v. Key, 86 Ala. 212, 5 So. 303; Evans v. Hughey, 76 Ill. 115; McCay Engineering Co. v. Crocker-Wheeler Electric Co., 100 Md. 530, 60 Atl. 443; Westinghouse Co. v. Tilden, 56 Nebr. 129, 76 N. W. 416; Stone v. Argersinger, 32 N. Y. App. Div. 208, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 63; Gresham v. Galveston County, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 36 S. W. 796; Thompson-Houston Electric Co. v. Berg, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 200, 30 S. W. 454; Park v. Mighell, 3 Wash. 737, 29 Pac. 556. And see Bull v. Price, 7 Bing. 237, 9 L. J. C. P. O. S. 78, 5 M. & P. 2, 20 E. C. L. 112. See, however, Fuller v. Brady, 22 Ill. App. 174; Bills v. A. W. Stevens Co., 146 Mich. 515, 109 N. W. 1059 (holding that where a contract employing an agent for the sale of the employer's machinery stipulated that commission on machinery sales should be payable as the notes, securities, or other proceeds of sale were paid in money, and the agent sold machinery, and received as part payment second-hand machinery, which the employer sold, accepting in payment an engine, valued at a specified amount, and cash and securities, the agent was entitled to recover commissions on the price for which the employer sold the second-hand machinery as fixed by the value of the engine and securities and the amount of the cash, without waiting until the securities had been paid and the engine had been sold); Strong v. Prentice Brown Stone Co., 10 Misc. (N. Y.) 380, 31 N. Y. Suppl. 144 [affirming 6 Misc. 57, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 85] (holding that the mere fact that a person wrote to his sales agent, whose commissions were to be the excess above a certain amount, that he would want him to take his pay from the sale of the goods, does not prevent the principal from being personally liable for the commissions, in the absence of an acceptance of such proposition by the agent); Sherman v. Consolidated Dental for negotiating that contract;[96] nor is such right defeated by the fact that the

Mfg. Co., 202 Pa. St. 451, 52 Atl. 2 (holding that under a contract by which defendant appoints plaintiff its manager for the sale of its goods, and he agrees to use his best endeavors to promote the sale, it agreeing to give him for selling them a sum equal to the difference between the list and trade prices of the articles, and he agreeing that in making sales they shall be made only to such persons as are responsible, he is entitled to compensation on sales on credits, although the purchase-price has not been collected). Thus an agent for the sale of land who makes a sale payable in instalments is not entitled to his entire commission out of the first instalment paid. Melvin v. Aldridge, 81 Md. 650, 32 Atl. 389; Peters v. Anderson, 88 Va. 1051, 14 S. E. 974. So where a contract between a principal and a sales agent stipulates that the agent shall not be entitled to commissions on a sale of machinery "taken back" by the principal, the agent is not entitled to commissions on a sale of machinery which is not paid for by the purchaser, and which the principal is obliged to take back in a worn condition on foreclosure of a mortgage given by the purchaser to secure the price. Reeves v. Watkins, 89 S. W. 266, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 401, 622. To the contrary see Clark v. Gaar, 78 Minn. 492, 81 N. W. 530. And compare Taylor Mfg. Co. v. Key, supra; Baskerville v. Gaar, 15 S. D. 211, 88 N. W. 103; Odum v. J. I. Case Threshing-Mach. Co., (Tenn. Ch. App. 1895) 36 S. W. 191. However, in case the purchaser pays in part, the agent is entitled to his commissions on the part payment. Melvin v. Aldridge, supra; Clark v. Gaar, supra; Baskerville v. Gaar, supra; Odum v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co., supra; Gresham v. Galveston County, supra; Peters v. Anderson, supra. And if the price is not paid through the act of the principal (Taylor Mfg. Co. v. Key, supra; Aultman v. Ritter, 81 Wis. 395, 51 N. W. 569), or through an unreasonable delay on his part in seeking to enforce collection (Evans v. Hughey, supra; Westinghouse v. Tilden, supra. And see Taylor Mfg. Co. v. Key, supra; Aultman v. Ritter, supra; Bull v. Price, supra), the agent is entitled to commissions on the entire price. Right to compensation: Where commission is dependent on profits see infra, III, B, 2, e, (IV). Where selling agent is to receive as compensation the excess above a certain price see infra, III, B, 2, e, (IV).

Right of agent to retain forfeited instalments.— An agent for the sale of land is not entitled to instalments paid to him by the purchaser and subsequently forfeited by the purchaser's abandoning his contract. Melvin v. Aldridge, 81 Md. 650, 32 Atl. 389.

Disposal by principal of right to receive fund under contract negotiated by agent.— A principal who agrees that his agent shall receive a percentage of money to be paid on a contract secured through such agent cannot dispose of his own right to receive the fund, and thus deprive the agent of the reward for his services. Hix v. Edison Electric Light Co., 10 N. Y. App. Div. 75, 41 N. Y. Suppl. 680; Reed v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co., 21 Utah 295, 61 Pac. 21. Compare Blassingame v. Keating Implement, etc., Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 74 S. W. 344, where it appeared that a principal gave his agent notes for commissions on a sale of machinery made by him, it being understood that such notes should be paid as the purchase-money notes given the principal were paid; and that another party became the owner of the purchase-money notes, and subsequently, by arrangement with the purchaser of the machinery, took the machinery and returned the purchase-money notes to the purchaser, and it was held that if the principal had received the full amount of the purchase-money notes on a sale thereof which terminated his liability on such notes, he was liable to the agent on the notes given to him, but if the principal remained liable on the purchase-money notes, he was not liable to the agent.

Right of agent to opportunity to resell on purchaser's default.— Under a contract by which complainant was to sell shares in an association, he to receive a certain amount per share for selling the same, to be paid in instalments as the instalments of the purchase-price were paid, with a provision that if any purchasers failed to make payments their shares should be forfeited and complainant's compensation for such sales should cease, but he should receive notice of the forfeiture, and be given thirty days in which to resell the forfeited shares, for which he should receive full compensation, shares having been forfeited, and complainant not having been given any notice thereof for two years, and it appearing that at the time of the forfeiture there was a ready sale for them, and that if complainant had been promptly notified he might have sold them, defendant cannot complain that it is required to account on the basis of complainant having resold them, and full payment therefor having thereafter been made. Miller v. Russell, 224 Ill. 68, 79 N. E. 434.

Reasonable compensation.— An agent is not entitled to the reasonable value of his services in negotiating a contract which is not carried out by the parties thereto, where it was contemplated that the stipulated commission should not be payable in such an event. Read v. Rann, 10 B. & C. 438, 8 L. J. K. B. O. S. 144, 21 E. C. L. 189. See supra, page 1505, note 91.

Default of principal —In general.—The rule stated in the text is especially true where principal and the third person subsequently modify, rescind, or cancel the contract by mutual consent.[97]

(iv) Other Conditions of Employment Affecting Right to Compensation. The right of an agent to compensation, whether by way of commissions or salary, is not infrequently made to depend upon various con-

the contract negotiated by the agent is not carried out through the principal's default. Searing v. Butler, 69 Ill. 575; Brown v. Wilson, 98 Iowa 316, 67 N. W. 251; Witherell v. Murphy, 147 Mass. 417, 18 N. E. 215; Lawson v. Thompson, 10 Utah 462, 37 Pac. 732; Fisher v. Drewett, 48 L. J. Exch. 32, 39 L. T. Rep. N. S. 253, 27 Wkly. Rep. 12. And it does not defeat the agent's right to commission for taking an order which is accepted by the principal that the latter becomes unable to execute the order, and derives no benefit from it. Lockwood v. Levick, 8 C. B. N. S. 603, 7 Jur. N. S. 102, 29 L. J. C. P. 340, 2 L. T. Rep. N. S. 357, 8 Wkly. Rep. 583, 98 E. C. L. 603. And see supra, note 93.

Grounds of default: customer's title to land offered principal.— However, the agent of a contract purchaser of land who refuses to carry out the purchase is not entitled to a commission on the sale where by the terms of the employment the vendor's title was to be approved by the purchaser's solicitor, and it does not appear either that the title was so approved or that it was such a title as could not reasonably be disapproved. Clack v. Wood, 9 Q. B. D. 276, 47 L. T. Rep. N. S. 144, 30 Wkly. Rep. 931. And see supra, note 93.

Default of customer — In general.— Even though the failure to carry out the contract negotiated by the agent is due to the default of the customer, yet the agent is ordinarily entitled to his commission for negotiating the contract. Ward v. Cobb, 148 Mass. 518, 20 N. E. 174, 12 Am. St. Rep. 587; Lara v. Hill, 15 C. B. N. S. 45, 109 E. C. L. 45. But see supra, note 95.

Grounds of default in general.—A contract buyer of goods may lawfully refuse to carry out the contract because of the seller's delay in manufacturing the goods, in which case the seller's agent is entitled to a commission for negotiating the contract of sale. Tyler v. E. G. Bernard Co., (Tenn. Ch. App. 1899) 57 S. W. 179. And see supra, note 95.

Defect in principal's title.— So a vendor's agent is entitled to a commission for negotiating the contract of purchase and sale where the sale falls through because the vendor's title is defective or encumbered. Stange v. Gosse, 110 Mich. 153, 67 N. W. 1108; Roberts v. Kimmons, 65 Miss. 232, 3 So. 736 (where the principal represented that he had a good title); Hart v. Hopson, 52 Mo. App. 177 (holding that a person employed to procure a contract for the sale of a leasehold interest for a fixed compensation, to be paid so soon as the contract was obtained, is entitled to the stipulated compensation on procuring the contract, although the sale, owing to the fact that the leasehold title was encumbered for its full value and valueless, was not consummated, if he acted in ignorance of the defect in the title); Sweeney v. Ten Mile Oil, etc., Co., 130 Pa. St. 193, 18 Atl. 612; Mackenzie v. Champion, 12 Can. Sup. Ct. 649 [affirming 4 Manitoba 158]. And see supra, note 95.

97. Taylor Mfg. Co. v. Key, 86 Ala. 212, 5 So. 303 (holding that where a contract of employment to sell machinery on specified commissions provides that "no commissions shall be allowed or paid on any article taken back, or on any order taken and not filled, on machinery not settled for, or any sale to irresponsible persons. the agent, on making a sale to a responsible person, becomes entitled to his commissions, and cannot be deprived of them because the principal, after extending the indebtedness at maturity, finally releases a part of the security and takes back the machinery in settlement of the debt); Leopuld v. Weeks, 96 Md. 280, 53 Atl. 937 (where it appeared that a corporation appointed an agent to sell patent rights, and agreed to pay him ten per cent of the price received from sales made by him; that the agent procured a buyer, with whom a contract was entered into, which was modified through the efforts of a third person in behalf of the corporation; that the last agreement professed on its face to be a modification of the original contract, and the changes, although numerous, were stated in detail by reference to the numbered paragraphs of the former contract; and it was held that the agent was entitled to the ten per cent commission on the price received pursuant to the last agreement); Howland v. Coffin, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 653 (where it appeared that the owners of a steamship signed a contract with a ship broker, "on account of his obtaining a charter from the government" for their ship, to pay him "five per cent on amount of charter, say two hundred dollars per diem, more or less, so long as she remains in government service"; that the broker obtained the charter, and under it the government paid the owners two hundred dollars per diem until March 25, when, by agreement between the government and the owners indorsed on the charter, no other provisions of which were changed, the compensation was reduced to one hundred and twenty dollars per diem; that the owners refused to pay the broker any commission after that time, on the ground that the charter obtained by the broker had ceased to exist; and it was held that the identity of the instrument or transaction was not affected by the indorsement, and that the broker was entitled to his commission upon one hundred and twenty dollars per day, until the charter was given up). And see Lafferty v. Lorimer, 86 Mich. 591, 49 N. W. 586.

tingencies and conditions independent of those just mentioned.[98] Principals sometimes agree to make advances of money to their agents on account of com-

98. McCay Engineering Co. v. Crocker-Wheeler Electric Co., 100 Md. 530, 60 Atl. 443 (where it was agreed that a sales agent should receive only such commissions as the net proceeds of the sales should warrant); Johnson v. Sinnett, 153 N. Y. 51, 46 N. E. 1035 [reversing 83 Hun 317, 31 N. Y. Suppl. 917] (holding that a contract by the joint purchasers of a tract of land, conveyed to them in undivided equal parts, to pay the broker who negotiated the transaction a certain sum per acre whenever a resale of the land should be effected, and a proportionate part in case the land should be resold in parcels, contemplates a joint conveyance of the whole or a part of the land, and does not apply to a transfer by one of the joint purchasers of his undivided interest); Idler v. Borgmeyer, 65 Fed. 910, 13 C. C. A. 198 (holding that an agreement to pay a commission of ten per cent on the amount of a claim against a foreign government, in consideration of services in obtaining judgment against such government, "as soon as the payment or satisfaction is realized," is contingent on satisfaction of the judgment; and when, after failure to collect it, payment of the claim is obtained through the award of a mixed commission established by treaty, no right to recover the ten per cent exists); Ebert v. U. S., 29 Ct. Cl. 183 (where the right to salary was held to be dependent, not merely upon the rendition of services, but also upon personal attendance at the principal's office).

Compensation as dependent on amount of current sales.— Where plaintiff was employed by defendants as traveling salesman for a year, traveling expenses to be paid by them, he agreeing to devote all his time to the business, for which they agreed "to pay him $600, payable monthly, $50 per month, and six per cent. commission on all his sales above $10,000, provided said salary and traveling expense does not exceed ten per cent. of his net sales," the salary of six hundred dollars was not dependent on the amount of sales. Atkins v. Keener, 109 Ala. 143, 19 So. 402. However, a contract with an agent that he should have six dollars salary a week, with a guaranty of at least one good sale a week; "if there is no sale there is no salary to be paid," does not mean that salary was to be paid if, on an average through the whole time, there was one sale a week, but the right construction is that during weeks where there was no sale there was to be no salary. Austin v. Smith, 12 Ohio Cir. Ct. 757. And where a contract for the establishment of a sales agency provided a salary and additional commission on all the sales during the continuance of the contract; and that the average sales should amount to five hundred dollars a month, which should be the minimum amount to constitute a fulfilment of the contract, it was held that if the agent's monthly sales were less than five hundred dollars, he was not entitled to either salary or commission. Haas v. Malto-Grape Co., 148 Mich. 358, 111 N. W. 1059.

Compensation as dependent on profits.— Defendant engaged plaintiff as general manager, and in addition to a stated salary agreed to pay plaintiff ten per cent commission on all contracts personally secured by him on which the usual profits accrued, and five per cent on all on which one half of the usual profits were secured, and special orders for greater or smaller profits were to be arranged at the time the orders were taken. It was held that plaintiff was not entitled to commissions on orders which had been taken and accepted by defendant, but on which nothing was payable or had been paid at the time suit was brought, since the profits cannot be said to have accrued until the work secured by the orders was paid for, or until the right to enforce present payment existed. Allen v. Armstrong, 58 N. Y. App. Div. 427, 68 N. Y. Suppl. 1079. So under a contract by defendant to give plaintiff half the profits above the purchase-price on a resale of property purchased by defendant through the intermediation of plaintiff, there can be no recovery till defendant has reduced the proceeds of the sale to money, or so appropriated them to his own use as to constitute a complete equivalent for reception of their money value. Rogers-Ruger Co. v. McCord, 115 Wis. 261, 91 N. W. 685.

Sales commission consisting of excess of price over a fixed sum.— Where the compensation of an agent for negotiating a sale is to consist of the excess of the price over a fixed sum, the agent is entitled to nothing unless the price exceeds that sum. Indiana Road Mach. Co. v. Lebanon Carriage, etc., Co., 78 S. W. 861, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1763; Bradford v. Menard, 35 Minn. 197, 28 N. W. 248; La Force v. Washington University, 106 Mo. App. 517, 81 S. W. 209. And see Gregory v. Mack, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 380. The fact that the agent took an unenforceable contract from a third person to purchase at a price in excess of the fixed sum does not entitle him to recover the excess, where the purchaser did not tender performance and the sale was not effected. Bradford v. Menard, supra. Nor is the agent entitled to compensation where the purchaser defaults in carrying out a valid contract of purchase at a price in excess of the sum so fixed, it being one of the terms of the employment that the principal was "to receive the full sum" so fixed "without deduction." Beale v. Bond, 84 L. T. Rep. N. S. 313, 17 T. L. R. 280. And even though the agent sells for a greater sum than that so fixed, yet if he missions to be earned on subsequent sales, and in this event the agent is entitled to the advances without reference to the amount of sales already made by him.[99]

(v) Procuring Contract Differing From That Which Agent Was Authorized to Negotiate. If the principal and a third person enter into a contract as a result of the agent's intervention, the agent is not deprived of his right to compensation by the fact that the contract so concluded differs in terms from the one which he was employed to negotiate.[1] However, an agent employed to negotiate a contract on particular terms is not entitled to compensation under the terms of his employment for producing a person who is willing to enter into the contract on different terms,[2] unless the principal ratifies what the agent has sells on credit he is not entitled to the excess until the price has been paid (Evans v. Hughey, 76 Ill. 115), or at least until after the price had fallen due and the lapse of a reasonable time for collection thereof (Evans v. Hughey, supra). It seems, however, that this latter rule does not apply, where the principal authorizes the agent thus to sell on credit. Fuller v. Brady, 22 Ill. App. 174. Nor can the principal refuse to sell where the agent finds a person who is willing to pay the fixed sum in cash, and the excess to the agent on time, if credit for the excess is to be granted by the agent (Van Gorder v. Sherman, 81 Iowa 403, 46 N. W. 1087); but if credit for the excess is to be granted by the principal, and there is no agreement that the agent's compensation is to come out of the deferred payment, the principal may refuse to sell (Marble v. Bang, 54 Minn. 277, 55 N. W. 1131. Contra, Wheeler v. Knaggs, 8 Ohio 169).

Sale at lower price.— One employed to find a customer for property at a certain price is entitled to his commission, although the principal sells to the customer found at a lower price, the agent having nothing to do with the reduction. Dexter v. Campbell, 137 Mass. 198; Dailey v. Young, 13 N. Y. Suppl. 435; Mansell v. Clements, L. R. 9 C. P. 139. And see infra, note 3. See however, Stephens v. Janes, 2 N. Y. St. 659 (holding that where an agent to lease certain premises for a stated sum, who merely makes an offer to lease them to a firm, which offer is not accepted before the death of a partner, does not earn any commission, where after such death the agent makes an unsuccessful effort to renew the negotiations, and the owner transfers the premises to her husband, who leases them to the successors of said firm for a less amount); Culverwell v. Birney, 14 Ont. App. 266; Glines v. Cross, 12 Manitoba 442.

Conclusion of contract differing in substance.— If the contract so concluded differs from the one which the agent was employed to negotiate, not only in terms but also in substance, so as to render it an entirely new and altogether different transaction, then the agent cannot recover as for negotiating the contract contemplated by the terms of his employment. Starr v. Royal Electric Co., 30 Can. Sup. Ct. 384 [affirming 33 Nova Scotia 156]. See, however, Rimmer v. Knowles, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 496, 22 Wkly. Rep. 574, where an agent employed to sell realty was held entitled to a commission for effecting a lease with option to buy.

Sale of part of property.—A contract by defendant to pay plaintiff a specified commission after six months from the delivery to defendant of a deed for a one-half interest in a ranch owned by a third person is indivisible, and plaintiff cannot, upon defendant's purchase of a one-third interest in such ranch, recover a proportionate commission. Witte v. Taylor, 110 Cal. 224, 42 Pac. 807. And see Eidson v. Saxon, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 30 S. W. 957; Culverwell v. Birney, 14 Ont. App. 266. See, however, Welsh v. Lemert, 92 Iowa 116, 60 N. W. 230, holding that where an owner writes his agent, who is negotiating a sale of his farm, that he wishes to sell with the farm his horses, implements, etc., and that if the stock is not sold it will be necessary to retain a portion of the farm, the sale of the stock, implements, and farm together is not a condition on which the sale must be made to entitle the agent to his commissions.

done, or waives the right to object to the agent's non-fulfilment of the terms of his employment, or estops himself from asserting that right.[3] So if an agent authorized to negotiate a contract merely procures a third person to enter into a conditional or optional agreement, instead of procuring the absolute and final contract which he was employed to procure, he is not entitled to compensation,[4]

W. 415; Schultz v. Griffin, 121 N. Y. 294, 24 N. E. 480, 18 Am. Y. 445 [affirming 2 Hun 545] (where defendant agreed to pay plaintiff one thousand five hundred dollars, provided he effected a sale of a certain patent, or obtained a customer who should pay seventeen thousand five hundred dollars for such patent, or ten per cent on any less sum defendant might agree to take, and in pursuance of the agreement plaintiff entered into copartnership with two others for selling rights under the patent, and the firm were to pay defendant fifteen thousand dollars as follows: twenty-five per cent of the net profits to be realized from the sale of rights secured, and twenty per cent of the net profits to be realized from the construction of waterworks under the patent, until the whole amount was paid; and it was held that the agreement did not constitute such a sale as was contemplated by the contract of agency, and plaintiff was not entitled to the commissions agreed to be paid); Stone v. Argersinger, 32 N. Y. App. Div. 208, 53 N. Y. Ratification of sale as made by agent.— If the principal ratifies a sale on the terms made by the agent, the latter is generally entitled to compensation under the contract of employment, although the sale is not made on the terms on which the agent was employed to make it. Goss v. Stevens, 32 Minn. 472, 21 N. W. 549; Gelatt v. Ridge, 117 Mo. 553, 23 S. W. 882, 38 Am. St. Rep. 683; Wolf v. Tait, 4 Manitoba 59. See, however, Gregory v. Mack, 3 Hill (N. unless and until the condition is fulfilled or the option is exercised and the absolute and final contract is made.[5]

(VI) Agent as Procuring Cause of Transaction. An agent is not entitled to compensation as for negotiating a transaction which has been entered into by the principal and a third person unless he was the procuring cause thereof.[6] If, on the other hand, the agent was the procuring cause of the transaction, he is entitled to compensation for effecting it.[7] Thus an agent employed to negotiate a particular transaction is ordinarily entitled to compensation if he brings the principal and a third person into communication, and as a result they enter into the transaction.[8]

A sale on approval does not entitle an agent to compensation as for making a sale, where the buyer has not accepted or does not accept the property. W. 293 (holding that a person to whom the owner of land has agreed to pay a certain sum if he should sell the land or procure a purchaser therefor is not entitled to recover the sum if the person to whom the land is subsequently sold received the information which led to the purchase from other sources and did not purchase from or through him); David v. Rick, 57 N. Y. App. Div. 623, 67 N. Y. Suppl. 1052; Antrobus v. Wickens, 4 F. & F. 291.

Contributory services.— The fact that an agent's efforts contributed remotely to the consummation of a sale does not entitle him to a commission as for selling. Commercial Nat. Bank v. Hawkins, 35 Ill. App. 463. And see Flack v. Condict, 66 N. J. L. 351, 49 Atl. 508.

Previous negotiations with customer.— The fact that the agent had negotiated with the person from whom the principal subsequently purchased property does not entitle the agent to a commission as for negotiating the purchase, where he was not the procuring cause thereof. Boydell v. Snarr, 6 U. C. C. P. 94.

Subsequent transactions between principal and person produced by agent.—An agent who has negotiated a transaction between the principal and a third person, and who has been paid therefor, is not entitled to a commission on a subsequent, although similar, transaction entered into by the principal and the same person without his further intervention. Toulmin v. Millar, 12 App. Cas. 746, 57 L. J. K. B. 301, 58 L. T. Rep. N. S. 96 (where an agent procured a tenant, and the tenant afterward bought the premises); Tribe v. Taylor, 1 C. P. D. 505 (where an agent procured a loan, and the lender made subsequent advances to the principal); Curtis v. Nixon, 24 L. T. Rep. N. S. 706 (where an agent negotiated a lease with option to renew, and the tenancy was afterward continued on different terms); Lumley v. Nicholson, 34 Wkly. Rep. 716 (where an agent sold part of the property he was employed to sell, and the purchaser afterward bought the residue). However, a provision in a contract to pay commissions on all sales of defendants' goods made "directly" by plaintiff, and a certain other commission on such other sales as should be "considered" by defendants as the result of plaintiff's original sales, does not give defendants the right arbitrarily to determine the question. (VII) Transactions Negotiated by Principal or Outside Agent. As a rule the employment of an agent to negotiate a transaction does not preclude the principal himself from negotiating the transaction.[9] Accordingly, unless the parties otherwise agree,[10] the agent is not entitled to compensation where the principal himself negotiates the transaction without the agent's aid and without deriving any advantage from the agent's efforts.[11] After the agent has commenced negotiations with a possible customer, however, neither the principal nor the customer can defeat the right to compensation by breaking off negotiations with the agent and concluding the transaction without his further aid.[12] If an agent is the procuring cause of the transaction which he is authorized to negotiate, he is not deprived of the right to compensation by the fact that another agent similarly employed by the principal intervened in the negotiations.[13] If, however, the intervening agent and not the original agent is the procuring cause of the transaction, the latter is generally entitled to nothing.[14]

f. As Affected by Agreement Creating Exclusive or Sole Agency. By their contract of employment agents for the continuous sale of goods are frequently given the sole or exclusive agency, especially in a certain territory, and persons employed to sell a particular piece of property are likewise not infrequently made sole or exclusive agents for that purpose.[15] As a rule these contracts are not so

Contract for division of commission.— An agent appointed to procure a loan within a time limited employed a subagent to assist him on an agreement to divide the commission. Upon the expiration of the time limit the principal refused to proceed in the matter, but subsequently employed the subagent to procure the loan. It was held that the agreement for division of the commission terminated with the primary agency, and the subagent, upon his subsequent success, was entitled to the whole commission. Halperin v. Callender, 17 Misc. (N. Y.) 362, 39 N. Y. Suppl. 1044.

worded as to entitle the agent to compensation when the principal himself, acting independently of the agent, sells the particular piece of property in question or sells his goods in the agent's territory;[16] but they generally preclude the principal from appointing other agents to sell the same and thus deprive the exclusive agent of compensation on account of independent sales made by such others.[17] and expressly provided that, if the agent should receive inquiries from territory other than his own, he should promptly refer them to defendant, the agent was entitled to commissions on a sale made outside of his territory to a resident thereof temporarily residing elsewhere); Thompson-Houston Electric Co. v. Berg, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 200, 30 S. W. 454 (holding that where the contract between a manufacturer and his agent provides that the agent shall receive a percentage on all products to be used in a certain territory, the fact that a contract for the sale of goods to be used in such territory is made by the principal outside of the territory is immaterial). And see Hutchinson v. Root, 158 N. Y. 681, 52 N. E. 1124 [affirming 2 N. Y. App. Div. 584, 38 N. Y. Suppl. 16]. Compare Stone v. Fox Mach. Co., 145 Mich. 689, 109 N. W. 659 (where a manufacturer employed an agent under a contract stipulating that he should be the sole agent for the manufacturer for the sale of its product throughout Europe, and declaring that it was understood that the manufacturer should do no advertising "in European papers without including his name and address [of]" the agent as its sole European agent, "the intention being to bring before the public . . . the fact that" the agent was "the sole agent for the manufacturer," and it was held that the contract provided that the manufacturer should not advertise in European papers without including the name and address of the agent as sole European agent; but the manufacturer might advertise in American papers without doing so); Wyckoff v. Bishop, 115 Mich. 414, 73 N. W. 392 (holding that where one contracts with a firm to sell typewriter machines in certain territory, in which no sale is to be made without his receiving a benefit, he cannot claim a commission on a machine sold and delivered by the firm to a party residing outside, but having a branch office within, said territory, even though the machine is shipped to and used in the branch office); Hubbard v. New York, etc., Inv. Co., 119 U. S. 696, 7 S. Ct. 353, 30 L. ed. 548 (where it was held that certain business done by the principal did not originate in the agent's district, so as to entitle him to compensation).

An exclusive agency is not to be implied from an unnatural construction of the terms of the contract. Indiana Road Mach. Co. v. Lebanon Carriage, etc., Co., 78 S. W. 861, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1763. Thus an agreement to appoint a firm as agent "for receiving, keeping, and selling in their behalf" the first parties harvesting machinery and parts and binding twine "on commission, for the following territory, J. County, for the entire season of 1891," with a power of revocation reserved, does not confer an exclusive selling agency. Deering v. Beatty, 107 Iowa 701, 77 N. W. 325. And the fact that plaintiff for three years preceding a written contract of employment as salesman had solicited orders for defendant in a certain territory would not entitle him to an exclusive privilege to sell in such territory when it was not given by the contract. So if the general agent of the principal, coming within the exclusive territory of the local agent, there makes a sale with his consent, agreeing to pay him a fixed sum less than his commissions would have been, the local agent may recover this sum from the principal, it appearing that the general agent had authority to make such special agreement. (ii) Liability to Subagent. If it is within the scope of the real or apparent authority of an agent to employ a subagent to act for the principal in reference to the subject-matter of the agency, the principal is generally liable to the subagent for his compensation;[20] but in the absence of such authority the principal is to canvass certain territory for the sale of the principal's machines, and stipulating that if he fails to canvass the territory or to conduct the business in a satisfactory manner, the principal may terminate the agency, or place other canvassers in the territory and deprive the agent of commissions on sale made by other canvassers, does not authorize the principal to employ other canvassers in the agent's territory and deprive him of the commissions on sales made by them without first giving the agent notice of an intention to employ other canvassers. Nor can the buyer's agent recover a commission from the seller. Lorimer v. Boylan, supra; Harnickell v. Parrot Silver, etc., Co., 117 N. Y. 644, 22 N. E. 1079; Yates v. Killman, (Tenn. Ch. W. 186 (where plaintiff corporation agreed to act as agent for defendant, selling goods and making settlements with purchasers, and for these services it was to receive ten per cent of the net amount of settlements, one third to be paid on gross amount of sales on acceptance of orders, one third on shipment of goods, and balance on the making of settlements; and it was held that, on termination of the agency by mutual consent, plaintiff was entitled to ten per cent on all settlements previously made, six and two-thirds per cent on the goods shipped, and not settled for, and three and one-third per cent on orders accepted, and not yet filled); Buffington v. Brand Stove Co., 86 Mo. App. 160; Ashley v. Wrought-Iron Bridge Co., 54 Hun (N. Y.) 634, 7 N. Y. Suppl. 361; Doty v. Case, etc., Thresher Co., 50 Hun (N. Y.) 595, 3 N. Y. Suppl. 510 (where after expiration of a written contract by which plaintiff sold machines for defendant, plaintiff was orally employed to sell machines under an agreement that plaintiff should have "the commissions," but nothing was said as to their amount, and it was held that, defendant having accepted an order for a machine procured by plaintiff under this agreement, plaintiff's commission should be the same per cent as that provided for in the written contract); Ransom v. Wheelwright, 17 Misc. (N. Y.) 141, 39 N. Y. Suppl. 342; Brown v. McCaul, 6 S. D. 16, 60 N. W. 151; Dyer v. Winston, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 412, 77 S. W. 227 (holding that where a contract describing a tract of land which plaintiff therein agreed to purchase from defendant for other parties stipulated that when the sale was completed defendant was to pay plaintiff five hundred and thirty dollars, it evidenced an agreement to pay the amount named as a commission to plaintiff); Biggs v. Gordon, 8 C. B. N. S. 638, 98 E. C. L. 638.

Commission on value of land sold; deduction of encumbrances.— It has been held that in the absence of an agreement to the contrary a commission for selling land will be estimated on the whole value of the land without regard to encumbrances. Culverwell v. Birney, 11 Ont. 265.

Computation of commission for sale on part credit.— An agent is usually entitled to commission upon the whole amount of the purchase-money whether paid in cash or secured by mortgage; but where the owner himself conducts a part of the negotiations, a verdict calculated upon the cash payment will not be disturbed. Wolf v. Tait, 4 Manitoba 59.

Computation of commission for sale where property is accepted in payment.— Where an agent effects a sale of his principal's land as for a specified sum in cash, but the principal accepts property in payment, the agent is entitled to a commission based on the real price, not a fictitious price or a price so regarded by the parties to the exchange. But if the parties to the exchange, or the principal and his agent, judge the property taken in payment to be worth the price named, that price is not fictitious, even though in fact the property is of less value. Wakefield v. Merrick, 38 Vt. 82.

Partial commission where principal or outside agent intervenes.— It has been held that an agent who finds a purchaser for his principal's land is not entitled to the full commission, where an outside agent intervenes and closes the sale. Murray v. Curry, 7 C. & P. 584, 32 E. C. L. 771; Glines v. Cross, 12 Manitoba 442. In any event an arrangement by which two agents have authority to sell the same land, and one is to receive one per cent commission in case of a sale by the other, cannot be construed as giving the other the right to sue for two per cent commission on finding a customer who was wrongfully rejected by the principal. Lorimer v. Boylan, 98 Mich. 18, 56 N. W. 1043. So it has been

by the agent,[31] or a share in the land acquired by him for the principal.[32] Sales agents are sometimes allowed to retain all that they can obtain for the property held that an agent who procures a purchaser but who fails to obtain a binding contract from him is not entitled to full commissions, although the principal and the purchaser subsequently carry out the purchase. Boughton v. Hamilton Provident Soc., 10 Manitoba 683. But a verdict for less than the full commission has been sustained where the principal conducted part of the negotiations. Wolf v. Tait, 4 Manitoba 59.

Proportionate commission.—Where an agent is employed to procure the loan of a specified sum for a certain commission, and a less sum is loaned, he is not entitled to a lesser commission in proportion, unless it appears that his services were reasonably worth the lesser commission. Diltz v. Spahr, (Ind. App. 1896) 42 N. E. 823. And the same rule applies where an agent is employed to sell land for a specified price for a certain commission, and the land is sold for a less price. Blackwell v. Adams, 28 Mo. App. 61.

Commissions on collections.—A bank holding a judgment agreed to pay plaintiff one half of anything she could collect thereon, and after suit brought and attachments levied the bank caused the same to be dismissed, and settled with the judgment debtor for an amount much less than the face of the judgment. In a suit to recover plaintiff's proportion of the amount due on such judgment there was no testimony tending to show that the debtor owned any particular property or credits which would be covered by the attachment liens except the mere opinion of plaintiff's father that the debtor had inherited from his father's estate more than sufficient to pay the judgment. It was held that plaintiff was only entitled to recover one-half of the amount for which the claim was settled by the bank. Sowles v. Plattsburg First Nat. Bank, 130 Fed. 1009. So, under an agreement for collecting a claim, which, after describing the claim, stated that the "collection charges upon above will be 25 per cent.," the collector is not entitled to the stipulated percentage on the face of the claim, but only on the sum actually collected. Shead v. Hinman, 122 Cal. 70, 54 Pac. 388. A real estate agent employed to collect the rents on a lease taken in his name for the owners, but not negotiated by him, is not entitled to a commission for the whole life of the lease, but only to commissions for collecting the rent while employed for that purpose by the owners. Lucas v. Jackson, 140 Pa. St. 122, 21 Atl. 310.

Commissions on disbursements.—Where one takes charge of a farm under a contract which provides that he "is to receive 5 per cent. of the money used or collected," the contract will be construed as allowing him five per cent of all disbursements made in accordance with the terms of the contract, as well as five per cent of all moneys collected. Whitmore v. Nelson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 29 S. W. 521.

Commissions on gross sales are frequently provided for by the contract of agency. See Graver's Appeal, 1 Lanc. L. Rev. (Pa.) 227. Where a contract provides for the payment as royalties to sellers of a certain article of "a sum equal to 20 per cent. of the amount of the gross sales made by them," the amount to be allowed is twenty per cent of the actual gross sales after deducting discounts allowed to customers. Seven Sutherland Sisters v. McInnerney, 24 Misc. (N. Y.) 720, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 771. Under a contract for commissions to be paid a general manager of sales of a bicycle department, which provides that the commissions should be computed on the gross sales, after deducting "all wheels returned or taken back, either in exchange for new wheels or for any other reason," it was held that the words "wheels returned or taken back" referred to wheels which had once belonged to the employer and had been sold by it, and were returned to or taken back by the employer; and that those words do not authorize any deduction from the gross sales for wheels made by others, which never before belonged to the employer, but are by the general manager, by consent of his employer, taken as part payment for new machines sold. Wheelock v. Fisher, 93 Ill. App. 491.

Commissions on net income see Grinton v. Strong, 148 Ill. 587, 36 N. E. 559.

31. See for example Marks v. Davis, 72 Mo. App. 557 (holding that where a portion of a salesman's compensation depended on the profits on his sales, slips made out monthly by an employee of the firm in accordance with a custom of the firm, and sent to the salesman, purporting to show the profits on his sales, were binding on the firm); Paine v. Howells, 90 N. Y. 660 (holding that under a contract by which a salesman is to receive for his services a share of the "net profits" of the business, the interest on capital invested by the principal in the business is not an expense to be deducted in ascertaining the net profits); Bergen v. Hitchings, 22 N. Y. App. Div. 395, 48 N. Y. Suppl. 96 (where plaintiffs, wholesale grocers, employed defendant as traveling salesman, and agreed to pay him one third of the profits of his sales, and it was held that, in computing profits, defendant was entitled to share the benefit of any discounts obtained by plaintiffs on cash purchases); Heidenheimer v. Walthew, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 501, 21 S. W. 981 (where defendant employed plaintiff to charter a ship for him, agreeing to pay him therefor one fourth of the profits of the voyage, and defendant associated a third person with him in the enterprise of loading the vessel, and divided the profits with him, and it was held that this arrangement did not prevent plaintiff from recovering from defendant one fourth of the entire profits).

in excess of a fixed price;[33] and purchasing agents are sometimes allowed to retain the difference between a specified sum and a less sum for which they may be able to buy the property.[34] Compensation is sometimes fixed at a sum certain, in which event the agent, on performance of his undertaking, is entitled to that amount,[35] although it is more than his services are reasonably worth;[36] and he is entitled to no more, although his services were worth more.[37] In the absence of any stipulation in the contract fixing the amount of compensation or a method for determining it, the law allows the agent a reasonable compensation;[38] and in determining this the courts will generally give controlling effect to such custom or usage as may prevail in the trade or profession to which the particular agent

Rights of locator of public lands.—A locator is not entitled to a "locative interest" in the land located, as compensation for his services, unless he shows a contract to that effect with the owner of the certificate. Sypert v. McCowen, 28 Tex. 635; Branch v. Jones, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 550, 22 S. W. 245. To give a lien on lands to the locator, there must be a contract with the owner or his agent. The locator is not entitled to a part of the land by custom for his services. Steele v. Payne, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 187. A contract between the owner of a land certificate and a locator for the location of the land, the latter to have a portion thereof when titled, is a contract for its joint acquisition, and the owner of the certificate holds the title in trust for the locator to the extent of the interest of the latter. Doss v. Slaughter, 53 Tex. 235. Where the owner of a right to locate public land executed a power of attorney, authorizing the grantee therein named to make such location, and to receive for his services one third of the land thus located, such grantee becomes the equitable owner of an undivided one third of the land, wherever located, and in such cases the attorney in fact occupies the position of the vendee in a land contract after full payment of the contract price, and can maintain partition or compel specific performance. Stieler v. Hooper, 66 Tex. 353, 1 S. W. 317. If the certificate be located on separate tracts of land, the interest of the locator attaches to each; if but a portion of the certificate is located and titled, the locator prima facie is entitled to a pro rata interest in such portion. Doss v. Slaughter, supra. Where a locator of land contracted to receive in payment one third, the second choice of a division into three parts, the division should be made into an equal number of acres, regardless of its value. Withers v. Thompson, 4 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 323.

However, a contract that if land is sold at a specified price, the owner will allow to his agent in the purchase and sale of the lands a certain portion of the net profits, is only a personal contract, and gives the agent no interest in the land. Le Moyne v. Quimby, 70 Ill. 399. So where A contracted with B that with A's money B should purchase and sell lands in the name of A, and for his services should have half the profits, B had no title to or interest in the land, but only an interest in the profits. Porter v. Ewing, 24 Ill. 617.

33. Rosenfield v. Fortier, 94 Mich. 29, 53 N. W. 930, holding, however, that where a dealer in tobacco furnished plaintiff, his salesman, a list of prices for which sales were to be made, agreeing to pay plaintiff a certain commission and "whatever above these prices" he could get, the fact that plaintiff was afterward allowed to make sales for less than the list price did not entitle him to claim all he received in excess of such reduced price. See supra, III, B, 2, e, (IV).

Where, however, a principal agreed to pay his agent a certain commission on the amount for which land was sold, if the agent furnished a buyer at not less than a certain price, and the agent furnished a purchaser at more than that price, the agent was not entitled to any surplus above the fixed price. Blanchard v. Jones, 101 Ind. 542.

34. Smythe v. O'Brien, 198 Pa. St. 223, 47 Atl. 1102, holding that plaintiff having authorized defendant to negotiate for and purchase certain stock for him for certain land and eight thousand dollars in cash, they to have as compensation any amount they could save out of the eight thousand dollars, and such agreement being without deception or misrepresentation, they, having obtained the stock for the land only, are entitled to retain the eight thousand dollars, although that is much more than their services were worth.

What constitutes reasonable compensation see Cone v. Newkirk, 24 Ill. 508 (where A, acting as agent of B with the understanding that he was to be reasonably compensated for his services, procured a contract for the sale of certain lands from the owner, and assigned it to B, the assignment expressing a certain consideration, and it was held that such consideration must be taken as fixing the amount of his compensation in the absence of evidence to the contrary); Cowgill v. Pickerell, 98 Iowa 465, 67 N. W. 384 (holding that for acting as defendant's agent belongs.[39] The principal sometimes guarantees that the agent's contemplated commissions shall amount to a minimum sum in a given period;[40] but an agreement by the principal to advance to the agent, at regular intervals during the term of service, certain sums on account of commissions to be earned does not constitute such a guaranty.[41] It has been held that a subagent appointed for the principal by his general agent is not bound by secret limitations on the power of the latter to fix the salaries of subagents;[42] but that where an agent employs a subagent in his own behalf, the amount of the subagent's compensation cannot, as between him and the principal, exceed the amount fixed in the contract existing between the principal and the agent.[43] It has been held that interest on the amount of the agent's claim may be allowed in a proper case.[44]

(II) Deductions and Forfeitures.[45] By the terms of the contract of

in the cultivation and lease of a farm for a number of years, and the sale thereof, two hundred dollars was not excessive compensation); Parrish v. Bradley, 73 Mich. 610, 41 N. W. 818 (where it appeared, in an action for services in going to L, and looking after defendant's business there, that defendant had informed plaintiff that he was going to L himself in a few days, but nothing was said as to the precise time when plaintiff should go to L, and he had no instructions as to his manner of procedure, and it was held that, while he might recover for a few days spent at L, he was not justified in remaining there thirty days, waiting for defendant, and could not recover therefor); McClellan v. Duncombe, 52 N. Y. App. Div. 189, 65 N. Y. Suppl. 19 (holding that where plaintiff had acted as defendant's agent in renting property valued at one hundred and eighty thousand dollars, and had previously made memorandum relating to the same, it was error to allow plaintiff one per cent as compensation for valuing the property after having been discharged, since the appraisement was made from information acquired while acting as defendant's agent for the renting of the property); West New Jersey Soc. v. Morris, 6 Fed. Cas. No. 3,065, Pet. C. C. 59 (holding that an agent for the sale and management of the estates of absent proprietors was entitled to ten per cent on all collections made by him and remitted, and to a per diem allowance for the days spent by him in the management of the estates); Ex p. Jones, 1 Rose 29, 17 Ves. Compensation for selling land.— If no rate of compensation is fixed by the contract of employment, an agent who effects a sale of land for his principal may be awarded the commissions customarily paid for that service to real estate brokers, although he is not such. Stewart v. Soubral, 119 La. 211, 43 So. 1009; Ruckman v. Bergholz, 38 N. J. L. 531. And see Murray v. Curry, 7 C. & P. 584, 32 E. C. L. 771. However, he is not entitled to that amount if his services are not reasonably worth it; and if his services are worth more than the customary commissions he is entitled to more. Erben v. Lorillard, 2 Keyes (N. Y.) 567. See, however, Stewart v. Soubral, supra. And commissions, although a proper basis of compensation for brokers and agents of that character, do not furnish a correct measure of damages for a case where a person not engaged in that kind of business has merely introduced the seller to the purchaser, although the seller promised to pay for finding a customer for the estate. Lyon v. Valentine, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 271.

40. Jones v. Dunn, 3 Watts & S. (Pa.) 109, where plaintiffs proposed to defendant to act as their agent at Canton for a term of years, engaging to make consignments to an amount that would insure his commissions to amount to twenty-five thousand dollars per annum, at least; and subsequently they bound themselves to the fulfilment of it by the payment of the above sum annually, although from unforeseen events they should not ship the amount that would produce that sum; and one of the stipulations also was that defendant's commissions should be invested in return cargoes, as his separate property, at Canton; and defendant agreed to the proposal for a term of two years; and in the first year the commissions did not equal twenty-five thousand dollars, and the next year they considerably exceeded it, so that together they exceeded fifty thousand dollars; and it was held that the commissions were to be charged separately for each year, and that defendant was entitled to have his commissions the first year made up to twenty-five thousand dollars, and to retain all he received the second year. Compare Callaway v. Boroughs, (Tex. 1892) 19 S. agency or otherwise, the amount otherwise due an agent may be subject to forfeiture or deduction for various reasons independent of his fraud or misconduct,[46] as for instance where the principal has incurred losses on account of the default of the customers procured by the agent,[47] or where the principal has made money

46. Illinois.— McEwen v. Kerfoot, 37 Ill. 530, where an agent sold land, which sale his principal repudiated, and the agent thereafter gave a contract of sale to the purchaser, and it was held that, although the agent was entitled to his commissions, the principal could recoup any expense in removing from his title the cloud put thereon by the improper act of the agent. See, however, Wheelock v. Fisher, 93 Ill. App. 491, holding, under a contract for commissions to be paid the general manager of a bicycle department, which provided that the commissions should be computed on the gross sales after deducting "all wheels returned or taken back, either in exchange for new wheels or for any other reason," that when wheels, either returned and taken back or exchanged, were sold again, the general manager was entitled to commissions on said sales, although the contract also provided that the general manager should bear half the losses and have half the profits on all sales of wheels, either returned or taken in exchange.

Kentucky.— Huber Mfg. Co. v. Watson, 42 S. W. 110, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 864, holding that where a contract for the payment of commissions to a selling agent provides that no commission is to be allowed or paid "on sale of goods where foreclosure proceedings at any time might become necessary," the agent is not entitled to commissions on the proceeds of a foreclosure sale, but only on payments made before the foreclosure proceedings took place.

Montana.— McCormick v. Johnson, 31 Mont. 266, 78 Pac. 500, where the agent failed to pay a debt due the principal from another as he agreed to do in consideration of obtaining the agency.

New York.— Field v. Banker, 9 Bosw. 467, holding that while the fact that an agent employed to purchase goods and ship them accepted a bill of lading for the goods exempting the carriers from their common-law liability, and failed to procure insurance, did not forfeit their right to commissions, where the goods were not wholly lost, the principal had a remedy for injury to the goods by way of recoupment or counter-claim to an action by the agent for his commissions.

England.— In re Imperial Wine Co., L. R. 14 Eq. 417, 42 L. J. Ch. 5, 20 Wkly. Rep. 966, where the agent of a corporation was appointed its liquidator, and the amount he received as such was deducted from what the corporation owed him as agent.

Canada.— See Culverwell v. Birney, 11 Ont. 265, where an amount which the agent had received from the adverse party was deducted from his contract commission.

See 40 Cent. Dig. tit. "Principal and Agent," § 221.

Selling below list price.— Where an employer agrees to pay an employee a commission on orders obtained by him of fifteen per cent, etc., and only a commission of five per cent on all orders which he sells at a lower price than fifty and ten per cent off list of a certain catalogue, such employee was to have fifteen per cent for selling goods at a certain price, or if the employer should do so for him, but if the employee in order to make a sale, or if the employer in dealing directly with his customers, was compelled to cut the price below that mentioned, such employee was only entitled to five per cent commissions. Buffington v. Brand Stove Co., 86 Mo. App. 160. Where, however, a contract between a company and a local agent provided that the agent should have commissions on all sales secured by his efforts, but that he should stand all cuts made by him below the list price, and sales brought about by the efforts of the local agent were consummated by the general agent at a cut price, the local agent need not stand the cut. Davis v. Huber Mfg. Co., 119 Iowa 56, 93 N. W. 78.

Waiver and estoppel.— A technical violation of a contract causing a forfeiture of the agent's commission will be held to have been waived, where no damage resulted to the principal, and he apparently acquiesced in the agent's conduct for some time. Nichols v. Bachant, 45 Ill. App. 497. Thus where a contract with a traveling salesman provided that he should give the employer daily reports by post of his location on pain of forfeiture of his salary, and the agent failed to report as required almost from the beginning, but the employer made no complaint, and after the first month of service sent the agent out again under the same contract with the clause as to daily reports eliminated, the employer was estopped to defend an action for the first month's salary on the ground of the failure to give daily reports. 47. Morrison Mfg. Co. v. Bryson, 129 Iowa 645, 103 N. W. 1016, 106 N. W. 153 (where it appeared that a contract with a salesman employed to cover certain territory provided that on such orders as the employer should lose the account or take back the goods, any commissions paid were to be charged back; and that subsequently another contract was made whereby the agent was assigned new territory, and it recited that it superseded the other contract; and it was held that the new contract did not release the salesman from liability to refund commissions paid under the first contract, which, under the terms thereof, it became the salesman's duty to refund); Raynor v. Buttlar, 87 N. Y. Suppl. 119 (where it appeared that plaintiff was employed by defendant under a contract that plaintiff should stand a third of all loss on customers procured by him; that advances to the agent during the course of the employment which have not been repaid.[48]

(III) Additional or Extra Compensation.[49] Compensation in addition to that specified in the contract of employment cannot be recovered by the agent on account of services which were performed as a mere incident to the fulfilment of his undertaking, and the performance of which, although not expressly called for by the contract of agency, may fairly be regarded as having been within the contemplation of the parties when the contract was made.[50] And in the absence of a customer procured by plaintiff went into bankruptcy while indebted to defendant, and in an action by plaintiff, he claimed that he should not stand a third of that loss for the reason that he had, after leaving defendant's employ, sought permission to collect the claim, which was refused; that defendant showed that he had used diligence to collect it, and there was no evidence that plaintiff could have obtained any better results than defendant did; and it was held that it was proper to charge plaintiff with one third of the loss); International Harvester Co. v. McKeever, (S. D. 1906) 109 N. W. 642 (holding that a harvester machine company, on settlement with its agent, was entitled to reject doubtful or worthless notes taken by the agent on the sale of certain machines where the contract of agency provided that in case sales were made by the agent to parties who were adjudged by the company to have been doubtful or worthless at the time of the sale, the notes taken for such sales should be applied to payment of commissions due the agent upon sales approved by the company, and also that, in case the company should, within three months, find that any notes taken and passed upon at settlement were doubtful or worthless at the time of the sale, then the agent should take such notes and replace them with cash or notes secured by good and responsible parties acceptable to the company). See, however, Hayner v. Trott, 4 Kan. App. 679, 46 Pac. 37, holding that where a contract of agency for the sale of machines provided that sales should be for cash, the commission then being payable in cash; on credit, commission payable in notes; or on part credit and part cash, commission payable in part cash and part notes, and stipulated that the agent should "refund any commissions allowed on notes that may afterward prove to be worthless, or otherwise uncollectible," the principal was entitled to recover back only such commissions as the agent had received in cash primarily, or through collecting notes taken by him for commissions, in sales in which the notes taken for the balance of the price proved worthless.

Otherwise in absence of contract.— Where the contract under which an agent undertook to manage the business of his principal at a certain city for a fixed salary and percentage of the net profits contained no guaranty that the agent would make good any loss from failure of customers to pay their accounts, losses accruing from such source cannot be deducted from his fixed salary, but considered only in determining the net profits. A. R. Frank Co. v. Waldrup, (Tex. Civ. App. 1902) 71 S. W. 298. And when a traveling salesman employed by a committee of creditors of an assigned estate to make sales on commissions takes an order from a responsible party, he is not liable to a deduction for the expenses of collecting the proceeds of sale from such party, in the absence of any provision in the agreement to that effect. See, however, Luce v. Consolidated Ubero Plantations Co., 195 Mass. 84, 80 N. E. 793 (holding that where defendant owed plaintiff commissions for selling its bonds, and they made a written agreement whereby plaintiff relinquished certain claims for commissions and retained others and his employment was ended, and immediately thereafter he was reëmployed under a new agreement whereby plaintiff should receive a commission for the sale of bonds and defendant should make advances against his commission account, the advances were chargeable against commissions to be earned under the new contract and not on bonds sold under the old contract); Christopher v. Hechheimer, 127 Mich. 451, 86 N. W. 959 (where plaintiff was employed by defendants as a traveling salesman under a contract providing that he should be paid a sum equal to seven per cent commission on all sales accepted, and that a drawing account of one hundred dollars a month should be allowed him, traveling expenses and drawings to be deducted before payment of commissions, and it was held that the term "drawing account" meant a guaranty of commissions, so that there was no obligation on the part of the salesman to repay the amount so drawn). L. 382 (where it appeared that A acted under a written agreement as the commission agent of B in the sale of goods and was paid a commission; that B was a contractor with the admiralty for the supply of a variety of articles, on the sale of which A was paid his commission, and A attended on a number of occasions at Somerset house, where the patterns of these articles were inspected by the government officers; that A sought to charge B for these attendances in addition to his commission; and it was held that if in giving these attendances A was only acting in the discharge of his business as an agent he was not entitled to charge for the attendances). Compensation for selling another's property with principal's.—Where an agent agreed to sell a farm on commission, he was not entitled to commissions on the value of part of the crop which he knew belonged to another and which was deducted from the gross amount received. Barrett v. Johnson, 64 Pa. St. 223. So an agent employed to sell machines on commission cannot claim commissions from his employer on sales of attachments used with the machines, not a necessary part thereof, and made by another company, in the absence of evidence of a contract that such commissions would be allowed. Express contract.—The agent may recover for extra services on an express promise of the principal to pay therefor. Triplett v. Jackson, 130 Iowa 408, 106 N. W. 954; Gray v. Josselyn, 117 Mich. 23, 75 N. W. 96, holding that an insurance company's contract to allow a state agent whatever it allowed any other state agent of the company, under similar circumstances, in excess of the amount expressed in the written agreement, entitled him to an allowance equal to that of any other state agent, although their services were not precisely identical. And see Taylor v. Pullman Automatic Ventilating Co., 87 N. Y. Suppl. 404. However, a gratuity payable to an insurance agent subject to "his accounts being in a condition entirely satisfactory to the company" cannot be recovered where an inspection of the agent's accounts, which he agreed should be conclusive, showed him to be indebted to the company in excess of the gratuity claimed. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Strohmberg, 65 Ill. App. 288. A contract provided that a traveling salesman should receive on sales sixty-five per cent of the profits, and that he was to receive two hundred and seventy-five dollars per month, although his percentage of profits fell below that sum. By a subsequent agreement he was to receive a commission of ten per cent on sales of cigars. The percentage of profits not amounting to the guaranteed monthly salary, he sued for the balance, and also for commissions on cigars. It was held that the commission on cigars was not in addition to his monthly salary, but was to form a part of it. Callaway v. Boroughs, (Tex. 1892) 19 S. W. 611.

Implied contract.—Additional compensation for extra services may be recovered on an implied contract to pay therefor. U. S. Mortgage Co. v. Henderson, 111 Ind. 24, 12 N. E. 88 (holding that the fact that an attorney is employed as an agent to negotiate loans and collect them does not preclude him from rendering and receiving compensation for services of a different character, such as legal services, looking after repairs, and renting property bought in by the principal on foreclosure sales, looking after taxes and insurance on such property, and on other property mortgaged to the principal to secure loans, and the like); Gilchrist v. Brooklyn Grocers Mfg. (IV) Damages in Lieu of Compensation. The general rules of law governing the measure of damages for breach of contract[52] are applied in determining the measure of damages for breach of contract to appoint an agent;[53] also in determining the measure of damages where the principal violates the contract of agency,[54] as where he wrongfully terminates the agency,[55] or wrongfully prevents reasonable compensation for this service). And see Taylor v. Pullman Automatic Ventilating Co., 87 N. Y. Suppl. 404. Where, however, plaintiff sold goods for defendants on commission for more than five years, during which frequent settlements were had and receipts given, and when going among his customers plaintiff was in the habit of making collections from them on account of past sales, and in a few instances rendered a bill and received pay therefor from defendants, and after leaving defendants' employ, he brought an action to recover for such collections, no contract to pay therefor should be implied on defendants' part. Lyons v. Jube, 17 N. Y. Suppl. 664. Defendant was employed as general agent within a certain territory by a written contract by which he agreed to devote his entire time to the service of the company, to conduct its business as directed, and was to receive as compensation stipulated commissions on the business done. For more than a year and until his discharge, he rendered a monthly account as required, in which he credited himself with the commissions specified in the contract, and no more. It was held that the fact that he was directed by the company to designate himself on his stationery as "general manager," which he did, or that he performed some services as general manager different from those usually performed by a general agent, did not, under the circumstances and course of dealing, establish an implied promise on the part of the company to pay him for his services as general manager in addition to the commissions fixed by the contract. 55. Norddeutschen Feuer-Versicherungs Gesellschaft v. Berthcau, 79 Cal. 495, 21 Pac. 975 (holding that the consideration paid by the agent for his appointment is not necessarily his measure of damages); Parke v. Frank, 75 Cal. 364, 17 Pac. 427 (holding that the damages recoverable are such as result naturally, that is in usual course of things, and proximately from the breach); Menage v. Rosenthal, 187 Mass. 470, 73 N. E. 537 (holding that the amount of an agent's weekly drawing account does not furnish the measure of damages for his wrongful discharge); Lewis v. Atlas Mut. L. Ins. Co., 61 Mo. 534 (holding that in a suit by an agent for damages resulting from his discharge during the term of his engagement, his measure of damages is the amount he has lost in consequence); Fish v. Hahn, 124 N. Y. App. Div. 173, 108 N. Y. Suppl. 782 (holding that where plaintiff declared on a contract of employment by defendant by which plaintiff was to purchase a lot for defendant, to secure a loan of five thousand dollars thereon, and to superintend the erection of the building on the lot for a compensation equal to ten per cent of the actual cost of the building, and plaintiff was discharged after the contract for the erection had been let, he could not recover, in the absence of proof of the actual cost of the building erected).

Profits; probable sales.— On the revocation of an appointment of an agent for the sale of land, the measure of damages is the profit which would have resulted to the agent had he been allowed to complete the contract, when the recovery thereunder is not greater than the agent's compensation would be, treating a sale by the owner as though made by the agent. Green v. Cole, (Mo. 1894) 24 S. W. 1058. Where plaintiff was sole agent for the sale of defendant's mineral water for one year, and before the year expired the agency was transferred to another, plaintiff's measure of damage was the profits he might have realized if defendant had performed its contract. Hence where the agency was transferred to another before the end of the year, proof of the actual sales of water by the new agent during plaintiff's unexpired term is not speculative. Mueller v. Bethesda Mineral Spring Co., 88 Mich. 390, 50 N. W. 319. So a machine company employing a salesman under a contract giving him exclusive territory is liable to the salesman for loss of profits on sales which he was deprived of making by reason of the company's violation of the contract in putting other salesmen into the agent from earning his commission,[56] as by refusing or failing to supply the agent with goods or to fill his orders.[57] The measure of damages to which an exclusive agent is entitled where the principal, in violation of his contract, sells the territory allotted to him, and for damages resulting from sales made by other salesmen put into the territory after the date of notice to the salesman taking from him a part of the territory, in so far as he was deprived of profits on machines which he had already purchased when the notice was given. But where there was nothing to show that the salesman failed to make sales of all the machines which he had purchased from the company, and no proof of any loss or profit on them except the general statement of the salesman that he had to sell the machines in the best way he could by taking cattle and second-hand machines in exchange, he did not show that he had sustained any damages. White Sewing Mach. Co. v. Shaddock, 79 Ark. 220, 95 S. W. 143. Where plaintiff was to receive a fixed annual salary, to be paid in monthly instalments, a portion of which he would be compelled to refund unless at the end of the year his sales reached thirty thousand dollars, and he was not permitted to complete the contract through the wrongful act of defendant, his damages for the unexpired time ought to be based on the amount which it is supposed he would earn during the year. Wilcox v. Baer, 85 Mo. App. 587. Defendants employed plaintiff as a traveling salesman, agreeing to supply him with samples, to allow him as compensation one half of the profits on sales effected by him, and to advance to him, by paying his drafts at the commencement of his work, fifty dollars at the end of every two weeks, to be repaid out of his share of the profits, while he was to furnish his own outfit. It was held that, on a breach of defendants by refusing to pay plaintiff's drafts and instructing him to quit work before the expiration of the stipulated term, plaintiff was entitled to recover as damages, not only his share of the profits on sales consummated, but also on sales negotiated so far that it could be ascertained with certainty that they would be completed, and the amount or extent thereof; but that mere expectation, doubtful offers, or other vague assurances of intention to purchase, without expression of quantity or value, are speculative merely and not recoverable; that opinions as to what sales he could or probably would have made are also speculative and contingent; and that he could not recover for the loss of his horse and buggy, the value of his services per month, or the damages to his credit by being thus thrown out of employment. Beck v. West, 87 Ala. 213, 6 So. 70. So in an action for breach of a contract to continue plaintiff as defendant's sale agent, and allow him commissions on sales, estimates of probable sales furnish no criterion for fixing damages, and evidence of the amount of profits which might have been made during the term of the contract, based upon the calculation of the probable amount of sales during such term, is inadmissible. Washburn v. Hubbard, 6 Lans. (N. Y.) 11.

56. Roberts v. Barnard, Cab. & E. 336, holding that in an action for damages by a commission agent for wrongfully preventing him from earning his commission, the damages recoverable where nothing remained to be done by the commission agent to entitle him to his commission if the transaction had gone through are the full amount of the commission which he would have earned.

Refusal to convey to purchaser found by agent.— Where the owner of land agrees with agents to convey the same to a purchaser who was to pay the agents' commission, and afterward refuses to convey, the agents can recover from the owner the amount they would have received as commission from the purchaser had the owner complied with his contract. Atkinson v. Pack, 114 N. C. 597, 19 S. E. 628. However, where defendant employed plaintiff to negotiate the sale of a number of lots, and defendant's wife thereafter refused to sign the deeds so that defendant could conclude the sale, plaintiff's measure of damages is his expenses in the transaction, and he cannot recover commissions on the lots not sold. Hill v. Jones, 152 Pa. St. 433, 25 Atl. 834.

Sale by principal before expiration of agency.— In an action by agents employed to sell lands, against the owner, who has, in violation of their contract, sold the lands himself within the time allowed the agents for such sale, the proper measure of damages is the profit, if any, which would have resulted to plaintiffs had they been allowed to complete their contract with defendant and the land been sold by them under the contract. Green v. Cole, 127 Mo. 587, 30 S. W. 135.

57. Alabama.— Union Refining Co. v. Barton, 77 Ala. 148, holding that where the principal wrongfully fails to supply the agent with goods, the agent cannot recover as damages the supposed profits which he would or might have realized from sales during the entire period stipulated for the continuance of the contract; that such damages are entirely speculative, and no rule can be laid down by which they can be accurately ascertained or measured.

Iowa.— Howe Mach. Co. v. Bryson, 44 Iowa 159, 24 Am. Rep. 735, where a person made a contract with the general agents of a sewing-machine company, by the terms of which he was to rent a room, provide himself with a team, and furnish other necessary means for the sale of machines, and devote his time thereto; and the agents were to furnish him with all the machines he could sell, at a price twenty five per centum below the retail rate, and he performed his undertaking, but the machines were not supplied as agreed; and it was held that the measure of damages was the value of the time lost as the result of the breach, without reference to the profits his goods in the agent's territory, is the actual loss suffered by the latter.[58] If a which might have been realized if the contract had been performed.

Kansas.— Osborne v. Stassen, 25 Kan. 736, where it appeared that an agent for the sale of machines was to receive a commission of sixty dollars on each machine sold, and he was to set up the machines and put them in operation, which cost him about twenty dollars, and that he was entitled to receive five machines which the principal failed to deliver, and it was held that his measure of damages was the actual loss he sustained, and not necessarily sixty dollars on each machine.

Kentucky.— Smith v. Perry, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 683, holding that, defendants having appointed plaintiff their agent for the sale of pianos of a certain kind, and afterward refused to deliver the pianos, plaintiff was entitled to recover his share of the profits upon the number of pianos which he could have sold by reasonable efforts at the price agreed upon.

New York.— Meylert v. Gas Consumers' Ben. Co., 26 Abb. N. Cas. 262, 14 N. Y. Suppl. 148, holding that a sole agent for the sale of a patented article within a specified territory, who has abandoned his profession as a physician, and devoted his entire time to the business of the agency, in reliance on his contract with the manufacturers, is entitled to recover from them for their total breach of the contract to furnish him with the articles, not only the amounts which he actually expended in the business of the agency, but also the earnings which the evidence reasonably establishes he otherwise would have made from his profession.

Pennsylvania.— Rightmire v. Hirner, 188 Pa. St. 325, 41 Atl. 538, holding, in an action for breach of a contract to sell machines on commission, that where it appears that at the time of the breach the contract had three years to run, but defendants were not bound to furnish any definite number of machines, and could practically terminate the contract at any time by ceasing to manufacture them, the measure of damages is not the profit which plaintiff would have made on his contract, but the value of the contract at the time of breach; and that in considering the value the jury must bear in mind that defendants were not obliged to furnish any specified number of machines, or even to continue their manufacture; that plaintiff's rights under his contract were subject to the contingencies of business and depression of trade, which might tend to reduce the sales, and that in estimating the damages consequent on the loss of the contract, the jury must take into consideration what plaintiff probably could earn in some other employment or occupation during the time which the contract had to run.

Texas.—Kirby Lumber Co. v. Cummings, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 220, 87 S. W. 231, holding that a sales agent who has made contracts of sale in his own name, his principal being undisclosed, cannot, as the vendees might do, recover the difference between the contract and the market prices, in the absence of evidence that he has paid the vendees' claims.

Wisconsin.— Taylor Co. v. Bannerman, 120 Wis. 189, 97 N. W. 918, where it appeared that defendants rejected an order by which plaintiffs were deprived of a profit; that defendants could not have produced from their quarry sufficient stone to fill this order of plaintiffs, and in addition thereto fill those orders for which they had damages assessed against them for breach of the same contract in the case at bar; and it was held that it was error to allow damages to plaintiffs for the rejection of the order, since it would result in a duplication of damages.

United States.— Taylor Mfg. Co. v. Hatcher Mfg. Co., 39 Fed. 440, 3 L. R. A. 587, holding that where a company manufacturing agricultural steam engines agrees to furnish an agent, who sells on commission, the engines necessary to supply the season's demand, and the agent makes large expenses in advertising, canvassing, and otherwise building up the trade, and proves a heavy demand on him for these particular engines largely in excess of his order to the company, the company, refusing without sufficient cause to furnish the engines ordered, will be held liable for the sum of commissions on the engines ordered, and for the reasonable expenses of the agent in their undertaking.

58. LaFavorite Rubber Mfg. Co. v. H. Channon Co., 113 Ill. App. 491 (holding that where a party has by contract the exclusive sale rights of particular goods for a specified period within certain territory, and the party granting such rights sells goods within such territory and refuses to allow such sales agent anything on account thereof, such agent can only recover the actual damages which he has suffered, and cannot recover any particular percentage of profit, without proof that he could or would have made the sales in question at a price which would have netted him such percentage of profit); W. G. Taylor Co. v. Bannerman, 120 Wis. 189, 97 N. W. 918 (holding that in an action for breach of contract appointing plaintiffs the exclusive agents in a certain territory for the sale of stone from defendant's quarry at a certain price, by which defendants bound themselves to quote no prices and make no sales in plaintiffs' territory, that where it appeared that defendants sold to a customer in plaintiffs' territory stone which plaintiffs had offered to sell to the same customer at the same price plaintiffs would have to pay defendants for the stone under the contract, it was error to award damages to plaintiff therefor, although breach of the contract was established; but that where defendants sold to a customer in plaintiffs' territory stone which otherwise plaintiffs could have sold at an established market price so as to yield a profit, the profit the sale would have yielded plaintiffs was properly allowed as damages). And see sales agent's commissions are payable in purchase-money notes executed by his customers to the principal, the latter to have the right of selection, the measure of damages to which the agent is entitled on account of the principal's refusal to deliver notes which the principal has selected for him is the actual value of the notes, not their face value.[59]

i. Accounting and Settlement; Payment; Release — (i) In General. An accounting and settlement between principal and agent is generally conclusive on the agent,[60] in the absence of mistake.[61] On the other hand if an account is stated between the parties the agent may recover the amount thereby appearing to be due him.[62] The agent may waive compensation;[63] but the fact that an agent informally declares to the principal that a certain amount is due him as compensation does not estop him from subsequently claiming compensation for the same services in a greater sum.[64] Payment to one agent of a commission due to another does not discharge the debt as to the latter.[65] If the agent accepts from a purchaser, in lieu of the cash payment, a conveyance of a tract of land to himself, and the transaction is ratified by his principal, he cannot retain the land and claim commissions to the amount of the agreed value.[66] Title to bonds may be

61. Murphy v. Kastner, 50 N. J. Eq. 214, 24 Atl. 564, where it appeared that defendant authorized plaintiff to sell his brewery to an English corporation, the consideration to be paid part in cash and part in debentures, and agreed to give complainant all the price above seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars; that in pursuance of complainant's efforts the sale was effected between defendant and an English agent for seven hundred and ninety thousand dollars, the bonds to be counted at four dollars and eighty-eight and one-fourth cents to the pound sterling; that in a statement made by defendant to complainant's agents, he counted the bonds at four dollars and eighty-four cents to the pound, the current rate of exchange, and the agent settled on that basis, receiving £800 less than if the contract rate of exchange had been used, and gave a receipt in full; and it was held that relief should be granted against the mistake.

62. Werckmann v. Taylor, 112 Mo. App. 365, 87 S. W. 44, holding that where an agent called on his principal for the purpose of settling the account between them, and submitted the account, and they went over it, and the principal agreed that all the charges were satisfactory and the account correct, the agent was entitled to recover the balance in his favor shown by the account. See, however, Smith v. Redford, 19 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 274, where accounts were delivered in 1862 and 1865 by a trustee and agent to his principal, and the confidential relationship existed for upwards of two years after the latter account had been rendered, and it was held that the accounts were not binding on the principal as stated accounts.

L. 351, 49 Atl. 508, where a sales agent had disobeyed instructions in taking a contract for less than the price fixed, and the contract was accepted by the principal on the condition that the agent would waive his commission, and it was held that the evidence was sufficient to show an unconditional waiver and that such waiver was not void for want of consideration.

Payment to agent as discharging claim of subagent.— Where a principal notified a subagent that, on the sale of the principal's land, he would be fully protected in the matter of his commission, a payment of the whole commission to the agent, without reserving anything for the subagent, does not release the claim of such subagent against the principal. Rep. 126, holding that where an agent in effecting a sale of property for his principal has taken a secret commission from the purchaser, the principal, notwithstanding that he has recovered from the agent the amount of the secret commission, is further entitled to recover back the commission which he himself has paid to the agent. See, however, Hippisley v. Knee, [1905] 1 K. B. 1, 74 L. J. K. B. 68, 92 L. T. Rep. N. S. 20, 21 T. L. R. 5, holding that where an agent, in effecting a sale of property for his principal, has without fraud received a secret commission or discount in an incidental matter which is not connected with his duty to sell, the principal, while entitled to recover from the agent the secret commission or discount, cannot recover the commission which has been paid by him to the agent for effecting the sale.

73. California.— Clyne v. Easton, etc., Co., 148 Cal. 287, 83 Pac. 36, 113 Am. St. Rep. 197, holding that where a subsequent agreement creating an agency for the sale of land superseded a former agreement under which defendant had incurred all items of expense charged in the account to that date, and provided that all excess received over a named sum and all crop returns then in hand, or due on account of crops growing on the land for the year, should belong to defendant as compensation, no expenses incurred by defendant, nor any payment to or on account of the vendors prior to the second agreement, can be charged as a credit against its indebtedness arising on the subsequent sale of the land.

Missouri.— Artz v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co., 90 Mo. App. 539, holding that where an insurance agent's contract requires him to pay all the usual and necessary expenses of every kind incident to his agency, and a manual book by which such agent is bound an agent is generally entitled to reimbursement in respect of moneys advanced to or for account of the principal.[74] The principal is of course liable to the agent for money advanced directly to the principal by the agent in the course of the employment.[75] So if an agent, acting within the scope of his authority and in good faith, expends money for the benefit and account of the principal in the course of the agency, he is entitled to reimbursement.[76] Accordingly the agent prohibits agents from incurring any expense to the company unless authorized by writing, the company is not liable for expenses incurred for office rent and for lighting and cleaning the office, in the absence of written authority from the company to rent the offices.

Nebraska.— Aultman, etc., Co. v. Martin, 37 Nebr. 826, 56 N. New York.— See Ract v. Duviard-Dime, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 156.

Oregon.— Bartholomew v. Aumack, 25 Oreg. 78, 34 Pac. 817, holding that under an agreement by a real estate agent to clear certain land, survey and plat it into lots, and advertise and sell it, for a commission of ten dollars on each lot sold, providing that in case of eviction as the result of a pending action the owner shall pay him a designated sum for clearing the land, after which the contract is to become void, the agent cannot recover the expenses of surveying when the action results in eviction.

Texas.— Champion Mach. Co. v. Ervay, (App. 1890) 16 S. W. 172, holding that where a written contract of agency for the sale of goods provided that the agents should pay freight charge, store the goods, and keep them insured, and that on a settlement they should hold the unsold goods subject to the principal's order and free of expense, the agents were not entitled to be reimbursed for freight charge paid by them, and evidence of a custom to that effect was not competent.

United States.— Montgomery v. Ætna L. Ins. Co., 97 Fed. 913, 38 C. C. A. 553, where a contract of employment of a general agent obligated the agent to employ subagents in his territory, and provided that commissions allowed him on the business done should be in full compensation for his own services and those of his subagents; and also provided that the contract might be terminated at the option of either party, and that in case of its termination before five years the company should be under no obligation to pay the agent anything beyond the commissions earned up to the time of its termination; and it was held that on the termination of the contract by the company within the five years, it could not be held liable to the agent for advances made by him to subagents, and which had never been charged by him to the company in his monthly reports.

However, an agreement by agents not to charge a party for whom they loan money anything for making loans and collecting the interest thereon will not prevent their recovering the cash disbursements necessarily made in foreclosing by advertisement a mortgage taken by them to secure a loan, and the fee paid an attorney for the use of his name in making such statutory foreclosure. Lyon v. Sweeny, 91 Mich. 478, 51 N. W. 1106. And a contract by which defendant appointed plaintiff manager of its branch office and agreed to consign goods to him, to remain its property, it to pay him for selling them a sum equal to the difference between the list and trade prices of the articles, and he to send it monthly statements of sales and remit therewith the trade price of goods sold during the preceding month as shown by the statement, is practically construed by the parties as not requiring him to pay the expenses of the business, he having, during the two years the arrangement lasted, sent it monthly accounts of cash receipts and cash payments on blanks furnished by it therefor, in which, under the latter head, appeared items for expenses for salaries, rent, lighting, etc., and having made remittances of balances after deducting such items, which were received without objection. Conclusiveness of accounts.— Where the agent of an investor renders accounts in which he charges himself with interest as having been received, and pays over the balance thereby appearing to be due the investor, he will not, after the investor's death, be heard to say that he did not receive the interest, but merely advanced the amount thereof to the investor by way of accommodation. Payment of price of property bought for principal.— An agent who buys property for the principal and pays the price pursuant to his authority is entitled to reimbursement on that account. Clifton v. Ross, 60 Ark. 97, 28 S. W. 1085 (holding that where a principal requests his agent to purchase for him a certain machine without stating the price to be paid therefor, the agent is authorized to pay the market price therefor, and recover the same from the principal, although the machine does not prove to be what the principal expected); Wyeth v. Walzl, 43 Md. 426 (holding that where defendant had, in writing, authorized plaintiff to purchase the property, part to be paid in cash, any payments made by plaintiff imposed an obligation on defendant to repay him without any further request on defendant's part); Spinney v. Thurber, 33 Hun (N. Payment of taxes on principal's property.— An agent who, by his principal's direction, took the title to land in his own name in payment of a debt due his principal, is entitled to receive the money advanced by him to pay taxes before being divested of title Warren v. Adams, 19 Colo. 515, 36 Pac. 604. Texas.— A. R. Frank Co. v. Waldrup, (Civ. App. 1902) 71 S. Vermont.— Allen v. Gates, 73 Vt. 222, 50 Atl. 1092, holding that where a landlord and tenant agree on the expiration of the lease that the tenant shall remain in possession, caring for the premises, and collect the rents in his own behalf, and apply them on the landlord's indebtedness to him for a building erected on the premises, the law will imply a promise to allow the tenant for his neces-

A traveling salesman is ordinarily entitled to his reasonable expenses. McEwan v. Loucheim, 115 N. C. 348, 20 S. E. 519. So where a contract for the employment of a traveling salesman provided that he should receive his expenses in addition to his salary, but that the expenses should not exceed an average of seven dollars per working day, and the employee was required on several occasions to travel and work on Sunday, expenses incurred on such Sundays, actually made in the service, should be included in calculating the average expense per working day under the contract. Ornstein v. Yahr, etc., Drug Co., 119 Wis. 429, 96 N. W. 826. However, a contract of employment of a traveling salesman at a salary and an allowance for expenses does not include his board while not on the road. Dowd v. Krall, 32 Misc. (N. Y.) 252, 65 N. Y. Counsel fees, costs, etc., incurred by an agent who prosecutes or defends a suit or other legal proceeding in behalf of the principal or in his interest are a proper subject of reimbursement. Selz v. Guthman, 62 Ill. App. 624; Chicago First Nat. Bank v. Tenney, 43 Ill. Necessity of actual expenditure.— Defendants agreed to divide the profits of sales made by plaintiff and to pay him two hundred dollars per month, one hundred dollars for his own use and one hundred dollars to be expended for his traveling expenses, and in case plaintiff's share of the net profits should amount to more than the money advanced, such money to apply as part of his share of the profits, and in case his share of the profits did not amount to such sum, the money advanced not to be charged to him. It was held that plaintiff was not entitled to the one hundred dollars for his expenses unless he expended that sum. Weiss v. Farrington, 100 N. Y. 619, 3 N. E. 90. It has been held, however, that an agent entitled to charge for expenses may recover the fair worth of his board, even though he actually paid nothing for it in money. Moore v. Remington, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 427.

Unjustifiable expenses.— Defendant, an attorney, was employed to devote part of his time to the benefit of plaintiff corporation, looking to the sale of its stock. Plaintiff rented an office next to that occupied by defendant, it being agreed that the latter should make use of both offices. On some occasions plaintiff's employees occupied defendant's office for not more than two days at a time, during which defendant was compelled to borrow the use of a neighboring office two or three times, but it did not appear that any expense was incurred in so doing. It was held that such facts did not justify defendant in paying sixteen dollars rent for his office out of the company's funds. Gladiator Consol. Compulsory payments to third persons.— The rule stated in the text is especially true where the agent, without fault, is compelled by legal proceedings to pay out money to third persons on account of responsibilities incurred as agent. Yeatman v. Corder, 38 Mo. 337 (holding that if an agent, in consequence of a deception practised on him by his principal, innocently incurs a risk or responsibility, and is compelled to pay damages to a purchaser on account thereof, he will be entitled to remuneration from his principal); Knapp v. Simon, 86 N. Y. 311; Hunter v. Jameson, 28 N. C. 252 (holding that where an agent appointed to sell articles of personal property sells the articles with a warranty which binds him personally, and judgment is recovered against him for a breach, he is entitled to recover the amount); Elliott v. Walker, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 126. And see Leavitt v. Parks, 7 N. Brunsw. 282. And he is entitled to reimbursement in such cases notwithstanding error in the judgment against him. Howe v. Buffalo, etc., R. Co., 38 Barb. (N. Refunding money collected for principal.— Where a mortgagee's attorney accepted a note from the redemptioner for the full amount bid on foreclosure, including excessive attorney's fees, and after remitting the amount to the mortgagee excepting attorney's fees, and selling the note, was compelled to refund to the purchaser of the note the excessive attorney's fees, the note having been held invalid as to them, the mortgagee was bound to make good to the attorney the amount so refunded, since the taking of the excessive attorney's fee was for his benefit, and he was primarily liable therefor. Owen v. Baxter, 97 Mich. 539, 56 N. W. 930. So where plaintiffs as agents received a draft and forwarded it for collection, not disclosing the agency, and on its being paid at maturity paid over the amount to defendant, who had become entitled thereto by purchase, and the draft proved to be a forgery, and plaintiffs were compelled to refund to the drawee, they were entitled to receive back from defendant the money so paid him. Little v. Derby, 7 Mich. 325. Where, however, an attorney collected money on a judgment confessed by a debtor in favor of his client, and paid the same over to defendant, another creditor of the debtor, under direction of his client, in satisfaction of a claim against the debtor on which his client was security, and subsequently, the confessed judgment having been set aside as fraudulent, the attorney, under the decree, paid to the receiver appointed for the debtor the amount collected and paid to defendant, it was held that defendant, not having employed the attorney to collect the judgment, was not bound to repay to him the amount so paid. Flower v. Beveridge, 161 Ill. 53, 43 N. E. 722 [affirming 58 Ill. App. 431].

Remission of price to principal before collection.— If an agent, in anticipation of the receipt of the amount of sales for his principal, remit such amount, and the purchasers fail to pay, it is not the loss of the agent, but of the principal, unless the agent sells on a del credere commission. McLarty v. Middleton, 6 Wkly. Rep. 379, 853. Del credere agents see FACTORS AND BROKERS, 19 Cyc. 133, 152.

Reduction of damages.— It seems that an agent who, as a result of incurring responsibilities in the transaction of the agency, is arrested on civil process, is not entitled to recover damages for the imprisonment from his principal, where he, the agent, had the means of paying the claim. Leavitt v. Parks, 7 N. Brunsw. 282.

79. Whitley v. Murray, 34 Ala. 155; Meadows v. Smith, 34 N. C. 18 (holding that if an agent, contracting for his principal, discloses the name of his principal, he is not legally responsible to the person with whom he contracts; and if, therefore, he pays any damages arising from the breach of the contract, he cannot recover the amount so paid from the principal, under the count for money paid, unless it was paid at the principal's special instance and request); Wemys v. Greenwood, 5 L. J. K. B. O. S. 257 (holding that in general an agent is not warranted in paying a debt due from his principal without a previous authority or a subsequent assent; but where a person fills the character of agent to two parties and receives from one a sum on account of the other, which sum he carries to the account, it seems that he may make any deductions afterward from that sum which the person who paid it would have had a right to make in the form of set-off.

80. Illinois.— Searing v. Butler, 69 Ill. 575, where a commission merchant, by direction of his principal, sold wheat for the latter, to be delivered at any time during the current year at the seller's option, and after an advance in the price the principal refused to stand to the contract, and the merchant settled with the buyer by paying him the difference between the contract price and the market value, the principal being unknown to the purchaser.

Iowa.— Nixon v. Downey, 49 Iowa 166, holding that an agent's right to reimbursement from his principal of moneys paid by him under a contract made for the principal under authority from him is not affected by the fact that he made the contract in his own name, the principal not having instructed him to contract otherwise.

Kentucky.—Thomas v. Beckman, 1 B. Mon. 29, holding that where an agent made himself liable as surety of his principal in a bill of sale of a slave, the agent was entitled to recover from his principal the amount paid by him to the vendee on failure of title to the slave.

New York.— Ulster County Sav. Inst. v. New York Fourth Nat. Bank, 5 Silv. Sup. 144, 8 N. Y. Suppl. 162, where the agent of a New York principal, pursuant to instructions, sold stock on the New Orleans Exchange for delivery the next day, and delivery being impossible because of the corporation's refusal to transfer the stock, he paid the purchaser the damages awarded him by the exchange, and it was held that he was entitled to reimbursement, although he did not give the principal notice so as to afford the latter an opportunity to compel the corporation to transfer the stock.

Vermont.— Dow v. Worthen, 37 Vt. 108, where, in assumpsit for not receiving a lot of poultry purchased by plaintiff as defendant's agent, it was held that the fact that plaintiff became personally responsible for the price of the poultry, the seller being unwilling to trust defendant, did not change the relation of the parties as between themselves.

the agent makes advances, not on the principal's account, but for his own individual benefit.[81]

b. Indemnity.[82] An agent who has incurred an individual liability in the proper conduct of his agency may sue the principal in equity for indemnity, although nothing has been paid in discharge of the liability.[83] It has been held, however, that the principal is not liable at law for the amount in which the agent is liable, where that liability has not been discharged by the agent.[84] At any rate the implied agreement of a principal to indemnify his agent against loss incurred in the performance of his duties does not entitle the agent to recover more than nominal damages for a liability incurred, but from which he has not suffered actual loss.[85]

c. Conditions Affecting Right — (i) Want of Authority. An agent who advances money for account of his principal or incurs expenses or losses in transacting the agency is not entitled to reimbursement and indemnity, where the money was paid out or the loss incurred with respect to a matter as to which the agent acted in excess of his authority, or in violation of his instructions.[86]

Wisconsin.— Saveland v. Green, 36 Wis. 612, holding that where an agent contracts in his own name for the benefit of the principal, who fails to fulfil the contract, the agent may pay the damage at once without waiting to be sued.

See 40 Cent. Dig. tit. "Principal and Agent," § 224 et seq.

81. Woodlief v. Moncure, 17 La. Ann. 241, where an agreement for the sale of a plantation provided that fifty thousand dollars should be paid in cash, to be made up in a certain way, and in arranging this matter, a small balance of account between the parties, required to complete the cash payment, was disputed, and the agent who effected the sale paid it to the vendee to prevent the transaction from failing and the consequent loss of his large commission, and it was held, in an action against the vendor to recover this balance, that the suit could not be maintained, as it was clear that plaintiff did not act in making the payment as negotiorum gestor for defendant, but for his own advantage. And see Talbot v. Montmagny Assur. Co., 12 Quebec Super. Ct. 64. See, however, Bartholomew v. Aumack, 25 Oreg. 78, 34 Pac. 817, holding that under a contract by an agent for the sale of lands, providing that when the owner has received a designated amount in actual cash from the sale of the property, if realized during the existence of the contract, he will convey to the agent all the unsold lots and all the notes wholly or partly unpaid, the agent may recover from the owner an amount advanced to prevent a forfeiture of the contract after the latter has received in actual cash the full sum contracted for within the time agreed upon, where a total failure of the title after full performance of the agreement precludes the agent from selecting any property in repayment of the amount advanced.

purchase of a property, and makes a contract differing from the one authorized, in that it requires a larger cash payment and a larger instalment the first year, such contract is not enforceable against the principal, even though the purchase-money be smaller, and the agent cannot recover from his principal a deposit made by him on the unauthorized contract.

Georgia.— Hardeman v. Ford, 12 Ga. 205, holding that where a factor has made advances to his principal and sells the goods intrusted to him in an unauthorized manner for less than the amount of the advance, he cannot recover the difference.

Illinois.— St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Thomas, 85 Ill. 464.

Indiana.— Godman v. Meixsel, 65 Ind. 32, where it appeared that a sale of corn was made by A for B, the same to be delivered at a certain price per bushel, during a certain month; that about the middle of the month the price of corn had advanced, and B thereupon telegraphed to A to buy enough to fill the balance of the sale; that instead of so doing, A paid the purchaser, as upon a forfeited contract, the difference between the agreed price and the then market price, and before the end of the month the price fell to very nearly that agreed upon; and it was held that this payment by A was unauthorized, and that B was not liable to him therefor.

Louisiana.— Jackson v. Morse, 3 La. 555; Pelletier v. Roumage, 2 La. 528.

Massachusetts.— Keyes v. Westford, 17 Pick. 273.

New York.— Olyphant v. McNair, 41 Barb. 446 [affirmed in 41 N. Y. Suppl. 250 (holding that where the owner of a building informs his agent who has charge of the building that he has contracted with a certain person to make repairs for the ensuing year, and the agent employs another person to make repairs, he is not entitled to the amount thereof as a disbursement).

Pennsylvania.— Shrack v. McKnight, 84 Pa. St. 26, holding that where an agent employed to subscribe for stock in a railroad company for his principal and in his principal's name, subscribed and paid calls in his own name, and afterward procured a certificate and tendered a transfer to the principal, who refused to take and pay for them, the agent could not recover.

Texas.— Ranger v. Harwood, 39 Tex. 139, holding that an agent cannot withdraw goods from a prescribed route of transportation, and retain charges thereon additional to the charges which would properly have been made upon the route prescribed by the contract by which he received the goods for shipment.

Vermont.— Fuller v. Ellis, 39 Vt. 345, 94 Am. Dec. 327.

England.— Johnston v. Usborne, 11 A. & E. 549, 1 Jur. 943, 3 P. & D. 236, 39 E. C. L. 299 (where commission agents were authorized by principals to sell on their account certain oats; and the agents sold the same with a warranty, but without disclosing the names of their principals; and the oats not answering the warranty, the agents were compelled to make a reduction in the price; and it was held that they could not recover the damage they thus sustained from their principals, as they had chosen to sell in their own names, and as there was no privity of contract between them and their principals which would create a guarantee that the oats were of a specific quality); Frixione v. Tagliaferro, 4 Wkly. Rep. 373.

See 40 Cent. Dig. tit. "Principal and Agent," § 224 et seq.

Unauthorized warranty.— Where an agent pays a judgment recovered against him on an unauthorized warranty he cannot recover the same of his principal. Croom v. Swann, 1 Fla. 246; J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. Gardner, 67 S. W. 367, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 63. And see Johnston v. Usborne, 11 A. & E. 549, 1 Jur. 943, 3 P. & D. 236, 29 E. C. L. 299.

Ratification.— The principal is liable for reimbursement if he ratifies the agent's acts. Cornwall v. Wilson, 1 Ves. 509, 27 Eng. Reprint 1173 (where plaintiff, a factor abroad, exceeded the price limited for the purchase of hemp, and defendant, who objected to the contract but afterward reshipped and disposed of some of it on a risk, was ordered to account for the cost price); Frixione v. Tagliaferro, 4 Wkly. Rep. 373.

Missouri.— Royal Remedy, etc., Co. v. Gregory Grocer Co., 90 Mo. App. 53, holding that while a contract for an agency for an indefinite time and not coupled with an interest is revocable at any time, yet if the agent has incurred expense in the matter, the principal cannot appropriate the results without compensation.

New York.— Terwilliger v. Ontario, etc., R. Co., 149 N. Y. 86, 43 N. E. 432 [reversing 73 Hun 335, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 268]; Baker v. Angell, 12 N. Y. St. 406, where it appeared that defendant employed plaintiff to sell his farm on commission, and at once commenced work and expended moneys in an honest endeavor to sell the farm; that by the contract of employment plaintiff had a year in which to procure a purchaser, he alone to bear the risk of failure and to receive compensation only in the event of success; that at the end of a month, and before plaintiff had found a purchaser, defendant revoked his authority to act as agent; and it was held that plain-

(III) Illegality of Transaction. An agent who knowingly engages in an illegal transaction for his principal cannot recover of the latter for advances made on his account or for losses incurred in conducting the agency.[89]

(IV) Fraud and Misconduct — (A) In General. An agent is not as a rule tiff was entitled to recover his reasonable and necessary expenses.

North Carolina.—Fisher v. Southern L. & T. Co., 138 N. C. 90, 50 S. E. 592, holding that one authorized to improve and sell lands and reimburse himself for his expenses out of the proceeds of the sale is entitled, after the termination of his authority by the death of the principal, to be repaid from the proceeds of the property, when sold, expenses incurred by him under the contract.

Pennsylvania.— Jaekel v. Caldwell, 156 Pa. St. 266, 26 Atl. 1063 (holding that where one employed to sell mining land, he to receive all over a certain amount, incurs large expenses in seeking to effect the sale, and is permitted to do so for a period of years, he is entitled to recover his expenses, if his authority is revoked); Blackstone v. Buttermore, 53 Pa. St. 266 (holding that if the agent has expended money upon the business, the principal, on revocation, becomes liable to him on an implied assumpsit).

United States.— U. S. v. Jarvis, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,468, 2 Ware 274, 4 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 298. See, however, Montgomery v. Ætna L. Ins. Co., 97 Fed. 913, 38 C. C. A. 553.

An express promise by the principal to reimburse the agent is illegal and void under such circumstances. Bailey v. Rawlins, 7 L. J. K. B. O. S. 208; Leavitt v. Parks, 7 N. Brunsw. 282.

A ratification of a tort will not enable the agent to recover indemnity from his principal, since there can be no contribution between joint tort-feasors. Leavitt v. Parks, 7 N. Brunsw. 282. And see supra, I, F, 2, a, (III).

Secret intention of principal.— There is no principle of general law upon which a principal can avoid liability to his agent for advances made in good faith on his request, because the contract on which they were made was rendered illegal by the secret intention of the principal not to perform the same in accordance with its terms. Parker v. Moore, 115 Fed. 799, 53 C. C. A. 369 [reversing 111 Fed. 470].

Transactions held not to be illegal so as to preclude reimbursement see Owen v. Baxter, 97 Mich. 539, 56 N. W. 930; Howe v. Buffalo, etc., R. Co., 37 N. Y. 297 [affirming 38 Barb. 124]; Moore v. Remington, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 427.

Where an agent commits a trespass with full notice that it is such, and in consequence he is compelled to pay damages, he is not entitled to look to the principal for reimbursement and indemnity. Young's Estate, 15 Pittsb. Leg. J. N. S. (Pa.) 403. But if the agent acts innocently and without notice of the wrong, the law will imply a promise on the part of the principal to indemnify him. Louisiana.— Fisk v. Offit, 3 Mart. N. S. 553 (holding that if an agent in New Orleans sells his principal's property for a bill on New York in his own favor, with the proceeds of which when discounted he credits the principal in an account current without informing him of the circumstances, he cannot claim for a loss from the dishonor of the bill); Beal v. McKiernan, 6 La. 407 (where an agent to buy sold his own property to the principal without informing the latter of the facts).

New York.— Moore v. Moore, 21 How. Pr. 211, holding that an agent who procured property sold under foreclosure by him to be bought in for him by a friend at an inadequate price was not to be entitled to interest on the sum as an advance. See, however, Monnet v. Merz, 127 N. Y. 151, 27 N. E. 827 (where a principal authorized his agent to employ counsel in a suit brought against the agent, and the agent did so, and afterward compromised the suit without the principal's authority, and upon an accounting, the lower court allowed the agent credit for half the attorney's fees and half the amount paid in settlement of the suit, and it was held that the agent should be allowed credit for the entire amount of the attorney's fees); Hoy v. Reade, 1 Sweeny 626 (holding that where, before an action brought by an agent for expenses, he has wrongfully converted the goods, such conversion does not constitute a defense to the action, but the principal, if he still remains the owner of the property, may offset the value of the property so converted).

Oregon.— Williamson v. North Pac. Lumber Co., 43 Oreg. 337, 73 Pac. 7, where defendant sold lumber to plaintiff, to be shipped to plaintiff's customers in another country, the contract providing that if a dispute arose at the port of discharge as to the quality of the lumber, defendant should appoint an agent on the spot to settle it, and a dispute arose, and defendant appointed plaintiff its agent to settle, and plaintiff appointed other persons to examine the lumber and report what allowance should be made to the buyers, and such persons recommended a certain reduction, and plaintiff settled with the buyers on such basis, and it was held that if plaintiff acted fraudulently in making the settlement defendant would not be liable for the cost thereof.

Vermont.— Fuller v. Ellis, 39 Vt. 345, 94 Am. Dec. 327.

(Ala.) 18 (where A received cotton of B, made an advance, and agreed to ship it to New Orleans or New York, and have it sold for the best price it would bring, A to have the entire control of it, and the proceeds to be applied to refund the advance, and when in New Orleans it would have produced enough to pay the advance, and A did not sell it there, but reshipped it for New York, where it sold for less, and it was held that A, having acted fairly, was not holden for the loss); Poole v. Poindexter, 72 Kan. 654, 83 Pac. 126 (holding that a transaction by which a member of an association furnished funds to a corporation which was conducting experiments under a contract with the association, and accepted stock for the funds so furnished, did not, in the absence of anything inconsistent with actual good faith and fair dealing, preclude the member from recovering from the association for expenses incurred in looking after operations under the contract with the corporation).

Negligence.— If the agent neglects his duty in reference to the matter out of which his loss arises, to the injury of his principal, such neglect will, to the extent of the injury, reduce or discharge the liability of the principal to indemnify the agent. Haskin v. Haskin, 41 Ill. 197. And see Jackson v. Morse, 3 La. 555; Veltum v. Koehler, 85 Minn. 125, 88 N. W. 432 (holding that an agent cannot claim reimbursement where the advances and expenditures made by him were rendered necessary by his own failure to exercise reasonable care and diligence in the conduct of the business of the agency); Frixione v. Tagliaferro, 4 Wkly. Rep. 373. If, however, such neglect does not result in injury to the principal, the rights of the agent will not be affected thereby. Haskin v. Haskin, supra. Compare Armstrong v. Pease, 66 Ga. 70; Gossler v. Lau, 59 N. Y. Super. Ct. 365, 14 N. Y. Suppl. 289; Field v. Banker, 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 467; Gooderham v. Marlatt, 14 U. C. Q. B. 228.

Representing adverse party.—A broker purchased goods on commission at a month's credit, and paid duties on them, and sent them to the place of the purchaser's abode, consigned to his own order. The seller, being fearful of the purchaser's credit, procured the broker to delay the arrival of the goods till the month's credit expired, and to tender them to the buyer on payment of the price, whereupon they were refused. It was held that the broker could recover neither the price nor duties. Hurst v. Holding, 3 Taunt. 32, 12 Rev. Rep. 587. So an agent is not entitled to recover a loss sustained on a shipment of cotton purchased for his principal, where, without the principal's knowledge, he filled the order of purchase with cotton consigned to him by another for sale. Beal v. McKiernan, 6 La. 407. And if the agent of one party secretly becomes the agent of the adverse party, and pays out money for him in transacting the agency, he cannot compel the adverse party to reimburse him. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Morris, 10 Ohio Cir. Ct. 502, 6 Ohio Cir. Dec. 640. However, a general confidential business agent who

(B) Failure to Keep and Render Accounts.[91] It is the duty of an agent to keep and render an account of advances made and expenses incurred in the course of the agency, and his failure to do so may, under some circumstances, bar him from reimbursement.[92]

(V) Failure to Effect Transaction. Ordinarily an agent who is employed to negotiate a particular transaction is not entitled to expenses incurred in unsuccessful efforts to effect the transaction.[93]

d. Enforcement of Right.[94] An agent who has bought goods for the principal with his own funds may, in case the principal refuses to accept them, sell the same for the purpose of reimbursing himself.[95] Although an agent may have a lien for advances on property of the principal in his hands, yet he is not bound to resort to the property in the first instance, but may demand reimbursement immediately.[96]

4. Agent's Lien[97] — a. In General. Where an agent is entitled to compensation, or to reimbursement and indemnity on account of advances, expenses, and losses, and the money or property of the principal with reference to which his services were rendered, or the advances were made, or the expenses or losses incurred, is in his hands, he has a lien thereon which entitles him to retain the property until his claim is satisfied.[98] In the absence of an express or implied pays insurance premiums on the principal's property is entitled to credit therefor from his principal, although he may also have been the agent of the insurance company, provided he informed the company that the property was in his control, and they permitted the policies to stand without attempting to avoid them, as in such a case the policies at the most were merely voidable, and it will not be presumed that the insurance companies would elect to avoid. Rochester v. Levering, 104 Ind. 562, 4 N. E. 203. And in an action to recover money paid by plaintiff at defendant's request to bind a contract for the sale of land to defendant, the fact that plaintiff was to receive commissions from the vendor does not affect plaintiff's right to recover. S. 136, 12 S. Ct. 662, 36 L. ed. 378; Quirk v. Quirk, 155 Fed. 199 (holding that an agent on an accounting for money collected for his principal will not be allowed for disbursements claimed to have been made by him where he failed to keep proper accounts, and the testimony in support of his claim is vague and unsatisfactory); Eddy v. Eddy, 7 Quebec Q. B. 300 [affirmed in (1900) A. C. 299]. And see Motley v. Motley, 42 N. C. 211, holding that an agent is not entitled to charge for payments made for his principal without showing that upon a settlement of the transactions of his agency such an amount was due to him. See, however, Jones v. Hoyt, 25 Conn. 374 (holding that if an agent has conducted fairly in the sale of certain lumber, obtaining the best prices that by reasonable diligence could be obtained, and accounting honestly according to his best means, and has explained to the satisfaction of the jury his neglect to keep exact accounts, and such neglect involved no gross carelessness or dishonesty on his part, he ought to be allowed out of the proceeds of the lumber all the necessary expenses of managing and disposing of the same); Biest v. Versteeg Shoe Co., 97 Mo. App. 137, 70 S. W. 1081 (holding that it is necessary for an agent only to introduce substantial testimony by which the jury can estimate his expenses); Gallup v. Merrill, 40 Vt. 133 (holding that an agent who refuses to render a specific account to his principal when required is not thereby barred from maintaining an action for a balance due from the principal, but such refusal only affects the agent unfavorably as a matter of evidence).

agreement creating a general lien, the lien exists only on the particular property with reference to which the agent's services were rendered, or the advances were the payment of so much of the proceeds of the sale of the land, which he has received for them, as will be necessary to cover possible liabilities on account of suits brought by settlers for improvements made on the land, unless the heirs give satisfactory security against loss resulting from such suits); Hereford v. Leverich, 16 La. Ann. 397; King v. Osborne, 2 Mart. N. S. 247 (holding that one receiving indorsed notes to collect, the proceeds to be applied to his advances, may retain them until indemnified).

Maine.— Newhall v. Dunlap, 14 Me. 180, 31 Am. Dec. 45, holding that where an agent has a lien on property for his security, the general owner cannot maintain replevin against him for it until the lien be discharged.

New York.— Cooper v. Hong Kong, etc., Banking Corp., 107 N. Y. 282, 14 N. E. 277 [reversing 13 Daly 183]; Nagle v. McFeeters, 97 N. Y. 196; Underhill v. Jordan, 72 N. Y. App. Div. 71, 76 N. Suppl. 266, holding that an agent acting in a fiduciary capacity in the management of a quasi-trust fund which, if paid over by him to his principals, will be removed from the jurisdiction of the court so as to prevent him from collecting a claim for services and expenses and disbursements paid out in its management, has an equitable lien on such fund, at least to the extent of his claim for expenses and disbursements.

Pennsylvania.— Cranston v. Philadelphia Ins. Co., 5 Binn. 538 (holding that an agent who effects insurance for his principal and becomes answerable for the premium has a lien on the policy so long as he retains it); Com. v. Evans, 2 Leg. Op. 3 (holding that an agent has a lien on the papers or property of his principal to secure payment of his compensation); Devereux v. Philadelphia Bank, 1 Phila. 477 (holding that a principal cannot countermand the payment of a bill in the possession of his agent, where the agent has a lien for a debt growing out of his agency).

South Carolina.— State Bank v. Levy, 1 McMull. 431, holding that where an agent for a commission negotiates exchanges for a firm, buys bills for them, and to raise the funds for that purpose draws and sells bills on such firm for corresponding amounts, some of which the firm accepts and others are protested, such agent, on the failure of the firm, has a lien on any funds which came to his hands for his principals to secure himself against the outstanding liabilities, although in fact he may not have paid any of the bills.

Tennessee.— Wade v. Roberts, 6 Humphr. 124, holding that where a distributee brought his bill against his agent for property which had come to his hands under an agreement to collect the distributive share, the agent was entitled to a decree to subject the estate in his hands to preëxisting claims and advances made in the execution of his agency.

Texas.— Gresham v. Galveston County, (Civ. App. 1896) 36 S. W. 796, holding that under an order of the commissioners' court appointing defendant agent for the sale of school lands, and providing that he should be paid a commission on the "amount received" by him for the sale of such lands, defendant has a lien for his commission upon notes given for such deferred payments entitling him to the possession of the notes for the purpose of collection.

United States.—Dowell v. Cardwell, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 4,039, 4 Sawy. 217, holding that an agent employed to collect a claim against the United States for a certain per cent of the amount realized has a lien upon the fund for his compensation.

A selling agent has a lien on the property for reimbursement where it is in his possession. In re Pavy's Patent Felted Fabric Co., 1 Ch. D. 631, 45 L. J. Ch. 318, 24 Wkly. Rep. 507. See, however, Blight v. Ewing, 1 Pittsb. (Pa.) 275, holding that where a person agreed to become the agent of a landowner to sell, rent, and dispose of a certain lot of land, upon the terms that said property was to be charged with made, or the expenses or losses incurred.[99] To entitle the agent to a lien the funds or property against which it is asserted must be in the actual or constructive possession of the agent;[1] and he must have acquired that possession lawfully,[2]

its cost, interest, and necessary expenses, such person to contribute his services, etc., and the net profits to be divided between the parties, such agent had no lien on the land for his services.

Subagents.— An agent for an attorney in fact must look to the attorney for compensation; he has no lien on lands which were the subject of his agency. Clay v. Hopkins, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 485. So where goods are delivered by A to B to sell, and B delivers them to a third person to sell, such third person has no lien upon the goods as against the principal. Phelps v. Sinclair, 2 N. H. 554. Thus where A, a merchant, consigned goods to the master of a vessel bound to Havana for sale, and the master upon his arrival at Havana delivered the goods to B, a commission merchant, for sale, the master having no authority to pledge the goods for his own account, B by receiving the goods with knowledge that they belonged to A became substituted as agent or factor in place of the master, and was accountable to A, and could not retain them for any advances made to the master or for a balance of account arising from transactions between him and the master. Buckley v. Packard, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 421.

Capacity as agent.— If in rendering services or making advances a person does not act in the capacity of an agent for the owner of property in his possession, he is not entitled as such to a lien thereon. Jones v. Evans, 62 Mo. 375; Mack v. Schuylkill Trust Co., 33 Pa. Super. Ct. 128 (holding that where a title insurance company, after having performed its duties as a conveyancer and title insurer, as such further assumes the duty specifically intrusted to it of accepting a deed, and delivering the consideration therefor, and placing the deed on record, it cannot retain possession of the deed and refuse to place it on record until its bill as a conveyancer and title insurer has been paid); Merrill v. Rokes, 54 Fed. 450, 4 C. C. A. 433.

An agent has no lien on a judgment for moneys expended in obtaining it in a suit prosecuted for his principal. Martinez v. Perez, 8 Mart. N. S. (La.) 668.

Priorities.— Where a principal indebted to his agent fails, a creditor cannot take funds of the principal out of the agent's hands. The agent's equity as creditor is equal to the creditor's, and he must be allowed to keep possession until his demand is satisfied. Paul v. Rogers, 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 164. An agent acting under a power of attorney which provided for the payment of the costs of the litigation arising in the transaction of the business, being entitled to a compensation for his services, his claim is superior to that of one to whom the principal has assigned the fruits of the litigation. Lane v. Coleman, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 569. Where agents abroad have expended money for their principal, and, upon being doubtful of his circumstances, make bills of lading to their own order indorsed in blank, notwithstanding these bills of lading come to the principal's hands, yet, if the agents' partner in London writes them word that their principal is become bankrupt and desires them to send the bills of lading and an order to the captain to deliver the goods to him, he may retain them for himself and company against the assignees under the commission till paid and reimbursed so much as the partnership is in advance. Snee v. Prescot, 1 Atk. 245, 26 Eng. Reprint 156. An agent with unrestricted management of a general trading business carried on in his name with the right to buy, sell, or exchange, has a lien on all the property accumulated in such business for advances made and expenses incurred, which is superior to any lien placed on the property by the reputed owner thereof. Dewing v. Hutton, 40 W. Va. 521, 21 S. E. 780. A clerk has a general privilege over all the property of his employer which cannot be defeated by attachment. Tiernan v. Murrah, 1 Rob. (La.) 443. However, a verbal understanding between a principal and his agent that the proceeds of lands, when sold by the agent, should be applied to the liquidation of a debt due him from his principal, and for which he was bound as surety, raises no equity in favor of the agent as against creditors of the principal who have sought legal remedies, and acquired liens by attachment of the property. b. Extinguishment. The lien may be lost by waiver, express or implied.[5] Thus if the agent surrenders possession of the property voluntarily and unconditionally, he loses his lien;[6] and he loses it also by a tortious pledge of the property.[7] The lien is not affected by the bankruptcy or insolvency of the principal,[8] nor by his death;[9] and it has been held that the lien continues notwithstanding the agent's claim becomes barred by limitations.[10]

Liability of agent acting under forged power of attorney.— While the liability of an agent acting upon a forged power of attorney which he supposed to be genuine has sometimes been doubted in dicta in cases involving a different state of facts (Kroeger v. Pitcairn, 101 Pa. principal renders himself personally liable to the person with whom he deals,[23] unless it is expressly understood either that the agent shall not be held, and the contractee with knowledge of the facts extends credit to the supposed principal,[24] or that the agent's liability shall be limited to a fund held by him for the purpose of his agency.[25] An exception to the rule of personal liability of an agent for a non-existing principal exists where an agent's authority has been revoked by the death of the principal, and the agent acts in ignorance thereof.[26]

(III) Third Person's Knowledge of Lack of Authority. The rule of personal liability of an agent acting without authority or in excess thereof is based upon the supposition that the want of authority is unknown to the person with whom he deals.[27] If therefore the agent fully discloses to the third person the facts concerning his authority, so that the latter may have the same opportunity of judging of the sufficiency thereof as the agent himself,[28] or if the third person

If the principal has general capacity to enter into contracts, however, the agent is not personally liable where he makes, in his principal's behalf, a contract which the principal in the particular case has no power in law to enter into. Thilmany v. Iowa Paper Bag Co., 108 Iowa 357, 79 N. W. 261, 75 Am. St. Rep. 259. And see infra, III, C, 1, a, (IV).

Infancy of principal as breach of implied warranty of authority see supra, note 16.

23. See cases cited supra, notes 21, 22.

The reason for the rule is sometimes said to be that the parties must have intended that someone should be bound in order that the contract should have validity, and that therefore if the principal is not bound the agent should be. Heath v. Goslin, 80 Mo. 310, 50 Am. Rep. 505; Codding v. Munson, 52 Nebr. 580, 72 N. W. 846, 66 Am. St. Rep. 524; Timken v. Tallmadge, 54 N. J. L. 117, 22 Atl. 996; Wonderly v. Booth, 36 N. J. L. 250; Eichbaum v. Irons, 6 Watts & S. (Pa.) 67, 40 Am. Dec. 540. The rule, however, may be based upon a broader principle, for one who assumes to act as agent impliedly warrants his authority (see supra, III, C, 1, a, (I)), but if there is no principal then the agent cannot have authority, and therefore he should be held liable for a breach of his implied warranty (see Bartholomae v. Kaufman, 16 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 127).

himself has actual or presumptive knowledge of those facts,[29] the agent cannot be held personally liable, even though the principal be not bound. A. 660. See, however, Knickerbocker v. Wilcox, 83 Mich. 200, 47 N. W. 123, 21 Am. St. Rep. 595, which, although apparently contrary to the rule stated in the text was really decided upon the theory that the agent knew that his principal could not authorize such a contract as the agent attempted to make, and that from this fact and from the face of the document itself the agent might as well have intended to bind himself as principal as to act merely as agent.

If the contract is void under the statute of frauds the agent, although not authorized to make it by the alleged principal, is not liable to the third person. Baltzen v. Nicolay, 53 N. Y. 467; Dung v. Parker, 52 N. Y. 494; Bloodgood v. Short, 50 Misc. (N. Y.) 286, 98 N. Y. Suppl. 775; Morrison v. Hazzard, (Tex. Civ. App. 1905) 88 S. Rep. 695. See Simmons v. More, 100 N. Y. 140, 2 N. E. 640.

The reason for the rule has been said to be that without it "the anomaly would exist of giving a right of action against an assumed agent for an unauthorized representation of his power to make the contract, when a breach of the contract itself, if it had been authorized, would have furnished no ground of action." Thilmany v. Iowa Paper-Bag Co., authority operates as an antecedent authorization, and the third person having received all the security for which he originally contracted, the agent is relieved from personal liability for breach of his warranty of authority.[32]

(VI) DAMAGES. In an action by the third person against one who assumed without authority to enter into a contract as agent for another, or against an agent for acting in excess of his authority, the measure of damages is the loss which has accrued to the third person as a natural and probable consequence of the want of authority, and is not limited by the contract but embraces all injuries resulting from the wrongful assumption.[33] Thus the agent is liable for the costs incurred by the third person in an unsuccessful action against the alleged principal to enforce the unauthorized contract.[34]

Where agent is held liable on the contract instead of on the theory of breach of an implied warranty of authority (see infra, IV. A, 3), it is held that his authorization must have existed at the time of making the contract, and that subsequent ratification, although it may bind the principal (see supra, I, F, 4, d), will not relieve the agent from several liability. this be contrary to his actual intention, if he has in fact bound himself according to the terms of the contract.[37]

(c) Pledges of Individual Credit by Agent. An agent may, although apparently acting as such, exclusively pledge his own credit or superadd it to that of the principal, in which event he will of course be personally liable to the extent to which credit has been extended to him.[38] And although a person in making a contract describes himself as an agent or affixes to his signature words descriptive of agency, these terms may be treated as mere descriptio personæ, and if the alleged agent has otherwise assumed a personal obligation or pledged his own credit he may still be held upon the contract.[39]

(d) Failure to Bind Principal. An agent who, while entering into an authorized contract, fails to bind his principal does not necessarily bind himself, and where there are no apt words used to bind either the principal or the agent the contract is absolutely void and thus imposes obligations on neither.[40]

A. 977, holding that where an agent fails to bind his principal, whereby another is misled and parts with some thing of value or acquires legal rights, the agent, although not liable on the contract as made, may be held liable in a special action on the case under the common-law procedure, or, under the code, in an action upon an implied assumpsit,

(E) Liability of Agent of Foreign Principal. According to a line of earlier decisions an agent acting for a disclosed foreign principal was presumed, in the absence of an express or implied agreement to the contrary, to have pledged his own credit and to have intended to bind himself personally.[41] By the great weight of more recent authority, however, this rule is no longer in force, and the liability of the agent of a foreign principal is the same as that of any other agent, and governed by the same principles.[42]

(II) Where Principal Is Undisclosed. An agent who enters into a contract in his own name without disclosing the identity of his principal renders himself personally liable even though the third person knows that he is acting as agent, unless it affirmatively appears that it was the mutual intention of the parties to the contract that the agent should not be bound.[43] With stronger

See 40 Cent. Dig. tit. "Principal and Agent," § 485.

An agent who expressly contracts not to be liable cannot of course be held, even though acting for a foreign principal. Milvain v. Perez, 3 E. & E. 495, 7 Jur. N. S. 336, 30 L. J. Q. B. 90, 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 736, 9 Wkly. Rep. 269, 107 E. C. L. 495.

Reasons for rule.— This rule seems to be based upon "the consideration, that a merchant abroad and his ability to discharge his obligations may be unknown to those, who assume pecuniary responsibility or make advances or perform services on his account; . . . and that the party dealing with the agent intends to trust one, who is known to him and resides in the same country and subject to the same laws, as himself, rather than trust to one, who if known cannot from his residence in a foreign country, be amenable to those laws, and whose ability may be affected by local institutions and local exemptions, which may put at hazard both his rights and his remedies." McKenzie v. Nevius, 22 Me. 138, 143, 38 Am. Dec. 291; Story Agency, § 290.

This presumption might be rebutted by proof that credit was given to both principal and agent or to the agent alone (Vawter v. Baker, 23 Ind. 63; Newcastle Mfg. Co. v. Red River R. Co., 1 Rob. (La.) 145, 36 Am. Dec. 686), or by proof that the usage of trade did not embrace the case in question (Vawter v. Baker, supra).

Limitations to rule.— It has been held that the rule of personal liability of an agent for a disclosed foreign principal did not extend to a contract, made in one of the United States by one resident there, for personal services to be rendered in a foreign country (Rogers v. March, 33 Me. 106), nor to a contract made by parties resident in different states of the United States, which are held to be not foreign in the sense of the term necessary to make the rule operative (Vawter v. Baker, 23 Ind. 63; Taintor v. Prendergast, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 72, 38 Am. Dec. 618; Kirkpatrick v. Stainer, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 244; Barham v. Bell, 112 N. C. 131, 16 S. E. 903); and in Thomson v. Davenport, 9 B. & C. 78, 4 M. & R. 110, 17 E. C. L. 45, it was strongly intimated that, in the absence of a trade usage to the contrary, the rule would not be extended to contracts between residents of Scotland and England.

The reason for the rule has been said to be that "in such case it may be supposed but also the identity of his principal,[45] although if the other party has actual knowledge of the principal's identity it will have the same effect to relieve the agent as a disclosure by the latter.[46] The disclosure of the principal's identity need not be made at the inception of the transaction; it is sufficient if it is made that [the other contracting party] relies upon the responsibility of the person with whom he deals for the performance of the contract, and that he is not required to look elsewhere to obtain it. When there is, in fact, a principal the agent may ordinarily relieve himself from personal liability, upon a contract made in his behalf, by disclosing his name at the time of making it. Upon such disclosure, however, the party proceeding to deal with the agent may or may not, as he pleases, enter into contract upon the responsibility of the named principal, but to permit an agent to turn over to his customer an undisclosed and, to the latter, unknown principal, might have the effect to deny to the customer the benefit of any available or responsible means of remedy or relief founded upon the contract. The rule is no less salutary than reasonable." Argersinger v. MacNaughton, 114 N. Y. 535, 539, 21 N. E. 1022, 11 Am. St. Rep. 687.

before liability is incurred on either side;[47] but a disclosure made after liability is incurred comes too late to relieve the agent from liability.[48]

2. In Tort — a. In General. An agent is liable to third persons for his own torts in like manner as other persons, his liability being neither increased nor decreased by the fact of his agency.[49] A distinction exists, however, between the liability of an agent to third persons for non-feasance, or the breach of a duty owed only to his principal,[50] and his liability for misfeasance or malfeasance, or the breach of a duty owed to third persons.[51]

b. Non-Feasance. An agent is not responsible to a third person for injury resulting from non-feasance, meaning by that term the omission of the agent to perform a duty owed solely to his principal by reason of his agency.[52]

c. Misfeasance and Malfeasance. While an agent is not liable to third persons for injury resulting from his omission to perform a duty owed to the principal alone,[53] he is liable to them for injury resulting from his misfeasance or malfeasance, meaning by those terms the breach of a duty owed to third persons generally, independent of the particular duties imposed by his agency.[54] Accordingly an agent

Fed. 87, in which the court adds that "it is very doubtful if an agent per se is liable to third persons on any account."

England.— See Lane v. Cotton, 12 Mod. 472, 488, 4 Taunt. 628, 88 Eng. Reprint 1458, per Holt, C. J., dissenting, a case in which however, the liability of the agent was neither involved nor passed upon by the majority.

See 40 Cent. Dig. tit. "Principal and Agent," §§ 606–608.

With stronger reason an agent is not liable for neglect to perform an act where he owes performance neither to third persons nor to his principal. Kuhnert v. Angell, 10 N. D. 59, 84 N. W. 579, 88 Am. St. Rep. 675, holding that where an agent's authority was limited to leasing and collecting rent for certain premises of his principal, but did not extend to making improvements, such authority was not broad enough to render him liable for injuries sustained by reason of the unsafe condition of the premises. And see Crandall v. Loomis, 56 Vt. 664.

Non-feasance "is the omission of an act which a person ought to do." Bell v. Josselyn, 3 Gray (Mass.) 309, 63 Am. Dec. 741 [cited in Southern R. Co. v. Rowe, 2 Ga. App. 557, 59 S. E. 462]. It "is the total omission or failure of the agent to enter upon the performance of some distinct duty or undertaking which he has agreed with his principal to do" (Southern R. Co. v. Grizzle, 124 Ga. 735, 737, 53 S. E. 244, 110 Am. St. Rep. 191), or "the failure to do that which one, by reason of his undertaking, and not because imposed upon him as a legal duty, agrees to do for another; that which is imposed upon him merely by virtue of his relation to his principal" (Dean v. Brock, 11 Ind. App. 507, 38 N. E. 829). Misfeasance distinguished see infra, note 54.

See 40 Cent. Dig. tit. "Principal and Agent," § 606 et seq.; and cases cited infra, this note et seq.

Misfeasance "is the improper doing of an act which a person might lawfully do" (Bell v. Josselyn, 3 Gray (Mass.) 309, 311, 63 Am. Dec. 741 [cited in Southern R. Co. v. Rowe, 2 Ga. App. 557, 59 S. E. 462]), or "the performance of an act, which might lawfully be done, in an improper manner, by which another person receives an injury" (Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Foulks, 191 Ill. 57, 69, 60 N. E. 890]); "or, in other words, it is the performing [by the agent] of his duty to his principal in such a manner as to infringe upon the rights and privileges of third persons" (Southern R. Co. v. Grizzle, 124 Ga. 735, 737, 53 S. E. 244, 110 Am. St. Rep. 191). And see Dean v. Brock, 11 Ind. App. 507, 38 N. E. 829. It consists in omitting to do a proper act as it should be done, and may thus include wrongs of omission as well as commission. Southern R. Co. v. Grizzle, supra; Southern R. Co. v. Rowe, supra; Dean v. Brock, supra; Burns v. Pethcal, 75 Hun (N. Y.) 437, 443, 27 N. Y. Rep. 437 (where the court says: "It is often said in the books, that an agent is responsible to third persons for misfeasance only, and not for nonfeasance. And it is doubtless true that if an agent never does anything towards carrying out his contract with his principal, but wholly omits and neglects to do so, the principal is the only person who can maintain any action against him for the nonfeasance. But if the agent once actually undertakes and enters upon the execution of a particular work, it is his duty to use reasonable care in the manner of executing it, so as not to cause any injury to third persons which may be the natural consequence of his acts; and he cannot, by abandoning its execution midway and leaving things in a dangerous condition, exempt himself from liability to any person who suffers injury by reason of his having so left them without proper safeguards. This is not nonfeasance, or doing nothing; but it is misfeasance, doing improperly"); Ellis v. McNaughton, 76 Mich. 237, 242, 42 N. W. 1113, 15 Am. St. Rep. 308 (where it is said: "Misfeasance may involve to some extent the idea of not doing; as where an agent, while engaged in the performance of his undertaking, does not do something which it was his duty to do under the circumstances; as, for instance, when he does not exercise that care which a due regard for the rights of others would require. Nuisance.— It has been held, although the case is of doutbful authority, that an agent in charge of a plantation is not liable to an adjoining owner for damage resulting from the agent's malicious neglect and refusal to keep open a drain which it was his duty to keep open, he being liable only to his principal. Feltus v. Swan, 62 Miss. 415. However this may be, an agent merely operating a mill for his owner's benefit is not liable for damages caused by the too great weight of the dam, a permanent structure, whereby the water is set back to another's injury, the agent having no authority to change or remove the dam, which existed prior to the creation of his agency. Agent acting innocently and by direction of principal.— It is sometimes held that an agent who, acting solely for his principal and by his direction, and without knowing of any wrong, or without being guilty of gross negligence in not knowing of it, assists his principal in acts with respect to the property of another which amount to conversion on the part of the principal, is not thereby rendered liable for the conversion. with a third person, naming his principal, the contract is made with the principal and not with the agent, and no cause of action for its breach subsists in favor of the agent against the other party thereto.[65] But even where the principal is known, a contract may be made by an agent with a third person in such terms that he, the agent, is personally liable for the fulfilment of it, and he may therefore enforce the same;[66] and the authorities are practically uniform that where the nominal promisee is an agent, and he has a beneficial interest in the performance of the contract or a special property in the subject-matter of the agreement, the legal interest and right of action is in him.[67]

b. Where Principal Is Undisclosed. agent who, in selling property of his principal, binds himself personally, acquires no greater rights against the purchaser than if he contracted for the sale of his own property.[71]

c. Money Paid Under Mistake of Fact or on Illegal Contract. The general rule is that where an agent pays money to a third person for his principal under a mistake of fact, a cause of action subsists in his favor for its recovery.[72] Likewise, where money is paid by an agent on behalf of his principal on an illegal contract, the illegality of which was unknown to the agent at the time, a cause of action subsists in his favor for the recovery of such money.[73] Where, however, such mistake occurs through the fault or negligence of the agent alone, and no fault or fraud can be imputed to the third person, the agent has no cause of action by reason thereof.[74]

d. Defenses — (i) In General. In an action by an agent for an undisclosed principal on a contract made by the agent in his own name, any defense good against the principal is available against the agent.[75]

(ii) Counter-Claim Against Principal. In an action on a contract by an agent, defendant cannot set off a claim for unliquidated damages which he has against a third person on another transaction, although such person happens to be plaintiff's principal.[76]

2. In Tort — a. In General. The general rule is that an action will lie in favor of an agent against a third person for any injury or trespass committed by such third person against the agent personally while acting in the course of his employment.[77]

b. For Procuring Agent's Discharge. An employee may maintain an action against a third person who maliciously procures his employer to discharge him from employment under a legal contract, whether the term of service is for a fixed period or not, and although his employer has the right to discharge him at any time.[78] However, where a third person commits an act which is legal in itself, and violates no right of the agent, the fact that the act is done with malice or other bad motive toward the agent, and thereby causes him to lose his employment, does not give the latter a right of action against the former.[79]

c. For Injury to Principal's Property. Although a mere servant has not such a special property as will enable him to maintain an action for the recovery of the principal's property taken from his possession,[80] yet a bailee or trustee, or any other person who is responsible to his principal for the property, may maintain an action against a third person who disturbs his possession or injures the property, since he has a special property or interest therein.[81]

E. Liability of Principal to Third Person — 1. On Contract — a. See 40 Cent. Dig. tit. "Principal and Agent," §§ 458–463.

The reason for the rule is expressed in the familiar maxim, qui facit per alium facit per se. The agent being the alter ego of the principal for the purpose of the agency, his act or contract is in effect that of the principal, who is bound thereby exactly as if he in fact executed it himself. See cases cited supra, this note.

That one appointing an agent lacked authority to appoint does not relieve him from liability for the agent's acts and contracts. Forsyth v. Lash, 89 N. C. 159.

Delay in notifying the principal of the agent's default in payment for goods purchased does not relieve the principal from liability therefor, although the principal has in the meantime settled with the agent. Strapp v. Spurlin, 32 Ind. 442.

Election to hold agent.— Where a borrower who has sustained loss through the embezzlement of funds paid by the lender to the lender's agent attaches the property of the agent, alleging that the money embezzled was received for plaintiff's use and benefit, he waives the right to recover of the lender. McLean v. Ficke, 94 Iowa 283, 62 N. W. 753.

Cancellation of contract made by agent.— The agent cannot control the principal; and hence the principal may cancel a contract made in his behalf by the agent, the other party not objecting, and enter into a new contract which will supersede the contract made by the agent. Intention to benefit principal.— The fact of necessity arising from sudden or unexpected emergencies, and if the agent acts in good faith, although in excess of his authority, the principal may be bound.[84]

(III) Illegal Contract. A principal is not bound by an illegal executory contract made in his behalf by his agent,[85] especially where the agent had no authority to make it.[86]

(IV) Where Credit Is Given Exclusively to Agent. A person who, upon entering into contractual relations with an agent, has full knowledge of the principal, but extends credit to the agent exclusively, cannot thereafter resort to the principal, and the latter is not bound, although the agent acted in the course of his employment and for the principal's benefit.[87] that an agent in acting in excess of his authority intends to benefit the principal does not alter the rule stated in the text. Ure v. Currell, 4 Mart. N. S. (La.) 502; Keith v. Purvis, 4 Desauss. Eq. (S. C.) 114.

And see supra, II, A, 6, h, (v), (c).

This exceptions must, however, be narrowly confined, and unless the unauthorized conduct of the agent is clearly necessary and limited to the exigencies of the case the principal will not be bound. Foster v. Smith, 2 Coldw. (Tenn.) 474, 88 Am. Dec. 604, where an agent to buy wheat for and ship it to his principal, but not authorized to sell, bought wheat, and the vessel on which he shipped it sank, and the agent sold the wheat, and it was held that, although the exigencies might have warranted the agent engaging help to take the wheat out of the water and preserve it, they did not warrant a sale.

Where an agent gives his own note to a third person who has full knowledge of the principal, its acceptance generally constitutes an election to extend credit exclusively to the agent, and relieves the principal from liability. (N. Constructive notice of principal by third person.— The rule which prevents a seller who has given credit to an agent from afterward resorting to the principal for payment does not apply to a case in which the seller, at the time of sale, merely has the means of knowing the principal, but is confined to cases in which he has actual knowledge. Transactions admitting of double agency.— An agent for the owner in the construction of a building may act as agent for an insurance company in effecting insurance on the building (British America Assoc. Co. v. Cooper, 6 Colo. App. 25, 40 Pac. 147), and one employed as a mere watchman or guard of certain property is not by such employment incapacitated to issue a valid policy on the property in behalf of an insurance company of which he is the agent (Northrup v. Germania F. Ins. Co., 48 Wis. 420, 4 N. W. 350, 33 Am. Rep. 815); and where a school-board by a vote authorizes its president to enter into a contract of insurance through an insurance agent who is also a member of the board, the policy is binding on the company, as the agent's interest as a school director in the property insured is nominal and no greater than that of any resident of the school-district (German Ins. Co. v. Independent School Dist., 80 Fed. 366, 25 C. C. A. 492). So a payee of a note secured by a mortgage may, after the transfer of the note and mortgage, act as agent of the maker to renew the note and mortgage, even though the renewal may result in the payee's release as an indorser or guarantor, since under Cal. Civ. Code, § 3116, the maker is bound to pay the debt, and the payee is liable only to a subsequent holder. Moore v. Gould, 151 Cal. 723, 91 Pac. 616.

b. Undisclosed Principal — (i) Simple Contract. As has been seen in another connection, an agent who enters into contractual relations on behalf of an undisclosed principal may be held liable by the person with whom he deals, as though he himself were in fact the principal.[95] The liability of the agent is not, however, exclusive, for, although the third person extended credit to the agent in ignorance of the fact that the latter was acting in a representative capacity, he may elect to hold the undisclosed principal when discovered, it being a firmly established rule that an undisclosed principal is bound by executory simple contracts made by the agent, and acts done by the agent in relation thereto, within the scope of his authority and in the course of his employment.[96] The converse estoppel[97] or ratification,[98] an undisclosed principal is not liable on the contracts of one assuming without authority to act for him,[99] or on contracts made by his agent in excess of his authority or not in the course of his employment.[1] The rule of liability of an undisclosed principal applies as well to a simple contract in writing as to an oral contract,[2] and although the written contract is such that it is required to be in writing by the statute of frauds.[3]

(II) CONTRACTS UNDER SEAL. The general rule is that an undisclosed principal cannot be held liable upon a contract under seal executed by an agent in his own name. Even though the third person had previously refused to enter into contractual relations with the principal or to extend him credit, yet he may hold the principal liable on a contract made in his behalf by an agent who does not disclose him. Kayton v. Barnett, 116 N. Y. 625, 23 N. E. 24 [reversing 54 N. Y. Super. Ct. 78].

A foreign principal may be sued upon a contract made by his resident agent, although the name of the principal was not disclosed by the agent at the time of making the contract. Liability on executed contracts.— If the agent of an undisclosed principal buys property and executes notes therefor in his own name, and the vendor accepts the notes in payment of the price and conveys the property to the agent, the contract of sale is fully executed, and the principal is not liable thereon for the price upon the agent's failure to pay the notes so given by him. Ranger v. Thalmann, 84 N. Y. App. Div. 341, 82 N. Y. Suppl. 846 [affirmed in 178 N. Y. 574, 70 N. E. 1108]. Exceptions and qualifications.— The rule absolving an undisclosed principal from liability on negotiable instruments does not ap-principal has obtained the benefits of the transaction in which the note was given by the agent, which in equity he ought not to retain, the third person may reject the note and recover from the principal on the common counts or on the original consideration for the contract.[7]

(IV) Election to Hold Agent or Principal[8]— (A) In General. While a person who has dealt with the agent of an undisclosed principal may elect to hold either the agent[9] or, upon discovery, the principal,[10] he cannot hold both, and if with full knowledge of the facts material to his rights he elects to hold the agent he thereby discharges the liability of the principal, and conversely.[11]

ply where clerks in banking houses receive moneys or securities over the bank counter and issue drafts, bills, or negotiable certificates of deposit therefor; the banking house is liable, although such instrument be signed by the clerk without disclosing the name of the bank. Webster v. Wray, 19 Nebr. 558, 27 N. W. 644, 56 Am. Rep. 754; Rochester Bank v. Monteath, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 402, 43 Am. Dec. 681. See, generally, BANKS AND BANKING, 5 Cyc. 419. Another qualification is held to arise where the principal transacts business in the agent's name as a business name; the principal is liable on negotiable instruments executed by the agent in that name, whether or not he disclosed his agency. Chandler v. Coe, 54 N. H. 561. A third exception seems to exist in some jurisdictions in regard to negotiable instruments executed in her own name by a wife for her husband; it has been held that the husband will be bound if he authorized the act of the wife. L. 583. See Leeds v. Vail, 15 Pa. St. 185. And see, generally, HUSBAND AND WIFE, 21 Cyc. 1119.

If, however, there be an ambiguity upon the face of the instrument as to whom it was intended to bind, parol evidence is admissible to explain the ambiguity, and if such is found to have been the intention of the parties, the principal may be held. New York.— Kayton v. Barnett, 116 N. Y. 625, 23 N. E. 24; Allen v. Coits, 6 Hill 318 (allowing recovery as for money paid to principal's use); Pentz v. Stanton, 10 Wend. 271, 25 Am. Dec. 558 (holding that, although an agent's note for goods sold does not bind the principal, yet if the goods were actually used for the latter's benefit, and the credit was not given exclusively to the agent, the principal will be liable in an action for goods sold).

Ohio.— Harper v. Tiffin Nat. Bank, 54 Ohio St. 425, 432, 44 N. Time of election.— The third person must make an election within a reasonable time after discovery of the undisclosed principal; otherwise his right to hold the latter may be lost. New Castle Mfg. See 40 Cent. Dig. tit. "Principal and Agent," § 499.

Accepting the note of the agent of an undisclosed principal after discovery of the principal is generally held to constitute an election to hold the agent and to relieve the principal from liability. Paige v. Stone, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 160, 43 Am. Dec. 420; French v. Price, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 13; Henry Ames Paeking, etc., Co. v. Tucker, 8 Mo. App. 95; Coleman v. Elmira First Nat. Bank, 53 N. Y. 388. But taking the agent's note without knowledge of the principal's existence or identity does not eonstitute an election. Merrill v. Kenyon, 48 Conn. 314, 40 Am. Rep. 174.

Negotiating with the agent after discovery of the agency does not eonstitute an election by the third person to hold him rather than his principal. Sanger v. Warren, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 40 S. W. 840.

Commencing an action against the agent of an undisclosed principal subsequent to discovery of the facts, although evidence of an election, is generally held not to be conclusive evidence thereof, and does not of itself operate to discharge the principal. Ferry v. Moore, 18 Ill. App. 135; Hoffman v. Anderson, 112 Ky. 893, 67 S. W. 49, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 44; Raymond v. Proprietors Crown, etc., Mills, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 319; Curtis v. Williamson, L. R. 10 Q. B. 57, 44 L. J. Q. B. 27, 31 L. T. Rep. N. S. 678, 23 Wkly. Rep. 236. It is sometimes held, however, that eommencing an action under these eircumstances will constitute an election. Greenberg v. Palmieri, 71 N. J. L. 83, 58 Atl. 297; Barrell v. Newby, 127 Fed. 656, 62 C. C. A. 382, holding that where plaintiffs, having made a contract with one known to be acting as agent for an undisclosed principal, after knowledge of the identity of the principal brought two actions against the agent on the contract, in each of which they proeured attachments and garnished persons who owed money to the agent, this constituted an election to hold the agent which precluded them from subsequently maintaining an action against the principal.

Filing a claim in bankruptcy against the estate of the insolvent agent of an undisclosed principal is not a conclusive election of the creditor to hold the agent. Curtis v. Williamson, L. R. 10 Q. tion binding upon the third person he must at the time of electing have full knowledge of all facts material to his rights and to the liability of the several parties,[13] including not only the fact of agency but the name of the principal.[14]

(v) Effect of Changed State of Accounts Between Principal and Agent. An undisclosed principal may be relieved from liability by reason of a changed state of accounts between him and the agent, the rule being formerly laid down in England and now very generally followed in the United States that where the principal, acting in good faith, has settled with the agent so that he would be subjected to loss were he compelled to pay the third person, he is relieved of liability to the latter.[15] This doctrine is now held in England and in a few cases

An unsatisfied judgment against the agent in favor of the third person has been held to be conclusive evidence of an election to hold the agent and to discharge the principal. in the United States to be too broad, and in these jurisdictions the better rule is stated to be that the principal is discharged only where he has been induced to settle with the agent by conduct on the part of the third person leading him to believe that such person has settled with the agent or has elected to hold the latter.[16] In any event the principal is relieved from liability where he has been induced by the conduct of the third person to settle with the agent.[17]

Origin, development, and qualification of the rule.— The leading English case in which the rule was first laid down and which has been almost universally followed in the United States was Thomson v. Davenport, 9 B. & C. 78, 4 M. & R. 110, 17 E. C. L. 45, in which the court said by way of dictum, that the liability of an undisclosed principal was subject to this qualification, that the state of the account between the principal and the agent is not altered to the prejudice of the principal. A later English case, Heald v. Kenworthy, 3 C. L. R. 612, 10 Exch. 739, 1 Jur. N. S. 70, 24 L. J. Exch. 76, 3 Wkly. Rep. 176, declared that this dictum was too broad, and that the principal was relieved only when he had been induced to settle with the agent by acts of the third person. A still later case, Armstrong v. Stokes, L. R. 7 Q. B. 598, 41 L. J. Q. B. 253, 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 872, 21 Wkly. Rep. 52, attempted to establish a distinction between cases in which the agency was undisclosed and those in which the agency was disclosed, but the identity of the principal was undisclosed, holding the rule in Thompson v. Davenport, supra, applicable to the former state of facts, and the rule of Heald v. Kenworthy, supra, applicable to the latter state of facts. This distinction, however, is characterized by Lord Bramwell in Irvine v. Watson, 5 Q. B. D. 414, 417, 19 L. J. Q. B. 531, 42 L. T. Rep. N. S. 810, as "very remarkable" and "difficult to understand," and he held further that the better rule is that of Heald v. Kenworthy, supra, which is applicable alike to cases of undisclosed ageucy and undisclosed identity of principal. And this is now the well-settled law in England.

torts of his agent, even though committed in the course of his employment.[32] The weight of recent authority, however, disregards the intent of the agent in committing the tort, and holds that the principal is as liable for torts prompted by malice as for other torts, if they are committed in the course of the agent's employment.[33]

f. Torts by Agent For Both Parties. Neither party is liable to the other for the tortious acts of an agent acting for both parties with their consent.[34]

g. Torts of Subagent. The liability of the principal for the torts of a subagent depends upon the question whether the primary agent was authorized expressly or impliedly to appoint the subagent.[35] If the primary agent was authorized to appoint a subagent the principal is liable for the torts of the latter in like manner as for the torts of an agent appointed directly by the principal;[36] but he is not as a rule liable for the torts of a subagent appointed without authority.[37]

3. For Declarations, Statements, and Admissions of Agent. The declarations, statements, and admissions of an agent made while acting in the course of his employment and within the scope of his authority are binding on the principal.[38]

4. Notice to Agent as Affecting Principal — a. General Rule. The duty of an agent to inform his principal of all material facts[39] is a duty which the law conclusively presumes that the agent has performed, and a principal is therefore affected with knowledge of all material facts of which the agent receives notice or acquires knowledge while acting in the course of his employment and within the scope of his authority, although the agent does not in fact inform his principal thereof.[40] Conversely a principal is not affected with knowledge which the agent

In New Jersey a broader rule seems to be followed, and it has been held in that state that the knowledge of the agent is chargeable upon the principal whenever the principal if acting for himself, or if a corporation when acting through some agent, would have acquired the knowledge or have been put upon such inquiry as was equivalent to notice. Vulcan Detinning Co. v. American Can Co., (1907) 67 Atl. 339, 12 L. R. A. N. S. 102; Boice v. Conover, (1906) 65 Atl. 191; Sooy v. State, 41 N. J. L. 394. See Law v. Stokes, 32 N. J. Eq. 48, 26 Atl. 29, 35 Am. St. Rep. 788, holding that the knowledge must be of facts pertinent to the subject of the agent's employment, the rule stated in the text.

A legal imputation of actual notice cannot be based upon this rule. Reisan v. Mott, 42 Minn. 49, 43 N. W. 691, 18 Am. St. Rep. 489.

Effect of constructive notice to agent.— It has been held that constructive notice to an agent cannot operate as constructive notice to the principal, and that the notice to an agent to be notice to his principal must be actual notice. Wheatland v. Pryor, 133 N. Y. 97, 30 N. E. 652. But see Furry v. Ferguson, 105 Iowa 231, 74 N. W. 903; Vulcan Detinning Co. v. American Can Co., (N. J. 1907) 67 Atl. 339, 12 L. R. A. N. W. 472, holding that a principal is chargeable with notice of all facts which would be disclosed by an inquiry following the discovery of other facts by the agent while acting within the scope of his employment.

Notice to joint agent.— Notice to one of two or more joint agents in the course of his employment and within the scope of his authority is notice to the principal (Wittenbrock v. Parker, 102 Cal. 93, 36 Pac. 374, 41 Am. St. Rep. 172, 24 L. R. A. 197; National Security Bank v. Cushman, 121 Mass. 490; U. S. Bank v. Davis, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 451); but notice to one agent in a transaction which he does not conduct to a termination, and which is completed by another agent, does not affect the principal (Irvine v. Grady, 85 Tex. 120, 19 S. W. 1028; Blackburn v. Vigors, 12 App. Cas. 531, 6 Aspin. 216, 57 L. J. Q. B. 114, 57 L. T. Rep. N. S. 730, 36 Wkly. Rep. 449). And see Allen v. Rostain, 11 Serg. & R. b. Character of Notice as Regards Materiality and Source. Notice to an agent in order to be notice to the principal must relate to facts so material to the purpose of the agency as to make it the agent's duty to communicate the notice to his principal.[43] Furthermore the information must come from a source so apparently reliable that a man of ordinary prudence would be influenced thereby; mere rumor or idle talk will not constitute notice.[44]

c. Time of Receiving Notice — (1) DURING AGENCY. While the general rule is that notice received by an agent during his agency is notice to the principal,[45] its operation is sometimes held to be narrowed by the condition that not only must notice be received during the existence of the agency, but that notice to bind the principal must be received by the agent while engaged in the particular transaction to which the information relates, and that notice to the agent in a prior disconnected transaction, although for the same principal, will not charge the latter.[46] If, however, the agency is continuous as distinguished from an fected by the former's knowledge relating to a transaction between the principal and a third person in which the agent was acting for the third person.

Notice to agent in prior transaction for same principal.— Since it is now generally agency involving distinct transactions separated by considerable periods of time, knowledge acquired by the agent at one period of the agency will charge the principal in a subsequent transaction by the same agent in which the knowledge is material.[47] Knowledge acquired by an agent in a prior transaction will not affect the principal in a subsequent transaction in which the agent does not represent him.[48]

(II) Prior to Agency. On the question whether a principal is chargeable with knowledge acquired by an agent prior to the existence of his agency the authorities differ widely, some holding that in order to charge the principal the knowledge must be acquired by the agent during the agency, and that knowledge acquired prior thereto will not affect the principal.[49] The more logical rule, however, and that which is supported by the great weight of recent authority, is that knowledge of an agent acquired prior to the existence of the agency will be chargeable to the principal if it be clearly shown that the agent, while acting for the principal in a transaction to which the information is material, has the information held that knowledge acquired by an agent in a prior transaction for a different principal may charge a subsequent principal, if present in the agent's mind while he is acting for the latter (see infra III, E, 4, c, (II)), it would seem to follow that under the same conditions knowledge acquired by an agent in a prior transaction for the same principal should be imputed to the latter in a subsequent, although disconnected, transaction for him by the agent, to which that knowledge was pertinent. The basis of the rule is the fiction of the legal identity of the principal and the agent. As was said in Houseman v. Girard Mut. Bldg., etc., Assoc., 81 Pa. St. 256, 262, "the true reason of the limitation is a technical one, that it is only during the agency that the agent represents, and stands in the shoes of his principal. Notice to him is then notice to his principal. Notice to him twenty-four hours before the relation commenced is no more notice than twenty-four hours after it had ceased would be." Another reason for the rule is said to be that no man can be supposed always to carry in his mind the recollection of former occurrences. Snyder v. Partridge, 138 Ill. 173, 29 N. E. 851, 32 Am. The basis of this rule is the duty of the agent to inform his principal of any knowledge which he may have material to the transaction in which he represents the latter (see supra, III, A, 1, c), the authorities

cumstances as to make it the legal duty of the agent not to divulge it to the principal.[51]

(III) After Termination of Agency. A principal is never charged with notice received by an agent after the termination of his agency.[52]

d. Where Presumption Is That Agent Will Not Inform His Principal — (I) General Rule. The rule that notice to an agent is notice to the principal, being based upon the presumption that the agent will transmit his knowledge to his principal the rule fails when the circumstances are such as to raise a clear presumption that the agent will not perform this duty,[53] and accordingly where the agent is engaged in a transaction in which he is interested adversely to his principal or is engaged in a scheme to defraud the latter, the principal will not be charged with knowledge of the agent acquired therein.[54] which support this rule holding that it is the duty of the agent to inform his principal of all facts of which he has actual knowledge, whether acquired during or prior to the agency (Harrington v. U. S., 11 Wall. (U. S.) 356, 20 L. ed. 167. And see cases cited supra, this note).

with greater force where the third person instructs the agent or enters into an agreement with him not to communicate his knowledge to the principal.[57]

e. Notice to Subagent. Whether a principal is chargeable with notice to or knowledge of a subagent depends upon the authority of the primary agent to appoint the subagent. Where the primary agent has such authority under contract or by custom the principal will be charged with the subagent's knowledge;[58] if he has not such authority the principal will not be charged.[59]

f. Notice to Agent For Both Parties. Notice to an agent who with their knowledge and consent represents both parties to a transaction is notice to either of them to whom it would be notice if the agent represented him alone, and if each would be charged the notice to the agent is notice to both.[60] If, however, either party does not know that the agent is acting for the other, the agent's knowledge will not affect him who is ignorant thereof.[61]

F. Liability of Third Person to Principal — 1. On Contract — a. Disclosed Principal — (i) In General. The rule is well recognized that where an agent is duly constituted, and names his principal, and contracts in his name, and does not exceed his authority, a person so contracting with the agent is responsible to the principal for any breach of the contract;[62] and the fact that such principal is a foreigner does not alter this rule.[63]

Loss or waiver of right.— An entry on the books of the principal of an account and settlement between himself and his agent, made in ignorance of the actual dealings of the agent with a third person, cannot bind the principal or defeat him from recovering the amount actually due on a contract made by the agent for his principal's benefit. (II) Defenses and Equities.[64] Equities arising between the third person and a known agent cannot as a rule be set up against the principal when he sues on the contract made by the agent as such with the third person.[65] Where, however, an agent takes a promissory note for his principal, payable to himself, and then transfers it to his principal, the principal stands in the position of the original holder, and the note in his hands is subject to whatever defenses might have been made to it in the hands of the agent.[66] And where a principal accepts a contract made by the agent, he takes it as the agent made it, and subject to all equities and defenses arising out of the conditions thereof, and the means and instrumentalities by which the agent procured it, even though the agent acted without authority or in excess of his powers.[67]

b. Undisclosed Principal — (I) In General. As a corollary to the well-recognized principle that the rights of the other contracting party are not affected by the disclosure of a theretofore unknown principal,[68] the rule is elementary that an undisclosed principal may appear and hold the other party to the contract made with the agent.[69] However, a person has a right to determine with whom

(III) Contracts For Transportation. Where an agent contracts in his own name for the transportation of goods without disclosing the name of his principal, the principal has a right of action against the carrier for failure to comply with the contract, or for loss of or injury to the property.[73]

(IV) Written Contracts; Sealed Contracts; Negotiable Instruments. The rule that an undisclosed principal may maintain an action on a contract made by his agent in his name alone, on proof that in making the contract the agent was acting for the principal, is not varied by the fact that such contract was in writing.[74] There are, however, exceptions to the rule. In jurisdictions where the distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments is still recognized, a contract under seal made by an agent in his own name cannot be sued upon by the principal; [75] and in the case of a negotiable instrument, made payable to the agent, the principal cannot maintain an action thereon, unless he obtains the right to sue by indorsement or transfer.[76]

See, however, Stevenson v. Kyle, 42 W. Va. 229, 24 S. E. 886, 57 Am. St. Rep. 854, holding that if an agent sells the principal's

ing in his own name without disclosing the agency is acting in contravention of the express directions of his principal.[80]

(2) Limitation of Rule.[81] The general rule stated in the preceding section does not apply where the third person has notice, actual or constructive, that the agent is not the principal.[82] Accordingly a person purchasing from an agent who has neither the possession nor other indicia of property in himself is not entitled to set off a debt due to him from the agent when sued by the undisclosed principal, since the absence of such apparent title or authority is sufficient to put the purchaser upon inquiry as to the agent's true position in the transaction.[83] Thus the English rule, followed by many American cases, is that purchasers from a broker who does not disclose his principal cannot set off a debt due them by the broker against the owner, since the broker is employed without being put into possession of the goods; but that it is otherwise as to factors, who are intrusted with the possession as well as the disposition of the property.[84] And if the character of one of the contracting parties is equivocal — if he is known to be in the habit of contracting sometimes as principal and sometimes as agent, a purchaser who buys with a view of covering his own debt and availing himself of a set-off is bound to inquire in what character he is acting in the particular transaction; and if the purchaser chooses to make no inquiry, and it should appear that he has contracted with an undisclosed principal, he will be denied the benefit of his set-off.[85] If an property and takes in payment an order on a third person in his own name, the principal may compel payment of the order free from any set-off as between the agent and the third person, although the latter knew nothing of the agency.

agent makes a contract in behalf of an undisclosed principal and deposits money of the principal with the other party as security for performance, the other party cannot set off a debt due him from the agent personally when the principal, after performance of the contract, sues to recover the deposit.[86] It is essential that the set-off, in order to be available, should be due and payable at the time when the right to offset equities is claimed.[87]

c. Fraud of Agent as Defeating Liability. A contract induced by the fraud or misrepresentation of an agent while acting within the real or apparent scope of his authority cannot be enforced by the principal against the party misled even though the principal did not authorize the agent to act fraudulently or to misrepresent.[88] But where the fraudulent acts or misrepresentations of the agent were not within the scope of his authority, they cannot be set up as a defense to an action on the contract by the principal.[89] If an agent is guilty of a breach of trust in acting for both parties to a transaction without their consent to the dual agency, his primary principal is not bound,[90] and the adverse party also may repudiate the transaction.[91]

d. Payment to Agent as Discharging Liability — (i) WHERE AGENCY IS DISCLOSED. Payment to one whose agency is known but whose authority to receive payment is not shown will not preclude the principal from recovering from the debtor where the agent has failed to account to the principal.[92] Nor is a principal

Where a debtor has knowledge or notice that his creditor's agent has authority to receive nothing but legal tender in payment of the debt, payment to the agent in anything other than legal tender will not bind the creditor.[95]

(II) Where Agency Is Undisclosed. The general rule is that where a person contracts with the agent of an undisclosed principal who has the indicia of ownership of the property involved in the transaction, payment to such agent prior to notice of his agency is a good defense to an action thereafter brought by the principal on the contract.[96] Payment after notice of the agency, however, is at the debtor's risk.[97]

e. Money or Property Wrongfully Disposed of by Agent — (I) In General. The general rule is that the principal may recover his property or its value from a third person, where it has been wrongfully transferred by his agent contrary to instructions or in excess of authority.[98] Unauthorized payments of money made by an agent may as a rule be recovered by the principal as money had and received;[99] and where an agent without apparent authority uses property of his principal to liquidate his own indebtedness to a third person, or otherwise disposes of it, such property or its value may ordinarily be recovered by the principal by an action of replevin or other appropriate action.[1]

(II) Right to Follow Trust Funds or Property. Money or property intrusted to an agent for a particular purpose is impressed by the law with a trust in favor of the principal until it has been devoted to such purpose; and where it has been wrongfully diverted by the agent, such trust generally follows the fund or property in the hands of a third person, and the principal is ordinarily entitled to pursue and recover it as long as it can be identified.[2] But the burden of identification is on the principal. As money has no "ear-marks," he must, as against an innocent holder, be able to show that the money is his identical fund and impressed with some notice of that fact.[3] However, car-marks are only indices enabling the beneficial owner to follow his property. They are not indispensable to enable him to assert his right to the property, its product or substitute. Evidence of substantial identity may be attached to the thing itself, or it may be extraneous.[4] Property which he can identify, the principal can retake even in the hands of an innocent holder, since the agent can give no title when he has none; and this applies whether it be the identical property put into the hands of the agent or other property purchased by the agent with the proceeds, and even when it has been mixed with the mass of other property, if not so as to be incapable of being distinguished.[5]

Likewise the principal has a cause of action against a third person for detaining his property, where it has been improperly diverted by his agent, whether the third person knew or was charged with knowledge that the agent was without authority to so act in the premises, or

b. For Causing Loss of Agent's Service. A third person who wilfully and wrongfully interferes with an agent and entices and induces him to abandon the performance of his duty to his principal is liable in damages in an action by the principal.[11] Likewise, the principal has a right of action against a third person for personal injuries to his agent inflicted by such person, where some loss of service or capacity to fulfil the contract of agency results therefrom.[12] The principal also has a cause of action against a third person for wrongfully interfering with his agent, and thereby preventing him from performing his duty to his principal according to the terms of the contract, whereby the principal is damaged.[13]

See Mackenzie v. Johnston, 4 Madd. 373, 56 Eng. Reprint 742, where defendants were agents for the sale of property of plaintiff, and the court held that wherever such relation exists a bill will lie for an account. The circumstances of this case, however, were such that the principal could learn only from the discovery of defendants how the latter had acted in the execution of the agency; and the court held that it would be most unreasonable that the principal should pay them for that discovery, if it turned out that they had abused his confidence, and that that would be the case if a bill for relief would not lie. The necessity of a discovery, however, is itself enough to bring this case within the jurisdiction of equity, and the case, in so far as it intimates that the mere fact of agency warrants equitable interference, is against the great weight of authority.

Concurrent jurisdiction of law and equity. — The mere fact that there is a remedy at law is not sufficient to deprive the court of equity of jurisdiction of an account between a principal and agent, for the jurisdiction may be concurrent, and although there is a remedy at law, if it is not as adequate or complete as at equity, or if other circumstances exist bringing the matter within the cognizance of the equity court, the suit may still be maintained. St. (1878) § 4096, providing that no action to obtain discovery under oath in aid of the prosecution or defense of another action shall be allowed, does not affect the question of the jurisdiction of a court of equity in any proper case for an accounting between principal and agent where a discovery is a necessary part of the accounting.

But see Moxon v. Bright, L. R. 4, Ch. 292, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 961; Smith v. Leveaux, 2 De G. J. & S. 1, 9 Jur. N. S. 1140, 33 L. J. Ch. 167, 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 313, 3 New Rep. 18, 12 Wkly. Rep. 31, 67 Eng. Ch. 1, 46 Eng. Reprint 274, both holding that the mere the account is so involved, complicated, and confused that it could not be accurately, expediently, or adequately settled at law.[23] That equity will not entertain a suit for accounting against an agent by the principal where all the items are on one side has been held in some cases, and is to be implied from the language used in others.[24] By the weight of opinion, however, although the account is not fact that the principal sought discovery would not empower the court of equity to act, if an adequate discovery could be had at law, and the agency was not of a fiduciary nature.

Where a principal asks discovery only as ancillary to relief, if the ground for the relief fails, he is not entitled to the discovery, and must file another bill for that purpose. King v. Rossett, 2 Y. & J. 33.

Ct. 155, unless a ground for equitable jurisdiction is laid by reason of a discovery being wanted); Halsted v. Rabb, 8 Port. (Ala.) 63 (holding that in agencies of a single transaction, such as a single consignment, or the delivery of money, to be laid out in the purchase of any particular thing, or to be paid over to a third person, by reason of a discovery being wanted, it is perhaps the better opinion that such a case would be cognizable alone at law).

24. Lynch v. Willard, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 342 (holding that an account supposes something mutual); Porter v. Spencer, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 169 (holding that there must be mutual demands and not merely payments by way of set-off, and that there must be a series of transactions on one side and of mutual, and although the items are all on one side, equity will still take jurisdiction if the account is so complicated that a bill would lie if it were a mutual account.[25]

(II) AT LAW. It was formerly held that the ancient common-law action of account render[26] could be brought by a principal against his agent for an accounting; but this action has fallen generally into disuse, or has been materially altered by statute and is now rarely if ever brought in the common-law form.[27]

2. ACTIONS BY AGENT AGAINST PRINCIPAL — a. In General. When the compensation of the agent is fixed by an express contract his proper remedy for the recovery thereof is an action upon the contract.[28] Where, however, the compensation is not so fixed the proper action is upon the implied contract for the value of his services.[29] Where the agent sues for an indemnity for loss incurred by him in committing a tort at the direction of the principal under such circumstances as do not deprive him of the right of indemnity,[30] either assumpsit or a special action on the case will lie.[31]

principal and agent being, as in the case of a bill by the principal against the agent,[33] insufficient to entitle him to this relief;[34] but where the agency is of a fiduciary nature, and a discovery is necessary and the account is sufficiently complicated to justify equitable accounting, a bill therefor is sometimes entertained.[35]

3. Actions by Third Party Against Agent. As to the ground upon which the liability of an agent contracting for another without authority rests, the authorities in the several states differ widely, nor is it easy to reconcile the various decisions in the same state. In some jurisdictions, particularly in the earlier cases, it is held that an action may be maintained against the agent as principal upon the contract itself, although it contains no apt words to bind him personally,

See also James v. Snarr, 15 Grant Ch. (U. but only to bind the principal, upon the theory that the contract must have been intended to bind someone, if not the principal, then the agent.[36] By the great weight of recent authority, however, this theory has been emphatically repudiated, and it is now generally held, more logically, that the agent cannot be held upon the contract unless it contains apt words to bind him personally, in the absence of which the only remedy is by an action for the breach of his implied warranty or an action for deceit if the circumstances warrant the latter remedy.[37]

The fallacy of this rule.— Those cases which hold the agent upon the contract, although it contains no apt words to bind him, base their conclusion upon the fallacious argument that the contract was intended to bind someone, and if the principal is not bound the contract must be that of the agent. Thilmany v. Iowa Paper Bag Co., 108 Iowa 357, 79 N. W. 261, 75 Am. St. Rep. 259. And see cases cited supra, this note. But such a contract is not the contract of the principal, for the pretended agent had no power to bind him, and it is not the contract of the agent, for in making it the agent did not bind and did not attempt to bind himself. Noyes v. Loring, 55 Me. 408, 412. The contract may be therefore absolutely void, and thus bind nobody. As was said by the court in Noyes v. Loring, supra, the "inconsistency" of holding the agent upon the contract, "to use no stronger term, will be apparent by supposing that instead of a promise to pay money, the pretended agent had signed a promise that his principal should marry plaintiff within a given time, or do some other act which it was perfectly competent for the principal to perform, but which the agent could not. What would be thought of a declaration charging the pretended agent as a principal in such a case?"

In New York, where the theory of liability upon the contract itself seems to have originated (see Kennedy v. Stonehouse, 13 N. D. 232, 100 N. W. 258), the earlier decisions all hold the agent upon this ground even though the contract contains no apt words to bind him (Plumb v. Milk, 19 Barb. 74; Palmer v. Stephens, 1 Den. 471; Feeter v. Heath, 11 Wend. 477; Rossiter v. Rossiter, 8 Wend. 494, 24 Am. Dec. 381; Taft v. Brewster, 9 Johns. 334, 6 Am. Dec. 280; Dusenbury v. Ellis, 3 Johns. Cas. 70, 2 Am. Dec. 144). As stated in White v. Madison, 26 N. Y. 117, the authority of these cases was first somewhat shaken by the remarks of the judges who delivered the opinion in Walker v. State Bank, 9 N. Y. 582, and in the later cases this doctrine has been repudiated and the agent held liable only when there are words apt to bind him personally, that is when the contract can be construed as his own; otherwise the remedy is by action for breach of warranty or for deceit. or statutory provisions [39] the necessity of the performance of particular acts as conditions precedent to the bringing of actions against the agent depends on the facts and circumstances of each case.[40]

2. Demand.[41] A principal cannot as a general rule commence an action against his agent for an accounting or for money or property received by the agent for the principal's benefit until he has made a demand therefor against the agent which has not been complied with.[42] Failure of the agent to comply is equivalent to

Haug, 88 Ill. App. 674, holding that where an agency contract provided that if the agent should take worthless notes in the course of his agency, he should, upon settlement with the principal, replace these notes with money or good commercial paper, the principal could not recover from the agent the value of a worthless note taken by the latter without first tendering him the note.

39. See the statutes of the different states.

40. See cases cited infra, this note.

Tender to the agent by the principal of money or property was held not to be condition precedent to an action by the principal against the agent in the following cases: Shipherd v. Field, 70 Ill. 438 (holding that a principal whose money is lost owing to his agent's loaning it on inadequate security is excused for not making an earlier offer to return the securities before bringing an action against the agent to recover such loss, where the latter induced the principal to wait nearly a year in the hope of being able to collect the money); Moore v. Mandlebaum, 8 Mich. 433 (holding that where an agent induces his principal by fraud to convey land to a third person for much less than its value and really for the benefit of the agent, and such third person conveys to a bona fide purchaser for an advanced price, the principal need not, in an action to recover from the agent the difference between the amount paid to the principal and such advanced price, tender back what he had received, before bringing suit); Chandler v. Fulton, 10 Tex. 2, 60 Am. Dec. 188 (holding that a forwarding merchant's peremptory refusal to deliver goods to the holder of the bill of lading dispenses with the necessity of making a formal tender of charges thereon before bringing suit for such refusal).

Accounting.— An agent who is bound to render an account to his principal, it has been held, must do so as a condition precedent to an action for wages or salary. Violett v. Sexton, 14 Quebec K. B. 360; Eddy v. Eddy, 7 Quebec Q. B. 300 [affirmed in [1900] A. C. 299].

Exhausting other remedies as a condition precedent. To an action by a third person against the agent see Merchants', etc., Bank v. Meyer, 56 Ark. 499, 20 S. W. 406, holding that where an agent sells property of his principal which is subject to a mortgage, the mortgagee is not bound to exhaust all other remedies before proceeding against the agent. To an action by the principal against the agent see Mechanics' Bank v. Merchants' Bank, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 13, holding that where the indorser of a note is discharged by want of due demand on the maker, or of notice of the default of the maker, the legal presumption is that he will avail himself of such discharge; and the holder therefore is not bound to prosecute a fruitless suit against the indorser before he can maintain an action against his own agent for neglecting to make due demand on the maker, or to give due notice of his default.

No particular words are necessary to a demand, and any declaration of the agent to the principal which shows a denial of his right puts him in the wrong and gives the principal a right of action. Moore v. Hyman, 34 N. C. 38.

Time of demand.— The demand must be made after the agent has received the money. Taylor v. Spears, 6 Ark. 381, 44 Am. Dec. 519.

Demandant must be authorized.— To constitute a legal demand on an agent who has received money for his principal which he has failed to turn over, it must appear that the person making the demand was authorized to do so by the principal. Taylor v. Spears, 6 Ark. 381, 44 Am. Dec. 519.

Where ground of action is the agent's breach of duty, by reason of which less money came to his hands for the principal than refusal.[43] But no demand is necessary where the agent has denied the agency or the liability,[44] or has converted the money or property to his own use,[45] or if to make demand would be impracticable or highly inconvenient.[46] Unreasonable delay in rendering an account raises a presumption that the agent has converted the funds to his own use, and the principal may sue without previous demand.[47] And when the agent is under an agreement to make payments at fixed times, the arrival of the time itself operates under the agreement as sufficient demand.[48]

C. Parties[49] — 1. Right of Action by Principal or Agent or Both — a. In General. According to the well-settled common-law rule that an action upon a contract must be brought in the name of the party in whom the legal interest in the contract is vested,[50] an agent cannot sue in his own name, where the legal interest is vested in his principal.[51] To enable an agent to sue in his own name, otherwise would, and also for the failure of the agent to pay over the money actually received no demand is necessary. Dever v. Branch, 18 Tex. 615.

Where agent exceeds his authority it has been held that no demand is necessary. Brazier v. Fortune, 10 Ala. 516, where an agent who received notes to be deposited with an attorney for collection collected the money himself.

states, where a contract is made by an agent for the benefit of his principal, the principal may sue on the contract, even though the agent may also have the right to sue, and even where the contract is made in the name of the agent, and the principal's name is not disclosed.[58]

(II) Agent Having Lien or Beneficial Interest. The general rule is that when an agent has any beneficial interest in the performance of the contract, as for commissions, etc., or a special property or interest in the subject-matter of the agreement, he may support an action in his own name upon the contract.[59]

(III) Contracts Under Seal. Applying the well-established principle of the common law that only such persons as are parties thereto can sue upon an instrument under seal, where an agent makes a contract in his own name, and under his own seal, he alone can maintain an action thereon, since the contract is his alone.[60]

(iv) Contracts by Agents of Government. According to the better doctrine, a state,[61] or the federal government,[62] may maintain an action in its own name on a contract made by its agent for its benefit.

(v) Negotiable Instruments. The rule is well settled that an agent holding the legal title to a negotiable instrument may bring suit upon the same in his own name, although he is liable to account to his principal for the proceeds thereof.[63]

c. Actions Relating to Real Estate. The general rule is that a mere agent, having only the care and oversight of real estate, cannot maintain an action in his own name relating to such property.[64]

d. Actions After Termination of Agency. An agent cannot maintain an action in his own name to recover the property of his principal after the termination of the agency.[65]

b. Under Code Provisions. Under some statutes, every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, except that an executor or administrator, a trustee of an express trust, or a person expressly authorized by statute, may sue without joining with him the person for whose benefit the action is prosecuted; and a person with whom or in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another is a trustee of an express trust within the meaning of the statute.[68] However, an agent who makes a contract for his principal in the principal's name is not a person with whom the contract is made within the purview of an act providing that a person with whom or in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another may bring an action without joining with him the person for whose benefit it is prosecuted.[69]

3. JOINDER OF DEFENDANTS. The general rule is that where a contract is made by an agent within the scope of his employment, both the agent and his undisclosed principal, when discovered, are liable on the contract, and may be joined as defendants in an action thereon,[72] although it has been held that in such case the principal is not a necessary party defendant.[73] However, it has been broadly laid down in some cases that an action will not lie against an agent executing a contract for a disclosed principal, and that it is therefore error to join him in an action against such principal.[74] Likewise, where an agent and his principal are both liable for the same act of negligence, they may be joined as parties defendant in an action to recover damages for the injuries caused thereby.[75] As a general rule, an agent against whom no relief is sought, and who has been guilty of no fraud in connection with the transaction concerning which the suit is brought, is not a necessary or proper party thereto.[76] Thus it is erroneous to make a mere agent a party to a suit for the specific performance of a contract.[77] The rule, however, is otherwise where the agent is charged with fraud in the transaction.[78] bill [85] are in general governed by the rules of pleading applicable to other civil actions.

b. Actions by Third Persons Against Principal — (i) AVERMENTS AS TO AGENCY. It is a rule of pleading that, where a third party seeks to charge a principal with the act of his agent, the complaint may plead the act of the agent as such, or plead it as the act of his principal,[86] and, unless otherwise provided by the codes or practice acts,[87] it is not necessary, in pleading the act, to aver the fact of agency, it being sufficient to charge the act as that of the principal, without disclosing the fact of agency.[88] And the rule that it is sufficient to allege that the moneys remained in the hands or under the control of defendant. Cohen v. Ellis, 4 N. Y. St. 721, holding further that, in the absence of such averment, the presumption is that the moneys are not in defendant's hands.

Action by agent against principal.— In an action by an agent against his principal for breach of a contract of agency, where it was provided that he was to have the sole right of selling his principal's goods in a certain locality, an allegation that, after plaintiff had begun to sell in that locality, defendant sent another agent there for that purpose, without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff, is not a sufficient assignment of the breach, without an additional averment that plaintiff was still performing his duties under the contract. Union Refining Co. v. Barton, 77 Ala. 148. So too, in such an action, an averment in the complaint as a breach of the contract that defendant has failed and refused to pay plaintiff a stipulated compensation is not a sufficient assignment, without an additional averment of the sales made and their amount. Union Refining Co. v. Barton, supra. An agent cannot maintain an action for breach of a contract made by him for his principal, under Code, § 2209, where he does not allege that he was a factor, and contracted on his own credit, or that the contract was made in his individual name, or that his agency was coupled with an interest known to the carrier. Surplusage.— If the complaint discloses a cause of action in favor of plaintiff (Owsley v. Woolhopter, 14 Ga. 124), or against defendant (Burkhalter v. Perry, 127 Ga. 438, 56 S. E. 631) personally, superadded the words importing agency will be regarded as descriptio personæ merely, and the complaint will be sustained. But under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 549, subd. 2, providing that defendant may be arrested, where the complaint alleges that the money sued for was received or fraudulently misapplied by an agent or other person in a fiduciary capacity, and that, where such allegation is made, plaintiff cannot recover unless he proves the same on the trial, such an allegation, when made in an action for the conversion of rents collected and received by defendant as plaintiff's agent, cannot be rejected as surplusage. Frick v. Freudenthal, 45 Misc. (N. Y.) 348, 90 N. Y. Suppl. 344.

Waiver and cure of defects.— The failure of one suing as agent on a contract for services, to be paid for from the proceeds of the sale of land after deducting the expenses of its care, to allege that there would be any surplus after payment of expenses, is cured by defendant's plea of reconvention, alleging that the contract of plaintiff had long since terminated, and offering to pay what should appear to be due. The complaint should charge that the act was done by defendant whether it was done by himself or by his agent. Slevin v. Reppy, 46 Mo. 606.

An allegation in the complaint that plaintiff bought of one B, acting as defendant's agent, is sufficient without an averment that B was defendant's agent. Cochran v. Goodman, 3 Cal. 244.

In an action by a principal against his agent charging him with an abuse of his powers, it is essential to allege that he acted as agent. Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Sabine, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 97, 6 McLean 393.

Words importing an agency held to be superfluous.—An allegation in the complaint that defendant made and executed a promissory note, where the note appears to have been in fact signed by another party, is sufficient, and an averment that the note was made by defendant's agent is unnecessary and superfluous. Moore v. McClure, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 557.

Manner of constituting agency need not be alleged.— When the instrument set forth in the complaint asserts the agency, an allegation in the complaint that it is the act of the agent is sufficient, without alleging the particular manner of constituting the agency. 93. Gallatin Nat. Bank v. Nashville, etc., R. Co., 4 N. Y. St. 714.

An allegation that defendant made and delivered his promissory note, where it appears in fact to have been executed by another party, necessarily includes the allegation that such other party was duly authorized to make the note in his behalf. Moore v. McClure, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 557.

Illustrations.— An averment in the complaint that the instrument sued on was made for defendant by another, as and representing himself to be defendant's agent, is sufficient to charge defendant. Opper v. Hirsh, 33 Misc. (N. Y.) 560, 68 N. Y. Suppl. 879. A petition alleging that a contract of a corporation was made, executed, and delivered by its officer and agent, naming him, is not demurrable on the ground that authority by authority to act in the premises,[95] that being regarded as an averment of a conclusion of law, or at best an unnecessary repetition of a fact already stated.[96] But one who seeks to hold a principal for the acts of a subagent must expressly set up and prove the power of the agent to make such a delegation of his authority.[97]

(II) Charging Notice or Knowledge Obtained by Agent. To charge defendant with his agent's notice or knowledge of matters affecting his principal's business, it is sufficient, in an action by a third person against the principal, to allege in the complaint notice or knowledge obtained by defendant, without averring the fact of agency.[98]

(III) Alleging Ratification of Agent's Unauthorized Acts. Ratification by a principal of an unauthorized act of his agent, being equivalent to prior authority, a third party relying on proof of ratification to maintain his cause of action against the principal, need not allege it in his complaint.[99]

c. In Action by Principal Against Agent — (I) Equitable Suit For Accounting — (A) In General. The general rule that a bill for an accounting must show upon its face that complainant is entitled to the relief demanded, and that he is the proper party and vested with the right to maintain the suit, applies to an action by a principal against his agent for an accounting of money or property received by the latter in his capacity of agent.[1] So in order to maintain the agent does not sufficiently appear. Johnson County v. Chamberlain Packing House, 74 Nebr. 549, 104 N. W. 1061. A declaration setting forth that plaintiff had purchased a quantity of goods from W. & P. "then and there acting as agent of defendant," is only another form of declaring that he had purchased from the defendant, and is sufficiently certain to prevent any misapprehension of its meaning, and is good on demurrer. Cochran v. Goodman, 3 Cal. 244. A complaint in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien, alleging that the sum claimed to be due was for materials furnished, etc., in pursuance of the contract between the plaintiff and defendant, through and by her husband, sufficiently alleges that defendant's husband was her authorized agent. Sufficient averment of ratification.— In averring that a principal ratified a contract of sale made by his agent, it is not necessary to allege that he did so by the receipt of a portion of the purchase-money under the contract; it is enough to aver that he did ratify. Harding v. Parshall, 56 Ill. 219.

Specific loss occasioned by negligence.— To render an agent liable to his principal in an action of accounting, for any specific loss occasioned by his misconduct or neglect, it must be alleged in the complaint and substantiated. Williams v. Gregg, 2 Strobh. Eq. (S. C.) 297.

Instances of bills held to state facts for relief.—A bill showing a relation of agency of a fiduciary nature and mutual accounts, and distinctly specifying the items of agency, states facts for equitable relief, and the mere omission to state the date of the creation of the agency, although it may be a defect in stating the case, will not justify the dismissal of the bill on motion. Henderson v. Mathews, 1 Lea (Tenn.) 34. A complaint which alleges that defendants, as agents of plaintiff, received certain goods for sale, for a part of which they had failed to pay and refused to account, and praying that plaintiff might recover the value of the goods not accounted for, states a good cause of action. Robson v. Sanders, 25 S. C. 116. Where complainant alleges in its bill that defendant became its agent and as such surreptitiously a suit in equity, on the ground that the account is so complicated that it cannot be taken in an action at law, facts showing the existence of this ground must be alleged in the bill;[2] and the bill must aver that a discovery is indispensable to complainant's recovery against defendant,[3] or facts showing that the relationship of principal and agent existing between the parties was of a fiduciary nature,[4] in case such are the grounds relied on to establish equity jurisdiction.

(B) Prior Demand For an Accounting. In an ordinary action by a principal against his agent for an accounting of money or property received by the latter in his capacity as agent, a demand for an accounting before suit must be alleged in the bill.[5]

(C) Property or Money in Hands of Defendant. Conceding that the relationship of principal and agent existed between the parties, a complaint which does not charge that defendant ever had money or property in his possession belonging to plaintiff, upon which a demand to account could have been predicated, does not state a cause of action for an accounting.[6] It must be made to appear in the bill, by appropriate averments, that the moneys received by defendant, for which an accounting is sought, are more than sufficient to offset defendant's just claims against plaintiff.[7]

(II) ACTIONS AT LAW — (A) Averring Prior Demand of Payment. In an action by a principal against his agent to recover money collected by the latter

overissued certificates of complainant's stock, and that the funds derived therefrom are in defendant's possession, and praying that defendant may account to and satisfy complainant for all liabilities which those issues may have occasioned it, a case for equitable relief is disclosed. Kentucky Bank v. Schuylkill Bank, 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 180. A petition alleging that defendants were the agents of plaintiff to ship certain goods; that it was their duty to ship in the name of complainant to a commission merchant for immediate sale, but that they made the shipment in their own name, not for immediate sale, but to be stored, and concealed such action from the plaintiff for a period of fourteen months, states a cause of action. Buck v. Reed, 27 Nebr. 67, 42 N. W. 894. A bill brought to compel an agent to account, and which joins those charged to be his confederates in a scheme of fraud, claiming relief against them, and denying the agent's ability to respond in full, states a cause for equitable relief. Complaint held to state single cause of action.—A petition which alleges that one of defendants, plaintiff's agent in the collection of a debt secured by mortgage, wrongfully procured the mortgaged premises to be conveyed to another defendant, took possession thereof, collected rent, etc., and negligently permitted the premises to be sold for delinquent taxes to a third defendant, and failed to account for rents received, praying for the recovery of the legal title and for an accounting, states but a single cause of action. When agency may not have been fiduciary. — And if, so far as may be gathered from what is alleged, an agency existed which might or might not have been of a fiduciary nature, according to the surrounding circumstances, the relation of the agent toward the principal, in the absence of a statement of those circumstances, will be deemed to have been other than fiduciary for the purposes of demurrer. New York L. Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 52 Misc. (N. Y.) 189, 102 N. Y. Suppl. 771. See also Conger v. Judson, 69 N. Y. App. Div. 121, 74 N. Y. Suppl. 504.

Failure to allege facts showing that moneys, for which an accounting is asked, were received by defendant in a fiduciary capacity, is not cured by an allegation that defendant gave receipts for such moneys by the terms of which the moneys were to be accounted for, without an allegation that defendant had failed to render an accounting. 5. Bushnell v. McCauley, 7 Cal. 421.

In a suit for the enforcement of an agreement for an accounting, brought by the principal against his agent, a breach of the agreement and the necessity for a judicial direction that it be performed must be averred in the bill. in his capacity of agent and not paid over, the complaint must aver the fact of a demand having been made on defendant before suit,[8] or set forth circumstances which excuse demand;[9] and such demand will not be presumed.[10]

(B) Allegation That Contract Was in Writing. An action to recover from defendant money received by him on a sale of plaintiff's land, in which he acted as plaintiff's agent, is not an action on a contract for the sale of land, and a complaint therein need not allege a contract in writing.[11]

(C) Charging Agent With Personal Liability For Advances in Excess of Commissions Earned. In an action by a principal against his agent to recover a certain sum as advances in excess of commissions earned, made under a contract of employment to advance a given sum per week on account of commissions to be earned, and a further sum for expenses, a complaint is fatally defective for failing to show how much was advanced on account of commissions and how much for expenses.[12]

(D) Charging Agent With Value of Goods Sold in Violation of Instructions. To charge defendant as agent with the value of goods sold on credit to insolvent persons contrary to positive instructions, it is sufficient for the principal to allege in his complaint that the sale was made in violation of the agent's instructions, whereby the value of the goods was lost to his principal.[13]

(E) Charging Agent With Negligence and Consequent Injury. Although a complaint does not contain an express averment of agency,[14] yet it contains all the essential elements of a complaint by a principal against his agent for negligence, if it sets forth facts constituting an agency, a negligent failure of defendant to perform the duties thereof, and the consequent damages to plaintiff.[15] In an action based on the negligence of defendant in loaning moneys deposited with him to be loaned on good security for plaintiff, the failure to allege that plaintiff was injured by defendant's negligence in making the loan is of no consequence, when the complaint alleges that the loan was made to an insolvent party and that it is utterly worthless.[16]

Alleging agreement to be personally responsible.— Where the gist of the action is the negligence of defendant in making a loan as the agent of plaintiff, the complaint need not allege that defendant agreed to be responsible personally for the loan. Bronnenburg v. Rinker, 2 Ind. App. 391, 28 N. E. 568.

Alleging demand.— Where the complaint, in an action for the negligence of defendant in making a loan as agent of plaintiff, avers that the borrower was and is entirely insolvent, and that the loan is entirely worthless, it need not aver a demand of the money either from the borrower or from defendant. Bronnenberg v. Rinker, 2 Ind. App. 391, 28 N. E. 568.

Alleging knowledge of falsity of representations.— In an action for negligence of defendant in making a loan as the agent of plaintiff, where the complaint alleges that defendant falsely represented that the loan was secured by mortgage, it need not allege that defendant knew such representations to be false. Bronnenberg v. Rinker, 2 Ind. App. 391, 28 N. E. 568.

16. Bronnenburg v. Rinker, 2 Ind. App. 391, 28 N. E. 568.

must be specially pleaded [17] in accordance with the usual rules governing the use of the general issue or general denial.[18] In pleading an act of an agent as a defense to an action, it is sufficient to charge, in the answer, the act as that of the principal, without naming the agent.[19] A principal is responsible for the negligent and improvident acts of his agent in the execution of his trust,[20] and in order to relieve himself from responsibility he must deny the whole agency.[21]

17. Quick v. Sachsse, 31 Nebr. 312, 47 N. W. 935, holding that in an action for commissions on a sale that defendant employed plaintiff to make and then refused to consummate, the defense that defendant had only an option on the land, as plaintiff knew, and was not the owner, is matter of confession and avoidance which must be pleaded. See also cases cited infra, this note.

Estoppel of principal to deny agent's authority.— The claim that a principal is estopped to deny the authority of his agent, after having clothed him with apparent authority, must be pleaded to be available as a defense to an action by the principal against a third person. Tres Palacios Rice, etc., Co. v. Eidman, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 542, 93 S. W. 698; Swayne v. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 49 S. W. 518; Rail v. City Nat. Bank, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 557, 22 S. W. 865. An answer of estoppel to the conduct of plaintiff's agent, which fails to show the scope of the agent's authority, is insufficient. Porter Lumber Co. v. Hill, 72 Ark. 62, 77 S. W. 905.

That defendant acted as agent merely.— Where defendant, in an action brought against him personally, relies on the affirmative defense that he was acting in the transaction as agent for another, he must aver his authority to act in the premises (White v. Skinner, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 307, 7 Am. Dec. 381), and a mere averment that defendant acted in the transaction in the capacity of agent, and not otherwise, is not sufficient (White v. Skinner, supra); nor will a mere traverse of the averment of the complaint suffice (Martin v. Kennedy, 90 S. W. 975, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 966).

Illegality of contract of agency.— Where a contract of agency is one affecting the interest of the general public, a defense that it is void as against public policy need not be affirmatively pleaded to be available. Drake v. Lauer, 93 N. Y. App. Div. 86, 86 N. Y. Suppl. 986 [affirmed in 182 N. Y. 533, 75 N. E. 1129]; Dunham v. Hastings Pavement Co., 56 N. Y. App. Div. 244, 67 N. Y. Suppl. 632; Pape v. Standard Oil Co., 27 Ohio Cir. Ct. 111; Oscanyan v. Winchester Repeating Arms Co., 103 U. S. 261, 26 L. ed. 539. See also Lyon v. Mitchell, 36 N. Y. 235, 93 Am. Dec. 502; Russell v. Burton, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 539.

Double employment of agent.—A defense that a plaintiff, suing for his services as defendant's agent in a transaction, was employed by both parties to such transaction, must be affirmatively pleaded to be available. Reese v. Garth, 36 Mo. App. 641; Childs v. Ptomey, 17 Mont. 502, 43 Pac. 714; Smith v. Soosen, 24 Misc. (N. Y.) 706, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 806; Bonwell v. Auld, 9 Misc. (N. Y.) 65, 29 N. Y. Suppl. 15. See also Duryee v. Lester, 75 N. Y. 442.

Payment to agent.—A defense that the agency was not disclosed to defendant and that he in good faith treated and paid the agent as plaintiff, must be pleaded specially to be available. Hutchinson Mfg. Co. v. Henry, 44 Mo. App. 263. A plea in an action on a note, alleging payment to an agent of plaintiff authorized to receive payment of such note, is not insufficient for failure to aver that the alleged agent had the note in his hands at the time of payment. Athens Nat. Bank v. Burt, 98 Ga. 380, 25 S. E. 502.

Payment of debt by agent to principal by notes of former purchased by latter.— In an action by the assignee of the principal against an agent, if defendant alleges that he paid his indebtedness by notes of the principal purchased by him, he must aver how and for what price he obtained the notes. Farnum v. Farrell, 2 Phila. (Pa.) 368.

Bona fide distribution of property by assignee of agent before notice of principal's claim.—An answer by an assignee of an agent claiming protection from the claim of the principal, on the ground of having made a bona fide distribution of the proceeds of the property under directions of a trust, must aver that the assignee paid out all the proceeds before he had notice of the claim of the principal. Fahnestock v. Bailey, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 48, 77 Am. Dec. 161.

Breach of contract as counter-claim.— Where, in an action by a principal against his agent for moneys converted, defendant pleads as a counter-claim a breach of the contract of agency, a general allegation that plaintiff did not keep his promise and guaranty does not sufficiently plead the breach, when not accompanied by the facts supporting such allegation. Picker v. Weiss, 39 Misc. (N. Y.) 22, 78 N. Y. Suppl. 761.

18. See PLEADING, ante, p. 1.

19. Crowder v. Reed, 80 Ind. 1; Higbee v. Trumbauer, 112 Iowa 74, 83 N. W. 812; Davenport v. Ladd, 38 Minn. 545, 38 N. W. 622, so holding in conformity with the rule that the answer must aver the facts constituting the defense sought to be pleaded, and holding further that in an action to recover money alleged to have been collected by defendant for plaintiff, an answer by defendant that he had received the claim from a third person, who told him he could retain all moneys collected above a certain sum, cannot be accepted in lieu of an averment that such third person was the agent of plaintiff or authorized to act in his behalf.

b. Admissions. An answer alleging that defendant, by his agent, demanded that plaintiff should pay the reasonable value of the storage of certain goods, admits the agency of the person making the demand.[22] So an allegation in an answer that plaintiff by his legally authorized agent made a new contract clearly admits the agent's authority to make a new contract, although the old contract which was set out in the answer provides that no agent is authorized to add to, abridge, or change the same.[23] Likewise an averment in an answer that an agent had no authority to employ an attorney except in case of vacancy is an admission of authority to employ in case a vacancy occurred.[24] Again, in an action on a contract, the authority of the agent to make the contract is admitted, where the answer admits the making of the contract but avers it was upon a different compensation from that alleged in the complaint;[25] or where the answer admits the contract but alleges terms materially different from the contract set out in the complaint.[26] But where the complaint, in its substantive averments, is for money had and received, defendant, by denying in his answer an allegation in the complaint that he received the money through a certain person, his agent, does not thereby admit that such person was his agent.[27]

c. Cross Bill. Where the object of a bill in equity is to secure an accounting of a terminated agency, the agreement for which agency contemplated that the agent should be paid for his services, it is proper for defendant agent, by cross bill, to demand payment for his services, and have such demand adjusted with the accounting, so that by its decree the court may give complete relief between the parties in respect of the agency.[28]

d. Affidavit of Defense.[29] Where suit is brought against one designated as agent, without naming any one as principal, defendant will be answerable in his personal capacity alone, and if he relies on the defense that his agency was disclosed to plaintiff, his affidavit of defense, in order to prevent a judgment, must aver that he made known his agency at the time of the transaction forming the cause of action sued on,[30] or that plaintiff had knowledge of the fact from some other source.[31] Where special authority of an agent to do a given act,[32] or subsequent ratification of such act by his principal,[33] is regarded as matter of affirmative defense, such authorization or ratification should be averred in the affidavit of defense with all particularity required in plaintiff's statement. And an affidavit of defense is fatally defective which merely states the conclusion that an agent had authority to do a certain act, instead of averring facts from which the authority is supposed to flow.[34]

In an action on an official bond an answer alleging that a part payment thereof had been made without defendant's knowledge or consent does not deny the authority of the agent who made the payment. York County School Dist. No. 27 v. Holmes, 16 Nebr. 486, 20 N. W. 721.

3. DEMURRER OR EXCEPTION.[35] Equity has jurisdiction of a bill by the principal to compel his agent to account for money or property received by him, and a demurrer on the ground that there is a complete remedy at law will not lie.[36] Where it appears on the face of the complaint, by a principal to set aside a sale of property by his agent, that there was an unreasonable delay in bringing suit, advantage of such defect may be taken by demurrer.[37] A bill for an accounting which contains an averment of agency, and a statement that moneys were received by defendant, is demurrable on the ground that it contains no averment that the agency is fiduciary in its nature.[38] Where an allegation in the answer states that a certain act was done by a legally authorized agent of plaintiff is demurred to, the demurrer admits that the agent had such authority.[39]

4. AMENDMENT OF PLEADINGS. The court may allow a plaintiff suing as an agent to amend his complaint so as to maintain the suit in his own right,[40] the descriptive words of agency being regarded as surplusage,[41] and the amendments striking them from the complaint not being objectionable as introductive of a new and different cause of action.[42] Likewise it is held that a complaint alleging that a contract was made by defendant as agent is amendable by striking from the complaint the words importing agency.[43] And, conversely, it has been held that in a suit by an agent of an undisclosed principal, the writ may be amended by the substitution of the principal, even after the trial, if not changing the result.[44]

5. BILLS OF PARTICULARS. In conformity with the rule that defendant cannot have a bill of discovery in the shape of an order for particulars,[45] it is held that, in an action by an agent against his principal for services, the latter cannot insist upon particulars giving credit for moneys received for him; he is only entitled to ask for what balance the action is brought.[46]

6. ISSUES, PROOF, AND VARIANCE — a. Issues. An issue of fact arises as to the extent of an agent's authority, where there is an averment that the agent acted for his principal in a given transaction and an express denial of such averment.[47] And where the agency of a certain person is put in issue by the answer, it is proper for the court to submit such issue to the jury, if warranted by the evidence, notwithstanding the absence of a specific presentation of such state of case in the complaint.[48]

For instance, where one seeks to defend an action on a book-account on the ground of payment by giving a note therefor to a collection agency, his affidavit of defense is defective in merely averring that the agent had authority to accept a note as payment in lieu of cash, instead of stating whether the authority of the agent so to do was in writing, and if so, appending a copy thereof or stating why it cannot be done. Filing account.—Where a demand is made on an agent to account for the rents and revenues of property under his administration, the judgment prayed for being only for the amount as shown by the account, the proper course to pursue, when the answer of defendant denies that he owes an accounting to plaintiff, is to ascertain the fact whether an account is due, and, if so, to order defendant to file an account within a fixed time, to which plaintiff may, if he chooses to do so, file an opposition. b. Matters to Be Proved — (i) Agency. Whenever it is sought to charge a principal with a wrongful act committed by his agent, it is essential and indispensable to prove the agency, upon the trial, if the fact is denied by the answer.[49] And where plaintiff alleges an agency, the liability of the agent, and a demand upon him to account and pay over, and defendant denies the alleged agency, plaintiff must prove the agency;[50] otherwise of course as to proving the fiduciary nature of the agency, if that relationship stands admitted by the answer.[51] And where an instrument sued on purports to have been executed by an agent for his principal, plaintiff need not prove the authority of the agent, where defendant has answered generally without specifically denying the agency.[52] In case the agent sues in his own name on such a contract he must prove an assignment.[53]

(ii) Demand Before Suit Brought. Where plaintiff sues defendant as his agent, defendant by denying the agency makes it unnecessary for plaintiff to prove a demand, before suit, for the money sued for;[54] otherwise, it seems, where the agency is admitted.[55]

c. Evidence Admissible Under Pleadings — (i) In General. The general rule that evidence in a case will not be considered on an issue not presented by the pleadings and is not admissible if not pertinent to the issues presented by the pleadings is applicable to actions by and against a principal or agent.[56]

(ii) Bill or Complaint — (a) In General. The general rule that a plaintiff, in his complaint, must state the facts constituting his cause of action, and is not at liberty to make out his case by giving in evidence facts which he has not stated in his complaint, applies to actions by or against a principal or agent.[57]

(B) Fact of Agency. Although the agency be not pleaded, evidence is admissible, under an averment in the complaint that an act was done by defendant, to show that such act was done by his authorized agent.[58]

(C) Ratification of Agent's Authority. Proof of ratification includes proof of agency and authority,[59] and may be made under a complaint charging the ratified act to be that of the principal,[60] or under an averment in the pleading that an agent acted by due authority.[61]

prove his individual liability; [64] to show the terms of the alleged agency,[65] or that the contract laid in the complaint is not the contract of the parties; [66] to prove ratification of an alleged agent's act, and thus fix the liability of his principal,[67] in order to relieve defendant from liability to plaintiff, his principal; to disprove the authority of an alleged agent; [68] or to show revocation of an alleged agency and notice thereof,[69] so as to relieve defendant from liability as principal; or to show gross misconduct, fraud, negligence, and unskilfulness on the part of plaintiff in the performance of his duties as agent, and thus defeat his right to compensation; [70] or to show, in an action by a principal against his agent to recover the proceeds of a note paid to the latter in settlement of a note after suit brought by him thereon, the expense necessarily incurred by defendant in collecting the note, for the purpose of having the same deducted from the amount collected, in fixing the extent of his liability.[71]

d. Variance — (i) In General. The general rule of pleading that plaintiff must recover secundum allegata et probata, or not at all,[72] is applicable to actions by or against a principal or agent.[73] Hence any substantial variance between the averments and proof is fatal to a recovery.[74] But the fact that

Instances of fatal variance.— When the complaint alleges that under a contract of plaintiff's proof is more narrow than his complaint does not necessarily constitute a fatal variance if what he does prove is comprehended by the allegations of the complaint.[75]

(II) As to Acts Done or Knowledge Obtained by Principal. Where the allegation in the complaint is that certain acts were done [76] or knowledge agency defendant was to sell certain cattle for a reasonable price and account for and pay over the proceeds, and the proof shows that defendant as agent was instructed to sell for cash only, there is a fatal variance between the proof and the complaint, entitling defendant to a nonsuit. Douglass v. Leland, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 490. Where plaintiff sues in his own right on a contract of insurance, and it appears that the policy was issued to him as agent of an undisclosed principal, the variance is fatal. Hamburg-Bremen F. Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 4 App. Cas. (D. C.) 66. If the complaint charges defendant with receiving lumber as plaintiff's agent to sell, and with collecting and not paying over the proceeds, and the proof is of a sale of the lumber to defendant and a partial non-payment of the price by him as original purchaser, there is a fatal variance. Peppler v. Ratz, 38 Mich. 96. Where the complaint alleges that plaintiff intrusted defendant with a sum of money on his promise to invest the same for the former, but that he converted it to his own use and refused to pay the same, and the proof is that defendant did in good faith invest the money, but negligently took insufficient security, there is a fatal variance. King v. MacKellar, 94 N. Y. 317. If a declaration alleges that defendant agreed to bid for a parcel of land at a sale by auction, and buy one undivided half of the land in behalf of, and as agent for, plaintiff, and the evidence is that defendant agreed to buy the land on their joint account, there is a variance fatal to a recovery. Parsons v. Phelan, 134 Mass. 109. Where an agent in an action for commissions on the sale and exchange of property alleges a specific contract of employment, he cannot recover by proving that the owners of the different properties, after the negotiations which he was conducting had fallen through, effected between themselves a sale and exchange on different terms from those he was authorized to make. Thornton v. Stevenson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 31 S. W. 232. Where an agent sues for commissions earned in effecting a sale of his principal's property, he cannot recover on proof that defendant wrongfully caused the sale to be effected through a third person. Bailey v. McCully, 28 Mo. App. 572.

Instances of variance held not material.— Where, in an action by a principal against his agent to recover the difference between what the agent paid for certain stock and the amount which he claimed to have paid, which was repaid to him by the principal, the complaint alleges that the agent purchased the shares of stock, and the proof shows that he purchased certain agreements of a syndicate to furnish the shares of stock, the variance is immaterial. Sommer v. Smith, 90 Cal. 260, 27 Pac. 208. There is no material variance between an allegation of a return of property to defendant because not as warranted and a demand on him to replace it as agreed, and evidence of a return to and a demand on his agent who had full charge of his business. Clydesdale Horse Co. v. Bennett, 52 Mo. App. 333. In an action on contract for the recovery of money alleged to have been received by defendant as the agent of plaintiff and not accounted for and paid over, proof that defendant is indebted on a joint adventure is not a fatal variance, and it is immaterial that defendant was arrested in the action on the ground of the alleged agency. Poirer v. Fisher, 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 258. In an action by an agent to recover commissions earned in effecting a sale of realty, where the original contract which was set out in the petition recited that a part of the consideration for the land was to be paid in cash, the admission of evidence that the principal subsequently agreed to accept as cash a secured note offered by the proposed purchaser does not constitute a material variance. Davis v. Lawrence, 52 Kan. 383, 44 Pac. 1051. Under a declaration alleging that plaintiff was employed to procure a purchaser for land which a third person had given bond to convey to defendant, proof that plaintiff was also to procure a deed of the land from such third person to the purchaser is not a material variance. Where there is no question as to the agency of a person and his authority to act for defendant, proof of the acts of such person obtained [77] by the principal, and the proof is that such acts were done or knowledge obtained by his authorized agent, there is no variance.

(III) FAILURE OF PROOF. A rule of code pleading that if the allegation to which the proof is directed is unproved, not in some particular or particulars only, but in its entire scope and meaning, it is not a case of variance, but a failure of proof, is applicable to actions by or against a principal or agent.[78]

E. Evidence [79]— 1. PRESUMPTIONS AND BURDEN OF PROOF — a. Presumptions — (I) FACT OF AGENCY — (A) In General. Excepting where a known agent acts in a given transaction, in which case there is of course a presumption, in the absence of evidence, that the relationship of principal and agent exists,[80] the law indulges in no naked presumption that an agency exists;[81] but, instead thereof, presumes that a person is acting for himself, and not as agent for another.[82] If within the scope of his agency supports an allegation that the acts were those of defendant. Baldwin v. Polti, (Tex. Civ. App. 1907) 101 S. W. 543.

Illustrations.— In an action by the indorsee of certain notes executed to a partnership and indorsed by one of the partners as agent for the partnership, evidence that the note was indorsed by such partner for himself and as an agent for the partnership will support an averment that the partnership indorsed the note, their own proper hands being to such indorsement subscribed. Rule applied.— Under an allegation in a counter-claim that defendant delivered notes to plaintiff for collection, and for the return of one half of the proceeds to defendant, proof that defendant delivered notes to plaintiff to pay an insurance premium, and that plaintiff agreed to return to defendant one half of the amount represented by the notes constitutes, not a variance, but a complete failure of proof. Strauss v. Russell, 24 Misc. (N. Y.) 386, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 401.

No failure of proof.— Where a plaintiff alleged in his complaint that he left with defendant twenty shares of stock on Sept. 27, 1854, for sale at not less than forty-six per cent, and that plaintiff sold the stock at that rate and refused to pay over the proceeds and plaintiff prayed judgment therefor; and it appeared by the proofs that the proceeds of such sale were, by plaintiff's direction, invested in other twenty shares of stock which by like direction were sold and the proceeds invested in other twenty shares, which by plaintiff's authority were sold and the proceeds received on March 20, 1855, it was held that plaintiff was entitled to recover such last-named proceeds, and that the discrepancy between the allegations and the proofs was not a failure to prove the allegations of the complaint in their entire scope and meaning. The legal presumption that a party binds himself by a contract, and does not act as agent, should turn the scale in an evenly balanced case. Curtis v. Scoles, 1 Iowa 471.

When legal presumption of personal liability exists.— The legal presumption, in the absence of evidence, is that the agent is liable only where the principal is not known or where the agent undertakes in his own name or exceeds his power; it is presumed otherwise that he intended to bind his principal since an agent should not be regarded as personally bound unless such intention is expressed in the contract. Laguna Valley Co. v. Fitch, 121 Ill. 607. When an act of an agent is within the scope of his authority, the presumption is that he intends to bind the principal, and not himself. Hall v. Lauderdale, 46 N. Y. 70.

any presumption of agency be indulged, it must be indulged from the facts and circumstances of the case.[83]

(B) Arising From Former Agency. Unless there is proof either that the agency is a general continuing agency to endure until revoked,[84] or that the agent fills some character from which such a general agency may be presumed,[85] the fact that there has been a separate former agency for a different [86] or even a similar [87] purpose, does not raise a presumption of agency as to any subsequent transaction.

(II) Character of Agency. If an agency be proved, without showing its extent, it is presumed to be general and not special; [88] not in respect to everything, but only in respect to the business with which the agency is concerned.[89] And third persons dealing with an agent have the right to presume that his agency is general, in the absence of notice to the contrary,[90] even though, as between principal and agent, there may be only a special agency.[91]

(III) Continuance of Authority of Agent — (A) In Cases of General Agency. If a general agency for any purpose be shown the presumption as to third persons previously dealing with the agent is that it continues until notice of revocation.[92]

(B) In Cases of Special Agency. In cases of special agency, limited to a particular transaction, where it appears that at the inception of the transaction an agent is authorized with respect thereto, a prima facie presumption arises that such authority continued throughout the stages of the transaction; [93] but, in the absence of competent evidence of its continuance, the presumption is that the agency ceased at the completion of the particular transaction to which it was limited.[94] It is held, however, that if the authority of an agent be special, but unlimited as to time, the presumption, as to third persons previously dealing with him, is that it continues until notice of revocation.[95]

(IV) EXTENT OF AUTHORITY — (A) In General. The presumption is that one known to be an agent is acting within the scope of his authority,[96] at least in the absence of proof as to the purpose or extent of the agency.[97] The rule does not apply, however, where the act in question is an illegal one, the presumption in such case being that the agent was without authority.[98]

(B) Authority to Convey Land. Undisturbed possession of land for many years under a deed made by an agent raises a presumption of authority on the part of the agent to make the conveyance.[99]

(C) Authority to Receive Payment For Principal — (1) IN GENERAL. There is no legal presumption that a third party, not having possession of the written evidence of or the security for, a debt, has, as to the creditor, authority as his agent to receive payment of the debt;[1] but if such person is in the possession of the security for or evidence of the debt at maturity, his authority to receive both principal and interest is presumed,[2] there being no suspicious circumstances surrounding such possession.[3] Such presumption ceases, however, when the security is withdrawn by the creditor,[4] even though the debt has been contracted through the agent.[5]

(2) IN PROPERTY INSTEAD OF MONEY. There is no legal presumption that an agent to collect a debt has authority to accept property as payment therefor in lieu of money.[6]

(V) PERFORMANCE OF DUTY. The presumption of law is that an agent has done his duty until the contrary appears;[7] misconduct and negligence will not, in the absence of proof, be presumed.[8] Thus the legal presumption, in the absence of proof, is that the agent has performed his duty and paid over and accounted to his principal for moneys received by him in his capacity of agent.[9]

(VI) RATIFICATION — (A) In General. Ratification of the unauthorized act of an agent is not presumed,[10] the presumption being against ratification of such an act, in the absence of proof of intent to ratify.[11] But in conformity with the rule that the acts of a principal are to be liberally construed in favor of an adoption of the acts of his agent,[12] it is held that when an unauthorized act of an agent is capable of ratification, evidence of acts or conduct of the principal in apparent approval of such act suffices, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to raise a presumption of ratification,[13] with all the circumstances which follow;[14] as where, with knowledge of the unauthorized act of the agent, there is a silence or acquiescence for an unreasonable time, without objection, on the part of the principal,[15] or where the principal receives and holds the fruits of the agent's act.[16] However, the presumption of ratification, raised by evidence of conduct of the principal in apparent approval of the unauthorized act of the agent, is not necessarily conclusive, and may be rebutted by proof,[17] unless the conduct shown on the part of the principal is inconsistent with any hypothesis other than that he intended to adopt such act as his own,[18] or the silence or acquiescence of the principal, after knowledge of the unauthorized act of the agent, is contrary to his duty [19] or has a tendency to mislead the agent,[20] or other party affected thereby,[21] and proof of express and seasonable repudiation by the principal will of course overcome any presumption of ratification arising from acts or conduct of his own in apparent approval of the unauthorized act of the agent.[22]

(B) When Act in Excess or Misuse of Authority. When the unauthorized act of the agent is done in the execution of a power conferred, but in excess or misuse of the authority given, a presumption of ratification more readily arises from slight acts of confirmation,[23] or from mere silence or acquiescence.[24] And the presumption arising from acquiescence in the unauthorized act of an agent who has exceeded his authority is much stronger than if the act had been that of a mere stranger.[25]

(VII) Estoppel of Principal to Deny Authority of Agent. There is no presumption of estoppel on the part of the principal to deny the agency.[26]

(VIII) Time of Execution of Power of Attorney. The presumption is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that a power of attorney was executed on the day of its date.[27]

(IX) As to Whom Credit Is Extended. Where an agent enters into an authorized contract for a disclosed principal, it is presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the credit was extended by the third person to the principal rather than to the agent, and that therefore the intention was to bind the former and not the latter.[28]

Ground of presumption.— That the principal had an election, either to disavow the unauthorized act of his agent and tender a return of the goods or to keep the goods and pay for them, is the ground on which a presumption of ratification is indulged from the retention of goods bought by an agent in excess of his authority. (B) Termination of Relation. The burden of showing that a general agency, shown to have been established for a given purpose, was terminated before [33] or during [34] the transaction in question, is on the party asserting it. To meet the burden of proving the termination of the agency the principal asserting it, as against a third person previously dealing with the agent, must show that, before or during the transaction in question, notice,[35] express or implied,[36] of the revocation of the agency had been conveyed to such person.

(C) Continuance of Authority. In cases of special agency, limited to a particular transaction, the agency is deemed to have ceased at the completion of the transaction, and the burden rests with the one asserting it to prove continuance of authority.[37]

(D) Extent of Authority — (I) IN GENERAL. Not only does the burden of proof as to the fact of agency rest with one who seeks to charge another as principal with the acts of an alleged agent, but the burden also rests with him to prove the extent of the agency; [38] in other words, the burden is upon him to show that the act or acts of the agent were within the scope of his authority.[39] But where general authority is established, and the act of the agent is not shown to be of an unusual or extraordinary character, the presumption is that the agent had authority to do such act,[40] and the burden of proof is upon the principal to show that he had not such authority.[41] So a principal who asserts knowledge by third persons of limitations upon the power of an agent shown to be acting under a general authority assumes the burden of showing such knowledge.[42]

(2) Authority to Sell and Convey Land. Where a deed purports to be made by an agent, one claiming under such deed must prove that the agent had authority,[43] in writing,[44] or else show facts serving as an excuse for the absence of written authority.[45] If the power under which the agent acted was limited or contingent, the happening of the contingency must be shown.[46] If the lands intended to be conveyed by the power are not definitely designated, it must be shown by evidence extrinsic of the power that the lands actually conveyed by the agent were those so intended.[47]

(3) Authority to Make Lease. Authority on the part of an agent to make a lease must be shown by the party claiming thereunder.[48]

such payments, the burden is still on the person making the payment to show that the authority remained unrevoked at the time of payment.[51] While authority in an agent to receive payment for his principal may be inferred from his possession of the securities that evidence the debt, yet it is incumbent upon the debtor who makes payment to the agent to show that such securities were in the latter's hands at the time payment was made;[52] and if the debtor pays an agent not in possession of the securities evidencing the debt it is incumbent upon him to show that the person receiving the payment has express authority so to do,[53] or has been represented by the creditor to have such authority.[54]

(b) In Anything Other Than Money. The burden is upon one seeking to establish authority in an agent for the collection of a debt to bind his principal by receiving anything other than money in payment of a debt, to show that the receipt was expressly authorized by the principal,[55] or that the latter has done acts from which such authority may be fairly implied.[56]

(6) Authority to Employ. Before a principal can be charged with the services of a person hired by his agent it must be shown that the employment was within the agent's authority, [8] except in some cases of employment by officers of a corporation, where the authority of such officers to employ may be presumed.[59]

(7) Authority to Purchase. When a sale is made to an agent, the burden of proof, in an action to recover the purchase-price from the principal, is upon the seller to show that the agent had authority to bind the principal;[60] and if the sale is made to an agent who is conducting a certain business for his principal, and authorized to purchase supplies on credit, the burden is upon the seller to show that the goods sold are of such a character as the nature of the business authorizes the agent to buy.[61]

(8) Authority to Sell on Credit. Where an agent authorized to sell goods, sells on credit, the vendee has the burden of showing, as against the principal, that the sale was in accordance with the usages of trade, and that the credit was not unreasonable.[62]

(9) Authority to Make Guaranty or Warranty. Whenever it is out of the usual course of an agent's business to make a guaranty, the party seeking to hold his principal liable thereon has the burden of showing the agent's authority to make the guaranty, or that the principal subsequently ratified his act.[63] In the absence of proof of express authority to make a warrant as to the quality of certain goods, the burden of proving a usage or custom in the sale of such goods to warrant them as to quality, must be assumed by the third person who seeks to hold the principal for a breach of the warranty.[64]

(E) Ratification.[65] A party relying on a ratification of the unauthorized act of an agent has the burden of proving it.[66] To meet the burden it is necessary to show that the ratification was made under such circumstances as to be binding on the principal,[67] especially to see to it that all material facts were made known to him,[68] or, as is sometimes stated, to see to it that there was an adoption of the act by the principal with full knowledge of what had been done in his name and on his behalf;[69] and it does not suffice to show that the principal omitted to make inquiries, and that the facts might have been learned by diligence on his part, if it appears that he misapprehended or was mistaken as to material facts.[70] But in sustaining the burden of proof cast on one seeking to enforce a liability by ratification, arising from silence or a failure to repudiate an unauthorized act after knowledge thereof, it is not necessary for him to show that by such silence he has been misled to his prejudice.[71]

(F) Estoppel. The burden of proving facts working an estoppel to deny the agency is on the person asserting it as against the principal.[72] To meet the burden of proof cast on a party asserting an estoppel, he must show that the alleged principal's conduct, whether it was so intended or not, did mislead him into believing that the apparent authority was real, and so believing, to rely on it.[73]

(G) To Charge Principal With Knowledge Obtained by Agent Before Agency Existed. The burden is on a party seeking to charge a principal with knowledge of his agent acquired in a different transaction but before the agency existed, to show by clear and satisfactory evidence that the knowledge was present in the agent's mind at the time of the transaction under the agency.[74]

(H) To Charge Agent Personally. When one who has professedly acted as an agent is sued, touching the contract so made, the burden lies upon plaintiff to show want of authority in the agent, rather than upon the latter to show the existence of the authority.[75] But if one sued on an alleged warranty seeks to avoid personal liability, on the ground that he was acting as agent in making the warranty, the burden is upon him to show that he had authority to bind his principal in that regard.[76]

(I) To Enable Undisclosed Principal to Sue on Contract Made by Agent. In an action by an undisclosed principal on a contract made by an agent in his own name, the burden of proof lies on the principal to show the agency, and that in making the contract the agent was acting for him.[77]

(J) To Exonerate Principal From Liability. A principal who seeks exemption from liability for goods sold to his agent, on the ground that credit was exclusively given to the latter, has the burden of proving it.[78]

In an action against an agent for breach of an implied warranty of authority, after it appears that defendant assumed to act as agent for a third person, the burden of proof is not thereby cast on defendant to show that he had actual authority to so act, but the burden is upon plaintiff to show that defendant did not have such authority. Cas. § 197, holding that where a defendant seeks to defend on the ground that he made the contract sued on as agent, and is not liable thereon, the burden is on him to show, not only that he was acting as such agent, but that at the time of the making of the contract he informed the other party that he was so acting, and disclosed to him the name of the principal for whom he was acting.

Where in making an oral contract language was used by one of the parties which in its ordinary sense would amount to an undertaking to be personally bound, the burden of proof rests on him to show that he meant to be bound as agent for another. Brant v. Gallup, 5 Ill. App. 262.

which may be either descriptive of the person or indicative of the character in which he contracts, so as to be prima facie liable on the contract,[80] the burden is on him, if sued on the contract, to establish the defense that the contract was made by him as agent.

(L) To Show Fairness of Transaction Between Principal and Agent. In all transactions between principal and agent the burden of proof is upon the latter to show the most entire good faith on his part, a full disclosure of all facts and circumstances, and an absence of all undue influence, advantage, or imposition.[81]

(II) In Particular Actions — (A) Actions For Accounting — (1) In General. Where a principal sues his agent for an accounting, he has the burden of proof to show the amount received and not accounted for.[82] But it is not incumbent upon him to go further and show that the agent has not accounted for it or paid it over.[83] On the contrary the burden of proof is upon the agent to show either that he has accounted,[84] or some sufficient reason why he has failed to do so.[85]

(2) Disbursements on Account of Principal. In a suit of a principal against an agent for a settlement of accounts, and the recovery of the balance found to be due, in which defendant claims reimbursement for certain expenditures, the onus probandi is on the latter, and he must show that such disbursements were made for the account of the principal, and that the same were authorized or accepted by the principal.[86]

duties pertaining to the agency, the burden of proving such neglect or misconduct is on the principal; but when a prima facie case of negligence has been established it is on the agent to show facts relieving him from liability.[89]

(c) Actions For Compensation. In an action by an agent for commissions, the burden is upon him to prove an agreement for the commissions sought to be recovered,[90] and that such commissions are due.[91] The burden of proving matters of defense to such an action is upon the principal.[92]

2. Admissibility — a. In General — (i) To Prove Agency or Authority — (a) In General. Any evidence which is otherwise competent that has a tendency to prove agency is admissible, even though it be not full and satisfactory, as it is the province of the jury to pass upon it.[93] But evidence is not admissible, either to prove or disprove an agency, which is entirely consistent with the contention thereby sought to be controverted. Such evidence is immaterial, and should be rejected.[94]

Defense of loss by theft.— If an agent intermingles money belonging to his principal either with his own or with that of other persons, and defends a suit for the amount on the ground of its loss by theft without fault on his part, the burden is upon him to show that the identical money stolen belonged to the principal. Bartlett v. Hamilton, 46 Me. 435.

Fact that principal sustained no loss.— In an action by the holder of a bill or note against the bank, to which he gave it to present for acceptance and to collect, for neglect to give notice to other parties, the burden of proof is on the bank to show that the payee sustained no damage by the neglect. To prove for whom the assumed agent acted.— Where it is sought to bind the principal by the acts of a person alleged to be his agent, the principal has the right to prove by the alleged agent for whom he acted, as tending to show that the principal was not responsible for his acts. Dowell v. Williams, 33 Kan. 310, 6 Pac. 600.

(2) As to Extent of Authority. Where the powers and duties of the agent are not reduced to writing, his testimony is competent to prove the extent of his authority,[1] and also the fact that he had no authority to do the act in question,[2] except where the evidence shows that the agent had been held out as possessing such authority.[3]

(3) Testimony Must Be as to Facts and Not Conclusions. In receiving the testimony of the alleged agent to prove or disprove the fact of agency, the general rule that a witness must testify to facts and not to conclusions, is applicable, and hence it is not competent for the agent to give his opinion or state his conclusion as to the fact of agency;[4] but he may state the facts and circumstances concerning the various transactions between him and the alleged principal,[5] leaving the court and the jury to determine, under the facts disclosed, whether or not he was such agent.[6]

(c) Declarations of Agent — (1) As Against Principal — (a) General Rule. The declarations of an alleged agent are not admissible against the alleged principal to prove the fact of his agency.[7] Neither are the declarations of an agent statements, contained in letters, letter heads, receipts, or other documents, implying, admitting, or claiming authority to act as agent in the negotiations with the third person.[10]

(b) In Support of Other Evidence. While the declarations of an alleged agent are inadmissible to prove agency, if the agency be otherwise prima facie proved, they become admissible in corroboration.[11]

(c) To Prove Belief and Holding Out by Agent. Although the acts and declarations of the agent are incompetent to establish the agency, they are admissible to prove that the agent believed himself to be the agent of a particular principal, and so held himself out, and that the third person dealt with him as such in good faith.[12]

Declarations to show for what principal the agent acted.— While the fact of agency cannot be shown by the declarations of an agent, evidence is competent to show that, in what

(2) As Against Agent. The rule that agency cannot be proved by the acts or declarations of the agent does not apply to an action by the principal against the agent, but only where it is sought to hold the principal for the acts of an alleged agent.[13]

(3) As Against Principal Suing Upon Contract. Declarations of a party assuming to act as agent for another are admissible to establish agency where the principal is suing on a contract made by such agent, and thereby ratifying the same.[14]

(D) Declarations and Admissions of Principal. Any declaration or admission of the principal which in any way tends to establish the fact of agency, or the extent of authority, is admissible in evidence,[15] although not known to the person dealing with the agent.[16] Thus letters written by the principal expressly or impliedly admitting that a certain person was his agent, or the extent of his authority, are competent evidence against the principal,[17] although not written to the adverse party.[18]

(E) Declarations of Other Persons — (1) In General. Declarations of strangers to the suit, tending to prove the alleged agency, are inadmissible, for they have no right to speak for the principal, and facts of which they are cognizant should be proved by their testimony on the witness stand, and not by their statements, oral or written, made outside the court.[19]

(2) Other Agents. The scope of authority of an agent, as to a past transaction at least, cannot be proved by the unsworn declarations of another agent.[20] But declarations of a general agent may be admissible for the purpose of showing the authority of an inferior agent.[21]

principal and agent in which the authority of the latter is expressly or impliedly admitted are admissible in evidence.[22] Thus a letter from the principal to the agent, bearing upon the fact or scope of his agency, is admissible.[23] So evidence of conversations between the principal and agent is admissible to show the authority of the latter.[24] But such conversations are not admissible to deny an authority actually conferred upon the agent.[25] Nor are they admissible when had before the agency arose and not shown to relate thereto.[26]

(G) Communications Between Third Person and Agent. A conversation between an agent and the party dealing with him, while not evidence of the agent's authority, is admissible to show the understanding of such party on the subject,[27] his good faith,[28] and that he was justified in treating the agent as such.[29]

(H) Instructions to Agent — (1) By Principal. Since the scope of an agent's authority depends in whole or in part upon the instructions of the principal, such instructions may be given in evidence,[30] although they are opposed to the apparent authority of the agent.[31] Furthermore the principal should be permitted to disavow the giving of instructions testified to by the opposite party.[32] But instructions to an agent, not communicated to the third person, cannot be received, on the principal's behalf, to substantiate the agent's story as to what a contract entered into by him actual y was.[33]

(2) By Other Persons. Evidence that a certain person gave an agent directions is not admissible in favor of the principal and against a third person with whom the agent has dealt, in the absence of evidence that the person who gave the instructions was connected with the principal.[34]

(I) Documentary Evidence.[35] In determining the scope of an agent's authority, contracts executed, and documents used, by the agent within his real or ostensible authority, may be introduced to establish its limits.[36]

(J) Parol Evidence — (1) In General. Except in special cases,[37] the fact of agency or the extent of authority may be established by parol.[38]

(2) To Vary or Explain Contract Made by Agent [39] — (a) Contracts Under Seal. Parol evidence is inadmissible to show that the nominal party to a contract under seal was acting as agent for another,[40] either for the purpose of exonerating him from liability [41] or for the purpose of charging his principal,[42] or, as otherwise expressed, a contract under seal may not be turned into a simp e contract of a person not in any way appearing on its face to be a party to or interested in it, on proof dehors the instrument that the nominal party was acting as agent of another,[43] either for the purpose of charg ng the principal [44] or to enable him to sue.[45]

(b) Simple Contracts — aa. To Charge Principal. It is a well settled rule of evidence that where a reading of a simple contract discloses that it is executed for or on behalf of a principal,[46] or discloses an intention to bind such principal,[47]

Such evidence is admissible on the ground that parol evidence for the purpose of introducing a new party to a simple contract in no wise contradicts it. Kean v. Davis, 20 N. J. L. 425.

Although it involves proof of the ownership of a vessel, parol evidence is admissible to show for whom an agent failing to disclose his principal acted in making a simple contract. Harriman v. First Bryan Baptist Church, 63 Ga. 186, 36 Am. Rep. 117.

That the contract is required by the statute of frauds to be in writing is immaterial. Stewart v. Fenly, 10 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 40.

The rule in regard to written contracts not negotiable is that parol evidence is admissible to show that they were executed in the business of the principal, and with intent to bind him, although signed in the name of the agent alone. Texas Land, etc., Co. v. Carroll, 63 Tex. 48; Butler v. Merchant, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 27 S. W. 193.

In the case of negotiable paper executed by an agent in his own name, parol evidence principal.[50] This advanced doctrine is repudiated, however, in a few jurisdictions, it being held that if a contract purports to be executed by one in his own behalf,[51] or shows without ambiguity that the one so executing, although an agent, binds himself as principal,[52] parol evidence is inadmissible to show that the agent acted for his principal in making the contract, and that the latter is therefore liable.

bb. To Enable Principal to Sue. Where there is nothing to define the character of the contracting party to a simple contract, he may be shown by parol to be agent merely, so as to cast the right of suing on the real principal;[53] such evidence not contradicting the writing, but merely explaining the transaction.[54] But when the contracting party expressly states himself to be "owner," it is not competent to show by parol that he acted not as owner but as agent for the real owner.[55]

cc. To Charge Agent Personally. Where a contract on its face is unequivocally that of a principal by the hand of his agent, parol evidence is inadmissible to contradict the plain terms of such contract by showing that it was intended to bind the agent personally.[56]

dd. To Exonerate Agent From Liability. If a simple contract, on its face, is the undertaking of the agent only, no reference being made on its face to representais not admissible to charge the principal (Heaton v. Myers, 4 Colo. 59); but where there is anything on the face of the bill or note showing that the party signing is acting for another and not for himself, the rule is otherwise (Gillig v. Lake Bigler Road Co., 2 Nev. 214).

Parol evidence is not admissible to show that a contract which is not a negotiable instrument, and not required to be under seal, although so in fact, executed by and in the name of an agent, is a contract of the principal, although the principal is known to the other contracting party at the time of the execution of the contract. Barbre v. Goodale, 28 Oreg. 465, 38 Pac. 67, 43 Pac. 378.

50 Chanler v. Coe, 54 N. H. 561, where it is held that parol evidence is admissible for the purpose of charging an unknown principal on a simple contract, but not for the purpose of charging a known principal, the court placing its ruling on the ground that if plaintiff knew when the contract was entered into that it was made for the benefit of a third party, the writing shows that he elected to look to the agent for its performance and parol evidence is not admissible to vary the writing by showing that he looked to the principal and not the agent.

When a principal is known to the party dealing with the agent and such party accepts a written contract of the agent, which in no way purports to bind or to be in behalf of the principal, but on behalf of the agent alone, such party is bound to look to the agent, and cannot maintain an action against the principal on such contract; and parol evidence is not admissible to change the legal effect of such contract so as to make it a contract of the principal. W. 62, where it is said that the principle that if the contract is so uncertain in its terms as to leave it in doubt whether the principal or agent is to be bound, such uncertainty may be obviated by the production of parol evidence, cannot aid plaintiff suing on a contract executed by another as principal, and bearing nothing on its face to denote his agency for any person.

54. Powell v. Wade, 109 Ala. 95, 19 So. 500, 55 Am. St. Rep. 915; Ford v. Williams, 21 How. (U. S.) 287, 6 L. ed. 36.

Such proof does not vary or contradict the writing, but merely establishes a separate collateral fact, namely, the relation existing between the party contracting and for whose benefit the contract is made; or, in other words, the authority under which the agent acts out of which grow the rights and obligations of the principal under the contract. Oelrichs v. Ford, 21 Md. 489.

tive capacity, parol evidence will not be received to exonerate the agent,[57] whether the principal was known or unknown at the time the contract was executed.[58] But if the paper bears on its face some reference to a principal,[59] or some appellation indicating representative capacity,[60] thereby suggesting doubt as to the character in which defendant acted, parol evidence is admissible to show that the contract was in fact that of defendant's principal and that it was so understood between defendant and the other contracting party. So too the agent may show by parol, in order to relieve himself from liability on an apparent written agreement which if real would bind him on its face, that it was agreed when it was signed that it should not take effect as a contract, but that the real contract was an unwritten one which bound only his principal.[61] resorted to for the purpose of establishing agency, all the facts and circumstances showing the relation of the parties, and throwing light upon the character of such relation, are admissible in evidence.[63]

(2) Acts of Agent — (a) In General. Great latitude allowed.—The evidence necessary to establish an implied agency is very different from that required to prove an express agency. In the former case greater latitude must necessarily be allowed in the admission of testimony tending to prove facts and circumstances from which the existence of an agency may be legitimately inferred. Patterson v. Van Loon, 186 Pa. St. 367, 40 Atl. 495. From the nature of the case, evidence that would tend to prove an implied agency would be admissible as proof of an express agency. Patterson v. Van Loon, supra.

Evidence of the motives or conditions of the parties is immaterial, except it be shown that such motives or conditions explain appearances that seem to contradict the actual fact as to the agency, as such fact has been proved by other evidence. It is the fact of agency, not the motives or conditions of the parties, that is in question. Fitzgerald v. Pendergast, 114 Mass. 368. Thus evidence that the agent was insolvent is inadmissible to prove that he did have authority to do as he did. Hare v. Bailey, 73 Minn. 409, 76 N. W. 213. Materiality of such evidence.— Where the authority of an agent is in issue, proof of the exercise by him, with the knowledge of the principal, of similar authority in past transactions, may be material in two respects: In the first place, where notice is brought home to the person with whom a contract is made, such evidence tends to show that the agent was acting within the scope of his apparent authority, and so tends to bind the principal, even though actual authority in the particular instance be disproved. In the second place, the exercise of such authority in past transactions, known to the principal, tends to prove that in the particular transaction in question the agent possessed actual authority, there being no special instructions; because, where an agent, under certain circumstances, had been permitted to exercise a certain authority, the principal knowing the facts, and a similar transaction is intrusted to him under the same circumstances as before, and without special instructions, the presumption is, his author-must, in some way, directly or indirectly, be connected with the circumstances,[68] and it must be shown that the person dealing with the agent had knowledge at the time of such dealing of such previous acts and relied upon them.[69]

(b) Necessity of Similarity of Acts. But the acts from which authority to do a specific act can be implied must be of the same general character and effect.[70] The fact that the principal had allowed one to act as agent in matters of one kind, or at one place, ordinarily raises no presumption of authority to act in matters of a different kind, or at a different place, and accordingly is inadmissible for that purpose.[71]

(4) Course of Dealing. As proof of agency a previous course of dealing, sanctioned or ratified by the principal, is competent, as having a tendency to prove agency in the given case, although the jury must determine its weight for such purpose.[72]

(5) Special Authority For Single Act. A special authority to make a particular, or single, contract is no ground for inferring an implied authority to make other contracts generally of the same kind with other persons, and evidence thereof is not admissible.[73]

(6) Authority of Similar Agents. Evidence that a previous agent in the same position had a certain authority is admissible as tending to prove that the agent in question had the same authority.[74]

ity is the same. Wilber First Nat. Bank v. Ridpath, 47 Nebr. 96, 66 N. W. 37.

Evidence of previous but not of subsequent similar acts is admissible. Mills v. Berla, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 23 S. W. 910. But see Blowers v. Southern R. Co., 74 S. C. 221, 54 S. E. 368.

Evidence that an agent did all the principal's business is competent to show agency in a certain transaction, if the period to which such testimony related covered the time of the transaction. Effect of inquiry by third person.— Prior circumstances are not admissible to prove an agency when it appears that the third person made inquiry of the principal as to the authority. The principal's answer destroys the effect of previous circumstances and they are then admissible only to explain the import of his answer. Norton v. Richmond, 93 Ill. 367.

(7) Custom of Agent in Transacting Business.[75] Evidence is admissible to show that one dealt with an agent in the customary way;[76] but when an action is brought under claim of authority in an agent to do a specific act, evidence of the general custom of the agent is immaterial and should be excluded.[77]

(8) Character of Business. Where an agent is given authority to perform every act requisite to be done in the transaction of the principal's business, evidence of the character of such business is admissible in order to determine the scope of the agency.[78]

(9) General Reputation. Agency cannot be established by general reputation.[79]

(10) Opinion of Witnesses. Testimony that one acted as agent for another is a conclusion of law, and a witness is not competent to express an opinion on that subject.[80] But when it is sought to prove that no authority was given, the objection that facts and not conclusions must be testified to does not apply.[81]

(11) To Prove Ratification. The acts and declarations of the principal tending to prove ratification of an agent's acts are admissible for that purpose,[82] but evidence of ratification of previous acts of an agent in no way connected with the act in question is not competent.[83]

b. In Particular Actions — (1) Actions For Accounting. In an action by a principal against his agent for an accounting any competent evidence tending to show the receipt of money by the agent and failure to account therefor is admissible.[84] The agent is entitled to the benefit of his own testimony as to the completeness of the accounting, and may be asked whether he has accounted for all moneys collected by him for plaintiff.[85] His books, if the entries are made in the usual course of business, are admissible against the principal;[86] but unless such books purport to contain all the charges and payments to and for his principal, he will not be restricted from proving them in any other way.[87] By way of set-off, the agent may introduce in evidence receipts from persons to whom he has paid money on account of his principal.[88] Immaterial and irrelevant testimony is of course inadmissible in an action for an accounting the same as in other actions.[89]

(II) Actions For Negligence or Wrongful Acts of Agent. In an action by a principal against his agent for negligence or misconduct, all the facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction are admissible.[90] Evidence of what another agent would have done under the circumstances is inadmissible on the issue whether an agent was negligent.[91] Nor can the bad reputation of a person whom the agent trusted be shown for this purpose.[92] Where the cause of action is for misconduct, evidence tending only to show negligence is inadmissible.[93]

Upon the question whether the agency is general, the agent having the exclusive right to make sales of the principal's wares within certain territory, so as to entitle him to compensation for sales within the territory made by himself or the principal, or a limited agency, the agent to make such sales as he could, and receive pay for such as he made, where the direct evidence is conflicting, the acts of the agent known to and acted on by the principal may be shown. Methods employed by agent.— In an action by an agent against his principal for breach of a contract by which the agent agreed to use his "best reasonable endeavors to introduce and sell" the principal's medicines throughout the country, the latter may show that the methods employed by the agent were not the best. Perry v. Jensen, 142 Pa. St. 125, 21 Atl. 866, 12 L. R. A. 393.

Evidence that a principal had other agents in plaintiff's territory is inadmissible to show non-performance by plaintiff. De Loach Mills Mfg. Co. v. Middlebrooks, 95 Ala. 459, 10 So. 917.

evidence of the reasonableness thereof is inadmissible.[99] Where the rate of compensation has not been fixed, evidence of the customary commissions for such services as were rendered is admissible,[1] and whether or not the agent employed was a regular broker does not affect the competency of such evidence.[2] So where the evidence is conflicting as to what commissions the agent was to receive, it is competent to show the compensation allowed by other parties to their agents engaged in the same business.[3]

(c) Time of Payment. Where the contract sued on does not provide as to the time when the amount claimed shall be payable, evidence as to the time usually fixed for the payment of similar commissions is admissible.[4]

3. Weight and Sufficiency. The weight and sufficiency of the evidence in actions arising out of the relation of principal and agent is governed by the rules applicable to the weight and sufficiency of evidence in civil actions in general.[5] A preponderance of evidence is sufficient to establish matters in issue,[6] and the facts need not be established with such definite certainty as to leave no reasonable doubt in the minds of the jury. Thus a preponderance of evidence is sufficient to establish the existence of the agency.[7] Likewise the nature and extent of the Notice to principal.— Where defendant placed an agent in charge of a stock of goods under an agreement that, when its debt due from the agent was paid, it would transfer the goods to him, and the agent executed a note to plaintiffs in defendant's name, the testimony of defendant that he was never notified by plaintiffs of the note, and never had any intimation of it until long after the stock was taken from the agent and sold to other parties, supports a finding that defendant did not know at the time he took back the stock that the agent had borrowed any money from plaintiffs on defendant's responsibility. Ratification see Ladenberg v. Beal-Doyle Dry Goods Co., 83 Ark. 440, 104 S. W. 145;

It has been held that the disputed testimony of an alleged agent alone is insufficient to prove the agency.[10]

F. Trial — 1. In General. The course and conduct of trials in actions arising out of the relation of principal and agent are governed by the rules of trial applicable to civil actions in general.[11] Where the liability of the principal is sought to be established through the acts of an alleged authorized agent, the order of proof is in the discretion of the court, which may allow proof of the execution of the acts in question before proof of the authority.[12]

2. Province of Court and of Jury — a. General Rules. Questions of law in actions relating to principal and agent are, as in other civil actions, for the determination of the court and it is error to submit them to the jury.[13] Issues of fact

Where the basis of an agent's commissions is in issue, in an equitable action between him and the principal, and the facts of a fiduciary relation and an obligation to account and that a balance owing the agent are all admitted, a trial of the main issue should first be had before the court, and then, if an accounting is necessary, it may be provided for in the interlocutory decree. 12. Firtz v. Chicago Grain, etc., Co., 136 Iowa 699, 114 N. W. 193 (holding that where, in an action for broker's commissions, the main question is the authority of defendant's agent to employ plaintiff, plaintiff's testimony regarding the contract with the agent, and what was done thereunder, is admissible, although the authority of the agent to hire plaintiff has not yet been shown — the order of testimony being in the discretion of the court); Emerson v. Province Hat Mfg. Co., 12 Mass. 237, 7 Am. Dec. 66 (holding, however, that before a sealed instrument executed by an agent can be submitted to the jury, the authority of the agent must be shown); American Car, etc., Co., v. Alexandria Water Co., 218 Pa. St. 542, 67 Atl. 861 (holding that on an issue as to whether notes delivered to plaintiff's manager were taken in payment of plaintiff's claim, it was in the discretion of the court to permit proof of the execution and delivery of the notes and matters incidental thereto before proving the agency and scope of the authority of plaintiff's manager to receive them); Beal v. Adams Express Co., 13 Pa. Super Ct. 143. But see People v. Courson, 87 Ill. W. 35, 19 Ky. L. App. 89 (question whether principal delayed an unreasonable time before disaffirming agent's acts).

Iowa.— Minnesota Linseed Oil Co. v. Montague, 65 Iowa 67, 21 N. W. 184, holding that what constitutes a reasonable time within which to examine and approve or disapprove the agent's account is ordinarily a question for the jury.

Michigan.— Haas v. Malto-Grapo Co., 148 Mich. 358, 111 N. W. 1059 (question whether goods shipped to a sales agent pursuant to a contract of agency were inferior and were overcharged for); Lorimer v. Boylan, 98 Mich. 18, 56 N. W. 1043 (question whether an agent sold within a reasonable time, his directions being to sell "right away").

Minnesota.— Dayton v. Buford, 18 Minn. 126, question of the nature, effect, and interpretation of correspondence between the owner of land and his agent in relation to the sale of the land.

Missouri.— St. Louis Gunning Advertising Co. v. Wanamaker, 115 Mo. App. 270, 90 S. W. 737, question whether advertising contracted for by agent was necessary.

New Hampshire.— Lamoreaux v. Rolfe, 36 N. H. 33, question whether an agreement was signed by an agent before or after the delivery of the power authorizing its execution.

New York.— Colgan v. Aymar, Lalor 27 (question whether agents for a principal who had become insane were personally liable for wages of employees whose employment they had directed); Cape Fear Bank v. Gomez, 6 Cow. 435 (question whether a note described in a power and those actually seized were the same).

Pennsylvania.— Perry v. Jensen, 142 Pa. St. 125, 21 Atl. 866, 12 L. R. A. 393, question whether an agent used "his best reasonable endeavors" as agreed.

South Carolina.— Robert Buist Co. v. Lancaster Mercantile Co., 73 S. C. 48, 52 S. E. 789, question whether a salesman sold goods under an agreement that his principal should pay the freight.

See 40 Cent. Dig. tit. "Principal and Agent," § 721½.

Custom and usage of trade.— The existence and applicability of a custom or usage of trade is a question for the jury. Hickborn v. Bradley, 117 Iowa 130, 90 N. W. 592 (question of existence of a custom as to length of time during which a jobber should endeavor to introduce a brand of goods); Forrester v. Bordman, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 4,945, 1 Story 43 (question whether the usage of trade allows an agent to sell on credit). Thus it is for the jury to determine the existence or non-existence of a custom that selling agents may warrant the quality of what they sell. Herring v. Skaggs, 62 Ala. 180, 34 Am. Rep. 4 (warranty of a safe); Hayner v. Churchill, 29 Mo. App. 676 (warranty of a reaper); Reese v. Bates, 94 Va. 321, 26 S. E. 865 (warranty of fertilizer); Westurn v. Page, 94 Wis. 251, 68 N. W. 1003 (warranty of a horse); Pickert v. Marston, 68 Wis. 465, 32 N. W. 550, 60 Am. Rep. 876 (warranty of foodstuffs). But it has been held that in some instances, such as the sale of a slave or a horse, power given to sell carries with it, as a matter of law, power to warrant soundness. Herring v. Skaggs, 62 Ala. 180, 34 Am. Rep. 4; Cocke v. Campbell, 13 Ala. 286; Skinner v. Gunn, 9 Port. (Ala.) 305. But see Westurn v. Page, 94 Wis. 251, 68 N. W. 1003. It has been suggested, as a reason for this distinction, that "perhaps the custom of such warranties is so general, and has prevailed so long, that it has come to be treated as judicial knowledge." Herring v. Skaggs, 62 Ala. 180, 34 Am. Rep. 4.

Negligence, diligence, and reasonable care are questions for the jury. Brown v. Clayton, 12 Ga. 564 (whether agent was guilty of negligence in not instituting a suit for the benefit of his principal); Munford v. Miller, 7 Ill. App. 63 (whether principal was guilty of contributory negligence in not discovering a mistake, which was patent upon the face of a mortgage procured in his favor by his agent, in which the land was wrongly described); Heinemann v. Heard, 50 N. Y. 27 (whether agent guilty of negligence in delaying to purchase goods ordered by principal); Darling v. Younker, 37 Ohio St. 487, 41 Am. Rep. 532 (negligence of collection agent in dealing with funds of principal); Milwaukee Nat. Bank v. City Bank, 103 U. S. 668, 26 L. ed. 417 (whether selling justify the jury in finding in his favor, the question should be submitted to the jury and it is error to withdraw the case from them by nonsuit, direction of verdict, instructions, or by sustaining a demurrer to the evidence.[15] But if there is no evidence on an issue of fact,[16] or if the facts are not in dispute,[17] the question becomes one of law for the court.

b. Particular Questions — (i) As to Existence of Agency. When any evidence is adduced tending to prove the existence of a disputed agency its existence or non-existence is as a general rule a question of fact for the jury, aided by agent used reasonable diligence in discharging his duties to his principal).

Right of agent to compensation; amount; procuring cause.— The right of an agent to compensation and the amount thereof are usually questions for the jury. Mattingly v. Roach, 84 Cal. 207, 23 Pac. 1117; Miles v. Mays, 15 Colo. 133, 25 Pac. 312 (whether agent personally liable to subagent for commisssion upon sale of land); Ferguson v. Glaspie, 38 Minn. 418, 38 N. W. 352 (whether agent had procured purchaser under such circumstances as to entitle him to commission); Ruckman v. Bergholz, 38 N. J. L. 531 (measure of compensation for selling land, no rate being fixed between principal and agent); Darling v. Howe, 14 N. Y. Suppl. 561 (whether services were gratuitous or rendered in expectation of compensation); Sherman v. Port Huron Engine, etc., Co., 8 S. D. 343, 66 N. W. 1077 (whether order obtained by agent was rejected for such cause as to deprive agent of right to commission); Coolican v. Milwaukee, etc., Imp. Co., 79 Wis. 471, 48 N. W. 717 (whether contract for commission on sales of real estate included both auction and private sales); Best v. Sinz, 73 Wis. 243, 41 N. W. 169 (holding that where the contract of employment was silent as to the compensation the agent should receive, he is entitled to a reasonable compensation, which is for the jury to fix, and, the jury having been told several times that they were to fix the amount, a hypothetical allusion by the court to ten per cent is not erroneous). So it is for the jury to determine whether an agent was the procuring cause of a sale or purchase so as to entitle him to a commission thereon. Huntington v. Wolcott, 5 Day (Conn.) 390; Kelso v. Woodruff, 88 Mich. 299, 50 N. W. 249; Merton v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co., 99 Mo. App. 630, 74 S. W. 434; Ransom v. Wheelwright, 17 Misc. (N. Y.) 141, 39 N. Y. Suppl. 342; Brodhead v. Pullman Ventilator Co., 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 19; Coolican v. Milwaukee, etc., Imp. Co., 79 Wis. 471, 48 N. W. 717; Bayley v. Chadwick, 39 L. T. Rep. N. S. 429; Kynaston v. Nicholson, 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 671.

Whether a transaction was a sale or a consignment for sale is a question for the jury. Rauber v. Sundback, 1 S. D. 238, 46 N. W. 927; Conrad v. Kelley, 106 Wis. 252, 82 N. W. 141.

Whether the third party has elected to hold either principal or agent, where the latter has entered into an unauthorized contract, is usually a question of fact for the jury. Ferry v. Moore, 18 Ill. App. 135; Cobb v. Knapp, 71 N. Y. 348, 27 Am. Rep. 51; Calder v. Dobell, L. R. 6 C. P. 486, 40 L. J. C. P. 224, 25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 129, 19 Wkly. Rep. 978. But see Curtis v. Williamson, L. R. 10 Q. B. 57, 59, 44 L. J. Q. B. 27, 31 L. T. Rep. N. S. 678, 23 Wkly. Rep. 236, holding that although "in general, the question of election can only be properly dealt with as a question of fact for the jury, subject to the direction of the presiding judge . . there may no doubt be cases in which the act of the contractee in regard to his dealings with or proceeding against the agent, with full knowledge of the facts and freedom of choice, may be such as to preclude him in point of law from afterwards resorting to the principal."

16. Covington v. Newberger, 99 N. C. 523, 6 S. E. 205, holding that in an action by an innkeeper against a merchant for his traveler's board, in the absence of evidence to justify an inference that plaintiff notified defendant of the traveler's failure to pay cash, according to custom, or that the case is an exception to such general custom, the issue should not be submitted to the jury, but verdict directed against plaintiff.

17. Ripley v. Case, 86 Mich. 261, 49 N. W. 46 (holding that where it was admitted that plaintiff purchased a bond in reliance on the false representations of defendant's agent, and that defendant had received the amount paid for the bond, the court should direct a verdict for plaintiff for that amount); Claflin v. Lenheim, 66 N. Y. 301 (holding that the facts bearing upon a question of constructive notice being undisputed, that question was one of law for the court).

Whether an agency by estoppel has been created is usually a question for the jury. Union Trust Co. v. McKeon, 76 Conn. 508, 57 Atl. 109; Morgan v. Neal, 7 Ida. 629, 65 Pac. 66, 97 Am. 52. Iowa.—Pneumatic Weigher Co. v. Burnquist, 128 Iowa 709, 105 N. W. 336, holding that where the petition in an action to recover the price of goods declared solely on a written contract of agency, and charged that defendant, in violation of the conditions of the contract, failed to procure a proper settlement from the purchaser before the goods were delivered, and failed to return the goods upon demand therefor by plaintiff, and neglected to properly store and care for them after their return by the purchaser, it did not authorize a judgment for the conversion of the goods.

Nebraska.— Westinghouse v. Tilden, 56 Nebr. 129, 76 N. W. 416, holding that where a contract between a manufacturer and a selling agent provided that on deferred payments commission should be paid only on payment of the notes representing such deferred payments, and in proportion as payment should be made, in an action for commissions, wherein the agent declared solely on the contract, and alleged no breach, except failure to pay, he could not recover judgment for commissions on unpaid notes, on the theory that the principal had been negligent in their collection.

New York.— Butler v. Livermore, 52 Barb. 570.

North Carolina.— Le Roy v. Jacobsky, 136 N. C. 443, 48 S. E. 796, 67 L. R. A. 977, holding that where an action against an agent proceeds in its pleadings and evidence on the theory that the agent, not having bound his principal, is personally liable on the contract, there can be no judgment on the theory of damages for a false assertion of authority.

Pennsylvania.— Ferrell v. Reed, 14 Pa. Super. Ct. 27, holding that where an issue was whether an express contract provided that defendant should pay plaintiff a certain commission on a sale, or a certain per cent of such sums as defendant might receive in payment at the times he received them, there was nothing to justify the recovery of a judgment on mutual account on a quantum meruit.

Eq. (S. C.) 143. See Monnet v. Merz, 127 N. Y. 151, 27 N. E. 827.

Waiver of plea.— In an action on a contract made by an agent, against both the agent and his principal, the principal does not, by failure to object to the admission of the contract in evidence, waive a plea of non est factum based on the ground that the agent exceeded his authority in making the contract, the contract being admissible as against the agent. Tabet v. Powell, (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 78 S. W. 997.

56. Swinnerton v. Argonaut Land, etc., Co., 112 Cal. 375, 41 Pac. 719 (holding that in an action by an agent for compensation, a finding of an express promise to pay for services rendered, unsupported by the evidence, is without prejudice where there is an implied promise to pay, and the value of the services is shown); Miller v. Root, 77 Iowa 545, 42 N. W. 502 (holding that where, in an action on notes, defendant alleged that the time of payment had been extended by an agreement entered into by him with a third person as agent of plaintiff, the payee, "with her knowledge and consent," while it was error, under the pleadings, to submit to the jury the question whether plaintiff had ratified the agreement after it was made, such error was not prejudicial to defendant, where there was some evidence of ratification); New York Smelting, etc., Co. v. Lieb, 56 N.

Ordinarily, upon a question as to the existence of an agency or as to the scope of an authority conferred, where there is any evidence which, if believed, is legally sufficient, or might reasonably tend to support the verdict or findings of fact, the appellate court will not in the absence of constitutional or statutory provisions disturb such verdict or findings,[57] and the same rule applies to a verdict or finding based upon evidence of ratification.[58]
