THE purpose of this book is to assist the house-keeper and hostess in selecting a menu suitable for the most elaborate repast or the simplest meal; to enable her to estimate the cost of either at average market prices—allowing for local differences; to know how to prepare and serve each dish and to provide a quantity sufficient for six persons.

It is not designed to instruct beginners in minute details pertaining to the proper preparation of dishes in daily use, or the entire duties of a waitress. These departments have already been ably treated by other writers.

The author's intention is to put before her readers a book which will enable them to practise both economy and hospitality, and to make it possible for the inexperienced to calculate exactly the cost of a projected entertainment, how to cook it and how to serve it. This may be accomplished by learning thoroughly the resources and average prices of local markets.

Many house-keepers with small incomes wish to gather their friends around their tables, but hesitate to do so because of the incalculable expense of both time and money; this book has been compiled to meet such a difficulty, and to show that guests can be lunched or dined in a dainty and charming manner at a very moderate cost and a small expenditure of time, which is of much importance to the busy house-keeper of to-day.

Ordinary dishes are supposed to be familiar to every house-keeper, so that directions for many such are here omitted. Recipes requiring elaborate preparation and much ornamentation are either simplified or omitted altogether.

Effort has been made to give recipes a little out of the ordinary, such as one may like to place before guests who recognize and appreciate the finer effects of seasoning and serving. Most beginners in house-keeping have been so engrossed with school duties and the business of getting an education, that the minor details of serving a meal have escaped their observation. The few hints about serving contained in this little book will, it is hoped, meet this emergency. There is also an attempt to assist the novice in selecting recipes which harmonize, where it is thought necessary to serve two or more dishes in the same course.

The Index gives the price as well as the name of each dish, so that in planning an entertainment one can readily select a menu within the sum apportioned.

EVERY recipe in this book is sufficient for six persons, all measurements are level, and one cupful is half a pint.

A "Cover" is the place at table for each guest and should consist of the plate, napkin, knives, forks, spoons, and glasses necessary for the meal.

A "Service" plate is placed on the table before guests are seated and is not removed until the first hot course after soup.

Table linen should be laundered without starch and ironed while very damp. Table-cloths should be folded once in ironing and rolled on a stick or laid in loose folds to avoid creases. Napkins should be folded four times in ironing, then folded once more with the hand to hold the bread or roll, and should be placed at the left of the forks. If a service plate is not used, put the napkin holding bread in its place directly in front of each guest.

To saute means to cook in a very small amount of butter, fat, or oil until brown, in a frying or saute pan.

HINTS TO THE NOVICE

To fry means to plunge into deep, hot fat and cook until brown. Always use a wire basket for this purpose, only cover the bottom of the basket with articles to be fried and do not have them touch each other.

To crumb and fry means to dip in crumbs, which must be dry and powdered fine, then in slightly beaten egg mixed with very little water and in crumbs again, then plunge into deep, hot fat and cook until brown. Test fat by dropping in a small piece of bread; it should brown in 1 minute for uncooked mixtures and in 40 seconds for cooked mixtures.

To crumb means to cover with fine crumbs and bits of butter and brown in the oven, or cover with crumbs which have been sautéed in butter until brown, and place in oven for a moment. The proportion to use is $\frac{1}{2}$ c. crumbs to 1 tbsp. butter. The latter method is the most satisfactory if done properly.

Use pastry flour for pastry and all baking-powder mixtures; for everything else use bread flour.

Croûtons for soup: Cut buttered bread into $\frac{1}{2}$ -inch cubes and brown in the oven.

To lard meat, poultry, or sweetbreads: Draw strips of pork through meat with larding needle, which may be bought for the purpose, or it may be done at the market by an experienced butcher.

Serving from the side means from the butler's pantry or from a table behind a screen.

To marinate means to mix with an oil or vinegar dressing, in which the article is left for a certain time.

Everything pertaining or belonging to one course should be removed before the next course is served, except the wine-glasses. These should remain on the table from the beginning to the end, the only exception being the glasses for cordials and liqueurs, which are served after the coffee, which is sometimes served in the drawing-room.

In removing a course take large dishes or platters first, then the plates and silver from each "cover." The carving knife and fork should be side by side on the platter.

Every dish should be passed to the left with the handle of the serving spoon or fork on the side toward the guest and within 4 or 5 inches of the table, so that guests may help themselves without reaching. Plates containing individual portions should be placed from the right and removed from the right.

The foundation of all dinners should be soup, meat, and vegetables, salad and dessert. Of luncheons, soup in cups, meat or fish entrée, salad, and a sweet. All other courses may be added at discretion.

Bread, butter, rolls, bread-sticks, and water should never be asked for. A careful waitress will see that these are well supplied.

The hand-tray should be covered with a doily, clean ones being at hand to replace soiled ones. This is to avoid the noise and clatter of dishes.

In preparing for an entertainment the hostess would save time and avoid confusion by making two copies of the menu, one for the butler's pantry, containing directions for serving, and the other for the kitchen, giving details and recipes for cooking and the time each course should be ready for serving.

Attention is called to the special mention of dishes which may be prepared several hours before serving or final cooking, thereby enabling the hostess to give the artistic touch which would be lost if obliged to crowd them in with the necessary things which always seem to multiply at the last moment.

PLEASE READ CAREFULLY.

THESE recipes are divided into sections containing ingredients required, under the headings A, B, C, etc., followed by method or rule for combining, cooking, and serving. In many cases the method is given at the beginning of sections containing a number of recipes so similar that it would be needless to repeat them, as the general directions are sufficient. The abbreviations are :

c. for cupful or $\frac{1}{2}$ pint.

qt. for quart.

pt. for pint.

doz. for dozen.

tbsp. for tablespoonful.

tsp. for teaspoonful.

lb. for pound.

m. for minute.

Wherever possible recipes are represented by measurements.

“With a few friends, and a few dishes dine,

—COWLEY.

THE FORMAL DINNER

A DINNER of twelve or more covers, to which formal invitations have been sent, should consist of eight to twelve courses, rather less than more. Careful attention should be given to the selection of each course that it will so harmoniously blend with the others that the result may be a gastronomic symphony.

Although violent contrasts must be offered to pique the appetite, the dinner should rise from a mild beginning, gradually increasing in force until the pièce de résistance, or roast, is reached, then should daintily descend to the dessert; and with the coffee and cordials will come the satisfaction to the diner that he has been gloriously entertained, but not repleted.

The fastidious individuality of the hostess should always be en évidence, and one with many servants may, with propriety, make this a most elaborate affair; but with a little forethought in selecting a menu containing dishes which may be prepared in advance, some even the day before, the inexperienced house-keeper will be able to offer her guests a dainty repast, pleasing to the eye as well as to the palate, with a small number of assistants—one to cook, one or two to serve, and one to lend a hand will be all that are necessary. The experienced house-keeper, however, will be equal to the occasion with even less assistance if she will give her attention to a few well-selected courses cooked to perfection and daintily served. Avoid ostentation; remember that simplicity is the ruling spirit of the day. There have been so many excellent books written giving directions for the care of the dining-room and its accessories that many details will not be mentioned here. The writer's intention is only to suggest to the young house-keeper the best and simplest methods of arranging a table and of serving and removing each course.

The cover and arrangement of the table are of the utmost importance, as the slightest departure from mathematical regularity and immaculate cleanliness is slovenly and must not be tolerated by our hostess of to-day.

A round, square, or oblong table covered with a thick cotton-flannel cloth or pad under a fine linen damask without crease or wrinkle, and the best you can afford, is the first requisite. On rare occasions this cloth may be of satin damask or of handsome lace over satin, but if this is attempted, all of the table appointments must be equally "smart," and the dinner itself must be an epicure's dream. Whether this cloth be simple or sumptuous, it must hang over at least a quarter of a yard on every side.

The place for each guest and the necessary plate, knives, forks, glasses, etc., constitute the cover.

The Cover.

The next consideration is this cover or place for each guest. Allow at least twenty inches for every person, and more, for elbow room, if you can spare it. At each cover place the best ten-inch plate you have ; this is called the service-plate and should be placed on the table before dinner is announced, to be left on until the fish or first hot course after the soup is served. It is now considered good form always to have a plate in front of each guest until dessert, but this is an unimportant detail and depends somewhat upon the number of servants ; the hostess should suit her own convenience. The service-plate should be placed exactly in the middle of the space allotted to each person, and about an inch from the edge of the table. Place at the right of the service-plate as many knives as will be required before the dessert, each one with the sharp edge turned toward the plate and in the order in which they will be needed, beginning at the extreme right. At the right of the knives place the spoon for soup, which should be a table-spoon or soup-spoon, with the inside of the bowl turned up ; then the oyster-fork or small fork for canapés. At the left place as many forks as will be needed before the dessert, unless you are to have many courses, when too much small silver would look like display. Place forks in the order in which they are to be used, the fish-fork at the extreme left and the entrée fork next ; then the fork for the roast, which, of course, should be the largest ; then the fork for game or salad, all with the tines turned up, the last fork close to the plate. If sherbet is served it is a temptation, if you have choice spoons, to place them on the table from the beginning, but it is in better taste to have them on the plates with the sherbet. If on the table they should be outside of the oyster-fork, or for a luncheon in front of the service-plate, as there are not so many glasses to take the room. If more knives or forks are required, they may be quietly placed at the covers just before the course needing them is served. If there are not many courses, the dessert fork and spoon may be on the table from the beginning. Place the fork next to the plate with the other forks, and the spoon in front of the plate beneath the sherbet-spoon if it be used.

THE HOSTESS OF TO-DAY

At the upper right hand of the plate, near the centre, place a goblet for water; then place the wine-glasses in the order in which they are to be used, beginning near the points of the knives, reaching to the goblet in a semi-circle. If many wines are served, a double semi-circle may be formed, beginning with the sherry-glass and ending with the goblet. (See diagram of cover.)

The napkins should be large and of fine quality. They should be folded in ironing four times; then when ready to use fold them once with the hand, slipping between the folds, but in sight, a dinner-roll, bread-stick, or piece of bread cut two inches long by one and a half thick. Place the napkins at the left of the forks if there is space, otherwise place them on the service-plate.

If dinner-cards are used, and they usually are for convenience in seating the guests, they should be placed upon the napkin. These cards may be plain and small, with only the name of the guest written upon them, or they may have also in the upper left-hand corner or centre the monogram or initials of the hostess, or a dainty hand painting; any of these are correct and in good taste.

An allowable exception to the general rule of "no furbelows" is the name of the guest in silver or gilt lettering on the end of a ribbon. This ribbon may be narrow and tied around a bunch of flowers, or it may be broad and laid flat between the covers, the other end connected with a basket or bunch of flowers, these bunches or baskets forming the centre-piece, which, of course, is demolished when the repast is over. Let it be thoroughly understood, however, that these favors are only for ladies.

Menu-cards are seldom used at small dinners, unless there is an artistic or amusing feature to be illustrated; men and women are expected to be sufficiently entertaining to require no literary or childish aids to conversation. The practical object of the menu-card is to give guests an opportunity to save capacity for specially delectable courses, but this will not be necessary in the dainty dinners which our hostess will give.

Much attention should be given to the selection of guests and placing of name-cards at the covers to insure a successful and harmonious entertainment. There should be good listeners as well as fine talkers, and here the tact of the hostess is called into play to avoid anything like a contretemps. The hostess should either tell each gentleman, as he is received, the name of the particular lady he is to take out to dinner, or the name should be written on a small card and placed in an envelope addressed to the gentleman and put in a conspicuous place in the dressing-room; R. or L. in corner of card designating the side of table on entering room. When dinner is announced, the host offers his arm to the lady for whom the dinner is given, or the one who is to be seated at his right, followed by the guests, the hostess closing the procession with the gentleman to be honored or the one whom she intends seating at her right hand.

A few hints regarding the decoration of the table must be given here, though the fashion of to-day may be out of date to-morrow. Perhaps one feels inclined to be in touch with the latest whim, especially if it has a raison d'être. Extreme simplicity, and a desire for artistic effect combined with the practical, is the order of the day. The appearance of millinery must be avoided, consequently lace and ribbon furbelows are not used for the adornment of the table. A centre-piece of fine linen, or the flowers in the pattern of the tablecloth, exquisitely and delicately embroidered—or a fine linen, with insertion and border of heavy altar-lace, and glass or silver bowls and vases filled with an artistic arrangement of flowers and vines—are a sufficient embellishment for the most elaborate feast, although small bunches of flowers, or single flowers placed at each cover, are a delicate attention much appreciated by the ladies, and in perfectly good taste. Let the hand of madame be manifest, and beware of the wiles of the florist. Small silver or glass dishes, containing relishes, bonbons, and salted nuts, are usually placed on the table, though fashion decrees now that their place is on the side-table; but with the possession of antique silver and Venetian glass one may dare to be a little less up to date. The same may be said of choice decanters and coasters—one can hardly be expected to put them out of sight. It is scarcely necessary to say that butter-plates should not be placed on the table at a formal repast. It is supposed that care has been taken to supply each course with all requirements in the way of seasoning and sauces, and condiments are served as they are needed.

An important feature of the entertainment is the illumination, and it requires more serious consideration than is usually given it. Unless the hostess is in the first flush of youth, and her guests are all equally fortunate, she should eschew all abominations in the way of glaring, unshaded ceiling lights, whether of gas or electricity. The most effective and artistic illumination is a soft light from candles or lamps, not higher than the head of the tallest guest, and if this is not sufficient, it should come from the sides of the room, or from a low, shaded centre chandelier, and never from near the ceiling, high over the heads of the guests. Such a light, which always throws sad shadows upon the faces of beautiful women, makes mournful the most joyous occasion.

There are two ways of serving a formal dinner, both equally "good form," and the one chosen should depend upon the convenience and taste of the hostess. The most formal way, and perhaps the most convenient, if there is the helping hand in the butler's pantry, is to serve each course from the pantry neatly arranged on individual plates, the butler or waitress having the tray in the left hand, putting the plate containing the portion upon it, taking it to the right side of each guest, and with the right hand placing it upon the service plate until after the soup or bouillon course which is removed with the service plate, then setting it in front of the guest and close to the edge of the table. Then, if anything is to be served with the course, it should be placed on the tray and passed to the left side of each guest, being held low enough to enable the guest to help himself with his right hand.

If it is desired to follow the fashionable method of always having a plate before each guest until dessert, then the tray should be dispensed with in placing the course. Remove from the right with the left hand and place the following course or empty plate with the right hand also from the right. Guests should be served in rotation, beginning alternately at the right and left of the host and hostess, going in opposite direction for each successive course.

The other and more simple way of serving is to have the course artistically arranged and cut in small pieces on a large dish or platter, accompanied by the necessary serving-spoon, knife, or fork, and put on a tray, or, if too large, held in the hands carefully and offered to the left of each guest—of course, after plates, knives, or forks for the course have been placed. To remove each course, wait until everyone has finished, then take the tray in the left hand and with the right hand remove the plate from the right, placing it on the tray. If the knife or fork is accidentally left on the table by a thoughtless guest, it should be taken up quietly and put on the plate on the tray. Do not remove more than one plate at a time, or all belonging to the course at each cover. It is very bad form to pile one plate on top of another when clearing the table. If it is not convenient to take so much time, dispense with the tray and take one plate in each hand, thus removing two at a time. Remember this is the formal dinner, and there is supposed to be plenty of time and numerous servants.

Wine should be poured into the glasses from the right, and should follow the serving of each course.

Black coffee in small cups, followed by cordials in tiny glasses, is the last course, and should precede the finger-bowls, unless the fashionable method is observed of serving coffee and cordials to the ladies in the drawing-room, while the gentlemen are left at the table to become anecdotal over their cigars and their liqueurs; then the finger-bowls should be placed before the ladies leave the table.

It is considered quite "smart" in some social circles to serve cocktails just before dinner is announced or immediately after the guests are seated at table, and this appetizer is a twin to the fashion of cigarette-smoking during the dinner and after by the ladies; but our hostess of to-day will lose no friends by excluding this pair of bohemians from her dinners and luncheons.

There are two things to remember—that guests are invited for social intercourse, and that the machinery of serving should run so smoothly and quietly that there will be no interruption to the conversation. The most successful entertainment is the one that is so simply and quietly served as to be beyond criticism. The natural desire to exhibit rare possessions of silver and glass should be the only excuse for departing from the fashion of the hour, which, let me repeat, is simplicity.

THE INFORMAL DINNER

THE informal dinner, or the family dinner with the addition of two or more guests, should be served almost like the formal dinner by the hostess having several servants. The few exceptions are that the soup may be served by the hostess from a tureen on the table, the assistant taking one soup-plate at a time from the sideboard, placing it in front of the hostess, then when filled placing it on the service-plate of each guest from the right. Fish may be served by the host, and passed in the same manner as the soup. Large platters should always be used when carving is done at the table; if this is not convenient, then a carving-napkin may be on the table in front of the host from the beginning, to be left on until the table is cleared for dessert. Entrées are always served from the side, and the roast is carved by the host. All vegetables and sauces are placed on the side-table and passed to the left of each guest when required. The host or hostess makes the salad, and the hostess serves the dessert and pours out the coffee. Coffee should be placed at the lower right hand of the guest, and cream and sugar passed to the left. The bonbons and relishes may be upon the table and the number of courses should be less than for a formal dinner. Really this is the dinner that should be served every day by the ambitious house-keeper, no change being necessary for an extra guest or two. The service of wine is entirely a matter of choice or opinion. Both formal and informal dinners are in equally good taste without wine as with it. As very few persons are able to partake of every dish that is offered them, the same may be said of wine. Experienced diners will always refuse anything that is to them especially injurious, and are expected to do so, but it is bad form to parade one's objections; a quiet refusal by a glance or a motion is all that is necessary.

The suggestions given thus far are for house-keepers with more than one servant. Realizing that there are many would-be hostesses who are fortunate enough to be able to run the domestic machine with one maid-of-all-work, the following suggestions are for their benefit:

The table should be set as for the informal dinner, but it is well to remember that there is only one pair of hands to do both cooking and serving. The service-plate should be omitted, all the knives and forks to be used may be put on the table, salts and peppers at the corners of the table, or one of each for every two persons. Small round plates for the butter-ball and slice of bread or dinner-roll which should be put on before dinner is announced, are placed at the left of each cover, and the small butter-knife, if one is used, placed on the plate with the bread. Goblets should be filled with iced water, and everything needed should be on the side table before guests are seated. Decanters, bonbons, and relishes may all be on the table from the beginning. The plates for each course served on the table should be placed in a low pile, not more than three or four at a time, in front of the host or hostess, the maid taking each one as it is filled, putting it on her tray and placing it in front of each guest from the right with the right hand.

Further suggestions will be given with each course, but the writer would advise an ambitious house-keeper, who wishes to understand thoroughly all of the details of the business of house-keeping, to secure some of the books making a specialty of each subject and to study them. A particularly good one is "The National Cook Book," by Marion Harland and Christine Terhune Herrick.

This work is only an attempt to awaken the average house-keeper to the fact that she can serve her family and entertain her friends without drudgery and without extravagance. It only requires brain, good taste, and tact to make the home a veritable Garden of Eden, only our modern Eve sautéés or soufflés the apple before she gives it to Adam. It was undoubtedly a fit of indigestion from eating raw food which caused the first Adam to "peach."

THE FORMAL LUNCHEON

THE formal luncheon is served like the formal dinner, with the following exceptions: If the table is of very handsome wood, without scratch or blemish, it may be left bare, using small doilies under the plates and dishes, and a centre-piece. This is a rare opportunity to display artistic embroideries, but the fine damask table-cloth is always in good taste and there is a faint rumor that the bare mahogany is going out of style.

When luncheon is announced, the hostess asks her friends to follow her to the dining-room, without formality.

The soup is served in two-handled cups, the heavy roast or pièce de résistance is omitted generally, and very few vegetables are served. The hostess may serve the salad, the dessert, and the coffee, although these are more often served from the side. Wines are not always offered, and never more than one or two kinds. Sauterne being the favorite wine for ladies' luncheons, an opportunity is given to exhibit rare and daintily colored glass. A fruit, tea, or wine punch is often served in the place of wine. It is poured from handsome glass or silver pitchers, and cordials are served after the coffee, which is served at table.

THE INFORMAL LUNCHEON

THIS is the ordinary every-day luncheon, and is like the informal dinner, except that no roasts are served. Tea may be served by the hostess, with the tea-pot, sugar-bowl, cream-jug, and cups and saucers neatly arranged on a large tray under a cloth, or the tray may be omitted, using only the cloth or napkin.

Two or more courses may be served, all of the dishes for the first course neatly arranged on the table and the second course, the sweets and cakes, placed on the side table ready for use, followed by finger-bowls and fruit. These suggestions seem so unnecessary and such every-day affairs that many will wonder why they are put in this book, but most house-keepers will appreciate the fact that these simple instructions have to be told over and over again to the new waitress or maid-of-all-work, and if putting this book into the hands of the pupil will save the weary haus-frau a few hours of precious time, worthy of something better, its object will have been accomplished.

THESE dishes are usually served as a first course at dinners or luncheons, and are supposed to be appetizers.

At the formal dinner or luncheon they are placed on the service-plate after the guests are seated. At the informal meal they may be brought in before the meal is announced, or they may be placed after the guests are seated. Only serve one of the dishes in each course, and avoid all through the meal repetition of food or flavor.

Canapés are sometimes served instead of oysters, but at a formal dinner or luncheon they usually precede the oysters, this being the only exception to this rule. If you serve oysters as a first course, do not serve them again during the dinner or luncheon. Tiny sandwiches of entire wheat, graham, or brown bread and butter or dainty biscuits or crackers are served with raw oysters and clams; also fringed celery, trimmed radishes, or cress may accompany "Some Beginnings."

After this course is served, fill the glasses three-quarters full with Sauterne from a glass pitcher or decanter.

THE HOSTESS OF TO-DAY

OYSTERS AND CLAMS

No. 1. Oysters on the Half Shell. 60 cts.

A : 3 doz. small oysters, Blue Points if possible, in the shell and ice cold ;

B : 2 lemons cut in quarters ;

C : Salt, pepper, cayenne, horse-radish or Tabasco sauce.

Open A, loosen oysters, leave them on lower shell ; place on oyster-plates or ordinary plates filled with shaved ice ; put B in centre of each plate and serve with C. Raw oysters are suitable for any meal but breakfast.

No. 2. Little Neck Clams. 40 cts.

A : 3 doz. Little Neck clams in shell and ice cold.

Follow recipe No. 1, using clams instead of oysters.

No. 3. Raw Oysters. 50 cts.

A : 1 qt. oysters, best quality, not too large, very cold and thoroughly clean ;

B : Vinegar Sauce No. 161.

Take a large block of ice, melt out a cavity with a hot flat-iron, pour out water and fill with A, or serve A from a large glass dish into small dishes, with a spoonful of B poured over each one. Suitable for luncheon or supper.

No. 4. Raw Clams. 24 cts.

A : 1 qt. Prince's Bay clams, ice cold.

Follow recipe No. 3, using clams instead of oysters.

SOME BEGINNINGS

No. 5. Oyster Cocktails.

30 cts.

A : 2 doz. small oysters or 1 pt. oysters cut into small pieces, ice cold ;

B : 1 tbsp. horse-radish, $\frac{1}{2}$ tsp. Tabasco sauce, 1 tbsp. vinegar, 1 tbsp. Worcestershire sauce, 2 tbsp. lemon-juice, 1 tbsp. tomato catsup, $\frac{1}{2}$ tsp. salt ; mix and place on ice an hour before needed.

Put A in 6 small glasses, add 1 tbsp. of B to each glass, or fill grape-fruit, lemon-shells or tomato-cups, adding the pulp to B.

No. 6. Clam Cocktails.

20 cts.

A : 2 doz. Little Neck or 1 pt. Prince's Bay clams.

Follow recipe No. 5, using clams instead of oysters.

CANAPÉS

Canapés are savories or appetizers usually served before the first course at dinners and luncheons, and often in the place of oysters or clams. They should be served on very small plates and placed at each cover. At a gentlemen's dinner they are sometimes served to the guests in the drawing-room or library just before dinner is announced, accompanied by a glass of sherry or a cocktail, but when ladies are present, this attention is quite sensibly omitted.

Method.

Cut six thin slices of bread into small oval or oblong pieces, toast, fry in hot fat, sauté in butter, or dip in melted butter and slightly brown in the oven, spread with any of the Flavored Butters or plain butter, cover with a relish or savory, and garnish. They may be served hot or cold.

B : 1 c. powdered sugar.

Put B in 6 glass dishes, making a little mound, arrange A with points down. Serve very cold.

At a formal dinner a consommé or light cream soup should always be served unless the courses are very few and rather light, then a bisque or purée is admissible. It should be served from the side table or butler's pantry, in ten-inch soup-plates, a scant ladleful in each, a table-spoon or soup-spoon being already on the table. Terrapin soup is an exception, as plates for terrapin are about eight inches, and a terrapin-spoon or dessert-spoon may be used. Chowders and oyster soups are often served in these small plates, as they are so rich and thick that a small quantity suffices.

At the informal dinner any of the soups are served from the butler's pantry, or at the home dinner by the hostess from a tureen on the table, a ladleful in each plate. In removing this course, take the tureen first, then the plates. At a luncheon, bouillon or any of the cream soups, bisques, or purées are served in bouillon-cups. They are always served from the “side.” They are placed on the service-plate after the guests are seated, the bouillon or small spoon being already on the table in the place of the table-spoon or soup-spoon at the right of the knives. Sherry should be poured after this course, and the bread-sticks or bread-slices replenished.

SOUPS

Celery and the salt-cellar, with spoon, may also be passed if it is used at all.

Croûton Sticks No. 730, or slightly browned wafers, may accompany this course.

Recipes given in the following section are divided into :

Clear or consommé, a thin soup from beef, chicken, or veal stock.

Cream, a slightly thickened soup from white or chicken stock and cream, or milk and vegetables.

Purée, a thick, smooth soup from stock, milk, or water, and minced meat and vegetables.

Bisque, a thick, smooth soup from stock, milk or water, and fish or shell-fish.

Chowders and thick soups, from stock or water and small pieces of meat, fish, shell-fish, and vegetables.

Garnishings for soups.

CLEAR SOUP

Method.

Cut meat into small pieces, add bones, cover with water, heat slowly to boiling-point, add 1 c. cold water, simmer gently 4 hours, add vegetables and seasonings, boil 1 hour, pour into an earthen bowl through wet cloth. In the morning skim off every particle of fat, add slightly beaten white of egg and crushed shell to jelly—1 egg to a quart of stock—place on fire and stir until it boils. Boil 5 m. or until it breaks free from scum, simmer gently 15 m., add tiny piece of ice or a little cold water, remove carefully from fire, pour through wet cloth into a bowl, when required, remove any particle of fat, heat, add flavoring and serve.

THE HOSTESS OF TO-DAY

Turn A into tiny buttered timbale moulds, bake in pan of hot water 10 m. ; remove from moulds, add to B, serve one in each plate.

CREAM SOUPS

Method.

Boil vegetables, drain, mash through colander or sieve, and return to water. Scald stock or milk with seasonings. Cook butter, add flour, stir thoroughly until it simmers, then add hot milk or stock gradually, strain, add to vegetables ; when boiling add egg beaten slightly and mixed with hot cream, pour into tureen or plates, add garnishings, and serve.

Rich and highly seasoned white or chicken stock will make the best soup. Egg thickens and enriches, but is not necessary. If omitted, use a little more flour, and if milk is used instead of cream, add more butter. Cold cream is whipped and added after soup is in tureen or plates, the garnishings sprinkled over. In some recipes arrowroot is used instead of flour; it is more delicate and will make a finer soup, but flour may be used if preferred. Do not boil soup after egg is added, but whip with egg-beater and serve at once. The vegetables may be boiled, pressed through a sieve, and returned to water several hours before needed if necessary. When ready to use, reheat and add to the other ingredients.

No. 34. Cream of Asparagus. 35 cts.

- A : 1 bunch or 1 can asparagus, 1 qt. hot water ;
- B : 1 tbsp. butter cooked with 1 tbsp. arrowroot or flour, 2 c. hot milk or stock, $\frac{1}{2}$ tsp. salt, blade of mace ;
- C : 1 egg, 1 c. hot cream, asparagus-tips.

Add A to B ; when boiling add C and serve (see Cream Soups), or boil A 20 m., drain, sauté in butter ; add pepper, salt, and dash nutmeg ; add asparagus water and B ; add 2 tbsps. white wine and 2 cucumbers which have been parboiled, cut into dice and sautéed in butter ; add C and serve.

Mushroom liquor and lemon-juice may be used instead of white wine.

IF fish is served from the butler's pantry, as it is usually at formal dinners, take each hot plate containing the portion in the right hand, remove the cold service-plate or soup-plate with the left hand from the right side of guest, and place the hot plate also from the right. Cucumbers, cress, radishes or tomatoes and cooked potatoes, or macaroni with cheese, and any of the fish sauces may be served with fish. These should be passed to the left of each guest on the tray, following quickly after the fish is served.

If the cucumbers or tomatoes are dressed with oil and the fish-plates are hot, they should be served on leaves of lettuce, or on small dishes placed at the left of each cover. If fish is served on the table, the fish-platter must first be removed, then everything used for the course at each cover. Salted nuts, olives or radishes should be passed, and Rhine wine served, filling glasses only three-quarters full.

ANY number of entrée courses may be served, but care should be taken, however, not to repeat materials, sauces, or flavors.

One or two entrées are sufficient unless there are to be many courses. They are served from the side with a table-spoon of the required sauce on each plate which is placed at each cover from the right, or the sauce is poured over the whole dish and it is passed to the left of each guest.

After all have finished, remove plates from the right. Serve claret from a decanter or bottle.

Many quite palatable entrées may be made from "left overs," especially if these "remnants" were not too much cooked when making their first appearance. However, this, at best, is only a makeshift, for the perfect dish should be prepared, cooked, and seasoned for the purpose for which it is intended, if it is to be a "masterpiece."

THE HOSTESS OF TO-DAY

HOT ENTRÉES

The following methods are used in preparing meat or poultry for entrées :

CREAMED MEAT OR POULTRY

FOR BOUCHÉES, COQUILLES OR RAMEKIN DISHES, PÂTÉS, OR VOL AU VENTS, OR SWEDISH
FONTAGE CROUSTADES.

Method.

Boil meat in water seasoned with parsley, onion, bay-leaf, and celery. When cold reject all skin and bones and cut into pieces $\frac{1}{2}$ an inch square. Make sauce according to recipe, add meat, which is improved by marinating $\frac{1}{2}$ an hour in French Dressing No. 436. Add seasonings, fill dishes, cover with browned crumbs and bake 5 m., or crumb and brown in the oven, or fill pâté or paper cases and serve hot without crumbs.

To brown crumbs, sauté $\frac{1}{2}$ c. in 1 tbsp. of butter until brown.

Dishes à la Poulette are made by adding 1 or 2 raw eggs slightly beaten, to creamed dishes.

Dishes au Gratin are made by adding 2 tbsps. of grated cheese to bread-crumbs for covering Coquilles (shells) or Ramekin dishes.

To make Bouchées, Pâtés, or Vol au Vents. (See Puff Paste No. 541.)

CROQUETTES

Method.

Boil meat as above, chop rather fine, mix with sauce according to recipe, turn out on buttered plate to cool. When perfectly cold form into desired shape with 2 wet spoons, or if necessary to use hands wet them in cold water; slightly crumb the croquettes, cover with egg slightly beaten, crumb again, fry in deep hot fat, only 3 or 4 at a time. Drain on soft paper and serve on a napkin or surround with a sauce. The shape should be a roll or a pyramid large enough to serve one to each person.

ENTRÉES OF MEATS AND POULTRY

If frying is objectionable roll croquettes in melted butter after they are crumbed and bake in hot oven 10 m.

BOULETTES are croquettes made the size of small balls, serving two to each person.

QUENELLES are raw meat-balls sautéed in butter, then stewed in stock and served with sauce made of the stock.

FILLETS

Method.

Cut cooked or uncooked meat or poultry into oblong pieces large enough to serve one to each person.

CUTLETS are large thin slices of meat or fish.

STEAKS are thick slices of meat or fish.

RAGOÛTS

Method.

Cut cooked or uncooked meat into pieces 1 inch square and stew in sauce. Serve in border of mashed potato or rice; or put in a deep buttered dish, cover with Puff Paste No. 541, or baking-powder biscuit dough $\frac{1}{4}$ an inch thick, ornament top with fancy knife-gashes, brush with beaten egg, bake in moderate oven $\frac{1}{2}$ an hour and call it a pie.

RISSOLES

Method.

Roll Puff Paste No. 541 into oblong squares 3 by 4 inches, put a spoonful of creamed meat, chicken, sweet-breads, or mushrooms on one side, fold over wet edges of paste and press together, cut into half circles or leave corners square. Brush with beaten egg, bake until light brown, serve with sauce, or egg and crumb and fry in hot deep fat.

THE HOSTESS OF TO-DAY

SOUFFLÉS

Method.

Add to creamed meat, chicken, sweet-breads, or mushrooms, egg-yolks well beaten, then whites folded in the last moment, turn into deep-buttered dishes, bake and serve immediately. Soft bread-crumbs are often used instead of flour for soufflés, and meat is cut into smaller pieces.

TIMBALES OR MOUSSELINES

Method.

Chop cooked or raw meat very fine, mash or press through a coarse sieve, add cream or seasonings, egg-yolks beaten well, cut and fold in whites beaten stiff. Butter small individual tin moulds, decorate with slices of truffle, lobster coral, or pignolia nuts and fill two-thirds full, place in pan filled with hot water as high as mixture, cover with buttered paper, butter side up, bake 15 m., turn out and serve at once surrounded with sauce. For Mousselines use raw meat and equal amount of whipped cream and egg whites, and use round-top moulds. The moulds may be lined with the mixture, the centres filled with creamed meats or vegetables, or hollow moulds may be used, the filling put in after they are turned out on plates.

To fry, bake 10 m., turn out of mould and, when cool, crumb, egg, and crumb and fry in hot fat. Serve with sauce.

TO BLANCH SWEETBREADS

Method.

Soak in cold water 1 hour, change water once or twice, cover with cold water, add 1 tsp. salt, 1 tbsp. lemon-juice or vinegar, 2 or 3 cloves, 2 pepper-corns, sprig parsley, and $\frac{1}{2}$ bay-leaf. Simmer gently 20 m., drain, cover with cold water, drain again, remove fibres and pipes. To form into fillets, bind together with raw egg, wrap in cheese-cloth, press between two plates under weight. They are improved by larding.

MEATS, roasts, or poultry, if served from the side, should be neatly carved in the butler's pantry and placed on the largest-sized dinner-plate, which should be very hot. One or two vegetables usually accompany the roast ; if two, one is of potatoes. A fruit relish is often served with the pièce de résistance, and sometimes Bouchées Savory are served instead of potatoes. These should be passed to the guests from the left, unless they are already put on the plates. If a vegetable requires small dishes or plates, place them at the left of each cover, but it is considered much better form to serve vegetables dry enough to be put on the plates with the roast. To remove this course, if carved on the table, first place the carving knife and fork carefully on the platter, side by side if the carver has neglected to do this ; remove the platter, then all the plates or dishes belonging to the course from each cover. See that goblets are filled, not too full. Pass bread, if it is needed, and serve champagne. Notice if guests prefer other wine, and keep the glasses filled until after dessert is served.

To serve champagne, cut the wires and draw the cork carefully ; have a napkin wrapped around the neck of the bottle, and, as soon as the cork is drawn, pour a very little into the glass of the host to avoid giving a guest any particles of cork ; then begin at the right of the host, fill the glasses slowly and not too full. Champagne is sometimes served from a glass pitcher. In that case it is not necessary first to pour any in the glass of the host. Do not serve ice with champagne or with any wine, but champagne must be kept on ice for several hours before it is used, and should be poured the instant it is opened. The napkin around the bottle is to protect the wine from the heat of the hands and to protect the table-cloth from drops.

SHERBET, sometimes called sorbet, which is a frozen punch or ice, is served as a course in the middle of a dinner or luncheon. It is supposed to have a stimulating effect upon the digestive organs, thereby enabling the diner to appreciate what follows after. This course always precedes the game or salad, and is served in small glasses on a small plate or saucer, with a doily between, and a small spoon. These are always arranged in the butler's pantry ; a heaping tablespoonful of the sherbet, which should not be frozen too hard, will be sufficient for each glass. Sometimes sherbets are served in candy cups or fancy paper cases, but the glasses that are made for the purpose are in better taste, unless something very artistic is accomplished. These are placed in front of each guest from the right and removed from the right also, unless two servants are in attendance, when one should remove the preceding course from the left, while the other places the following course from the right. This rule will be found convenient in serving all courses.

GAME is usually served from the side table or butler's pantry, unless the host prefers to show his skill in carving. The filled plates are placed in front of each guest from the right, and the currant jelly or fruit relish, which usually accompanies game, is passed to the left. If salad is served with game, which is customary, unless it follows with cheese as a separate course, it is sometimes prepared by the host, and should be passed as soon as game is served. Only vegetable salad should be served with game. Meat salad should not be served at dinner, and is only admissible at luncheon, when there are few meat courses. If the game plates are very hot, place small, cold plates at the left of each cover for the salad, but if the salad is served on leaves of lettuce to protect it from the heat of the plate, it will avoid the necessity of the extra plate and is better form.

Remove this course from the right of each cover, one at a time or one in each hand. If the small plate is used, take up the game plate first, then place the salad plate upon it. This is the only exception to the general rule never to pile plates one on top of the other.

Serve Burgundy.

ALL salads are suitable for luncheon, but care should be taken, however, not to serve meat too often. Only vegetable salads should be served at dinner. If a French dressing is used, the host or hostess may prepare the salad on the table, but at formal dinners it is usually made in the butler's pantry, just before serving; a French dressing will not bear waiting. A vegetable salad is usually served with game and is often followed by a hot cheese course. With a heavy dinner the light salad is more desirable, and if there is no game, the salad may be served with cheese or cheese preparations. This is the English way, however, and if the hostess prefers to serve cheese and wafers after the dessert, it is perfectly proper to do so. Serve the salad as you do all of the other courses, followed by the cheese and pulled bread, or wafers. Remove this course in the same manner you have taken the others. In the next section, Eggs and Cheese, directions are given for clearing the table.

Eggs or cheese dishes, hot or cold, are often used as entrées at luncheons, and eggs are usually served as a separate course. A delicious friend of a cream cheese is a currant preserve put up in tiny glass jars, made in France, and called after the name of the place, Bar le Duc. These jars are always passed on a tray, following the cheese, each guest taking a tea-spoonful. Of course this should not be served with hot-cheese mixtures, which are sometimes served at dinners and luncheons, but the Bar le Duc and cream cheese are suitable for both dinners and luncheons. Pulled bread, toasted wafers, croûton or bread-sticks are always served with this course.

To clear the table for dessert, everything in front of each guest, except the glasses, should be removed; then take everything else from the table, leaving only the nuts and bon-bons, the decorations and illuminations. If there are any crumbs, take a crumb-scraper or napkin and quietly dust every vestige into a plate. This is rarely necessary at a formal meal, and should be avoided if possible. If it is the informal meal remove platters and large dishes first, then the carving or tray napkin, if one be used, fold over from the ends and take up carefully, then proceed as for the formal dinner. Fill goblets with water and pour wine. When everything is in readiness bring in the dessert.

THIS department should include the three following sections, as a dish from any one of the three would be a sufficient dessert for the ordinary dinner or luncheon. At the formal dinner a hot dessert may be followed by a frozen cream or ice, but the dinner or luncheon is quite long enough with one dessert. The cold desserts, which are more acceptable, usually, may be accompanied by cakes of the daintiest kind, though this is almost superfluous, and it is in quite as good taste to leave them out. Dessert at formal dinners is either served from the butler's pantry or is placed on the table before the hostess, and afterward passed. Forks should be used whenever it is possible, always with frozen pudding or cream. Dessert plates should be small and choice. The proper fork and spoon for dessert should be placed at the right and left just before the course is served. When at an informal dinner every one has finished, remove the platter or dish first, if it has been served by the hostess, then remove the plates from the right just as you have all the others. If cheese has not been in

Beat A thoroughly, and cover cake when cold ; cake should be in layers put together with grated pineapple.

AFTER the dessert is removed serve black coffee, which should be clear and very strong. It may be poured on the table by the hostess or sent in from the butler's pantry. The cups, which are very small, should only be three-quarters full, and should be placed in front of each guest. Crystal or lump sugar should be passed to the left, accompanied by a tiny jug of cream, if cream is served. As the object of taking black coffee is to aid digestion, the addition of cream is injurious, and, therefore, unnecessary. If the hostess pours the coffee, the pot containing it and the cups should be placed in front of her on a tray.

Now place a finger-bowl in front of each guest, slightly to the left. They should be arranged and placed on the side-table before the meal is announced. Use the handsomest small plates you possess. Place a dainty doily, smaller than the plate and one that will wash, upon each plate, under the finger-bowl, which should be half-filled with cold water, adding a geranium-leaf, slice of lemon, or a flower, if you like. If fruit is to be served it should precede the coffee, and a small plate, holding a fruit-knife, should be placed in front of each guest. Occasionally cheese, wafers, and celery are served instead of fruit. Bonbons should be served just before guests leave the table.

At a formal dinner the finger-bowls are placed directly after the dessert or fruit, after which the ladies leave the table, the hostess, of course, rising first. Then the coffee is served to the ladies in the drawing-room; the gentlemen remaining at the table are served at the same time. Cigars, liqueurs, and cordials in very small decanters are then placed on the table for the gentlemen to help themselves. A small decanter, containing cordial, is brought into the drawing-room on a tray, accompanied with cordial-glasses and a glass dish of finely pounded ice.

Cordials are alcoholic liquors, usually very sweet and of high flavor and delicate perfume. They are always served after black coffee in tiny glasses holding scarcely more than a tablespoonful. In serving any of the crèmes, the glasses should be filled with ice pounded very fine, as they are rich and heavy, and require dilution. The ordinary cordial or liqueur is served without ice. Imported cordials are usually served, but the recipes given below are a good imitation, quite inexpensive, and may easily be made at home. The fashion of serving coffee and cordials in the drawing-room is one of choice. At a ladies' luncheon, however, while it is an aid to sociability, it is not necessary, as there are no men, cigars, and strong drinks to leave behind.

No. 707. After-dinner Coffee. 12 cts.

SANDWICHES FOR LUNCHEONS, AFTERNOON FUNCTIONS, AND EVENING COLLATIONS

Method.

USE white, brown, graham, or entire wheat bread, cut into very thin slices, spread each slice with any of the Flavored Butters or soft plain butter, spread one slice with the mixture, cover with the other slice, press together, cut in fancy shapes, or roll. Wrap in waxed paper until ready to serve.

Bread may be baked purposely for sandwiches by filling baking-powder boxes half full of dough, let rise, and bake. Rolls may be used for afternoon receptions, picnics or chafing-dish suppers. Cut out a piece from the top, remove crumbs, leaving a shell, butter inside, fill with the mixture or salad, put on cover, and wrap each one in waxed paper until required. Sandwiches for afternoon tea should be very small and always served on a dainty doily in a pretty plate or dish.

“ Soon at five o'clock
Please you I'll meet you.”

—COMEDY OF ERRORS.

“ Strong tea and scandal—Bless me how refreshing.”

—SCHOOL FOR SCANDAL.

THE five-o'clock function may be four of your dear friends in for a chat and a cosy cup of tea, or the four hundred of your set to whom you wish to give social recognition, this taking the place of the ceremonial visit, the inviter conveying the idea to the invited that she wishes to continue the acquaintance. For the small reunion of friends the tea should be made and served by the hostess in the drawing-room or in any living-room but the dining-room, and in country houses out of doors, if possible. For this delightful occasion only the simplest and daintiest sandwiches and cakes are served, with hot tea, coffee, or chocolate, or in hot weather, iced coffee, tea, or punch. No service or assistance is necessary, except to bring in the required articles; the hostess or a friend makes the tea or pours the beverage, and the guests help each other and themselves. For the more pretentious affair, the affair of the four hundred, the refreshments should be served in the dining-room. A very pretty table may be arranged with flowers and lights, a friend of the hostess seated at each end of the table to serve tea, coffee, bouillon, or ices. At very large entertainments the ices and cakes are served in another room, another pretty table and more friends being called into requisition. The refreshments for a large afternoon function, besides the drinks already mentioned, should consist of dainty plates of small sandwiches, olives, fancy cakes, and bonbons, all served from the table by waitresses, or young ladies, also friends of the hostess. Napkins are not always necessary, though they are a protection to the gloves and dresses; the tiny sandwiches and the cakes are usually placed on the saucer or a plate under it, and are partaken of sparingly. The servants needed for this affair are, one at the door, two in the kitchen, one in the butler's pantry, and two or three in the dining-room, a maid for each dressing-room, and perhaps a man to open the carriage-door. Here is another opportunity for the artist in entertaining to show her best work. A fastidious arrangement of flowers all over the house to culminate on the dining-room table, all of one color, or a harmonious blending of colors, gives a fine opportunity for one's love of ornamentation to run riot, but here again is a note of warning. The simplest entertainment, when accompanied by a charming hospitality, is better appreciated by one's dear four hundred friends, than any amount of ostentatious display. The following list includes almost everything required for the five-o'clock reception or the ordinary afternoon tea, the recipes for which can be found in this book under their respective numbers: Bouillon No. 22, either hot or cold, Coffee No. 712, Chocolate No. 711, Russian Tea No. 716, Iced Tea Punch No. 717, Sandwiches, Afternoon Tea Cakes, Some Accessories, Ices, Frappés, or Punches.

FIVE O'CLOCK FUNCTIONS

THE HOSTESS OF TO-DAY

“ This night he makes a supper and a great one,
To many lords and ladies.”

—HENRY VIII.

THE evening collation is served late, and custom has decreed that this repast should consist of the richest and most indigestible of foods; perhaps that is the reason why fashion is turning a cold shoulder to the old time evening reception when people were invited for social intercourse. Whatever the reason, men and women of to-day have declined to accept Noah's invitation to come in pairs for no other amusement than that of each other's society. Now there must be something to do for our nervous, excitement-loving generation: the younger ones to dance, the older ones to play cards, and the musical, artistic, or pedantic are invited to enjoy their own specialties. Our business, however, is to tell the young housekeeper and prospective hostess what to have and how to serve it, so we will leave the matter of digestion for the doctor to settle the next day. The little suppers, where guests may be seated at small tables, are the most enjoyable. A menu which includes hot bouillon, hot entrées, light sandwiches, dainty biscuit, cold entrées, and salads with thick dressings, coffee with real cream, for those who take it, wine or punch, a frozen cream or ice, and light fancy cakes, is quite as much of a "collation" as anyone should indulge in, and very much less of a menu would be in better taste perhaps. The small tables should be daintily lined and flowered, with a cover for each person consisting of the necessary number of forks for the different courses, and a napkin and a glass for ice-water. These are all that are required besides the service plate, unless game is included in the menu, then a small silver knife should be in readiness at the right of the cover, and a teaspoon for the coffee, which on this occasion may be served with the meats or salad if there is no wine or punch. Coffee should be served in teacups if served with the supper, or in after-dinner cups as a last course. Dainty receptacles for sugar and cream should be on the table, as this is the only occasion when cream is allowable except at breakfast. This is undoubtedly to aid in the indigestible result of the whole affair. Exquisite little dishes of glass and silver containing salted nuts, bonbons, and olives may also be placed on the small tables, for guests to help themselves. As the ambitious young housekeeper may be inclined to undertake a large and elaborate entertainment, in spite of advice to the contrary, the following suggestions may not be out of place :

EVENING COLLATIONS

The table for a large entertainment should be square or oblong, covered with a fine damask cloth over one of thick cotton flannel. Flowers and fruit may be used in abundance, only avoid over-crowding. Dishes may be decorated and placed on the table from the beginning of the entertainment. There should be only one of each kind, however, more being supplied from the butler's pantry when necessary. Piles of plates, with folded napkins between, and forks by the side of them, are neatly arranged on the side-table, and all hot drinks or dishes are served from the butler's pantry. At this function guests may help themselves, if they are not seated at small tables, so that it is not always necessary to have a large corps of waiters for either large or small entertainments. Punches or frappés are usually served during the entire evening at a side-table from a large glass bowl with a silver ladle, into small glass cups made for the purpose. This service-table gives an opportunity to display ingenuity and originality, as the artistic decorations and gastronomic creations show to great advantage. Good taste demands a little restraint, however, that the hand of the caterer be not too apparent. Remember, the keynote to the success of the entertainment is individuality and refinement.

The following list of dishes are suitable for the evening collation, recipes for which can be found in their respective departments: Oyster Cocktails No. 5, or Hot Bouillon No. 22, Deviled Crabs No. 112, or Crabs, Lobster, Shrimps, or Oysters Creamed, Crab, Lobster, Shrimp, or Oyster Croquettes or Chops, Terrapin, Lobster, or Shrimp à la Newburg No. 822, Chicken, Sweetbread, or Mushroom Creamed, or Chicken, Sweetbread, Lamb or Veal Croquettes. Any of the Cold Entrées, and any of the Salads with Mayonnaise or thick dressing, Hot or Cold Game, Frozen Creams or Ices, and fancy cakes, Frappés, or Punches, and Coffee No. 712.

“ Not all on books their criticism waste,
The genius of a dish some justly taste,
And eat their way to fame.”

—YOUNG.

THE chafing-dish, like the bicycle, has pushed itself into the best society, and it is quite evident it has come to stay. Many years before it became fashionable it was here as the friend of the Bohemian and impecunious. It was only a cheap metal affair then, seeking its abiding-place in out-of-the-way corners; but now it is resplendent in silver and gold, and en evidence on the smartest occasion. When it first makes its appearance in the ménage it is quite as tricky as its friend the bicycle, and participates in inflicting many an unsavory mess upon unsuspecting victims. With a little patience and practice, however, it becomes a dainty accessory to my lady's charms, and many a manly heart has grown warm and tender under its gentle auspices. Nevertheless, to be practical, there should be a reason for introducing it into good society. As every one of the following recipes can be made just as well over any fire, the only excuse for its appearance should be a complete knowledge on the part of the manipulator of the recipes to be used, all accessories in readiness, and a circle of intimate friends with appreciative appetites. There are a few things to remember : To have the lamp well filled and in good working order ; to place the standard of the chafing-dish on a tray a little larger than the dish to protect the table from fire and boiling water.

Use the hot-water pan only when the preparation requires steaming or stewing, or to keep it from burning while waiting for other ingredients or toast.

To cook quickly, use only the blazer and have it hot before you begin. Have a handle on the hot-water pan as well as on the blazer. Use a chafing-dish spoon which is of silver or metal, with a wooden or ivory handle. Have an extra fork and teaspoon to try with, if you are not sure of your seasoning, and a small napkin.

Before beginning to cook see that the table is well supplied with knives, forks, and napkins for each guest, and that all the ingredients needed are prepared and neatly arranged around your tray ; to wait for one ingredient sometimes means the ruination of the whole dish. Only one's intimates should be bidden to share the joys of a chafing-dish, and never more than ten at a time. The chafing-dish has not yet been made that will appease the appetite of more.

The chafing-dish came as a fancy, and it is staying as a fact—but few fashionable fads have been of so much benefit to the world. The desire to become an adept with the chafing-dish has unconsciously led many a novice, step by step, into the mysteries of the art of cooking, consequently our most fashionable schools at present are the schools of cookery.
